At the age of twelve years, Mr. Addis began work in the mines, his first position being that of tramboy, his duties being the driving of the mules that hauled the iron ore in tram cars, keeping the tracks clear and otherwise making himself useful. For five years he worked in one capacity or another for the Olive Furnace Company, patiently and thoroughly learning the basic details of coal mining that in later years proved of great importance to him. When seventeen years old, he went to work in the clay and limestone mines, where he continued for three years, after that, until 1907, working at coal mining in the Superior and Fluhart mines in Jackson County, Ohio. In the above year he accepted the position of foreman with the Gallia Mining Company, in Vinton County, and continued as such through 1907, 1908 and 1909.

With a desire to gain knowledge of other mining districts, Mr. Addis then came to Kentucky and was connected with the North East Coal Company at Paintsville, Kentucky, as mine foreman during 1910, 1911 and 1912, in the latter year going to the Wasson Coal Company, in Southern Illinois, remaining there until the latter part of 1913, when he returned to Kentucky. During all these years of hard and continuous work at a dangerous occupation, Mr. Addis had met with only minor injuries, but in the above year he was the victim of an accident so serious that he was "laid up" for almost two years, but in the meantime he had made many friends and had become known to the managers of many large companies as a thoroughly informed, competent miner and trustworthy man. Therefor, when he had sufficiently recovered from his accident, he found a position awaiting him with the Consolidation Coal Company, at Van Lear, where he remained from 1915 until 1918, when he was transferred to the company's mines at Jenkins, and seven months later, on March 1, 1919, came to Weeksburg as superintendent of the coal properties of the Elkhorn Piney Coal Company, a large and important factor in the coal industry in this section of Kentucky. With his other qualities, Mr. Addis has great executive ability, his character of fairness, and possessing the confidence of the company and of the great army of employees, harmony reigns here to a greater extent than in almost any other coal section. He regrets sometimes that his early opportunities were limited, but he profited more through observation and practical experience, and so kindly is his nature that he willingly instructs those in the business younger than himself and gladly helps them on their way. Being all the way, he is not a bit "faltering" in his word, and men as managers Howes and Wolfe, in the Big Sandy Valley, declare they owe everything to his advice and instruction.

Mr. Addis was married December 14, 1894, in Lawrence County, Ohio, to Miss Elizabeth Justice, who is a daughter of George Justice, who was in the mining business in Lawrence County. They have five children: Carl, Myrtle, Elbert Mitchell, Castle R. and Bonnie Francis. Mr. Addis and his family are members of the United Brethren Church. In political life he has always been a republican, and fraternally is a Mason and Knight of Pythias. Mr. Addis is domestic in his tastes, and his own fireside is dear to him, and perhaps because of this, he often, in his friendly talks with his men, calls to their attention their duty which should be a pleasure, to strive to make their homes comfortable and their families proud of them. Who can question the success in life of a man who can exert such an influence as this?

W. C. SHEARER. An example of twentieth century business enterprise is found in the National Sheet Metal Works, of Paducah, which has been developed from small beginnings into large proportions through the progressive industry and splendid business management of its founder and proprietor, W. C. Shearer. Mr. Shearer, who is entitled to the title of self-made man, was born in Owen County, Kentucky, September 13, 1873, a son of W. M. O. and Elizabeth (Callaghan) Shearer.

Daniel Shearer, the paternal grandfather of W. C. Shearer, was born in 1796, in Ireland, and was the emigrant ancestor of the family to the United States and a pioneer in Henry County, Kentucky, where he passed the remainder of his active life as an educator, then moving to Owen County, Kentucky, where his death occurred, although burial was made in Henry County. He married a Miss Myrth. The maternal grandfather of W. C. Shearer, Michael Callaghan, was born in Ireland in 1818 and as a young man emigrated to America and settled in Owen County, Kentucky, where he first worked on railroad construction and then became a railroad contractor. He became a member of that county in 1900. Mr. Callaghan married Ellen O'Sullivan, a native of Ireland, who died in Owen County.

W. M. O. Shearer was born in Henry County, Kentucky, in 1844, and was reared there and in Owen County, and educated in the public schools. After his marriage at Frankfort, Kentucky, to Miss Elizabeth Callaghan, who was born in 1839, in Franklin County, this state, he engaged in farming in Owen County, and was thus engaged at the outbreak of the war between the states. In 1862 he enlisted in the Ninth Kentucky Cavalry, and was first under the leadership of the intrepid Morgan, being later connected with the forces of Gen. William Breckenridge. He surrendered with his command at Atlanta, Georgia, in 1865, and returned to his farming operations. Subsequently, he took up his trade as a stone mason and developed a business, builing lasting public works along the Kentucky River, and in 1908 retired from active affairs. He died in February, 1918, in Owen County, and was buried in Carrollton. Mr. Shearer was a democrat and served as a magistrate in Henry County. He was a member of the Roman Catholic Church, to which also belonged his worthy wife, who died in Carroll County in 1911 and was laid to rest there. Five children were born to them: James, who is engaged in farming at Carrollton, Kentucky; W. C.; George, a farmer of Henry County; Joseph, who farms with his brother James at Carrollton; and Mary, the wife of M. J. Hayden, a farmer of Owen County.

W. C. Shearer was educated in the rural schools of Henry, Owen and Franklin counties, which he attended until he was old enough to engage in farming, in which he was engaged for two years in Franklin and Woodford counties. At that time he embarked in the industrial insurance business, with headquarters at Bourbon and Paris, and in April, 1906, came to Paducah to follow the same line of work. This he continued, however, for less than one year, then forming a connection with the City Gas Company, which continued until May, 1888, Mr. Shearer enlisted for service in the Spanish-American war and was sent to Cuba with the Third Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, returning to Savannah, Georgia, and being mustered out of the service in June, 1890.

Coming back to Paducah, Mr. Shearer then went to Henry County for a three months' visit to his parents, and when he returned to this city kept books for a hotel for nine months. Next he entered the employ of the Jackson Foundry and Machine Company, where he kept books for eight months, and at the end of that time was promoted to the superintendency of the store room, a position which he held for two years. From this post he was advanced to the position of general manager of the company, remaining in such two years and, having thoroughly learned the machinist's art, he entered into the present enterprise, the National Sheet Metal Works. Mr. Shearer's capital was small and he necessarily started in a modest way, but the business has grown under the urge of his capable management to be one of the leading general sheet metal concerns of Western Kentucky. In the plant at 110-112-114 Kentucky Avenue anything in the world of sheet metal and aluminum is manufactured, twenty hands being employed in the manufacture of products which are shipped in all directions within a radius of fifty miles of Paducah.

Mr. Shearer has various other connections, being a director in the Ohio Valley Fire and Marine Insurance Company, the Ohio Valley Trust Company and the Eastern Maryland Transportation Company, and the Kankakee Automobile Company of Kankakee, Illinois. He is a democrat in politics, a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and fraternizes with Paducah Lodge No. 217, B. P. O. E.

Mr. Shearer was married, May 25, 1910, at Paducah, to Mrs. Lillian (Smith) Martin a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lemon Smith, the latter deceased, and the former a resident of Lyon County, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Shearer reside in a pleasant home at No. 1043 Trimble Street.

WILLARD COX BLAND, secretary and treasurer of the Wabash Elevator Company in Uniontown, has been a factor in the business affairs of that city over a quarter of a century, and his success in business and prominence as a citizen has made him widely known over the western end of the state.

Mr. Bland was born at West Point, Virginia, June 2, 1876, son of John William and Millard Elizabeth (Goalder) Bland. His parents represent some old and prominent Virginia families. The Bland family came to Kentucky in 1880 and settled at Hickman, where John W. Bland was in the lumber business as buyer for a St. Louis corporation. He died at the age of seventy-six and his wife at seventy-four, and of their four children Willard C. is the only survivor.

Mr. Bland acquired his early education in his native Virginia town, also attended school at Hickman, Kentucky, and took a business course at Louisville. For fourteen months he was bookkeeper and stenographer for a firm at Seymour, Indiana, and in 1893 came to Uniontown to enter the employ of the Mutual Distilling Company. He was manager of that business for ten years, but in the meantime entered the dry-goods business as a member of the firm Newton & Bland, and was actively connected with this leading mercantile firm for twenty years. Since 1917 he has given most of his time to his duties as secretary and treasurer of the Wabash Elevator Company.

Mr. Bland has also acquired some farming interests in Western Kentucky. He is a democrat, and during the administration of Governor Stanley served on the Governor's staff with the rank of colonel. He is a Master Mason. In 1898 he married Miss Martha Orme of Uniontown.
growing in order to occupy his time. In 1914 he returned to Carlisle County, and there engaged in farming until 1916, when he purchased a home at Fulton, where he lived until his death the following year.

William Z. Rudd was united in marriage with Mrs.
Martha Ann (Pease) Fuller, born in Carlisle County, Kentucky, in 1841. She died at Rudd, Kentucky, October 29, 1898. Their children were as follows: Acennath Fannie, who married J. B. Wiley, a farmer and merchant of California, now deceased, and she resides at Paducah, Kentucky; Doctor Rudd, who was second in order of birth; W. A., who is a mechanic residing at Cairo, Illinois; Anna May, who married L. B. Jones, now a clothing merchant of Bardwell, Kentucky, died at Bardwell, Kentucky, in 1913; Vester Pease, who is a prescription druggist of Jonesboro, Arkansas; and Sallie, who died in infancy.

Doctor Rudd was educated in the rural schools of Carlisle County, where he was born November 25, 1860, and at Clinton College, of Clinton, Kentucky.
Still later he attended the Normal School for Teachers at Paducah, Kentucky, and attended his college courses at Bethel College, Russellville, Kentucky. Doctor Rudd then matriculated at the Electric Medical Institute of Cincinnati, Ohio, from which he was graduated in 1896, and immediately thereafter established himself in practice at Fulton, Kentucky, where he has since cared for a general medical and surgical practice.
While at Bethel College he was a member of the Philomathean Society, and during the period he was at Cincinnati, he took an active interest in the Young Men's Christian Association. In 1907 Doctor Rudd established his hospital at Fulton, Kentucky, and operated it himself for three years. This hospital has rooms for twenty-one patients, and since the years of Rudd's administration, he has done much to improve the equipment, both as to medical and surgical uses. He has since expanded the hospital and added new edifice.

Doctor Rudd belongs to Frank Carr Lodge No. 206,
I. O. O. F.; to Fulton Encampment of the same order: to Kentucky Home Camp No. 1351, M. W. A., and has been a member of the lodge for over one hundred years. He has been a member of the local lodge Masonic Lodge, and is also a member of the Elks Lodge and the Odd Fellows Lodge. He is also a member of the Order of Moose. Professionally he belongs to Fulton County Medical Society, Kentucky State Medical Society, the American Medical Association, and the District Electric Medical Society and the State Electric Medical Society, and has served as president of the latter.

On December 22, 1897, Doctor Rudd was united in marriage at Fulton, Kentucky, to Ina E. Vincent, a daughter of Harve and Ellen (Love) Vincent. Mr.
Vincent died at Union City, Tennessee, having been a farmer all his active life. Mrs. Vincent survives him and makes her home at Aberdeen, Mississippi.

Doctor and Mrs. Rudd have one child: Russell R., who was born December 2, 1899, and was graduated from the grammar schools, following which for two years he attended the Fulton High School, and for one year was at the Columbia Military Academy as a cadet, and will be graduated from this institution in 1921. He will then begin the study of medicine and has five years of college and university work ahead of him. It is a great satisfaction to Doctor Rudd to have his son's tastes and talents run in the same channel as his own, and he looks forward to the day when he can take the younger man into partnership with him.

Gaston M. Alves, of Henderson, who has been one of the Advisory Board in the preparation of this history of Kentucky, and whose services as such are gratefully acknowledged by the publishers, has been closely identicified for a period of fifty years with the progress of development in that section of Kentucky, and is himself the interesting link connecting the present with the beginning of development here, since he is a great-grandson of Walter Alves, one of the original shareholders of the Henderson Grant.

Mr. Alves was born at Henderson, June 21, 1847.
His father, Thomas D. Alves, was a great-grandson of James Hogg, who with his wife and children immigrated from Scotland to North Carolina some years prior to the Revolution. The name Hogg was at that time almost uncommon only in his native country, but his father was the same as Hogg the "Ettrick Shepherd," and he was also a cousin of Walter Scott. James Hogg seems to have had little sympathy for the Revolutionary movement. In one of his letters he spoke of Jefferson much as we did of Herr Most, and yet one of his sons-in-law, Hooper, was a signer of the Declaration of Independence.

Some years after independence was declared, James Hogg caused the Legislature of his state to change the name of two towns to Alves, the maiden name of his wife, who was of a Spanish family that settled in Scotland in the time of the Stewarts.

His son, Walter Hogg, by enactment Walter Alves, together with his wife, Amelia Johnston, was a large owner in the Richard Henderson grant, and they moved to Henderson County in the latter part of the eighteenth

Gaston M. Alves was educated at the Kentucky Military Institute near Frankfort. In early manhood he was identified with mercantile interests both in St. Louis and in his native town. While at the Institute he showed decided talent for mathematics and physics, and soon gave up merchandising for more congenial work.
For his home town he made the instrumental examinations for a system of waterworks, and against considerable opposition helped induce the citizens to vote the necessary bonds for their construction, and per-time superintended the building of the waterworks.

Mr. Alves was one of the early advocates of improved highways. He helped organize several companies, and as engineer constructed roads and turnpikes under the control of private corporations. Afterward, when the demand was made for free public roads, he furnished the figures at which the county was to take them over.
Henderson was for a number of years without a local coal supply, and Mr. Alves and his brothers sank a coal shaft, and though thereby they furnished coal at greatly reduced prices they made good profits out of the business.

With others Mr. Alves was associated with a large land company that laid out the tracts into lots, and he superintended the sales, thus greatly extending the size of Henderson. He organized and operated a very successful building and loan association, putting the rates very low to the borrowers, and thus brought about the erection of more houses in the city than is due to any other one cause.

Mr. Alves during his early years and middle age was
Robert B. Brown. Although love of country may be instinctive, it is undoubtedly true that with some men public honors and popular approval seem to more or less wean them from old interests and familiar surroundings, in some cases arousing a desire for other and foreign conditions of living which, perhaps, bring forgetfulness of old friends and obligations. Such a charge can never be brought against Hon. Robert B. Brown, who is a distinguished and esteemed native son of Gallatin County and who has maintained his home at Warsaw, his birthplace, throughout his long life of busy effort and notable achievements. Mr. Brown is not only one of the foremost citizens of this section of Kentucky in a public and professional way, but also is one of the most substantial being extensively interested in agricultural production and owning valuable realty at Warsaw and throughout Gallatin County.

Robert B. Brown was born June 10, 1854. His parents were Walter and Malinda (Bowling) Brown, natives of Kentucky, who spent their lives in this state. Walter Brown was born in 1808, in Owen County, a son of the early pioneer Gallatin County pioneers. The Brown were of Irish parentage and came early to Owen County, Kentucky, followed farming, and died there in 1861. Walter Brown followed an agricultural life in Owen County until 1848, in which year he came to Warsaw and went into the hotel business, in which he continued until retiring from active life in 1888, when he died at the age of 91 years. He was a democrat in his political views but never was willing to accept a public office. He married Malinda Bowling, who was born in Mason County in 1813 and died at Warsaw in 1891. They became the parents of the following children: Samuel, who was a farmer, died at Adairville, Logan County, Kentucky, when aged sixty-two years; Helen B., who was the wife of the late J. D. Pullam, a noted lawyer; and James A., an attorney at Warsaw, died when sixty years old; Mary, who was the wife of the late J. R. Brown, of Warsaw, died aged sixty-two years; Bird, who was the wife of J. A. Howard, a sawmill owner and operator, died at Warsaw aged fifty years; James S., who is a retired physician and surgeon of Warsaw; Walter, who lives at Warsaw retired, formerly was a merchant and trader; Jennie, who died at the age of fifty-eight years, was the wife of the late J. D. Darnelle, a merchant at Warsaw; and Robert B.

Robert B. Brown spent his boyhood and youth in his native city, attending private schools and variously employed until he took up the study of law with a local attorney, after which he completed his studies at the law school of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, and was admitted to the bar in March, 1877. He entered into practice at Warsaw and is the dean of the profession here in point of years of practice, and occupies a position of eminence both in civil and criminal practice. For twelve years he served as county attorney of Gallatin County, and has been identified with many notable cases in the courts of the county. In political life Mr. Brown has always been unwavering in his devotion to the principles of the democratic party. On many occasions his fellow citizens have testified their esteem and confidence by calling him to positions of trust and responsibility, and his record of public service covering many years, stands unblemished. During his tenure of the office of county attorney, he served Warsaw two years as school commissioner and has never ceased to be interested in educational matters. In 1895 he was first elected a member of the Kentucky State Senate, representing the Twenty-third Senatorial District, comprising at that time Boone, Gallatin and Owen counties. He served through the sessions of 1896, 1898 and the special session of 1897, when a great deal of important legislation was considered, and in November, 1907, he was re-elected a senator and served in the sessions of 1908, 1909 and 1910. He took an active part in all legislative deliberations and successfully advocated the passage of many exceedingly necessary measures. After retiring from public office Mr. Brown resumed the practice of his profession, which has absorbed him ever since. He found time, however, when the great movement along the lines of improved patriotism, accepting the duties of chairmanship of several organizations and by example setting a pace in support of all the patriotic movements.

In 1888, at Warsaw, Mr. Brown was married to Miss Belle Simmons, a graduate of Hocker College, Lexington, Kentucky. Her parents were William B. and Nannie (Bell) Simmons, both deceased. Her father was a retiring farmer and served in the sessions of 1859 and 1877. Her mother was born to Mr. and Mrs. Brown, Nannie and R. H. Nannie Brown was reared at Warsaw and educated at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, being a graduate of the Ladies' Seminary. She is the wife of Frank S. Connelly, the latter being a student of law with Mr. Brown. R. H. Brown was born at Warsaw in 1857, and died in October, 1918. He was a young man of brilliant parts, an attorney at law, and was serving in the office of county attorney at time of death.

Mr. Brown has been identified with the development of many interests, and in business as well as in other directions is well known over the country. He is a director in the Warsaw Deposit Bank; a director in the Sparta Deposit Bank; a director in the Equitable Bank and Trust Company of Walton; Kentucky; and is president of the Warsaw Furniture Company. He is a member of the Christian Church and has always been liberal in contributing to its various benevolent projects. Fraternal organizations have never appealed to him, but he needs no brotherhood tie to bind him to the tried and true friends who have known him from childhood.

Rash Family. A notable name in and around Winchester for a century has been that of the Rash family. The old Rash home is four miles north of Winchester. One of its owners and occupants for many years was Rev. William Samuel Rash, who lived there while he preached at Friendship Church, the building of which stood in the present cemetery at Winchester. Rev. William S. Rash was born in Clark County February 13, 1783, and died June 9, 1850. He was a pioneer "Hardshell" Baptist preacher. He also served as a soldier in the War of 1812 and was captured at the battle of River Raisin by the Indians, but made his escape by night. One of his Kentucky comrades, Harlan Beall, was captured, but was not fortunate, and was sent to "run the gauntlet" and was a cripple from the experience the rest of his life. Rev. William S. Rash married Elizabeth Berry, who lived to a great age. His son, Rev. A. D. Rash, was born June 22, 1823, and died March 18, 1901. William S. Rash owned about 200 acres, much of it subsequently owned by his son, Lewis Rash, but eventually sold.

Thomas Rash, a grandson of Rev. William S. Rash, was born at the old homestead January 27, 1856, and for a quarter of a century was a merchant at Winchester, being a partner with his brother W. D. four or five years. At a still later period he re-engaged in merchandising and continued that occupation for twenty years until 1914 when he retired to his farm on Boonesboro Pike, four miles from Winchester. More recently he returned to Winchester, and has erected a pleasant home on Crescent Creek.

At the age of forty Thomas Rash married Mary Ogden, whose maiden name was Baldwin. She was born in Lexington, a daughter of William and Sarah Baldwin, who came from England. William Baldwin and his wife sold their farm in Lexington, Kentucky, in 1835. William Baldwin and three of his sons were soldiers during the War between the States in the Confederate army with Morgan. He was reported missing and is supposed to have been killed in battle. The son William was killed at Green River Bridge, while Samuel and John served all through the war. The families of William and John are still represented in the county. Mrs. Rash's husband was James Ogden, a stock trader at Winchester, who died at the age of thirty-five. Mrs. Thomas Rash took active steps in establishing the first Baptist Church at Winchester, and has lived to see three successive churches dedicated and is the only survivor of the original members. Mrs. Rash's only child by her first marriage was Cora Ogden, the wife of Ben Crutcher, a prominent lawyer and for many years Commonwealth District Attorney at Winchester.

Mrs. Cora Crutcher died at the age of thirty-two, leaving three children: J. O. Crutcher, a dentist at Winchester; Alan, Mrs. William Garner of Winchester; and Miss Mary Crutcher, who lives with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Rash. Mary Crutcher was five years old when her mother died, and she and her brother and sister were reared by her grandparents. Miss Mary Crutcher is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution through her Crutcher ancestry. She is president of the Women's Club of Winchester and has long been prominent in social and civic affairs.

Mr. and Mrs. Rash have always kept their hearts and home open to the needy, and through their assistance not less than eighteen children have been reared and educated to self supporting and honorable manhood and womanhood, and have found comfort and sympathy and education. The native affection of Mrs. Rash has always responded to calls of need or distress even at the expense of her own health, and no scourgé could deter her from giving personal aid during distress and sickness.

William Dudley Judy, one of the representative men of Clark County, now living at Schoolville, belongs to one of the old-established families of Kentucky, and his name is a well known one in this part of the state. He was born in Harrison County, Kentucky, on April 20, 1861, a son of Thomas and Mary (Botts) Judy. Thomas Judy, born at Stanton, Kentucky in 1815, died at Rushville, Indiana, in 1861. His father was Thomas Judy, who came from Virginia to Stanton, and was county clerk for a number of years, and there he died, his widow surviving him for seven or eight years. She was Nancy Myers, a daughter of Solomon Myers. Thomas Judy, the younger, was a carpenter by trade, and at his death left six children, namely: Joseph, who is a resident of Latonia, Kentucky; Robert, who died at the age of sixteen years: Frank, who is on the home farm; Amy, who is Mrs. William Gardner of Pendleton County, Kentucky; William Dudley, whose wife is Miss Mollie, who is unmarried, lives at Cynthiana, Kentucky. Left a widow with six children, Mrs. Thomas Judy had a difficult task during the first few years until her sons were old enough to help her. She was a tailoress by trade, and working day and night, became very expert, and through her endeavors was able to keep her little family together. Subsequently she was married to John McLean and went to live on a farm in Harrison County, Kentucky. She later married and her husband returned to Cynthiana where both died.

William D. Judy remained on his mother's farm until he was thirteen years old, and then left it for the Garnett farm in Harrison County, where he not only attended school in the winter months, but received a thorough training in farming from Mr. Garnett, one of the most noted agriculturists of that region. When he was eighteen years old William D. Judy went to Cynthiana, where he remained for a time. Later he went back to the Garnett farm, and continued on it until 1881, when he came to Clark County. During the many years he lived there Mr. Judy always entertained a warm friendship for the family, and kept in close touch with Mr. Garnett until his death.

After coming to Clark County Mr. Judy married Lizzie Nelson, a daughter of Harvey Nelson, and grandson of Hon. William Nelson, ex-representative in the Kentucky Legislature. Harvey Nelson served in the war between the states, and when he died he left his daughter his farm. His widow only survived him until 1888, and one year afterwards Mrs. Judy passed away, leaving one daughter, Mamie Elizabeth, who married Joseph Clinton Fox, who lives at Winchester.

Upon coming to Clark County Mr. Judy took charge of his wife's farm and lived on it until 1904 when he moved to Winchester and began buying buggies and harness, continuing the business for two years under the name of Judy & Wood. In the meanwhile he had purchased a farm, on which he built his present residence. This property is a portion of the Walter Huls farm. Mr. Judy still owns his old farm and conducts it, raising a general line of crops. For years he has kept a herd of race horses, and horse tracks on the farm. He buys and sells track horses, running them on his own track and traveling with them to other tracks, and for the past thirty years has been a well known man among various tracks. For many years he was a trainer and produced several horses which gained celebrity, and also handled many show horses in various lines so that at one time he was one of the authorities with regard to race horses. While he has never sought office, he was always willing to do his duty to his party and served often as delegate to conventions.

William D. Judy was married on February 24, 1891, to Lizzie D. Huls, born on November 14, 1865. She died on May 14, 1917. She was a daughter of Walter and Jane (Scobee) Huls, who owned the second farm of Mr. Judy, and on it he passed his life, dying about twenty-three years ago when he was sixty years of age. The second farm was purchased by Mr. Judy after he married Cora Ogden. She bore her husband two sons, namely: Walter Davenport, who was born on May 24, 1898, is now a druggist, but was in the training camp at Danville at the time of the signing of the Armistice, as a member of the aviation branch of the service; and Frank McCord, who was born on April 21, 1901, who was educated at the Winchester High School, is now living at home.

On February 23, 1918, Mr. Judy was married to Mrs. Hattie Huls, daughter of John Ambrose and Fannie (Kidd) Eubank, who was born at Kiddville. Clark County, Kentucky, on December 12, 1867. She was married when twenty-three years old to William Huls, a son of Walter Huls, and they had four children, namely: Mary, who is private secretary to the dean of the State University at Lexington, Kentucky; Florida, who is Mrs. Forrest S. Suter of Louisville, Kentucky; Lucille, who is Mrs. Byron E. Reed, lives in Kentucky, and her husband has oil interests in this state and Texas; and William Porter Huls, who lives at Mount Sterling, Kentucky.

John A. Eubank, the father of Mrs. Judy, was a farmer and stockman. Her mother, Fannie Kidd, was a daughter of Robert and Betsy (Cohns) Kidd of Kiddville, named in honor of the Kidd family, who developed a village out of the wilderness they found upon coming to Kentucky. The Kidd homestead was the first to be erected at that point.

Mr. Judy is a director of the Peoples State Bank of Winchester, and at one time was a dealer in loose leaf tobacco at Winchester, being one of the first three men to grow tobacco in Clark County. In 1881 he, Harry Thompson and Riley Gordon, were sending four acres each. From this beginning the great tobacco industry of Clark County has grown until it is the leading one of this section. Mr. Judy belongs to the Bethlehem Christian Church of Clark County, of which Elder J. W. McGarrey was pastor, this being the oldest church of this denomination in this section. After seventeen years of faithful service Mr. McGarrey resigned on account of his advancing years. In his fraternal relations Mr. Judy maintains membership with the Masons and Elks.

Big of heart, genial and hearty in manner, Mr. Judy has the warmest of personal friends all over the state, and has never failed to live up to the expectations of them or of his fellow citizens.

Richard N. Ratliff. Among the commodities of importance in the commercial and agricultural life of Kentucky, those which furnish the greatest reason for activity in the markets are live stock, wool and tobacco. Prominent among the men who have dealt in these products and whose substantiality and conservativism have aided in strengthening and stabilizing business conditions, is Richard N. Ratliff, of Winchester.

Mr. Ratliff was born at Sharpsburg, Rock County, Kentucky, October 2, 1857, a son of Richard S. and Mary F. (Thompson) Ratliff, natives of the same county, and a grandson of Caleb Ratliff, who was born in Virginia and came to Kentucky with his father. The last-named, who had formerly driven cattle and mules to the markets in South Carolina, became one of the extensive farmers in the vicinity of Ratliff, where his death occurred when he was seventy-one years of age. Richard S. Ratliff, in 1854 purchased the farm which was later purchased by Mr. Ratliff, acquiring his educational training in the meanwhile in the rural schools, and when still a young man became a landowner and gradually increased his holdings until he had two farms, comprising about 300 acres. He dealt largely in various kinds of live stock, shipping from 600 to 700 head of mules annually, and also supplied a market for the sugar-growers of his section. In 1890 Mr. Ratliff, while retaining his farm in Bath County, worth more than $300 per acre, came to Winchester and identified himself prominently with the tobacco-growing industry. For three years he acted as local manager for a large association, and at this time is identified with the firm of Stone & Buckley, of Lexington, in addition to which he is manager of a company at Winchester, which handles from 30,000 to 35,000 pounds of wool in season. Mr. Ratliff grows tobacco on his farm and has handled as high as $2,500,000 lbs. of loose leaf tobacco annually. As he deals also in stock, he is kept busy the year round, the stock, wool and tobacco seasons following each other in rotation. Mr. Ratliff is also a director of the Winchester Bank of Winchester. He possesses a genial, pleasing personality that has contributed greatly to his success, and he has drawn to him numerous friends in Clark and Bath counties, where his standing in business circles is of the highest. During his career he has been jealous of his reputation for fair and honorable dealing, and this has applied likewise to his citizenship, in performing the duties of which he has been conscientiously strict.

At the age of twenty-five years, Mr. Ratliff was united in marriage with Miss Katie L. Whitsett, who was born near Mount Sterling, Montgomery County, Kentucky, and to this union there have been born two children: Jennie J., who is the wife of James H. French, who is engaged in the insurance business at Winchester; and R. Whitsett, a capable agriculturist, record keeper, carrying on operations on the old home farm near Sharpsburg, Bath County, attorney.

Horace Luten, M. D. For three successive generations the Luten family has contributed able physicians and surgeons to the medical profession of the State of Kentucky. Dr. Luten has for more than twenty years been one of the busy men in the professional ranks at Fulton, where taking his father's service into consideration the name Luten has been synonymous with medicine and surgery for nearly half a century.

Doctor Luten, who gained the rank of major in the medical corps during the World War, was born in Hickman County, Kentucky, October 6, 1873. His grandfather William Luten was a Tennesseean, born in Ashland, North Carolina, and was one of the pioneer members of his profession in Hickman County, Kentucky, where he practiced until his death. He married a Miss Ashburn, a native of North Carolina, who also died in Hickman County. Dr. Joseph R. Luten, the father, was born in Hickman County in 1843, grew up there, was married in Fulton County, graduated in medicine from Tulane University at New Orleans, and after practicing for some years in Hickman County removed to Fulton County in 1875 and was busy with the cares of his profession until he retired in 1910. He died September 11, 1921, at Fulton, aged seventy-eight. During the war between the states he served in the Confederate Army during 1864-65. He also represented Fulton County in the Legislature one term. Dr. Joseph R. Luten was a deacon in the Dunkard Church, a member of the Methodist Church and the Masonic fraternity. He married Miss Kate Browder who was born in Fulton County in 1848 and died in 1904. She was the mother of four children, the youngest being Horace. S. D. Luten, the oldest, is a farmer in Arkansas; Mary was married in 1880 at Union City, Tennessee, to W. L. Exon who is now operating a coal yard at Little Rock, Arkansas; and W. R. Luten, a railroad man, foreman in the railroad shops at Plymouth, Michigan.

Dr. Horace Luten was two years of age when his father moved to Fulton and as a boy he attended the rural schools of the county, was also a student in the noted preparatory school known as the Webb School at Bell Buckle, Tennessee, and took his medical course in the University of Louisville where he graduated with the M. D. degree in 1898. During the World War he also did post-graduate work in the University of Chicago. Doctor Luten began practice at Fulton in 1898, and except for the period of the World War has given practically all his time and energies to his extensive medical and surgical work. He owns the Luten Building at 210 Lafayette Street in which he has his offices and has a fine modern home at 301 Indian Street. As a member of the Fulton County, State and American Medical Associations, is a democrat, a Methodist, is affiliated with Roberts Lodge No. 172 A. F. and A. M. at Fulton, belongs to the Scottish Rite Consistory at Bloomburg, Pennsylvania, and is a member of Almas Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Washington, District of Columbia.

October 1, 1917, he was commissioned a captain in the Medical Reserve Corps, was first sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, was later at Columbus, South Carolina, Atlanta, Georgia, at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, and his final assignment of duties was at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. While in the service he was promoted to the rank of major and received his honorable discharge February 8, 1919, after nearly eighteen months of service.

In 1890 at Hickman, Kentucky, Doctor Luten married Miss Kate Randle. Her father was the late Clint Randle, a prominent lawyer of Hickman. Her mother Mrs. Maggie (Mitchell) Randle lived at Fulton. Mrs. Luten is a graduate of Hickman College. They have two children: J. R., Jr., born August 21, 1900, and Margaret born February 1, 1907. The son graduated with the A. B. degree from the University of Chattanooa, Tennessee and is now a student of dentistry in University of Kentucky.

WILLIAM K. HALL. Forty years have come and gone since William K. Hall essayed his first venture in business at Fulton. During that time he has made mistakes, has been confronted with adversity, has overcome obstacles, but those who know him today as proprietor of the W. K. Hall Lumber Company and interested in other going institutions associate his name only with substantial success, all of which has been thoroughly deserved.

Mr. Hall was born at Columbus, Kentucky, April 28, 1853. His grandfather Jonathan Hall was a native of Rutherford County, Tennessee and spent his life as a farmer. William K. Hall, Sr., was born in Trentham, Tennessee, in 1827, was reared and educated in his native town and in 1833 moved to Columbus Kentucky. Subsequently he lived again in Tennessee but Columbus was his home the greater part of his active career. For ten years he held the office of postmaster being first appointed by President Grant. He died at Columbus in 1877. He was also a member of the State Senate, a stanch republican and a member of the framer, William K. Hall, Sr., married Mrs. Martha A. (Winn) McConnell. Her first husband James McConnell died of smallpox on the Ohio River near Louisville, Kentucky. He was one of the pioneer merchants of Columbus. By her first marriage she had two children: J. H. McConnell, a farmer at Columbus; and Sarah, living at Hickman, Kentucky, widow of Dr. C. H. Hubbard. She was a physician and surgeon at Hickman. Martha A. Winster, a physician and surgeon at Hickman.

William K. Hall, Sr., was a member of the Kentucky and also a director in the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association. He is a director of the Fulton Commercial Club, served two years on the city council, and in politics is a democrat. Mr. Hall has been chairman of the Board of Elders of the Christian Church and fraternally is affiliated with Frank Carr Lodge of Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Fulton, Fulton Lodge No. 1420 of the Elks, and Evergreen Camp No. 4 of the Woodmen of the World.

Mr. Hall married Miss Anna McCall, a native of Clarksville, Tennessee.

WALLACE BROWN. A scholar, a Kentucky gentleman, a well trained lawyer, Wallace Brown has enjoyed a place of peculiar esteem and prominence in Nelson County for a quarter of a century.

Mr. Brown was born in 1854, son of George W. and Margaret (Greer) Brown. His paternal grandparents were Jonathan and Elizabeth (Beauchamp) Brown, the former of whom died at the age of eighty-three and the latter at eighty-seven. They represented old and prominent names in Kentucky history. George W. Brown was born in Woodford County in 1844, and was one of the youthful volunteers for service in the Confederate Army at the beginning of the war. He was trained at Camp Nelson and finally became a scout under General John Morgan. While the Morgan raid in Ohio he was captured and sent to prison at Chicago. While there he and a fellow prisoner tunneled out and with them a hundred others escaped. He found his way to relatives in Missouri and afterward started to rejoin the Confederate Army, but the war closed before he reached his command. Returning to Kentucky, he became a local Methodist minister and for many years divided his time between farming and Nelson and performing the service of a minister to various local churches. He was a life long and stanch democrat in politics. He died on his farm near Bloomfield in Nelson County in 1904. His wife, Margaret Greer, was a native of Nelson County and died in 1912, at the age of sixty-one. Her parents, Milton and Addie (Foster) Greer, represented two of the oldest and most highly respected families in Nelson.
County. George W. Brown and wife had five sons and four daughters, the surviving Wallace Brown, his two sisters and three brothers.

Wallace Brown grew up on his father's farm and was educated in country schools. At the age of sixteen he entered the Kentucky Wesleyan College, remaining at his studies there for two years. During 1894-95 he had a private instructor in the study of Latin, Greek and French. In the fall he entered the senior class of Centre College at Danville, and in June, 1896, was awarded his A. B. degree and was also winner of the Beatty prize.

The honors and responsibilities of office awaited him soon after he returned from college. In 1897 he was elected Circuit Court clerk, and was reelected in 1903, serving two full terms. For two years following his retirement from this office he was in the insurance business. In 1911 the democratic nominee for representative was killed in an automobile accident, and Mr. Brown's name was placed on the ticket. He was elected, and during his term in the Legislature enjoyed some distinctive honors and gave some splendid service. He was barely defeated for speaker of the House, and the strength he developed as a candidate for that honor made him ranking member of the committee on rules, by virtue of which he was second in responsibility to the speaker.

Judge Brown in the meantime had studied law, and in April, 1912, was admitted to the bar. He gave his time to private practice for one year, and in 1913 was elected county judge. He was re-elected in 1917, and is now in his second term in that office. For several years Judge Brown has been interested in newspaper work, and is editor of the Kentucky Standard. He had the equipment installed for that weekly newspaper at Bardstown. Judge Brown is a member of the Methodist Church and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. April 28, 1914, he married Nancy Jackson, daughter of Dr. Thomas D. and Annie M. Burdette) Williams. Doctor Williams was for more than a quarter of a century one of the leading physicians of Nelson County. The two sons of Judge and Mrs. Brown are David Rodman and William Kavanagh Brown.

Hon. L. Adams. A prominent young lawyer of the Fulton bar, Mr. Adams has received public honors early in his career and is now representing his county in the Legislature.

Mr. Adams was born in Fulton County November 24, 1884. His great-grandfather, Gillum H. Adams, was a native of North Carolina, and early in the nineteenth century moved to Tennessee and formed a pioneer in Gibson County, where he developed one of the first farms in that section of Tennessee. He died in Gibson County. The grandfather of the Fulton lawyer was Nathaniel Adams, who was born in Henry County, Tennessee, in 1825, was reared and married in Rifflin county, moved in 1858 to Benton County, Tennessee, and in 1870 to Calhoun County and finally in 1874 became a resident of Fulton County, Kentucky. He devoted all his years to farming, and died while temporarily a resident of Hickman County in 1903, at the age of eighty years of age. He voted and believed in the democratic party and was a faithful member for many years of the Baptist Church. His wife, a native of Alta, was born in Benton County, Tennessee, and died in Fulton County, Kentucky. The last named G. H. Adams, father of Lon Adams, was born in Henry County, Tennessee, in 1853, was five years of age when his parents moved to Benton County, sixteen when they went to Gibson County, and acquired his early education in these two Tennessee counties. In 1873 in Gibson County he was married, and the following year moved to Fulton County, Kentucky. The active years of his life had been devoted to farming and he is now retired at Fulton. He is a democratic voter and a member of the Baptist Church. G. H. Adams married Mary Virginia Witt who was born in Gibson County, Tennessee, in 1859. They are the parents of seven children: Mattie, wife of Lee W. Workman, in the employ of the Illinois Central Railway at Fulton; Virgil H. and Arthur who are also Illinois Central employees at Fulton; Lon; Haisie, wife of S. I. Carver, a salesman living at Fulton; Yetta, wife of E. B. Carver, a farmer, in Hickman County farmer; and Mary, wife of Luther Witt, who is in the automobile business at Fulton.

Lon Adams spent his early life on his father's farm, attended rural schools, completed the sophomore year in the Fulton school, and from the age of nineteen years until twenty-six gave practically his first time to the operations of his father's farm. He read law in the office of Ed Thomas, and in 1916 was admitted to the bar and as a member of exceptional qualifications rapidly acquired a substantial practice in both the civil and criminal branches of the law. His offices are in the City National Bank Building on Lake Street.

Mr. Adams was elected on the democratic ticket to represent Fulton and Hickman counties in the Legislature in November, 1919. During the session of 1920 he served as member of the committees on county and city courts, on Kentucky statutes, on corporate institutions and otherwise faithfully looked after the interests of his constituents. Mr. Adams, who is unmarried, is affiliated with Crutchfield Camp No. 49, Woodmen of the World, at Crutchfield, Kentucky.

W. T. Congleton is the founder and active head of W. T. Congleton & Company, an important Lexington enterprise doing an extensive business as general contractors and dealers in building and construction materials. The Lexington headquarters of the business are at Walton and Third streets. The business represents a large capital investment in machinery and equipment and is an organization employing on the average about 100 skilled and unskilled workers. They make a specialty of building modern highways, street grading, sewer excavation, and excavation work for buildings. The firm has handled many of the important contracts in this line at Lexington and in surrounding counties since it was established in 1913. Every year the business has grown and the volume of work for 1920 doubled that of any previous year.

The Congletons are an old and prominent family of Eastern Kentucky, of English origin, and one branch of the family is still in England. During the World war one of the family, a Lord Congleton, was killed. W. T. Congleton is a grandson of Dr. William Congleton, whose life was one long devotion and service as a medical practitioner in the mountain districts of Eastern Kentucky. He was largely self-educated, but availed himself of every opportunity to broaden his knowledge and equipment. He was thoroughly versed in sound professional learning, and not only carried the benefit of his skill but the comfort of his kindly character to hundreds of homes in the isolated regions of this part of the state. He lived for a number of years in Lee County and later in Wolfe County. He served as the first County Judge of Wolfe County, and for many years a Commissioner. His name was recognized from one end of the county when the Federals took control of that region. One of his brothers was grandfather of Lee Congleton, the well-known Lexington citizen. Doctor Congleton spent his last years at Stanton and finally at Blade in Powell County. He was born in 1831.

His son, W. B. Congleton, who died January 30, 1919, was a successful farmer of Powell County, owning about 500 acres and growing stock on a large scale. He married Rowena Howe of Wolfe County, who is still living at Stanton. Eight of their children are still living. The two at Lexington are W. T. Congley, ton and his sister Ella, who is associated with him in W. T. Congleton & Company, and has charge of the office.

W. T. Congleton was born in Powell County June 3, 1880, completed his education in the Normal School at Campton, Kentucky. In early years he was a teacher as was his sister Ella, who qualified for that work at the Normal school at Lebanon, Ohio. Their sister Lula was also a teacher. W. T. Congleton learned telegraphy and for four years was an operator and station agent at Stanton. Later he was agent and train dispatcher and assistant superintendent at Cannel City in Morgan County, having the responsibility of laying out the station and the field. He remained there five years, and in 1907 came to Lexington and for eight years was associated with the Congleton Lumber Company, owned by three of his cousins. On leaving the lumber business Mr. Congleton established himself as a general contractor.

He is a member of the Kiwanis Club, is active in the Central Christian Church and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. At the age of thirty in 1910 he married Miss Effie Kilgore of Morgan County. Their three children are William Edwin, Lucien Howe and Helen.

A. Huddleston, president of the Farmers Bank of Fulton, Kentucky, is one of the able men of Fulton County who have given their attention to financial matters and become recognized as safe and sound men of affairs. He was born at Fulton, January 2, 1835, a son of Milton Huddleston. The Huddlestons were pioneers of middle Tennessee, and there, in the vicinity of Nashville, Milton Huddleston was born in 1809. He died near Fulton, Kentucky, in 1875.

Until he reached man's estate, Milton Huddleston continued to reside in his native county, where he received a public school education, and learned to be a practical farmer. Leaving Tennessee, he came to Fulton County, Kentucky, and bought a farm not far from Fulton, on which he lived until his death. His political convictions were in accord with those principles enunciated by the democratic party, and he supported its ticket. He was equally strong in his support of the Christian Church, and was very active in its good work. For many years he was a member of the Masonic fraternity. Milton Huddleston was married to Bettie Cram, who was born in Union City, Tennessee, in 1848, and she died November 14, 1920, at Union City. Their children were as follows: Clara, who married C. S. Talley, now a farmer of Union City, Tennessee, was formerly county clerk for several terms; A. Huddleston, whose name heads this review; and Charles, who is a coal merchant of Fulton.

A. Huddleston attended the rural schools of Fulton County, Kentucky, and was reared on his father's farm until he was sixteen years of age. At that time, he began to work in the hardware store of R. M. Bolinger & Company, with which he remained for four years. Later he was with several concerns in the same line until he had learned the business thoroughly. In 1853 he established himself in a hardware business at Fulton in a very modest way, having as his associate in it George Beadles. With marked ability and real business acumen Mr. Huddleston enlarged his store, gradually at first, but more rapidly as his returns justified, until he now has one of the largest concerns of its kind in Southwestern Kentucky. The store and offices are located on Main Street, and the business was conducted under the name of A. Huddleston & Company, of which Mr. Huddleston was the senior partner, and G. F. Beadles the junior one, until in 1902, Mr. Beadles retired. Mr. Huddleston is a man of wide interests and is now the sole proprietor. He handles all kinds of hardware, farm implements, stoves and similar articles. A democrat, Mr. Huddleston has served in the City Council for the past three years.

Since 1911 he has been president of the Farmers Bank of Fulton, which is the leading financial institution in Southwestern Kentucky. The cashier of this bank is A. M. Nugent. The capital stock is $50,000; the surplus and profits, $35,000, and its deposits are $450,000. Mr. Huddleston is a member of a number of professional and social clubs. His residence is 406 W. Main Street.

In 1865 Mr. Huddleston was married to Mildred Edings, a daughter of L. S. and Margaret (McFall) Edings, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Edings was a prominent business man and farmer of Fulton, and his family was one of the pioneers of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Huddleston have two children, namely: Marion, who is at home, was graduated from the Fulton High School, and then took a course at the Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee; and Arch, who is attending the public schools.

Tilman Ramsey, M. D. The vital little City of Pineville, judicial center of Bell County, claims Doctor Ramsey as one of its representative physicians and surgeons, and he is a scion of sterling southern stock, his paternal ancestors, of English and Scotch lineage, having settled in North Carolina in the colonial period of our nation's history. In that state Riley Ramsey, grandfather of the Doctor, passed his entire life, the active period of which was marked by his close and successful association with agricultural industry, his name having been associated with the Huddleston firm of that city, which was for many years a powerful factor in the middle Tennessee mercantile world. At the time of the Doctor's birth, his grandfather had removed to Tennessee and was one of the earliest settlers in that part of that state. The Doctor's father, James M. Ramsey, was born in Tennessee and was one of the pioneer residents of that state.

In the following year he and his older brother, McPherson, came to Kentucky, with the avowed purpose of tendering their aid in defense of the Union, just after war had been declared between the states of the North and the South. At Flat Lick, Knox County, he enlisted in a company that was assigned to the Third Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and with this command he served during the entire period of the war. He was conspicuous for his heroism in the battle of Chickamauga, Stone's River, Perryville, Franklinville, Nashville, Resaca, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. He took part also in the siege of Vicksburg, and incidental to the historic Atlanta campaign he was with General Sherman's forces on the memorable march from Atlanta to the sea. He was twice captured by the enemy, but contrived to make his escape on each occasion. He was severely wounded while taking part in the battle of Resaca, Georgia, but was able to rejoin his command somewhat later and to continue in service until the close of the war.

After the war Mr. Ramsey came to what is now Bell County, Kentucky, and turned his attention to farm industry, of which he became one of the extensive and successful representatives in this county. In 1850 he retired from the farm and has since maintained his home in Pineville, where he served many years as a valued member of the City Council. He is a staunch Republican, and he and his wife are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic, through which, in the capacity of member, he maintains memories and associations of his youthful military career. Mrs. Ramsey, whose maiden name was Millie N. Parton, was born in Bell County, in 1848, and the gracious marital companionship has covered a period of more than half a century. Of their children the first born is Alice, who is the wife of J. A. Knox, of Pineville, Mr. Knox being a successful coal-mine operator of this section of the state; Doctor Ramsey, of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Mollie, now a resident of Key West, Florida, is the wife of George W. Caudell, who has been for the past fifteen years in active service in the United States Army and who served in the World war, is now an attache of the ordnance department at the army; Jennie, who resides at Pineville, is the widow of Fred Hazzard, who has been president of the Citizens' Bank of Coloma, Bell Coal Company at the time when the nation became involved in the World war. Physical disability having made it impossible for him to enlist for military service, his loyal desire to find some other method of showing his patriotism led him to become identified with railroad service, under government control, and in this service he continued until he encountered an accident that caused his death, on the 2d of June, 1921.

Doctor Ramsey passed the period of his childhood and early youth on the home farm and in the meanwhile availed himself of the advantages of the rural schools of Bell County. In preparation for his chosen profession he was a student in the medical department of the University of Virginia for one year, 1876, and then transferred himself to the medical department of the University of Tennessee, at Nashville, in which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1889 and with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He had the distinction of winning first honors of his class, and this involved his appointment to the position of interne in the Nashville City Hospital, where he served in this capacity for two years. Doctor Ramsey gained much clinical experience of ordinary kind. For one year thereafter he further fortified himself through his connection with the excellent infirmary conducted at Nashville by Dr. W. D. Hazzard, and in this institution he was able to give special attention to surgery. In 1902 Doctor Ramsey engaged in the general practice of his profession at Pineville, Bell County, Kentucky, in which county he had been reared, though his birth occurred in Claiborne County, Tennessee, on the 28th of March, 1873. The scope and representative character of his practice bear evidence alike of his professional ability and his unqualified personal popularity in his home county. He maintains well appointed offices in the Asher Building at Pineville. The Doctor is an active member of the American Medical Association, the Kentucky State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association. In his home city he is president of the Sun Publishing Company, which publishes one of the leading newspapers of this part of the state. He is the owner of valuable real estate at Pineville, including his attractive home property on Kentucky Avenue, and he is the owner also of one of the well improved farms of Bell County. Within the period of the World war Doctor Ramsey was found a loyal worker in behalf of the local agencies for advancing the Government war policies, as he aided in the drives for and made liberal personal contributions to the Liberty and Victory loans, savings stamps, Red Cross services, etc.

Pineville, in the year 1903, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor and Mrs. Ramsey. Mr. C. G. Ramsey, who was born at Statesville, North Carolina, and the two children of this union are Jane and William, the former of whom was born May 2, 1908, and the latter on the 29th of December, 1909. Doctor and Mrs. Ramsey are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and he is serving as a steward of the church at Pineville. He has had no desire to enter the arena of practical politics but is a staunch supporter of the principles of the republican party.

Louis Marshall. It is not given to every man to make a success in banking for this very important line of endeavor calls for the possession and exercise of unusual characteristics. As the banker of necessity, has to back of every industrial and commercial undertaking in his home community, he is called upon to judge men and comprehend their motives in order to place his loans properly and safely, and at the same time not retard a legitimate development because of over-caution. While safe-guarding the interests of his depositors, he must at the same time be astute enough to loan out the funds of his institution so as to earn for it a reasonable profit. Encouragement must be given by his larger outsider, but adequate care must be exercised to see that wild-cat propositions do not gain a foothold in his vicinity and lead his fellow citizens to make unwise investments. Because his advice is so often sought and usually taken, he must be a man of wide information and sound values, and one not easily swayed from what he believes to be the right course. One of the men who during a long and honorable career as a banker, has displayed the above qualities, and many others equally desirable, is Louis Marshall, president and cashier of the Woodford Bank & Trust Company of Versailles.

Mr. Marshall was born July 12, 1856, a son of Edward Colston and Josephine (Chalfont) Marshall. Growing up at Versailles Mr. Marshall attended the public schools of this city and has engaged in business work since he left school. He is the brother of Mrs. W. C. Ramsey, who is a resident of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Mr. Marshall is an independent democrat. He is a communicant of the Episcopal Church. The institution with which Mr. Marshall has been connected for so many years is rightly numbered among the most solid and dependable not only in Woodford County, but in all of this part of Kentucky, and this prestige is largely due to his intelligent foresight and untiring efforts.

Harry Feather. The position held by this well known and popular citizen of Corbin, Whitley County, attests his ability and his effective application of the same in his chosen sphere of activity. He is master mechanic in the service of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, in which he is a stockholder; he is a director of the Whitley National Bank at Corbin; and at some city he is in control of the Whitley Grocery Company which conducts a prosperous wholesale business.

Mr. Feather claims the old Keystone State of the Union as the place of his nativity. His paternal grandfather, John Feather, born at Baltimore in 1812, a native of Maryland, passed the closing period of his life at York, Pennsylvania, where he had served as a car inspector for the Northern Central Railroad Company. Prior to his removal to Pennsylvania he had resided in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, and operated a line of stage coaches out from that city. The family name of his wife was Davis, she having been born at Baltimore, Maryland, in 1817, and her death occurred at York, Pennsylvania.

Harry Feather was born at Harrisburg, the capital city of Pennsylvania, on the 4th of November, 1890, and is a son of John H. and Mary C. (Greiman) Feather, both natives of York, Pennsylvania, where the former was born on February 1, 1841, and the latter December 1st of the same year. The mother died in her native city, on October 13, 1872, and the father was a resident of Louisville, Kentucky, at the time of his death, July 13, 1873. Harry Feather of this sketch is the youngest of their four children, and the eldest was John, who was killed in an accident while serving as a locomotive fireman on the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, he having been but twenty years of age at the
the corner of Gordon Avenue and Poplar Street, and also a well improved farm, of 150 acres, one mile west of Corbin. The intrinsic loyalty and patriotism of Mr. Feather were shown in the active aid which he gave in promotion of all local war service during the nation's participation in the World war, and by his liberal subscriptions to the government war bonds, savings stamps, as well as to Red Cross and other mediums of service.

Barbourville, Knox County, in 1895, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Feather to Miss Mary C. Dishman, who was born and reared in that county, where her parents continued to reside until their death, her father, David Dishman, having long been a successful carpenter and builder at Barbourville. Mr. and Mrs. Feather have five children: John resides at Corbin, where he is foreman on a switch engine of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, besides which he is associated with farm industry in Whitley County; Harry, Jr., remains at the parental home and is round-house foreman for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad; Miss Lena is at the parental home as is also Edward, who is a machinist in the service of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad; and Joseph is, in 1921, a student in Berea College.

JOHN SAMUEL KELLEY has been continuously and unbrokenly engaged in the practice of law at Bardstown in Nelson County since 1871. His career has not been a political one, but one of complete devotion to the profession. He is a learned and eminent lawyer, and has that reputation among the members of the Kentucky bar, who some years ago honored him with election as president of the Kentucky Bar Association.

Mr. Kelley was born on a farm in Jefferson County, Kentucky, January 1, 1853, son of Billy and Martha (Woodsmal) Kelley, natives of Jefferson County. His grandfather was Samuel Kelley and his great-grandfather, John Kelley. Samuel Kelley was one of the Kentucky volunteers who served under General Harrison in the Indian campaign at the beginning of the War of 1812 and held a major's commission. He participated in the battle of Tippecanoe. The maternal grandfather of John S. Kelley, John Woodsmal, was also a soldier in the War of 1812.

In the spring of 1855 Daily Kelley took his family to Platte County in Northwest Missouri, then practically a frontier region. His wife died there in December, 1855, and soon afterward Daily Kelley, with his three motherless children, returned to Kentucky. The youngest child died in the spring of 1856, and the son and daughter were reared in the homes of relatives. The daughter, Annie, is the wife of C. Broadens and is now living at Pine Bluff, Arkansas.

John Samuel Kelley was two years of age when taken to Missouri, and was not quite three when his mother died. On being brought back to Kentucky he lived with John Woodsmal in Jefferson County until the death of his maternal grandfather. From the age of thirteen for three years, until 1868, he lived with his uncle Charles W. Moore in Jefferson County and for another year made his home with Samuel K. Baird, in Spencer County. In the meantime his school advantages were only such as could be supplied by rural schools. At the age of sixteen he entered the old Agricultural and Mechanical College, now the Kentucky State University, and pursued his studies there from 1869 to 1871.

At the age of eighteen Mr. Kelley began teaching at High Grove in Nelson County, and taught at intervals until he graduated from Forest Academy in June, 1874. For about two years he taught steadily, and in 1876 began the study of law under G. G. Gilbert of Taylorsville. Before the close of that year he entered the law school of the University of Louisville and graduated in 1877.

Mr. Kelley began his practice as a lawyer at Bardstown in May, 1877, and for eleven years was associated... with William Johnson, one of the prominent members of the bar of the county, their association continuing until the death of Mr. Johnson. The only important public office Mr. Kelley held was as school commissioner of Nelson County. He has found complete satisfaction for all his ambitions within the strict limits of his law practice, which has always had a large and important volume. He was elected president of the Kentucky State Bar Association in 1904. His chief avocation from the routine of law practice has been farming and the breeding and raising of a high grade of livestock, and he has for a number of years been president of the Peoples Bank of Bardstown.

On September 21, 1881, he married Miss Mattie L. Ball, of Bardstown. She died fourteen years later, in 1895. She was the mother of six children: John J., Horace S., and Mattie L., all deceased; Annie Belle, deceased wife of R. M. Edelen; Victor Louis and John S. Jr. On March 1, 1909, Mr. Kelley married for his present wife Mrs. Mary M. (Troutman) McKay. They have two children, Sabina Woodsmall and Bethel Bowles Kelley.

Both of Mr. Kelley's older sons were in the service during the World war. Victor Louis Kelley, born at Bardstown February 11, 1889, and John S. Kelley, Jr., born at Bardstown January 29, 1892, are graduates of St. Mary's College of St. Mary, Kansas, with the class of 1911, and both took their degrees in law from the University of Michigan in 1914. Victor Kelley is now practicing law in association with his father, while the younger brother is in the automobile business at Louisville. Victor Kelley volunteered in July, 1918, and had five months of training and service in the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, receiving his honorable discharge after the signing of the armistice. The younger son volunteered for army duty, was trained at Fort Benjamin Harrison, commissioned a second lieutenant in August, 1917, was on duty at Camp Zachary Taylor, was commissioned first lieutenant in April, 1918, and is now a captain in the Reserve Corps. Both brothers were married in 1917, the wife of Victor Kelley being Martina Shireliff, while John married Mary Connor. At the age of fifty years Judge Kelley's eyes began to fail and he soon became totally blind. Notwithstanding this great handicap, he has maintained his business, his interest in his vacation, his business affairs, and in all the conditions affecting the life of his community.

E. S. Lee. The First National Bank of Kentucky, established and chartered in 1805, is at once the oldest and the largest national bank in Northern Kentucky. It seems that his president E. S. Lee should be a veteran of the banking business in Covington, where for over thirty-five years he has had increasing responsibilities in the financial affairs of the community. The First National Bank has a history of fifty-five years and in that time it has declared 112 annual dividends to its stockholders. The bank has a capital stock of $600,000, surplus and undivided profits of nearly $200,000, and its resources amount to $6,219,000. Its principal executive officers are: E. S. Lee, president; R. C. Stewart, vice president; Ben A. Adams, vice president; and B. Bramlage, cashier.

Mr. Lee was born at Danville in Boyle County May 23, 1862. He represents an old and prominent Kentucky family and more remotely a Virginia ancestry. His great-great-grandfather Ambrose Lee was a lifelong resident of Virginia, a planter, and died in Albemarle County. He married Frances Penny, also a native of Virginia. The great-grandfather was George Lee, who was born in Amherst County, Virginia, and while Kentucky was still a part of the unbroken western wilderness he came across the mountains and established a home in Lincoln County, where in the course of time he cultivated a large tract of land with the aid of his slaves. He died in Lincoln County. His son also named George Lee was born in Scott County, Kentucky, in 1793, a date which indicates the establishment of the family here before Kentucky was separated from the mother State of Virginia. George Lee lived for many years on a plantation in Boyle County and died at Danville in 1878 when he was eighty-five. He married Mary Shelton, a native of Kentucky, who died in Lincoln County.

J. E. Lee, father of the Covington banker and son of the Boyle County planter just named, was born in Lincoln County March 31, 1825, was reared and married there, and afterwards moved to Harding County, Kentucky, where he owned extensive farm lands and carried on operations in keeping with the style of the old time southern planter. He died at Danville in 1869. In politics he was a democrat and for many years an elder in the First Presbyterian Church, being an active supporter of the church at Danville. J. E. Lee married Elizabeth Miller, who was born in Lincoln County, Kentucky, in 1827, and died at Danville in 1867. Their oldest child Lucy still living at Danville is the widow of Thomas H. Bell, who was a well known member of the Danville bar. G. Miller, the second in age, is a farmer living at Danville. James A. Lee also followed farming pursuits and died at Danville at the age of forty. J. N. Lee is a farmer by occupation but lives at Covington. J. E. Lee was the fifth and youngest of the family.

His early education was secured in private schools in Boyle county and he attended school at Danville, but at the age of seventeen turned his attention from books and school to the practical matters of life, since when his chief interests have been centered in banking.

He began as one of the minor employes or clerks of the Farmers National Bank of Danville, and remained with that institution acquiring experience and several promotions for five years. Mr. Lee came to Covington in 1884 and at first was general bookkeeper in the Northern Bank of Kentucky in the Covington branch. He was promoted to teller, in 1888 to cashier, and filled that office until 1897, when he had the task of winding up the affairs of the Covington branch of the Northern Bank of Kentucky, at the time the institution went into voluntary liquidation. This service completed Mr. Lee joined the First National Bank as cashier, and since 1905 has been its president.

Some other business interests that might be mentioned are his connection as treasurer of the U. S. Motor Truck Company of Covington, director of the Broadway & Newport Bridge Company of Cincinnati, and a director of the Columbia Life Insurance Company of Cincinnati. Mr. Lee is a democrat in casting his vote and an elder in the Presbyterian Church. His home is a beautiful suburban country place, located on the Covington and Amsterdam Pike, five miles west of Covington. He has forty acres of land there overlooking the Ohio River and altogether it is one of the most attractive country homes around Covington. During the World war period Mr. Lee was chairman of Liberty Loan campaigns in Covington, and he derived a great deal of satisfaction in seeing the several campaigns go over the top.

In 1886 at Covington Mr. Lee married Miss Stella Collins, daughter of DeWitt C. and Rachel (Cleveland) Collins, both now deceased. Her father was also a banker, being at one time cashier of the Northern Bank of Kentucky at Covington. Mrs. Lee finished her education in the Young Ladies Seminary at Anchorage, Kentucky. Their children in decreasing order are eight.

F. S., Jr., had a lieutenant's commission in the National Army, was with the Motor Transport Division and spent 1½ years overseas in France, and is now a resident of Wilmington, Ohio, connected with the Auto Compressor Company. He married Miss Rachel Hoover of Nicholasville, Kentucky. D. Collins Lee, the second son, who is engaged in a successful law practice at Covington, married Miss Grace Dyer of Princeton, Kentucky. Lucy is the wife of John S. McElroy, a member of the Louisville bar. J. E. is in the lumber business at Cincinnati and married to Miss Ethel Hix of Covington, Kentucky. Stella, at home, is a clerk in the First National Bank at Covington.

Rachel is the wife of F. O. Townes, a farmer living at Madisonville, Kentucky; Louise is a student in the College of Music at Cincinnati. The youngest child, Virginia, is a student in the Kentucky College for women at Danville.

Thomas H. Coleman. While during the last year or so Mr. Coleman has spent much of his time at his beautiful home 2½ miles west of Harrodsburg on the Lexington Pike, his business affairs as a contractor presented a strenuous program that kept him for years traveling and supervising extensive projects in many states of the Union.

Mr. Coleman is a member of an old and prominent Kentucky family and was born in Mercer County on a farm March 15, 1862, son of Robert E. and Margaret (Hughes) Coleman. His parents were also natives of Kentucky. The family was established in America by Robert E. Coleman who came from Ireland and settled in Virginia in colonial times. A son of this immigrant was James Coleman, who moved from Virginia to Kentucky. The next generation was also represented by James Henry Coleman, father of Robert E. Coleman and grandfather of Thomas Henry Coleman.

Thomas Henry Coleman attended school at Harrodsburg, and from the age of sixteen launched himself into a career of business activity. He was born on a farm with his father until eighteen, was then in the livery business at Harrodsburg to the age of twenty-five, at which time he formed a partnership with his brother-in-law Edward Rosser as general contractors in railroad and other heavy construction. The partnership continued until the death of Edward Rosser and after that Mr. Coleman continued the business alone. Mr. Coleman has directly supervised and handled construction contracts, chiefly railroad building, in the states of Illinois, Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, New York, West Virginia, Virginia, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Alabama and Louisiana. One of the early important contracts was in the construction of the Chicago Drainage Canal, which began in 1893. The firm of Rosser-Coleman-Hoge was awarded the contract for removing the material from a cut 160 feet wide, 35 feet deep and 4,000 feet long, through the solid limestone. One road formation characterized of a considerable portion of the canal. Mr. Coleman had active charge of this excavation, and while the work involved enormous difficulties yet the contract was fulfilled at the time agreed upon in 1896, two years before the canal was formally completed. In 1910 Mr. Coleman was associated in partnership with the Rhinehart-Dennis Corporation in constructing two miles of tunnel of the Catskill Aqueduct for the water supply of the City of New York.

Some of Mr. Coleman’s most strenuous work was done during the period of the World War. In 1917 he became associated with the general contracting corporation at Richmond, Kentucky, of Mason-Hanger & Company. The Government selected this firm to build Camp Taylor at Louisville. Mr. Coleman had active charge of construction, and the cantonment was the first completed of the original sixteen embraced in the plan of the Government.

The Government also selected the firm to construct the site for Lake Charles, Louisiana, and Mr. H. C. Hanger, president of the company placed Mr. Coleman in entire charge as general manager. Here again the work was completed on time and in such manner as to satisfy the most exacting inspection of the Government officials. In February, 1918, the Government started the building at Nashville, Tennessee, of a great powder plant known as the Old Hickory powder plant. The Mason-Hanger Company had the contract for the construction of all the housing for workers, the water and filtering plants, the railroads, and highways. Mr. Coleman was in charge as general manager, and the entire work was practically completed when the armistice was signed. That plant cost about $20,000,000, the maximum number of men employed during the construction being 15,000, all civilians, and working ten hours a day. Mr. Coleman was one of the busiest men in the civilian service during the World War and since then has enjoyed a degree of well earned leisure at his farm near Harrodsburg.

In 1903 he bought the farm formerly owned by his great-grandfather James Coleman, the Kentucky pioneer. This farm he improved in 1910 with one of the most beautiful modern homes in Mercer County. The house stands on an eminence overlooking some broad and beautiful vistas of Kentucky landscape, and the house is surrounded with a natural park of native shade trees. Mr. Coleman also owns 200 acres about 3½ miles from Harrodsburg on the Lexington Pike. This farm which he bought in 1894 was the original home of Governor Slaughter of Kentucky. The body of Governor Slaughter rests in the old family graveyard on the farm. Mr. Coleman is vice president of the Farmers Trust Company of Harrodsburg and a director of the Mercer National Bank of Harrodsburg.

May 15, 1884, he married Miss Dixie Cohen, whose parents were farming people near Danville. Mr. and Mrs. Coleman have one son, Charles H. Coleman, who was educated in Harrodsburg, in Culver Military Academy at Culver, Indiana, in Transylvania University at Lexington, and for several years has been actively associated with his father in the various business of farming and contracting. Charles H. Coleman married Miss Anmita Moore, daughter of the late Daniel L. Moore of Harrodsburg. They have a young daughter, Joanne Ball Coleman, born April 21, 1919.

Thomas R. Stults. The insurance business is one which has made mighty strides forward during the past decade or two, and is gaining strength because of the campaigns launched and maintained by the large companies and their representatives for the purpose of educating the people with reference to the paramount importance of protecting themselves against probable loss. Because of the stability of this great factor in the commercial life of the country there has been attached to it some of the most masterful men of their type, whose sagacity and profitable work, and through their conscientious and earnestness of purpose, gain the confidence and respect of their fellow citizens. One of the men of Adair County who is a splendid type of the modern insurance man, is Thomas R. Stults of Columbia, now serving in the Kentucky State Assembly.

Thomas R. Stults belongs to an old-established family which was founded in the American Colonies by an ancestor who came from Germany. Mrs. Stults was born at Portland, Adair County, Kentucky, August 23, 1856, a son of M. C. Stults, and grandson of William Stults, who was born in Adair County, and died in this county before the birth of his grandson. All of his life was spent in Adair County, and his efforts were directed toward farming. He married Rhoda Coulter, who was born in Lincoln County, Kentucky, and died in Adair County. The father of William Stults was a native of Virginia, who came to Adair County during its pioneer period, and here was engaged in farming until claimed by death.

M. C. Stults was born in Adair County, Kentucky, in 1817 and died in Adair County in 1903, having spent his whole life within the confines of his native county, where he was engaged in farming and working at his trade of a mechanic. In politics he was a democrat, but he never went into public life. Early joining the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he continued an active supporter of it as long as he lived. He married Emma Smith, who was born in Barren County, Kentucky, in 1827, and died in Adair County in 1911. Their children were as follows: John S., who is a retired lumber dealer of Campbellsburg; Ann Elizabeth, who resides in Green County, Kentucky, is the widow of W. C. Orr; Thomas R. Stults, whose name he changed to Stoops for thirty years, retired to this town and helped his father operate it until 1886. Once more he left the farm and established himself in a mercantile business at Knifley, Adair County, which he continued to operate for ten years. In November, 1894, he was elected county court clerk of Adair County, and took office in January, 1895. So competent and accommodating did he prove that he was re-elected to this office in 1897, again in 1900, and for the third time in 1905, his last term of office expiring in 1910. For the two subsequent years he was secretary of the State Board of Equalization at Frankfort, Kentucky. In 1895, when he first took office he moved to Columbia, which has continued to be his home town ever since, and he owns his residence on Burkesville Street, one of the most comfortable and desirable ones in comprising Adair and Taylor counties. He was chairman of the Appropriation Committee, and served on the Agricultural Committee, and a number of others, and in all of his work has always represented the wishes of his constituents to the full extent of his power. He has done some very effective work in behalf of the Good Roads movement, and gave his unqualified support to the Ninteenth Amendment. During the late war he was one of the employment workers in behalf of the local activities, and bought bonds and stamps and contributed to the limit of his means. Well known in Masonry he belongs to Columbia Lodge No. 66, F. & A. M., of which he is past master; Columbia Chapter No. 7, R. A. M., of which he is past high priest; and Marion Commandery No. 21, K. T., of Lebanon, Kentucky.

In 1899 Mr. Stults was married in Adair County to Miss Mary Pickett, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Pickett, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Pickett was for many years one of the prosperous farmers and prominent citizens of Adair County. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Stults: Lillie C., who is the wife of M. C. Winfrey, Circuit Court Clerk of Adair County; a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work; Annie, who is a resident of Barren County, married Mr. M. Voss, a wholesale stock dealer; Ewing, who is a resident of Louisville, Kentucky, is state agent for the Scottish Union Fire Insurance Company; and Count T., who is also a resident of Louisville, is special agent for the Union Central Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Stults has every reason to be proud of what he has accomplished for he has worked up from small beginnings to a place of prominence and influence. A close student of men and the motives which govern them, he early became a leader in politics, and honored by his party by successive elections to public office, he has never failed to live up to the highest conception of his duties, and has made a record in the several offices he has occupied. In his present business he is scoring heavily, writing a large amount of business for his company, and at the same time affording proper protection to many of his friends and acquaintances. His knowledge of the fire insurance business is thorough, and his advice is sought by those who desire to obtain the best policy on the market. Ever since he located at Columbia he has had the welfare of the city at heart, just as he has always had that of the county, and has never deemed any effort too difficult to aid in procuring for it every improvement consistent with the tax levy. The people of his city, county and district owe him a heavy debt, and that they appreciate it, his continued re-election to office seems to prove beyond any doubt.

Fred Stone is one of the men in Eastern Kentucky who represent the typical industrial life of that section of the state. He has lived there from birth, and has wrought out his career through strenuous action and work. He is now superintendent of the Steele Mining Company's plant at Mossey Bottom in Pike County.

Mr. Stone was born at Coal Run, October 6, 1885, son of Thomas and Minta (Ratiliff) Stone. His mother is a daughter of James Rogers, a farmer living at Washingtorno. Their first home was a farm and died when his son Fred was a child.

Fred Stone had little opportunity to attend school and at the age of twelve years he was a water boy for the construction gangs working on the building of the railroad up the Big Sandy. He continued in the service of that road for thirteen years, eventually becoming a foreman of construction. Since then his wanderings have been identified with mining and he knows the industry in every phase. He was for several years a machine operator in the coal mines at Williamson, West Virginia, but since 1910 has been identified with the Steele Mining Company. He was a machine operator in the mines until 1918, was then given work in the Company store for two years, and became assistant superintendent and is now superintendent of the plant, Mossey Bottom.

Mr. Stone is affiliated with the Improved Order of Red Men, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Elks, Moose and Masons. February 16, 1921, he married Josephine Fugate, daughter of John E. Fugate of Lawrence County.

William Rogers Clay, now Judge of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky, and formerly Commissioner of that court for about fourteen years, makes his home at Frankfort. He represents one branch of the prominent Clay family of Fayette and Bourbon counties.

His great-great-grandfather was Henry Clay, M. D., who was born in Cumberland County, Virginia, in 1736, and died in Bourbon County, Kentucky, January 17, 1820. His great-grandfather was Samuel Clay, who was born in Virginia, May 10, 1761, served in the Revolutionary Army, and settled in Bourbon County at the close of the Revolutionary War. He spent the rest of his life as a land owner and planter in that section. The grandfather of William Rogers Clay was Col. L. B. Clay, who was born in Bourbon County and followed the ancestral vocation of planting and farming. He also lived in Missouri for a while and finally retired to Lexington, Kentucky, where he died in 1870. Though over sixty years of age at the beginning of the Civil war, he volunteered as a private in the Confederate Army. He soon rose to the rank of colonel, and became a member of General Ramse's staff, General Price's Division, Trans-Mississippi Department. His son, Samuel Clay, Jr., father of Rogers Clay, was born at Lexington in 1825, and died in that city in 1913. He was reared in Bourbon County and engaged in farming there. In 1865 he moved to Fayette County, where he also engaged in farming for about four years, and then moved to Lexington. Thereafter he became deeply interested in the development of Eastern Kentucky lands and other resources, and for many years was a dealer in mountain land in that section of the state. He was a democrat, a Mason and a member of the Christian Church. On May 25, 1800, Samuel Clay, Jr., married Miss Jane (Warfield) Beaver, daughter of Capt. William S. Rogers and his wife, Henrietta Roseberry, and great-granddaughter of Nathaniel Rogers, member of the Constitutional Convention of Kentucky in 1790. Mrs. Clay, who is a distinguished genealogist and wrote "The Genealogy of the Clay's," now lives at Lexington. She was the mother of four children: Belle, of Louisville, widow of Judge F. B. Beck; Mary, a sister of Mrs. William H. Clays, of St. Louis, and a member of the firm of W. L. Lyons & Company; William Rogers, second in age; Bishop, a real estate broker, who d\'ed at Lexington in 1916; and Samuel Blair, who, at this writing, is still with the United States Army of Occupation in Germany.

William Rogers Clay was born in Fayette County, November 9, 1864, and in cultivated intelligence and education, measures up to the fine standards and traditions of the Clays of Kentucky. He was educated in the public and private schools of Lexington and at Transylvania University, where he received his A. B. degree in 1885. He was a member of the Phi Delta Theta college fraternity. On leaving the university he spent two years in the railroad business at Moherly, Missouri. In 1887 he went to Washington, D. C., as private secretary to United States Senator James B. Beck. While there he attended the law school of Georgetown University, where he received the degree of L. L. B. in 1889, and the degree of L. L. M. in 1890. On returning to Lexington in 1890, Judge Clay was elected and served as superintendent of public schools of that city for several years. In 1903 he was elected city solicitor of Lexington, and served in that capacity for 3 1/2 years. In 1907 he was elected commissioner of the county debt and appeals, and held that office until January, 1921, when he received the degree of judge of that court. His offices are in the new Capitol Buildings.

Judge Clay is a member of the Kentucky State Bar Association and of the American Bar Association. He is Curator of Transylvania University, a democrat and a member of the Christian Church. He is affiliated with Merrick Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Lexington, and is past Exalted Ruler of Lexington Lodge No. 472. He was active in the work of the Protective and Order of Elks. During the war with Germany he was one of the active speakers at patriotic gatherings throughout Central Kentucky.

Judge Clay's Frankfort home is at 312 Ewing Street. June 14, 1900, at Lexington, he married Miss Anne Field Clay, daughter of Sidney and Sally (Warfield) Clay, and great-granddaughter of Gen. Green Clay of Madison County, who was a delegate to the Virginia Convention which ratified the Constitution of the United States, a member of the First Constitutional Convention of Kentucky and an officer in the Revolutionary war and the War of 1812. Mrs. Clay's father, now deceased, was for many years engaged in farming on an extensive scale in Bourbon County. Her mother resides at Lexington. Mrs. Clay was educated in private schools at Paris and Lexington and also at the University of Kentucky. Judge and Mrs. Clay have two children: William Rogers, Jr., born March 3, 1902, and Sidney Warfield, born January 24, 1910.

MELVIN V. WICKER, M. D. Others of the learned professions minister to the needs of the people, but none holds the importance of that of medicine. Man can adjust his differences with his fellows without recourse to the bench or bar, he can educate himself and can work out his own spiritual salvation but life itself depends upon the skill and learning of the physician and surgeon. Thus it is that the medical practitioner is not only one of the most useful and necessary members of society, but that there is likewise no class of men so generally respected and esteemed. Floyd County is the home of numerous capable members of this profession, and one among them who holds a high place in public confidence is Dr. Melvin V. Wicker, secretary of the Floyd County medical society, and physician in charge of the Elkorn Coal Corporation Hospital at Wayland and of the Wheelwright division of the same corporation. He likewise takes an active part in civic affairs, and at the present time is serving in the capacity of mayor of Wayland.

Doctor Wicker was born near Lackey, on the Beaver, April 25, 1885, a son of William and Mildred (Davis) Wicker and a grandson of Jess Wicker, who came from Greene County, Tennessee. He is a member of a family whose members have been prominent in public affairs, his cousin, John (Bud) Wicker, of Jones Fork of the Beaver, having been formerly a member of the Kentucky Legislature, while a maternal uncle, Hon. H. F. Davis, is police judge at Jackson, Breathitt County. William Wicker, father of Doctor Wicker, was born May 11, 1865, in the same house on Beaver Creek in which he was born. He has been a resident of the same community all his life, and now has extensive agricultural interests and is also engaged in merchandising at Lackey, having made a success of both occupations and being held in the highest esteem by the people of his community. Mrs. Wicker was born in December, 1865, in the community where Lackey is now situated, and is a daughter of A. S. Davis, a Virginia Civil War veteran. Doctor Wicker is the second in a family of eleven children, all of whom reside on Beaver Creek with the exception of one, who is a resident of Grayson, Carter County, Kentucky.

The early education of Melvin V. Wicker was secured in the district school near his father's farm, following which he furthered his education by attendance at the public school at Prestonsburg. As is the case with many young men who have turned to professional careers he spent some time in his youth as an instructor in the country districts, teaching five schools before he enrolled as a student at the University of Louisville. There he took special work in pharmacy, after which he entered the medical department of the same institution and was graduated therefrom with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1909. Since his graduation he has rendered the same service as his predecessor, and it is his wish, as his education, as he paid his own expenses through the University with funds that he had earned himself. He commenced medical practice in the valley in which he was born, and from 1915 to 1918 was assistant to Doctor Maggard, who was then holding the position now occupied by Doctor Wicker. He took charge of this position in December, 1918, and has evolved an excellent system, by which his corps of physicians are able to render expeditious and efficacious service. A man of broad information along many kindred lines, Doctor Wicker has kept in close touch with the advancements being made in his calling, and is one of the best-informed physicians of Floyd County, a fact recognized in his election to the office of secretary of the county medical society. He belongs also to the Kentucky State Medical Society, and as a fraternalist belongs to the Wayland Masonic lodge, of which he is the past master of the Chapter of that order, and Catlettsburg lodge of Elks. A democrat in politics, he is active in civic affairs, and is giving Wayland an excellent administration in the office of mayor. Essentially a self-made man, he has not allowed himself to be hampered by the fact that he has had to win through hard work every step forward, but rather has so shaped circumstances as to make what to another might seem adversity serve but as a stimulus to his ambition.

On September 22, 1910, Doctor Wicker was united in marriage with Miss Pearlie Webb, who was born on Beaver Creek, a daughter of S. B. Webb, and to this union there have been born four children: Irma, Shirley, Amelia and Christine. Mrs. Wicker is a faithful member of and active worker in the Christian Church, and like her husband, is very popular in the community.

Donald Calvin Edwards, former congressman from the Eleventh Kentucky District, has been a resident of Laurel County thirty years, and throughout that time has been prominently connected with lumber manufacturing, banking and with most of the big impulses in commercial and civic affairs.

Though a native of Iowa, Mr. Edwards represents family names that have been known in Laurel County from the pioneer era. His great-grandfather Edwards moved from North Carolina to Laurel County, Kentucky, about 1804. His grandfather Edwards was born in Laurel County in 1811, moved out to Iowa in early times, and died in Appanoose County, that state, in 1887. The father of Don Edwards was Lewis Edwards who was born in Laurel County in 1838, son of William and Marilla (Elliott) Edwards. Lewis Edwards was twelve years of age when his parents moved to Iowa. He married Jane Saylor, who was born in Harlan County, Kentucky, in 1838, and died in Kansas in 1875. Her father was also a native of Harlan County, Kentucky, and died in Kansas in 1869. The Edwards family made its permanent residence in Appanoose County, Iowa, July 13, 1861, and spent his early life on farms in Iowa and Kansas, attending the common schools of those states and finished his education in the Campbell University at Hoiton, Kansas. After some varied business experience he located in Laurel County, Kentucky, in November, 1882, and became a manufacturer and wholesale dealer in lumber and timber products, an industry in which he has ever since been identified. In 1900 he also broadened the scope of his enterprise by engaging in general merchandising, and in 1911 established a wholesale grocery business at London, but sold his interests in 1913 to the London Grocery Company. In 1903 he organized the Citizens Bank of London under a state charter, but it reorganized under a National charter in 1908, the institution now being known at the National Bank of London. Mr. Edwards has been president and a director of this bank since its organization. In addition he is president and a director of the E. M. T. Coal Company at Island in McLean County; president and director of the Laurel County Fair Association; and president of the London Commercial Club, a flourishing organization with over a hundred members.

For many years Mr. Edwards has been one of the ablest leaders of the republican party in Kentucky. From 1898 to 1901 he was clerk and master commissioner of the Laurel Circuit Court. In 1908 he was chairman of the Kentucky State Republican Convention, and during the presidential campaign of that year was a member of the State Campaign Committee and director of the Speakers Bureau. In 1904 Mr. Edwards was elected to represent the Eleventh Kentucky District, comprising nineteen counties in the eastern part of the state, and for three successive terms faithfully and ably looked after the interests of his large constituency and was one of the influential members of the Kentucky delegation in Congress. His service was in the Fifty-ninth to the Sixty-first Congress, his last term expiring in 1911. He was tendered the nomination for Lieutenant Governor at the Republican State Convention in 1911 but declined. In 1912 he was a delegate to the National Convention at Chicago, and was a supporter of the nomination for the presidency.

During the war Mr. Edwards received a powerful stimulus to patriotic work in his section of the state. He was a member of the State Council of Defense, was chairman of all the loan campaigns in his county and also county fuel administrator. He is a member of the Baptist Church at London and belongs to its building committee.

On February 11, 1904, at London, he married Miss Lida Hodge, daughter of S. W. Hodge. Her mother was a McHargue and the McHargues and Hodges have been in Laurel County from pioneer time. Mr. and Mrs. Edwards have two children: Don C., Jr., born in 1908, and Dorothy, born in 1914.

Thomas Devenny is general superintendent of the Edgewater Coal Company, owned by the Kentucky Solvay Company. He was born in Maybury, McDowell County, West Virginia, July 10, 1887, son of James and Roscie (Hamilton) Devenny, both natives of Virginia. His grandfather Thomas James Devenny, had charge of the operations of the Merimac mines for the Confederate Government during the Civil War. James Devenny grew up with a practical education and a knowledge of mining and during the last ten years of his life was superintendent of the Cooper interests in McDowell County, West Virginia. He died November 12, 1906, at the age of fifty-eight. He was a democrat in a republic city, but his son Thomas became a republican. The latter's mother is still living in McDowell, West Virginia. Of her ten children, five sons, Thomas the oldest, have been identified with the mining industry. John Devenny, who received his technical training at West Virginia University, is a foreman with the Cooper interests in McDowell. Clifford, who was educated as an electrician in New York City, is electrician for the Cooper mines. James, who attended the Virginia Military Institute, is with the Pocahontas Consolidation at Switchback. Harry has also had mining experience but is now attending the Virginia Military Institute.

Thomas Devenny graduated from West Virginia University in 1907, but practically grew up in mines and his knowledge of that industry includes every practical detail underground and above ground. He took a post-graduate course in the Butte School of Mines in Montana, and his experience has covered such widely diversified fields as those of West Virginia and Alaska. For a time he was connected with the Northwest Improvement Company at Montana, and the coal department of the Northern Pacific Railroad, beginning as mucker and later as superintendent.

When he returned to West Virginia he was for two years chief engineer for the Turkey Gap Coal & Coke Company, and then became superintendent of the Freeburn plant at mouth of Peter Creek in Pike County. This mine was later acquired by the Portsmouth Solvay Coke Company. After four years at Freeburn he was transferred to his present responsibilities.

May 20, 1916, Mr. Devenny married Miss Jeanette Brown, daughter of James A. Brown of Scranton, Pennsylvania. They are members of the Presbyterian Church and Mr. Devenny is affiliated with North Fork Lodge of Masons in West Virginia, is a member of the West Virginia Temple Company at Mountaine, and Mystic Shrine at Charleston, West Virginia. He is a member of the West Virginia Coal Mining Institute and the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers.

Two of his brothers were in the service during the World War, one as a sergeant on the battle lines in France, while John was a first lieutenant, being trained in the officers' school at Camp Taylor. Their sister was a nurse and spent eighteen months on duty in the army hospitals at Brest, France. His brother-in-law, Doctor Saunders, was in the Medical Corps, stationed with the English army at Lens, Belgium, and was killed. Another brother-in-law was with the artillery branch of the service in France.

Augustus John Wahle, M. D. In the ten years he has practiced at Somerset, Doctor Wahle has achieved a high reputation as a capable physician and surgeon, and has looked after an accumulating volume of interests both financial and civic in that community, where he is one of the best known citizens.

Doctor Wahle was born at Louisville, Kentucky, May 18, 1851. His grandfather, John Wahle, was born at Berlin, Germany, in 1807. He came of a wealthy family, was an officer in the German army, and shortly after his marriage when he came to America he brought a large fortune with him. His faculties were those of an extensive business man, though his financial judgment did not keep pace with his practical activities. He became well known at Louisville, where he was a coal operator and coal dealer, also had a meat market and engaged in other enterprises. He was exceedingly liberal and gave his money generously to charitable causes.

When he died at Louisville in 1850 his loss was deeply and widely mourned, but he left an estate of only a few thousand dollars. He married a Miss Nieman who died at Louisville in 1866.

M. P. Wahle, father of Doctor Wahle, was born at Louisville in 1854 and died in that city in 1907. During his active business career he was in the transfer line. He was a democrat and a devout Catholic. He married a Miss Hoseley, who was born at Louisville in 1856 and is still living in that city where most of her children also reside. A record of the children is as follows: G. P. Wahle, connected with the Alabama Trust Company as an official and a resident of Louisville; Emeline, wife of John Acy, a skilled iron worker at Louisville; Augustus John; F. A., a resident of Louisville; Rose, wife of John Lemke, a cabinet maker and piano case maker at Louisville; Lillian, wife of Walter Bourn, a printer at Louisville; Madeline, who died at the age of twenty-six, wife of Captain Medley, who was a hotel proprietor at Louisville and a man of varied military experience, having served in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands during the Spanish-American war and was also in service during the World war. Elizabeth, who is married and lives at Detroit, Michigan; and Jennie May of Louisville.

Dr. Jesse B. Wahle is a clerk for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad.

Augustus John Wahle attended the parochial and public schools of his native city, is a graduate of the Louisville High School, and in 1908 received his medical diploma from the University of Louisville. During 1908-09 he was an intern in St. Anthony's Hospital at Louisville, also practiced for several months in that city, and for one year lived in Rich County, Utah. Since that time his medical and professional interests have been at Somerset, where his offices are at 102 North Main Street. Doctor Wahle is a member of the Pulaski County, Kentucky State and American Medical Associations. He is a member of the Medical Reserve Corps and during the World War performed the heavy and arduous responsibilities of chairman and examining physician for the Pulaski County Draft Board. He owns a large amount of real estate, owning a farm of 300 acres on the Cumberland River and a beautiful residence at the corner of Central and Cotter avenues. Doctor Wahle is a stockholder and former director of the Citizens National Bank of Somerset. He is an independent democrat, a member of the Baptist Church, and is affiliated with Keokee Council, Knights of Columbus at Ludlow, Kentucky.

In November, 1911, at Louisville he married Miss Mary Agnes Livingston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Livingston. Her mother resides at Louisville. Her father was in the grocery business and died at New Albany, Indiana. Mrs. Wahle is a graduate of the Louisville High School. They have four children:

Livingston, born July 21, 1913; Mary William, born in February, 1916; Joan Rose, born in April, 1918; and Aneta Angela, born in October, 1920.

Jesse B. Paschall, M. D. A busy physician and surgeon Doctor Paschall's work has ranged over a large community on both sides of the State line at Fulton, and he is as well known in Obion County, Tennessee, as in Fulton County, Kentucky. His father before him was an honored physician for many years in the same counties.

This branch of the Paschall family were originally French Huguenots and were driven from their native land by religious persecution. Three brothers came to America, one locating in New York City, another at Philadelphia, while the ancestor of Doctor Paschall established a home in North Carolina. The grandfather of Doctor Paschall was Jesse Morgan Paschall, a native of North Carolina. The spirit of adventure led him early into the wilderness, he eventually, with Davy Crockett in removing the Cherokee Indians from Tennessee, Alexander Paschall, father of Jesse Morgan Paschall, was the son of William Paschall, a Revolutionary soldier from North Carolina. He spent most of his years as a pioneer farmer in Weakley County, Tennessee, where he died.

The late Dr. N. J. Paschall was born in Weakley County in 1840 and after graduating in medicine at the Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia. Soon afterward the war broke out and in 1861 he enlisted in the Confederate Army from Weakley County. He served as a captain in the cavalry under General Forrest and served throughout the war, from his first great battle at Shiloh until the final surrender. When the war was over he returned to Obion County, and subsequently took another diploma in medicine at Washington University at St. Louis, Missouri. He also practiced in Texas three years, and for many years had his home in Fulton, Kentucky, and in Obion County, Tennessee, moving across the line into the latter county in 1878. However, he died at Fulton, Kentucky, in 1900. He was a staunch democrat, a member of the Masonic fraternity, and a man of the highest standing in professional and civic circles. He married Sarah Jane Wilson, who was born at Milburn, Kentucky, and is now living in Obion County. She was the mother of eight children: Mary Elizabeth, whose husband, Andrew L. Foster, is connected with the Patterson Transfer Company at Memphis where they reside; Sarah Agnes is the wife of Herschel T. Smith, a well known Fulton attorney; May was married to Joe Bennett, a druggist at Fulton, Kentucky; Augusta is the wife of Thomas N. Fields of Obion County; Newton Jr. is in the drug business at Fulton, but lives in his home in Obion County; Ed C. is a fire insurance broker at Fulton, with home in Obion County; Dr. Jesse B. is the seventh of the family; and Dixie, the youngest, is the wife of Thomas M. Pittman, a civil engineer at McComb, Mississippi.

Jesse B. Paschall was born in Obion County September 7, 1881, attended the public schools at Fulton, Kentucky, high school at Memphis, Tenn, and the University of Tennessee at Knoxville; from the University of Tennessee School of Medicine, and in 1909 received his M. D. degree from Washington University at St. Louis, Missouri. He is a member of the college fraternity Phi Delta Phi. Doctor Paschall entered active practice at Fulton in 1909, and has achieved all the recognition due a man of adequate equipment and skill in his chosen line. He is a member of the County, State and American Medical Associations, has held the position of Health Officer of Fulton, Kentucky, and is present Health Officer of Fulton, Tennessee, where he has his home.
HISTORY OF KENTUCKY

one of the modern residences in the vicinity of Fulton. His office is at 218 Lake Street in Fulton, Kentucky. His Farm is at 211 North Main Street. He is a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge No. 1142 of the Elks, Evergreen Camp No. 9, Woodmen of the World. April 6, 1915, in Fulton County, Kentucky, he married Miss Addie Browder, daughter of John C. and Luella (Miller) Browder, a well known family of farmers of Fulton County. Mr. Paschal is a graduate of the Memphis Institute of Technology in Tennessee. Their only children twins, Sarah Jane and Luella Julia, both died young, Sarah Jane at the age of three years.

LEWIS W. CUNDIFF has been a resident of Casey County about thirty-five years, grew to manhood here, and in his middle age career has been favorably known for his work and achievement as a teacher, merchant, miller, and more recently as a banker. He is now cashier of the Citizens State Bank of Liberty and also county treasurer.

Mr. Cundiff was born in Adair County, January 14, 1879. His grandfather, Wash Cundiff, was a well known farmer of Adair County, where he lived out his days; his grandson, Lewis Cundiff, of the Damron family. G. A. Cundiff, father of the banker at Liberty, was born in Adair County in 1844, was married there, and in 1885 moved to Casey County, and since 1892 his home has been at Dunville. The chief efforts of his life have been directed to farming, and in that vocation he has won a competence. He was a youthful volunteer for service in the Union army during the last two years of the Civil War. He has always supported the republican party, since he attained his majority, and for four years he was county assessor of Casey County, and for two terms or eight years was deputy county assessor. He is a member of the Christian Church in his community and is affiliated with the Masonic Order. G. A. Cundiff married Mary L. Harmon, who was born in Adair County in 1856. This good old couple now respectively seventy-seven and seventy-five years of age, reared a large and interesting family, eleven children having been born to their union: Mattie of Dunnville, widow of L. M. Combist, who was a farmer; W. C. Cundiff, present county court clerk of Casey County; Ida, wife of J. R. Caron, a farmer at Phil in Casey County; Lona, wife of G. W. Rubarts, a merchant at Campbellsville, Taylor County; Ada, wife of C. C. Combist, a farmer living near Liberty; George W.; Maud, wife of R. B. Rich, owner of a public garage at Liberty; John H., a farmer at Phil; Ann, wife of Ramzy Russell, owner of the woolen mill at Phil; A. R., a farmer in the Dunnville community; and George A., Jr., who also followed farming at Dunnville.

Louis W. Cundiff grew up on his father’s farm in Casey County from the age of six years. He attended the rural schools, and attended for four terms up to 1903 the Kentucky State University at Lexington, taking Normal work. He began teaching at the age of twenty and for six years was in educational work, chiefly in the rural schools of Casey County, though for one year he taught a school at Dexter in Cooke County, Northern Texas. For nine months up to September 1, 1903, he was deputy county clerk of Casey County, and then for several years was a merchant at Dunnville. From 1900 to January 1, 1920, Mr. Cundiff’s business relations were as general manager of the roller flour mills at Liberty.

He was one of the local citizens who organized the Citizens State Bank of Liberty and has been cashier since the bank opened for business on February 7, 1909. He has lived in Dunnville for nearly three months after it was opened its deposits aggregated over $25,000. J. Boyle Stone is president of the bank, and the vice presidents are Judge J. D. Taylor and W. C. Cundiff.

Mr. Cundiff has been county treasurer of Casey County since April, 1921. He is a republican, a deacon in the Christian Church, has been honored three times with the office of Master of Craftsman Lodge No. 722, F. and A. M., is present High Priest of Liberty Chapter No. 84, R. A. M., and is also a member of Liberty Tent No. 51, Knights of the Maccabees and the Modern Woodmen of America. In addition to various local positions of responsibility, Mr. Cundiff has been associated with all the local organizations responsible for the raising of war funds and the contributions to other patriotic purposes. Mr. Cundiff married in Adair County in 1906 Miss Matra Damron. Her parents, Samuel and Nancy (Robinson) Damron, live on their farm at Mount Salem in Lincoln County. The four children of Mr. and Mrs. Cundiff are Christine, born in 1902, Alva born in 1903, Martha, born in 1908, and Florence, born in 1915.

HON. JAMES C. CARTER. With the coming of Joseph A. Carter to Monroe County, at an early period in this section’s history, an element of strength and purpose was added to the upbuilding forces of a promising and prosperous community. An industrious and capable man, and citizenship cherished by this pioneer have been transposed to those succeeding him in the race is not questioned by those familiar with the history of the family for the last three quarters of a century. Its members have occupied positions high in the regard of their fellow-citizens, and a number have risen to places of distinction, notably a grandson of the pioneer. Hon. James C. Carter of Tompkinsville, judge of the Circuit Court of Monroe County.

Judge Carter was born in a farm six miles north of Tompkinsville, in Monroe County, October 5, 1863, a son of William Carter. His grandfather, Joseph A. Carter, was born in 1803, in Virginia, and was a young man when he migrated to Kentucky and took up his home in the then sparsely settled locality of Monroe County, where he passed the remainder of his life as an agriculturist. He was a man of substantial capacity, personal probity and integrity, and when he died, in 1873, near Rockridge, his community lost one of its honorable and honored citizens. Joseph A. Carter married a Miss Carter, who was born in Virginia and died in Monroe County.

William Carter married on his father’s farm in Monroe County, six miles north of Tompkinsville, in 1830, and there passed his entire life in the pursuits of the soil, dying in 1884. Like his father, he was an industrious and capable man, and his operations won him material success, while the fair dealing and straightforwardness which he always displayed won him the esteem of his associates. He voted the republican ticket, and was an active supporter and faithful member of the Baptist Church. William Carter married Miss Elizabeth Kelly, who was born in 1835, near Sulphur Lick, Monroe County, and died on the home farm in 1890, and they became the parents of the following children: Mary, who resides on her farm near Tompkinsville, the widow of W. H. Harlin, a Union veteran of the Civil War and for a number of years a farmer near Tompkinsville; Alvy Carter, twins, Martha, who died at Tompkinsville, aged fifty-five years, as the wife of William T. Miller, a farmer of Tompkinsville, and a clergyman of the Baptist faith; James C. of this notice; Sarah B., the wife of Fleming C. Boles, who is carrying on operations on a part of the old Carter homestead near Rockridge, Monroe County; Samuel H., who is engaged in the period of the W. Sul- phur Lick, Kentucky; William W., an attorney, who owns and operates the old home place; Ella, county superintendent of schools of Monroe County, who first married Henry L. Harlin, an attorney, and after his death married Dallas H. Braswell, a saddler of Tompkinsville; and Broc kìe, who married Hillard Hayes and resides near Sulphur Lick, where Mr. Hayes is engaged in agricultural pursuits.

James C. Carter attended the rural schools and sub-sequence schools of Monroe County, acquiring a high school education and supplemented this by attendance at the normal school at Flippin, Kentucky, which he left at the age of twenty-two years. In the meantime, at the age of sixteen years, he had commenced teaching in the rural schools of Monroe County, and continued to be thus engaged until the year 1893. In the fall of that year he was appointed county superintendent of education of Monroe County, a position to which he was re-elected in 1897, without opposition. Thus, he served in this office for eight years, from 1894 to 1902. During the time that he had been the incumbent of this office, Judge Carter applied his leisure hours to the study of law, and in 1896 was admitted to the bar. In that year he was made master commissioner of the Circuit Court of Monroe Circuit Court, an office in which he served continuously until 1917. In November, 1901, he was elected county attorney of Monroe County, taking office in January, 1902, and served capably for a period of four years. From 1906 until 1910 he was United States commissioner, under Judge Walter Evans of the United States District Court. In November, 1909, the people evidenced their opinion that he was made of judicial timber by electing him circuit judge of the Twenty-ninth District, without opposition, comprising Monroe, Metcalfe, Cumberland, Russell, Casey and Adair counties. Since then, Metcalfe County has been taken from the Twenty-ninth District and assigned to the Tenth District. Judge Carter has discharged the duties of his high and important office in a dignified, capable and expeditious manner, and has won the full confidence and esteem of the bench and bar as well as of the general public, and was re-elected to the third term of said office November 8, 1920.

The judge owns his own home on Columbia Avenue, Tompkinsville, a large, modern structure, with commodious grounds, as well as a dwelling in the new addition to Tompkinsville, and a farm of 110 acres, 1 ½ miles east of the city. In politics he is a stanch republican, and his religious faith is that of the Baptist Church, in which he takes an active and deep interest. Fraternally, he belongs to Tompkinsville Lodge No. 753, F. & A. M., and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a director in the Deposit Bank of Monroe County, at Tompkinsville. During the World war, Judge Carter took an active part in all local war activities and assisted in all the drives, making numerous speeches in Monroe, Adair and Casey counties in behalf of the bond issues, Red Cross drives and for other patriotic purposes. He purchased bonds heavily and contributed to all movements to the limit of his means.

Judge Carter was married in July, 1892, near Eason, Tennessee, to Miss Ida Tucker, daughter of Granville and Ann (Harwood) Tucker, former farming people near Eason, both of whom are now deceased. Eight children have been born to Judge and Mrs. Carter. Lizzie Anna, who died May 18, 1900, was the wife of Barlow Bryan, of Tompkinsville, chief deputy sheriff of Monroe County; Pearl E., the wife of Stanley Pace, an extensive farmer and live stock trader of Cumberland County; May, residing with her parents, the widow of Virgil Jernigan, a traveling salesman of Tompkinsville, who died March 27, 1921; Jessie, the wife of Wick Harlan, a medical student of Louisville, Kentucky, a veteran of the World war, and a member of the united States army; James C., residing with his parents, a student in the high school at Tompkinsville; and Abe Parker, Tim Lee and Vivian, who are attending the graded schools.

Patrick W. Whipp. For over seventy years the name Whipp has been especially honored in Liberty and throughout Casey County, significant of loyal citizenship in time of war and peace, of sterling business integrity, and all those influences that proceed from good citizenship. One of the younger members of the family is Patrick W. Whipp, a merchant, former postmaster, of Liberty, and who has neglected none of those interests that concern the good citizen.

His father was the late esteemed John W. Whipp, who died at his home in Liberty December 10, 1907, at the advanced age of seventy-one years, twenty-one days. He was born in Jessamine County, Kentucky, January 19, 1828, but when a child his parents moved to Lawrenceburg, Anderson County, where he was reared. He gave his service to the country in the war with Mexico, enlisting in 1845 in the Salt River Tigers of Anderson County under Capt. John H. McBreyer. Soon after returning from that service he was aroused by the reports of the discovery of gold in California and in 1850 he and two companions left Liberty and journeyed with an ox-cart to the Pacific Coast. They were eight months on the way and their first location was at Hangtown, later known as Placerville. John W. Whipp remained in California as a gold seeker for five years and then returned to Liberty and was satisfied with the quiet routine of this center of his life. For many years he was a merchant and also engaged in extensive farming interests. He had for nearly half a century been a member of old Jonathan Lodge No. 78 F. and A. M. at Liberty, and from early manhood was a faithful member of the Christian Church. In 1856, he married Miss Isabella Coffey, of Liberty, who died in 1866, the mother of two children: Fielding C., who was a merchant at Liberty and died at Louisville November 23, 1884; and Bettie, born March 12, 1860, wife of Dr. James W. Ellis of Owensboro, Kentucky. In August, 1868, John W. Whipp married Mary F. Napier, who is still living in Liberty, where she was born in 1843. Her father Patrick Napier was born in Virginia July 4, 1800, and was an early settler of Casey County, Kentucky, and served several terms as sheriff of the county. He died June 18, 1890. Patrick Napier married Dollie B. Fitzpatrick, who was born December 20, 1818, and died January 7, 1860. Mr. Whipp is one of the oldest members of the Eastern Star in Kentucky. Mary F. Whipp Chapter No. 253 at Liberty is named in her honor. She was the mother of four children: Cora who died at Liberty November 11, 1899, at the age of thirty-five, wife of Charles Prescott, now living at Louisville; Patrick W.; John, a druggist and farmer at Liberty; and Dollie, wife of William McFarlin, a farmer at Guthrie, Kentucky.

Patrick W. Whipp was born at Liberty June 19, 1870, and has spent practically all his life in his native town. He was educated in the public schools there, spent two years in the Boys High School at Louisville, for one year attended the business college at Bowling Green, and attended Louisville College of Pharmacy one year. He has been a licensed pharmacist since 1895 and five years was connected with drug stores at Paducah and specialist's drug store at Scottsville, Kentucky. He established his present business at Liberty in 1901, and is owner of one of the largest and best stocked stores of that kind in Casey County. It is on the courthouse square. Mr. Whipp also owns a farm of 165 acres adjoining Liberty on the south.

His service as postmaster during the Wilson administration extended from February 17, 1914, until he resigned March 31, 1920. He is a director of the Citizens State Bank at Liberty and a stockholder in the Commercial Bank. During the World war he was chairman of the County Chapter of the Red Cross and interested in other patriotic movements. Mr. Whipp is a democrat, is a deacon in the Christian Church, and is affiliated with Craftsman Lodge No. 722 F. and A. M., Liberty Chapter No. 84 R. A. M., Marion Commandery No. 24 K. T., at Lebanon, is also affiliated with the Chapter of the Eastern Star bearing his mother's name, and is a member of Stanford Lodge Knights of Pythias and Liberty Tent No. 51 Knights of the Maccabees.

In 1908 at Cincinnati Mr. Whipp married Miss Mayme Tilford, who was born September 2, 1886, daughter of Judge J. M. and Sallie (Hatter) Tilford, the latter now deceased. Her father is a Casey County farmer living at Liberty, and for a number of terms held the office of County Judge. Mrs. Whipp finished her education in Berea College at Berea, Kentucky. To their marriage were born three children: John Woodson, Jr., born December 31, 1909; Elizabeth Sallec, born March 20, 1913; and Patrick Fielding, born December 9, 1915, who died at the age of two years.

B. C. SEAY. While most professional men must satisfy themselves with a range of achievement and success that give them a reputation largely in their home locality, the unusual talents and special powers as a trial lawyer in criminal cases have brought to B. C. Seay, of Mayfield, a reputation all over his home state and over a number of surrounding states. In the handling of criminal cases he is almost unexcelled. He is a relentless investigator, and has a genius for assembling facts and tracing them and other lines of research in his evidence and arguments so that very few cases in which he has been engaged as principal attorney have come through the courts and juries with maximum possible penalties.

Widely known over Western Kentucky as "Pete" Seay, he was born in Graves County, near Lowes, February 13, 1872. His great-grandfather was a native of Ireland, and came over to this country to reside for a time in Virginia and later became a pioneer of Washington County, Kentucky, where he pursued his vocation as a farmer and gunsmith. The grandfather of the Mayfield lawyer was Bernard Seay, a native of Washington County and a pioneer of Graves County, where he was widely known as "Uncle Barney" Seay. He died on his homestead near Lowes at the age of ninety years. He was very stanch in his affiliation with the democratic party. His son was a farmer and merchant in Lowes and later was a pioneer of Graves County and died on the old homestead farm, Ed Seay, father of B. C. Seay, was born near Lowes in 1843, and is still living at Mayfield, now retired. He spent his active years as a successful farmer, and in 1861, as a youth, entered the Confederate Army and was all through the war, a follower of the great cavalryman General Forrest. He participated in Brice's Cross Roads and in other engagements, and was once shot through the ankle. He has been a democrat all his life and a very devout member of the Presbyterian Church. He has served both as deacon and elder in that church. Ed Seay married Ellen S. Means, who was born in Marion County, Kentucky, and died on the old homestead in Graves County. B. C. Seay is the older of three children, his brother Merritt C. being a farmer near the old homestead, and his brother, Jewell S., is superintendent of the Smith-Scott Tobacco Company at Paducah.

Until after reaching manhood B. C. Seay quietly developed his powers and resources largely through the environment of a country district. He attended rural schools in Graves County, the West Kentucky College of Mayfield, and for two years while studying law was a teacher in Carlisle County. He finished his legal education in St. Louis and was admitted to the bar in 1895. Since then for a quarter of a century he has made his home at Mayfield. While engaged in general practice his work has more and more led him into criminal cases, and he has been called as an attorney to act for the defense in many sensational trials in Kentucky, Missouri, Arkansas and Mississippi. His profession is the one great interest of his life, and unlike many lawyers he has never sought the diversion of politics, being satisfied to do his duty as a democratic voter. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, is affiliated with Hickory Camp No. 115, Woodmen of the World, at Mayfield, Mayfield Lodge No. 565 of the Elks, but after his home and family acknowledges no greater devotion than that he gives to his law practice.

In 1897, at Mayfield, Mr. Seay married Miss Annie Smith, daughter of Colonel B. A. and Mattie (Baker) Smith, now deceased. Her father was a prominent citizen of Mayfield, handling contracts for public works, and Mrs. Seay graduated from Western Kentucky College. Their oldest child, Agnes, died at the age of five years. The second in age, Watt C. Seay, now at home, graduated from the Mayfield High School with the class of 1920 and distinguished himself in football and other lines of athletics. He was in the draft but never called to active duty the World war. The next three children are all in high school, Robert, a senior; Allen, a junior, and Elizabeth, a freshman. The two youngest of this interesting family are William Reed and Gardner Seay.

Robert L. Reeves, president of the First National Bank of Paducah, is one of the dependable citizens and prominent men of this part of Kentucky, and a man whose influence is widespread. He was born in Ballard County, Kentucky, September 27, 1867, a son of William Harris Reeves, Sr., and grandson of George Reeves, a farmer, who died in Warren County, Kentucky, before the birth of his grandson.

William Harrison Reeves was born in Warren County, Kentucky, in 1815, and died in McCracken County, Kentucky, in 1888. He was reared in Warren County and there received his education. His marriage took place in Ballard County, Kentucky, and he acquired the homestead of one of the most extensive farmers of that region, remaining there until 1881 when he moved to Paducah, and embarked in the tobacco warehouse business, in which he was engaged until his retirement a short time prior to his demise. A democrat, he took an active part in local affairs, and was elected sheriff of Ballard County. Fraternally, he was a Mason. He was married to Penelope White, who was born in Ballard County, Kentucky, in 1826, and died in the same county in 1878. The children to reach maturity were as follows: Anna Elizabeth, who is now deceased; George W., was an attorney, served in the Kentucky Senate as a member from the First District, moved to Montana where he became judge of the District Court at Missoula, and was a candidate for governor of Montana, and is now deceased, having passed away in Montana; Josephine, who is the widow of William J. Puckett, who was connected in an official capacity with the United States Government at Denver, Colorado, where she is now residing; Martha Harrieth, who is deceased; William T., who was a prominent attorney of Ballard County, died at Blackfoot, Idaho; Emma, who is deceased; and married of Denver, Colorado; and Robert L., whose name heads this review.

Robert L. Reeves attended the public schools of Ballard County and Paducah, and then became a student of Clinton College of Clinton, Kentucky, leaving that institution for Old Transylvania University at Lexington, Kentucky. Coming to McCracken County, he read law, was admitted to the bar in 1878, and for eight years was engaged in a professional practice at Paducah. In 1885 he was made president of the First National Bank of Paducah, and still holds that important office. This bank was established in 1865, and is one of the oldest financial institutions in this part of the state. Mr. Reeves is a democrat. He resides near Twenty-eighth Street and Broadway, and owns suburban property and other realty.

In 1888, Mr. Reeves was first married at Paducah to Miss Annie Weil, a daughter of Jacob and Asilie Weil, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Weil was a citizen of Paducah at the time of his death. Mrs. Reeves died in 1910, having borne her husband one daughter, Asilie, who died at the age of eighteen years. In 1913, Mr. Reeves was married to Miss Belle Van Liere at Kenosha, Wisconsin. She is a daughter of Martin and Wilhelmina (Pieper) Van Liere, residents of a farm in the vicinity of Kenosha, Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Reeves have three children: Robert L., Jr., who was born in 1914; George W., who was born in 1917; and Lucia, who was born in 1920.

Harry Gambill Stambaugh, M. D. Born and reared in Eastern Kentucky Doctor Stambaugh worked hard for his education and his career as a physician and surgeon has been attended by the success which his earnest efforts deserved.

Dad's son, Zadock, is now physician for the McKinney Steel Company to the plants and mines at Wolfpit and Greasy Creek, with home at Wolfpit in Pike County, was born at Paintsville, Johnson County, Kentucky, May 21, 1890, son of Troy and Mary Ellen (Witten) Stambaugh, the former now fifty-eight and the latter sixty years of age. His grandfather was John Stambaugh. The parents of Doctor Stambaugh lived at Paintsville. They were very active members of the Christian Church and Troy Stambaugh has for many years been Sunday school superintendent. They have ten living children: C. H. Stambaugh, a salesman at Lexington; G. H., a farmer and traveling salesman at Ironton, Ohio; Rev. F. M., a minister of the Christian Church, who has been accorded many important responsibilities by his denomination and is now located at Vance- burg, Kentucky; Harry Gambill; J. C., who recently was discharged from the United States navy and is attending school at Paintsville; Malta, wife of Powell Williams connected with the North East Coal Company at Auxier, Kentucky; Anna wife of George Burchell, a farmer and rural mail carrier at Stambaugh; Lula, wife of Thomas B. Akers, a farmer and stockman; Minnie, wife of Herman Burchell at Stambaugh and Morgan Stambaugh living at Van Lear, Kentucky, employed in the store of the Consolidation Coal Company.

Harry Gambill Stambaugh after the common schools attended the Morehead Normal and the Kentucky State Normal at Louisville and earned most of the money to acquire his education through teaching for three years, and he was also county examiner of schools for three years. He attended the Medical Department of the University of Tennessee at Memphis, graduating as an honor student June 6, 1917. He has since taken special work in surgery and diseases of the eye in Chicago, and is a very enthusiastic and devoted worker in his profession. He has made a special study of pellagra and published an interesting paper on this disease. For two years after graduating in medicine he worked as resident of Paducah for the Consolidation Coal Company at John Kinchley, and then has been with the McKinney Steel Company at Wolfpit. He has an assistant to help him with his duties at Greasy Creek.

Doctor Stambaugh is a member of the Christian Church, the various medical societies, is a master and Royal Arch Mason at Paintsville, member of the Shrine, El Has Temple, and Knights Templar at Ashland and the Elks at Catlettsburg. Politically he is a republican. Doctor Stambaugh will soon specialize in general surgery and make his future home in Ashland, Kentucky.

William Zadock Eubank. Among the old, distinguished and interesting families of Clark County, one whose members have been variously connected with the history of Kentucky since early days, and who have taken part in its affairs as business men, professional practitioners, agriculturists, soldier, statesmen and citizen representative which bears the name of Eubank. A worthy representative of this family is found in the person of William Zadock Eubank, who was connected for years with the lumber industry, but who for the past quarter of a century has been devoting his energies to looking after his property at Kiddleville.

Mr. Eubank was born at Trapp, Clark County, Kentucky, December 1, 1850, a son of Achilles S. and Mary (Kidd) Eubank. His great-great-grandfather, Richard Eubank, rode from his home at Bedford, Virginia, on horse-back, accompanied by his wife, when eighty years or more of age, to visit his son, Achilles Eubank, who then lived in Kentucky, in a brick house that is still in good condition and which is the present residence of a member of the family, James B. Eubank, near the Elk Fork Station of Clark County. After his arrival he would visit the home of his grandson, Col. Ambrose Eubank, and would run his old racing mare, which he had ridden from Virginia, around the race track, bringing back to his younger years, when he had run and won many running matches.

Achilles, the son of Richard Eubank and great-grandfather of William Z. Eubank, was the pioneer of the Eubank family in Kentucky, from Bedford County, Virginia, whence he came with Daniel Boone. When still little more than a youth he had fought as a soldier of the Revolutionary war. He married Polly Bush, who came with him to Kentucky in 1777. After her death he married Nancy Ware, and then removed to Boone County, Missouri, along with Daniel Boone, where he died. Two of his sons were living as late as 1917, one at Abilene, Texas, at the age of ninety years, and still an office holder, and the other in California. Some correspondence developed the fact that Achilles had really been a Revolutionary soldier, but that the son in Texas had died in 1920, at the age of ninety-three years. It is thought that at that time he and his brother in California were the only living sons of a Revolutionary soldier. Of the other sons of Achilles Eubank, Stephen lived to the age of eighty-six years, and again the old home, which later went to Stephen's son, Ben B. Eubank, and in time the ownership was assumed by the latter's son, James B. Eubank, the present occupant.

Col. Ambrose Eubank, son of Achilles and grandfather of William Z. Eubank, was born in Bedford County, Virginia, and gained his title through military service. He was a large tobacco planter, with a farm bordering on the Kentucky River, at the mouth of Four-Mile Creek in Clark County, and at the time of the high water, in 1832 or 1833, the rising waters inundated his broad fields and carried away his tobacco warehouse, costing him a fortune and nearly bankrupting him, although he saved his land. He died at the age of sixty-seven years, of cancer. About the year 1805 he married Elizabeth Claiborne, of Virginia, daughter of Barber Claiborne, and when Mr. Eubank while on a visit to a sister, Mrs. Harris Adams, of Clark County. They became the parents of the following children: Claiborne, who died near Kiddleville at an advanced age; Stephen Barber, who removed to Boone County, Missouri, where he died when well along in years; Achilles; Catherine, who married John Lamp- ton and died in Missouri at the age of eighty-nine years; Elizabeth, who married Wesley Horizons and went to Missouri, where she died in advanced years; Susan, who married a Mr. Wallace, of Speedwell, Madison County, Kentucky, and reached the age of ninety years; Fredericka, who married Jesse Massey, went to Henry County, Kentucky, and died when still a young woman; and Polly Bush, who married Peyton Adams and died in old age in Clark County.

Achilles Eubank, son of Col. Ambrose Eubank and father of William Z. Eubank, married Mary Kidd, daughter of Zadock and Jane (Davis) Kidd, the latter a daughter of Capt. Septimus Davis, who deserted from the British army to become a captain in the ranks of the Patriot Army during the Revolutionary war. At an early day the captain came to Kentucky and settled near Schollsville, where his death occurred many years ago. The father of Zadock Kidd had died after settling in Bath County, Virginia, where he lived the greater part of his life. Mr. Eubank lived with the latter three sons and two daughters from Virginia to Kentucky, first settling in Bath County and then to what is known as Kiddville, in Clark County. Here the sons erected a carding factory and later made cloth in the same plant. The first motive energy was supplied by endless-chain horse power, but this was later supplanted by more modern methods. The widow died at Kiddville in advanced age, after which Zadock bought the interests of his brothers, Oswald G. and Robert B., the first of whom removed to Georgetown, Missouri, where he had a woolen mill, while the other continued as a farmer and attained old age. Zadock Kidd died when eighty-four years of age. He was the owner of 600 acres of land in Powell County and was likewise largely interested in the business at Kiddville. He had a farm to the south and males to South Carolina, and on one occasion he was bankrupted by not being able to find a market for his hogs. He returned ready to accept his condition of bankruptcy, but gained the support of his largest creditor, Mrs. Nancy Goff, after which he paid off the other creditors, remained in business, and in the following year not only cleared off his debts but paid off a mortgage on his farm. He had some profit. Mr. Kidd later kept a hotel and general store at West Bend. He was also a stock trader, and his establishment was the headquarters for freight traffic to the farmers in the mountains. He was one of the most hospitable of men, but his free and open-handed way of giving the liquor on his side-board to all, young and old alike, would have frowned upon today. His daughter Mary was but fifteen years of age at the time of her marriage to Achilles Eubank.

Achilles Eubank died at the age of forty-seven years at the old Eubank farm where he had been born, although he had also devoted some of his attention during his career to selling goods at Kiddville. Of his children, all were reared to abhor whiskey. Although Mr. Eubank had always given liquor to his children, she became as ardent as was her husband in opposition to intoxicants. After she had been a widow nine years Mrs. Eubank married a suitor of her early life, W. D. F. Whitsett, a widower with a family at Pleasant Hill, Missouri. Her death occurred in that state when she was seventy-one years of age. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Eubank were: Mr. Zadock Eubank, who married W. H. Bush, who died at Mount Sterling, the passing away at Kansas City, Missouri: William Zadock, of this notice; Mary J., who married first John W. Moore, after his death James McCormick, and after his demise William H. Moore, a brother of her first husband, and now resides at Independence, Missouri; Ambrose Claiborne, who died at Bracken County, Kentucky; and Eubank's youngest daughter, Mrs. Rev. J. Pyatt.

A for nine years a missionary of the Baptist Church at Lagos, Upper Guinea, Africa, who died in 1916, while serving as pastor of the church of his faith at Eureka, Arkansas; Rev. Marion D., a physician and missionary to China, who is now secretary of the American Baptist Association; Cora, who married T. C. Crow and died in Kansas City, Missouri; J. Davis, ex-county judge of Jackson County, Missouri, and now a resident of Kansas City; and Florence, who married William Brisky, of LeMar, California.

William Zadock Eubank has spent his entire life in Clark County. For twenty-five years he was superintendent of river work for the Asher Brothers Lumber Company and their successors, it being his duty to supervise the sending of logs down the river to the mill and look after the starting of the logs from the river and the standing timber. He was known as the "log detective" of the river, and through his alertness in looking after the interests of his employers a number of log thieves were sent to the penitentiary, while much property was saved. He also attended the courts in seven different counties. In 1805, Mr. Eubank returned to his home, and the descendants of John and Priscilla (Hall) Weaver, and to their union there were born three of his children on this property and willed 500 acres of the oil spring land to his daughter Miriam, through whom it came into the hands of the Eubank family. The original patent is now held by D. P. Eubank, of Shreveport, Louisiana.

Mr. Eubank married first Miriam Weaver, born at Old Louisville, Kentucky, February 12, 1813; to whom he was married after the death of her husband, Mr. John Lyddane, of wheelsburg, Scioto County, Ohio, who was born in Clark County, Kentucky, a daughter of James P. Lyddane, of Maryland, whose father was a learned Irish professional man. James P. Lyddane operated a woolen mill on Lower Howard Creek, seven miles from Winchester, for a number of years. Mr. and Mrs. Eubank became the parents of one child, Ashley E., who died at the age of eleven years. Mrs. Eubank's father died when she was eight years of age, at which time she was taken to Ohio, and there from her ninth year until she reached womanhood she was reared in the home of her father's former partner, George O. Wiggard. During the last fifteen years of his life Mr. Wiggard was supported in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Eubank. She was likewise supported by Mr. Lyddane until the age of ninety-six years. Mr. Eubank belongs to the Missionary Baptist Church, while Mrs. Eubank is a Methodist.

Thomas AlecK Miller, a man of wealth and influence, Thomas AlecK Miller, head of the T. A. Miller Land Company, of Paducah, is conspicuously identified with that city. Mr. Miller is a real estate dealer handling upwards of half a million dollars worth of property annually. Coming of substantial English ancestry, the founder of the branch of the Miller family from which he is descended emigrated from England to Virginia in Colonial days. He was born, October 12, 1872, in Murray, Calloway County, Kentucky, which was likewise the birthplace of his father, Irvine Miller.

Joseph Miller, his paternal grandfather, was born in Virginia in 1804, and as a young man migrated to Kentucky, becoming a pioneer farmer of Calloway County, where he followed his free and independent occupation until his death, in 1877.

A life-long resident of Calloway County, Kentucky, Irvine Miller, J. Miller was admitted to the Kentucky bar, and began the practice of law in Murray, his native city, where he met with unquestioned success. He served for ten years as county attorney, at the time of his death, December 24, 1876, while yet in manhood's prime, having two more years to serve before the expiration of the term for which he was elected. He was a democrat in politics; a member of the American Christian Church. His wife, whose name before marriage was Mollie Jones, was born in 1848 in Concord, Calloway County, Kentucky, and died October 27, 1910, in Paris, Tennessee. She was a daughter of Judge Thomas Jones, a pioneer settler of Calloway County, which he subsequently served as county judge for sixteen years and as the first representative of Calloway County in the Kentucky Legislature. Four children were born of their union, as follows: Christian C., traveling salesman, Paris, Tennessee; Lila, wife of Samuel Brame, a well known farmer of Lafayette, Christian County; Thomas Aleck, with whom this sketch is chiefly concerned; and Nellie, Nina, wife of G. C. McClaren, a traveling salesman, residing in Paris, Tennessee.

Educated in Murray. Kentucky. Thomas Aleck Miller left school when but fourteen years old, and the following seven years was employed as a clerk by Nat Ryan, at Murray, and being observing, intelligent and enterprising gained a practical knowledge of mercantile pursuits. Subsequently forming a partnership with Nat Ryan, he opened a store at Hardin, Marshall County, Kentucky, and for sixteen years carried on a thriving business as junior member of the firm of Miller & Ryan. He disposed of half interest of the firm, and two years later, on March 1, 1913, located in Paducah, where he was engaged in the real estate business until May, 1915. Embarking then in the automobile business, Mr. Miller built up an extensive business, one of the largest of the kind in Western Kentucky, and managed it successfully until September, 1917, when he sold out at an advantage. Resuming his real estate operations, he has disposed of all interests in city and farming property, loans and mortgages, the T. A. Miller Land Company, of which he is the head, having built up the largest business of the kind in this section of the state, its offices being located at 307-8 City National Bank Building.

Possessing undoubted financial and business ability and judgment, Mr. Miller has accumulated valuable property; having title to lands in McCracken, Marshall, Calloway, and Boyd counties; twenty acres, and owning in Paducah forty residences. His own residence, located at 208 Fountain Avenue, a modernly built structure, is one of the six best and most attractive residences in the city, it being often shown on post cards.

Politically Mr. Miller is a democrat. He belongs to the Travelers' Protective Association; to the Ohio Valley Trust Company, in which he is director; and is an ex-member of the Paducah Board of Trade. Fraternally he is a member of Magnum Lodge No. 21, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; of Olive Camp No. 2, Woodmen of the World; of Paducah Camp No. 11313, Modern Woodmen of the World; of the Paducah Homestead No. 4453, Brotherhood of American Yeomen; of Plain City Lodge No. 449, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; and of Paducah Lodge No. 27, Royal Arcanum. A prominent member of the First Baptist Church, Mr. Miller is very active in the Sunday School, being president of the Young Business Men's Bible Class, which through its strenuous efforts in securing members and his ability in keeping the members together is the largest class of young men in the state, its membership being over 500. Mr. Miller married, December 15, 1894, in Callow- way County, Kentucky, Miss Lena Lassiter, a graduate of the Murray High School and a daughter of W. R. and M. J. (Brigham) Lassiter, who reside with Mr. and Mrs. Miller. Mr. Lassiter, a retired farmer of eighty-eight years, was one of the early pioneers of Calloway County, and is a veteran of the Confederacy.

The union of Mr. and Mrs. Miller has been blessed by the birth of four children. The two surviving are Thomas Aleck Lewin, Jr., born in 1903, was graduated from the Paducah High School with the class of 1920; and William Irvin, born in 1908, is a freshman in the Paducah High School. In the oratorical contest held in Henderson, Kentucky, in 1920, he won second place, the first place having been secured by a youth twenty years of age. William Irvin has participated in thirteen debates or oratorical contests, and in every previous contest has won the first place, an honor of which he, his parents, and instructors may well be proud.

Chestor M. Vance. The man who can trace back to distinguished Revolutionary ancestors, and from them on down through a line of men and women of honorable lives, has every reason to be proud of his Americanism, and such men are never to be found in radical movements nor giving support to movements which have for their object the destruction of existing forms of government. Chester M. Vance, of Paducah, has achieved to enviable prosperity as a farmer, merchant and realtor, but he is more proud of the fact that he belongs to the above mentioned class than he is of any personal success. His family is an old one in this country, representatives of it having come to the American Colonies from England prior to the Ameri- can Revolution, and, settling in North Carolina, part of them belong to the development of that region. When war was declared between the Colonies and England the Vances played well their part as patriots, and when the war was over returned to their peaceful occupations. The grandfather, Milton Vance, was born in North Carolina in 1804, but he left the old home of his ancestors following the close of the struggle between the two sections of the country and became a farmer of Ballard County, Kentucky, where he continued to live until his death in 1898. He was a second cousin of the late Governor Vance of North Carolina. Another second cousin of his, Martha Vance, became his bride, and she, too, was a native of North Carolina, and died in Ballard County, Kentucky. Prior to the war they were extensive landowners and had a number of slaves, but lost heavily during that conflict.

Chester M. Vance was born in Ballard County, Ken- tucky, on July 11, 1882, a son of Newton F. Vance, who was born in North Carolina in 1842, and died at McCracken, Kentucky, on February 9, 1902. Reared in Ballard County in part, he developed into a prosperous farmer and landowner, and continued his agricultural operations when he moved to McCracken County. Like his relatives, he was a strong democrat. From his youth he was a member of the Baptist Church and was a strong supporter of it. His wife bore the maiden name of Lizzie Fitzgerald, and she was born in Trigg County, Kentucky, in 1841, and died in Mc- Cracken County in 1918, on September 22. Their children were as follows: Charles W., who lives on the homestead in McCracken County; Buford, who was a farmer, and died in McCracken County at the age of forty-eight in 1897; Bush, who was another third in order of birth; Bessie Lee, who married L. B. Holt, Jr., of the Rock Shoe Company of Paducah; Susie, who married S. R. Greenwell, a farmer of Maxon, Kentucky; and Roy W., who is a merchant in partnership with his brother Chester M., and lives at Maxon, Kentucky.

Chester M. Vance was educated in the public schools of Ballard and McCracken counties and at the Smith Business College of Paducah, in which he took a commercial course. Until he reached his majority he remained on the farm, and during that period learned the fundamentals of farming from his father. Leaving the farm, he established his present mercantile business at Maxon, Kentucky, under the name of Vance Brothers, which is one of the two leading stores in McCracken County outside of Paducah. These brothers also own 400 acres of land in the county, and do an extensive general farming and stockraising business. In September, 1910, Mr. Vance went into partnership with W. E. Ezzell in the real estate business, with offices at 418-10-20 City National Bank Building. He is also a stockholder in the Rhodes-Balfour Furniture Company, and is extensively interested in oil lands. He resides at Maxon, and takes an interest in civic affairs of that place and also of Paducah as a democrat. The Methodist Episcopal Church holds his membership and affords him a medium for the expression of his religious life. He belongs to Plain City Lodge No. 449, A. F. and A. M.; and Massac Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Paducah.

In 1910 Mr. Vance was married at Paducah to Miss Minnie Payne, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stokley T. Payne. Mr. Payne is a resident of Paducah, but formerly was an extensive land operator and founded and platted the town of LaCenter, Ballard County, Kentucky. His wife is now deceased. No children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Vance.

Roy R. Vance, a brother of Chester M. Vance, enlisted for service in the World war in July, 1918, and was sent to Camp Taylor and thence to Birmingham, Alabama. He was mustered out of the service in March, 1919, with the rank of sergeant. The interests of Chester M. Vance are many and varied, and he is discharging the heavy responsibilities of running his practice with efficient capability and is rapidly becoming one of the leading young business men of McCracken County.

Otto BELL Powell, D. M. D. In no other profession have such rapid strides been made as in that of dentistry, and the modern doctor of dentistry is as carefully trained as his brother practitioner, the doctor of medicine. The profession is one that is apart of science, and many of the ills to which humanity is prone are caused by faulty or defective teeth has brought home to the general public the absolute necessity for skilled attention from one who knows his calling. There was a time when a man bragged of the fact that he had never paid a dentist a visit in his life. Today, if such is true, it is better to keep the unwholesome news quiet, for it is no credit, but a disgrace, to have neglected so important a part of the body.

The dentists of McCracken County are a fine body of men, skilled and competent, and they compare favorably with any in the country. Naturally of them Paducah has its full share, and among them one having an excellent reputation for the superiority of his work and care he gives his patients is Dr. Otto Bell Powell.

The birth of Doctor Powell occurred at Princeton, Kentucky, September 16, 1878. He is a son of Thomas Marshall Powell, and grandson of Thomas Powell, the latter of whom was born in Virginia in 1808 and died at Corydon, Kentucky, in 1851. He was the proprietor of the first store located at Corydon, Henderson County, where he was engaged very profitably as a farmer. The Powell family immigrated from England to Virginia long before the American Revolution.

Thomas Marshall Powell was born in Henderson County, Kentucky, in 1848, and was reared there, but was married at Princeton, Kentucky, in 1877, and for the subsequent forty years was the leading dry goods merchant of the place. When he retired he moved to Gainesville, Texas, where he is now residing. In politics he is a democrat. Always very active in church work, he has long been a consistent member of the Christian Church. Thomas Marshall Powell married Mollie Farrow, born at Mount Sterling, Kentucky, in 1857, and the family became the parents of the following children: Doctor Powell, who is the eldest; Elizabeth, who married Dr. J. L. Griffin, a dentist of Gainesville, Texas; Strother B., who has an automobile agency and garage, lives at Dallas, Texas; and Edwin M., who resides at Dallas, Texas, is manager of the Dallas Telephone Company.

Doctor Powell attended the public schools of Princeton, Kentucky, and was graduated from its high school in 1896. He then became a student of the South Kentucky College at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, from which he was graduated in 1898 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He then took his professional training in the dental department of the Washington University at Saint Louis, Missouri, from which he was graduated in 1901 with the degree of D. M. D. That same year he established himself in a general practice at Princeton, Kentucky, but disposed of the practice after two years and then for another year was at Evansville. In 1904 Doctor Powell came to Paducah, and has built up the largest practice of any man in his profession in Western Kentucky. His offices are located at 421½ Broadway. He follows in his father's footsteps in that he is both a democrat and a member of the Christian Church, and is serving the latter as a deacon. Well known in Masonry, he belongs to Plain City Lodge No. 449, A. F. and A. M.; Paducah Chapter No. 30, R. A. M., of which he is a past high priest; Paducah Commandery No. 11, K. T., of which he is a past commander; and Rizip Hale Lodge, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Madisonville, Kentucky. He is also a member of Paducah Lodge No. 217, B. P. O. E., of which he is a past exalted ruler. He is a member of the Edward Hurley Maccharlodge of the Grand Lodge of the last named fraternity. As a member of the Rotary Club, he takes an intelligent and effective part in different movements for the city's progress and is a great booster for Paducah.

In 1905 Doctor Powell was married at Paducah to Miss Irene Strassman, a daughter of Emil and Ellen (Hanley) Strassman. Mr. Strassman was superintendent of the Edward Hurley Manufacturing Plants at Chicago, Illinois, manufacturers of the Thor washing machines and vacuum cleaners, but he is now deceased. His widow survives him and makes her home at Chicago. Mrs. Powell was graduated from the Young Ladies' Seminary at Chicago. Doctor and Mrs. Powell have no children. Their beautiful residence, which they own, is at Avondale Heights, just west of the city limits, and the comfortable and modern house is surrounded by large grounds.

Amplias Warrick Davis, M. D. A native of Hopkins County and a member of one of the old families in this section of Kentucky, Doctor Davis began his career as a physician and surgeon more than twenty years ago, practiced in the county towns of the county for many years, went into the army as a medical officer, was on duty in France for several months, and recently resumed his practice, with offices at Madisonville. Doctor Davis is a very skilful and advanced physician and surgeon, and also has many property and other interests in Hopkins County.

He was born at Morton's Gap November 4, 1874. His paternal ancestors were Scotch-Irish and Colonial settlers in Virginia. His great-grandfather was one of the very early settlers in the agricultural district of Hopkins County. His grandfather, Israel Davis, was born in 1815, and was an early settler in Hopkins County. As a Hopkins County farmer he carried on operations on an extensive scale, and was also a general trader and for a number of years owned an equipment of teams and wagons with which he transported merchandise between Henderson and Madisonville. He died on his farm near Madisonville in 1880. His wife was Dolly Woodruff, who was born in 1823 and died at Madisonville in 1915.

George M. Davis, father of Mr. Davis, was born at Princeton in Caldwell County in 1847 was reared on the farm near Madisonville, and after his marriage continued farming on his own account until 1876, when he entered the mercantile business at Mortons Gap. For many years, until 1905, he was one of the leading tobacco exporters out of this section of Kentucky. He assisted in organizing in 1905 the Planters Bank of Mortons Gap, and continued to act as its president until the time of his death.

He was a democrat in politics. George M. Davis married Mary J. Davis, of the same family name but not related. She was born at Henderson, Kentucky, in August, 1847, and is now living at Madisonville. She is the mother of two children, Minnie D. and Amphius Warrick. The daughter lives in Madisonville, widow of Michael Cain, who was a merchant and died at Louisville.

Doctor Davis was educated in the rural schools of Hopkins County, attended the Madisonville High School, finished the sophomore year in 1889 at Transylvania University in Lexington, and the following year graduated from Smith's Commercial School at Lexington. He had a varied business career before he took up medicine. For seven months he was railroad agent and telegraph operator for the Louisville and Nashville Railway Company. He was then associated with his father as partner under the firm name of George M., D. & D. Davis. He entered the mercantile business at Mortons Gap until 1893. Doctor Davis graduated in medicine from the Louisville Medical College in 1898, but has never ceased to improve his personal abilities by renewed contact with institutions of learning and clinics. He has attended clinics in England, France, Ireland and Scotland, did general post-graduate work in the New York Post-Graduate School in 1902 and 1906, and in the Chicago Polyclinic in 1909 attended the Mayo Clinic at Rochester, Minnesota, in 1918, and specialized in general surgery at Tulane University of New Orleans in 1920. Doctor Davis is a member of the Phi Mu medical fraternity.

Beginning practice in 1898, he made his home at Earlington and Mortons Gap until February 21, 1918. At that date he was commissioned a captain in the Medical Reserve Corps, spent five weeks in the Medical Officers Training Camp at Fort Ogletorpe, Georgia, was transferred for ten days to Camp Bowie, Fort Worth, Texas, was at Camp Shelby, Mississippi, from April 16, to August 24, 1918, spent one week at Camp Stuart, Virginia, and then went overseas with the surgical section of Base Hospital Unit No. 59 under Col. Irvin Abell. For ten days he was camp inspector at Brest, but his longest duty abroad was with the base hospital center at Rimaucourt, France, where he remained until January 1, 1919. Following that for three days he was property officer of Field Hospital No. 20, then at Field Hospital No. 38, and finally battalion surgeon of the Fifty-third Infantry, Sixth Division. He was ordered back to the United States March 28, 1919, and received his honorable discharge at Camp Dix, New Jersey, May 2, 1919. It was on account of his wife’s illness that his return from abroad was hastened. Doctor Davis did not resume active practice until he located at Madisonville on April 16, 1920. His offices are in the Madisonville Building.

Doctor Davis owns a business block on West Center Street, and has a general purpose farm of 210 acres a mile west of Madisonville. He is a director in the Hopkins County Bank and a member of the executive committee of the Business Men’s Association of Madisonville. In line with his profession he is a member of the County Medical Society, is a former vice president of the State Medical Society, and a member of the American Medical Association and the Southwest Kentucky, Kentucky, Valley and Southern Medical Societies. Doctor Davis is a democrat, and is a past master of Morton’s Gap Lodge No. 765, A. F. and A. M.; a member of Madisonville Chapter No. 123, R. A. M.; Madisonville Commandery No. 27, K. T.; Rizipah Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Madisonville. Louisville Consistory of the Scottish Rite; is a past grand of Mortons Gap Lodge No. 143, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and a member of Madisonville Lodge No. 738, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Doctor Davis resides with his mother in the corner of Borrowby and Main Street. He married at Evansville, Indiana, April 10, 1906, Miss Ada Lunsford, daughter of J. Hub and Ann Lunsford, both now deceased. Her father was for many years a prominent citizen of Hopkins County, was a flour miller at Madisonville, and served as sheriff, and representative in the Legislature from the county. Mrs. Davis died at her home at Mortons Gap, November 20, 1919.

William Manon Cornett, deputy insurance commissioner of the State of Kentucky, has long given evidence of his ability and fitness for positions of responsibility, and in his present office is giving universal satisfaction. He was born at Cornettsville, Kentucky, September 9, 1882, a son of Eli H. Cornett, and a member of one of the old families of North Carolina, where his ancestors settled upon coming to the American Colonies from England. There his great-grandfather was born, and from that, later, and father, who practiced medicine, located in Perry County, his being the site of Cornettsville, which is named in honor of Eli H. Cornett. There his son, Anderson Cornett, was born in 1810, and he died there in 1887; having spent his life in that region and his energies in farming. Anderson Cornett was married to a Miss Alcomb, a native of Cornettsville.

Eli H. Cornett was born at Cornettsville, Kentucky, in 1855, and he now resides at Hominy, Oklahoma. Growing up in his native place, he became one of the most influential men of the county, carrying on for years a prosperous mercantile business and serving as sheriff for one term. In 1904 he retired from active participation in business life and moved to Hominy, Oklahoma. He is a strong republican. Early, joining the Baptist Church, he has since been an active supporter of the local congregation, and very liberal in his donations to it. Eli H. Cornett was married to Jane Combs, who was born at Hazard, Kentucky, in 1857. Their children have been as follows: William Manon, who was the eldest; Joseph, who was a farmer, died at Hominy, Oklahoma, when twenty-five years old; Carrie, who died at the age of six years; Roy, who is a bank president, resides at Preshing, Oklahoma; John B., who is a druggist of Beggs, Oklahoma; Rolly, who died in infancy; Vincent, who is in partnership with his brother John B., in the drug business at Beggs; Herman, who is also a partner in the drug business at Beggs with his two brothers; Corbett, who is county attorney, and was elected in 1920 to the Legislature of Oklahoma, lives at Pawhuska; Calie, who is a school teacher at Big Heart, Oklahoma; Worthy, who is a school teacher at Big Heart; Dove, who is also teaching at Big Heart; and Eddie, who is a student of the law department of the State University at Norman, Oklahoma.

William Manon Cornett attended the rural schools of Prairie County, Kentucky, and the high school of Hazard, and was graduated from the latter in 1901, following which he attended the Kentucky State University at Lexington, Kentucky, for one year. He was then appointed deputy county clerk of Prairie County, and after serving as such for one year was appointed deputy sheriff, and served in such capacity for his father’s four years. Once more he was appointed deputy county clerk, and faithfully discharged the duties pertaining thereto until 1912, in that year becoming private secretary to Congressman J. W. Langley, and was at Washington until the fall of 1913. Returning to Hazard, he embarked in a real estate business and conducted it until January, 1920, when he was appointed deputy insurance commissioner of Kentucky by John J. Craig, state auditor, and took office January 6th of that year for a term of four years. His offices are in the new Capitol Building, and he lives at 131 Steel Street, Frankfort, although he maintained his legal residence at Hazard, where he owns a modern residence on High Street, which is one of the finest in that city. He also owns coal lands in Prarrie County, and is a man of ample means. In politics he is a republican, and served as police judge at Hazard for a year and as city clerk for two years. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. A Mason, he belongs to Hazard Lodge No. 676, A. F. and A. M. He is also a member of Hazard Lodge No. 145, I. O. O. F., of which he served as Noble Grand for four terms; the Junior Order United American Mechanics; Willard Lodge, K. of P., of Yerkes, Kentucky; Hazard Tribe, I. O. R. M.; and Elizabeth Chapter, O. E. S., of Hazard. In addition to his other interests he is a stockholder in the Blue Grass Coal Corporation. During the late war he took a very active part in the local war work, helping in all of the drives as one of the ablest and popular speakers. He bought bonds to the limit of his means.

In 1903 Mr. Cornett was married at Hazard to Miss Clara Eversole, a daughter of Joseph and Susan (Combs) Eversole. Mr. Eversole, who was a very prominent attorney, was assassinated in the French-Eversole feud at Hazard, where his widow is still residing. Mr. and Mrs. Cornett have three children, namely: Juanita, who was born December 25, 1901; Joseph, who was born May 15, 1907; and Clara, who was born in October, 1909. A man of dependability, Mr. Cornett has always given the best of himself in whatever occupation he has followed, and is recognized as a man eminently fitted for the responsible office of his party in the state of Kentucky. It has been proven in every way, and he is proud of the fact that he can trace his ancestry back through so many generations in this country.

Charles Joseph Pellen Carver. There were many veterans of the World war who returned from their military service men in thoughts and actions who had gone forth to serve the country in time of need and training given each one who participated in that mighty conflict developed all that was best in him, the dross being refined and the pure gold of his character being separated from the baser metals of natural inclinations. Thousands who might otherwise have been merely mediocre were developed into men who have become leaders in the world. Many of them were then given the opportunity which was synonymous with ability and the strictest integrity. Of the men of Metcalfe County who enlisted in the great struggle and returned to civil life to take up responsible duties, one who has shown himself worthy of consideration and esteem is Charles Joseph Pellen Carver, cashier of the Citizens National Bank, Somersville, Kentucky.

Mr. Carver was born at Edmonton, February 12, 1888, a son of Charles Meriwether and Fannie (Compton) (Evans) Carver. He belongs to a family which was founded in Barren County, Kentucky, in the pioneer days of the state, his great-grandfather, a native of the East, being an original settler of the name in this region. Mr. Carver's grandfather, Thomas W. Carver, was born in 1818, engaged successfully in farming operations, and in the state, where his death occurred in 1915.

Charles Meriwether Carver was born October 26, 1857, in Barren County, where he was reared and educated, and where he spent a number of years in successful farming operations. Coming to Edmonton in 1888, he was married there and for a time clerked in a store, but later, in 1900 and 1901, followed farming in Oklahoma and Texas. His next place of residence was Indianapolis, Indiana, where he was employed by the American Hominy Company for five years, following which he established himself in business as a merchant and continued in that city two years. Mr. Carver then went to California, and in the vicinity of Los Angeles was interested in the oil business for two years, next going to Portland, Oregon, where he was employed by the Portland Water Company. In 1914 he returned to Barren County, Kentucky, where he has since been engaged in agricultural operations. Mr. Carver was formerly a democrat in politics, and during President Cleveland's last administration served as deputy auditor in the state of Texas for four years. In 1896 he transferred his allegiance to the republician party, to which he has since given his support. He belongs to Renick Lodge No. 549, F. and A. M., at Wisdom, Kentucky, to the Improved Order of Red Men and the Modern Woodmen of America.

At Edmonton Mr. Carver was united in marriage with Mrs. Fannie (Compton) Evans, the widow of Robert H. Evans, a former merchant of Edmonton, who had one son by her former marriage. Henry Edward Evans, an attorney at law, who died at Bowling Green, Kentucky, August 7, 1897. Mrs. Carver was born July 12, 1840, at Edmonton, where she d ed March 7, 1884. She and Mr. Carver were the parents of the following children: Walter Sherman, a merchant at Hazard, who married Miss Joseph Pellen, of this review; Mary Frances, who married Mr. George Newson, a farmer near Edmonton, and after his death married Ross R. Lambirth, a merchant at Sulphur Well, Metcalfe County; John Thomas Goree, a tire finisher in the employ of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company of Akron, Ohio.

Charles J. P. Carver was educated in the public schools of Edmonton and Louisville, and after graduating from the eighth grade entered the Edmonton Normal School, but left this at the age of fifteen years to accept a clerkship in the hotel at Sulphur Well, where he remained three years. From that position he went to the Peoples Bank of Metcalfe County, located at Edmonton, and was assistant cashier of that institution until the United States entered the World war. On September 18, 1914, he entered the United States service and was sent to Camp Zachary Taylor, Kentucky. While in training there he was promoted from private to corporal, and remained in the camp until June 8, 1918. He was then transferred to Camp Sherman, Ohio, where he was promoted to battalion sergeant major of the Three Hundred Thirty-fifth Infantry. While there, on August 23, 1918, he was sent to Camp Mills, New York, and September 1918, embarked for France. He landed first at Glasgow, Scotland, and arrived at Le Havre, France, September 25, 1918. On January 3, 1919, he was promoted to the rank of regimental sergeant-major of the Second Provisional Regiment. He was later made a corporal, and mustered out at Camp Zachary Taylor, Kentucky.

Upon his return Mr. Carver again took up his duties at the Peoples Bank of Metcalfe County at Edmonton, Kentucky and occupied the position of assistant cashier until August 25, 1919, when he was advanced to cashier. He resigned this position December 17, 1921, to assume the position of cashier of the Citizens National Bank at Edmonton, which position he had been elected in November. He is well versed in banking procedure and has become very popular with depositors, who have found him accurate, obliging and courteous, and who feel that they can place a full amount of confidence in him. He is a republican in his political allegiance, and has shown some interest in party affairs, having also served in several public offices, as deputy Circuit Court clerk in 1903, and as deputy county clerk of Metcalfe County in 1905. He belongs to the Presbyterian Church, in which he is an active worker, a member of the Board of Trustees and a deacon. Fraternally he is affiliated with Renick Lodge No. 549, A. F. and A. M. Mr. Carver owns and occupies a pleasant and comfortable home on East Street, where the many friends of himself and wife are always sure of a hearty welcome.

On June 14, 1910, Mr. Carver was united in marriage at Edmonton to Miss Berrie M. Bushong, daughter of Dr. Perry W. and Della (Morrison) Bushong, who reside at Edmonton, where Doctor Bushong is a leading citizen and a physician and dental practitioner. He is also a veteran of the World war, in which he saw service as a captain in the Medical Corps. Mrs. Carver attended the Western Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and is a graduate in stenography of the Bryant & Stratton Business College, Louisville.

JOHN WILLIAM GAINES. Circumstances rather than definite choice made John William Gaines a banker, though his early ambition was to become a lawyer. For over thirty years he has been identified with the official management of one of Anderson County’s oldest and most prominent banking institutions. In later years he found it possible to complete his preparations for the legal profession, and has earned an almost equally high place in the county as a lawyer.

He was born at Alton in Anderson County May 22, 1866, a son of Gabriel Hansford and Ann (McCor- mick) Gaines, also natives of Anderson County. The paternal grandparents were Richard and Malinda (Sanders) Gaines, the former coming to Kentucky from Culpeper County, Virginia, in 1818 and settling in Anderson County. The maternal grandparents were William P. and Paulina (Baker) McCormick, also Virginians and pioneers of Anderson County. Gabriel H. Gaines for over fifty years was in business as a merchant at Alton. He was born November 11, 1823, and died May 23, 1907. His first wife was a Miss Wilson, who was the mother of two children. By his marriage to Ann McCormick, who was born February 9, 1830, and died December 3, 1848, he had four children. Gabriel Gaines was an able business man, a progressive and public spirited citizen, and lived a consistent life as a member of the Christian Church.

His second wife was a devout Presbyterian.

John William Gaines grew up at Alton, attended common schools there, and in 1887 graduated from the Kentucky Military Institute, then under the able super- vision of Dr. R. X. Sallie. After leaving college he worked on the farm, and in September, 1888, became teacher of mathematics in the Normal School at Lawrenceburg. In March, 1890, he became a clerk in the old Anderson County Deposit Bank; and, with growing experience his relations have proved practical and invaluable to that bank and its successors through more than thirty years.

The Anderson County Deposit Bank was the successor in 1898 of the Anderson County National Bank, which was organized in 1870 as the outgrowth of the old private bank of J. and J. A. Witherspoon, which was established in 1866. Dr. J. A. Witherspoon was president of the bank through successive changes until 1892, when he was succeeded by L. J. Witherspoon. Mr. J. A. McBrayer was the first cashier, and continued active in the affairs of the bank until he resigned in 1907. The Anderson County Deposit Bank in 1907 was reorganized and has since been the Anderson National Bank. Mr. Gaines after being with the Deposit Bank six years was made vice president and manager in 1895, and in 1907, on the reorganization, became its president, with Mr. L. B. McBrayer as cashier. The Anderson National Bank has had an enviable record throughout more than half a century’s existence. It has a capital stock of $100,000 and the surplus and undivided profits in 1921 aggregated $130,000.

The success he achieved as a banker did not turn Mr. Gaines altogether from his early plans as to a profession. By private study and through correspondence courses he was able to pass a successful examination and, with admitted to the bar in 1900, has since built up a remunerative private practice. He is a democrat in politics. He has been active in civic affairs having served in the Council for eight years, and was recently elected mayor of Lawrenceburg, having been sworn in on January 2, 1921. Mr. Gaines is a past master of his Masonic lodge and a Knight Templar, and for many years has been a prominent member of the Christian Church. He teaches a class on Sunday School, and every member of his present class is a member of the church. In 1896 he married Miss Frances Marion Cannon, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Frank M. Cannon, of Georgetown, Kentucky.

WILLIAM SCHOLL was a Kentucky pioneer who came West at the time of the Boones and while in the century to quarter century after his death his descendants have been scattered through many states some of them are still found in Kentucky.

William Scholl was born in Virginia, son and possibly the only child of Jacob Scholl, a native of Germany. William Scholl was living in the Shenandoah Valley, probably in Augusta County, just before he moved to Kentucky with the Bowmaris and Boones, being related to both families. He and his family were in the Winchester port when it was besieged by the Indians, and he and his boys aided in its defense. After danger from Indians had passed away he built his home on Marble Creek, Fayette County, near Boone’s Station, and there lived and died, passing away sometime in 1803.

William Scholl may have been married twice, his first wife being a Van Meter. His grandson, Joseph, was authority for the assertion that the mother of Peter and Joseph Scholl was a Van Meter. His second wife was Leah Morgan, a relative of Gen. Daniel Morgan and also of Daniel Boone’s mother.

William Scholl had joined the Boones at Powell’s Valley in the fall of 1773. His son, Abraham, though only a lad of eleven, accompanied Boone in 1775 when he blazed the trail to Boonesboro, and his older brothers were also most probably along. Three of William Scholl’s sons were in the battle of Blue Licks. Peter, Joseph and Abraham. Peter was also in the battle of Point Pleasant and Kings Mountain. Joseph Scholl married Lavinia Boone, a daughter of Daniel Boone, while Peter Scholl married Mary Boone, daughter of Daniel’s brother Edward. In 1792 Joseph, Peter and Abraham moved to the eastern part of Clark County, near what is now the village of Schoolville, where they established homes, the two former dying there, though Abraham thereafter served in Griggsville, Illinois, in 1809 and lived there until death claimed him December 24, 1832. He was a Dunkard and refused to own slaves. William Scholl’s son William was killed at Braddock’s defeat at the beginning of the French and Indian war, and a son John died of smallpox while fighting in the Revolution.

Besides these facts and statements the following data serve to make up another record of the children and grandchildren of William Scholl.

The son, Joseph, born in 1753 and died in the fall of 1829, married about 1783 Lavinia, daughter of Daniel Boone, and settled in the eastern part of Clark County, Kentucky. His children were: Jesse, who married Elizabeth Miller, daughter of Joseph Miller, on September 7, 1824; Septimus, who married Sally Miller, daughter of Joseph Miller, December 11, 1815; Marcus; Joseph, Jr.; Celia, who married an Evans; Maria, who married James Holladay, March 31, 1808; and Leah.

Peter Scholl, born September 15, 1755, and died September 11, 1821, about 1782 married Mary, daughter of Edward and Martha Bryan Boone, Edward being a brother of Daniel Boone. Peter's children were: Martha, born in 1783, married Horton Wells, and she died October 10, 1804; John, born in 1787, married Cecilia Jones on January 5, 1814; Lydia, born in 1780, married Boone Hays January 3, 1807; Joseph, born in 1791, married Malinda Muir and died in 1850; Dudley, the first born of the name, born in 1793, died in infancy; Malinda, born in 1795, married Edward Elledge, and she died in 1831; Jesse Bryan, born in 1797, married Charity Elledge, and he died in 1820. Peter married Sarah Combs, and married March 17, 1823, Elizabeth Huls, and he died in 1839, a few days after arriving in Missouri; Edward Boone, born October 11, 1801, married Susanna Bently July 13, 1826, and moved to Griggsville, Illinois; Dudley, second of the name, born in 1803, married Catherine Norris; Mary, born in 1805, married At Hays; Louisa, born in 1807; Charity, born in 1809; and Polly.

Abraham Scholl, born in 1764, first married Nellie Humble, and the six children of that union were: Morgan; Killicie; Uriah, who married Arley Hardesty February 28, 1816; Annie, who married Nicleberry Daniel; Celia, who probably married Jilson Martin September 29, 1817; and Rachel, who on June 9, 1819, became the wife of Henry G. Clark. The last mentioned with his wife Abraham Scholl was Tabatha Hoe, whom he married December 15, 1803. Her children were: Sally, who married October 3, 1820, Marshall Key, a relative of Francis Scott Key; Leah, who married a Ratten; Sirilda, who married a Miller; Adeline, who married a Bushnell; William, who married a Miss Dale: Matilda, who became the wife of William Wilson; Peter; Abraham; Eliza, who married S. Dubb; and Tabatha, who married Charles Gibbs; Joseph, who died in infancy; and Wesley.

Isaac Scholl moved to Duck River, Tennessee, and by his marriage to Jane Morgan had a large family.

John Scholl, previously mentioned as the son who died of smallpox during the Revolutionary war, must have been one of the older sons; he married Miss Mary and had children, John and Leah.

William Scholl's son Jacob died in infancy. The son William mentioned as having been killed at Braddock's defeat, which occurred at the beginning of the French and Indian war, was, if that statement is true, born a number of years before any of the other children mentioned here.

Elizabeth Scholl, daughter of William Scholl, became the wife of Samuel Shortridge and both died in Tippecanoe County, Indiana. Their children were: Kesiah, who married Samuel Black; Leah, who married Samuel Stark; Celia, who married Arnold Drewery; Elizabeth, who married Griffin Treadaway; James, Morgan, Samuel and John.

Rachel became the wife of David Denton and settled in Buchanan County, Kentucky.

Elizabeth Scholl became the wife of Arrett Custer, a relative of General Custer, and both died near Madison, Indiana.

David Barrow. In addition to being one of the pioneer ministers of the Baptist Church in Kentucky David Barrow was also the son of one of the early preachers and leaders in the abolitionist movement west of the Alleghenies. On more than one occasion he was almost a martyr to his faith and the principles he believed to be right, and history does well in recording all the available facts regarding such a man.

He was born in Brunswick County, Virginia, October 30, 1753, and his father, William Barrow, was a respected farmer of Brunswick County, Virginia, who late in life moved to North Carolina, where he died in his ninety-first year. William Barrow was a grandson of Thomas Barrow, a native of Lancashire, England, who with his brother was kidnapped and brought to the northern neck of Virginia in 1680 and sold to pay his transportation across the ocean. After securing his freedom Thomas moved to Southampton County, Virginia, on the waters of the Nanseby River, where he died in 1727, at the age of nearly 100 years old.

Of David Barrow it is said "he professed conversion at about the age of sixteen years and was baptized by Zachariah Thompson into Fountain Creek Church." Soon he began to exhort others to seek the Savior, and was ordained to the full work of the ministry in his nineteenth year. In the same year he married Sarah, daughter of Henry Barrow, a native of Scotland. For three years after his ordination he traveled and preached extensively in Virginia and North Carolina. In 1774 he became pastor of Isle of Wight Church. There were several churches in this vicinity and the contiguous parts of North Carolina that had been gathered by a denomination called General Baptists. Mr. Barrow joined with John Tanner "in renovating" the churches, and in a few years they had a respectable association of churches "formed on the orthodox plan." By this means Kehuke Association was formed.

In 1776 Mr. Barrow entered the Revolutionary Army in the defense of his country, and it is said by a contemporary historian "David Barrow did good service for his country, winning great honor for himself. When his term of service expired, he returned home, took his seat as minister in the gospel, and while so engaged was subjected to severe persecution. At one of his appointments he was seized by a gang of ruffians and dragged to a pond of muddy water and told "as you are so fond of dipping you shall have enough of it." His persecutors plunged him under the muddy water and held him until he was almost drowned. He was then raised and derisively asked if he believed? This was continued until the third time, when he answered, "I believe you are going to drown me." He was dragged from the house and driven away without changing his clothes. The promise, 'vengeance is mine, I will repay," was speedily fulfilled in this case. Within a few weeks several of his persecutors met death in a very distracted manner and another was heard to say that he wished he had been in hell before he joined the party."

While fighting to preserve his own and his country's liberty he came to the conclusion that liberty was the natural right of the black man as well as the white and that the enslavement of either was a sin against God's law. He therefore emancipated all his slaves, of which he owned a considerable number, and began to preach this doctrine from the pulpit. He published and circulated an English translation of Clarkson's Essay on "Slavery and Commerce of Human Species." He also wrote a pamphlet of sixty-four pages against this institution, which he circulated. This is said to have been well written "in a calm, dignified style." He sent a copy to Thomas Jefferson, and from him received a letter under date May 15, 1815, acknowledging the receipt of same and expressing Jefferson's views on that subject.

David Barrow moved with his family to Montgomery County, Kentucky, in 1798, arriving June 24th. There he lived the remainder of his life. Soon after his arrival at his new home he united with the Mount Sterling Church and became its pastor. He also accepted similar work with the Goshen and Lufledge churches. A descendant of this pioneer minister is Mr. A. C. Barrow, still living in the rural district at Mount Sterling.

David Barrow's piety and conspicuous ability soon attracted the attention of his brethren throughout the state. He was one of the committee appointed by the Elkhorn Association to deal with Governor Garrard and Augustine Eastin, who had embraced Unitarianism, to convince them of their error, a commission that also involved Cowper's Run Church and other churches in the care of Eastin. In 1803 Mr. Barrow published a pamphlet in which he advocated the views of the Association and doubtless did a great deal towards arresting in that community the spread of the Unitarian doctrine. He was also successfully employed in negotiating conditions of union between the Regular and Separate Baptists.

Barrow's advocacy of emancipation in Kentucky aroused most intense opposition on the part of many of his brethren, and soon again he felt the sting of rebuff. In 1818 the North Association received five charges against David Barrow, presented by messengers from Bracken Association and growing out of his advocacy of emancipation. After hearing him in his own defense the association decided that "his explanations and apologies were sufficient." The next year the charges were renewed before North District Association, and he was expelled from his seat in that body and a committee appointed to deal with him in the church at Mount Sterling. However, this action was rescinded the next year.

Immediately after his expulsion from North District Association Mr. Barrow began to organize an emancipation association of Baptist churches. A meeting was called to convene at New Hope in Woodford County August 29, 1807, where preliminary steps were taken for the organization, which was perfected in the following September under the name Baptised Licking-Loud Association, Friends to Humanity. At their next meeting they resolved that "the present mode of association or confederation of churches was unscriptural and they then proceeded to form themselves into an abolition society." This, doubtless, was the first organization in America established for the purpose of emancipation of slaves, and to David Barrow belongs the credit of being its organizer and leader. Spencer, in his History of Kentucky Baptists, says: "David Barrow was much the most distinguished preacher among the emancipationists in Kentucky" and gives him credit for organizing this association. Dr. James Taylor, D. D., pastor of the Second Baptist Church of Richmond, Virginia, in his Lives of Virginia Ministers, written in 1838, says Elder Barrow possessed a discriminating mind, his talents were of a high order. "It is much to be questioned whether as a speaker he has ever been excelled by a Baptist minister of Virginia or Kentucky.

The organization noted continued to exist until 1820, a year after the death of David Barrow, when it yielded to the pressure of commercialism and dissolved.

When the end of all things that pertain to this world drew near to David Barrow he met it with the peace that passeth all understanding, with the exultant joy of one who was counted worthy to suffer dishonor for the name, as one conscious that he had fought a good fight, had finished the course, had kept the faith, and, moreover, unharmed. On the morning, November 14, 1819, shortly after repeating in unaltering faith these words: 'The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want, yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me,' he passed triumphantly from the fiery trials and persecuting storms of this world, to a land that is fairer than day, and where the truth has made all men free.

J. Sam Brown, M. D. The medical profession at Ghent, Kentucky, is ably represented by men of scientific knowledge and long experience, and among these no physician and surgeon stands higher in public esteem or more fully enjoys the confidence of his fellow citizens than Dr. J. Sam Brown, who has been established in medical practice here for more than a quarter of a century.

Doctor Brown was born December 3, 1870, at Wytheville, Virginia, which was also the birthplace of his father and his grandfather, the former in 1841 and the latter in 1829, and entering the family still farther backward the record shows that early in the history of Pennsylvania a body of German colonists settled there, a quiet, thrifty, industrious people, and one family in the colony bore the name of Brown, or Braun, according to the German orthography. In the course of years some of the more venturesome members of this family made their way to Virginia, and the name is still borne by substantial people in Wythe and Washington Counties.

Dr. N. C. Brown, father of J. Sam Brown, was reared at Wytheville, where his early education was looked after. He later became a student in Roanoke College, Roanoke, Virginia, from which institution he was graduated with the degree of A. B., and then entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, Maryland, from which he was graduated with his medical degree. He began practice at Wytheville, afterward practiced for a few years at Sanders, Carroll County, Kentucky, and then came to Ghent, where he was a leading physician and surgeon for forty years. Politically a strong democrat, he was always more or less prominent in party councils, and when the war between the states came on he felt it his duty to enter military service and enlisted in the Forty-fifth Virginia Volunteer Infantry Confederate Army participated in and survived the long campaigns and the battles of Gettysburg and Vicksburg, only to be made a war prisoner in 1865, just before the end of the conflict. He had been captured near the City of Washington and shortly afterward was paroled. He belonged to the Masonic fraternity and was active for years in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Dr. N. C. Brown was three times married, first to Miss Sarah Gaines, who was born in East Tennessee in 1845, and died at Sanders, Kentucky, in 1873. Three children were born to this marriage: Lulu, who is the wife of Albert Shirmer, a farmer in Carroll County; Dr. J. Sam Brown; and Josie, who is the wife of Theodore North, a farmer in Carroll County. Doctor Brown married for his second wife Mrs. Kate (Lindsay) McClure, who was born in 1850 in Carroll County, and died at Ghent in 1886. Her father, Gen. John C. Lindsay, was prominent in Kentucky and an extensive farmer in Carroll County. To this marriage one son was born, Hubert Brown, who is a farmer near Ghent. His third marriage was with Miss Anna Sanders, a daughter of George Sanders and daughter of Joseph and Mary Sanders. Dr. N. C. Brown survived until 1919, passing away at Ghent. He was one of a family of eleven children born to J. A. and Sarah (Repass) Brown, the latter born also at Wytheville, and four of this vigorous old family are still living: Ida, who resides at Norristown, Tennessee, is the widow of John Gamble; Laura, who is the wife of Dr. William Gaines, physician and surgeon at Vicksburg, only to be made a war prisoner in 1865, just before the end of the conflict. He had been captured near the City of Washington and shortly afterward was paroled. He belonged to the Masonic fraternity and was active for years in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

J. Sam Brown attended the excellent public schools of Ghent, in which, as a watchful citizen, he has always been interested, and in 1887 was graduated from the high school. For three years after this he worked in a drug store, an excellent preparation for medical college, then entered the University of Louisville, from which he was graduated in 1802 with his degree. He entered into practice in his home city, and has remained here, enjoying the consideration, respect and confidence that is justly awarded a conscientious and skillful physician and surgeon. He is in partnerhsip with Dr. P. V. Ellis, and together they own and conduct the leading drug store in this part of Carroll County, their patronage coming from over a wide area. They carry all standard drugs, write their own prescriptions, and offer an attractive way all the commodities that are now featured in the first class modern drug store everywhere.

At Louisville, Kentucky, in 1900, Doctor Brown was married to Miss Lura Bond, a daughter of James and Helen (Whittaker) Bond, the latter of whom lives in Carroll County. The father of Mrs. Brown was a farmer in Carroll County and is deceased. Doctor Brown is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Ghent, and he is a member of its board of trustees. He has never been particularly interested in fraternal organizations, but is well known in such representative professional bodies as the Carroll County and the Kentucky State Medical societies and the American Medical Association. He has always given his political support to the democratic party. During the World war he took an active part in all local war activities, helped in all the patriotic drives and was head and front of all the Red Cross work at Ghent. Doctor Brown owns some valuable real estate here, which includes his comfortable modern residence situated on Main Street.

R. M. Pool is a banker of twenty-five years or more experience. The First National Bank of Princeton, of which he is president, is one of the strongest financial institutions in Western Kentucky, and through the greater part of its history Mr. Pool has been connected with its affairs either as cashier or president.

He was born in Caldwell County, Kentucky, January 11, 1872. He is a grandson of a distinguished pioneer physician, Dr. T. Brown Pool, who for many years in the northern part of the State practiced over Christian and Caldwell counties, and performed his work in all kinds of weather and with a remarkable devotion to duty undeterred by hardship. It is said that he had patients a hundred miles distant from his home in all directions, and wherever possible he never failed to respond to their calls. He died in Princeton in 1886. He was a native of North Carolina, born in 1790, and came at the age of thirty days to Christian County, Kentucky. James Monroe Pool, father of the Princeton banker, was born in Christian County in 1825, spent his early life in Christian and Caldwell counties, married in the latter, and after his marriage lived at Princeton. For a quarter of a century he was county jailer. He was a Confederate veteran, having enlisted early in 1861, and gave his services to the Southern cause until the surrender of Lee in 1865. He was at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and other important engagements, a large part of the time as a follower of General Forrest, and was taken prisoner at Fort Donelson, but soon afterward exchanged. He died at Princeton in 1902. He was a very sincere and active member of the Universalist Church and a democrat in politics. His second wife was Mary Frances Stephens, who was born in Caldwell County and died at Princeton in 1916. Of their four children R. M. Pool is the youngest, Addie, the oldest, is the wife of W. S. Allison, a farmer living at Los Angeles, California; John S. is a farmer at Lockhart, Texas; and Luella, living at Ardmore, Oklahoma, is the widow of W. C. Robinson, who was a railroad engineer.

R. M. Pool, who was born in Caldwell County, January 11, 1889, attended the public schools of Princeton, graduated from high school in 1899, and for five years served as deputy Circuit Court clerk and also as deputy county clerk. This experience proved valuable to him when he took up banking, though he entered the First National Bank of Princeton in a comparatively humble role as clerk. He has won his successive promotions and at different times has had charge of practically every department of the bank’s administration and routine. For fourteen years he was cashier, and since 1908 has been president. The First National was established in 1885 under a national charter and with a capital of $50,000, and some of the items which indicate its strength today comprise a capital of $150,000, surplus and profits of $300,000, with approximate deposits of $1,500,000. Besides Mr. Pool as president the two vice presidents are H. M. Jones and R. E. Butler, and L. G. Cox is cashier. This bank, under the presidency of Mr. Pool, did much to sustain the patriotic record of Caldwell County during the war. The bank bought outright the entire quotas of the three bond issues for Caldwell County.

Those familiar with the educational situation in Princeton ascribe the maximum degree of credit to Mr. Pool for the enviable condition the public schools today. For fourteen years he was a member of the school board, and his membership was a responsibility which he never held lightly. He is a staunch democrat, a deacon of the Christian Church, and for the past twenty years has been treasurer of Clinton Lodge No. 82, A. F. and A. M., and is also a member of Clay Chapter No. 28, R. A. M.; Princeton Commandery No. 35, K. T.; Rizpah Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Madisonville, and Princeton Lodge No. 1115 of the Elks. He owns a large amount of valuable real estate in Princeton, including his very desirable home on Washington Street.

In 1898, at Henderson, Kentucky, Mr. Pool married Miss Jessie Grubbs, daughter of Frank L. and Birdie (Jennings) Grubbs, the latter now deceased. Her father is in the hotel business at Denison, Texas. Mrs. Pool received the highest honors of her class when she graduated from the Princeton Collegiate Institute. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Pool are James Monroe and Mildred, the former born April 3, 1900, and the latter August 3, 1905. James is a first class man in the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, while the daughter is in the sophomore year of the Princeton High School. Mr. Pool has been recently appointed by Governor Morrow as a member of the board of directors of the Confederate Home at Pew Pee Valley, being the first son of a Confederate veteran to occupy a position on this board.

A. T. Knox, M. D. A long and eminently successful career as a physician in Clark County by no means covers the activities and accomplishments of Dr. A. T. Knox, of the Thomson community, for he has long been a contributor to the public welfare as the incumbent of public positions of trust and responsibility, and has been an encouraging factor in the development of the stock raising industry in his section.

Doctor Knox was born in Powell County, Kentucky, December 11, 1863, a son of John T. Knox, a native of Montgomery County and an agriculturist by vocation. His grandfather, Thomas Knox, was a son of one of three Scotch brothers, one of whom settled at Knoxville, Tennessee, one in Michigan and one in Massachusetts. Among the descendants of the eldest brother was the eldest of former President James K. Polk, and Philander C. Knox of Pennsylvania is also of the same line, while the City of Knoxville is named in honor of the family. The direct ancestor of Doctor Knox, Thomas Knox, eventually came to Indian Fields, Clark County, as a hunter, but owing to the scarcity of game removed to the mountains and there spent the rest of his life as a hunter, in the timber that surrounded his cabin. His son, George Knox, followed agriculture for his livelihood and was also a county officer in Powell County, where he died at an advanced age. John T. Knox, the son of George, spent his life in Powell County, where he still lives at the age of eighty-three years, his father having been eighty-eight years of age at the time of his demise. John T. Knox married Arminda Hanks, a relation of Nancy Hanks, the mother of Abraham Lincoln. John Knox was born in Powell County and died in 1875, when in middle life. A. T. Knox was one of six children born to his parents, and he also had four half-brothers, born to his father and stepmother. Nine of these sons reached maturity and six survive. There was a distinct inclination in the family for the boys to join the medical profession. Two brothers of Doctor Knox, now deceased, were physicians, while another brother, B. C., and William O., who followed his calling at Jeffersonville, this state. A third brother, Melvin L. Knox, M. D., still practices medicine and surgery at Torrent, Kentucky.

A. T. Knox was compelled to make his own way in a large degree in his youth, and after completing his primary education began to teach school in Powell and Estill counties, a vocation which he could give, and did, in the rural districts for nine years. He then began to sell goods in the latter county, and followed that occupation for four or five years, or until after the death of his first wife, Alice Baker, with whom he had been united at the age of twenty-two years. They were the parents of three children: Armina, now the wife of Rev. Ray Shear, a Presbyterian minister at Dalton, Ohio, with two sons, John Knox and James Algin; John, now the owner of the farms at Mount Sterling, Kentucky; and Lillie U., the wife of John S. Lyle, a merchant at Furnace, Estill County.

After the death of his wife A. T. Knox attended the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville, from which he was graduated in the class of 1894, and for the following twenty years was engaged successfully in the practice of his calling in Powell County. During this period he belonged to the Powell County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and still holds membership in the two latter and in the Clark Medical Society. There is still a great demand for his services as a physician, and in the community of his home, near Thomson, he is held in the highest esteem and confidence.

For many years Doctor Knox had recognized and appreciated the urgent need for a better grade of stock on the farms of this part of Kentucky, and had been an energetic advocate of inaugurating movements that would bring in a better breed. The farmers, however, were slow to accept what they considered a radical movement, many believing that what was good enough for their fathers was good enough for them. Eventually, the doctor decided that a good illustration upon his part would be more effective than all the talking he could do and all the advice he could give, and accordingly embarked in the stock raising business on his own account, with the result that he is now one of the leading men in this line in his section of the state. He became a resident of his farm March 1, 1918, the present house on which was built in 1912 by Shields Cunningham. Since his arrival Doctor Knox has erected two tenant houses and installed other improvements as they were needed.

Hereford Stock Farm, as this property is known, was started by Doctor Knox while he was still a resident of Powell County, the herd being formed originally of a Hereford thourghbred bull, which was bred to common stock. Soon the doctor owned a herd of high grades, after which he cut out the grades and kept on raising only registered stock. At present he has a splendid thoroughbred herd, which has attracted the interest of a practical stockman, and has been of help to many other farmers adopting his methods and thereby materially elevating the stock-raising standards of this section. Doctor Knox is interested in the Hereford Journal. From his herd of fifty-five breeding animals he has exhibited successfully at fairs and among his prize-winners have been the strain of "The Acrobat," "Beau Brunmouel" and "Very Best." The farm consists of 322 1/2 acres of well-drained and highly-improved land eight miles from Winchester and six miles from Mount Sterling, being located at Thomson, on the C, & O. Railroad.

Doctor Knox has been identified prominently with public affairs for a number of years. In 1908 he was elected a representative from Powell and Estill counties in the State Legislature as a Republican, and assisted in the election of Hon. William O. Bradley to the United States Senate. He was chairman of the committee on public health and others relative to the public health and safety, and took an active and constructive part in all discussions brought to the consideration of that body. He was likewise made a member of the committee appointed to visit Indianapolis to investigate the State Fair Grounds, with the idea of installing similar grounds in Kentucky, but this committee reported adversely. In 1914 Doctor Knox was elected county judge of Powell County, and served in that capacity for four years. During this period he voted for the county bond issue for the improvement of the roads in Powell County, the beginning of the roads movement here. This first met with the hardest kind of opposition from the reactionaries, who, as usual, could see nothing good in something that had been done before. Through good work on the part of Judge Knox it is his belief that the intelligent and progressive men of the community success was won for the movement, which is now exceedingly popular.

Doctor Knox's second marriage was to Mrs. Mary Maxwell, nee Martin, widow of George A. Maxwell, a farmer of Powell County and a cousin of Doctor Knox. Mrs. Knox has one daughter, Miss Grace Maxwell, a graduate of the State University, Lexington, class of 1920, who resides at the Knox home. Mrs. Knox is still the owner of a fine farm in Powell County, which is now operated by a tenant.

Both Doctor and Mrs. Knox are active in the work of the Bethlehem Christian Church, where he has a splendid Bible class. Formerly, while a resident of Powell County, he taught for some years in the Methodist Episcopal Sunday School.

Cecil Reed. Though he was educated for the bar and enjoyed a promising practice for several years, Cecil Reed has given his chief attention to the responsibilities of public office and financial management, and for several years past has been secretary and treasurer of the Ohio Valley Trust Company of Paducah.

A son of William M. Reed, whose career as a Kentucky lawyer has been reviewed on other pages, Cecil Reed was born at Benton in Marshall County June 28, 1877. He acquired his early education in the public schools of his native village, attended the State University at Lexington three years, leaving at the end of his junior year, and in 1901 graduated with the L.L. B. degree from the law department of Center College at Danville. After graduating he was engaged in practice at Benton until 1904, and in that year came to Paducah and was appointed master commissioner of the McCracken Circuit Court. He filled this office with a singular degree of efficiency for twelve years, and since 1916 has been secretary and treasurer of the Ohio Valley Trust Company.

Mr. Reed is a democrat, a member of Paducah Lodge No. 217, B. P. O. E., and is a well known figure in social and civic circles.

His home is at 927 Broadway. At Paris, Tennessee, in 1902, he married Miss Selina Smith, a daughter of D. W. and Mollie (Shobe) Smith. Her father for many years was a tobacco dealer in Louisville, Kentucky. Her mother is still living and makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Reed. The latter is a graduate of Potter College at Bowling Green, Kentucky. The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Reed are Lucile, born in 1906; Rosemary, born in 1909; and Margaret Cecil, born in 1919.

Joseph E. Mattison. The operation of a large business requires special qualifications if it is to function properly. A knowledge of the problems which must be met, the strength of will and caliber of brain to solve them, good judgment with reference to men, and a willingness to put a conscientious amount of work into each day are sober and characteristic employments of men the gig portor demand. Joseph E. Mattison is displaying just these qualities in his management of the branch yard and offices of the Saint Bernard Mining Company at Paducah, and as a result this company's annual showing is very satisfactory.

The birth of Mr. Mattison occurred on July 23, 1886, and he is a son of Joseph Mattison and grandson of Andrew Mattison. Andrew Mattison was born in England in 1804 and was killed in a steamboat explosion in 1864, while a passenger on the "Pat Clayborne." He was the founder of his family in the New World, and after coming to the United States located at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, where he carried on a large nursery. Later he moved to Paducah and became the pioneer nurserymen at this city, as he had been of Hopkinsville. He was also engaged in raising fruits. During the war between the states he enlisted and served in the Union Army. Andrew Mattison married Clara Thompson, also a native of England, who died at Paducah.

Joseph Mattison was born at Paducah in 1855, and was only a small boy when his father was killed, so he had to rely upon his own efforts from an early age. During the greater part of his life he has been in the florist business, and is still one of the leading men in his line at Paducah. For a number of years he was on the Paducah School Board, and he is a man who is held in the highest esteem, so he could doubtless have further honors did he desire them. The Episcopal Church holds his membership and he is a very earnest worker in the church. Joseph Mattison married Jennie Derrington, born in Kentucky in 1858. Their only child to reach maturity was Joseph E. Mattison.

Mr. Mattison never attended school after he was fifteen, and when he was eighteen began to self-support as a driver for the Adams Express Company. He held this position a year, and then went with M. Livingston & Company, wholesale grocers, for another year. His next business experience was gaining a position at the Illinois Central Railroad and continued for a year. After an intermission of three years he became connected with his present company, in its Paducah branch, in 1910, his first position being that of clerk and sacker. From that, at the bottom, he has steadily risen through the various grades until in May, 1915, he was made manager of this branch, and continues to hold this very responsible situation. The headquarters of the company are at Elkhorn, Kentucky, and this company has branches at Paducah and Louisville, Kentucky, Evansville, Indiana, and Nashville, Tennessee. The Saint Bernard Mining Company handles coal. Mr. Mattison has had charge of the retail business for Paducah and its vicinity in all three years. The main yard and office are at No. 1013 Jefferson Street, another yard is at No. 123 South First Street, and the third is at 124 South Main Street, Mechenburg. Mr. Mattison is a republican. He belongs to Plain City Lodge No. 446, A. F. and A. M.; Paducah Chapter No. 30, R. A. M.; Paducah Commandery No. 11, K. T.; and Kosair Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Louisville, Kentucky. He is also a member of Paducah Lodge, K. O. T. M., and the Paducah Board of Trade, and is one of the most popular men in both business and social circles.

In April, 1907, Mr. Mattison was married at Paducah to Miss Bertie Clark, born in Graves County, Kentucky, and they have one daughter, Clara, who was born August 20, 1908. Mr. and Mrs. Mattison own their residence at 1218 South Sixth Street.

Henry C. Butler. The mercantile interests of an enterprising little community and a large contiguous farming locality are represented at J. & F. Junction, Dodge Post Office, Clark County, by Henry C. Butler, the proprietor of an up-to-date general merchandise store. Mr. Butler is a native Kentuckian, born at College Hill, Madison County, October 4, 1866, a son of Dr. C. F. and Frances (Quisenberry) Butler, and a maternal grandson of William Quisenberry, who resided seven miles south of Winchester, but who soon after the marriage of his daughter became a hotel proprietor at Sharpsburg, Bath County. There he was married a second time and removed to Mount Sterling, where his death occurred when he was advanced in years.

Dr. C. F. Butler was a son of Henry P. Butler, of Louisa County, Virginia, and a descendant of one of two brothers who immigrated to the United States from Europe and located first in Virginia, whence one went to an island in one of the Great Lakes, where he died. Henry P. Butler settled at Clintonville, Bourbon County, as a young man with his bride, and there died young of yellow fever. His son, C. F., was then nineteen years of age and, it is thought, was reading medicine at Transylvania College. His medical course was completed at Cincinnati, following which he practiced at Boonesboro and the vicinity in Clark County until the Civil war. During that conflict he served in Morgan's command, and after the close of the struggle removed to Colby, Hill, Madison County, in 1866, taking with him his young bride, to whom he had been married in the fall of 1865. He continued to be engaged in the practice of his profession during the remainder of his life, and died in September, 1878, at the age of forty-three years. Doctor Butler was ever ready to answer any call, feeling that he owed a service to humanity, and this disregard of self led to his early death, he having contracted tuberculosis while engaged in the duties of his profession. By his first wife, who died six years after their marriage, he had two children: Henry C., and Kate M., who died in her twenty-first year, unmarried. She had been reared in the home of her aunt, Mrs. J. H. Little, of Winchester. For his second wife Doctor Butler married Alice Johnson of College Hill, daughter of Rev. J. J. Johnson of a Methodist family of that place. The children of the academy at College Hill, where Mrs. Butler had been a teacher. She survived the Doctor but two years, and at her death left two children: Loula, who married R. B. Blakemore and lives at Shelbyville, this state; and Charles T., who died in early manhood.

During his boyhood Henry C. Butler attended the public school and spent one year in the home of an uncle and afterwards engaged in the lumber business at College Hill for two years as well as that at Vanceburg. For one term he taught school at the Brock School in Clark County, and in 1884 went to Kansas, especially to make a set of abstracts at Howard, Elk County. Later he journeyed to Fayetteville, Arkansas, where he learned the trade of printer, and from 1888 to 1893 worked at the case as a journeyman, visiting various places throughout the United States. He has been as a printer at Lexington, where he spent about one year setting type, and then turned his attention to the furniture business, at which he worked two years. In 1896 he opened a store at Vaughn's Mill, Powell County, and since that time has been a merchant. He came to Clark County again in 1897 and located at Bloomingdale, and in November, 1899, came to J. & F. Junction, six miles east of Winchester, where he purchased an established trade. He carries a general stock of up-to-date goods of all kinds and deals in produce, and his business has shown a gratifying increase each year.

Mr. Butler as a merchant has been successful because of his enterprise, practicability and business intelligence, as well as because of his courtesy and evident desire to thoroughly meet all the demands of his patrons. During the greater part of the time that he has been engaged in business here he has served also as postmaster and for a time as railroad agent. He is a York Rite Mason, belongs to the Benevolent and Solemn League and Commandery, and is a member of the Mystic Shrine. On June 12, 1913, Mr. Butler married at Winchester Miss Minnie Ford, of Richmond, Madison County, a daughter of Benjamin Rhodes Ford, a trader of Richmond. Mr. and Mrs. Butler have no children.

Eli Bean Dooley. Both the Bean and the Dooley families have their roots deep in the past of the West. Grass section of Kentucky, particularly in Clark County, where Eli Bean Dooley represents one branch of both families. Mr. Dooley is one of Kentucky’s ablest and most extensive farmers, and for many years has directed the operations on hundreds of acres and has been one of the leading cattle feeders. His home is nine miles east of Winchester, near Wade’s Mill.

He spent his life here and his widowed mother resides with him. He was born September 29, 1855, the son of Obediah and Mary (Bean) Dooley. On the same farm his father, Obediah, was born April 23, 1816. The grandparents were Obediah and Ann Dooley. There is in the family an old bible of 1813, and among its records are found dates pertaining to Obediah and his wife, Ann. Obediah was born July 10, 1769, and died October 18, 1845, while Ann was born January 17, 1773, and died October 8, 1859. They were both born in Virginia. Obediah, Jr., who died September 29, 1881, was married June 10, 1858, to Mary Bean. However, she was his second wife. His first wife was Belle Scott, who died leaving no children. The present residence in which Eli B. Dooley lives was built by his grandfather in order to keep the son Obediah on the farm.

Mary Bean, who is still living under the same roof where all her married life was spent, was born January 15, 1833, at the old Bean farm on farm Road, six miles north of Winchester, a daughter of Eli and Sarah (Hall) Bean. Eli and Sarah Bean were married November 26, 1822. Eli was born at the old Bean homestead November 17, 1794, while his wife, Sarah, was born November 21, 1801, in Frederick County, Virginia. Eli Bean was a son of John and Eve (Sen-cenny) Bean. John Bean and wife settled on the Kentucky property when they came West. They had moved from Virginia and accomplished part of their journey to the western wilderness by flatboat. For several years they lived in a district where the Indians comprised a large part of the population. John Bean eventually acquired a large tract of fine land. He was the father of nine children. Eli Bean spent his active life on the old homestead, and was a man of much worth in the county in respect of the peace and as sheriff. Mrs. Mary Bean Dooley is the sister of Mrs. Susan Bush, of Winchester, Mrs. Eliza Evans, who lives on the Pretty Pines farm in Clark County; and Mrs. Sarah A. Duncan, of Louisville. Her five brothers, all deceased, were: John W., a farmer and for twenty-five or thirty years before his death president of the Clark County National Bank; James H., who lived on a part of the Bean estate on Paris Pike; Edwin P., who owned the old Bean home- stead but retired to Winchester, where he died at the age of seventy-five; Dr. Bennett H., who died at the age of seventy, at North Middletown, Kentucky; and Asa L., who was a merchant at North Middletown.

Obediah and Mary Dooley had four children: Sally M. and Anna B., both of whom died in early childhood; Eli B. and Asa, both of whom have always been associated in some of their farming and business enterprises.

Obediah Dooley owned about 1,000 acres, and all that land is still kept in the family. His two sons use this property for their joint stock and grain raising enterprises. Eli Dooley has increased the family possessions to about 2,200 acres, and he is personally owner of 1,800 acres. About seventy-five acres of this great family holding is devoted to tobacco. Eli Dooley has never gone in for the breeding of cattle, but has concentrated his operations chiefly to feeding cattle for export. He makes a practice of buying stock at about 150 pounds, finishing them off on the blue grass and selling in the fall at an average of 1,450 pounds. He feeds about too head every year and also keeps other live-stock.

His landed possessions include the noted Alpheus Lewis farm. Alpheus Lewis was a prominent distiller whose distillery gained a far-famed reputation. The old distillery is about a mile from the Dooley homestead. This Lewis farm comprised about 1,000 acres and is improved with one of the finest homes in the county, finished in cut stone. In spite of the manifest attractions of this home Mr. Dooley and his mother prefer the less pretentious attractions and environment of the old Dooley house. Mrs. Dooley is a director of the State Bank at Winchester and for twenty years held the office of postmaster. While he has devoted his life to his extensive business interests, he is widely known and a popular citizen, always manifesting a commendable degree of public spirit in community affairs.

Valentine White Bush. One of the men who is proving himself an able exponent of the legal profession at Winchester is Valentine White Bush, whose success is due to his knowledge of the law, his power to so prepare his cases as to bring forcibly before the jury the facts and the law pertaining to them, and his reputation for probity and fair dealing. He comes of one of the old and honored families of the country, tracing back to Ambrose and Lucy Bush, the former of whom was born in 1748 and died in 1815. The latter accompanied her husband in 1780 from Orange County, Virginia; to the Fort in Clark County, Kentucky, and there, in 1780, was born Jeremiah Bush, grandfather of Valentine White Bush. In 1811 Jeremiah Bush was married to Nancy Gentry, a daughter of Richard Gentry and his first wife, Jane Harris Gentry. Two years after his marriage Jeremiah Bush secured 300 acres of land in Madison County, three miles east of Richmond, Kentucky, and the house he erected on it in 1824 is still standing and is in a good state of preservation. The children of Jeremiah and Nancy Bush were as follows: Richard Gentry, who was born in 1812, married Anna Mitchell; Felix G., who married as his first wife Almira Deaborne, and as his second, Sarah Todd; G. W., who married Reuben Elkin, of Clark County, Kentucky; James Harris, who was born in 1818, died in 1866, married Julia Franklin, served as county clerk seven years as county judge and eight years as a member of the State Assembly; Henry J. was married first Kittie Hampton; second, Martha Hampton, and third, Fannie A. Shields; Oliver E., whose first wife was Dorinda Crimme, and his second, Harriet Hodgecoat; Maj. William Martin, who was born in 1827, died at Greenville, Texas, in 1900, and his first wife was Lucy G. Elkin, and in 1855 he moved to Collin County, Texas, after a service in the Mexican war, the company commanded by John S. Williams, and then in 1861 he entered the Confederate Army as a lieutenant, was promoted to the rank of major and lieutenant-colonel and saw service mainly in Western Missouri, Arkansas and Louisiana; Valentine White, Sr., who is mentioned below; Jeremiah Porter, who was born in 1835, died in 1906, married Anna E. Gentry, his cousin, of Palmyra, Missouri, and lived on a farm... near Monroe City, Missouri; and Jane Frances, who married Jerry Robinson, who lives at Belton, Missouri.

Valentine White Bush, of Winchester, was born May 19, 1870, a son of Valentine White Bush, Sr., who was born in 1831 and died in 1900. He first married Prudence Grant, and their children were Henry G and Leila. After the death of his first wife the elder Valentine Bush married Fannie Nichols, but they had no children. He married Mrs. Mary T Robinson, and she bore him two children, Lewis Hampton, who was born September 25, 1871, and Valentine White, Jr., whose name heads this review.

The younger Valentine White Bush was graduated from the Kentucky Wesleyan College in 1897, and from Princeton in 1899, with the degree of Master of Arts. At this time he married Mrs. Hedges, of Maysville, Kentucky. Mr. Bush took his law course at the University of Cincinnati, from which he graduated in 1901. In the intervals between his collegiate courses he taught school in Clark County, Kentucky, in order to earn the money to carry him through. With his admission to the bar he established himself in a general practice at Winchester, and has since made it the field of his operations. For some time he has been associated with a partner, the firm being Pendleton & Bush, the combination being recognized as a strong one in this part of the state.

Robert Adair. A Bourbon County home that has long been a center of cultured social life as well as the typical institution of the Bluegrass District of Kentucky is located two miles west of Paris, where the late Robert Adair spent many years of his useful career and where Mrs. Belle Dodson Adair spent the closing years of her life, with most of her children around her.

The Adair family was established in Kentucky by John Adair, who came from Maryland. His son, Richard, married Mary Tarr, sister to William Tarr, the noted distiller. Richard Adair had a farm in Nicholas County, and died there in advanced years. The only survivor of his children is Mrs. Mary Pitt, widow of Doctor Pitt of Salina, Kansas. A son, Dr. Richard Adair, was for many years engaged in the practice of his profession at Paris and later at Mount Sterling, where he died and where his daughter, Mrs. William Apperson, still lives. Dr. John J. Adair practiced dentistry at Louisville for many years. He married Sallie Ewell, of Bourbon County, and died on a farm in the latter county.

The late Robert Adair was born in Nicholas County, September 4, 1839, and in early life was in the jewelry business at Maysville. In 1861 he came to Bourbon County and about 1862 bought the farm west of Paris where he lived until his death on May 7, 1907. At one time a large distillery had been operated on this farm. Robert Adair devoted his time to farming and stock raising. He was a staunch democrat and at one time took much pride in the fact that two of his children and five sons-in-law went to the polls and cast democratic votes.

Bell Dodson, who became the wife of Robert Adair, was only fifteen when she married. She was a beautiful girl, well calculated by her character and beauty to attract the attention of the eligible young men of her community. Her father strenuously objected to her engagement to young Adair, and in order to consummate their romance they eloped. Her parents were George and Permelia Ellen (Curtis) Dodson. Her father never forgave his daughter for her marriage. George Dodson was in the wholesale grocery business at Maysville, and the business was continued by his son, Omar, until the latter's death on February 2, 1909. George Dodson was a native of Maryland and came as a boy to Kentucky with his parents, John and Rebecca (Darnell) Dodson.

The late Mr. Adair was a member of the Presbyterian Church, while Mrs. Adair was reared as an Episcopalian, the faith of her parents. She died November 8, 1920.

Of the Adair children six are still living. Ella, the oldest, became the wife of William P. Arderly, and she died on January 17, 1917; Nettie, widow of Joseph B. Defarnett, lives at the old home and has two sons; Birdie is the wife of Lawrence Horton, of Bourbon County, and has three children, one daughter and two sons; Sallie is the wife of John Toles, lives near her old home and has one daughter; Florence, Mrs. O. C. Hedges, lives in her parents' home and has one daughter, Florence Adair Hedges; Robert D. Adair is a bachelor and has an active part in the management of the Adair farm. The youngest is James Curtis Adair, of Maysville. He is married and has two daughters and one son.

Leander Crawford Rose. Attractively and conveniently situated three miles east of Winchester is the handsome estate of Leander Crawford Rose, a property that has been brought to a high state of productiveness under the care of its present proprietor. Mr. Rose is one of Clark County's agriculturists who has made the most of his opportunities and has advanced himself through individual merit, at the same time preserving a keen interest in the welfare of his community.

Mr. Rose was born on a farm in Owosley County, Kentucky, August 1, 1820, a son of Robert and Frances (McQuin) Rose, and a grandson of Robert Rose of Virginia, the pioneer of the family into Kentucky. Robert Rose, the younger, passed his entire life in Owosley County, where he accumulated large holdings through his industry and good management, and where he devoted himself without interruption to the vocations of farming and raising stock. He died on his farm at the age of sixty-five years, greatly esteemed by those who had known him because of his integrity in business affairs and his unflagging good citizenship. Mr. Rose married Miss Frances McQuin, who was born in Morgan County, and they became the parents of two children: Leander Crawford, and Greenbury, who carried on merchandising at a store on his father's farm, and was also an extensive agriculturist and stock dealer, and died in February, 1920.

Leander Crawford Rose grew up on the home farm and secured his education in the public schools of Owosley County. At the time he reached the age of twenty-one years his father set him up in farming on a property in the near vicinity of the home place, and there he doubled the land which was given him by his parent, having at one time in the neighborhood of 3500 acres. In 1807 Mr. Rose came to Clark County, where he continued his operations as a general farmer, stockman and stock trader. As early as 1890, with an eye to the future, he had started to invest in Clark County land, believing in its advance in value, and at one time was the owner of 1200 acres here, although he has since given much of his land to his children, and now owns only 500 acres, of which 204 acres are included in his home tract, the old Senator Etcon farm. His Owosley County land has been presented to his children. Of recent years Mr. Rose has looked forward to raising Hereford cattle, and at the present time has a splendid herd of seventy head. He is accounted an excellent judge of cattle, and in business circles is known as a man of sound integrity and high principles. He has not been an office seeker, but has been satisfied with the rewards which have come to him as a follower of the vocations of the soil.

At the age of fifty-two years Mr. Rose was united in marriage with Miss Emma Caywood, and to this union there have been born children as follows: Robert Green, who died at the age of twenty-six years; Alice, who is the wife of Samuel Harrenden, an agriculturist.
of Owsley County; Charles, who is engaged in farming in that county; John M., farming in Owsley County; Alexander Campbell, a member of the ministry of the Church of God, now filling a charge at Winchester; and Nannie, the wife of John M. Campbell, a retired merchant, Stuart, who is the owner of the 1000 acre farm in Owsley County formerly owned by her father; Joseph, who is carrying on agricultural operations near his father in Clark County; and, Edgar, farming with his father, who married Addie Combs and has one son, Leander Crawford, Jr.; and Lena, the wife of Ray Roland, farming on the property adjoining that of her father.

James Wilson Gleaves. For many years the name of Gleaves has been associated with the furniture industry of Western Kentucky, and today the dependable house of James W. Gleaves & Sons is the leading one of its kind in this part of the state, and is ably managed by the two sons of the founder, James Wilson Gleaves and Harry Winston Gleaves, enterprising young business men of Paducah, native sons of the city, and worthy successors of their family.

James Wilson Gleaves, the elder son, was born at Paris, Tennessee, August 1, 1897, a son of Harry Winston Gleaves, who was born at Nashville, Tennessee in 1868, and died at Paducah on January 23, 1920. Until 1886 he remained at Nashville, but in that year came to Paducah, and with his father, James W. Gleaves, established a small furniture business. He displayed the excellent business ability and fairness which distinguished the treatment of the public and his ability to offer good values and service resulted in the expansion of their initial attempt into the large establishment of today. The store and offices are located at 416 Broadway. With the death of Harry W. Gleaves, his widow succeeded to the ownership of the business, and she is fortunate in having such capable sons to manage it for her.

All of his life Harry W. Gleaves was a democrat, but he never exhibited any taste for public office. His interest outside of his business and family was centered in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and from young manhood he was one of its stewards, and he was serving as such at the time of his demise. He married on June 13, 1895, at Bolivar, Tennessee, Annie Lee Wilson. The Wilson family originated in Ireland and the Gleaves came from England; a Gleave family lived in Paducah, Kentucky, before the birth of his granddaughter, where he had been an early settler and a successful farmer. His wife's first name was Mary.

The father of Mrs. Gleaves, J. A. Wilson, was born at Bolivar, Tennessee, in 1833, and died at Whiteville, Tennessee, in 1908. For many years he was engaged in a mercantile business at Bolivar, but late in life moved to Whiteville, where his last years were spent. During the war he was stationed at the “Lost Cause,” and served as a brave and gallant soldier in the Confederate Army through the entire conflict, participating in the battle of Shiloh and in other engagements. His political convictions made him a stanch democrat. For many years he served the Cumberland Presbyterian Church as an elder, and belonged to it from his youth. He was a Mason, and one of the leading men of his community.

In 1872 J. A. Wilson was married at Early Grove, Mississippi, to Miss Anna Franklin, who survives him and makes her home at Martin, Tennessee. They became the parents of the following children: Macon, who is the widow of Rev. G. W. Wilson, a Methodist Episcopal clergyman, lives at Martin, Tennessee; Har- dwin Franklin, who was a railroad employee, died at Bolivar, Tennessee, where he was forty years of age; Stuart, who was a salesman for the Louisville Shoe Company, died at Tullahoma, Tennessee; James A., Jr., who was a banker, died at Bolivar, Tennessee.
name and birthplace, or that they should be accorded a leading position among the merchants of Western Kentucky.

Carl A. Wells is a business man of Paducah, identified with the affairs of that city for the past fifteen years, and has built up a extensive business as a merchant tailor.

Mr. Wells was born at New Albany, Indiana, September 5, 1881, though his father was practically a life-long resident of Daviess County, Kentucky. He is a son of the late Joseph W. Wells, of Owensboro. Born in Daviess County in 1860 he was for the past twenty years of his life manager of the Gallaher, Ltd., Tobacco Company. He was a democrat. Joseph W. Wells married a Shively, who was born at Washington, Indiana, in 1859. Carl A. is the oldest of their children. Earl is a traveling salesman for Armour & Company, living at Charleston, West Virginia. Lily is unmarried and living at home, J. E. is also with Armour & Company at Charleston, West Virginia. Roy is engaged in the loose leaf tobacco business at Owensboro, while Mallory, the youngest, is employed by the L. H. & St. L. Railroad Company at Owensboro.

Carl A. Wells attended the public schools of Owensboro, graduated from high school in 1903, and at once entered the tailoring business. In February, 1905, he sold his interests in Owensboro and came to Paducah, where he entered business on a small scale and with a limited capital as a merchant tailor and cleaner. In the past fifteen years he has developed and become one of the chief concerns of the city. A kind of the chief concerns of the business of Paducah, an extensive merchant tailoring establishment and with a complete cleaning equipment, all located at 126-128 North Fifth Street. He steadily employs fourteen clerks in the business.

Mr. Wells represents his line of business in the Paducah Rotary Club. Until 1920 he was a member of the McCracken County Board of Inquiry. He is a prominent Elk, being a past exalted ruler of Paducah Lodge No. 217 and a past president of the State Elks Association. He is a third degree Knight of Columbus and Past Grand Knight of Paducah Council No. 1955. He is also a past president of the Paducah Rotary Club. Mr. Wells is a democrat and a Catholic.

His modern home is at 409 North Fifth Street. He married at Owensboro Miss Adèle Payne, daughter of the late E. and Mary (O'Bryan) Payne. Her father was associated with the M. V. Monarch Distilling Company and her mother is still living at Owensboro. Mrs. Wells finished her education in St. Francis Academy at Owensboro. To their marriage have been born five children: Hugh, born June 22, 1903; Edwin, born in 1906; Elizabeth, born in 1907; Sheridan, born in 1908; and Hearne, born February 2, 1920.

W. H. Lackey was born at Paducah December 25, 1893, a son of Ernest Lackey, who was also born at Paducah, his birth occurring in 1868. The paternal grandfather also survives and makes his home at Pembroke, Kentucky, where he is engaged in an active practice as a physician and surgeon. Formerly he was a resident of Paducah, but moved to Christian County, Kentucky, many years ago.

Ernest Lackey was reared and educated in his native city, and following his marriage he went on the road for the wholesale clothing house of Hecht & Company of Paducah, and represented them during a period of twenty-five years and acquired a knowledge of men and affairs which is proving of great benefit to him in his present undertaking. Since 1913, when he left the road, he has been conducting an insurance and real estate business, in which he has achieved a gratifying success. He also found that his acquaintance with human nature gave him prestige in politics, and he was elected on the democratic ticket to the city council of Paducah, of which he was a member for seven years. In 1916 his fellow citizens proved their confidence in him by electing him mayor of Paducah, and he served in that office with efficient capability. He still maintains his close connection with the affairs of the city through his membership in the board of trade, and in addition, to his large business above referred to he is the director of the Paducah Chero-Cola Company. Mr. Lackey is a charter member of Paducah Lodge No. 217, B. P. O. E., and he also belongs to Otego Tribe No. 60, I. O. R. M.

Ernest Lackey was married to Carrie Kreutzer, born at Aurora, Indiana, in 1875, but the marriage was celebrated at Metropolis, Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Lackey maintain their home at 25, North Fifth Street, Paducah. They became the parents of the following children: Brian, who is mentioned below; W. H., who was second in order of birth; Ezelle, who is a resident of Paducah, is associated in business with his father; Pierce, who is also living at Paducah, is connected with the King Mill & Lumber Company; Hecht, who is also in business with his father, lives at Paducah; and Prewitt and Ernest, Jr., both of whom are students in the Paducah High School.

Two of the sons of Ernest Lackey are veterans of the great war who were spared to their family and country. Brian Lackey enlisted in the Heavy Tank Corps, was sent overseas and remained abroad for eight months, a portion of that time being with the Third Army of Occupation in Germany. Pierce Lackey was in the meat grocery trade. Pierce Lackey enlisted in the aviation branch of the United States Navy, was in the service for fifteen months, and was stationed at Montauk Point, Long Island.

W. H. Lackey received private tuition at the Dorian Private School, as he left the public schools when only twelve years of age in order to enter the employ of Hecht & Company. His father had been connected for so many years. His connection with this house covered a period of five years, and he then secured a position as news reporter on the "News-Democrat" and held it for 2½ years. Leaving that journal, Mr. Lackey went with the "Evening Sun" for three years. During 1916 he was chief deputy in the county clerk's office. With the termination of his duties in this office, Mr. Lackey was retained by the finance and discount department of the First National Bank until May, 1918, when he became a Young Men's Christian Association secretary at Camp Taylor, Kentucky, and remained there as such until in January, 1919. He then accepted his present position, his wide and varied experience fitting him admirably for this class of work. His offices are at 809-10-11 City National Bank Building. Mr. Lackey has seven western counties of Kentucky, known as "Jackson's Purchase," as his territory. A young man of a religious turn of mind, he has long been a member of the Christian Church, of which he is an elder, and he is superintendent of its Sunday School. Fraternally he belongs to Paducah Lodge No. 127, A. F. and A. M. He also belongs to the Rotary Club, the T. P. A., and the Paducah Press Club.

On April 10, 1910, Mr. Lackey was married to Miss Ethel Snider at Metropolis, Illinois, a daughter of T. B. and Nora (Turk) Snider, residents of Paducah. Mr. and Mrs. Lackey maintain their residence at 324 North Fifth Street, Paducah. They have two children, Frances, who was born January 21, 1911; and Ethel, who was born March 28, 1913.

Mr. Lackey early came to a man's responsibilities, and has proved worthy of every trust reposed in him. There is something in the grip and essence of this man which makes him a natural leader, and his upright life and high principles have been a guiding star to many another. In his business affairs he shows the same high-mindedness which characterizes him else where, and is proving that Christianity is practical and can be made a part of everyday life.

John Louis Wanner. Among the reliable and honorable business men of Paducah perhaps none are more worthy of a place in a work of this high class than John Louis Wanner, well-known for a dependence of the jeweler and for his public-spiritedness, ready to sacrifice his personal interests for his city's good. He was born in Ripley County, Indiana, February 12, 1874, a son of Michael Wanner. The latter was born in Germany in 1853, and died at Aurora, Indiana, in 1916.

Growing up in Germany, Michael Wanner learned the trade of a shoemaker, and after he came to the United States in 1870 and settled in Ripley County, Indiana, he followed it for twenty years as a shoemaker. He moved to Aurora, Dearborn County, Indiana, to which he moved in 1877. After securing his papers of citizenship he became a republican, and never swerved from his allegiance to the party's principles. A man of religious tendency, he was a very active worker in the Lutheran Church, of which he was a member for many years. Michael Wanner was married to Ernestina Geisler, born in Germany in 1859, who survives him and makes him a grandparent. Their children are as follows: Lena, who died at the age of twenty-eight years at Aurora, Indiana, was the wife of Julius Vogel, a farmer now living at Condor, Missouri; John Louis, whose name heads this review: Charles, who lives at Paducah, is a general workman; Emma, who married John Schiller, an employee of the foundry at Aurora; and Ida, who married Christ Thie, a bookkeeper, resides at Aurora, Indiana.

John Louis Wanner was born at the age of twenty-eight years, becoming a journeyman jeweler and working as such for five years. Mr. Wanner was then able to buy a small jewelry store at Aurora, and after conducting it there for five years he moved it to Paducah, establishing his present store in 1906. At the beginning of his independent career he had only a small capital, but he understood his business and how to buy his stock, and gradually and steadily has expanded until he now has the largest jewelry concern in Western Kentucky. His stock is a very large and varied one in all lines of jewelry and his store display cases are tastefully and pleasingly arranged. The store is conveniently located at 425 Broadway.

Like his estimable father, Mr. Wanner is a republican, and he is now serving his second term as a member of the Paducah Board of Education. He belongs to the Kentucky State Jewelers Association, of which he is a charter member. Mr. Wanner has attended a number of the national conventions of the American National Retail Jewelers Association as a delegate from the Kentucky State Jewelers Association. He also belongs to the Paducah Board of Trade, the Retail Merchants Association and the Kentucky Optical Association. Both by inheritance and conviction he is a Lutheran, and belongs to the local church of that denomination. In addition to his jewelry interests he has other interests and is a stockholder in the Ohio Valley Trust Company and the Ohio Valley Fire and Marine Insurance Company, and owns a modern residence at Fourth and Ohio streets.

In 1902 Mr. Wanner was married at Paducah to Miss Emma Kirchhoff, a daughter of Frank and Johanna (Baumer) Kirchhoff, residents of Paducah, where for many years Mr. Kirchhoff was a baker, and one of the earliest to engage in that line of business in the city, but is now retired. Mr. and Mrs. Wanner have two children, Esther, who was born November 11, 1903; and Ruby, who was born October 21, 1906, both of whom are attending the Paducah High School.

Howard S. Gilbert. While he is widely known over Clark County through his administration of the office of sheriff and county tax collector, Mr. Gilbert with the exception of his four year term has devoted his best energies to the management of a fine Blue Grass stock farm seven miles south of Winchester.

On this farm he was born August 4, 1883, son of Dr. John D. and Mollie C. (Hampton) Gilbert, and a grandson of John and Lucinda (Yates) Gilbert. His grandparents both died in Madison County, Kentucky, where Mr. John D. became a member of the Green River Baptist Church. Mr. Gilbert, who died July 26, 1901, at the early age of thirty-eight, being a victim of typhoid, was literally educated and first entered practice at College Hill, and when about twenty-five years of age, after his marriage, moved to Clark County and was associated with Dr. Dillard Price. In the spring of 1884 he moved to the farm where his son now lives, and owned 200 acres of land. He was married to two children, Samuel H. and Howard S., both of whom are partners in the old homestead and have greatly increased its acreage, now owning over 600 acres. They do an extensive business, raising mules, cattle and sheep.

Howard S. Gilbert was elected to the office of sheriff and county tax collector in 1912, and gave his personal attention to that office for four years. He filed a personal bond of $100,000 upon entering the office. Since retiring from office he has given all his time to the farm, though he continues to exercise the influence of leadership in local politics.

February 12, 1917, Mr. Gilbert married Elizabeth Long, of Shelby County, Kentucky. They have one son, Howard, Jr. Mrs. Gilbert is a member of the Christian Church while he is identified with the Mount Olive Baptist Church, a noted institution of Clark County which stands near the Gilbert home.

Millard Burk. Few men at the age of thirty-three can look back upon more substantial achievements and forward to greater promise of influence and prosperity than Millard Burk, the well known merchant, timber dealer and coal operator of Pike County, whose home is at Shelby Gap.

Mr. Burk is a son of Alaman and Melvira (Mul- lin) Burk and one of the old and substantial families of this section of Eastern Kentucky. A brief account of his father and other members of the family is given on other pages of this publication. Millard Burk was born on Shelby Creek below the mouth of Beef Hide March 23, 1888. His early youth was spent there, and after finishing his education at the age of eighteen he went to work for his father as a logger. He has become acquainted with every practical phase of the timber business, and he also assisted his father in mercantile lines.

In 1907 at the age of nineteen Mr. Burk was selling goods on his own account at the mouth of Beef Hide Creek. Two years later he moved to Shelby Gap, where he has conducted a profitable mercantile business ever since. As a merchant his interests have covered wide scope. He has acquired two mines at Jenkins, another four miles below Shelby Gap on Elkhorn Creek, and also one at Virgie. He has also operated a number of saw mills, and is prominently connected with coal operations, being a member of the Middle Ridge Coal Company at Elkhorn City, the Burk Coal Company at Shelby Gap and the Shelby Gap Coal Company. Great energy, the tact of hard and constructive management, have made him one of the prosperous men of Eastern Kentucky.

In 1907 Mr. Burk married Miss Martha Sanders, daughter of I. B. Sanders of Doronton. They have five children, Lily, Lester, Ennice, Flo and Glady. Mr. Burk is a republican and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Red Men.

William T. Buckner, whose home is nine miles south of Paris, is one of Bourbon County's most substantial and successful citizens, and has given his best years to the care and management of a very large stock and general farm on which he grew up, and a large part of which was acquired and developed by his father, William Buckner, one of the most efficient farmers in Bourbon County in his day. The house in which William T. Buckner now lives is the one in which he was born March 20, 1868. He is a son of William and Lucy (Woodford) Buckner. The grandfather, William Buckner, lived for many years at what is now the Hala Farm of Ed Smith on the North Middletown Pike, eight miles north of Paris. He died there at the age of seventy years, when William T. Buckner was an infant. William Buckner, Sr., married a Miss Buckner. He was a native of Virginia and his brothers were Walker, Samuel, Ayllette and Benjamin. Benjamin and Samuel subsequently removed to Missouri, where their descendants are still living, while Ayllette went to Mississippi. William and Walker remained as founders of the Buckner family in this section of Kentucky. Walker settled on Cane Ridge, William Buckner by his first wife had one son, William. His second wife was Sally Clay, sister to Samuel, Frank and Henry Clay. By that union he had two sons and one daughter, Henry, Benjamin and Elizabeth. Elizabeth became the wife of John T. Woodford, and was the mother of the late Buckner Woodford. Henry and Benjamin inherited their father's old property, and Henry lived on it until his death, while Benjamin died during the Civil war. William Buckner, Jr., grew to manhood in Bourbon County, and his wife, Lucy Woodford, was the sister of John T. Woodford, just mentioned as the husband of Elizabeth Buckner. William Buckner, Jr., was given a tract of land by his father, but he sold that and soon bought a portion of the farm now owned by his son William T. Buckner. This original purchase consisted of 200 acres. Only two rooms of the present house were standing at the time. It was built of brick, and was an example of the pioneer brick construction in the county. William Buckner, Jr., added to the house, and it has been still further extended in the time of William T. Buckner, and these additions at intervals give it a somewhat rambling character of architecture, though it is a place commodious and comfortable. William, Jr., kept buying additional land until he had about 1,600 acres in a body, and probably never paid over $100 an acre for any of it, while much was acquired as low as $50 an acre. On this extensive area he grazed many head of stock, raised large crops, and in everything he did applied a vigor, method and system that brought returns and were also shown in the high class condition of his farmstead, where the fences were always in good repair, the roads graded, and altogether he set an example of thrift and good management which his son William T. Buckner feels that he has never quite equalled. Before the war of course much of the labor on the farm was performed by slaves. William Buckner, Jr., and his sons, all of whom served in the war, paid being $108 an acre. Of this large area he seldom grows more than twenty acres of tobacco.

At the age of twenty-six Mr. Buckner married Miss Anna Clay Wornall, daughter of James R. Wornall, of Clark County. They lived happily together for forty years, and three children, with Mr. Buckner, share the sorrow of her loss. The oldest is Thomas Moore, who helps operate the extensive farm and is married to Miss Monroe, a local girl, and resides at home; and Lucy Woodford, wife of Clarence Kenney, who lives on part of the Buckner estate. Mr. Buckner is a democrat in politics. He has always been fond of hunting and outdoor life, in earlier years kept a pack of fox hounds, and he takes a great deal of pleasure in an occasional trip with a party of select friends into the hunting grounds of the Kentucky Mountains.

Milton L. Caneer for the past ten years has employed his talents as an educator in Kentucky, and prior to that for a number of years was identified with schools in his native state of Tennessee. Mr. Caneer is principal of the Stanford High School.

He was born in Marshall County, Tennessee, January 29, 1868. His father, J. D. Caneer, was born in North Carolina in 1833 and died in Marshall County, Tennessee, where he married and where throughout his active life he followed farming. He was a Confederate soldier during the war between the states, voted as a democrat, and was a sustaining member of the Christian Church. J. D. Caneer, who died in Marshall County in 1913, married Lucinda London, who was born in the same county in 1833 and died in 1893. They had a family of six children: W. R. Caneer, a farmer who died in Marshall County at the age of fifty-one; Henry, a Marshall County farmer now deceased; A. L. Caneer, a farmer who died in Marshall County at the age of fifty-eight; Clemmie, who died at the age of forty-five, wife of W. T. Gordon, a farmer in Marshall County; Milton L., who was the fifth in age; and J. T. Caneer, a farmer in Giles County, Tennessee.

Milton L. Caneer early showed a bent and inclination for studious pursuits, his early opportunities being those supplied by the rural schools of Tennessee. In 1894 he completed a high school education in the Haynes McLean Training School of Lewisburg, Tennessee. For six years he taught in Giles County, and then attended the Peabody College for Teachers at Nashville, graduating in 1903, with the degree Licentiate of Instruction. The eight years following he spent as principal of schools at Carthage, Tennessee, and in 1911 came to Kentucky. He was principal of the high school at Richmond until 1914, for three years was high school principal at Lancaster, and since 1917 has been principal of the high school at Stanford. His work at Stanford has been successful in every way, and he has kept the school work on a high plane in spite of the difficulties and unusual hand that was imposed upon educational work everywhere on account of the war. Under his supervision as principal are fourteen teachers, while the scholarship enrollment is 400. Mr. Caneer gave all the aid he could in behalf of patriotic movements during the World War. He is a member of the Kentucky Educational Association, is a democrat, is an active member and in several communities has served as a member of the Christian Church, and is a member of John C. Brown Lodge No. 151, Knights of Pythias, at Lynnville, Tennessee.

In 1898, in Giles County, Tennessee, he married Miss Effie Ridgeway, daughter of Capt. D. T. and Harriet (Hunger) Ridgeway, now deceased. Her father was a merchant and farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Caneer have two children: Robert, born July 10, 1906, in the freshman year of the Stanford High School, and Effie Ridgeway, born July 15, 1910, a pupil in the grammar school.
HENRY COLCLAZIER RHODES. In a study of the careers and characters of men who have attained success in business affairs it is found that success is not a matter of genius but rather the results of experience, industry and sound judgment. The lives of those who have acquired prosperity prove in the majority of cases that they have been those who have devoted their careers to close application to business principles and have risen gradually, winning over obstacles by reason of self-reliance, concentration and perseverance. To these may be attributed the success that has crowned the efforts of Henry Colclazier Rhodes, president of the Rhodes-Burford Company, Inc., of Paducah, Kentucky, the leading furniture business of the western part of the state.

Mr. Rhodes was born at Lagro, Wabash County, Indiana, February 23, 1858, a son of Phillip Charles and Louisa (Rifenberick) Rhodes. His grandfather, Henry Rhodes, was born in England, in 1835, and as a young man came to the United States, spending some years at Baltimore, Maryland, and then becoming a pioneer into Indiana, where he engaged in farming and the manufacture of pottery. He died at Attica, Indiana, in February, 1866. Phillip Charles Rhodes was born in 1830, at Baltimore, Maryland, and was reared and educated at Attica, Indiana, and shortly after his marriage moved to Lagro, where he established himself in business as flour miller. Later he followed the same course at Lafayette and Indianapolis, and in 1883 removed to Evansville, where his death occurred in 1913. He was a republican in political matters, familiarized with the Masons and Odd Fellows and was a member and strong supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Rhodes married Louisa Rifenberick, who was born in 1835, at Monticello, Indiana, and died at Lafayette, Indiana, in 1888, and they became the parents of three children: Henry Colclazier; May, who died at the age of twenty years at Evansville, Indiana, the wife of David Guess, also deceased, formerly a railroad man and later a merchant at Louisville; and Frank, who died at the age of eleven years.

After attending the public schools of Lafayette and Attica, Indiana, Henry C. Rhodes took a two-year course at Asbury (now DePauw) University, Greencastle, Indiana, and in 1877 went to Texas, where he spent seven years on ranches, ricking the range as a cowboy. Returning to Indiana in 1884, he later went to Cairo, Illinois, where he first became identified with the furniture business as a clerk, gaining much experience in this line between the years of 1888 and 1890.

In the latter year he came to Louisville, Kentucky, where he worked in a furniture store until 1901, being the year which marked his advent at Paducah. Upon his arrival he founded the present furniture business known as the Rhodes-Burford Company, Inc., which under his supervision has become the leading business of its kind in Western Kentucky, carrying the largest and most complete lines of stock to be found in this section of the state. The main store is located at 118-120 North Fourth Street, Paducah, while branch stores are maintained at the corner of Fourth and Jefferson streets, Paducah, at Paris, Tennessee, and Metropolis, Illinois. The trade covers Western Kentucky, Western Tennessee and Southern Illinois, and the product of the company is widely known for its excellence and quality. The present officers of the company are: H. C. Rhodes, president; F. E. Lack, vice president; and R. M. Prather, secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Rhodes is a democrat in his political allegiance. He has shown an active and constructive interest in the welfare and betterment of his adopted city, and is a member of the Board of Park Commissioners, a position which he has capably filled for the last fourteen years. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and chairman of the Board of Stewards thereof. He is prominently known in Masonry, belonging to Plain City Lodge No. 449, A. F. and A. M.; Paducah Chapter No. 30, R. A. M.; Paducah Council No. 32, R. and S. M.; Paducah Commandery No. 11, K. T.; Mizpah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Madisonville, Kentucky; and Louisville Consistory, thirty-second degree. Other fraternal connections are with Paducah Lodge No. 217, B. P. O. E., and Otego Tribe No. 6, I. O. R. M. He likewise holds membership in the Paducah Board of Trade, Paducah Country Club and Paducah Country Club. Mr. Rhodes' home, the old Thornburg residence at 317 North Seventh Street, is one of the finest in the city.

On February 15, 1888, Mr. Rhodes was married at Mount Vernon, Indiana, to Miss Elizabeth Decker, daughter of the late John Decker, who was engaged for years in the mercantile business at New Haven, Indiana. To Mr. and Mrs. Rhodes there have been born nine children: Amos Giles, Henry, Charles Dover, Eugene Burford, Walter Dewey, Elizabeth, John Phillip and Frank Hurt. Amos Giles Rhodes is a graduate of the Paducah High School, and at present is manager of the Rhodes-Burford Company's store at Paris, Tennessee. Hazel Louise Rhodes, who attended Paducah High School and took a two-year course at DePauw University, Greencastle, Indiana, is the wife of Roy M. Prather, secretary and treasurer of the Rhodes-Burford Company. Charles Dover Rhodes, a resident of Paducah, is bookkeeper and auditor for the Rhodes-Burford Company. Charles Dover Rhodes, a graduate of Paducah High School, took a course at the University of Wisconsin, at Madison, and is now manager of the Rhodes-Burford Company's branch store at Metropolis, Illinois. Eugene Burford Rhodes attended Paducah High School, and in 1917 entered the aviation corps of the United States Army. He was sent to England with the Royal Flying Squadron and saw active service, being honorably discharged and mustered out in December, 1919. At this time he is a resident of Paducah and a traveling representative for G. I. Sellers & Company, manufacturers of kitchen cabinets. Walter Dewey Rhodes, a graduate of Paducah High School, took a course at the International Y. M. C. A. College at Springfield, Massachusetts, and in July, 1917, enlisted in the United States Navy, being assigned to the naval front. He was honorably discharged as a second class pharmacist in September, 1919, and is now shipping clerk for the Rhodes-Burford Company at Paducah. Miss Elizabeth Rhodes, a graduate of Paducah High School and Bethel College, Hopkinsville, Kentucky, resides with her parents. John Phillip Rhodes, clerk for the Rhodes-Burford Company, attended the Paducah High School, and in May, 1918, entered the United States Navy and made several trips overseas conveying soldiers. He was mustered out of the service in October, 1919, as a first class seaman. Frank Hurt Rhodes, the youngest child, attended the Paducah High School, and is now assistant bookkeeper for Rhodes-Burford Company at Paducah, Kentucky.

ROY MARSHALL PRATHER, secretary and treasurer of the Rhodes-Burford Company of Paducah, is one of the energetic and thoroughly capable business men of the city, and one who has attained his present position solely through the medium of his own efforts. He was born at Slaughters, Kentucky, January 23, 1887, a son of Theodore Miller and Louise (Korb) Prather.

The grandfather of Mr. Prather was a resident of near Henderson, Kentucky, where he conducted a modest mercantile establishment, and when the Civil war came on he joined the Confederate Army as Henry Prather, a soldier; his death on the battle field, he did two of his sons. Theodore Miller Prather was born in 1844, near Madisonville, Kentucky, where for some years he was a general merchant. Later he followed the same line of business at Sebree, Kentucky, and in 1885 went to Slaughters, where he established himself in business as the proprietor of a general store, which he conducted until his retirement. He still resides at Slaughters, where he has been town treasurer for a period of thirty years, and does a modest business in the way of writing fire insurance. In politics he is a democrat. A strong churchman, he has been a member of the Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church for many years, teaches the men’s Bible Class, and for thirty years has been Superintendent. He married at Evansville, Indiana, Miss Louise Korb, who was born in 1858, at Cincinnati, Ohio.

Roy Marshall Prather attended the public school and Van Horn Institute until he was fifteen years of age, at which time he gave up his studies and entered the employ of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company as a messenger and telegraph operator at Madisonville. After spending one year at this point he followed the same vocation at a number of stations along the Louisville & Nashville line, Henderson Division, and in 1904 came to Paducah as night ticket agent in the Union Depot, a position which he retained one and one-half years. He then became Union Depot ticket agent for four years, and was subsequently advanced to city ticket agent, a position which he held until January 1, 1917, when he entered the Rhodes-Burford Company as secretary and treasurer, a position which he has since retained. This is the largest furniture business in Western Kentucky, and a more complete account of its activities will be found in the review of the career of Henry C. Rhodes, elsewhere in this work. Mr. Prather is a democrat. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, where he is a member of the Board of Stewards, and is fraternally affiliated with Plain City Lodge No. 149, A. F. & A. M., Paducah Lodge No. 217, B. O. E., and is a past exalted ruler of Paducah lodge of Elks. His pleasant home is situated at 317 North Seventh Street.

On June 16, 1914, Mr. Prather married Miss Hazel Rhodes, daughter of Henry C. Rhodes, president of the Rhodes-Burford Company. They have no children.

James A. Murray. The building trades have always played an important part in the life of any community, but of recent years, with the shortage of materials producing a demand far exceeding the supply in every line, it is little wonder that special attention is turned to the men who are engaged in producing the wherewithal to enable the absolutely necessary building operations to continue. One of the men who in the past earned a name for the quality of his work and his faithfulness in carrying out his promises, and is now, in spite of difficulties unknown in the pre-war period, still conducting his business upon the same honorable lines, is James A. Murray, manufacturer of brick, and one of the solid men of Paducah.

James A. Murray was born at Huntsville, Missouri, on May 8, 1880, a son of John Murray. Born in Scotland in 1813, John Murray lived in his native land until he had attained to man’s estate, and then came to the United States and located at Huntsville, Missouri, developing into a mason contractor of some moment. Later he went on a farm in McDonald County, Missouri, and from 1883 to 1886 was occupied with agricultural matters. He then went to Moberly, Missouri, where he engaged in the manufacture of brick in partnership with his brother-in-law, James Sanderson, this association continuing until 1886. When Mr. Murray came to Paducah and bought an interest in the brick yard then conducted by C. H. Chamblin and located at 1439 South Murrell Boulevard, he continued to be engaged in this business until his death, which occurred at Paducah in 1907. After securing his papers of citizenship he never swerved in his allegiance to its principles. Brought up in the Presbyterian faith, he was one of the devout members of the church of that denomination in each community in which he resided, and no appeal was ever made to him in behalf of contributions for the church. In his fraternal connections he maintained membership with the Odd Fellows. His widow, who was Miss Mary Sanderson prior to her marriage, survives him and lives at 1302 South Seventh Street, Paducah. She is also a native of Scotland, and was born in 1855. The children born to John Murray and wife were seven; James, who lives at 1504 South Seventh Street, Paducah, is a brick contractor and president of the Paducah Brick & Tile Company; John, who resides at 1302 South Seventh Street, Paducah, is vice president of the Paducah Brick & Tile Company; James A., whose name heads this review; Robert, who lives at 1302 South Seventh Street, Paducah, a brick mason; and Elsie, who married W. W. Rogers, lives at 315 North Seventh Street. Her husband is cashier of the Covington Wholesale Grocery Company.

James A. Murray attended the public schools of McDonald County, Missouri, and Moberly, Missouri, until he was sixteen years old. At that time he came with his parents to Paducah and learned the bricklayer trade, which he followed until March, 1912, when he became secretary and treasurer of the Paducah Brick & Tile Company, of which he is also the general manager. This company manufactures sand mould building brick, farm drain tile and hollow building blocks, the output of the bricks being 4,000,000 per annum. Shipsments are made as far south as Memphis, Tennessee, and throughout Kentucky and into Illinois. Like his father, Mr. Murray is a republican and a Presbyterian, and is active in the work of his church. For some years he has been one of the forceful members of the Paducah Board of Trade and Rotary Club, and in addition to his brick interests he is director and secretary of the McCracken County Real Estate & Mortgage Company, another reliable concern of Paducah. The Murray residence is at 1439 Murrell Boulevard. It is a somewhat remarkable fact that so many of the names of Murray are connected with the brick industry in this region, either as manufacturers or contractors, but the fact is explained in the careful training given his children by their father, who insisted upon their preparing themselves for a useful career, and in his own business affording them an opportunity of learning a trade which would give them plenty of employment.

On September 28, 1907, James A. Murray was united in marriage with Miss Christine Petersen at Milwau-kee, Wisconsin, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Petersen. Mrs. Petersen survives and makes her home at Windon, Nebraska, but her husband is deceased. During the later years of his life he was actively interested in agricultural matters in Nebraska. Mrs. Murray was graduated from the Gen. C. City Business College of Quincy, Illinois, and is a most charming and accomplished lady. Mr. and Mrs. Murray have no children.

James Albert Dossett, proprietor of the Dossett Lumber Yard, has made an enviable record as a business man and citizen at Paducah, and is properly recognized among the leading men of the county. Like a number of other representative men of McCracken County, Mr. Dossett traces his ancestry back through settlement in North Carolina to fine old English stock. His grandfather, Anderson Dossett, became one of the pioneer farmers of McCracken County, coming to the vicinity of Colliversville from North Carolina, and there his death occurred.

The birth of James Albert Dossett occurred in McCracken County on August 16, 1864. He is a son of T. J. Dossett, born in McCracken County in 1842, and died at Dallas, Texas, in 1915. He was reared... and married in McCracken County, and early in life became a merchant of Paducah, expanding his operations to include the handling of tobacco upon an extensive scale. After his retirement from active business life in 1897 he went to Dallas, Texas. In his political faith he was a democrat. The Primitive Baptists expressed his religious creed, he worshiped with them, and was a very strong churchman. During the last two years of the war he served in the Confederate Army, and was a hospital porter, and was honorably discharged in 1865, and his widow now draws a pension from the United States Government. She bore the maiden name of Elizabeth Sullivan, was born in Graves County, Kentucky, and she survives him, making her home at Paducah. Their children were as follows: James Albert, who was the eldest born; Thomas J., who is a carpenter and builder of Dallas, Texas; R. A., who owns and operates the leading hotel of Paducah, Kentucky; Walter, who is a carpenter and builder of Wichita Falls, Texas; Maggie, who resides at Paducah; Lucile, who married Oscar Johnson, a mill mechanic of Fort Worth, Texas; and Lloyd, who is identified with the American Express Company of Paducah, Kentucky.

James Albert Dossett pursued the regular courses in the rural schools of McCracken County, and following his graduation entered the lumber trade and developed into a carpenter and builder, which business absorbed his time until 1918. In that year he established his present lumber yard, which, with his office, are located at Twenty-fourth Street and Broadway. He also owns a modern residence at the corner of these two streets, which is the most modern and nicest bungalow in the city, and he did all of the work on it himself. Like his father, he is a democrat. The Missionary Baptist Church holds his membership, and he is now serving it as a deacon. For some time he has been an active member of the Paducah Board of Trade.

In December, 1888, Mr. Dossett was married at Lone Oak, Kentucky, to Miss Pharaby Rouse, a daughter of John B. and Polly Ann Rouse, both of whom are now deceased, but during their lives were prosperous farmers of McCracken County. Mr. and Mrs. Dossett became the parents of the following children: Ola, who married Marshall Bennett, a railroad mechanic, lives at Denver, Colorado; Ruth, who is at home; and Harold, who is also at home, attending the public schools of Paducah. The elder daughter was graduated from the Paducah High School.

Mr. Dossett is one of the sound business men and good citizens of Paducah. He has made a record for himself because of his upright manner of transacting his affairs, which have given him a well-deserved name for reliability. A number of the substantial buildings of the city and county stand as a memorial to his skill and integrity, and in handling lumber he is still connected with the building trade in one of its essential branches.

Robert Lee Black. In making a study of the forces which have combined for the advancement of men of business, professional and public prominence, it is discovered that a large proportion of those who are dependent upon for counsel, advice and leadership are men who have won their way to the forefront through the force of their own industry and application, rising gradually and fighting their way in the face of stern opposition. The traits of character upon which dependence may be placed for the greatest rewards are industry, integrity, self-reliance and perseverance, and to these may be attributed the success that has crowned the efforts of Robert Lee Black, county attorney of Mercer County. Mr. Black has been the architect of his own fortunes and occupies an enviable position in his profession and in public life, not alone on account of the success that he has achieved, but because of the honorable, straightforward methods he has used in gaining his various objects.

Mr. Black was born April 6, 1869, on a Mercer County farm, the sixth in a family of nine sons and eight daughters born to James T. and Catherine McMillin, black, natives of Kentucky. The parents, honest, industrious people, with a large family and a small income, were compelled to give their children anything more than the rudiments of an education. For the first three years that Robert L. Black attended school he went five months in the year, and by that time he was big enough to do his share in the fields and until he was seventeen years old was allowed only three weeks of attendance each term. At this time, having worked faithfully summers and winters to help support the family, he returned to his ambition for further education and began working out. He had no wealthy relatives to whom he could turn, and the only way in which he could secure means to attend school was through his own efforts. By applied economy and constant industry he was able to save sufficient money to go to school, and eventually secured a teacher's certificate. During the next twenty-five years he taught in various communities, conducted a small mercantile establishment and then went into ranching and sheep raising, at various times speculating in live stock and tobacco. Thus he not only bettered his financial condition, but became one of the esteemed citizens of his community and was eventually elected magistrate. At various times he had also applied himself to the study of law, and finally was admitted to practice. His early professional connection was of a modest character, but with the passing of the years it has grown and developed to a point where Mr. Black is counted one of the leading lawyers of Harrodsburg and Mercer County, his clientele being equal in size and importance to that of any justed in the county. He has successfully handled many difficult cases, both civil and criminal, and his business has carried him into the various courts in and about Central Kentucky as well as into the Federal courts, where his record cases have received wide attention because of precedents established. So successful has been his pleading that he has gained public confidence to an extent where it is a local saying among the citizens of the county: "If lawyer Black says it's so, you can bank it's a fact." Mr. Black has filled the office of county attorney of Mercer County for several years, and his administration of the duties of that position has been efficient, expeditious and universally satisfactory. His political life has been clean and his high standing in the community is the result of years of integrity, which have built a bulwark that his political opponents have failed to disturb. His career is one which exemplifies what is possible for a determined man to accomplish; no matter how discouraging his start in life, and furnishes an example well worthy of emulation by the youth of the community.

When twenty-one years of age, July 17, 1890, Mr. Black was united in marriage with Miss Maggie Bottoms, of Mercer County, and to this union there were born seven children: Grover Cleveland, born April 10, 1891, a high school graduate, who taught school and was a bank employee for several years, until suffering a nervous breakdown, from which he is now recuperating; Cora P., born December 16, 1893, a high school graduate, now teaching in the schools of Harrodsburg; Robert Roy, born July 11, 1896, a high school graduate, who taught school until the World War, when he enlisted in the United States Army as a private, saw service overseas, returned to this country and engaged in the armistice, with the rank of lieutenant, and is now a traveling salesman for the Harrodsburg Floral Company; James Gilbert, born August 4, 1898, who enlisted in the United States Navy during the World War, was mustered out after the armistice was signed.
and is now a student at the State University, as is also his wife, formerly Miss Ollie Foster, of Mercer County, a high school graduate, to whom he was married in 1919; William Harvey, born July 30, 1900, a high school graduate, who enlisted in the infantry of the United States Army for service in the World war; Maggie, born March 16, 1902, a graduate of the Harrodsburg High School, who is now attending the State University; and Jerome Everett, born July 31, 1908, who is attending school at Harrodsburg.

Orrville James Wiggins was a successful Kentucky business man, well known in Bourbon County, where his family are still living. He was born at Covington, Kentucky, and until his death was engaged in the fire insurance business.

He married at Paris Miss Laura Alexander, daughter of Charlton Alexander, the story of whose life is told on other pages. Mrs. Wiggins inherited from her father the 330-acre farm where she lives. He built the first home, and the farm is now devoted to the raising of thoroughbred horses, and is under the active management of her son, John S. Wiggins. Mrs. Wiggins has two children, John S. and Rachel, the latter the wife of W. O. Harber, a wholesale grocer of Richmond, Kentucky.

Otie Overstreet is a Paducah merchant of long and successful standing, for a quarter of a century was a factor in the grocery trade, but is now in the wholesale paper business in Western Kentucky.

Mr. Overstreet, who was christened Robert Overstreet through his friends and associates always know him as Otie, was born in McCracken County, Kentucky, September 22, 1874. His grandfather, James P. Overstreet, was born in Spencer County, Kentucky, in 1825, and this family is one that can justly claim at least a century of residence in the Blue Grass State. James P. Overstreet grew up and married in Spencer County, but spent the active life of a farmer. In 1869, he removed to McCracken County, and late in life retired from his farm and lived at Paducah until his death in 1896. John W. Overstreet, father of Otie, was born at Spencer in 1846, and had just about attained his majority when he came to McCracken County. For several years he was identified with father's business in the mercantile line at Paducah. For a number of years he followed his trade as a ship carpenter, and afterward was associated with his son Otie in the mercantile business. He died at Paducah in October, 1910. He was a democrat, an active member of the Baptist Church, and a man whose good citizenship and public spirit could be always counted upon in public affairs. In McCracken County he married Elizabeth Caldwell, who was born in this county in 1853 and is still living at Paducah. She is the mother of two sons, William P., and Otie. The former lives at Paducah and is pilot of the steamboat Paducah.

Otie Overstreet acquired his education in the public schools of Paducah, but at the age of fourteen began the practice of law at his own expense. For a time he was employed by the local street railway company, learned merchandising while clerking in stores, and in 1884 entered business for himself as a grocer and general merchant. He developed a large and prosperous business at Twelfth and Jefferson streets, and continued for a quarter of a century, until he sold the business in September 1910.

In October, 1910, Mr. Overstreet became one of the men prominent in the organization of the Paducah Paper Company, Inc., the only wholesale paper business in McCracken County and the largest in the western counties of the state. They ship goods over all the territory for eighty miles around Paducah. The offices and plant are at 123 North Second Street. C. E. Miller is president of the company, H. D. Peter, of Henderson, Kentucky, is vice president, while the secretary and treasurer is Otie Overstreet. Mr. Overstreet is also interested in a farm of 500 acres in Ballard County, Kentucky, where a flourishing business of general farming and stock raising is carried on. He is owner of considerable real estate in Paducah, including one of the attractive modern residences, seven rooms and a two-story brick house at 1100 Jefferson Street, where he and his family reside. Mr. Overstreet is a deacon of the First Presbyterian Church, and is a past grand of Ingleside Lodge No. 105, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is also a member of the Paducah Rotary Club.

In 1897, at Paducah, he married Miss Blanche Boswell, whose people were pioneers of Mayfield, Kentucky. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Boswell, her mother now deceased. Her father, a retired carpenter and builder at Paducah. Mr. and Mrs. Overstreet has had three children: Robert, who was a member of the Officers Training Camp at the University of Virginia when the armistice was signed, is now a traveling salesman for the Paducah Paper Company; Mary Elizabeth, the only living daughter, is the wife of Weldon G. Kibler, who has several years past been in business as the Kentucky Telephone Company at Paducah. The youngest child, Frances Mildred, died at the age of three years.

Edwin Thomas Proctor. In life insurance circles of Paducah a name that is becoming increasingly well known is that of Edwin Thomas Proctor. His connection with this line of work dates back only to 1918, but since that time his achievements have been of such a character as to demonstrate his capability in his chosen line of work, and prestige therein is given him by his occupancy of the position of district agent for nine counties of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Proctor was born at Leitchfield, Grayson County, Kentucky, March 11, 1891, a son of W. S. and Mary Catherine (Butler) Proctor. He belongs to a family which originated in England and came to America during Colonial days, settling first in Virginia and later migrating to Kentucky. William Proctor, his grandfather, was born in 1814 in Rockcastle County, Kentucky, and was a pioneer into Breckinridge County. There he carried on an agricultural business, and it was at this time that he moved to Grayson County, where his death occurred in 1855. He married a Miss Scott, and among their children was W. S. Proctor, who was born June 3, 1847, in Breckinridge County, Kentucky. He was reared and educated in Grayson County, and shortly after his marriage located at Leitchfield, where he has since been successfully engaged at the practice of law. He is a republican and a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Proctor married Miss Mary Catherine Butler, who was born June 22, 1852, in Grayson County, and four children were born to them: Henry Holmes, agent for the Illinois Central Railroad Company at Bardow, Ballard County, Kentucky; Mayme, the wife of Proctor Terry, identified with the Illinois Central Railway at Whaley, Mississippi; Edwin Thomas; and Lona T., an employee of the Goodyear Rubber Company of Akron, Ohio.

Edwin Thomas Proctor attended the public schools of Leitchfield, where he was graduated from high school with the class of 1900, following which he worked as deputy county clerk of Grayson County for one year. He then entered the University of Kentucky at Lexington, where he had a splendid record and was chosen as the representative of the university for competition for the Cecil Rhodes scholarship at Oxford University, England. He was one of the honor graduates of the class of 1914, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and during his college career was a member of the Delta Chi Greek letter college fraternity. Following his graduation he was appointed principal of the high school at Paris, Kentucky, a position which he filled from 1914 to 1918, and in January of the latter year went to Paducah as supervising agent of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company. In May, 1919, he was transferred to Paducah as district agent of the same company, his district comprising the nine counties included in the First Congressional District of Kentucky. His offices are at 811 City National Bank Building, and during the short period of his incumbency of the position he has made a very favorable impression on the business men of the district. Mr. Proctor’s home is at 1440 Broadway.

Politically he is identified with the republican party as a voter, but aside from the year spent as deputy county clerk he has not engaged actively in public life. He is a deacon in the First Christian Church. Fraternally he is affiliated with Plain City Lodge No. 449, A. F. and A. M.; Paducah Chapter No. 39, R. A. M.; Paducah Commandery No. 11; R. O. T. S.; Koa’s Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Louisville, Kentucky. He likewise holds membership in the Paducah Board of Trade, the Paducah Country Club and the Paducah Lions Club.

On July 26, 1916, Mr. Proctor was married at Louisville, Kentucky, to Miss Marie Louise Michot, daughter of Spalding E. and Adele (Ozanne) Michot, residents of Chicago. He entered for the Tribe of Ben Hur, fraternal insurance.

Mrs. Proctor, a young woman of unusual accomplishments and many graces, graduated from the Louisville Girls High School in 1912 and from the University of Kentucky in 1916, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. She was president of the Philanthropic Literary Society while at the University, and since coming to Paducah has become prominent and popular in club life and literary circles.

Jacob Nathaniel Bailey, M. D. A physician and surgeon of ripe powers and experience. Doctor Bailey practiced for a number of years in Fredonia, Kentucky, but soon after being released from his duties in the Medical Corps of the army located at Paducah, where he enjoys a special reputation as a competent surgeon.

Doctor Bailey is of an old Kentucky family, but was born at Elk Creek, Missouri, March 13, 1883. His paternal ancestors came originally from Scotland and were Colonial settlers in Virginia. His father, Joseph S. Bailey, was born at Tompkinsville, Kentucky, in 1852, and grew up in that Kentucky community, where he married. Later he moved to Elk Creek, Missouri, where he followed farming and also was ordained a minister of the Baptist church. He preached all over South Central Missouri, and about six months before his death moved to Kansas and died in that state in 1916. He was a republican in political affiliations. His wife was Helen Thompson, who was born near Tompkinsville, Kentucky, in 1853, and died at Elk Creek, Missouri, in 1889. Of their children the oldest is Henry T., who graduated from the Hospital College, and was licensed to practice medicine in Louisville with the class of 1902; subsequently took two courses in the Chicago Polyclinic and one in the New York Post-Graduate School of Medicine, paying special attention to diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, and for a number of years past has been a prominent physician at Phoenix, Arizona. The next two members of the family, William A. and Isaac, are farmers at Topeka, Kansas. Samuel W. is an electrician, being supervisor of a line in St. Louis; Jacob Nathaniel is the fifth in age, and Thomas W. is a farmer and fruit grower at Ordway, California.

Jacob N. Bailey acquired his early education in the public schools of Elk Creek, Missouri, graduated from high school at Houston, Texas County, Missouri, and then took up the profession of photography. For four years he conducted a studio at Louisville, Kentucky. He pursued a literary course for one term in Valparaiso University, Indiana, and in the fall of 1902 began his studies in the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville, receiving his degree Doctor of Medicine with the class of 1907. Doctor Bailey began his professional career at Fredonia, Caldwell County, and earned a distinctive success during the eleven years he practiced there. He still owns a farm and some valuable town property at Fredonia. In August, 1918, he entered the United States service as a first lieutenant in the Medical Corps, and was given his intensive training and a regular assignment of duty at Fort Riley, Kansas. He was mustered out November 20, 1918, and in the following January located at Paducah, where he handles a general practice, though paying special attention to surgery. He took post-graduate work in the Chicago Polyclinic in 1908, in 1912 attended the New York Post-Graduate School, and in 1911 attended Mayo Clinics, at Rochester, Minnesota. Doctor Bailey’s offices are in the City National Bank Building. He is a member of the McCracken County Medical Society being its present secretary, and also belongs to the State and American Medical Associations, the Southwestern Medical Association and Ohio Valley Medical Association. During his residence at Fredonia he served as chairman of the Board of Town Trustees and as chairman of the Board of Education. He entered for the Tribe of Ben Hur, fraternal insurance. No. 247, A. F. and A. M., Paducah Commandery No. 11, K. T., and Rizpah Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of Paducah Camp No. 11313, Modern Woodmen of America.

Doctor Bailey and family reside at 103 Fountain Avenue. He married at Nashville, Tennessee, November 11, 1908, Miss Pattie Talley, daughter of George W. and Katie (Dobson) Talley. Her parents are farmers near Fredonia, Kentucky. Mrs. Bailey was educated at Bethel College in Hopkinsville, Kentucky. To their marriage were born two children: Helen Catherine, who died January 16, 1920, at the age of nine years; and Joseph Henry, born October 10, 1911.

Allen Shuttleworth Edelen. burgin is a small Kentucky town, but has a productive enterprise that makes the name widely known throughout the United States. One of the most notable of these productive enterprises is the breeding and sales farm owned by Allen Shuttleworth Edelen. He started business as a renter, specialized from the first in high grade and pure blooded stock, and has built up a business by judicious advertising that is now national and even international in scope.

Mr. Edelen was born in Casey County, Kentucky, February 15, 1875, son of Leonard Graves and Mary (Tarkington) Edelen. His father was both a farmer and tanner. Allen was educated in Boyle County, and left Center College at Danville in his junior year and in 1895 rented the farm he now owns at Burgin. For several years he used all his capital for operating expenses in the purchase of pure blooded stock, but as his surplus means increased did he buy land until he now owns the original farm he rented and much adjacent land besides. Mr. Edelen as a pure blood stock raiser and dealer understood from the first that the local markets could not be depended upon to remunerate him for his enterprise. A number of years ago, therefore, he resorted to advertising in leading stock, farm and cotmmercial magazines in the South and then in other places to advertise his stock, which now has a world wide reputation. His business has been re-enforced by an integrity that has kept some of his first customers still on his active list, and a large volume of his business is practically on a mail order basis. He sends out shipments of individual and carloads of live stock throughout the United States and Canada and even to foreign countries. Recently he filled a contract for a shipment to South Africa. The business several years ago suffered the productive facilities on his own farm, and he was since continuously on the search for suitable stock of the highest bloodlines to supply the ever increasing demands of his customers. His business motto is "Live and help live," and it is observed in the most minute detail.

His stock farm exhibits nothing but the best blooded registered stock. His saddle horses have won honors in nearly every state in the Union at leading shows and fairs, including the Madison Square Garden show of New York. The most coveted trophy of the Kentucky State Fair was secured three years in succession by Belle o' the Ball, Fairy Queen, and Queen Quality, all chestnut mares, bred, trained and exhibited by Mr. Edelen. The raising of these three cup winners constitute a world's record of which Mr. Edelen is very proud. At the head of the saddle stock of Glenworth is Bohemian King, champion among saddle stallions and his get has aggregated in value almost a quarter of a million dollars. Equal in quality to the saddle horses are the registered Jersey cattle and Mammoth Duroc hogs at Glenworth, and every animal consigned for sale by Mr. Edelen is eagerly sought by buyers over the country.

October 20, 1865, Mr. Edelen married Miss Elizabeth New, of Harrodsburg, Breckenridge County, Kentucky. They have five children, Franklin Shuttleworth, Larue, Maxwell, Leonard Graves, Mary Tarkington and Margaret Beard Edelen.

The practical and commercial side of Mr. Edelen's enterprise has been briefly outlined. However, his home has historic and social associations that make it one of the thriftiest and most interesting homes in the County.

He bought this beautiful estate in 1903, after having lived on it as a renter for many years. It was the original home of Robert Mosby, who obtained the tract by grant from the governor of Virginia. It subsequently passed to his nephew, Colonel Robert Davis, father of Crittenden Davis, one of Kentucky's greatest home owners and breeders. The R. D. Davis house is a famous family of horses of that name. The stable in which Red Wilkes lived is preserved and is now the home of Bohemian King. The Edelen home stands on historic ground. The Old Wilderness Trail passes the door, and nearby was the site of the log cabin in which Andrew Jackson counted his bride and subsequently eloped with her to Tennessee. Mr. Edelen's residence, and his stately and carefully tended gardens, is an interesting study in its furnishings of carefully selected and valuable antiques. The doors of the home swing open today with the same hospitality as in former years. One who has the good fortune to visit this home might easily become lost in reminiscences of the historic past until suddenly shaken from his dreams by a vision through the windows of the veranda and modern conveniences of a picture farm with modern barns and yards, running water and blooded stock.

Otis E. Senour, M. D. Besides the duties increasing from year to year as a general practitioner of medicine and surgery, Dr. Senour has done much work directly affecting the vital welfare of the Union and Boone County, is the present county health officer and has employed his influence and professional knowledge in many ways to raise the standards of public health and sanitation in his section of the state.

Dr. Senour was born at Independence, Kenton County, Kentucky, December 15, 1880. His family has lived in Kenton County for considerably more than a century. His grandfather, Wilford Senour, was born in Kenton County in 1798, son of one of the earliest settlers there. His life was spent as a farmer in that county, and he died near Independence in 1864. His wife was Sarah Wayman, who was born near Independence in 1815, and died at the old homestead there in 1904. They were the parents of three children: Timothy, a farmer who died at Independence at the age of seventy-six; A. J. Senour; and Frances, who died young.

In 1860 he married Mary Margaret Marshall, who also spent her life at Independence. She was born in 1812 and died May 25, 1908. Their children were seven in number: Ida, wife of G. W. Culbertson, a farmer near Latonia; Henry, a traveling salesman, who died near Kansas City, Missouri, in 1915; Prudie, wife of Homer Oliver, a farmer at Piskburg, Kentucky; Rowena, late wife of Arthur Stephens, they owning and operating the old homestead farm at Independence; Orville, a resident of Wichita, Kansas, and state supervisor for the Singer Sewing Machine Company; Otis E., and Lida, wife of Dr. H. C. Keevey, a dentist at Erlanger, Kentucky.

Dr. Otis E. Senour graduated from the high school at Independence in 1896, and in 1901 entered the Hospital College of Medicine and Surgery at Columbus, Ohio, where he received his M. D. degree July 1, 1904. After graduating he practiced eleven months at Florence and since then his home has been at Union, where his work has been a general medical and surgical practice. He owns his residence and offices on Main Street, and has a farm of 165 acres, 2½ miles west of town, a ten acres, operating it in general crops and for dairying purposes.

Besides being county health officer of Boone County Dr. Senour is chairman of the Boone County Board of Health. For a number of years he has served as a school trustee at Union, is a member of the Boone County and Kentucky State Medical Societies and during the World war was medical member of the Boone County Draft Board and personally farm at Independence; orville, a resident of Wichita, Kansas, and state supervisor for the Singer Sewing Machine Company; Otis E., and Lida, wife of Dr. H. C. Keevey, a dentist at Erlanger, Kentucky.

Dr. Senour is a Republican is affiliated with Boone Union Lodge No. 304, F. and A. M., is a past grand master of Fowler Lodge No. 201, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

In the First Christian Church at Louisville June 30, 1915, Dr. Senour married Gladys E. House, daughter of George E. and Alice (Brown) House, residents of Union, where her father is owner and operator of a threshing machine and saw mill outfit.

Thomas Overton Meredith, M. D. Although the past seven or eight years with their momentous events of war and economic crises have done much to obliterate memories, professional men and citizens generally of Harrodsburg and Burgin recall with great affection the life, personality and career of the late Dr. Thomas Overton Meredith, for many years a successful physician and surgeon in these communities and particularly great as a kindly and skillful surgeon.

Doctor Meredith was born in Goochland County, Virginia, August 3, 1863, son of Dr. Joseph Shelton and Mary Ella Meredith. The son of a Virginia physician, he was reared and acquired his first educational advantages in the county schools of Louisa County, Virginia. He also attended private schools and studied medicine at Baltimore Medical College, where he completed the regular four years' work in two years and graduated with the honors of his class in 1887. He subsequently took post-graduate work with Mayo Brothers at Rochester, Minnesota, and his death occurred at Rochester in the Mayo Hospital, January 30, 1913, in his fiftieth year.

and later at Harrodsburg. He was railway surgeon at Burgin, and in the absence of hospital facilities performed a host of minor operations in his office and residence. Though his facilities and appliances were limited, his skill was such that the Lexington Hospital surgical and attendants who cared for his patients on their removal ventured to D. O. He was a diet. He did not develop any complications or serious after-results that could be traced to lack of care or skill in the first instance. He was, in fact, a surgeon of rare skill and performed a number of successful trepanning operations, but in spite of his generous abilities he was so modest that only a few professional friends knew the real extent of his talents.

Concerning his standing in the medical profession the following has been said: "Doctor Meredith had a wide and extensive practice during his professional career of over twenty-seven years, a large share of the most important cases coming under his care. His knowledge was well grounded in principles, his perception quick and his action prompt. His interest in the affairs of his profession was very keen. He was one of the early members of the Central Kentucky Medical Society, and presented numerous reports of cases and pathological specimens occurring in his practice and a number of papers of real merit. Many of these came from his hands, expressing his ideas with great accuracy in plain English. His ambition was to gratify those he served, and in the performance of his duties his sound sense and conservative views on all questions won for him the respect and esteem of his colleagues."

Doctor Meredith was railroad surgeon for the C. & O. & T. P. and Southern Railroads, while he lived in Burgin, and also in Harrodsburg, and read many papers before the American Railroad Surgeons. He was president of the St. Louis and Louisville Division of Southern Railroad Surgeons, was a member of the Kentucky Railroad Surgeons' Association, the Mercer County Medical Society, Central Kentucky Medical Association and its president, and a member of the Kentucky State Medical Association.

Doctor Meredith was also prominent in business, helping organize the Citizens Bank of Burgin, first known as the Farmers Bank, and was its president about thirteen years, until he resigned upon his removal to Harrodsburg. He was elected mayor of Burgin a number of times, and was deeply and sincerely interested in educational progress in his home town, particularly in the provision for good buildings and school facilities. He helped provide the town with a good water supply and was a factor in the promotion of public health movements. Doctor Meredith was a Knight Templar Mason, Knight of Pythias, member of the Maceabees and Woodmen of the World, and was an elder in the Presbyterian Church.

His first wife was Miss Mary Ella Rinehart, of Covington, Virginia. The four children of their marriage were Mary Ella, Lucille Virginia, Alide Elizabeth and William Rinehart. On March 12, 1900, Doctor Meredith married Mrs. Mary A. (Cook) Rice, daughter of G. W. and Catherine Cook, of Mercer County, and granddaughter of R. T. Cook, a very prominent Baptist minister in the early days of the state. Mrs. Meredith survives her honored husband and lives on Lexington Street in Harrodsburg. She is the mother of three children: Thomas Overton, born in Burgin June 3, 1901, a graduate of the local high school in 1920, now attending Westminster College at Fulton, Missouri; Joseph Shelton, born March 30, 1903, a member of the class of 1921 of the Harrodsburg High School; and Ann Overton, born September 10, 1904, also a member of the class of 1923, in the local high school.

E. O. Davis, secretary and general manager of the Paducah Hosiers Mills, is one of the men who occupies a very prominent place in the industrial life of the city, and with reference to his attitude on the labor question is looked up to as an authority in the solution of many and intricate problems which are constantly occurring in the conduct of large organizations. He comes of one of the old-established families of this country, representing a name having located in the colony of Virginia as English settlers long before the American Revolution.

E. O. Davis was born near Knoxville in Blount County, Tennessee, on February 10, 1882, a son of James A. Davis, who is now residing near Sweetwater, Tennessee. He was born in Severe Country, Tennessee, in 1837, and there he was reared, educated and married. For some years he was engaged in farming in his native county, but moved from there in 1879 to McMinn County, Tennessee, and there continued his and cattle interests until his retirement, all of his undertakings turning out successfully, so that he is today a man of considerable means. He is a republican and a Baptist, and is equally earnest and conscientious in his support of both party and church. During the war between the two sections of the country he served for four years as a member of the Union Army, and was in the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Murfreesboro and was severely wounded and captured in Alabama and sent to the Confederate prison at Coahoma, Alabama, but after five weeks was exchanged, and he completed his period of service. He married Mary Farmer, born in Blount County, Tennessee, in 1842, and she died at Sweetwater, Tennessee, in 1908. Their children were as follows: Hughy, who died at the age of nine months; John, who was killed by a falling tree when he was eighteen months old; Houston, who is a farmer, resides on the Tennessee River in Hamilton County, Tennessee; George, who is an instructor in the State Normal School at Murfreesboro, Tennessee; Elizabeth, who lives in Texas; Harriet Ellen, who married Abe Williams, a farmer of Clinton, Tennessee; Otha, who is operating the homestead in McMinn County, Tennessee; Adra, who married John Mitchell, a planter residing in the vicinity of Asheville, North Carolina; and E. O., who was the youngest in the family.

E. O. Davis attended the rural schools of McMinn County, and was graduated from the county high school in 1900. Following that he became a student of the U. S. Grant University at Athens, Tennessee, for a year, leaving it to enter the hosiery business in the Richmond Hosiers Mills at Chattanooga, Tennessee, where he partially learned its details during the fifteen months he was connected with that plant, and completed this practical education in the plant of the Alden Knitting Mills, which he entered in the fall of 1902, at which time he came to Paducah. In the beginning he was a third class machinist, but was promoted through all of the grades to superintendent, and remained there until 1908.

In the meantime he perfected the Wright Looping Machine, used in the manufacture of hosiery, and it is still being manufactured at Paducah today, although Mr. Davis has been only engaged in producing it from 1908 until 1913. In the spring of 1913 he established the Paducah Hosiers Mills in a loft over a grocery store, and under his supervising care this plant has expanded until the company now occupies its own building at Eighth and Jones streets, which is a thoroughly modern brick factory where employment is given to 200 hands. The company ships as far as New York City, Baltimore and other eastern cities, and the business shows a healthy and steady annual growth.

Mr. Davis is a republican. A Christian Scientist, he at one time was one of the directors of the church, but has retired from that office. For some time he has been a member of the Paducah Board of Trade, is secretary and treasurer of the West Kentucky Auto-
Robert Rankin Kirkland. Among the men of the country those who are moulders of thoughtful action and controllers of the finances are those who are connected with responsible positions with the great banking institutions. For through them come the power to dispose of large enterprises in both the commercial and industrial world. One of these men of moment of Paducah is Robert Rankin Kirkland, cashier of the City National Bank and a native son of the city, where he was born July 19, 1882.

The Kirkland family was founded in America by Alexander Kirkland, the great-grandfather of Robert Rankin Kirkland. He was born at Dungannon, County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1785, and died at Baltimore, Maryland, in 1854. He came to Baltimore, Maryland, to establish an importing house in the coffee and sugar trade, to which business his son, Robert Rankin Kirkland, succeeded. This house owned the controlling interest in twenty-seven sailing vessels. He was a man of parts, and aside from building up a very valuable business connection took an active part in constructive movements of his day, and among other things was connected with the establishment of Dickinson College at Carlisle, Pennsylvania. He married Agnes Quail, a native of Baltimore, Maryland, who died in that city.

The grandfather, Robert Rankin Kirkland, son of Alexander Kirkland, was born in Baltimore, Maryland, in 1829, and his entire life was spent there. He was a native of Baltimore, Maryland, who died in that city in May, 1854. The children born to Robert Rankin Kirkland and his wife were as follows: Agnes, who married Randolph Barton, a corporation lawyer of Baltimore; Bailey, who was a civil engineer in the city engineering department of Baltimore, died in that city in 1905; Mary, who died in her youth; and Alexander, who became the father of the Mr. Kirkland whose name heads this review.

Alexander Kirkland was born at Baltimore, Maryland, on April 15, 1854. He was educated in a private school and the naval academy at Annapolis, Maryland, to which he received his appointment through Congressman Charles A. Phelps as a midshipman from the Third Congressional District of Maryland. He was at the academy four years, and was graduated with the class of 1878. He was connected with the naval academy for a number of years, until the death of Admiral Dewey, on board the old Great Lakes, where he was quartered during his entire connection with the naval academy. After leaving the academy he spent two years at the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, Virginia, and while there was detailed as a guard of honor for the body of Gen. Robert E. Lee.

Returning to Baltimore after the conclusion of his studies, he entered his father's business house and was connected with it until 1872, when he removed to Burlington, Iowa, to take a position with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company. After two years in that city he was transferred to Springfield, Illinois, and for two years represented the freight lines of the Wabash and Erie Railroad. He then spent six months in New York City, where he returned to Iowa and became local agent for the Illinois Central Railroad at Dodgeville, Wisconsin, but severed those connections within a year and came to Paducah, Kentucky, settling permanently in this city.
in July, 1877, as general manager of the Paducah & Memphis Railroad, remaining with this road through five of its reorganizations. In 1885 he went to Memphis, Tennessee, as general agent for the same road, and remained there until December, 1886, when he was sent to Akron, Ohio, to take charge of the office of president and general manager of the Cleveland, Akron & Columbus Railroad, now a part of the Pennsylvania System, and discharged the onerous duties pertaining to that office. In 1888 he located at Paducah and organized the Paducah Transfer Company, but after fourteen months sold his interest in it to Robert H. Noble and established himself in a merchant brokerage business, in which he was engaged for six years, during that period representing Armour & Company and other large corporations. A man of such ability could not hope to escape civic responsibilities, and in 1903 when he was elected city auditor of Paducah he filled the office for fourteen years. In 1913 he organized his sales agency and is now handling office supplies and a high grade of specialties, with offices at 1017 City National Bank Building. Strongly democratic in his political proclivities, he received recognition in his appointment as a member of the Paducah Board of Drainage Commissioners by Judge James M. Lang in March, 1919, and is still on the board. For the past thirty years he has been secretary of the West End Improvement Company. In 1899 he built a comfortable modern residence at 1611 Broadway, where he still lives. An Episcopalian, he has done much for his parish and has been vestryman for many years. Alexander Kirkland is one of the forceful members of the Paducah Rotary Club, and is now secretary of the Drainage Board. During the late war he took a very active part in the Liberty Bond and War Savings campaigns, and it is safe to say that there have been few men more influential in the sentiment of the city, county, state or nation in which he has not borne his part.

In 1881 Alexander Kirkland married Miss Sophie Rankin, who died in 1885, at Paducah, Kentucky, leaving three children: Alexander Kirkland married Miss Sophie Rankin, who died in 1885, at Paducah, Kentucky, leaving three children: Eleanor Rankin, who married Dr. Clarence Milam, a dental surgeon of Paducah; Robert Rankin, who was second in order of birth; and Sophie, who lives at home. In 1889 Mr. Kirkland married Miss Nannie Rabbs, of Paducah, a daughter of C. F. Rabbs, a prominent member of the Rabbs family, and of whom we shall hear in another connection. For some years Mr. Rabbs was connected with the wholesale grocery house of Noble Overby & Company. The second Mrs. Kirkland was fatally burned on February 28, 1919, and died on October 1 of that year. By his second marriage Mr. Kirkland had two children: Elizabeth Rabbs, who is at home; and Rabbs Noble, who is local treasurer and manager of the office of the Stone-Webster Company at Lowell, Massachusetts, and is also connected with the Lowell Light & Power Company. He has one child, Alexander Kirkland V, who was born at Paducah in March, 1914.

The maternal grandfather of Robert Rankin Kirkland, Bayley Keys, established the first wholesale grocery business in Cincinnati, and owned the first brick house in that city. He was born at Baltimore, Maryland, and he and his bride made their wedding trip on horseback from Baltimore to Cincinnati, she having been before her marriage Priscilla Taylor of Baltimore. After a residence of twenty years at Cincinnati they returned to Baltimore, and he continued in business in the latter city as a wholesale grocer for some years more, both he and his wife passing away in that city. The records of these ancestors of Robert R. Kirkland show that he has back of him men of the utmost probity, unusual capability and efficiency, so that it is no small wonder he has been able to measure up well according to high standards in his own life.

Growing up in his native city, in a home of refinement and culture, Robert R. Kirkland attended its schools, and at one time thought of a college course, but business life had the stronger appeal for him and so he sought and found congenial employment, entering the American-German National Bank as a messenger when he was sixteen years old. Reliable and faithful, he was promoted through successive positions to his present very responsible one of cashier. In 1910 the American-German National Bank was consolidated with the City National Bank, in which Mr. Kirkland was a bookkeeper. Later he was made assistant cashier, and in 1918 became its cashier. Since his boyhood days he has been a strong democrat, and he, too, is a member of the Grace Episcopal Church, in which his father is so active. For the past ten years he has been treasurer of Paducah Lodge No. 217, B. P. O. E. He has other interests in the city, owning stock in the Kozy Theatre Company, of which he is vice president, and in other interests. Mr. Kirkland resides at 1611 Broadway. He is unmarried. He has steadily adhered to one line of business, learning in detail. Never satisfied with performing the duties of the position he happened to be occupying, he made it a practice to learn those of the one ahead of him, and when an opening occurred he was ready for it. He has a clear and comprehensive knowledge of the banking business in all of its ramifications, his judgment of men and their motives is sound, and his acquaintance is a wide one. There is a fact in every person who has closely fitted in with his work, and gives to it the special interest which can only arise from practical experience and natural ability.

FRANKLIN PIERCE TOOF. A prominent and prosperous business man of Paducah, Franklin Pierce Toof, secretary and agent of the Cohankus Manufacturing Company, is officially identified with one of the foremost industries of McCracken County, and in the fulfillment of his duties devotes his best energies toward anything that might advance the interests of the firm to escape his attention. A son of Hermon Toof, he was born April 2, 1857, in Salisbury, Litchfield County, Connecticut, being a direct descendant of one of two brothers who immigrated from Holland to America in Colonial times, locating in New York State.

A native of New York, Hermon Toof was born in Rensselaer County, near Troy, in 1828, and there spent the earlier years of his life. Leaving the trade of a scythe manufacturer, he followed it first in Salisbury, Connecticut, and later in Forestdale, Rhode Island, where he remained from 1867 until 1876, when, there being but small demand for scythes in that locality, he transferred his business and residence to Saint Catherines, Province of Ontario, Canada, where he remained eleven years. Coming from there to the States in 1887, he settled in Rockford, Tennessee, near his home, Franklin, of which he was a native, and there he lived until his death in 1906. He was a democrat in politics, but not an office seeker.

Hermon Toof married in Salisbury, Connecticut, Elizabeth Ann Benjamin, who was born August 15, 1834, in Dutchess County, New York, and died at Catskill, New York, February 17, 1910. They were the parents of five children, as follows: Charles, who died in Providence, Rhode Island, at the early age of twenty-seven years; Mary, who married Dr. Perry H. Andrews; and four others, all of whom live in Connecticut. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Toof are: Franklin P., of Cohankus, Frank, of Cohankus, and Robert P., of Cohankus. Mary, who married Frederick D., a resident of Cohankus, and is superintendent of the Cohankus Manufacturing Company.

Mr. Toof attended school in Cohankus, Rhode Island, when but twenty-four years old, and his education occurred in Forestdale, Rhode Island, at the age of thirteen years.

Receiving his early education in Salisbury, Connecticut, Franklin Pierce Toof left school when but fourteen years old to begin work in the cotton mills at Forestdale, Rhode Island, remaining there until 1874, and the following year being similarly employed at Woonsocket, Rhode Island. Removing in 1875 to Nash-
Toof had under his supervision 186 employees busily engaged in the manufacture of cotton cordage, it being the largest mill of the kind in the United States making this particular line of goods, and its products are used for the johngn trade into sixty countries, states, and provinces of our Union and also into Canada. The company likewise has a departmental mill at the corner of Eighth and Findley streets, and in that plant manufactures mops and braided sash cords. A man of good financial ability, he has acquired considerable property, including among other things his modernly built residence at 1736 North Twelfth Street.

Mr. Toof is a democrat in politics, and a valued member of the First Presbyterian Church. He is a member of the Paducah Board of Trade, of which he was president for eighteen months, and of the Rotary Club, which he served as president for a year. He is also on the council for the Boy Scouts, an organization in which he takes great interest. During the World war he took a prominent part in all the McCracken County drives, and served as a member of the Kentucky State Council of Defense for his district. For the past two years he has been president of the McCracken County Chapter of the American Red Cross, and during the war was one of the "Four-Minute" speakers. He helped in all of the Liberty Loan drives in an official capacity, giving generously of his time and money toward all war activities.

Mr. Toof married, in 1880, in Nashville, Tennessee, Mary Isabelle White, who was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, and into their household four children have been born, namely: Edward L., of Paducah, is sales agent for the Cohankus Manufacturing Company; Catherine E., who married Meredith N. Stiles, of New York City, now resides in Buenos Ayres, Argentina, where her husband, South American representative of the Associated Press, has his headquarters; Hermon Andrews, of Paducah; and Frederick O., of Tulsa, Oklahoma, is there engaged in oil developments.

Hermon Andrews Toof was born in Memphis, Tennessee, October 15, 1867, and was educated in Paducah, attending public and private schools. Beginning his active career at the age of eighteen years, he spent a year as bookkeeper for the Southern Medicine Company, and another as a similar position with the Foreman Electric Company, in St. Louis. The next twenty years kept books for the Daniel Boone Coal Company at Daniel Boone, Kentucky. Going then to Chicago, Illinois, he was chief clerk in the mechanical engineering department of the Pullman Company for a year. Returning to Paducah in 1913, he has since served as bookkeeper for the Cohankus Manufacturing Company, and is likewise engaged in the brokerage business in partnership with his brother Edward L. Toof, under the firm name of Toof & Toof. These enterprising brothers have established an extensive and profitable business in Paducah, and for four years were members of the Chicago Board of Trade, with which they are connected by a private wire, being the only brokers in McCracken County with such a wire.

Hermon A. Toof married, in 1906, in Paducah, Miss Frances Soule, a graduate of the Paducah High School, and they have two children, Mary Elizabeth, born in 1917, and Hope, born in 1910. Mr. Toof himself is, likewise, a staunch supporter of the principles of the democratic party. Fraternally he belongs to Paducah Lodge No. 217, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He resides at 809 Jefferson Street, and there he and his wife take pleasure in entertaining their many friends.

Judge Frank Allen, of Allanville, was a widely known and prominent citizen of Clark County, and for eight years, until his death, performed the duties of the office of county judge with singular fidelity and efficiency.

Judge Allan, who died in 1882, at the age of sixty-two, was a son of Lewis and Sophia Allan. He married Elizabeth Haggard, a daughter of Pleasant Haggard. Frank Allan located at Allanville, which then contained a grocery store and postoffice, and became an extensive farmer in that locality. He remained there until elected to the office of county judge, when he removed to Winchester, and had filled that office for eight years before his death. His widow then returned to the old farm at Allanville, and remained at the old home until her death two years later.

There were seven children in the family of Judge Frank Allan and wife: James, a merchant at Allanville, who died at the age of fifty years; Pleasant, who was a farmer and died at the age of seventy; Sophia, who died in Allanville at the age of twenty-three, the wife of Sam Dethridge; Mollie, who became the wife of Woody Ecton and was the mother of Mrs. Audrey Haggard; John, a resident of Winchester; Betty, who died young, after her marriage to Allen Hampton; and Sidney, who practiced medicine at the old home at Allanville and died in middle life.

Mollie Allan, who was married at the age of twenty-one, secured a portion of the old Allan farm where Woody Ecton spent his active life. Woody Ecton died at Winchester June 22, 1905. They had three children: Frank Allan Ecton, living near Allanville; Effie Ward, who died in childhood; and Sudie, Mrs. Audrey Haggard.

Audley Haggard, in Clark County members of the Haggard family have been prominent in agriculture and other affairs for several generations. The home of Audley Haggard seven miles south of Winchester, stands on the highest elevation in the county, with a wide range of view, the lights of the City of Richmond, county seat of Madison County, being within vision at night. This farm was once owned by David Haggard, grandfather of Frank Haggard, the attorney.

Henry Rider Haggard, the distinguished English novelist (who "claims kin" with the Haggards of Clark County) is authority for the statement that the Haggard family are descended from Andrew Ogard of Denmark, who settled in County Norfolk, England, in the year 1432. According to the biographies of Henry VII. They have made no effort to trace the connection the Haggards of Clark County are certainly descended from this Sir Andrew Ogard, whose name was anglicized into Haggard.

So far as is known the first Haggard to come to America was James Haggard, who had been educated for the Episcopal ministry in England, and came to Norfolk, Virginia, in 1698, being then not yet twenty-one years old. He taught school in Norfolk for years and eventually married one of his pupils, whose name has not descended. They had four sons, Nathaniel, Edward, Zachary and George. It is only with Nathaniel that this sketch has to do.

Nathaniel Haggard was born November 21, 1723, and married Elizabeth Gentry. They settled in Albemarle County, Virginia, and in 1788 they went to Kentucky, settling three miles south of where Winchester now stands and where George W. Haggard now lives, in the same house, which is undoubtedly the oldest building of any kind in the county. Nathaniel Haggard died August 21, 1820, at the ripe age of ninety-seven years. He raised a family of seven sons and three daughters. All of his children were born in Virginia, and some of them never settled in Clark County. Those of them who did were: (1) John Haggard, born in 1754, married Mary Shepherd. They settled about eight miles south of Winchester, and raised four sons and four daughters—Pleasant, who married a Miss Watts; Martin, who married Sally Hampton; John, who married Rhoda Quisenbery, daughter of Rev. James Quisenbery; David T., who married Patsey Adams; Polly, who married Minerva Winn; Elizabeth, who married Joel Quisenbery, son of Rev. James Quisenbery; Sally, who married Jessie Hampton; and Nancy, who married David Reed. David T. Haggard was the father of Judge Augustine L. Haggard and grandfather of Judge Rodney Haggard. (2) Rev. James Haggard (Baptist minister), born about 1759, married Betsy Gentry, in 1790, settled in Clark County, but in 1816 removed to Christian County, Kentucky. (3) Bartlett Haggard, born in 1763, married Martha Dawson, and in 1788 they settled in Clark County, Kentucky. They had two sons, Martin, who married Elizabeth Dan and Allen Dawson, who married Frances Haggard, daughter of Pleasant Haggard. (4) David Haggard, born in 1764, married Nancy Dawson, and in 1792 they settled in Clark County, Kentucky, but in 1823 they removed to Trigg County, Kentucky, and in 1836 to Bloomington, Illinois. Their daughter, Martha Haggard, was born in Clark County in 1795, and married John Routt, of the same county, and they went to Illinois. Their son, John L. Routt, was several times governor of Colorado. Bartlett and David Haggard were twins and married sisters. (5) Nathaniel Haggard great-grandfather of Audley Haggard, born in 1705, married Elizabeth Hayes, and they settled in Clark County in 1784. They had four more in and three daughters, as follows: Martin, William, John, David, Polly (who married Spencer Holloway), Nancy (who married James Johnson) and Eliza (who married Dennis Doyle).

This family were all Baptists and most of them were members of Providence Church at "the old stone meeting house." At one time there were three David Haggards in Clark County, all first cousins. One of them was David, the grandfather of Audley Haggard. He was born July 28, 1812, and died December 14, 1880. His home was three miles southwest of Winchester, at the present Jeff Tevis farm, and he spent his last days there and was buried at Smithfield. His wife was Temperance Hodgkin, born December 28, 1811, and died April 28, 1883. Of David and Temperance Haggard the children were: James P., who died in Shelby County; Samuel, of Arkansas; Charles P., of Winchester; Mildred, a twin sister of Charles P. Haggard. They have more in and three daughters, as follows: Martin, William, John, David, Polly (who married Spencer Holloway), Nancy (who married James Hanson) and Eliza (who married Dennis Doyle).

January 10, 1866. The old home of Enoch Elkin is now owned by Joe Carroll of the Boonesboro Pike. A branch of the Elkins was Brother Elkin, who died at Louisville. His wife Ann P. Quisenbury, was born April 24, 1814, and died January 8, 1878. They were married February 17, 1831. The Elkins were one of the very wealthy families of the county, and Enoch Elkin was a prominent dealer in mules for many years. Edith Elkin died four years after her marriage, leaving two sons, Audley and Morris. The latter is a farmer and merchant at Terre Haute, Kentucky. Both these sons were reared by their stepmother, who was one of the very best of women and a real mother to them.

Charles P. Haggard soon after his marriage moved to Monroe County, Missouri, where his wife died. He then returned and became a partner of Sam P. Hodgkin. About 1902 he bought the farm now owned by his son Audley. This farm had been given by another David Haggard to his daughter Frankie, who married Nathan Lipscomb. Mrs. Lipscomb's daughter, Nannie May Lipscomb, became the second wife of Charles P. Haggard. At the death of Mrs. Lipscomb the farm was sold to Charles P. Haggard, his wife having an interest in it. After three years of residence on the farm Charles P. Haggard moved to Winchester, where his wife died the same year. At that time Charles bought out the grocery business of the late C. M. Morris at Winchester, and is still one of the active merchants of that city.

Audley Haggard's chief farm comprises a splendid property in the Blue Grass section, and he also owns a half interest in the adjoining farm.

On November 14, 1900, Audley Haggard married Sadie Etow, a daughter of Woody and Molly (Allan) Etow. The children of Audley Haggard and wife are: Mark Allan, Marion Elkin and Audley, Jr. Mr. Haggard is an active member and a deacon of the Mount Olive Baptist Church.

Daniel Lawson Moore was one of the eminent Kentuckians of the past generation, an able business executive, a generous and public spirited citizen and one whose many interests brought diversity and pleasure to himself and contributed to the welfare and progress of his native state and of many of the others of them.

Mr. Moore, who died at his beautiful home in Harrodsburg, October 20, 1916, was born in Mercer County, January 31, 1847. His parents were Dr. James Harrison and Mary (Messenger) Moore, his mother being a native of Massachusetts. Doctor Moore, who was born near Danville, Kentucky, October 13, 1810, traced his ancestry through his mother to John J. Lawson, Lord of Fowlesgrave in the first year of the reign of King Henry Ill of England. One of his descendants, Roland Lawson, settled in Virginia in 1637, Sarah, granddaughter of Roland, was married to William Moore, son of Thomas Moore, gentleman, a native of England. The Moore family is descended from Sir Thomas Moore, who was high chancellor for King Henry VIII. The grandson of William Moore and Sarah Lawson was Lawson M., who married Elizabeth Rochester, daughter of John Rochester of Westmoreland County, Virginia.

James Harrison Moore was educated in Center College at Danville, graduated in 1841 from the medical department of Transylvania University, and practiced for five years in Mississippi, where he married Mrs. Mary Sabrina (Messenger) Foster. Her parents, Daniel and Mary (Bacon) Messenger, had moved to Mississippi from Berkshire County, Massachusetts. After returning to Kentucky from Mississippi, Doctor Moore practiced at Harrodsburg, but soon became associated with his brother in business, and in 1851 bought... the Major Hoard farm near Harrodsburg and became widely known for his success in the breeding and raising of thoroughbred horses and Durham cattle. He was the first to import Morgan and Messenger horses into Kentucky. For most years he was president of the Mercer County Agricultural Society, and was a large producer of cotton on his plantation in Mississippi. He helped organize the Mercer National Bank and was its presidet. He was first a whig and later a democrat, and he and his wife were members of the Southern Presbyterian Church. They had two sons, Daniel L. and Bacon Rochester Moore.

Daniel Lindsay Moore was educated under private tutors in Center College at Danville, and studied law under Col. Philip B. Thompson. While admitted to the bar, he used his legal knowledge altogether in handling his extensive business affairs.

For many years Mr. Moore was engaged in the distilling business, having founded the D. L. Moore Distillery near Burgin in 1873. Later, upon the death of his father-in-law, Judge William H. McBrayer, he was appointed administrator of the McBrayer estate and as lessee operated the famous Cedar Brook distillery in Anderson County, continuing active in the management until the general consolidation of leading Kentucky distilleries. Mr. Moore was the largest individual stockholder, and from 1892 until 1909 served as president of the Mercer National Bank. While he was a business man rather than a practical farmer, he handled his agricultural duties with a high degree of profit. He owned several thousand acres of valuable cotton plantations in Mississippi, three of them being named Eggremont, Baconia and The Mounds. At The Mounds he had a splendid winter home. He also was owner of several thousand acres of timber lands in Mississippi and supplied much of the capital and enterprise for the lumber operations. He bought in 1881 a great tract of 6000 acres in North Park, Colorado, and introduced some of the finest cattle and horses, making it a center of improved livestock in the far West and doing much to raise the standards of the livestock business.

The late Mr. Moore was a man of cultivated intellect and likewise a man of action. He was a true nature lover, enjoyed hunting, made many excursions to the wild game regions of the Rocky Mountains, and his home still contains trophies of his skill. But it was not altogether the big game that attracted him to the wilds. He enjoyed and appreciated the spiritual uplift of the mountain solitudes, from which he carried away a vision of goodness and greatness associated with the eternal works of nature. He was regular in his worship as member of the Harrodsburg Presbyterian Church, and he and his father gave to that church a fine pipe organ as a memorial to his mother.

Mr. Moore was a stanch democrat and in 1881 was elected from the Twentieth District to the State Senate. His public spirit found evidence in the fact that though a distiller, he introduced and championed the bill levying a special tax on Kentucky whiskey for school purposes, and this bill was enacted largely through his personal efforts. He was a stanch democrat.

On November 15, 1870, Mr. Moore married Miss Henrietta McBrayer, only daughter of Judge William H. McBrayer, founder of the famous Cedar Brook distillery. Mrs. Moore died in 1882, the mother of three children: Mary Messinger, wife of Percy Whilden, now living at Greenville, North Carolina; Wallace, wife of Morris Bartlett, of Lexington; and McBrayer Moore, who married Margaret Rhett of Danville.

June 30, 1891, Mr. Moore married Miss Minnie Ball at her home at Versailles, Kentucky, the marriage ceremony being pronounced by Rev. Wallace Tharp. Mrs. Moore is the daughter of Dudley Mitchum and Joanna (Chissman) Ball, and is descended from the same family as the mother of George Washington. Her father was a native of Kentucky and her grandfather came from Virginia and settled in Woodford County in pioneer days, acquiring a land grant of many thousands of acres. It was after his marriage to Miss Ball that Mr. Moore moved to the home on Lexington Pike, near Harrodsburg, where three years later he erected the beautiful home at a cost of $50,000, regarded as one of the finest residences in the state. Mrs. Moore and her children still retain extensive interests in Kentucky, the Colorado ranch and Mississippi holdings. Mrs. Moore since the death of her husband has given convincing evidence of the possession of unusual business talents, and has handled her extensive affairs with admirable judgment and efficiency. Much of her time is taken up with the exacting duties imposed by the ownership and operation of the Mississippi cotton plantations, the timber lands, the stock ranch in Colorado, and her fine Kentucky farm, where she grows Burley tobacco and fine livestock. In her beautiful home she has maintained the highest standards of old Kentucky hospitality. Mrs. Moore has two daughters: Anita Mitchum Moore, born March 10, 1893, who was educated in the Semple Collegiate Institute at Louisville and is the wife of Thomas Henry Coleman, the third, of the well known Coleman family of Kentucky. Mr. Coleman is a farmer and stock man on the Lexington Pike in Mercer County. Mr. and Mrs. Coleman have one daughter, Joanna Ball Coleman, born April 21, 1910, and named for her grandmother.

Mr. Moore is Minnie Ball Moore, born October 21, 1897. She was educated in the Semple Collegiate Institute at Louisville, the Mary Baldwin School in Virginia, is a graduate of the Colonial School at Washington, and is an accomplished pianist and artist and in every way splendidly equipped for the social sphere in which she moves. She was married June 30, 1921, to Doctor Goddard, a practicing physician at Harrodsburg, Kentucky.

LEWIS D. MASSEY, superintendent and manager for Western Kentucky of the Inter-Southern Life Insurance Company, is one of the very successful operators in insurance fields today, and a man who is recognized as one of the leading citizens of Paducah. He was born at Atchison, Kansas, May 1, 1880, a son of Alexander Massey. The Massey family originated in England and was founded in the United States by the paternal grandfather, who became a farmer of Kansas and died in that state.

Alexander Massey was born at Oscalooa, Kansas, in 1816, and died there in 1885. For some years he was a railroad man and made his home at Atchison. All of his mature years he was a democrat. His wife was before his marriage Miss Elizabeth Letter. She was born in Tennessee in 1856, and survives him, making her home at Cookeville, Tennessee. Their children were as follows: Lewis D., who was the first born; Amanda, who resides in Tennessee; Eliza, who married Morris Robinson and lives at Cookeville, Tennessee, where he is engaged in business as a merchant; Mina, who married a farmer, lives at Cookeville, Tennessee; and Charles, who resides at the age of seventy years in Kentucky.

After attending the graded and high schools of Cookeville, Tennessee, Lewis D. Massey graduated from the latter in 1869, and then for the subsequent three years was a clerk in a grocery store at Monterey, Tennessee. From then on until 1903 he was employed in a barrel factory at Monterey, in that year going to Mound City, Illinois, as foreman for the Carl Meyers Stave Company. In 1904 he organized for the Illinois Central Railroad Company as a car repairman, and was promoted to be a carpenter.

It was in 1909 that he formed connections which has given him a genial occupation and permitted him to expand and develop his natural abilities, for it was then that he became an agent of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company at Cairo, Illinois, and began his prosperous career in the insurance field. So successful was he that he was promoted to assistant superintendent of the Cairo office, and in 1912 was sent to Mayfield, Kentucky, as manager of the office of the Metropolitan Company at that point. After several years there Mr. Massey transferred, in March, 1915, to Paducah, Kentucky, as deputy superintendent of the Metropolitan Company. The record he had made with that company was so remarkable that it attracted the attention of other insurance companies, and several very flattering offers were made to him, and in July, 1915, he accepted that of the Inter-Southern Life Insurance Company as its agent at Paducah. In January, 1916, his zeal was rewarded by his promotion to assistant superintendent. During this period he was made superintendent in January, 1918, to which were later added the duties of manager for Western Kentucky, and he is discharging the duties pertaining to these positions at present. His offices are located at 801-802 City National Bank Building.

In 1905 Mr. Massey married at Monterey, Tennessee, Miss Hattie C. Wilson, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wilson, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Wilson was Mr. Massey's brother. Mr. and Mrs. Massey became the parents of the following children: Lillian, who was born in 1907; Mildred, who was born in 1909; and Ruby, who was born in 1911.

In his politics Mr. Massey is a democrat, but he has never asked for any favors from his party or the public. Quite active in church work, he belongs on the membership rolls of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his first wife was a member, and also becomes Paducah Lodge No. 217, B. P. O. E.; Mangum Lodge No. 21, I. O. O. F., of which he is a past grand, and to the Ictic Club. He owns a modern residence at 526 Harahan Boulevard. In his business Mr. Massey is animated by high motives, and his efforts to educate the public with reference to the duty of each individual to buy a sufficient amount of insurance are producing tangible and practical results. He is a man with liberal views on public matters, and believes it the duty of each citizen to exert himself to further movements which have for their object the advancement of humanity and the raising of civic standards.

John King Ferguson. Handling the affairs of large corporations with deft and efficient capability, there are a number of men at Paducah who are just as much the makers of history as anybody sitting in legislative assemblies or commanding armies of fighting men. The prosperity, even the very life of a country, depend upon the successful and equitable conduct of its large enterprises. Without production there can be no progress; without a proper medium through which the manufactured goods can reach the public it is difficult to make a fair living. The industry around Paducah, therefore, both the manufacturer and merchant are dependent, the one on the other, just as both are on the producer of the raw materials, the skilled workmen, and all on the purchasing public. The theory that every man can live to himself alone belongs to the age of the cave dweller. No one can afford to disregard his dependence upon others any more than he has the right to forget his need of them, and his services. These facts are the fundamentals of all industry and commerce.

One of these highly efficient men who is taking an active part in adding to the city's prestige as a business center of this part of the state is John King Ferguson, president of the Ferguson Hardwood Company, who was born in Allen County, Indiana, April 4, 1870. His grandfather, John Ferguson, was born in Scotland and died in the province of Quebec, Canada, when his grandson was still a child, and he, himself, had reached the age of eighty-eight years. While a lad he had become a sailor, and it was while on one of his voyages that he touched at Canada, and being attracted by the opportunity he saw there of acquiring land at a low figure, left the sea, bought land and spent the remainder of his life, far into old age, as a farmer. After locating in Quebec he was married, and one of his sons, John King Ferguson, became the father of John King Ferguson.

John Ferguson was born in the province of Quebec, Canada, in 1834, and died at Fort Wayne, Indiana, in 1917. His father was a practical man and taught him to be useful from boyhood, so that when he came to the United States and settled in Allen County, Indiana, in young manhood he had little difficulty in getting established, and soon was profitably engaged in a lumber business. In 1887 he moved to Fort Wayne, Indiana, which continued to be his home until he was claimed by death. A man of strong convictions, he identified himself with the republican party, and always had the courage to stand by his principles. He was equally fervent in his religious life, and for years was one of the leading members of the Asbury Baptist Church of Fort Wayne. Both the Masons and Odd Fellows had in him an enthusiastic member. John Ferguson was married to Eliza King, born in the province of Quebec in 1837, and her useful life terminated at Fort Wayne, Indiana, in 1917. They had the following children born to them: Cora M., who married J. R. Pattison, a realtor of Olympia, Washington, died in that city in 1893, but her husband survived; Mary Ferguson, who married Earl Palmer, a lumber dealer of Memphis, Tennessee; Lida K., who lives at Fort Wayne, Indiana; John King, whose name heads this review; and Minnie E., who married R. S. Robertson, a lumber dealer of Paducah.

After completing the courses in the Fort Wayne public schools including that of the high school, from which he was graduated in 1880, John King Ferguson began the practice of his avocation, and for six months was in the employ of the Natural Gas Company at Fort Wayne, and then went into the lumber business with his father and brother-in-law, Earl Palmer, and maintained this connection until 1898. In October of that year he brought his family to Paducah, and he and Earl Palmer and R. S. Robertson embarked in the manufacture of hardwood lumber. They built their present plant on Third and Elizabeth streets, and the business was incorporated as the Ferguson Hardwood Company, with J. K. Ferguson as president, J. D. Mocquot as secretary, and S. Mall as treasurer. The plant was rebuilt and enlarged, and is now the biggest of its kind in Western Kentucky. The company manufactures hardwood, specializing in long timber for ship and boat building, and ships its products all over the United States and into foreign countries. Employment is given in the plant to fifty persons, and the same number is employed in the logging regions.

Mr. Ferguson is a man of independent views and prefers to pick his own candidates and not follow blindly any party leaders. He belongs to the First Presbyterian Church of Paducah, in which he is an elder. Well known in Masonry he is a member of Plain City Lodge No. 440, A. F. and A. M.; Paducah Chapter No. 30, R. A. M.; Paducah Commandery No. 11, K. T.; Lodgeville Consistory; and Rizpah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. of Madisonville, Kentucky. The Board of Trade and the Country Club hold his membership and afford him opportunities for business and social associations with congenial companions. He owns a modern residence at 230 Fountain Avenue, where the surroundings and furnishings create a comfortable home atmosphere.

In 1894, Mr. Ferguson was married at Fort Wayne, Indiana, to Miss Lorenah Stahl, a daughter of John and Sarah (Hilegass) Stahl, the former of whom, now deceased, was at one time one of the leading attorneys of Fort Wayne. His widow, who survives him, makes her home at Denver, Colorado. Mrs. Ferguson was graduated from the Fort Wayne High School, and is a charming lady. Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson have five children. The eldest, John S., is a veteran of the great war, having served in the United States Navy with the rank of ensign, and was on a destroyer a portion of the period of his service. When he was sent overseas he was first at Brest, France, from whence he went to Budapest and Vienna, operating in connection with the Peace Conference. After his honorable discharge from the navy, he returned home and is now attending the Massachusetts Institute of Technology at Boston, Massachusetts, in which he is specializing in chemical engineering. The second child in the family is Bertha E., and after she was graduated from Rosemary Hall, Greensboro, Connecticut, she became a student at Bryn Mawr College, Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania. She is now the wife of James G. Wheeler, an attorney of Paducah, Kentucky, to whom she was married on April 8, 1920. The other three children of Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson are; Earl P., who is attending a military academy at Denver, Colorado; Robert R., who is attending Phillips Academy at Andover, Massachusetts; and Oliver Drayton, who is also at Phillips Academy.

Both as a manufacturer and citizen Mr. Ferguson stands very high in public esteem. The impetus given the shipping industry through the loss of tonnage during the late war has of course increased the demand for his product, but he and his company have been equal to all emergencies, and have watched the growth of the industry. While he has never cared to come before the public for political preferment, doubtless if he desired to do so the outcome would be gratifying, for he has wide acquaintance and is personally very popular. Mrs. Ferguson and the children also have many friends in the city and county, and in several communities in which they have lived, and the presence of an Ferguson among the popular young married people of Paducah. The prosperity which has come to Mr. Ferguson has not been attained through any spectacular operations, but is simply the logical outcome of shrewd, careful and sound business methods, all of which have commended him to the best element, and he and his company are recognized as valuable adjuncts to Paducah and the surrounding country.

Robert Lee Tate. A well known and highly respected citizen of Paducah, Robert Lee Tate, a manufacturer of brooms, is identified with one of the important industries of McCracken County, where he has built up a substantial and constantly increasing business, the products of his factory having an extended and highly favorable reputation for usefulness and durability. A son of the late J. M. Tate, he was born December 3, 1862, in Union County, Kentucky, of Scotch lineage, the immigrant ancestor of the Tate family having come from Scotland to America, settling in Colonial days in Virginia.

J. M. Tate. John M. Tate was born in 1821 in Oldham County and died in Caseyville, Union County, in 1893. Reared and educated in Oldham County, he removed to Union County in early manhood, and having established there the pioneer saddlery and harness shop continued in business until his death. He was a democrat in politics, and served one or more terms as police judge. A valued member of the Christian Church, he was a deacon and one of its most active supporters. Fraternally he belonged to the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

J. M. Tate married for his first wife Anna Bohannon, who spent her entire life in Kentucky, dying in Caseyville and leaving two children, Catherine, who died, unmarried, in Madisonville, Kentucky, aged seventy years; and C. B., a retired traveling man, now living in Madisonville. He married for his second wife Martha Anderson, who was born in Oldham County, Kentucky, and died in Union County, this state, in 1906. She was a daughter of George and Matilda (Hall) Anderson, both of whom were born in Oldham County, Kentucky, and died in Union County. The birth of her father, a farmer by occupation, occurred in 1850, and his death in 1890. Her children were born of their union, as follows: Benjamin, who died in Caseyville, Kentucky, at the early age of twenty-one years; Robert Lee, of whom we write; Georgia, wife of Ruby Holt, a former Undertaker at Sturgis, Union County, this state, where he is now engaged in farming; Emma, who died in Paducah at the age of thirty-five years, was wife of the late Augustus Bailey, a dry goods clerk, whose death also occurred in Paducah; and Charles, a broom manufacturer, engaged in business with his brother, Robert, in Paducah.

Receiving his early knowledge of books in the rural schools of Union County, Robert Lee Tate began work in a broom factory at Caseyville when fifteen years old, and learned the secret of broom making in all of its details. Coming to Paducah in 1878, he purchased a broom factory three years, and then returned to Caseyville, where he operated a factory of his own for five years. Preferring the business outlook in Paducah, Mr. Tate came back to this city in 1880, and having established his present factory at the corner of Fourteenth and Madison streets has since built up a large and thriving business. He manufactures brooms of all kinds, and is able to supply them in large quantities to the jobbers throughout Western Kentucky. Successful in his work, he has acquired property of value, owning not only his residence, at 1419 Jefferson Street, and his factory buildings, but considerable real estate within the city limits.

Mr. Tate married in Paducah, in 1885, Miss Lucille Tindall, a daughter of Charles and Elizabeth Tindall, of Union County, Kentucky. Her father, an attorney-at-law, practised successfully for many years in Trenton, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Tate have one child, Robert, born February 15, 1886. He graduated from the High School in Paducah, and later continued his studies at the Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tennessee. In 1918, he enlisted and was in service in Europe for a year, afterwards being promoted to lieutenant in the Machine Gun Corps. After receiving his discharge from the army he located in Detroit, Michigan, where he is an advertising writer. Politically Mr. Tate is a democrat, and fraternally he belongs to the Order of the Golden Fleece.

Albert Morgan Rouse. Richly endowed for the educational work with which he is so prominently identified, being a man of far-reaching thought, vigorous will and splendid ability, Albert Morgan Rouse has gained a fine reputation throughout Western Kentucky as manager of the Draughon Business College of Paducah, which is one of a chain of about forty Draughon business institutions scattered throughout the Southern United States. Mr. Rouse was born June 16, 1865, in McCracken County, Kentucky, of English ancestry, the founder of that branch of the Rouse family to which he belongs having emigrated from England to America, settling in North Carolina.

His father, John B. Rouse, was born in North Carolina in 1810, and there served an apprenticeship at the ship carpenter's trade. Coming to Kentucky about 1840, in pioneer days, he bought land, and was thereafter successfully engaged in general farming in McCracken County until his death in 1880. He was a democrat in politics, and belonged to the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He was twice married. He married first, Elizabeth Scott, who was born in North Carolina and died on the home farm in Mc-Cracken County, Kentucky, leaving six children, as follows: John, engaged in farming in New Mexico; Rebecca, deceased; Robert, deceased; Martha, living in Oklahoma, is the widow of Jack Griffin, a farmer; Margaret, deceased; and William, engaged in agricultural pursuits in Texas. John B. Rouse married for his second wife Mary Dossett, who was a life-long resident of McCracken County, her birth occurring in 1829 and her death in 1894. Eight children were born of their union, namely: T. B., a Baptist clergyman, has charge of a church at Rector, Arkansas; George E., of Paducah, is serving as deputy sheriff; Julia married James Ross, a farmer in Calloway County, and both have passed to the life beyond; V. D., an artist, resides in McCracken County; Albert M., with whom this sketch is chiefly concerned; Pharybe, wife of J. A. Dossett, who is engaged in the lumber business at Paducah; J. M., of Paducah, is a road conductor; and Linn, a farmer by occupation, died in McCracken County at the early age of thirty-six years.

After leaving the rural schools of McCracken County, Albert M. Rouse attended the State University of Kentucky, at Lexington, two years, and was subsequently engaged in teaching in McCracken and Graves counties until 1894. Being then elected superintendent of the county schools of McCracken County, he served in that capacity until 1898, being very successful. From 1900 until 1905 he was principal of the ward school of Paducah, and since that time has held his present re- spective positions first as manager of the Draughon Business College at Paducah, which was established in 1904. Under the able supervision of Mr. Rouse this institution has developed into one of the leading business colleges in Western Kentucky, its students coming from all parts of Kentucky and from Western Tennessee, Illinois, Southern Missouri, and from other near-by states. The school, which is in a flourishing condition, occupies the entire second floor of the Oehlschlaeger Building at the corner of Sixth Street and Broadway, an especially convenient location.

Mr. Rouse married in Mercer County, Kentucky, in December, 1894, Miss Ada Bonta, who was graduated from the Bell Seminary at Danville, Kentucky. Her parents, William and Elizabeth (Sallee) Bonta who resided on a farm in Mercer County, are both deceased. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Rouse, John B. Rouse, Jr., was graduated from the Paducah High School, and is now living at home, being employed as a traveling salesman. Politically Mr. Rouse is a sound democrat, and religiously is a member of the Baptist Church, in which he is serving as a deacon. He belongs to the Paducah Board of Trade, and is a member of Paducah Camp No. 1131, Modern Woodmen of America. Ever interested in educational matters, he served for two years on the Paducah Board of Education. He resides at 1218 Trimble Street, and there his friends and acquaintances find the latch string ever out.

EDGAR T. WASHBURN. Well qualified for his chosen profession not only by his high mental attainments but by his native talent and temperament. Edgar T. Washburn, of Paducah, holds a place of prominence among the more able, skilled and successful members of the Kentucky bar, having an extensive and constantly increasing patronage. He was born June 17, 1866, at Whitewater, Wisconsin, where the birth of his father, the late Edgar T. Washburn, Sr., occurred in 1858. His paternal grandfather, William Washburn, whose emigrant ancestor settled in New York State on coming to this country from England, was born and died in Manhattan, New York City.

After his marriage he moved to Whitewater, Wisconsin, where he spent his remaining years. He was an architect of considerable note, much of his business being done in Chicago. His wife, whose maiden name was Lucy Sweet, was born in Manlius, New York, and died in White- water, Wisconsin.

Brought up and married in Whitewater, Wisconsin, Edgar T. Washburn, Sr., was for several years superintendent of the Esterly Harvesting Company. Moving to Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in 1892, he served for four years as president of the Washburn Lumber Company, which he founded. Coming from there to Kentucky in 1896, he became manager of the Wiscon- sin Chair Company at Wickliffe, Ballard County, where he remained until 1902, when he established the Washburn Mill and Shingle Company at Newport, Arkansas, where his death occurred in 1903. Politically he was a republican in national affairs, but in local and state matters cast his vote with the democrats. He was a member of a Protestant church, and belonged to the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

The maiden name of the wife of Edgar T. Wash- burn, Sr., was Eva Jane Campbell. She was born in 1855 in Whitewater, Wisconsin, and now resides at 2025 Madison Street, Paducah. Five children were born of their marriage, as follows: Burton A., a well known physician and surgeon of Paducah, served in the World war as first lieutenant in a medical corps; William R., twin brother of Burton A., of Fort Douglas, Utah, served in the Medical Corps throughout the World war, and is now a major in the Regular United States Army; Cora E., wife of J. F. Nichols, a prominent attorney of Louisville, Kentucky, is the subject of this brief sketch; and Etta Carl, wife of S. E. Mitchell, of Paducah, owner of the Mitchell Machine & Electric Company.

Having received the equivalent of a high school education in the public and Barrett private schools at Wickliffe, Kentucky, Edgar T. Washburn attended the Baptist College at Bladensburg, Kentucky, two years after which he completed a business course in the Central Business College at Paducah, specializing in bookkeeping and expert accounting. The year following he took a preparatory course under private tuti- sion, and spent the ensuing two years in the law office of Honorable John M. Nichols at Bardwell, Kentucky. Being admitted to the bar in February, 1899, Mr. Washburn has since been successfully engaged in the practice of his profession in Paducah, his offices being at 123 1/2 South Fourth Street. Possessing a comprehensive knowledge of law, his success in the handling of civil and criminal cases has been the inevitable result of his wise application of the natural and acquired forces with which he is so abundantly blessed to the legal work in which he is so thoroughly interested.

In September, 1917, Mr. Washburn entered the United States service, and as a member of the infantry received his training at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, where he remained until October, 1917, when he was honorably discharged. In June, 1918, he re-enlisted and was sent to Camp Taylor, Kentucky, as a member of the Brigade Personnel. Being subsequently assigned to the Camp Officers' Training School at Camp Gordon, Georgia, he was there bayonet instructor until mustered out of service December 23, 1918, when he returned to Paducah and resumed his legal work. Mr. Wash- burn is an active member of the McCracken County Bar Association and of the State Bar Association. Politically he is affiliated with the democratic party, and fraternally he belongs to Mangum Lodge No. 21. He is not married.

WILLIAM ARTHUR MIDDLETON, former county attor- ney of McCracken County, has achieved success in his profession. As a lawyer, though he had to pay for his own education, and both before and after his admission to the bar was engaged in school work.

Mr. Middleton was born in Ballard County, Ken-
Henry R. Middleton, father of the Paducah lawyer, was born in Perry County, Tennessee, in 1842, was twelve years of age when his parents moved to Paducah, and he grew up on the old farm in Ballard County. In 1865, he moved to another farm in Graves County, Kentucky, and about 1870 established the mercantile business which he built up to such proportions before his death, which occurred in 1917. He was the only child of the Baptist and later of the Methodist Church, and gave much of his time to church causes and work. Politically he was a Republican. He married Mary Womble, who was born in Weakly County, Tennessee, in 1843, and died in Graves County, Kentucky, in 1878, after having been the mother of four children; R. B., who succeeded his father and has continued the mercantile business in Graves County; Oliver, who died in infancy; William A.; and Samuel A., who died at the age of four years.

William Arthur Middleton spent his boyhood and youth on his father's farm in Graves County. As a farm hand and school teacher, the more he learned, the more he saw the need to supplement his early advantages and gained a liberal education in the West Kentucky College at Mayfield and in the Southern Normal University at Huntington, Kentucky, where he was graduated in the literary course in 1902. He also took a partial law course there. Returning to Graves County in 1903, he continued teaching, and in 1914 removed to McCracken County, where for four years he was principal of the Lone Oak village schools and for two terms principal of the Arcadia graded schools near Paducah. Mr. Middleton began practice as a lawyer at Paducah in 1909, and after 1911 devoted all his time to his profession. By appointment from Judge R. T. Lightfoot he served as county superintendent of schools in 1914 and later as county superintendent of McCracken County from 1914 to 1918. He is now a partner in the well known firm of Alexander & Middleton, with offices in the City National Bank Building. Mr. Middleton is a democrat, a steward in the Broadway Methodist Episcopal Church and teacher of its Business Men's Bible Class. He is affiliated with Plain City Lodge No. 449, A. F., and A. M.; Paducah Lodge No. 197, Odd Fellows; and Ingleside Lodge No. 195, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is a member of the County and State Bar Associations.

The Middleton home, a modern residence, is at 421 Fountain Avenue. Mr. Middleton married at Paducah in 1901 Miss Nora Hunt, daughter of the late Warren and Mary (Holt) Hunt. Her father was a McCracken county farmer, and Mr. Middleton married the daughter of Henry Warren, born April 15, 1862, a graduate of the Paducah High School and now employed as a bookkeeper in the Citizens Savings Bank.

Judge James Goble, for forty years ranked as one of the leading lawyers of Eastern Kentucky, though the modesty of his kindly and generous character will outlast his name as a lawyer.

He was born on Big Sandy, six miles above Prestonsburg, in Floyd County, April 22, 1846, and died April 15, 1915, shortly before his sixty-ninth birthday. His parents were William and Martha (Harris) Goble. His maternal grandmother was a member of the Kentucky Clay family. William Goble was a boy when the family moved from Washington County, Virginia, to Kentucky in 1825. His father, Jacob Goble, was of German ancestry. William Goble was a Confederate soldier for a year in the Fifth Kentucky Regiment, under Col. J. S. Williams. He died in 1883, at the age of sixty-two.

James Goble was one of a family of six sons and five daughters. His parents were in modest circumstances, and as one of a large family he had to create his own opportunities for an education. He was only fifteen when the war broke out, and on September 18, 1861, enlisted in the Tenth Kentucky Infantry. After the disbandment of that regiment he joined the Tenth Kentucky, and was with that command until the final surrender. He was in the battle of Cynthiana, was with General Morgan when that great cavalryman was killed, and remained in service until 1865. In order to get his higher education he worked in the timber and at other occupations, spending a portion of his earnings for his books and borrowing others. He studied at night by the light of a fireplace, taught school, read law, was admitted to the bar in 1874, and in a few years had so well established his reputation as a lawyer that he was interested in a practice that took him before all the courts of the Valley, including the Federal courts and the Court of Appeals. He was known as the poor man's friend, handling many cases without fees, and often paying his own expenses, so that he never amassed wealth. He was a democrat in politics, having little concern for public office, was a member of the Masonic Order, and with his wife was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Sedney Johnston Snook. Occupying a place of note among the foremost citizens of Paducah, Sidney Johnston Snook began his business career while yet in his "teens," and his success has been constant and assured, for it has come as the result of unting energy, diligent labor, excellent ability, and sound judgment.

A son of the late V. B. Snook, he was born March 8, 1879, in Franklin County, Kentucky, where his grandfather Snook, a native of Harpers Ferry, Virginia, settled as a farmer in pioneer days. His immigrant ancestor on the paternal side was born in England, where the family name was "Sevenoke," and they came to this country in Colonial days, locating in Virginia, where many of their descendants continued to live.

Born in 1879, on the home farm in Franklin County, Kentucky, V. B. Snook was there brought up and educated. Soon after his marriage he moved to Shelby County, this state, and having bought a tract of land near Eminence was there actively engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death in 1894. He was an uncompromising democrat in politics, and a valued member of the Baptist Church, in which he was a deacon. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah J. Duncan, was born in Franklin County, Kentucky, in 1842, and died on the home farm in 1898. Seven children were born of their union, as follows: Florence, who lived but seven years; Walker B., a farmer, died at LaGrange, Kentucky, in 1918; Winford B., a Shelby County farmer, married in 1844; Fannie B. Herr, and died at the Burnett House, Cincinnati, of pneumonia.
poisoning while celebrating his nuptials at a wedding feast, eight of the seventy guests present dying from the same cause; Sidney Johnston, the special subject of this brief sketch; Jennie, wife of W. H. Roland, a real estate broker, residing at Crescent Hill, Louisville, Kentucky; F. M., engaged in farming at LaGrange, Kentucky; and Duncan, engaged in farming in Arkansas.

Acquiring his preliminary education in the rural schools of Shelby County, Sidney Johnston Snook attended a private school at Eminence and the State University of Kentucky, at Lexington. Leaving the latter institution at the age of nineteen years, he was employed in the bank at Eminence for a time, while there becoming familiar with banking methods. Going then to Port Royal, Kentucky, Mr. Snook organized the Citizens Bank, of which he was cashier for three years. Disposing of his interests in that bank, he removed to Kuttawa, Lyon County, this state, and having there organized the Citizens Bank served as its cashier from 1894 until 1901.

Entering the service of the Government in January, 1901, Mr. Snook was chief deputy surveyor of customs for three years. Moving to Southern South in 1905, he was for two years engaged in the banking business at Jackson, Mississippi, and was also in the insurance business there for a year. Returning to Kentucky in September, 1908, he located in Paducah, and, with offices at 907-8 City National Bank Building, has since built up an extensive and substantial business as a representative of the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company of Philadelphia, his territory covering the whole of Western Kentucky and Southern Illinois.

A stalwart adherent of the republican party, Mr. Snook has been active in county and state conventions, and is now republican election commissioner for McCracken County, and is also serving on the staff of Governor Edwin P. Morrow, with the rank of colonel. He belongs to both the Paducah Country Club and to the Paducah Board of Trade. Religiously he is a worthy member of the First Baptist Church, and a liberal contributor towards its support. On Colonial Heights, just outside the city limits, Mr. Snook has a most attractive home, his residence being modernly constructed and surrounded by large and well-kept grounds, the general appearance of the place being indicative of the enterprise, thrift and hospitality of its occupants.

On March 20, 1895, at Louisville, Kentucky, Mr. Snook was united in marriage with Miss Sudie Stone, daughter of Captain W. J. and Cornelia (Woodyard) Stone, Captain Stone, who served as captain of a company in the Confederate Army, was for ten years a congressman from the First Congressional District, and is now commissioner of Confederate pensions. He resides in Frankfort, although he formerly lived in Lyon County, where the birth of Mrs. Snook occurred. "Sun" and has acquired far more than a local reputation as a writer of short stories; Sara, also living with her parents, was graduated from the Paducah High School, and is now assistant librarian of the Carnegie Public Library at Paducah; Suzanne, a junior in the Paducah High School; and William S., a school boy.

James C. Utterback. For thirty-two years James C. Utterback has had one central thought and purpose and one object of his best efforts and enthusiasm—the City National Bank of Paducah. This bank was incorporated a year after his birth, and he entered its service as a messenger and is now its president. The City National Bank of Paducah now ranks as the largest financial institution in Kentucky west of Louisville, having capital and surplus of $450,000, and its total resources in May, 1920, approximated nearly $4,000,000. It has five branch offices and over $3,000,000 in deposits. The principal officers are: James C. Utterback, president; H. C. Overbey, vice president; C. E. Richardson, vice president; Henry A. Petter, vice president; and R. C. Kirkland, cashier.

James C. Utterback was born near Paducah in McCracken County, November 7, 1872. During Colonial times three Utterback brothers immigrated from Germany and settled in Pennsylvania. Mr. Utterback family tradition is credited with having been the first to manufacture pig iron in the colonies. Robert C. Utterback, father of the Paducah banker, was born at Murray, Calloway County, Kentucky, in 1830, and about the time he reached his majority moved to Paducah, where for several years he owned and operated a steamboat on the Tennessee and Ohio rivers. Subsequently he developed a large and profitable mercantile business at Paducah, and was engaged in it until his death in 1906. He was a long a prominent figure in the democratic party, served as county assessor several terms and was deputy sheriff in charge of the finances of the sheriff's office. He was a life-long member and an active official of the First Christian Church at Paducah. His first wife was Mrs. McKnight, of Illinois, who left two children; W. H. Utterback, in the advertising business at Paducah; and Laura, wife of Richard Bell, a McCracken County farmer. Robert C. Utterback married for his second wife Miss Mollie Gibson, of McCracken County. Her only child, Rose, is the wife of E. E. Taenzer, a humberman formerly of Memphis, Tennessee, now of Los Angeles, California. The third wife of Robert Utterback was Miss Mary Eden, who was born at Mayfield, Graves County, Kentucky, in 1846 and died at Paducah in 1907. Her only child was James C.

James C. Utterback acquired a high school education and finished his training in a high class private school conducted for a number of years by Mrs. Ella Pell. In July, 1888, before he was sixteen years of age, he went on the payroll of the City National Bank as messenger boy and clerk. There has been no important part of the bank's business during the past thirty years with which he has not been identified, and his work and ability gained him the successive promotions until he became president in January, 1917. The City National Bank, established in 1873, is the second oldest bank of McCracken County. Mr. Utterback was honored with the office of president of the Kentucky State Bankers Association in 1906, and is also a member of the American Bankers Association and is a Class A director representing Group 2 of the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis.

As a banker he has also been a man of liberal influence and enterprise. For many years he had an active part in Paducah's public utilities, serving as president of the Paducah Gas Company, as secretary and manager of the Paducah Heating Company, and as secretary and treasurer of the Paducah Railway Company. He occupied these offices when these utilities were owned by the Snook & Webster syndicate and reorganized as the Paducah Light & Power Company, in which he continued as director until January 1, 1920. He is secretary and treasurer of the Palmer Hotel Company, owning the Palmer Hotel and also the Kentucky Theater at Paducah. He has been a director and interested in several organizations that have developed real estate in and around Paducah. Individually he owns much real estate property in the city and suburbs.

For the past twenty years Mr. Utterback has served as treasurer of McCracken County, and has also been a member of the City School Board. He is prominent in the affairs of the democratic party, having served on many committees and as delegate to several state and county conventions. During the World war he was chairman of the First Kentucky District and the first and second Liberty Loan campaigns, and a member of other war committees, being treasurer and on the executive committee of the Red Cross. He also acted as chief for the American Protective League, a volunteer organization cooperating with the Federal Department of Justice. He is a member and deacon of the First Christian Church of Paducah. Mr. Utterback for many years has been active in the Board of Trade. Mr. Utterback was born in Paducah, in 1865, and still resides in Paducah, owner of the largest bridge over the Ohio River and was completed in 1917. The Utterback family home is a beautiful one, situated on attractive grounds of fifteen acres just west of the city limits. Mr. Utterback married at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, November 7, 1894, Miss Lena Yancey, daughter of J. W. and Amanda (Renshaw) Yancey, who still live at Hopkinsville. Her father is a retired merchant and hotel proprietor. To Mr. and Mrs. Utterback were born five children: Mary Ruth, who died in 1903; the two younger girls, and their brother, in the City National Bank of Paducah, married Miss Cletus Schuh, of Cairo, Illinois, and has a son, Jim Palmer, Jr., born October 3, 1919; James Caldwell, who died at the age of four years; Lena Violette, born March 18, 1902, is a student in Monticello Seminary, one of the finest girls' finishing schools in the Middle West, at Godfrey, Illinois; and James Wells, who was born April 20, 1912.

J. K. Bondurant married Mary Jane Brewer, who was born in Marshall County, Kentucky, in 1844, and to them two children have been born, as follows: Joe S., with whom this sketch is chiefly concerned; and Ida May, wife of C. E. Jennings, one of the leading cotton brokers of Paducah.

Acquiring a practical education in the public schools of Paducah, Joe S. Bondurant was engaged in the wholesale grocery business as one of his father's employees until 1905, when he was admitted to partnership. Of recent years he has dealt exclusively in flour, selling at wholesale, and has built up an exceedingly extensive and profitable business, his plant and offices being located on Second Street. He resides in the Jefferson Apartments on Jefferson Street, his home being pleasant and attractive.

Mr. Bondurant is a republican in politics and a member of the First Christian Church. Fraternally he belongs to Plain City Lodge No. 449, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; to Paducah Chapter No. 30, Royal Arch Masons; and to Inglisde Lodge No. 105, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is a past grand.

Mr. Bondurant married in 1887, at Paducah, Nannie Clark, a daughter of Capt. W. C. and Viola (Jones) Clark. Captain Clark served as an officer in the Confederate Army during the Civil war. He was postmaster two terms at Paducah, serving under President Cleveland. As a member of the House of Representatives, he served the second term in the State Legislature. He has passed to the life beyond, and his widow resides in Paducah. Mrs. Bondurant was educated in Paducah, having completed the course in study in the graded schools and the high school. Three children have blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Bondurant, namely: Mary, a graduate of the Paducah High School, is engaged in the tobacco business at Paducah; Clark A. and Robert T. Clark A. Bondurant, the older son, now a newspaper reporter and writer in Jacksonville, Florida, entered the United States service in 1917 and after being trained at Camp West Point, Kentucky, was transferred to Camp Merritt. Just as he was ready to go overseas with his command he was taken ill and sent to Hoffman Island Hospital, where he remained until mustered out of service in February, 1919. Robert T. Bondurant, a graduate of the Paducah High School, volunteered his services in the World war, and after training at camps Taylor and West Point, Kentucky, was sent overseas with the Three Hundred and Twenty-seventh Field Artillery Band in August, 1918, and was stationed at Bordeaux, France, until mustered out in March, 1919. A young man of sterling ability and worth, he is now successfully engaged in business with his father.

Gus E. Hank. The business partnership of Hank Brothers, hardware merchants, has been in existence at Paducah for about a quarter of a century, and their trade connections, both wholesale and retail, now reach out all over Western Kentucky and to the adjoining states of Illinois and Missouri. Both partners are prominent business men of Paducah and also well known in civic and social circles.

Gus E. Hank was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, April 30, 1864. However, the family residence at that time was in Paducah. On account of Paducah being in the border war zone the mother of Mr. Hank lived temporarily at Cincinnati at the time her son was born. The father, C. E. Hank, was born in Germany in 1814, and came to the United States and located at Paducah at the age of eighteen. He had learned the trade of shoe-maker, and he followed his trade at Paducah for a long period of years. He died an honored and respected citizen in 1917. He was a republican in politics. His wife bore the maiden name of Pauline Hatfer. She was born in Paducah in 1845 and died in that city in 1890. Gus E. was the eldest of her children. The second is Harry R., the junior member of Hank Brothers. His individual career is described elsewhere. The third of the family is Alice A., who died in Paducah at the age of thirty, wife of Dr. J. D. Bacon, a druggist at Seventh and Jackson streets in Paducah. William A., who was a druggist at Seventh and Clay streets in Paducah, died at Phoenix, Arizona, at the age of twenty-eight. May E. is unmarried and keeps house for her brother Harry. Oscar is manager for the Kentucky Leaf Transit Company at Paducah. Walter, the youngest, is a representative of the Depot News Agency at Hamilton, Ohio.

Gus E. Hank was educated in the public schools and business college of Paducah and at the age of sixteen entered the store of George O. Hart & Son, hardware merchants. In that business he served what amounted to a practical apprenticeship and acquired a detailed knowledge of the hardware trade. He was with the firm until 1888, when with his brother Harry and with T. T. Jones the present business was established as Hank Brothers & Jones. With the death of Mr. Jones in September, 1901, his interest was absorbed by the other partners, and since then the firm has been Hank Brothers. They are retailers and wholesalers and jobbers for an extensive line of staple hardware and specialties, and have built up one of the leading concerns of its kind in Western Kentucky. Their store is at 1327 Broadway, where the partners own the modern building and also have a large warehouse at 120 South Third Street.

Gus Hank is also president of the Mechanics Building and Loan Association and a director in the Ohio Valley Trust Company. He is an elder and active member of the Presbyterian Church and a republican in politics. His modern home is at Sixteenth and Trimble streets. In October, 1899, at Paducah, he married Miss Maggie Porteous, daughter of John and Alice A. M. Porteous. The marriage was widely known at the time, for he was for many years superintendent of the Oak Grove Seminary at Paducah. Her mother is living at Paducah at the age of eighty-six. Mrs. Hank is a graduate of St. Mary's Academy at Paducah. Gus E., Jr., the older son of Mr. and Mrs. Hank and now associated with his father in business, enlisted May 12, 1916, and for 2½ years was in the service of the Government until mustered out in September, 1919. He was overseas in France with the 304th Infantry. He entered the army as a private and was promoted to captain. In May, 1920, he married Miss Katherine Kolb. Captain Hank is affiliated with Plain City Lodge No. 449, A. F. and A. M. Paducah Chapter No. 127, R. A. M., Paducah Commandery No. 21, K. T., and Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Louisville.

The second child of Mr. and Mrs. Hank is Pauline, who graduated from the Kentucky State University at Lexington with the A. B. degree and is the wife of Thomas Robinson, a coal mining engineer and manager of the Benedict Coal Corporation, with home at St. Charles, Virginia. The third of the children is Barbara Nell, in her first year at the Kentucky State University at Lexington. Harry C., the youngest of the family, is a sophomore in the Paducah High School.

Harry R. Hank, junior member of Hank Brothers, was born at Paducah, was educated in his native city, attending a local business college, and also learned the business of the druggist business of George H. Hart & Son. He spent sixteen years with that firm and then resigned to become associated with his brother in a business of their own. For two terms, four years, he served as a alderman of Paducah. He is a director of the Paducah Board of Trade, of the Mechanics Trust & Savings Bank, and a director in the Retail Merchants Association. He is a republican, a past noble grand of Magnum Lodge No. 21, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, a member of Paducah Lodge No. 217 of the Elks, and in Masonry is affiliated with Plain City Lodge No. 449, A. F. and A. M., is a past high priest of Paducah Chapter No. 127, R. A. M., a past commandant of Paducah Commandery No. 21, K. T., and is affiliated with the Scottish Rite Consistory at Louisville and also with Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the same city.

Judge James M. Lang, county judge of McCracken County, has been a factor in the business life of Paducah for upwards of forty years, but is most widely known through the influential position he has occupied in the democratic party in Western Kentucky. Long before he was individually a candidate for any important office he contributed to the success of his party in different campaigns. From 1896 to 1918, inclusive, he served as chairman of the Democratic County Campaign Committee in every successive election.

His grandfather Lang was a native of Scotland and on coming to America settled in Virginia. W. C. Lang, father of Judge Lang, was born at Manchester, Virginia, came to Paducah in 1856, and was for many years a tobacco manufacturer. He died at Paducah. He was a loyal democrat and a member of the Methodist Church. W. C. Lang married Martha Muse, who was born in Virginia. Her father, Meredith Muse, was a native of France, and after coming to this country developed a large plantation and became a wealthy resident in the James River country of Virginia.

James M. Lang was born at Paducah July 15, 1857, was educated in private schools, and at the age of sixteen began an apprenticeship at the drug trade. He was a registered druggist at the age of twenty-one, and from that time has followed his profession. He is a half owner in the drug store of Lang Brothers at Paducah, being senior member of the firm. He also owns a 160-acre farm on the Cairo Road four miles northeast of Paducah. This farm is a source of profit as well as a recreative and restful retreat. His farm horses and cattle and Duroc hogs. Judge Lang specializes in saddle horses and has trained many fine animals. His strawberry plantation has also gained more than a local reputation for the fine flavor of the berries.

Judge Lang was for ten years a member of the Paducah Board of Education, serving as president three years. He resigned that office to become mayor, an office he filled from 1897 to 1901. In 1913 Governor McCracken appointed him county judge to fill out the unexpired term of Congressman Barkley. Soon afterward he was regularly elected to that office for the four year term, and was re-elected in 1917. For over seven years he has presided with impartial dignity and efficiency over the County Court of McCracken County.

Judge Lang is a member of the Board of Stewards of the Broadway Methodist Episcopal Church, is a past grand of Ingleside Lodge No. 195, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, a member of Union Encampment No. 70 and Canton Adkins of Odd Fellowship, is affiliated with Ostego Tribe No. 6 of the Improved Order of Red Men, and has held all the offices of the fraternal society of the Golden Cross.

Judge Lang and family occupy a modern home at 1008 Clay Street. He married at Paducah in 1882 Miss Georgia McKee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George McKee, now deceased. Her father was a well known citizen of Paducah, a ship captain by trade.

Judge and Mrs. Lang have one daughter, India, who lives at home with her parents. She is a graduate of the Paducah High School and is the wife of T. M. Watkins, a traveling salesman.

Maurice E. Gilbert. A representative citizen of McCracken County, Maurice E. Gilbert, of Paducah, has obtained distinction not only as an able and skillful attorney-at-law, but for the prominent part he has taken in promoting the agricultural prosperity of this section of the state, being owner and manager of a FINELY improved and well stocked dairy farm lying two miles south of the Paducah City limits, on the Jefferson Davis Highway. A son of the late W. L. Gilbert, he was born October 25, 1877, in Calloway County, Kentucky, coming from Revolutionary stock and of English ancestry, the founder of that branch of the Gilbert family from which he is descended having emigrated from England to North Carolina prior to the Revolutionary war.

Hugh Gilbert, his grandfather, born in North Carolina in 1810, was a pioneer settler of Marshall County, Kentucky, where he carried on business as a merchant, distiller and farmer, remaining there until his death in 1887. He married a Miss Walters, who was born in Virginia, but spent the greater part of her life on Marshall County. He is the father of W. L. Gilbert, this study.

W. L. Gilbert was born in Marshall County, Kentucky, in 1841. Soon after the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the Confederate Army, and took an active part in many important engagements, in one battle having been shot through the hand. During the battle of Shiloh he helped take Gen. Albert Sidney Johnson from his horse after he received a fatal shot, and later gathered and xcavated him in the embankments at Corinth and Iuka, Mississippi, and at Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. Subsequently buying land in Calloway County, he carried on a thriving business as a general farmer and tobacco dealer until his death in 1917. He was a democrat in politics; a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; and belonged to the Primitive Baptist Church. His wife, with whom he was married in 1855 in Paducah, Kentucky, and is now a resident of Calloway County. Four children blessed their union, as follows: Maurice E., with whom this sketch is principally concerned; Mamie, who died at the age of twenty-two years; Virginia, wife of C. L. Collins, a banker in Luray, Tennessee; and Walter, engaged in farming in Calloway County, Kentucky.

Having laid a solid foundation, for his future education in the rural schools of his native county. Maurice E. Gilbert entered the Southern Normal University at Huntington, Tennessee, where he was graduated with the class of 1890. Immediately entering the law department of the University of Vvouisville, he was there graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1894. In the same year, he was admitted to the bar of Calloway County, and has successfully engaged in the practice of his profession for four years, gaining in the meantime valuable knowledge and experience. Coming to Paducah in 1905, he has since built up a lucrative general law practice, his offices being at 123 1/2 South Fourth Street. Mr. Gilbert has a conveniently arranged residence on his farm of 191 acres, and in addition to his legal work, which is extensive, carries on general farming most successfully, making a specialty of dairying, his herd of cows being full-blooded Jerseys.

An active and influential member of the democratic party, Mr. Gilbert represented McCracken County in the State Legislature during the session of 1918, and there rendered valuable service as chairman of the House of Appeals Committee, and as a member of various other committees, including those on legislation for industrial injuries, city and county courts, codes of practice, criminal law, sinking fund, and on the municipalities committee. He was likewise the author of the resolution that ratified the Federal Amendment making Kentucky a dry state. Mr. Gilbert is identified with several legal organizations, belonging to the County Bar, the State Bar, and the National Bar associations. He is a member of the Board of Trade, and is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Paducah, the Ohio Valley Trust Company, the Bank of Gilbertsville, the First National Bank of Murray, the Industrial Savings and Loan Company of Louisville, Kentucky, and likewise in the Bank of Hardin, Kentucky. Fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Religiously he belongs to the Missionary Baptist Church.

Mr. Gilbert married in 1905, at Irvington, Breckinridge County, Kentucky, Miss Ida Payne, a daughter of Samuel R. and Bettie (Bridwell) Payne, the latter of whom has passed to the life beyond, while Mr. Payne, a native of Murray, is merchant, banking in Paducah, making his home with Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert. A graduate of the Bush Conservatory of Music in Chicago, Mrs. Gilbert is a gifted musician, and is very frequently called upon to play at leading public entertainments. Worden Hagerman, born December 10, 1903, is the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert.

JOHN ELLISON RATLIFF, president of the Kentucky Wholesale Grocery Company, vice president and director of the Pikeville National Bank, and a commissioner of the Pike County Circuit Court, is one of the most enterprising and substantial citizens of this locality, and one whose extensive operations form an important part of the commercial transactions of Pikeville. He is a man to whom successful handling of large affairs is second nature; his associates recognize his capabilities and rely on his judgment and foresight. The several concerns with which he has been connected during his business career have prospered under his direction and stand as a lasting monument to his sagacity and knowledge of men and the motives which govern them.

A native son of Pike County, he was born on Marrow Bone Creek November 21, 1861, a son of Joel and Mintie Elizabeth (Coleman) Ratliff. During the war between the states Joel Ratliff was a soldier for three years, and was mustered into the service September 15, 1862, as a member of the Thirty-ninth Kentucky Mounted Infantry. Upon his return he resumed his agricultural activities. An excellent farmer, hard-working and thrifty, he became a man of independent means. Both he and his wife were members of the Regular Baptist Church. His death occurred November 4, 1920, when he was seventy-nine years old. Although he had passed the ordinary three score years and ten by some years he was very well preserved and in excellent health until his final illness. He, too, was born on Marrow Bone Creek. In politics he was a republican. His wife, who was a daughter of John Coleman, was also a native of Pike County, and she died in her aged sixty-eight years. After her demise he married Genevieve Compton Thacker. By his first marriage he has six children, namely: John Ellison, who is the eldest; Emma, who is the wife of Elliott Johnson and lives near the old Ratliff home, James H. lives on the farm near the homestead; Mella, who was the wife of J. M. Venters, died in 1913; Silas W., who lives on the old home place; and Caledonia, who died when a child.

John Ellison Ratliff attended the school at Marrow Bone, receiving a limited educational training, and at an early age bought the remnants of a stock of goods on credit, and began a business career which has been marked with unusual achievements. From this small beginning, at Regina, he developed a very large business and continued it for twenty-eight years, and for twenty-two years of that time was postmaster of Regina. When he opened his little store for business all of his goods had to be brought by boat up the Big Sandy to a point four miles distant from his store, and from there were transferred to him, as this was before the building of the railroad. He is one of the most active men of Pike County politically, and was elected to the State Assembly in 1886 and in 1912 was elected county clerk, re-elected in 1914 to the same office and served for six years altogether. He is now serving a full term as commissioner of the Circuit Court of Pike County.

A man of many interests, he found it expedient to branch out, and for some years has been president of the Kentucky Wholesale Grocery Company and vice president and a director of the Pikeville National Bank. The Kentucky Wholesale Grocery Company is doing a very large business, which extends all over Eastern Kentucky.

In 1887 Mr. Ratliff was married to Emma Venters, a daughter of James Venters. She was born in Virginia and died in 1904, leaving her husband with six children, namely: Fred E., who for six years was cashier of the Pikeville National Bank, is now a farmer of Boone County, Kentucky; Lonnie, who died at the age of sixteen years; and Alphonso B., who is with the Pikeville National Bank. During the World war he was at Camp Taylor for seventeen months. In 1906 Mr. Ratliff married Emma Louise Coleman, a daughter of J. B. Coleman, of Marrow Bone, and they have seven children, namely: May, Merle, Marie, J. Marvin, Margie, Foster B. and Mildred. Mr. Ratliff is a Royal Arch Mason. Like his father he is a republican. His beautiful home is across the Big Sandy from Pikeville, and it is one of the show places of this region. While Mr. Ratliff has attained to an unusual degree of material prosperity, he has carried others with him on the road to success, and at the same time has developed the commercial interests of the several localities with which he has been connected, so that he has every reason to be proud of what he has accomplished, and his worth to his community is fully recognized by his fellow men.

CHARLES ARTHUR WICKLIFFE. Bringing to the practice of his chosen profession a well-trained mind, much zeal and the habits of industry that invariably command success, Charles Arthur Wickliffe, of Paducah, occupies a place of note in the legal circles of McCracken County, which he is now ably serving as county attorney. A son of Charles A. Wickliffe, Jr., he was born in Ballard County, Kentucky, January 16, 1886, of honored ancestry. He is a direct descendant of John Wycliffe, one of the most noted of English religious reformers, whose translation of the Bible was contrary to the religious belief of the Church of England, and on being expelled from his native country he came to America, here founding the American family of Wickliffe.

Charles A. Wickliffe, Sr., the paternal grandfather of Charles Arthur, was a pioneer farmer of Ballard County, and one of the leading attorneys of his home town. He was a native born son of Kentucky, and during the Civil war served as colonel of the Seventh Regiment, Confederate Army. He took part in many engagements, and at the battle of Shiloh was killed. He was a man of prominence in Ballard County, and the Town of Wickliffe, in which his widow resides, was named in his honor.

Charles A. Wickliffe, Jr., was born in 1863 in Ballard County, this state, and has there remained during his entire life. He received his early education in the public schools, and later attended the West Point Military Academy. Selecting the occupation upon which the prosperity and wealth of our nation is largely dependent, he has been actively engaged in agricultural pursuits for many years. He is a gold democrat in his political relations, and affiliates with the Baptist Church. He married Martha Ann Stoball, a native of Ballard County, and Charles Arthur, the only child born of their marriage, is the special subject of this sketch.

After graduating from the high school at Wickliffe, Ballard County, with the class of 1906, Charles Arthur Wickliffe took a business course at the Draughon Business College in Paducah, and afterward followed stenographic work in the office of W. M. Oliver of Paducah, and at the same time making an earnest study of law. On June 4, 1908, he was admitted to the Kentucky bar, and has since built up an extensive and valuable patronage as a civil and criminal lawyer, his offices being at the present time in the court house.

In January, 1920, Mr. Wickliffe was appointed county attorney to fill out an unexpired term, and at the coming election, in the latter part of 1920, will probably meet with no opposition whatever.

Mr. Wickliffe married, December 5, 1908, at Metropolis, Illinois, Miss Lola Kizer, a daughter of J. M. and Sarah Kizer, of Ballard County, Kentucky, and into their home have been born three beautiful children: Catherine Annis, born December 26, 1909; Charles A. K., born February 13, 1911; and John Beckham, who was born September 17, 1913, and died October 19, 1919. Mr. and Mrs. Wickliffe reside just outside the city limits, toward the south, where they have ten acres of land and a modernly built home. Mr. Wickliffe is a member of the McCracken County Bar Association, and belongs to the Odd Fellows, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; to Paducah Camp No. 517, Modern Woodmen of America; and to Paducah Camp No. 517, Woodmen of the World.

JOHN J. BERRY, postmaster of Paducah and for many years an active newspaper publisher in Western Kentucky, is a member of that branch of the prominent Berry family which for several generations has lived in Union County, Kentucky. While seldom found in other states, the name Berry has long been one of prominence in Kentucky. The great-grandfather of the Paducah postmaster was Joseph Berry, who was born in Virginia and spent much of his life in that state. His brother served as an officer in the Revolutionary war, and subsequently moved to Kentucky.

Martin M. Berry, grandfather of John J. Berry, was born in Union County, Kentucky, in 1809, and spent all his life there. He achieved prominence and success as a lawyer and died at Uniontown in 1892. He married Rachel Anderson, also a native of Union County, who died at the age of seventy-seven.

William Franklin Berry, of the next generation, was born in Union County May 24, 1828, and died at Uniontown February 14, 1893. He followed the profession of his father and was one of the leading members of the Union County bar. He also represented Union and Henderson counties in the Legislature several terms, and was a member of the State Senate. His affiliation with the democratic party was one of the strongest influences of his life. He was also a devout Presbyterian and for many years served as superintendent of its Sunday School. He married Anne L. Berry, who was born at Uniontown August 17, 1837, and is still living there at the advanced age of eighty-three. She was the mother of four sons, W. A., Philander, John J. and Noel A. The oldest of these, W. A. Berry, is a member of the law firm of Mocquot & Berry at Paducah, having been admitted to the bar in 1890 and has been a resident of Paducah since 1898. Philander is the only furniture dealer and undertaker at Uniontown. Noel A. is business manager of the News-Democrat of Paducah.

John J. Berry, who was born at Uniontown, January 31, 1875, acquired his early education in the private schools of his native town, graduated from high school in 1891, and spent one year in Evansville College. For upwards of thirty years he has been in the newspaper business. He first bought the Weekly Telegram at Uniontown, and edited that democratic paper for ten years. In 1906 he removed to Paducah and became general manager of the News-Democrat. Five years later, in 1912, he and his brothers Noel A. and W. A. acquired the controlling interest in this democratic paper, incorporated the Woodmen of America Publishing Company, of which J. J. Berry is president, W. A. Berry, vice president, and Noel A. Berry, secretary and treasurer. The News-Democrat for a number of years past has had a recognized power and influence over the western end of Kentucky. It is the only daily democratic paper in the district and is the official paper of McC racken County. Its circulation is widely extended over the First Kentucky District, comprising thirteen counties. This paper publishes a well equipped office and plant at 124 North Fourth Street.

Briefly the history of this Paducah paper began with the establishment of the News in 1871. In 1883 another local paper, known as the Visitor, was founded, and in 1891 the Democrat came into existence. In September, 1891, the News-Democrat was born as the result of a consolidation, and at the same time acquired the title of the News.

Mr. Berry was appointed postmaster of Paducah by President Wilson in June, 1914, and was reappointed for his second term of four years in 1918. He is a member of the Board of Stewards of the Broadway Methodist Episcopal Church and is a member of the First District Press Association, the Board of Trade, Country Club, Lions Club and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and Woodmen of the World.

Mr. Berry and family reside at 1268 Jefferson Street. He married at Uniontown October 27, 1892, Miss Sigourney Furnish. Her father, J. W. Furnish, was for many years active in educational circles in Kentucky, particularly at Eddyville, but is now residing at Los Angeles. Mrs. Berry has three daughters. Marie, the oldest, is a graduate of the Paducah High School and of the Gardner School for Young Ladies at New York City, and is the wife of Linn Boyd, living at Seventeenth Street and Kentucky Avenue, in Paducah. Mr. Boyd is a member of the Paducah Ice Company. The two younger daughters are Aline and Marjorie, the former in high school and the latter in grammar school.

Mrs. Edmund M. Post. A woman of brilliant intellect, forceful individuality and superior executive ability, Josephine (Fowler) Post, of Paducah, widow of Edmund M. Post, holds a place of distinction in the annals of McCracken County, no fairer or more honored name being enrolled upon the list of its representative women and men. A daughter of the late Capt. Joe Fowler, she was born in Paducah, McCracken County, Kentucky, of English ancestry, being a lineal descendant of one Godfrey Fowler, who, with his brother, William Anderson Fowler, were officers in the Colonial and Revolutionary wars, going into the army from Wake County, North Carolina. Their ancestors, on both sides, had settled in Virginia, and thence to North Carolina.

Judge Wiley Paul Fowler, Mrs. Post's grandfather, was born in 1779, and died in Paducah, Kentucky, in 1882. A distinguished jurist he was a pioneer settler of McCracken County, Kentucky, and later served as circuit judge of thirty-five Western Kentucky counties. He was a man of prominence and influence, and records of his life may be found in previously written histories of the state. He married Esther Arminta Given, a native of North Carolina. Judge Fowler's brother, Littleton Fowler, one of the missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church, went to Texas at an early day, and the good deeds that he performed are still mentioned in all Texas histories.

Mrs. Edmund M. Post was born in 1833 in Salem, Livingston County, Kentucky, and died in Paducah, this state, in 1901. After leaving the public schools he attended a medical academy in Caldwell County, there having among his classmates Roger Q. Mills and Henry Watterson. Beginning his active career, he was for a time with the firm of Watts, Given & Company, cotton brokers in Smithland, Kentucky, with branch offices not only in Paducah, Kentucky, and New York City, but in Liverpool, England.

Coming as a pioneer to Paducah during the Civil war, Captain Fowler was first superintendent and later president of the Evansville, Paducah & Cairo Packet Line of Steamboats, and with his brothers owned the wharf boats and the ship chandlery store, the firm name at first having been Fowler Brothers, and later was changed to Fowler, Crambaugh & Company. The captain was one of the best known and most popular river men between Pittsburgh and New Orleans, and had an extended reputation for his wit at repartee as well as for his strict integrity, his word having always been as good as his bond. Prominent in democratic ranks, Captain Fowler was chairman of finance under three mayors of Paducah, served as a member of the city school board a number of terms. A member of the city council for several years, he was actively interested in sustaining the welfare and progress of Paducah, being ever ready to lend his aid and influence toward the establishment of beneficial projects. He was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and belonged to the Board of Trustees of the Fourth Street Church.

Mr. Fowler was born February 23, 1836, and is now living in Paducah, a lovely and much beloved woman, who bears her burden of four score and four years with ease and dignity. Six children were born of the marriage of Captain and Mrs. Fowler, as follows: Given, of Paducah; Mildred, residing in Paducah, widow of the late Dr. F. T. Davis, a former physician of this city; Edward, of Grovendale, Kentucky; and three unmarried daughters, Mrs. Fowler, the Cincinnati offices of the Dalton Adding Machine Company; Mattie, unmarried, resides with her widowed mother; Josephine, the special subject of this brief sketch; and Rosebud, who died, unmarried, in 1909.

Educated in Paducah, Josephine Fowler attended first the public schools and later was graduated from the celebrated private school established by Miss Florence Himes. She subsequently married Edmund M. Post, head credit man of the H. B. Claflin Company of New York City, where her death occurred in 1900. Returning to Paducah soon after that sad event, Mrs. Post resumed her former position in the parental household, and still resides with her widowed mother at 619 Kentucky Avenue. Joseph Fowler Post, the only child born of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Post, died in the age of sixteen years, having been drowned in a steamboat accident.

A strong Wilson democrat, influential in party ranks and intensely interested in everything pertaining to public matters, Mrs. Post was elected in 1908 third vice president of the Kentucky Federation of Women's clubs, an organization that has exerted much influence in connection with legislative movements, and in the same year was made a member of the executive board of the Kentucky Child Labor Association. In 1911 she was chosen president of the McCracken County Equal Rights Association, and in 1916 was made congressional chairman of the Kentucky Equal Rights Association.

In 1917 Mrs. Post was appointed by Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt a member of the congressional Committee of the National American Suffrage Association, which was to convene in Washington, District of Columbia, there to appear before the legislators and work for the passage of the Susan B. Anthony Amendment, and she remained in that city during two sessions of Congress, the Sixty-fifth and Sixty-sixth. Mrs. Post was made the state member of the National Executive Council of the National American Woman Suffrage Association in 1918, and in that capacity appeared, September 4, 1919, before the Democratic State Convention to secure a suffrage plank endowing, by the Kentucky democrats, the Susan B. Anthony Amendment.
Mrs. Post was a member of the committee which worked for the ratification of the above amendment by the Kentucky Legislature, and accomplished the desired work in December, 1919, on the very first day the Legislature met, a speedy achievement almost without precedent. On March 30, 1920, she was appointed a member of the Democratic State Administrative Committee, a position she held the remainder of the year. She had the distinction of being elected an alternate from the First Congressional District as a delegate to the Democratic National Convention to be held in San Francisco, California, in June, 1920.

In February, 1920, Mrs. Post was appointed by the National League of women voters a member of the special committee from the League of Women Voters to appear before the Resolutions Committee of the Democratic National Convention to work for the plank that said league intends to support. On May 3, 1920, the Kentucky Equal Rights Association resolved itself into the Kentucky League of Women Voters, and Mrs. Post was one of the six women of the state selected to organize local leagues of women voters. On May 28, 1920, at the annual meeting of the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs, she was elected chairman of the political science department for the ensuing year.

Very active and influential in all the activities connected with the World war, Mrs. Post was one of the organizers of the McCracken County Chapter of the American Red Cross, and served as a member of the executive committee and as chairman of the nominating committee, for her work receiving a certificate of merit signed by President Wilson. She was local chairman of the American Defence Society, and received a certificate of honor for her services, while for her active services during the Liberty Loan drives she was awarded a medal by the United States Government. She also received the yellow ribbon, the honor roll badge, for services of the National Suffrage Association, the badges having been distributed at the last meeting, which was held in Chicago in 1919.

Mrs. Post is a member and past vice regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and likewise of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. She is local president of the Delphic Club, the oldest study club in Southwestern Kentucky. She is one of the two women members of the Carnegie Public Library Board of Paducah, and is chairman of the book committee, a position for which she is well fitted. Mrs. Post is in the 1918 and 1921 edition of "Who's Who." She was appointed a state representative of Kentucky women for the Woodrow Wilson Foundation and also a member of the National Women's Committee, August 24, 1921.

C.E. JENNIINGS. A veteran business man and equally public spirited citizen of Paducah for over thirty years, C.E. Jennings has made every contact with the community a source of benefit to others besides himself. Mr. Jennings was born in Calloway County, January 18, 1858. His ancestors were from England, Colonial settlers in Virginia, and different branches of the family have figured in realms of achievement in several western states, including Tennessee, Kentucky and Indiana. Theodore C. Jennings, father of C.E. Jennings, was born in Eastern Tennessee in 1824, was married at Owensboro, Kentucky, and for several years was a paper manufacturer at Louisville. In 1846 he moved to Indiana and built a large water-power mill on Eel River, residing in the vicinity at Cannelton. Later he was a farmer near Spencer, Indiana, and in order to give his children better educational facilities moved to Bloomington, the seat of Indiana University. His last years he spent at Greencastle, Indiana, where he died in 1902. He was a democrat without political aspirations, and was a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason. Theodore C. Jennings married Emily Yeager, who was born near Owensboro, Kentucky, in 1839, and died at Greencastle, Indiana, in 1884. The oldest of their children, Mary, who died at Louisville, Kentucky, was the wife of Jeff William, who for many years was a farmer and liveryman at and near Louisville, but died at Brazil, Indiana. Julia, now living at Paducah, is the widow of Rev. M. Wiles, a minister of the Christian Church. Parthenia, who died at Indianapolis, was the wife of Dr. W. V. Wiles, a physician and druggist who died at Spencer, Indiana. Myra, of Greencastle, Indiana, is the widow of J. B. Curtis, who was a miller and died at Spencer, Indiana. T. S. Jennings is a physician and surgeon at Louisville. Emma, living at Bloomington, Indiana, is the widow of Rev. T. J. Clark, a minister of the Christian Church. Candace, who died at Mount Carmel, Illinois, was the wife of Frank Baird, still living, a retired druggist.

C.E. Jennings, the youngest of the family, acquired his education in the public schools of Bloomington, Indiana, attending the high school there through the sophomore year until he was nineteen years of age. For one year he taught school near Jeffersonville, Indiana, and after three years in a practical apprenticeship learning the dry goods business, bought and operated a house at St. Louis. Returning to Greencastle, Indiana, he became manager of a large dry goods store, and remained there until 1889, when he identified himself with Paducah. For over thirty years he has been in the real estate business, at first with Judge J.C. Tully. They started as brokers with limited personal capital. The partnership continued five years, when Mr. Jennings bought out his partner and for another two years was associated with E.G. Boone. Since then he has conducted the business himself, and now has one of the most complete organizations of the kind in Western Kentucky. He handles city property and is himself a large individual real estate holder. His offices are in the City National Bank Building. His home is a modern residence surrounded by eighteen acres of well-kept grounds at Arcadia, two miles west of Paducah. He is president of the Colonial Clay Company, which produces and ships clay from Hickory and Graves counties.

Like his father, Mr. Jennings is a democrat without interest in practical politics. He is a deacon and active member of the Christian Church, is a past grand of Ingleisde Lodge No. 195 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is a member of the Rotary Club, Board of Trade and County Club of Paducah.

In 1888, at Paducah, he married Miss Ida M. Bon-durant, daughter of J.K. and Mary (Brewer) Bon-durant, residents of Paducah. Her father, a native Kentuckian, is still active in his business as a merchandise broker at the age of eighty years, and formerly was in the wholesale grocery business at Paducah. Mr. and Mrs. Jennings have two children. The older, Mary B., graduated from the Belmont, now the Ward-Belmont, School of Music and Pedagogy, and is living in Washington, D.C., also attended the Curry School at Boston and at Chicago, specializing in reading and expression. She is the wife of Bruce M. Barnard, a merchant at the Navajo Reservation at Shiprock, New Mexico. The son, Charles Jennings, is a student in the Western Military Academy at Alton, Illinois.

William Lydon. A man of artistic tastes and talent, skilled in the art of marble carving and cutting, William Lydon, of Paducah, has created many remarkable life-size statues, not only of persons but of horses and other animals, and among the beautiful specimens of sculpture to be seen in the Mayfield Cemetery many of the noted ones are of his handiwork. A native of Tennessee, he was born in Benton County January 23, 1861, of Irish parentage.
Mark Lydon, his father, born in County Mayo, Ireland, in 1827, died in Paducah, Kentucky, in October, 1917, at the venerable age of ninety years. Brought up and married in his native county, he was engaged in tilling the soil until 1857, when he came with his family to the United States, settling first in Nashville, Tennessee. Subsequently taking a contract to build forty miles of the Nashville, Chattanooga & Northern Railroad, he continued to be employed until the outbreak of the Civil War. Coming to Paducah, Kentucky, in 1862, he assisted in building the Paducah Gulf Railroad, the first railway to enter the place, and was afterwards successfully engaged in the teaming and transfer business until his retirement from active pursuits in 1897. He was a democrat in politics and a faithful member of the Roman Catholic Church. Mr. Lydon married Margaret Curran, who was born in County Mayo, Ireland, in 1835, and died in Paducah, Kentucky, in 1870. Five children were born of their marriage, as follows: John, who was employed as clerk in a retail store in Paducah, died in that city, aged twenty-seven years, in 1906; Katy, wife of Joseph Mullen, a farmer and bricklayer residing in McCracken County; Agnes, who joined the Sisters of Mercy, died in New Orleans, Louisiana, in 1908; Edward, a bricklayer by trade, died in Paducah in 1913, at the early age of thirty-two years; Patrick, of Paducah, is clerk in a grocery store; Mary, who was educated in a grammar school with her widowed mother; and Annie, wife of Frank Niehoff, a Paducah blacksmith, died in 1918, aged twenty-eight years.

Acquiring a practical knowledge of books in the parochial schools of Paducah, William Lydon began learning the marble cutter's trade at the age of seventeen years, serving an apprenticeship of three years with William N. Diller, and in 1850 started business of his own at the corner of Fifth Street and Broadway, on the present site of the Palmer House. Becoming familiar with all branches of the marble and granite business, he subsequently remained with that firm as a journeyman marble cutter until 1902, when he was appointed deputy sheriff, an office that he filled for four years. In the meantime the junior member of the firm for which he had formerly worked had sold out to the senior member, and Mr. Lydon purchased a third interest in the new firm, which then became J. E. Williamson & Company. At the end of a year and nine months Mr. Lydon sold his interest in the concern to his partner and established his present plant at 1610-1614 Trimble Street, where he has built up an extensive and profitable business, filling the leading one of the kind in Western Kentucky.

Possessing excellent business ability and discretion, Mr. Lydon has made wise investments, owning his fine residence at 122 Murrell Boulevard; his valuable plants; and other pieces of real estate in Paducah, and is a stockholder in both the Ohio Valley Fire and Marine Insurance Company and the Ohio Valley Trust Company. He is a devout member of the Roman Catholic Church, being true to the religious faith in which he was reared. He belongs to the Paducah Rotary Club, and is a member and a past grand knight of Paducah Council No. 1055, Knights of Columbus; a member and a past exalted ruler of Paducah Lodge No. 217, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; and a member of Olive Camp No. 2, Woodmen of the World.

Mr. Lydon married in 1882, in Paducah, Miss Catherine Glynn, a daughter of John and Margaret (Broderick) Glynn, neither of whom are now living. Her father was an officer in the United States Army, serving as a private of his company. Mrs. Lydon received good educational advantages, having been graduated from the Paducah parochial schools. Three children have been born into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lydon, namely: William V., of Paducah, died January 2, 1921, was interested in business with his father, and was also a florist, his greenhouses being situated at 617 Fountain Avenue; Margaret, wife of George W. Moller, of Paducah, who is a stockholder in the firm of Kolb Brothers, wholesale druggists, and travels for the company; and Mark, who died in 1906, at the age of fourteen years.

Ralph Yakel. A man of high mental attainments, broad and progressive in his views, Ralph Yakel, superintendent of the city schools of Paducah, is rendering efficient and highly appreciated service in the position he has so ably filled, having been instrumental in advancing the educational standards of the various schools under his supervision and arousing in teachers and pupils alike a strong desire to win for the Paducah schools an honored place among the best in county and state. A son of Charles W. Yakel, he was born October 1, 1889, in Rantoul, Illinois, of German ancestry.

Charles W. Yakel, grandfather of Ralph, was born in Germany in 1811. Soon after attaining his majority he immigrated to the United States, and having bought land near Rantoul, Illinois, was there engaged in general farming until his death in 1916. His wife, whose maiden name was Henrietta Kresin, was born in 1840, in Germany, and is now residing in Rantoul, Illinois, a bright and active woman of four score years.

Born in 1864, near Bloomington, Illinois, Charles W. Yakel was brought up and educated in Rantoul, as a youth being well trained in the various branches of agriculture. Choosing the independent occupation to which he was reared, he was successfully engaged in tilling the soil until 1910. Having acquired a competency, he retired from active pursuits in that year, and since resided in Bloomington, Illinois, a stanch republican in politics, and a member of the local and state commission. Religiously he is a member of the Lutheran Church and fraternity he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He married Viola C. Blake, who was born in Illinois in 1863, and into their household two children have been born, as follows: Ralph, the special subject of this brief personal record; and Harley B., a real estate broker in Champaign, Illinois.

Acquiring his preliminary education in Rantoul, Illinois, Ralph Yakel was then graduated from the high school with the class of 1907. He subsequently continued his studies at the Northwestern University in Evanston, Illinois, for a year, and then attended the University of Illinois, at Champaign, for a year. Subsequently entering the Illinois Wesleyan University at Bloomington, where he has been for four years, being there graduated in 1912 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Laws.

Very soon after his graduation Mr. Yakel was admitted to the Illinois bar, and immediately located in Portland, Oregon, where he was engaged in the practice of law a short time. He subsequently taught in the high schools at Salem, Oregon, after which he accepted a position as instructor at the Pacific University, Forest Grove, Oregon, where he remained until the summer of 1916. Coming then to Paducah, Mr. Yakel became head of the history department of the Paducah University, and retained the position until February, 1917, when he was elected superintendent of the city schools, an office of responsibility which he has since filled with credit to himself and to the honor of the city. He has under his supervision ten schools, 111 teachers and 4,500 pupils, a goodly number of boys and girls, who are receiving excellent educational advantages, their studies being pursued under efficient teachers and after the most approved modern methods.

Mr. Yakel married, May 15, 1913, at Lafayette, Indiana, Miss Myra M. Jones, a daughter of W. H. and Mary (McLaughlin) Jones. Her father, who was supervisor of railroad repairs for the Pullman Company, died in April, 1920, and her mother is residing at 6359 Greenwood Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. Brought up in Chicago, Mrs. Yakel was graduated from the Hyde Park High School, and later attended the University of Chicago one semester, and the Illinois Wesleyan University three years. Mr. and Mrs. Yakel have two children, Ralph, Jr., born March 29, 1914, and Ruth, who are a college fraternity, the Phi Gamma Delta and the Phi Delta Chi, and is a member of the Paducah Rotary Club. Politically he is a straightforward democrat, and religiously is a member of the Christian Church.

M. C. Justice, president of the Peoples Bank of Pikeville and president of the Big Elk Horn Coal Company of Bethel Landing, is one of the leading business men and financiers of Pikeville and a man of unusual capabilities. He has acquired through legitimate channels a comfortable fortune within the past few years, and has set an example of determined persistence and good management that all would do well to follow who are ambitious to gain a well-merited prosperity. He was born at Grange Store, Pike County, Kentucky, July 6, 1873, a son of William T. and Causbe (Haven) Justice, the former of whom was born at Grange Store in 1849, and is now a resident of Ashland, Kentucky. The latter was born in Tazewell County, Virginia, in 1847, and died in 1895. The Justice family was one of the pioneer ones of Eastern Kentucky, and all of its members were identified prominently with the Baptist Church. An older brother of William T. Justice served in the Federal Army during the war between the two sections of the country, and he is now engaged in farming on his fine farm that is located a short distance south of Ashland, but formerly he was engaged in farming at Grange Store. There were eight children born to William T. Justice and his wife, namely: M. C., who was the eldest; Ellen, deceased; Rachel, who is the wife of James Anderson, of Fishtrap, Pike County; J. T., who lives in a farm in Pike County, Ohio; William M., who lives at Russell, Kentucky, is a merchant; A. H., who is a merchant of Ashland, Kentucky; and Minnie, who is the wife of William Anderson; and Nelson, of Fishtrap.

McClelland Justice, generally known as M. C. Justice, attended Pikeville College and was under the preceptorship of Professor Kendrick and Professor Reminds and J. I. Riddle. In order to secure the necessary funds to acquire his collegiate training he taught in the country schools, and continued to be an educator for ten years. He then embarked in a lumber and mercantile business at Lookout, Pike County, and continued in it until 1904 when he organized the McLaughlin, Bodie and Big Elk Horn coal mining companies, and is president of the Big Elk Horn Coal Company and is one of the largest coal operators of this region. On June 15, 1919, Mr. Justice organized the Peoples Bank at Pikeville, of which he has since been president. His business ventures have all prospered, but he has advanced not by any spectacular operations, but because of his careful, conservative and capable management of his affairs and his astuteness in gauging the right time for the launching of an undertaking and his sagacity in taking advantage of the opportune moment. During his earlier days he acquired considerable knowledge of conditions in Pike County through his work over it as a surveyor.

When he was twenty-four years of age he married Laura A. Adkins, a daughter of Winright Adkins, of Millard, Pike County, who died in 1910, when she was thirty-two old, leaving six children, namely: G. H., who served in the United States Navy during the World war for two years in the transport service, is now at Betsy Layne, where he is associated with his father in business; and Rex C. Garland, Octavia, Zettie and McClelland, Jr., all of whom are at home.

Mr. Justice married Virgie Coleman, a daughter of J. E. Coleman, of Regina, Kentucky. Mr. Justice is a republican.

WAYNE C. SEATON. Holding a place of prominence among the county officials of McCracken County, Wayne C. Seaton, of Paducah, has served ably and faithfully as the circuit clerk of the bankruptcy court of McCracken County during the past four years, and in the performance of the duties devolving upon him in that capacity has won the approval of the bench, bar and general public. A son of the late James B. Seaton, he was born near Woodville, McCracken County, Kentucky, December 20, 1875, of English and Scotch-Irish descent, on the paternal side being descended from the ancestral line claimed by Queen Elizabeth of England. His grandfather, George Seaton, was born in 1808 in Tennessee, where he spent his entire life, his death having occurred in 1883 in Henry County, near Paducah.

Born in Lincoln County, Tennessee, in 1833, James B. Seaton spent the earlier years of his life in his native state. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the Confederate Army, and during the four years that he served as a soldier took part in various engagements, including those at Lookout Mountain, Shiloh and Missionary Ridge, in one battle being wounded in the right leg by a bullet. Surrendering at Greensboro, North Carolina, he returned to his home in Tennessee and the following year, in 1866, came to McCracken County, Kentucky, bought a tract of land, and was subsequently actively engaged in general farming until his death in 1899. He was a democrat in his political relations; a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; and was a devout and consistent member of the Baptist Church, which he served as deacon for many years.

After coming to McCracken County James B. Seaton married Fannie Stone, who was born in 1837 in Virginia, and is now residing in Paducah, Kentucky. Six children were born of their union, as follows: Willie, died on the home farm when but nine years of age; Elizabeth, who became the wife of James Johnston, of Barlow, Ballard County, Kentucky, died at the age of twenty-seven years; Minnie, widow of A. Simmons, a McCracken County farmer, lives with her mother in Paducah; Eli, engaged in farming, resides in McCracken County, near Kevil; Wayne C., the subject of this brief personal record; and Mamie, who lived but four short years.

Obtaining the rudiments of his education in the rural schools, Wayne C. Seaton subsequently received a high school education, or its equivalent, and a commercial education in Paducah, fully qualifying himself for a business career. Beginning the battle of life on his own account at the age of eighteen years, he has since made his own way in the world. Starting life as a farmer, he continued his agricultural labors until 1907, and in the following three years sold insurance in McCracken County. Resuming his former occupation in 1910, Mr. Seaton was a tiller of the soil three years, when, in 1913, he made a race on the democratic ticket for the office of county assessor. On the face of the returns he was elected by two votes, but on the official recount it was found that he had lost by three votes. He returned then to the farm, but owing to the unprecedented drought of the 1914 season he lost all of his crops. In 1915 Mr. Seaton was a candidate for the office of circuit clerk of McCracken County, being one of six candidates in the field, and had the honor of being elected by a large majority of the votes cast, for a term of six years. Courteous, efficient and pains-taking, he is one of the best circuit clerks the court ever had, and his clerks have always been capable and efficient.

Mr. Seaton is a straightforward democrat in politics, and an active member of the Missionary Baptist Church. Fraternally he is a member of Paducah Lodge No. 21, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; of Union Encampment No. 70; of Paducah Lodge No. 217, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; and of Paducah Camp No. 11313, Modern Woodmen of America. He likewise belongs to the Paducah Board of Trade. He has acquired considerable property, owning a modern residence at 1622 Broadway, a farm of seventy-five acres near Kenton, McCracken County, and real estate of value in Paducah.

On August 23, 1906, Mr. Seaton was united in marriage, at Lovelaceville, Ballard County, Kentucky, with Miss Nannie Culver, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. R. Culver, the former of whom, a retired farmer, resides in Magazine, Arkansas, while the latter is deceased. They have been blessed with a higher life October 17, 1909, on the home farm in McCracken County, leaving one child, Graydon, born April 26, 1907. Mr. Seaton married for his second wife, April 12, 1917, Mrs. Bennie (Sullivan) Thomas, a daughter of James and Sudie (Hines) Sullivan, who reside in Clarksville, Tennessee, Mr. Sullivan being a traveling salesman. Mrs. Seaton had one child by her first marriage, Louise Thomas, born in 1909, who is now known as Louise Thomas Seaton.

W. M. Baker has not only gained standing as one of the representative farmers of the younger generation in his native county, but has also shown himself possessed of the characteristics that beget popular confidence. Born in Kentucky, his boyhood was spent in McCracken County, and his first term as sheriff of that county was 1906. He is the son of Morris Baker, who was born in Clay County, this state, and came to Kentucky with his father, Mr. B. E. Baker, in 1856. Mr. Baker was born in North Carolina and became a pioneer farmer in Clay County, Kentucky, where he established his residence when he was a young man and where his marriage was solemnized, both he and his wife passing the remainder of their lives in that county. He was a Union soldier during practically the entire period of the Civil war, took part in numerous engagements, including a number of important battles, and from wounds which he received in battle his death resulted shortly after the close of the war. His wife, whose maiden name was Nancy Sandlin, was born in Clay County, and there passed her entire life, she having survived him by a number of years.

Reared to manhood in Clay County, Morris Baker married Miss Eliza Ferguson, who was born in Washington County, Virginia, in 1836, and who survived him by about five years, her death having occurred at Indianapolis, Indiana, in June, 1909. The first three children of this union were born in Clay County, and there Mr. Baker continued his activities as a farmer until he entered the Union service in the Civil war, as will be noted more fully at a later point in this context. In 1866 he removed with his family to a farm which he purchased three miles north of Annville, Jackson County, and on this place he gave his constructive labors as an agriculturist and stock-grower until 1897, when he removed to the northern part of the county, near Sand Gap, where he continued his farm enterprise five years until his retirement to McKee, the county seat, where he passed the remainder of his life. He was a republican of unqualified loyalty, and he served one term as magistrate in Jackson County. Both he and his wife were most zealous members of the Baptist Church, with which he united in his youth, and he became a teacher in his Sunday School even before his marriage. When the Civil war was entered, Mr. Baker subordinated all other interests to the defense of his home and Union, and as a member of Company I, Fourteenth Kentucky Cavalry, he served from the beginning until the close of the war, with a record that shall ever reflect honor upon his name. Morris and Eliza (Ferguson) Baker became the parents of ten children: Miss Susan, eldest of the number, died at the age of twenty-six years; Mrs. Baker, who died in the northern part of Jackson County, was the wife of General Combs, the latter having been a farmer in Tennessee at the time of his death; Adoniram was accidentally shot and killed near Little Rock, Arkansas, when twenty-four years of age; Nannie is the wife of Thomas Gabbard, a farmer in the western part of Jackson County; Sarah died in Madison County, where her husband, Alfred Hurley, is a farmer; Bear was a farmer in Jackson County also; Miss Frances died in the latter days of the war; Alfred is a farmer in the western part of Jackson County; and W. M. Baker, the sheriff of Jackson County, is the youngest of the children.

The rural schools of Jackson County afforded Sheriff Baker his early education, and he continued his association with the work of his father's farm until he had attained to the age of nineteen years, when he began his independent operations as a farmer. He made a success of the enterprise and applied himself vigorously to the management of his farm until 1911, when he sold the property. He has since purchased and now owns an excellent farm of eighty-four acres in immediate proximity to the Village of Annville, and he resides on this farm, which is on the main Annville road. In 1911 he engaged in timber operations in this section of the state, and he continued his activities in this field for about ten years. During this period, the year he assumed his official duties as sheriff, his election having occurred the preceding November, as previously stated. While he resides on his farm near Annville, he maintains his official headquarters, as a matter of course, at McKee, the county seat. The Sheriff is a thoroughgoing republican and has given effective aid in promoting the party cause in his home county. After his retirement from the timber business he served one year as village marshal at Berea, Madison County. He and his wife hold membership in the Baptist Church, and he is affiliated with William McKinley Lodge No. 703, Free and Accepted Masons, at McKee; Bond Lodge No. 105, Knights of Pythias, in the Village of Bond; and Bond Council No. 105, Junior Order, United American Mechanics. He made his substantial contributions to the payment of his war bonds and Savings Bonds during the nation's connection with the World war, and also gave effective aid in the various Jackson County campaigns for these objects.

Mr. Baker married Miss Dollie Gabbard, daughter of Edward and Sarah (McCullom) Gabbard, who reside on their farm near McKee. Mr. and Mrs. Baker have seven children: Susie is the wife of Walter Christian, a druggist by vocation, and they reside in the City of Detroit, Michigan; Sarah A., the widow of Vester Evans, who was a farmer near Berea, Madison County, resides at Charleston, West Virginia, where she holds a position as stenographer in one of the state offices; Mattie is the wife of W. P. Johnson, cashier of a bank at London, Laurel County, Kentucky; and James is, in 1921, a student in Annville Institute, at Annville, as are also Grace, Morris and Nora, these younger children having the privileges of an excellent school while maintaining a place in the parental home circle.

EMMET WOOTEN BAGBY. A prominent and highly esteemed citizen of Paducah, Emmett Wooten Bagby, distinguished as one of the two pioneer lawyers of the city has been here successfully engaged in the practice of his chosen profession for upwards of half a century, and has served ably and satisfactorily as a referee in bankruptcy since the creation of that office in 1858. A son of the late Albert K. Bagby, he was born June 7, 1815, in Monroe County, Kentucky, and is of Scotch descent, his immigrant ancestor, James Bagby, having come from Scotland to America in Colonial days, settling in Virginia. Interested in scientific experiments, while trying to discover perpetual motion, he was accidentally killed by his own appliances.

Mr. Bagby's grandfather, Rev. Sylvanus Bagby, a native of Virginia, was one of the early Baptist ministers of Kentucky, and about 1840 was associated with that body by a clergyman, Alexander K. Wooten, of the religious sect known either as Disciples of Christ, Christians or Campbellites. He subsequently moved to Rushville, Illinois, where his death occurred in the early '50s. His wife, whose maiden name was Zarilda Courts, was born and bred in Virginia. The grandfather inherited to a marked degree the mechanical and inventive talent of his immigrant ancestor, and was a close friend and admirer of Cyrus W. Field, the originator of the submarine cable.

Born in 1823 in Virginia, Albert K. Bagby was there brought up and educated. Coming to Kentucky as a young man, he settled as a pioneer in Glasgow, where he fathered the trade of a cabinet maker until his death, which, however, occurred in Louisville, Kentucky, in 1906. He was a republican in politics, and was one of the organizers, under Alexander Campbell, of the Christian Church in Glasgow, Kentucky, of which he was an active and prominent member. He married Martha Wooten, who was born in Barren County, Kentucky, in 1824, and died in Glasgow, Kentucky, in 1906. Six children were born of their union, as follows: Eugene A., who was a druggist in his earlier days, and afterward a member of the firm of McFerran, Shalcross & Company of Louisville, died in 1912, at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and was buried in Louisville; Alice, who married K. Owsley, a former business man of Ballard County, this state; Emmett Wooten, the special subject of this sketch; Phinetta married Harry Burton, a real estate agent of Louisville, and neither of them are now living; John, a graduate of the Bellevue Medical College in New York City, was a prominent physician and surgeon of Glasgow, Kentucky, where his death occurred in 1901, while practicing in Louisville, is the widow of Charles Hamlet, a veteran of the Confederate Army, who died at the Soldiers' Home in Anchorage, Kentucky.

After his graduation from Urania College in Glasgow, this state, Emmett Wooten Bagby taught school in the district lying three miles from Glasgow for a year, and in August, 1866, was elected principal of the newly organized public school in the second ward of Paducah. In 1870, Mr. Bagby married A. B. (Mrs. Bagby), and he was afterward made assistant principal of the Male University of Paducah, and for two years was associated with John Wheeler McGee, of Louisville, in that institution. Being admitted to the Kentucky bar in 1869, Mr. Bagby opened a law office in Paducah, and for a year was in partnership with the same Mr. McGee. From 1870 until 1908 Mr. Bagby was engaged in the practice of his profession alone, but from that time until May, 1920, was associated with Arthur Y. Martin, with whom he built up an extensive and lucrative patronage. Since the dissolution of the partnership Mr. Bagby has continued his practice alone, his offices being in the Masonic Building.

He was city attorney of Paducah for ten years, and has been officially connected with the Carnegie Public Library of Paducah since its organization in 1920, and was the first president of the Board of Directors of the library, a position that he is ably filling at this writing, in 1920. He is a member of the Paducah Bar Association, and is serving as its vice president. A prominent member of the Republican party, Mr. Bagby was the Republican elector in 1876 of the First Congressional District, and was joint debater with Capt. C. T. Allen, of Princeton, Kentucky, the democratic elector from that district, and thirty days later, was a creator daily speaking throughout the entire district. In 1878 Mr. Bagby made the race for Congress, but was defeated at the polls. In 1920 he made the race for city commissioner, but was defeated. Fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and religiously he belongs to the Christian Church, in which he served as elder many years.

Mr. Bagby married in 1872, in Paducah, Miss Ellen Saunders, daughter of Dr. Reuben Saunders, a pioneer physician of this city. Mrs. Bagby died in 1895, leaving six children, namely: Emmett, who was assistant cashier of the City National Bank of Paducah, died at the age of thirty-five years, while yet in manhood's prime; Aline, wife of H. A. Ray, who has charge of a garage in Los Angeles, California; Douglas, of Prestonsburg, Kentucky, is a druggist; Elsie, wife of Henry B. Grace, a railway conductor living in California; Marjorie, wife of Cade Davis of Paducah, a well known insurance agent; and Reuben Saunders, who resides in Long Beach, California.

W. A. BERRY. While long recognized as one of the successful lawyers of Paducah, Kentucky, W. A. Berry has also performed the duties of a public spirited citizen and an able and efficient business man. For a number of years he has been interested in the News-Democrat of Paducah, being vice president of the Democrat Publishing Company.

Mr. Berry was born at Uniontown, Union County, Kentucky, January 17, 1870. His first Berry ancestor came from England to Virginia with Lord Fairfax. The family has been in Kentucky since soon after the Revolutionary period. The grandfather of W. A. Berry was Martin M. Berry, who was born in Union County in 1805, and spent his entire life there, where he died in 1891. He was an extensive farmer and planter and for twenty-four years before his death held the office of justice of the peace. He married Rachel Anderson, a native of Union County.

The father of the Paducah lawyer was the late W. F. Berry, who attained success as a lawyer. He was born in Union County May 24, 1838, and spent all his life in that section of the state. He died in Uniontown February 14, 1893. He was a representative in the Legislature in 1882, and for four years represented Henderson and Union counties in the Senate. He was active in the Presbyterian Church and Sunday School. He married Miss Anne Berry, who was born August 15, 1837, and is still living at Uniontown. The oldest of their children, Earl, was a merchant at Uniontown, where he died in 1907, at the age of forty. The second is Thomas M. Berry, a successful merchant at Uniontown. John J. has long been a resident of Paducah, for a number of years a publisher of the News-Democrat and now postmaster. N. A. is business manager of the News-Democrat.

W. A. Berry attended private and public schools in his native county, studied law in his father's offices, and was admitted to the bar August 24, 1890, five months
Robert R. Guthrie, only son of his parents, was born in Paducah January 22, 1860, prepared for college in the Paducah High School, and then entered the University of Kentucky, from which he received his Bachelor of Science degree in 1911. He was a member of the Delta Kappa Epsilon College fraternity. For the past nine years he has given his undivided time and attention to the management of his father's business, which has recorded very extensive growth and prosperity. The E. Guthrie Company supplies the local and their trade with an extensive line of Western Kentucky.

Under his management the business headquarters have been moved to 322-326 Broadway, and the company also owns a modern four-story brick structure at 510-523 Broadway.

Mr. Guthrie was president in 1910-20, a year and a half, of the Paducah Rotary Club, that being the longest term of any president of that organization. He was also president for the past two years and has been a director five years of the Paducah Board of Trade. He is a democrat, a member of the Christian Science Church, is affiliated with Plain City Lodge No. 149, A. F. and A. M., Paducah Chapter No. 30, R. A. M., Paducah Commandery No. 11, K. T., Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Louisville and was the first president of the Paducah Shrine Club. He is also a member of Paducah Lodge No. 217, of the Elks and of the Paducah Country Club.

In Chicago in 1915 he married Miss Demia Krings, daughter of John F. and Emma (Grayson) Krings. Her father is a wholesale milliner in Chicago. Mrs. Guthrie acquired a high school education in Chicago and also specialized in vocal music. They have one daughter, Demia, born March 12, 1918.

CLAUDE C. PACE. Identified with the business interests of Paducah as an active member of the T. A. Miller Land Company, Claude C. Pace has operated successfully in real estate in McCracken and other counties, handling property of much value, his annual sales being large and constantly increasing. A son of Thomas Alva Pace, he was born November 25, 1870, in Stewart County, Tennessee, of Scotch-Irish lineage, his immigrant ancestor having located in Virginia prior to the Revolutionary war. His grandfather, Hardy Pace, was born in 1823 in Tennessee, as was his wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Huskey. Soon after their marriage they became pioneers of Calloway County, Kentucky, and on the farm which they reared from its earliest years, his death occurring in 1885 and hers in 1888.

Born in 1850, in Cheatham County, Tennessee, Thomas Alva Pace was brought up in that county and in Robertson County, that state, being reared to agricultural pursuits. Removing to Stewart County, Tennessee, in early manhood, he farmed there for a while, and in 1880 came to Kentucky, settling in Murray. Calloway County, where he spent his career as a tiller of the soil for two years and was engaged in the tobacco and grocery business for about nine years. Moving to Hot Springs, Arkansas, in 1900, he managed a hotel until 1912, when he retired from active pursuits, and is now enjoying in that city a well-earned leisure. He is a democrat in politics, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife, whose name before marriage was Elizabeth Huskey, in 1853, being a descendant of Robert E. Lee, and she died in 1887 in Murray, Calloway County, Kentucky. Five children were born of their union, as follows: Joseph, who was graduated from a medical college at Little Rock, Arkansas, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, was a successful physician and surgeon at Hot Springs, Arkansas, where he was deeply interested in the affairs of the First Presbyterian Church; Claude C., the subject of this brief sketch; Charles W., who died at Hot Springs, Arkansas, in 1917, aged thirty-four years, was a physician and surgeon, having received the degree of Doctor of Medicine at a medical college in Chicago, Illinois; B. F., an oil operator in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; and Eunice, wife of M. T. Adams, a farmer living four miles west of Paducah.

Acquiring his first knowledge of books in the rural schools of Calloway County, Kentucky, Claude C. Pace later attended the public schools of Dover, Tennessee, and Kentucky High School. Beginning life for himself at the age of nineteen years, he was engaged in farming in Ballard County, Kentucky, until 1900, when he bought land in McCracken County, near Massac, and continued his agricultural labors, moving from there to a farm located on the Hinkleville Road, seven miles west of Paducah. Mr. Pace carried on general farming there until 1912. Going in that year to Murray, Kentucky, he was engaged in the real estate business a year, gaining in the meantime a practical insight in that industry.

In 1913 Mr. Pace located in Paducah, and for five years was actively engaged in the fire and life insurance business, winning an excellent patronage. Becoming a member of the T. A. Miller Land Company in 1918, he has since been identified with one of the most extensive and profitable enterprises of the kind in the Western United States. The facts which he has acquired during the past two years are record breakers. Mr. Pace owns and operates a fine residence at 433 North Fifth Street, and in addition owns thirty-two dwelling houses in Paducah, and has a half interest in several McCracken County farms. He is a staunch democrat in his political affiliations; a valued member of the First Baptist Church, and belongs to Mangum Lodge No. 21, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and to Paducah Camp No. 11313, Modern Woodmen of America.

Mr. Pace married, in 1890, in McCracken County, Kentucky, Miss Mary Overstreet, a daughter of James D. and Ella (Caldwell) Overstreet, neither of whom are now living. Her father, a farmer by occupation, retired from active pursuits a few years before his death. Mr. and Mrs. Pace have no children.

JOHN M. JOHNSON.

The men now occupying the offices of Pike County are particularly well fitted for their special duties and are making a record which is attracting wide-spread attention. Without exception they are men of the highest character and ability, and are working to render a service that ranks among the best in the State. One of them deserving of special mention is John M. Johnson, a county official, and one of the most dependable citizens of Pikeville. He was born at Maysfield, Kentucky, in November, 1879, a son of George W. and Nettie (Coleman) Johnson, now residents of Regina. The Johnson family came to Pike County when it was first opened for settlement, some of its members being natives of North Carolina and others of Virginia. George W. Johnson and his wife are members of the regular Baptist Church. In politics he is a republican. All of the six children born to him and his wife still survive, except one, and of them John, Johnson, the son and editor in-chief of the 'Pikeville News,' has become a lawyer.

Growing up in his native comity, John M. Johnson attended the public schools and later Pikeville College, and then for several years was numbered among the capable educators of this region. Entering the commercial field, he became a traveling salesman for Ketchum White & Company of Ashland, Kentucky, and later represented the Kentucky Grocery Company of Pikeville, remaining on the road in all eleven years. He is thoroughly acquainted with all Pike County, and knows personally many of its people with whom he maintains the friendliest relations, calling them by their first names, as they do him by his. When he came before the public for election as the candidate of the republican party he received an overwhelming support from members of both parties, and was elected the county clerk by a large majority. In 1921 he was elected sheriff on the republican ticket without opposition, received the largest number of votes in the primary ever received in the county, 5,834. He has proved himself a very capable as well as popular official, and no trouble is too great for him to take to accommodate his constituents.

In August, 1907, Mr. Johnson was united in marriage with Miss Cora Roberts, a daughter of Rice Roberts, a coal operator and farmer of Elkhorn. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have six sons, namely: Russell, Buford, Robert, Jack, Walter and Ralph. Very prominent as a Mason, Mr. Johnson belongs to the Blue Lodge of Pikeville and the Mystic Shrine at Ashland. He is also a member of the Elks of Catlettsburg.

NATHANIEL L. CURRY. The career of Nathaniel L. Curry, directing head of the N. L. Curry Grocery Company of Harrodsburg, is an expression of practical and diversified activity and in its range has invaded the realms of merchandising, education, finance and religion, all of which have profited by the breadth and conscientiousness which are distinctive features of his work and character. He was born at Harrodsburg, December 10, 1859, the only son of Daniel Jackson and Miss Pike (Porsby or Forsythe) Curry.

The Curry family, for the time of its entrance into Kentucky at an early day has loyally supported the best interests of the state, and its members have been prominent in fighting for justice, temperance and good citizenship. The great-grandfather of Nathaniel L. Curry was born in Virginia and on migrating to Kentucky in 1792 settled on the banks of Chapman River, where he owned property. He was a sturdy pioneer farmer and an elder of the first Presbyterian Church to be established in the state. His son, the grandfather of Nathaniel L. Curry, was a carpenter by trade and a man noted for his conscientious workmanship and skill. He was a deacon in the Presbyterian Church.

Daniel Jackson Curry was born July 20, 1826, and worked his way from a penniless young manhood to a position among the wealthiest men in Mercer County. He was the organizer of the First National Bank of Harrodsburg and a leading merchant at that place, and later in life purchased the William Thompson farm of 100 acres on the Lexington Pike. His strength was largely in his truth and honor, and his righteousness was universally recognized among his associates. While Mercer County was normally democratic by 600 votes, and he espoused the principles of republicanism, Mr. Curry was elected to the State Legislature by a large majority. His opponent, Phil B. Thompson, was led to exclaim: "I thought I was running against Dave Curry; I found I was opposed by all women and God Almighty!" Mr. Curry first married Mary Jane Forsythe, September 21, 1852. She was born November 28, 1834, and died April 12, 1862, Nathaniel L. being their only child. On December 28, 1860, Mr. Curry married Emma S. Rue, a most estimable woman of Kentucky birth, and they became the parents of seven children, of whom: Edwin; James, of Kentucky; Cora, of Indiana; James Reed, of Tampa, Florida; James, of Harrodsburg; Lucian R., of Richmond, Virginia; Daniel J., of Harrodsburg; Emma, the wife of Rev. H. P. Atkins, secretary of the Federated Church Movement of Hamilton County, Ohio, and a resident of Cincinnati; and Nellie R., who died aged four years in 1886.

Nathaniel L. Curry was given good educational advantages and made the most of his opportunities. After high schools of Harrodsburg he entered Center College, Danville, and was graduated with the highest class rating, as valedictorian of the class of 1880, receiving the degree of Master of Arts. During the year 1880 he taught school, and in 1881 entered the First National Bank of Harrodsburg, which he left in 1882 to become a partner in the retail grocery and merchandise firm of Curry & Company.
In 1866 this concern embarked in the wholesale grocery business, and continued with consistent growth and advancement up to 1903, when the business was destroyed by fire. When the new plant was erected the business was reorganized as the N. L. Curry Grocery Company, in its present style, and since then has enjoyed a constantly increasing trade. The healthy growth of this enterprise may be largely attributed to the fact that it is conducted upon a sound business policy. The proprietor takes the stand that he is in business to serve, and with that view in mind most conscientiously works toward the purpose of an equitable distribution of his goods and a constant improvement of his business.

Mr. Curry is a firm believer that every man should be a producer, that he who is merely a consumer is a parasite. He is well versed in the history of Kentucky and is an enthusiastic supporter of the Historical Society in his county. As have been the members of his family for generations, he is a devout member of the Presbyterian Church, and an officer therein. He is always receptive and quick to respond to calls for the support of movements for the betterment and advancement of civic conditions. In his pleasant home he is a most hospitable and engaging host.

On December 21, 1889, Mr. Curry was united in marriage with Miss Mary Cordelia Whittington, who prior to their marriage was the teacher of the Daughters of Charity. He was the son of an old and famous institution ranking high in Kentucky’s list of colleges.

H. PRESTON SIGHTS, M. D. A Kentucky physician and surgeon for over a quarter of a century, Doctor Sights represents one of the very old families of the state. He is a descendant of Jacob Sights, who came from Europe to the American colonies and was on the American side through the Revolutionary war. He married a Miss Preston, of Pennsylvania. After the war he came West and settled in Henderson County, Kentucky, and spent the rest of his life as a planter at Cairo. He was a Revolutionary soldier. The grandfather of Doctor Sights was Preston Sights, a native of Henderson County, who spent his life in this section as a planter and slave owner. He died at Cairo at the age of ninety-two. Preston Sights was a son of David Sights, who also spent his life in Henderson County, where three or four generations of the family have been identified with agricultural affairs.

James J. Sights, father of Doctor Sights, was born near Cairo in Henderson County in 1835, and spent all of his life in that community as a farmer. He died at Robards in 1914, a very wealthy and a highly respected man, a devout member and elder of the Christian Church and deeply interested in Masonry. James J. Sights married Miss Annie Russell Sanderfer, who was born in 1836 and reared in Henderson County, and at the age of eighty-four makes her home with her son Doctor Sights. She became the mother of five children: John E., a contractor and lumber dealer, who died at Robards at the age of fifty-three; H. Preston; James, a farmer who died at Niagara, Kentucky, at the age of thirty-two; Eugene, an oil operator living at Fowlerton, Texas; and Thomas, a farmer who died at Niagara at the age of twenty-six.

Doctor Sights grew up in Henderson County, attended rural schools and was educated and graduated with the B. B. in 1882 from the Corydon College Institute at Corydon, Kentucky. Following that he had two years of experience as clerk in a drug store at Topeka, Kansas, and one year with W. S. Johnson, a druggist at Henderson, Kentucky. For six years he was in the drug business for himself at Robards and Corydon, Kentucky. In the meantime, in 1889, he registered to study at the State University of Pharmacy, and subsequently entered the University of Louisville as a medical student, receiving his M. D. degree in 1894. Until 1896 he practiced at Henderson, and then continued his advanced studies at the New York Polyclinic until 1898, in which year he was appointed first assistant superintendent to the Western State Hospital at Hopkinsville, Kentucky. He was at that post of duty four years, and in 1901 removed to Paducah to engage in private practice. In 1910 Doctor Sights was appointed superintendent of the Western State Hospital, and held that office from July 1, 1910, until July 1, 1916. Since then he has been engaged in a general practice at Paducah, with offices in the City National Bank Building.

Doctor Sights served six years as health officer of Paducah, is a past president of the McCracken County Medical Society, a member of the State Medical Society, a member of the American Medical Association, and a fellow of the American Medical Psychological Society. During the World war he was chairman of the Medical Advisory Board of District No. 2, comprising five counties, and also chairman of the Home Service of the Red Cross. He was a participant in other features of the war program. Doctor Sights is now acting assistant surgeon of the United States Public Health Department.

Politically he is a republican, is an elder of the Christian Church and is affiliated with Plain City Lodge No. 449, A. F. and A. M.; Paducah Chapter No. 30, R. A. M.; Paducah Commandery No. 11, K. T.; and is a member of the American Legion and the Country Club. He and his family live in one of the modern and attractive homes of the city, at 711 Jefferson Street.

In November, 1886, at Cairo, Kentucky, Doctor Sights married Miss Virginia Niles, daughter of Rev. A. A. and Mary (Philips) Niles. Her father was a Baptist minister and her mother is still living at Henderson, Kentucky. They have two children: Maj. Warren P. Sights and Ethel Virginia.

Warren P. Sights graduated from the Paducah High School, received his Bachelor of Science degree from the University of Chicago in 1908, and in 1915 graduated with the M. D. degree from Rush Medical College. He was a member of the Black Friars dramatic organization at the University and is also a Phi Kappa Sigma, Nu Sigma Nu, Theta Nu Epsilon, and a member of the Alpha Omega Alpha honorary medical fraternity. His abilities brought him recognition while a student in Chicago. After graduating he served one year as resident surgeon at the Presbyterian Hospital in that city. For two years he was assistant to Dr. A. D. Bevan, one of America’s distinguished surgeons and a professor in Rush Medical College. Sights was also assistant instructor in the surgical department of the college for two years.

On May 17, 1917, he was commissioned a captain in the Medical Reserve Corps, and was assigned duty in training physicians in different camps. May 19, 1918, he was sent overseas to France, had his first experience in a large army hospital in Paris, and then became assistant of United States Surgical Team No. 72 and took charge of his team at the front after the Chateau Thierry drive. He was with the shock division at the front until the signing of the armistice, and was then put in command of Army Base Hospital No. 13. While at the front he was promoted to the rank of major and was mustered out April 19, 1919, and since then has been associated with his father in practice. Major Sights is a republican, a member of the First Christian Church, is affiliated with Plain City Lodge No. 449, A. F. and A. M.; Paducah Lodge No. 217 of the Elks, and is a member of the Country Club.

Ethel Virginia Sights is a graduate of the Paducah High School and of the College of Music at Cincinnati. She married Lieut. Page B. Blakemore, and they reside at Isabella, Tennessee, where he is assistant superintendent of the Isabella Copper Mines. Mr. and Mrs. Blakemore have one son, Page Preston Blakemore, born January 3, 1919.
Ewen D. Isenberg. With the exception of about two years Ewen D. Isenberg has lived continuously before the people of Metcalfe County as the incumbent of positions of public trust for a period of twenty-five years, during which time he has demonstrated the possession of executive qualities of large calibre and a capacity for putting into effect his conscientious desire to be of service to his fellow-citizens. Formerly for a long period the holder of a postmastership, since 1896 he has occupied the office of Circuit Court of Metcalfe County. In 1868 he also filled the office of circuit judge, and in the fall of 1892 he was a candidate for the office of county clerk and was elected without opposition.

Mr. Isenberg was born on a farm in Monroe County, Kentucky, March 4, 1868, a son of John M. and Martha Emeline (Goode) Isenberg. His grandfather, Daniel Isenberg, was born in 1798, at Jonesboro, Tennessee, and in 1828 removed to Monroe County, Kentucky, where his death occurred in 1868. He was a extensive and successful farmer and also operated a grist mill, being rated among the substantial men of his community. He married Lydia Molder, who was born at Jonesboro, in 1801, and died in Monroe County in 1872.

John M. Isenberg was born January 21, 1834, at Jonesboro, Tennessee, and from the age of eleven years was a member of the 1st Masonic Lodge at Bell County, Kentucky, where he had completed his education in that city. In 1843, when he was nineteen years of age, he moved to a farm, in young manhood he adopted the pursuits of the soil as the medium through which to work out his success, and was so engaged until the outbreak of the war between the states, when, in 1861, he became a United States soldier, enlisting in the Ninth Regiment, Kentuck Volunteer Infantry, with which he served throughout the period of the war. Mr. Isenberg's regiment saw much hard fighting, in all of which he showed himself a brave and faithful soldier. He was captured at Stone River, although exchanged shortly thereafter, and other of the leading engagements in which he participated were Shiloh, Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain. After his return from the war he turned his attention to mercantile pursuits and eventually became a leading merchant at Emberton, Monroe County, where he owned and operated first a flour and grist mill and later a water-power flour and grist mill. In 1881 he retired from active pursuits and removed to Metcalfe County, where his death occurred near Cyclone July 25, 1886. He was a man of excellent business abilities, strict integrity and good citizenship, and enjoyed in full degree the esteem and confidence of his associates. A republican in politics, he took only a good citizen's interest in public matters, but served capably as coroner of Monroe County for one term. For many years he was an elder of the Free Will Christian Church. Mr. Isenberg married first Mrs. Melvina Lloyd, of Monroe County, who died in that county, leaving one child, William Harrison, who was engaged in farming until his death, in 1897, at Rocky Hill Station, Edmonson County, Kentucky. Mr. Isenberg's second marriage was to Miss Ada C. Goodwin, who was born in Washington County, Tennessee, and was reared in Monroe County from the age of fourteen years. She died at Summer Shade, Metcalfe County, in 1904. She and Mr. Isenberg were the parents of the following children: Elizabeth, who died at Bonar, Tennessee, at the age of forty-three years; Sarah Jane, who died at the age of two years; Andrew P., who died when three years of age; Lydia Susan, who died at the age of five years; and John J., who now resides at the widow of Smith Bush, who was a farmer and stock raiser of that locality; Thomas B., a leading merchant of Persimmon, Monroe County; Ewen D., of this record; Adaline, the wife of Thomas Dubree, foreman in a coal mine at Nortonville, Kentucky; Cora E., the wife of David Stinnett, a coal miner of Ravencroft, Tennessee; Gertrude C., the wife of Robert M. Chat-reared and married in Harlan County, and lived in this county practically all his life, his home being located at the mouth of Poor Fork, and there he was engaged in farming and merchandising. In politics he was a republican. During the war between the North and the South he enlisted and was made captain of Company E, Forty-seventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry. Stricken with typhoid fever, he started for home but died before he reached it, passing away, as before stated, at London, Kentucky. He married a third cousin, Matilda Howard, who was born in Harlan County in 1838, which is now included in Bell County. Her death occurred at Gross, Harlan County, April 3, 1921. Their children were as follows: Elhanan M., who owns and operates a portion of the old homestead, the remainder being now occupied by the Baxter family of Harlan County; John Jacob, who died in infancy; and Moses W., who was second in order of birth; and three sons who died in infancy.

Moses W. Howard attended the local schools of Harlan County, and was reared on his father's farm. When he was seventeen years old he went into the lumber woods, and was engaged in logging and various other occupations, and later learned the carpenter trade, which he followed until 1888. He was then elected Circuit Court clerk of Harlan County, on the republican ticket, and has been successively re-elected in 1903, 1909 and 1915 for terms of six years each, his present term expiring in January, 1922. He has held other offices, for four years being a police judge of Harlan, and for ten years a member of the Board of Education. A member of the Presby terian Church, of which he is a trustee. F raternally he belongs to Harlan Lodge No. 879, F. and A. M.; Harlan Lodge No. 148, I. O. O. F.; Middleboro Lodge No. 110, B. P. O. E., and to the Improved Order of Red Men. He owns a desirable and comfortable modern residence at 302 Culver Street, Harlan, and is a director and stockholder in the Anderson Bank and Trust Company, of which he is a trustee. He is active in the work of the Presbyterian Church, of which he is a trustee. From 1860 to the present time Mr. Howard has been a very prominent man serving as a member of the Kentucky State Assembly, as a justice of the peace, and as county judge of Harlan County, to which offices he was appointed by Governor James B. McCreary, and served until his death. Mr. and Mrs. Howard became the parents of the following children: George Turner, who resides at Harlan, is vice president and general manager of the Harlan State Bank; Margaret M., who resides at Ross Point, Harlan County, is the wife of Isom Jones, a farmer; William James Robert, who is a farmer of Hardin County; Rella Catherine, who resides at Harlan, is the widow of Wade Skidmore, former county superintendent of schools of Harlan County, who died in 1904 at Harlan; Elhanan M., Jr., who is a physician and surgeon of Harlan; George Lillian, who resides at Harlan, married A. C. Jones, county superintendent of schools of Harlan County and whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work; and Mary Louise, who resides at Harlan, married George Ward, stenographer for the Kentenia Corporation, large holders of coal lands. Having held his present office for so many years, Mr. Howard is an expert with reference to its various details, and his manner of attending to them meets with the approval of all concerned. As a citizen he is recognized as being one of the level-headed, reliable and efficient men of Harlan, and one in whom implicit confidence may be, and is, placed.

Jacob Lee Cox, deputy collector of internal revenue at Frankfort, has been in the revenue service for over a quarter of a century, and is a member of one of the old and respected pioneer families of Kentucky.

His paternal ancestors came from England to Maryland in Colonial times. His grandfather, Jacob Cox, was born in Kentucky in 1830 and in 1842 he came to Texas, where he was engaged in a mercantile business, being one of the first general stores there. Subsequently he located on the Elkhorn at Stedman town in Franklin County, followed farming. By trade he was an expert saddler, and the work he did in that line was unsurpassed in ingenuity and artistic skill. He died at Stedman town in 1878. He served as a soldier in the Mexican war and held the rank of colonel in the old Kentucky Militia. Col. Jacob Cox married Mary Fenwick, who was born in Kentucky in 1791, and died at Stedman town when 100 years of age.

Leonard James Cox, father of Jacob Lee Cox, was born in Franklin County in 1830. He spent most of his life in his native community, conducted a large farm for many years, but in 1895 practically retired from business and removed to Houston, Texas, where he employed his time and capital to some extent in the real estate business. He died at Houston in 1912. For several terms he was chosen to represent Franklin County in the Legislature, and was a democrat and a member of the Baptist Church. Leonard J. Cox married Sophronia Stedman, who was born at Stedman town in Franklin County, 1834 and died at Houston, Texas, in 1900. The Stedmans were a Welsh family who were Colonial settlers in Massachusetts. Her father, Eben H. Stedman, was born in Boston in 1807, and came to Kentucky in early life with his father's family. He built and operated a paper mill which was the central institution of the village of Stedman town in Franklin County. He was also a farmer, merchant, and grocery store owner. He left Kentucky and moved to the plains of Southwestern Texas, and died in Live Oak County, that state, in 1887. The children of Leonard James Cox and wife were: Louis L., a farmer at Stedman town; L. J. Jr., an attorney by profession, now serving as tax commissioner for the Southern Pacific Railroad, with home at Houston, Texas; Dr. Eben S., a physician of Galveston, Texas; Mary Belle, who resides at Dalhart, Texas; and Daisy, who resides at Houston; Jacob L.; C. B., a railroad man, living at Dalhart, Texas; and Nellie, who resides at Houston, Texas. She died in 1890, and was married to Dr. Charles O. Rich, a prominent surgeon of Omaha.

Jacob Lee Cox was born at Stedman town July 9, 1863, and when ten years of age, being a boy of frail health, his parents sent him to the southwest border to live with his grandfather Stedman in Live Oak County, Texas. He grew up there in the home of his uncle, Cornelius Cox, and had a thorough training and experience as a ranch hand and also acquired a good education. At the age of nineteen he returned to Stedman town, Kentucky, and for a time looked after his father's farm. He then entered the Confederate army for four years served as deputy sheriff under John W. Gaines of Franklin County. He then continued farming and stock raising on his father's old place until 1893, when he entered the revenue service as a storekeeper. Twenty years later, in 1913, he was appointed deputy collector of internal revenue, and has performed those duties since that date with offices in the Federal Building. His home is at 110 Washington Street, and he has been a resident of Frankfort since 1893.

Mr. Cox is a democrat and a member of the Baptist Church, has been affiliated with the Masonic Order for twenty-five years, is a member of Hiram Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., Frankfort Chapter No. 3.
R. A. M., Frankfort: Commandery No. 4, K. T. He was active in the several war drives in Franklin County, being a bond and saving stamp buyer, and assisted in every cause for the successful prosecution of the war.

November 2, 1904, at Cincinnati, Ohio, Mr. Cox married Miss Nellie Thomas, daughter of Harry and Mary (Schofield) Thomas. Both her parents are now deceased. Mr. Cox has been a farmer in Franklin County, and Mr. and Mrs. Cox have two children: Louis, born February 4, 1907, and Sophronia, born January 29, 1909.

JOHN W. CALL, president and manager of Call Brothers Hardware Company of Pikeville, wholesalers and retailers, is one of the most energetic and successful business men of Pike County, and one whose example has exerted a constructive influence on his community, which is shown on every hand. He was born in Washington County, Virginia, December 14, 1868, a son of William P. and Rebecca (Smith) Call.

In 1873 William P. Call moved to Pike County, Kentucky. He was a carpenter by trade, and was a contractor and builder here for several years, developing his connections until he had a large contracting business and acquired considerable wealth. He also operated a sawmill on Shelby Creek for twenty-two or twenty-three years, on which he carried on his business in a careful manner and deserved the prosperity which he enjoyed and the respect which he received. He was perhaps the most zealous of a race of men who have contributed so largely to the prosperity of the county.

He died January 1919, when sixty-nine years of age. He had married an eighteen-year-old girl, ten of whom, seven sons and three daughters, still survive. They are: Mrs. John C. Call, a remarkable family. Of them all John W. Call is the eldest.

Growing up at Pikeville, John W. Call attended the schools of the county seat and made himself useful as a carpenter under his father's supervision. As he learned his trade and the proper methods of doing business he began taking contracts on his own account, and executed them so well that he built up a valuable connection. He also operated a sawmill on Crocus Creek, and owned an interest in the Big Sandy, Sea Gull and H. M. Stafford steamboats, which operated on the Big Sandy. For three years Mr. Call acted as an engineer on one or other of these boats, and during this latter period, together with his brother, J. C. Call, opened a small hardware store and tin shop under the name of Call Brothers. This business proved so profitable that in 1905 the partners incorporated the Call Brothers Hardware Company, of which Mr. Call became president and manager, and since then he has devoted himself to the conduct and expansion of this concern. The business has grown in a remarkable manner, necessitating the erection of a brick storeroom expressly for this company's retail trade. The wholesale business is also heavy, and the commercial standing of the company is of the highest. The brothers are also undertakers, Mr. Call being a graduate of the Clark School of Embalming of Cincinnati, Ohio, and his son is also a graduate of this same institution. Mr. Call is a man who recognizes a good business proposition, and when he meets them, so is now erecting a modern garage to afford proper and satisfactory accommodation for car owners. For some time he has been agent for his vicinity of the Dodge cars. When the project of providing a proper water supply for Pikeville was launched he was one of the men who originated the necessary company, and still holds his stock, although his original associates have all dropped out. For four years he served as a member of the City Council of Pikeville, and on leaving that body did not cease to advance the interests of the city, for he has always been one of its most enthusiastic boosters.

In 1889 Mr. Call was united in marriage with Miss Ollie Sowards, a daughter of H. C. Sowards, who was born in Pike County in 1874. Mr. and Mrs. Call have one child, William P., Jr., who is associated with his father in business. The Presbyterian Church has in him a devout member, and he is serving the local congregation as elder. Long a republican, he has taken an active part in the affairs of his party. Fraternally he is a Blue Lodge and Chapter Mason, and belongs to the Odd Fellows. It would be difficult to find a man more thoroughly typical of the best interests of Pike County, and he has the satisfaction of knowing that his efforts in behalf of his community are appreciated and that he stands very high in public esteem.

C. M. RUSSELL, M. D. The debt owed by humanity to the skill, patience, sacrifice, and talents of the medical profession can never be adequately discharged. The noble men who belong to its ranks when they take the oath of Hippocrates appreciate the fact that they have entered upon a career which will require of them an immolation of self and a constant dedication to the work of serving their kind. Very few of these physicians and surgeons fail to live up to the highest conception of their calling, while many transcend all ordinary bounds of man, and win their admiration and appreciation of the multitudes. Adair County numbers among its medical men some of the finest characters to be found in the country, and one deserving of special mention because of the work he has done and the service he is constantly rendering is Dr. C. M. Russell of Columbia.

Doctor Russell was born at Louisville, Kentucky, June 21, 1870, a son of Joseph Russell, and grandson of James M. R., born in Adair County, Kentucky, in 1806, his father having located there at an early day, when he came to Kentucky from Scotland, by way of Virginia. James M. Russell moved to Columbia in young manhood, and died in this city when he was eighty-eight years old. During his long and useful life he became very prominent, and served as postmaster of Columbia from the beginning of President Lincoln's first administration to the beginning of President Grant's. When Washington was first appointed. He was one of the two men in Adair County who supported Abraham Lincoln for the presidency in 1860. His wife, who was a native of Virginia, bore the maiden name of Susan Mitchell, and she, too, died at Columbia at an advanced age.

Joseph Russell was born in Columbia, May 1, 1840, and died in this city in June, 1905. Growing up at Columbia, he attended its schools, and shared his father's admiration for Abraham Lincoln and the principles he represented, so that when war was declared between the two sections of the country he enlisted, in 1861, in the Third Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and served until peace was proclaimed, participating in the battles of Chickamauga, Shiloh, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Stone River, Resaca, and others of less importance, and was with General Sherman on his memorable March to the Sea. At the time of his discharge he was first lieutenant of companies K and L of regiment. During his period of service he was twice wounded, once at the battle of Resaca, and again at that of Stone River, being shot through the shoulder both times.

Following his honorable discharge Joseph Russell located at Louis ville, Kentucky, and for forty years maintained connections with the firm of Bamberger, Bloom & Company, the largest wholesale dry-goods house then in business in the South. In 1904 he returned to Columbia, and lived in retirement until his death. From the time he cast his first vote he was a zealous republican. Early uniting with the Presbyterian Church, he continued a strong churchman until his demise. For many years he maintained membership with the Masonic fraternity and with the Grand Army of the Republic. Joseph Russell married Susan Frishie, who was born in Wayne County, Kentucky, in January, 1848, and died at Columbia January 5, 1906. Their children were as follows: Doctor Russell, who was the eldest; Jo, who is in the insurance business at Louis ville, Kentucky; and three daughters who died in infancy.

Doctor Russell attended the graded schools of Louisville, Rugby College of that same city for a year, and then, in 1889, entered the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville, from which he was graduated in June, 1890, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He was also graduated from the medical department of the University of Louisville in March, 1891, with the degree of Bachelor of Medicine. He practiced the work of his profession at Columbia, where he has since remained, and has built up a very valuable general medical and surgical practice, with the exception of 1884 and 1885, when he was engaged in practice at Marceline, Missouri. His offices are in the Jones Building on the Public Square. He owns a modern residence on Greensburg Avenue, which is one of the most comfort able and homelike in the city. A republican, he has been active in local affairs and is now serving as coronor of Adair County, and has held this office for twenty-four consecutive years. For sixteen years he was secretary of the Adair County Board of Pension Examiners, during the McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft administrations. He belongs to the Presbyterian Church. A Mason, he holds membership in Columbia Lodge No. 96, F. and A. M.; and Columbia Chapter No. 7, R. A. M. He also belongs to the Knights of Pythias, Woodmen of the World, Modern Woodmen of America, and the Knights of the Maccabees. As a member of the Adair County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, the American Medical Association, the Russell Springs Medical Society and the Green River Medical Society he keeps in touch with modern progress in his profession, and gives these organizations the benefit of his ideas and co-operation.

Like so many of his calling, Doctor Russell offered his services to the Government during the period of war, but was rejected on account of disability. There fore as he found he could not go to the front he threw himself into patriotic and philanthropic activities, and was useful for he participated in all of the drives, bought bonds and stamps, and contributed not only of his time but also of his means to all the war organizations.

In 1891 Doctor Russell married Miss Mary Nell, a daughter of Capt. George and Rachel (Turner) Nell, both of whom are deceased. The father was a captain in Hewitt's battery during the war of the '60s, and later served as clerk of the Adair County Court. Mrs. Russell died in 1904, at Columbia, leaving one daughter, Regina, of Columbia, who is the wife of D. W. Denton, a manufacturer of spokes and staves. Doctor Russell married in 1906, at Bowling Green, Kentucky, Miss Angeline Clark, a daughter of Lieut. John and Emily (Curd) Clark, both now deceased. During the above mentioned war Lieutenant Clark served under General Morgan. Returning from the war, he engaged in farming and stockraising for many years. Doctor and Mrs. Russell have two children: Frances, who was born November 5, 1896; and Catherine, who was born March 9, 1911.

As a physician Doctor Russell measures up to the best standards of his profession, and is now accepted as one of the leading exponents of the healing art in this part of the state. As a citizen he has never shirked any duty, but manfully shouldered the responsibilities of public office and so creditably acquitted himself that he has been returned again and again by his appreciative constituents. As a man he has few equals, for he is considerate, kindly, generous and efficient, giving lavishly of his knowledge and talents and striving in every way to be of service to his fellow men.

Frederick P. Hill, of Columbia, is not only numbered among the reliable and successful druggists of Adair County, but he is also on the Board of Directors of the dependable Bank of Columbia and a stockholder of the National Bank of Kentucky. A native of Virginia, he moved to Monroe County, Kentucky, many years ago, and died there, having been a farmer for a long period, beginning as such when pioneer conditions prevailed in that part of Kentucky.

The birth of Fred P. Hill took place at Columbia, February 13, 1856, and he is a son of Jo Hill, who was born in Monroe County, Kentucky in 1818, and died at Columbia in 1860. His father was a native of Virginia, moved to Monroe County, Kentucky, many years ago, and died there, having been a farmer for a long period, beginning as such when pioneer conditions prevailed in that part of Kentucky.

Jo Hill grew up in Monroe County, but left it soon after reaching manhood's estate and located permanently at Columbia. Here he established himself as a merchant and became one of the leading men of this section, serving for a term as sheriff of Adair County, and always taking an active interest in local affairs. In 1896 he moved to Horse Cave, Hart County, Kentucky, and for two years conducted a hardware store. His health had been failing for some time and he retired. At different intervals he had visited Texas in the hope of benefiting his health, and it was on one of these trips that he passed away. A staunch democrat, he was always prominent in politics. While in the office of sheriff he many times demonstrated his resourcefulness and courage when compelled to enforce the law, and could have continued in office for a much longer period had he cared to do so, but increasing business cares and the beginning of the failure of his health caused him to withdraw from the arena, much to the disappointment of his friends, who would have been gratified to have supported him in every way possible to advance his political interests. A man of high character, he found in the creed of the Christian Church the expression of his religious belief, and he remained on its membership rolls as long as life continued. Jo Hill married Mary Jane Paull, who was born in Cumberland County, Kentucky, in 1826, and died at Columbia in 1888. They were the parents of nine children, and the children born to them were as follows: Henry Franklin, who is a large farm owner and lives at Lexington, Kentucky; Fred P., who was in second in order of birth; and Georgie, who died at the age of seven years.

Fred P. Hill first attended the public schools and later the Lindsey-Wilson Training School of Columbia, leaving the latter at the age of seventeen years to go into a drug store at Columbia as a clerk. After holding that position for five years he bought this drug store, the property of his uncle, the late T. E. Paull, January 9, 1908, and conducted it alone until 1917, when, on account of the increase in the volume of business, he found it expedient to take into partnership O. A. Taylor, and they now have one of the leading drug stores in Southern Central Kentucky. Mr. Hill owns the modern store building and fixtures, which are located on the west side of the Public Square. He also owns a modern residence on High Street, where he maintains a comfortable home. For some time he has been on the directorate of the Columbia Bank, and is a stockholder of the Monticello Banking Company and the National Bank of Kentucky at Louisville. In politics, like his father, he is a democrat. During the late war he was in very active part in local war work, and at Kentucky at Loretto, a year and a half in the marine service. He bought bonds and stamps and contributed to all of the war organizations with lavish generosity. Reared in the atmosphere of a religious home, he early joined the Christian Church, of which his parents were members, and is still one of its pillars.

In September, 1919, Mr. Hill was united in marriage with Miss Carmon Belcher, a daughter of W. O. and Ella (Wood) Belcher, residents of Greenville, Kentucky, where Mr. Belcher is engaged in the practice of law. Mrs. Hill was graduated from the Western Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and is a highly cultured lady. Mr. and Mrs. Hill have no children.

Solemn and reliable, Mr. Hill knows his trade and how to meet its demands. He and his partner take pride in making their establishment one of the finest of its kind in this part of the state, and enjoy an immense patronage. Having spent all of his life at Columbia, it is but natural that Mr. Hill should display a very sincere interest in the solving of its various civic problems and devote some attention to them. His business responsibilities have probably prevented his entering politics personally, but he gives an intelligent support to the candidates of his choice, and when they are elected does all in his power to assist them in rendering a proper service to the taxpayers. Such men as he form the great backbone of American citizenship and are a valuable asset to any community in which they see fit to operate.

Cortez Sanders. Combined with a natural fearlessness and resourcefulness, Sheriff Cortez Sanders, of Adair County, possesses an innate appreciation of the dignity of the law and the necessity for its proper enforcement. He entered upon the discharge of his onerous duties with the determination to live up to the highest conception of his oath of office, and no man can truthfully point to a single deviation from it. Holding office during the trying period following the termination of the war, as well as during its final year, he has had much need of tact and courage, but has brought his county through the reconstruction years very creditably, and his records show a remarkable freedom from the more serious violations of the law. A man like Mr. Sanders is a credit to his community, to his family and to himself, for unless he had possessed the requisite characteristics he could never have been the success he is.

Sheriff Sanders was born on a farm in Adair County, seven miles south of Columbia, June 7, 1879, a son of W. F. Sanders, and grandson of Thompson Sanders, who was born in 1806, in North Carolina, where his ancestors had located upon coming to the American Colonies from England. Thompson Sanders died in Adair County, Kentucky, in 1806, having been a farmer of this region for a number of years.

W. F. Sanders was born on his father's farm in Adair County, in 1851, and has lived in the county all his life. At the time of his marriage he moved on his present farm, and here he has been very successfully engaged in farming. A strong republican, he served as road commissioner of Adair County for two years during the later '60s, but aside from that has not rendered any public service. Early uniting with the Christian Church, he has since then been one of the pillars of the local congregation, and for the past fifteen years has served it as a deacon. He married Joan Powell, who was born in Adair County in 1852, and they became the parents of the following children: Patria, who married W. H. Hamon, a merchant of Glenville, Adair County; Effie, who is unmarried and lives with her parents; Sheriff Sanders, who was third in order of birth; Mattie, who died at Joppa, Adair County, when twenty-five years of age, married L. P. Coffey, who died in Adair County, where he was engaged in merchandising; L. M., who is a farmer of Taylor County; Eldridge, who lives with his parents, is assisting in operating the home farm; Leslie, who died at the age of three months; and Charles E., who is engaged in the insurance business at Lamar, Colorado.

Coming up on the farm Sheriff Sanders learned to be a good farmer, and at the same time prepared himself by attendance at the rural schools for school-teaching, and from the time he was twenty-one years old until he was thirty-one he was an educator, having schools in different parts of Adair County. At the same time he was engaged in farming. When he left the schoolroom permanently he settled down to farming on his own farm, leaving it to assume the duties of his present office. He entered upon his present office in January, 1919, and has served continuously to November, 1917. His offices are in the courthouse. In August, 1919, he sold his farm at an excellent figure, but still retains his comfortable modern residence on Jamestown Street, Columbia. Ever since he cast his first vote he has been active in politics as a republican. During the period that this country was a participant in the World war Sheriff Sanders was numbered among the active local workers, and rendered valuable assistance in the Red Cross and other drives. His contributions to the various organizations were very generous.

In February, 1913, Sheriff Sanders was married to Miss Bertha Breeding in Adair County. She is a daughter of J. A. and Maria (Acre) Breeding, residents of this county, where Mr. Breeding is engaged in farming. Mr. and Mrs. Sanders have one son, William Breeding, who was born March 4, 1917.

W. R. Myers. Self-help has accomplished about all of the worth-while things in the world, and the door of opportunity has generally been opened by the men who have found success awaiting them within. In every locality every year there are hundreds of young men who cherish ambitions in one direction or another, but only a certain small percentage ever reach the top of the ladder. It requires a stalwart spirit to fight one's way through discouragements and temporary failures, but naught is worth winning that is not worth fighting for, and the individual who has won his own way to success finds the fruits thereof much sweeter than he who has not been called upon to make the effort. Prominent among the self-made men of Adair County is to be mentioned W. R. Myers, of Columbia, proprietor of the leading flour mill in the county and a man who is identified with other matters of a business and civic character in his community.

Mr. Myers was born at Glasgow, Barren County, Kentucky, September 8, 1860, a son of Robert and Mary Ellen (Tracy) Myers. His grandfather, Mike Myers, was born in 1788, in Germany, and as a young man immigrated to the United States, settling in Barren County, Kentucky. Having learned the trade of miller in the old country, he established himself in business in the same line upon his arrival here, and had the distinction of building the first steam mill, a flour mill, ever erected in Barren County, it being necessary for him to haul the machinery and equipment by wagon from Louisville. He died at Carol Hill, Barren County, in 1863. He reared four sons, all of whom became millers.

Robert Myers, the father of W. R. Myers, was born in 1821, in Barren County, Kentucky, and received his education in the rural schools in the vicinity of Glasgow, a community in which he made his home throughout his life. Under his father's teachings he early became skilled in the very competent millwright, and his energies throughout his career were devoted to flour milling, in which he won a modest success. He died at Glasgow in 1909, in the faith of the Christian Church, of which he had always been a strong supporter. In politics he was a democrat. Mr. Myers married Mary Ellen Tracy, who was born in 1832 in Missouri, and died at Glasgow in 1907, and to them there were born the following children: Benjamin A., a flour miller, who died at Glasgow at the age of forty-five years; Elizabeth, the wife of John Saunders, of near Glasgow, formerly a miller but now a farmer; Alice, who died near Glasgow; aged for a youth, as the wife of George Mithens, a flour miller, who also passed away there; John T., a flour miller, who died at Glasgow, aged forty years;
Jannie, the wife of John Pritchard, of Sonora, Kentucky, formerly a flour miller; W. R., of this notice; Sallie, of Denison, Texas, the widow of Dr. Charles Rutledge, for some years a successful physician of Denison;
James Hisc, formerly a flour miller, now engaged in the hardware business at El Paso, Texas; and Emma, the wife of Felix Bradford, one of the successful business men of Glasgow, where he is the owner of a garage and a hardware store.

W. R. Myers was educated in the rural schools of Barren County, which he left at the age of sixteen years. When he was but eight years of age he had entered his father's mill, where he learned the milling business in its every department, branch and particular. In 1867 he removed to Greensburg, Kentucky, where he built the first roller flour mill ever erected at that point, and this he operated for twelve years before selling out. In 1902 he came to Columbia and bought the roller mill situated on the Campbellsville Pike, just at the edge of the town, and in the operation of this enterprise, the leading one of its kind in Adair County and with a first-class business, he has had, at least, in relation of partners, his son, Fred Myers, and E. B. Barger, his son-in-law. Mr. Myers has been variously connected with other enterprises. He built, owned and operated the electric light plant at Monticello, Kentucky, which he sold in 1921, and also built, in 1906 the electric light plant at Columbia, which he sold in 1910. He and his son Fred were the first to make a success of carrying passengers, mail, express and freight in motor cars from Columbia to Campbellsville, although this business had been attempted three times before, all such ventures having failures. Mr. Myers and the members of his family always have made a success of their pioneer ventures into any field of enterprise, and the prosperity of these undertakings make evident their possession of superior ability and versatility. Mr. Myers was appointed by Governor McCreary, upon recommendation by Attorney General James Garnett, as state examiner of licensed chauffeurs in 1913, and filled this office efficiently for four years, the duties of the position obliging him to visit the principal towns in Kentucky and hold examinations for chauffeurs.

Mr. Myers is the owner of a modern residence near the Public Square, one of the most desirable in the city, in which he has his own electric light system, running water, hot and cold water, and conveniences. He is a democrat in his political views and takes an interest in the success of his party, but has not been an office seeker and is interested chiefly in public affairs as a good citizen. He is a member of the Christian Church, in which he is an elder, and is active in all its movements. Fraternally he is affiliated with Columbia Lodge No. 96, F. and A. M.; Columbia Chapter No. 7, R. A. M., of which he is past high priest; and Marion Commandery No. 24, K. T. He took an active part in all local war activities, assisted in all the drives, and bought bonds to the limit of his means, and he obeyed the laws in reference to his business, which was operated by the United States Government during the period of the war, in every way showing himself a 100 percent American citizen.

Mr. Myers was married in 1883, at Glasgow, Kentucky, to Miss Cattie Wilcoxson, a daughter of Newt and Margaret (Squires) Wilcoxson, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Wilcoxson was for many years a substantial farmer of Green County, Kentucky. To Mr. and Mrs. Myers there have been born four children: Robert Albert, born in 1883, a resident of Monticello, Kentucky, where he is employed as an electrician; Fred, born in 1888, a mechanic of Columbia, Kentucky, owner of a garage and partner of his father and brother-in-law in the operation of the flour mill; Myrtle, the wife of W. B. Barger of Columbia, manager of a professional baseball team, owner of a leading hardware store at Columbia, and a partner in the flour milling business; and Mary, the wife of H. M. Barnett, a successful business man of Chicago and St. Louis, who handles commercial automobiles, trucks and bodies.

Andrew Jackson Thompson. Andrew Jackson Thompson was born in Hart County, Kentucky, March 21, 1867, a son of S. W. and Fannie (McInteer) Thompson. His grandfather, Samuel Thompson, was born in 1801, in Virginia, and became a pioneer farmer of Metcalfe County, where he spent the remainder of his life in the pursuits of farming and stock raising, and died, honored and respected, in 1873. "Old Sorrel," as he was familiarly known among his neighbors, was a man of wonderful physique and prodigious strength, and many miles have come down regarding his prowess and feats of endurance. His son, S. W. Thompson, was born in 1839 in Metcalfe County, where he reared to farming pursuits and educated in the public schools. He was married in Metcalfe County, but about 1860 removed to Hart County, and there engaged in farming. Later, while still continuing his agricultural interests, he embarked in the insurance business and also carried on merchandising. His industry and good management combined to gain him success in the several ventures in which he was engaged, and at the time of his death, which occurred in 1917, he was accounted one of the well-to-do men of his part of Hart County. In politics he was a democrat, while his fraternal affiliation was with the Masonic Order. He was in the service of his country and generally supported the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of which he was a life long member. Mr. Thompson married Miss Fannie McInteer, who was born in 1833, near Edmonston, Metcalfe County, and died in Hart County, in 1910, and they became the parents of the following children: Telford T., a planter in the vicinity of Port Deposit, Alabama; William A. Thompson, who has paid a large share of the expenses of his education and is now engaged in farming; and George Henry Thompson, the age of fifty-one years, went for treatment to a hospital at Memphis, Tennessee, where he died during an unsuccessful operation; Andrew Jackson, of this review; Anna, the wife of William Burd, a farmer at Hardvville, Hart County; Mattie, the wife of Leo Burks, an employe of the street railway company at Lousiville; Lena, the wife of Forest Rhea, a farmer of Hardvville, Hardvine; Robert, a student at Colby College, Harriman, Tennessee; and J. P., who is engaged in the insurance business at Pineville, Mis-

Andrew J. Thompson received his early education in the rural schools of Hart County, this training being supplemented later by attendance at the Southern Normal School, Bowling Green, Kentucky, which he left in 1868. In the meanwhile he had commenced to teach in the rural schools of Simpson County, this state, at the age of nineteen years, and employed himself in this manner for a period of three years. Feeling the need of further training, and desiring to provide for himself along business lines, he pursued a course at the Indiana University at Valparaiso, and when he left that institution in 1890, came to Edmonton. Here he became principal of the graded school, a capacity in which he was engaged for three years, subsequently going to Hiseville, this state, and acting as principal of the school at that point for two years. Mr. Thompson returned to Edmonton in 1904 and entered the Peacock Banking House, and he has been employed as an assistant cashier. Two years later he was elected cashier, and in that capacity until August, 1910, when he was made president of the institution, an office in which he has remained to the present.

The Peoples Bank of Metcalfe County was established as a private bank in 1898 by C. W. Thompson, and in 1906 was incorporated as a state bank. Its officers at this time are: A. J. Thompson, president; J. R. Wilson, vice president, and Charles J. P. Carver, cashier. The capital stock is $20,000, the surplus and profits $12,000, and the deposits approximately $300,000. The banking house, a modern structure, is situated at the corner of Stockton and Main streets and is well and appropriately equipped. This institution stands high in the banking circles of Kentucky, and the confidence of the people. Mr. Thompson has been a member of the faith placed in its president. During the time he has been identified with the business interests and finances of Edmonton Mr. Thompson has always maintained a high standard and unflinching methods of procedure. He has followed constructive lines, and the weight of his character and the strength of his influence have aided in bringing others to his policy. He is the owner of a modern residence on Glasgow Street, one of the best streets in Edmonton, together with a farm of 220 acres, just at the edge of town and partly in the corporate limits, and also has five other farms in Metcalfe County, totaling 680 acres.

While his large interests have made him an exceedingly busy man, Mr. Thompson has never failed to do his full duty as a citizen. During the World war period he gave his services unreservedly to the cause, and was chairman of all the drives, except one, of Liberty Loans, Red Cross, etc., in Metcalfe County. He is chairman of the Metcalfe County Chapter of the American Red Cross and Government food inspector of Metcalfe County, and in addition contributed generously of his means in the support of every movement. Politically he supports the principles of the democratic party, while his religious connection is with the Presbyterian Church, in which he has served for a number of years as an elder.

In 1894, in Metcalfe County, Mr. Thompson was united in marriage with Miss Nora Hamilton, a daughter of James A. and Alice (Bell) Hamilton, the latter of whom is deceased. Mr. Hamilton, who is president of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Edmonton, is one of the extensive farmers and large landholders of this region, owning some 5,000 acres of land. To Mr. and Mrs. Thompson there were born six children: Elizabeth, born 1883, married Mr. LeMaster; Charles J. P., born 1885; James W., born 1888; William M., born 1890; Grace E., born 1892; and Nora A., born 1894. The three eldest children now reside at Edmonton, and the others at Hiseville. The three youngest children all reside at Edmonton, the eldest, Charles J. P., being president of the City National Bank; James W., a graduate of the State University at Frankfort, and a member of the State Bar; and William M., an attorney in private practice.

James H. Wisehart was born in Shelby County, two miles from his present home, January 13, 1891, a son of George and Mary (LeMaster) Wisehart. George Wisehart was also a native of Kentucky, where he was born in 1801, his parents having been natives of Maryland and early settlers of Jefferson County. One of his brothers, John, removed to Tennessee, where he died, and another, James, went to Illinois, where he passed away. Still another brother, was Harman, and a brother located in Jefferson County, who was a mechanic. There were also three sisters in the family, Cathrine, Christina America and Eliza. George Wisehart elected to remain in Kentucky, where he spent the remainder of an active career. As a young man he entered the Shelby County bank, where he married Mary LeMaster, a daughter of Hugh LeMaster, who was one of the well-known early farmers near the Shelby-Jefferson County line. Following his marriage Mr. Wisehart purchased a farm near the LeMaster property, and for many years carried on agricultural operations in that locality. His first wife died there at the age of sixty-two years, and he later married Elizabeth Blankenbaker, of Jefferson County, to whom he was married. He died at the age of eighty years, having married two wives and left two children living.

James H. Wisehart received his educational training in the public schools and was reared to agricultural pursuits. At the age of twenty-two years he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Burdon, a member of a fine old family of this region, a review of which will be found in the sketch of her brother, James W. Burdon, included with the review of the latter's son, Edward O. Burdon, elsewhere in this work. She is a daughter of one of the old pioneers of this locality, Ahauserus Burdon and his wife, Mary A. (Racer) Burdon. Following their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Wisehart engaged in farming in Shelby County, settling on a farm near his home, but in 1897 located on the present farm, the old Malone property of sixty-two acres. The house on this farm was erected about 1871 by Ahauserus Burdon, by whom it was occupied until his death, following which Mr. Wisehart bought the interest of the other heirs to the property. In addition to carrying on general farming operations, Mr. Wisehart gave special attention to raising produce for the Louisville market. He made the most of his opportunitie and took advantage of everything that would advance him in a legitimate way, and in this manner made better progress than some of his less industrious brother agriculturists. He has always been one of the hardest of workers, and to his untiring industry, together with economy, frugality, and fair dealing, is attributable to his success. His father was a white farmer of a later Republican, and the son is an adherent of the principles of the latter party. His religious connection is with Fisherville Christian Church.

After more than fifty years of happy married life Mrs. Wischart passed to her last rest March 2, 1915. She and her husband were the parents of the following children: G. W., A. S., Robert, A. M., Alma E. Moats, and three other children. Edgar, who is calling on agricultural operations on the farm adjoining that of his father, married Lena Curry and has seven children. Mary, Clara May, Edmund, Roy, Ethel and Edith (twins) and Alma; Edna, who is unmarried and has passed her thirty-eighth year.

She has devoted herself to the care of her parents; Elizabeth, who married Robert Smith, a farmer of Shelby County, and has three children. Henry, Ellen and Harvey; Rose N., one of the most popular young ladies at the Christian Church, whose death at the age of nineteen years caused universal sorrow in the community; and Anna Belle, the wife of Mr. Lashbrook, the proprietor of a store at Clark Station, Shelby County, and has one child, Evelyn.

Thomas J. Williamson. For nearly thirty years Thomas J. Williamson has been engaged in contracting and building at Pikeville, and his interests are largely centered in this work at the present time, although he also has numerous other connections, one of the most important of which is with the Bank and National Bank, of which institution he is vice president. To his skill and ability are due many of the imposing structures now occupied as residences or used for business purposes, and evidences are abundant of his having contributed largely to the generally pleasing architectural aspect of the thriving little city. He at all times has been a broad-minded and thoroughly earnest citizen.
Mr. Williamson was born on John's Creek, Pike County, Kentucky, March 4, 1873, a son of Freeman and Matilda (Scott) Williamson. Freeman Williamson was born on Tug River, Kentucky, near the present site of Williamson, West Virginia, which took its name from the Williamson family, or rather from one of its members, Wallace J. Williamson. During the war between the states Freeman Williamson served as a soldier in the Confederate Army, and at one time was a prisoner on Johnson's Island. Following the close of the conflict he engaged in farming in Pike County, and continued to apply himself to agricultural pursuits until his retirement some years before his death, which occurred in October, 1918, when he was eighty-four years of age. Mrs. Williamson, who was born on John's Creek, still survives his husband, at the age of eighty-five years, and makes her home with her son at Pikeville. They were the parents of twelve children, of whom ten survive, the eldest sixty-four years of age and the youngest thirty-nine, as follows: Barbara, the widow of D. E. Morris, of Pikeville; John L., a contractor and builder of Pikeville; Elizabeth, the wife of A. R. Lowe, a merchant of John's Creek; Belle, the wife of S. M. Davis, a merchant of Varney, Kentucky; Kentucky and makes her home with her son at Pikeville; R. L., a contractor of Williamson, West Virginia; Napoleon, farmer and stock dealer of Meta; Thomas J.; Mary, the wife of James Cains, of Varney; Dixie, the wife of Harlan Clevenger, an attorney of Horning, Oklaahoma; Ben, a farmer who died on John's Creek; and Maudie, who died as the wife of John Clark, of John's Creek.

Thomas J. Williamson spent his early school days at John, Kentucky, and attended school three years at Sidney, Kentucky, and later attended the public schools of Pikeville, to which place he came as a lad to learn the trade of carpenter. For three years he worked at a daily wage of fifty cents and board, and then joined his brother-in-law, D. B. Morris, with whom he carried on carpentry and contracting until the elder man's death.
Since then he has been in business by himself, and it is estimated that he has built fully one-third of the houses now standing at Pikeville, in the old and the new communities. He is the owner of many structures at Pikeville, and has been one of the main developing factors of the city, not only as a contractor and builder but as a contributor to educational, religious and civic enterprises and institutions.
In addition to understanding his business thoroughly
he has had the faculty of commanding excellent services from others, and as a large employer of labor has won an excellent reputation for consideration and truthfulness.

Mr. Williamson was the main organizer of the Day and Night National Bank of Pikeville, of which he is first vice president. The high esteem and confidence in which he is held was shown when he was able to secure subscriptions for $250,000 worth of stock. The comptroller at Washington, however, granted the bank's charter for $100,000 worth of stock, and the subscription was reduced accordingly. This bank, the affairs of which are in splendid condition, is said to have more stockholders than any other institution of its kind in the United States, and is strictly a community affair. In 1921 Mr. Williamson purchased the Peoples Bank of Pikeville, and he is also manager and sole proprietor of the Builders' Supply Company of Pikeville and has a number of other interests. In 1918 he bought about 100 acres of ground in the city and has laid out the Williamson addition, which he has improved and there has been over fifty houses built thereon and about 400 lots sold. This is the finest residential part of the town.
In politics Mr. Williamson is a democrat, but has not sought public office, and his religious connection is with the Christian Church. A man of strong and upright character, he has lent solidity and worth to the city of his early adoption.

On March 20, 1895, Mr. Williamson married Belle Weddington, daughter of William Weddington, of Coal Run, Kentucky, and they have two sons, David C. and Julius C.

Capt. William Johnson Stone, commissioner of Confederate pensions for the State of Kentucky, is either a resident of the surgical center of Cairo, or went to London to consult with the surgeons of various veteran hospitals of the war between the states, and for many years has enjoyed many exalted wings in the United Confederate Veterans of Kentucky. Captain Stone for ten years represented the First District in Congress, and while otherwise prominent in public affairs his business career has been largely spent on a farm.

Captain Stone, whose official residence is at Frankfort but whose legal residence is at the Point, in the southwestern corner of the state, was born in the old section of Caldwell County, now Lyon County, June 26, 1841. The Stones originally were Scotch people and Colonial settlers in Virginia. His great-great-grandfather, James Stone, was a native of Virginia, and spent most of his life as a farmer at Lewisburg in that state, where he died. Leasil Stone, father of Captain Stone, was born in the Spartanburg District of South Carolina, and as a young man came to what was then a part of Caldwell County, Kentucky, where he married and where he lived out his life as a farmer. He died in Lyon County January 11, 1872. He was a democrat in politics and a member of the Baptist Church.
Leasil Stone married Nancy Killen, who was born in the Spartanburg District, South Carolina, and died in Lyon County November 11, 1879. Her children were six in number: Temperance, who died in Lyons County at the age of ninety, was the wife of Andrew Brashen, a farmer, who died in Crittenden County; Mary, who became the wife of William White, a farmer, and both died in Lyon County, she at the age of forty-eight; Caleb, a Lyon County farmer, died while visiting in California, at the age of eighty-two; Sarah, who became the wife of Jacob Green, a farmer, and she died in Livingston County, Kentucky, in 1863; Frances, who died at the age of seventy-one, was the wife of Wesley Clinton, a farmer, and both died in the State of Washington; William Johnson, the youngest of the family.

Captain Stone was educated in the rural schools of Lyon County and spent the first twenty years of his life on his father's farm. In June, 1864, he enlisted in the Confederate Army, at first in Company G of the First Kentucky Cavalry, later in Company F of the Fifth Kentucky Cavalry, until after Morgan's raid through Ohio in 1863, and finally was in Company C of the First Battalion, Morgan's Mounted Men. He saw three years of active service, participating at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Jackson, Mississippi, Chickamauga, and many minor engagements. He was shot in June, 1864, at Cynthiana, Kentucky, his wound resulting in the loss of his right leg. He gave a full measure of devotion to the cause of the South.

After the war Captain Stone, undeterred by physical handicaps, resumed the responsibilities of farming in Lyon County, and for half a century has been one of the most respected and influential farmers in the county. He still owns his farm four miles west of Kuttawa.

As soon as civil rights were restored to the soldiers of the Confederacy he began taking an active part in politics as a democrat. In 1867 he was elected to represent Lyon and Caldwell counties in the Kentucky Legislature, serving during the session of 1867-68. In 1875 he was elected to represent Lyon and Marshall counties, and was speaker of the House of Representatives in the session of 1875-76. Again, in 1883, he was elected to represent the same counties. In November, 1884, Captain Stone was elected to Congress from the First Kentucky District, and served as one of the able members of the Kentucky delegation at Washington from March 4, 1885, until March 4, 1895, a period of ten years, embracing all of Cleveland's first administration and two years of the second administration. Captain Stone was a member of the Committee on Confederate pensions March 18, 1912, by Governor James McCreey and has filled that office for the past eight years. His headquarters are in the New State Capitol.

Captain Stone is a prominent layman of the Baptist Church, served for many years as clerk of the church at New Bethel in Lyon County, and for fourteen years was moderator of the Little River Association of Baptist. In the United Confederate Veterans he is a past commander of Camp No. 527, represented by membership in Lyon and Caldwell counties, served for ten years as brigadier general of the Second Brigade of the Kentucky Division, and for the past five years has been major general commanding the Kentucky Division of the Confederate Veterans.

October 29, 1867, at Cynthiana, Kentucky, Captain Stone married Miss Cornelia Weathers. She was born in Cynthiana in 1841 and died at Jackson, Mississippi, October 28, 1906. Her parents were Thomas B. and Susan Woodyard, and her father at one time was County Court clerk of Harrison County. Captain Stone has two children: Sudie, wife of S. J. Snook, general agent for the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, with home at Paducah; and Willie, wife of Charles W. Young, chief clerk of the railway mail service at Louisville. On March 10, 1870, at Henderson, Kentucky, Captain Stone married Mrs. Elizabeth (Hughes) Chambers, daughter of Samuel C. and Judith Hughes. Her father at one time was one of the ablest lawyers in Western Kentucky, his home being at Morganfield.

Judge Rollin Hurt, judge of the Court of Appeals for the Third Appellate District of Kentucky and chief justice of the court, achieved a high reputation as a lawyer in his home county of Adair, and his abilities and character as a judge have measured up to the best traditions of the old and modern Kentucky bench and bar.

Judge Hurt, whose home is at Columbia when not on the bench at Frankfort, was born in Adair County, Kentucky, October 18, 1860, son of Young E. and Mary Morrison (Montgomery) Hurt. In the paternal line he is of Welsh ancestry, his great-grandfather, Moses Hurt, was an early settler in Kentucky, and was one of the first settlers in Virginia. Judge Hurt's grandfather, William Hurt, was born in Bedford County, Virginia, in 1757. He was a youth when the struggle for independence began, served with the Virginia Continentalists, was in Washington's Army during the winter at Valley Forge, and participated in the battle of Monmouth and other engagements. In 1782 this Revolutionary veteran came to Kentucky and settled in Adair County, and he spent the rest of his life as a farmer. He died in 1842. His first wife was Miss White, and the grandmother of Judge Hurt was Elizabeth McMurray, who died in Adair County. They were married in Barren County, Kentucky, in 1814.

Young E. Hurt was born in Adair County in 1818, and lived all his life on the same farm which his father had owned before him. He was a man of ability and good judgment, he was one of the very influential citizens of the community. He served four terms as sheriff of Adair County and held that office at the time of his death, on February 17, 1871. For many years he was a leader of the democratic party in his section of the state. He was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. Young E. Hurt married for his first wife Sarah W. Row, a native and life long resident of Adair County. She was the mother of his first five children. His second wife, and the mother of Judge Hurt, was Mary Morrison Montgomery, who was born in what is now Metcalfe County, Kentucky, in 1824, and died in Adair County in 1903. She was the mother of eight children. The first five children of Young E. Hurt were: Joan, who married William H. Patterson, a farmer, both now deceased; Leslie Combs, who became a Kansas farmer and died at Montpelier in 1868; Monterey, living in New Mexico, widow of Henry Holohow, a lawyer; James W., a farmer who died in Adair County in 1915; and Sue, who died in Oklahoma in 1916, wife of Samuel W. Miller, an Oklahoma farmer. Judge Hurt was the tenth of his father's family, and the fifth child born to his mother. His brothers and sisters were: Robert Montgomery, a farmer in Adair County; Cyrus, a farmer in New Mexico; Lucian, a carpenter and builder of Adair County; Mattie, unmarried and living in Adair County; Marietta, wife of W. B. Rowe, a farmer in Adair County; Young E. Jr., an Adair County farmer; and Jennie wife of Leslie Johnson, a farmer in Adair County.

Judge rollin Hurt grew up on his father's farm, attended the rural schools, also the Columbia Male and Female High School, and as a youth manifested self-reliance and formulated and worked out the plans for his mature career. To the age of sixteen he lived on the home farm, and following that was a farm hand and engaged in other work to the age of twenty. He began studying law during these years of his minority. He made such progress in his studies that he was admitted to the bar at the age of nineteen, in 1870. He began practice in 1880 at Edmonton in Metcalfe County, remaining there three years. For one year he published a newspaper at Columbia, and from 1886 until 1890 was a railway postal clerk, with headquarters at Cincinnati and Chattanooga. Since 1890 his time and energies have been wholly devoted to his profession and his office as a judge. He began practice at Colombia and from 1890 to 1898 served as county attorney of Adair County, his term in this office being seven and a half years. From the congenial duties of an extensive law practice in his home locality he was called to the higher service of the state by election in 1914 as judge of the Court of Appeals for the Third Appellate District, comprising twenty-three counties of the state, from Louisville to the Tennessee line. He took office January 1, 1915, for a term of eight years, ending in 1923 and became chief justice of the court on January 17, 1921.

Judge Hurt's name appeared on the Cleveland and Hendricks ticket as elector in the campaign of 1884.
He was the elector representing the Eleventh Congressional District. Judge Hurt is a director in the Bank of Columbia in his home town, is a member of the Kentucky Chapter of the Society of the Sons of the Revolution, and during the World war besides sending his son to the colors he exerted himself in behalf of local war causes, making many speeches in his home county of Adair. His Frankfort residence is on Shelby Street.

November 5, 1894, Judge Hurt married Miss Cary
Chandler, daughter of William and Anna (Horde)
Chandler of Paducah. Her father for many years was a merchant at Campbellville, Taylor County, Kentucky. The only son and child of Judge Hurt is Ralph, born December 30, 1895. He was a student in Georgetown College at Georgetown, Kentucky, and from there volunteered in April, 1917, at the outbreak of the war, was trained at Fort Benjamin Harrison in Indianapolis, and was with some of the first American troops sent overseas. He married in July, 1919.

K. O. Grassham is a native Kentuckian with a widely diversified business experience throughout the country, and for one year past has been a resident of Paducah, where he is now manager of the Chero-Cola Bottling Company, one of the prosperous business concerns of the city.

Mr. Grassham was born at Salem, Livingston County, Kentucky, February 12, 1884. His grandfather was a native of Virginia, and on coming West settled in Tennessee and long continued his residence in Livingston County, Kentucky, where he followed farming until his death. Montgomery Grassham, father of the Paducah business man, was born in Tennessee in 1857, and was about four years of age when his parents moved to Livington County, Kentucky, where he was reared and married. He was a farmer in early life and then learned the blacksmith's trade, an occupation he has followed steadily at Salem for the past thirty-five or forty years. As a young man he served on the local police force at Salem, is a democrat, and has been very attentive to his duties as a member of the Christian Church for years. He is also affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. The second wife of Montgomery Grassham was Martha Elizabeth Mahan, who was born at Salem and lived there until her death in Paducah, Kentucky. Of her five children K. O. Grassham is the youngest. C. C. Grassham, the oldest, is an attorney living at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, and is also an oil operator and counsel for the Ayer & Lord Tie Company. Martha, the second child, is the wife of Dr.
C. E. Purcell, a physician and surgeon at Paducah;
Sallie D. is unmarried and lives with her parents at Salem; and William M. is a mine operator at Ros-clare, Illinois.

K. O. Grassham was educated in the public schools of his native Kentucky village and subsequently in the Cherry Brothers Business College at Bowling Green.
On leaving school in 1906 he was employed one year as a telegraph operator with the Postal Telegraph Company at Paducah and for eighteen months was an operator with the Illinois Central Railroad Company. From 1908 until 1912 he traveled over practically all the states of the Union as representative of the Sullivan Medicine Company. Following that for a year or so he was city salesman at Columbus, Georgia, for the National Biscuit Company, but in April, 1914, returned to Paducah to become general manager of the Chero-Cola Bottling Company. This is a business that has enjoyed a rapid growth and extension during the past five years; its successful growth is due to the Chero-Cola and a general line of soda waters, the output being shipped all over Southwestern Kentucky, Northern Tennessee and Southern Illinois. The offices and plant are at 910 South Fifth Street.

Mr. Grassham is a democrat, a member of the Christian Church, and is prominent in Masonry, being affiliated with Plain City Lodge No. 149, A. F. and A.
M., Paducah Chapter No. 30, R. A. M., Paducah Commandery No. 11, K. T., and Rizpah Temple of the Masonic Shrine at Madisonville.

His home is at Thirty-first Street and Broadway.
He married at Columbus, Georgia, in 1910, Miss Clara Belle Wardlaw, daughter of W. E. and Clara (Fredrick) Wardlaw, residents of Columbus. Her father is a graduate of the Georgia and Southwestern Col-lleges. Mr. Grassham is a graduate of the high school at Rome, Georgia. To their marriage were born two children: Charles Oliver, who died in infancy, and Charles William, born Noember 19, 1915.

Thomas B. McGregor, assistant attorney general of the State of Kentucky, has been a Frankfort lawyer for the past thirteen years. He is a member of the Bar and has been frequently known to many business people, also in business and banking circles, and many audiences all over the Middle West have also come to have a high appreciation of his talents on the lecture platform.

The McGregors have been in Kentucky for several generations. Prior to that they were a Colonial family in the Carolinas. Mr. McGregor traces his ancestry in direct line to members of the famous Highland Scotch clan of McGregor. One of his direct ancestors, Duncan McGregor, was a son of the famous Rob Roy.
A son of Duncan was John McGregor, who with his son Samuel participated in the battle of Preston Pans, where Prince Charles defeated the English. Because of their participation in the rebellion of 1745 and the canonical punishment of his son, the McGregors were proscribed by acts of Parliament and were hunted like foxes on many occasions in Scotland.

Samuel McGregor, great-great-grandfather of the Frankfort lawyer, and a son of John, immigrated to South Carolina and became a planter in that colony.
William McGregor, a son of Samuel, was born in South Carolina, and was the founder of the family in Kentucky, first settling on Tradewater River and afterward moving to Jackson's Purchase in what is now Marshall County, where he lived out his life. He was a pioneer Baptist preacher in Kentucky. William Casey McGregor, grandson of Thomas B. McGregor, was born in South Carolina in 1828. He had a brother who was named McGregor, but the name being conferred by his grandfather in commemoration of the battle of Preston Pans. This Preston McGregor, a great-uncle of the Frankfort lawyer, died in Southern Missouri in 1910. William Casey McGregor was only a child when his parents came to Kentucky and settled on Tradewater River in what is now Hopkins County. Later the family moved to Jackson's Purchase. William C. McGregor married in what is now Marshall County, and lived there as a farmer and planter until his death in 1908. He became a whig and later affiliated with the republican party. His wife was Sarilda Copeland, who was born in Trigg County, Kentucky, in 1822, was reared there and died in Marshall County in 1912. Only one of their children is now living, Levi, wife of William Sled, a farmer at Iola in Marshall County.

William N. McGregor, father of Thomas B. McGregor, was born in Marshall County in 1855, was married and married there and for several years carried on an extensive plantation and a business as a country merchant at Fristoe in Marshall County. Later he moved to Benton, Kentucky, and was the leading hardware merchant of that town until his death in March, 1917. He was also a Republican, and for many years a deacon of the Baptist Church. His wife was Mary Jane Reeves, who has been in Graves County, Kentucky, in 1904, and still lives at Benton Seminary in Oldham County, and from the Southern Normal School of Bowling Green in 1901. He received his law degree from Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, in 1905, but had in the meantime studied law and was admitted to the bar at Eddyville, Kentucky, in 1902. He began practice in that year at Benton, and also maintained a law office at Paducah in 1907. Mr. McGregor came to Frankfort in December, 1907, to accept appointment as assistant to Attorney General Charles I. Dawson. For his official business his offices are in the New State Capitol, and he also has his law offices in the McClure Building. Mr. McGregor was the Republican nominee in 1911 and 1912. In 1912 his opponent was James Garnett, and in that year occurred a democratic landslide. His campaign in 1912 was a close race with M. M. Logan. In addition to his regular law practice Mr. McGregor has had a close and active association with a number of business concerns. He is a director of the Henry Clay Fire Insurance Company of Lexington, a director of the People's State Bank of Frankfort, a director of the Oldham County Bank of Frankfort, and a director of the Kentucky Rock Asphalt Company of Louisville, and is interested in several oil companies, being president of the Allen McLean Oil Company. He is president and manager and the largest stockholder in the People's State Bank Building, better known as the McClure Building. This is the leading office building of Frankfort, a seven-story structure at the corner of Main and St. Clair streets, with fifty offices besides the People's State Bank.

Mr. McGregor is a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Frankfort, affiliated with Benton Lodge No. 701, A. F. and A. M., Frankfort Lodge No. 530 of the Elks, is a member of the Franklin, Kentucky and American Bar Associations, the Commercial Law League of America, the Frankfort Chamber of Commerce, Frankfort Y. M. C. A., the American Political Science Association, and the American Historical Society. These associations indicate to some extent the wide scope of his intellectual activities. He is said to own one of the largest private libraries in the state, and all his life he has been a close student of literature, history, politics and economics. For the past five years he has appeared on many lecture platforms over the Central and Eastern States, discussing historical, political, educational and inspirational topics. During this time he has been connected with the Redpath Chautauqua, the National Lincoln Chautauqua and the Mutual Chautauqua and Lyceum Bureaus. His home is one of the finest in the capital city, located at 207 Shelby Street. The house itself is surrounded by some very attractive and well kept grounds.

December 19, 1906, Mr. McGregor married Miss Nellie Palmer, daughter of Thomas F. and Lucy (Stilley) Palmer. Her parents are now deceased. Her father was for a number of years one of the leading lawyers of Western Kentucky. Mrs. McGregor is a graduate of Hamilton College of Lexington. They have one daughter, Eleanor Palmer McGregor, born January 15, 1910.

A. B. Hammond is assistant state treasurer under James A. Wallace. He was formerly associated with Mr. Wallace at Irvine, Kentucky. Mr. Hammond is an expert accountant and business man of wide and varied experience, and has held many important and confidential relations with business firms in different parts of the state.

He was born at Ballardsville in Oldham County, Kentucky, April 15, 1855. His grandfather, Preslay Hammond, spent all his life in Shelby County, Kentucky, and he was reared in Frankfort; his father, Charles Hammond, was a farmer and lumberman, and his mother, Melissa Ann (Dungan) Hammond, was reared in Woodford County, Kentucky, and spent her active life as a farmer in Oldham County, where he died in 1875. The children of Wilson Hammond and wife were: Melissa Ann, wife of Brice Randall, a carpenter and builder at Louisville; Alonzo B.; Lupo, who died young; Goodloe, who died at Pleasureville in Henry County at the age of forty; Otis, who lived on the old home farm in Smithfield; Murtie, wife of a farmer in Jefferson County, Kentucky; Cora, who married A. Brown, a contractor, died in 1904; Fannie, who died at the age of fourteen; Harry, a machinist at Louisville; and Walter, who died in childhood.

Alonzo B. Hammond lived at Smithfield to the age of eighteen and acquired his education in the public schools there. After leaving school he clerked in a store for four years at LAGRANGE in Oldham County, following which he was in a drug store at Smithfield until 1876. He first came to Frankfort during the Centennial year, and during the remainder of the century was an active wholesale and retail lumber yards and mercantile business, was bookkeeper for the Farmers Bank, also for the Tidal Oil Company, served as city clerk, kept books for the Oleum Refining Company and the Crown Oil Company, and also assisted in keeping the records at the Courthouse for the county clerk and sheriff. While at Irvine he was chairman of the School Board and secretary and treasurer of the Boys' Men's Club, and while these were activities sufficient to fill six days of the week he spent part of every Sunday as superintendent of the Sunday School of the Methodist Episcopal Church and also as a member of its Board of Trustees. In 1920 Mr. Hammond returned to Frankfort as assistant state treasurer under Mr. Wallace.

His home is at 123 East Campbell Street in Frankfort. He put his old road and ferry drive for the raising of war funds during the World war, was especially active in the Victory Loan, and served as treasurer of the local Salvation Army fund.

In 1885, at Frankfort, Mr. Hammond married Miss Lena Rogers, daughter of R. and Emma (Pettit) Rogers, now deceased. Her father for thirty years was connected with the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, road master and roadmaster and later was in the furniture and undertaking business at Frankfort.

Mr. and Mrs. Hammond have three children: Miss Nan, at home; Lee, a stenographer with the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company at Paducah, Mississipi; and Margaret, born October 28, 1906.

James Alexander Scott. While his duties as chairman of the Board of State Tax Commissioners give him an official residence at Frankfort, James Alexander Scott is a Pike County man, long identified with public affairs there and with interests as a merchant and farmer. He is a business man of fine judgment and has given deep study to the tax problems of the state and is one of the best qualified men who have ever held a place on the Board of State Tax Commissioners.

Mr. Scott is a native of Virginia and more remotely of Scotch ancestry. His grandfather, Andrew Scott, was born in Scott County, Virginia, and was a pioneer in Pike County, Kentucky, acquiring extensive lands which he developed as a farm. He died on his homestead twelve miles north of Pikeville. He married Peggy McCoy, a native and life long resident of Pike County. John M. Scott, father of James A., was born on the family homestead three miles north of Pikeville in 1839, and spent his life in that county, where for many years he was one of the largest farmers and land owners. At one time he owned 1,600 acres, and gave his personal supervision to his farming interests until 1888, when he removed to Pikeville. Thereafter he was in the mercantile and livery business until his death in 1905.

As a republican he was honored with the office of county treasurer for two terms.

Mr. Scott was a very devout member of the Christian Church. John M. Scott married Minerva Dixon, who was born in Johnson County, Kentucky, in 1841, and died at Pikeville in 1900. They had six children: Morrell, who died on a farm in Pike County at the age of twenty-two; Millard, a merchant who died in Pike County at the age of twenty-four; Roscoe, a farmer and merchant living on his homestead in Pike County; James A.; Floris C., connected with the Pond Creek Coal Company and a resident of McVeigh; and Dixie who died at the age of twenty-seven, was the wife of L. H. Lawson, a merchant and farmer of Pikeville.

James A. Scott was born on the same farm as his father, twelve miles north of Pikeville, December 2, 1875. From the age of thirteen he lived in Pikeville, where he received his public school education. In 1895 he graduated from the Northern Indiana Normal School at Vincennes, in the commercial course, and after that was a merchant at Pikeville for some years. He still owns a business house in that town and a farm of sixty acres five miles west, forty acres of this being level bottom land and highly productive. He is also interested in the old Scott homestead, which is still one of the largest farms in Pike County, containing 1,114 acres, and with valuable mineral and timber resources. His legal home is at Pikeville and he has a modern residence with very extensive grounds in one of the best residential sections of the town. His home at Frankfort is at 322 Conway Street and his offices are in the New State Capitol.

Mr. Scott served as sheriff of Pike County from 1906 to 1910, and from 1910 to 1916 was clerk of the Circuit Court. He was therefore no stranger to public affairs when he first came to Frankfort to serve as assistant county auditor from August 10, 1916, to May 1, 1917. On May 27, 1917, he was appointed a member of the State Tax Commission, and for the past three years has been chairman of the board.

Mr. Scott is a director of the Kentucky Rock Asphalt Company of Louisville and a stockholder in the First National Bank of Pikeville. He was a worker in the various war campaigns and a contributor of his personal means to the public service from August 10, 1916, to May 1, 1917. He is a republican in politics, a past master of Thomas C. Ceci Lodge No. 275, A. F. and A. M., at Pikeville, a member of Pikeville Chapter No. 133, R. A. M., Indra Consistory of the Scottish Rite at Covington, is a past grand of Pikeville Lodge No. 204, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, a member of Frankfort Lodge No. 530, of the Elks, and of the Masons at Pikeville.

Mr. Scott married Miss Fannie Reynolds at Pikeville April 11, 1900. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Reynolds, live at Coal Run in Pike County, where her father is a farmer and also local minister of the Methodist Church. Mr. and Mrs. Scott have four children: Minerva, born January 22, 1901; Henry James, born December 30, 1907; William Frank, born November 16, 1912; and Tola Annette, born August 31, 1918.

Archibald Dixon, who was born in Caswell County, North Carolina, April 2, 1802, was one of the distinguished figures in the whig party of Kentucky, and one of the really eminent Kentuckians of the past century. His grandfather was Col. Henry Dixon, a most gallant Revolutionary officer, who at the battle of Camden distinguished himself by holding the field the entire day against the British Army with his regiment of North Carolina militia in conjunction with the Maryland troops.

For his action in that battle the highest tributes were paid him by Light-Horse Harry Lee in his "Southern Memoirs," Chief Justice Marshall in his "Life of Washington," Judge David Schenck in his history "North Carolina, 1776-1811," and Lamb, the British historian.

He died at the Red House in Caswell County, North Carolina, in 1782 of wounds received in the Revolutionary war. His father, Wynn Dixon, entered the army in 1780 as an ensign, at the age of sixteen, and served during the remainder of the war. For gallant conduct at the battles of Camden, Eutaw and Guilford Court-House he was promoted to a lieutenant. He was a charter member of the North Carolina Society of the Cincinnati. He married Rebecca Hart, daughter of David Hart.

David Hart and his brothers, Nathaniel and Thomas Hart, were among the nine members of the Transylvania Company who in March, 1775, bought of the Cherokee Indians for $50,000 in money and goods over 20,000,000 acres of land in Kentucky and Tennessee (mostly in Kentucky), and built, in April, 1775, in Madison County, Kentucky, Fort Boonesboro, thereby making possible the settlement of Kentucky by white men. The opening of the North-west Territory by Gen. George Rogers Clark in 1778-79, and the purchase of the Louisiana Territory by Jefferson in 1803, Archibald Dixon was the son of Capt. Wynn Dixon, and the only son of his mother, who was Capt. Wynn Dixon's second wife. In 1805 they removed to Kentucky, where they selected for their home one of the loveliest spots in all this lovely Kentuck, about six miles from the City of Henderson, or "Red Banks," as it was then called. Also, here, under the shadow of the primeval forest, listening to the songs of the wonderful birds pictured by Audubon, to the howls of the wolf and the scream of the wild-cat by night, skating for miles over the flats, or wading up to his waist in the water in these same flats after wild ducks, hunting the deer and wild turkeys through the grand old woods, oftentimes having as his companion the great naturalist, Audubon, riding races with his young companions and joining in all their games, grew to manhood the lad who was to "achieve for himself fame and fortune by native force, honor and pluck." Tall and straight and strong, handsome as Apollo, active and graceful, Nature was his foster-mother, and from her he received the most modern art could supply. His father’s health being greatly impaired, while a mere boy the care of the farm fell chiefly upon him. With the assistance of a negro man he plowed the fields and raised the corn for bread; he grew the cotton which his mother and sisters spun and wove and made into clothing for the family; he tapped the trees to make the sugar and molasses, the only kind they then had; he killed the deer and tamed the hogs which his mother fashioned into outer garments for him; whilst the only shoes he ever had when a boy were manufactured by himself of the same material.

But though he plowed the fields or hunted the deer through the days, yet his winter evenings were spent in reading aloud to his mother and sisters from the best poets and authors, whilst they picked the cotton or knitted the stockings. His young imagination was fired with the sublime ideas of Milton and Homer; Pope and Addison were his familiar friends, and the greatest of all philosophers who had thrilled world with the revelations of his household gods. In that primitive log house, by the light of a tallow candle or blazing wood fire he sat and read through the long evenings. Capt. Wynn Dixon had lost his fortune by going security for a friend, but his family retained in the wilderness of the Green River Country the habit of culture and thought which had belonged to them in the old North State. The great book of Nature lay open before the lad in all its pages. In spite of the want occasioned by the loss of his father’s farm, he learned that cool caution in danger, that patience of labor and energy of pursuit, that watchful judgment and quick action which, engraved on the dauntless courage of a soul that never knew fear or deceit, and united to a vehement will and impetuous temper that brooked no opposition or control, made his afterlife a success under difficulties that would have overborne one less able or less daring. From her, too, he learned early to adore the beautiful. In the flush of the morning, and the first purplish glimmer of the weston her altar. When the moon’s soft rays threw their splendor on forest and on stream his young heart arose in gladness and delight; and the stars in their mysterious loveliness thrilled his whole being.

To the last days of his life no flower was as dear to him as the wild rose which in his boyhood had clothed field and wood, hill and vale, with the brightness of its delicate beauty; and no song so sweet as that of the native mocking-bird. He received no education in the schools save what could be obtained at the "field school," taught by a Mr. Anderson, a most excellent gentleman, who gave instruction, however, in only the plainest elements, and the whole time he attended school was only six months. But after studying two years in the office of James Hilyer, his uncle by marriage, and a gentleman of good legal attainments and many excellent and noble qualities, he was admitted, at the age of twenty-two, to the bar and began the practice of the law. A biographer says of him at this period "Mr. Dixon made rapid progress in his studies. His whole heart was in the work. His days and nights were devoted to the prosecution of a science which to a beginner seems made up of reconcile principles and dry details. Pleasure was forgotten, amusement disregarded. He worked not for fame only, but for bread. The first time he left home to go on the Circuit he wore a suit of blue jeans spun and wove and made up by his mother, and had to borrow ten dollars to pay his expenses. But his talents, high character and noble bearing soon won him friends, and he sprang into a lucrative and extensive practice in a marvelously short time. Nor was it confined to his own state. He was quite as popular and as much sought after in the Circuit Courts of Southern Indiana and Illinois. Outside of his law practice Mr. Dixon made various adventures in a business way, and was usually very successful. He took a flat boat loaded with corn to New Orleans once, when a very good profit was made. Some years later he set up a store on the corner of Main and Second streets, employing Squire James Hatchett to sell the goods which he himself went to New York and purchased at auction sales, selling them at low prices and realizing handsome profits. In eight years he cleared $18,000 in this business. All of his means he invested in land and negroes, and in 1854 he had become one of the wealthiest planters and largest slave owners in Southern Kentucky. In 1850 he was elected to the Legislature from Henderson. In 1856 he was elected to represent the counties of Henderson, Hopkins and Daviess in the Senate. In 1851 he was again elected to the Legislature from the County of Henderson without opposition. In 1854 he was elected lieutenant governor of Kentucky on the ticket with Judge Owlsley, the whig candidate for governor, whom he outran by several thousand votes. In 1858 Archibald Dixon, who had adhered steadily to Mr. Clay in the contest between him and Taylor for the presidential nomination, was chosen elector for the state at large, and was also the choice of the great majority of the whig convention for the office of governor. But the unyielding opposition of a faction of the whigs, which had never forgiven him for the brilliant race he had made in 1844, nor for the superior majority he had then won over the governor elect, convinced him that his nomination could not stand, and he withdrew his name from the contest.

In February, 1851, Mr. Dixon was nominated by the whig party as their candidate for governor, and was defeated by his fellow townsmen, the Hon. L. W. Powell, by the small majority of 820. In that contest, though Mr. Dixon ran ahead of all the other candidates on the whig ticket, he was the only one defeated, and Powell was the only one on the democratic ticket elected.

In November, 1851, it became the duty of the Legislature of Kentucky to elect a successor to Mr. Underwood, whose time in the Senate of the United States would expire March 3, 1853. There was a very exciting contest in the whig party over the nomination, for this office between the friends of Mr. Dixon on the one hand, and those of Mr. Clingman, who had been defeated in the withdrawal of both gentlemen, when Hon. John B. Thompson was put in nomination and elected over Mr. Stone, democrat, by seventy-three to sixty-five. Mr. Clay having, on December 17, resigned his seat in the Senate to take effect on the first Monday of December, 1831, the Convention, meeting to elect his successor, and on December 30, 1831, Mr. Dixon was elected over James Guthrie, democrat, by seventy-one to fifty-eight. While in the Senate Mr. Dixon was the author of the Repeal of the Missouri Compromise.

In 1850 he was one of the electors for the state at large on the Douglass ticket, and made an active canvass of the state in its advocacy.

In the dedication to his admirable history, "The Union Cause in Kentucky, 1860-65," Capt. Thomas Speed says: "If an effort should be made to determine who were the twelve most distinguished citizens of Kentucky in 1861 it would not be possible to find any who would be named before John J. Crittenden, James Guthrie, S. S. Nicholas, Chief Justice George Robertson, Robert J. Breckinridge, Charles A. Wickliffe, James Speed, James F. Robinson, Joshua B. Speed, Archibald Dixon, James Harlan and William H. Wadsworth.

And further on says: "There is a genuine pathos in the speech of Hon. Archibald Dixon at Louisville in April, 1861. 'My sympathies are with the South, but I am not prepared to aid her in fighting against our government. If we remain in the Union we are safe. In a just cause I will defend our state at every point and against every combination. But when the battles against the law and the constitution I have not the heart, I have not the courage, to do it. I cannot do it; I will not do it. Never strike at that flag of our country. Rome 5.

Archibald Dixon was a success as a lawyer, a statesman and in business, but nothing in his political career deserves as much praise as his efforts to prevent the secession of Kentucky. All over the state his patriotic voice was raised in frequent speech in advocacy of the Union.

When he died, the following is one of the many tributes paid to his memory: "He belonged to that class of statesmen who served their country from the love of it, whose proudest birthright was their American citizenship, and who esteemed their country's honor, their own, and their own, their country's. When a boy he had heard from his father's lips of the struggles at Camden and Eutaw, and how his grandsire had fallen fighting for American liberty. He came from a stock who laid the foundations of our independence and gave their lives to secure it. "Born while the Union was in its infancy, and breathing the same air that unfolded a new born and glorious flag, it is not to be wondered at that Archibald Dixon through life of official and personal effort, should be guided by the principles of his forefathers and inherit their patriotism." He died April 26, 1876.

Archibald Dixon was married twice, first, in March, 1834, to Elizabeth Robertson Cabell, of the Virginia family of Cabells, who died of cholera in September, 1852, leaving six children. In October, 1853, he married Susan Maria Beachy Bullitt, of the distinguished Bullitt family of Jefferson County, Kentucky, who was the sister of Dr. Thomas Walker, and Col. John Fy, and a great-niece of Patrick Henry. She died in 1907. Her history, "The Missouri Compromise and its Repeal," ranks among the best as a contribution to the history of our country. It was a labor of love to vindicate the action of her husband in bringing about that repeal.

ARCHIBALD DIXON, M. D., F. A. C. S. Until ill health forced him to retire from the practice of his profession, Archibald Dixon was one of the most widely known physicians and surgeons of Kentucky. His great skill in surgery earned him an Honorary Fellowship in the American College of Surgeons, one of the most coveted honors of the profession.

He was born at Henderson, Kentucky, March 4, 1844, son of Archibald and Elizabeth Robertson (Cabel) Dixon. His great grandfather, Col. Henry ("Hal") Dixon, who so signal distinguished himself at the Battle of Camden in the state's ablest officers in the Revolutionary war, and died in 1782 of wounds received in that war.

His grandfather, Wynn Dixon, joined the army in 1780, when sixteen years of age, and fought to the close of the war. He was promoted on the field to a lieutenant, and was a charter member of the North Carolina Society of the Cincinnati, of which society Archibald Dixon is a member. The Dixon forebears were Scotch-Irish.

His father, Archibald Dixon, was elected twice to the Lower House and once to the Senate of the Legislature of Kentucky, was lieutenant governor, member of the Constitutional Convention of 1850, and to the United States Senate, to succeed Henry Clay, where he was the author of the Repeal of the Missouri Compromise. He was a highly successful lawyer and planter, and one of the largest slaveholders in Kentucky.

Doctor Dixon acquired his early education in the local schools of Henderson, attended the Academy of Burrell Basset Sayre at Frankfort and afterward the University of Toronto, Canada. His early years were devoted to farming, but in 1877 he graduated from the old Louisville Medical College with high honors for scholarship. Thus having his active practice he never ceased in his zeal to acquire new experience and knowledge, and attended courses and clinics in surgery at London, England, New York, Chicago, St. Louis and Rochester, Minnesota. He practiced at Henderson and gained and for many years enjoyed a large and lucrative professional business, which he resigned finally on account of failing health.

For years he was a member and in 1885, was honored with the office of president of the Mississippi Valley Medical Association. He was also president of Kentucky's oldest medical organization, the McDowell Medical Society, and president of the Kentucky State Medical Association. Doctor Dixon not only gave his time and energies to his private practice, but was a student and observer whose work contributed permanent knowledge to the advancement of the profession. He was for many years a correspondent and contributor to medical journals.

He has served as a member of the Kentucky State Board of Health, of the Kentucky Tuberculosis Commission and of the State Board of Control for Charitable Institutions. He is now a member of the National Conference of Charities and Corrections, of the National Tuberculosis Conference, of the Kentucky Conference of the National Board of the American Medical Association, Mississippi Valley Medical Association, American Medical Association and is a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons.

Governor Stanley appointed him a member of the State Board of Control and Correction, and in that capacity he rendered distinguished service, being a strong advocate of a non-political and unpaid Board of Control. He drew up a report suggesting decentralization of the administration of the charitable institutions. His ideas were subsequently recommended by Governor Morrow to the Legislature, and legislation enacted to carry them out. Thus Kentucky today, through his initiative, has a board of control whose members are unpaid and are appointed without regard to politics.

The following letter written to Doctor Dixon by the Hon. Edwin P. Morrow, then a candidate for governor, shows how heartily he endorsed those ideas. "Princeton, Kentucky, October 4, 1916. Dr. Archibald Dixon, Henderson, Kentucky. My Dear Doctor Dixon: In whatever good I have accomplished, or that I may accomplish, in this state I owe my inspiration to you. I owe you for the help and encouragement you have given me, and so, at last, I am but the voice that has spoken your thoughts, voiced your sentiments, and fought for your ideals. I do thank you most sincerely for all your help. With kind regards and best wishes, I am, sincerely yours, Edwin P. Morrow.

In his letter to Doctor Arthur McCormack, Doctor Dixon thus summarizes his actions in the matter.

"Dear Arthur: Mrs. Jonas told me that you were good enough in an address before the women's meeting in February to say that I had done what I could toward divorcing our Charitable and Correctional Institutions from political control. I wish to thank you very much for it and to call your attention to the fact that Mr. Vance Armentrout, whose letters in the Courier-Journal purporting to give a history of conditions relating to these Institutions from their inception to the present time, ignored me altogether and failed to give me such credit as I know I deserve in initiating the move to entirely and forever free all state institutions from the blight of political control. You know and Governor Morrow knows and Judge Hines knew that I had begun this work very shortly after I became a member of the Board of Control (1917). Surprised and disgusted with the utter neglect of the inmates of the Feeble Minded Institute, herded together like so many pigs in a pen, with little or no attempt to segregate the sexes; with no teaching, no classification, no care, no proper attending to their proper needs, or to the treatment of diseases as there was no provision for quarantine, the entire outlook was sickening. In discussing this horrible situation with the board, I was told that nothing could be done, for the lack of money, the per capita allowance was hardly sufficient for ordinary running expenses and for the feeding and clothing of the population. The water supply was inefficient, the pressure was so low that water had to be pumped into the tank and then allowed to run through the waterworks. The water for the institution was furnished by the water company at Frankfort at an exorbitant rate and frequently the supply would be so short that it was a matter of impossibility to keep the tank filled sufficiently to be of any use in case of fire or even to flush the closets. The pump used for filling the tank was barely able with constant work to furnish a supply for ordinary purposes. In fact, the Feeble Minded Institute was a poor creature as a hospital. What could be done toThis. The board of control was a board in name only and could do nothing without the consent of the governor.

The laws relating to the management of the charitable institutions of the state were inefficient and a bar to any improvement in the conditions of the inmates; they were decades behind the methods commensurate with the development and progress demanded by more progressive states. I at once determined to remedy this state of affairs, but received little encouragement from any source. The administration looked with a jealous eye upon any move which promised to interfere with its political control of these institutions. The board of control, while not absolutely opposing it, warned me that it was a useless task and if persisted in would in all probability end in the abolishment of the board and the creating of a board which would be content to draw their salaries and do the bidding of the administration, regardless of any effort demanded to remedy or improve the chaotic conditions which existed in all state institutions, but more especially in the Feeble Minded Institute. This was what actually occurred, as you will remember; the bipartisan board was abolished by the Legislature which was controlled by the governor, and a partisan board created, composed of five democrats, headed by the three prison commissioners. I took my medicine, and notwithstanding the laudatory speeches and encomiums, I called a meeting, redoubled my efforts to divorce these institutions from the blight and deadly handiwork of political control. I consulted with Alexander Johnson, with Dr. Thomas H. Waine, with State Inspector Nat Sewell and with the leaders of the women's clubs of the state. I wrote letters to the Courier-Journal and Herald and, hoping to accomplish much through the aid of the medical profession, I prepared and read papers before the Kentucky State Medical Society at its annual meetings in 1917-18-19, all of which were published in the Kentucky Medical Journal, as was also the paper on "Care of Defectives," which was prepared by request of Judge Hines, president of the Kentucky Divisions of the Council of National Defense, and which you were good enough to read for me before the state conference at Lexington. You will remember that Ed. Morrow, then a candidate for governor, heard you read this paper and immediately asked me to send him a copy of it at once, stating that he was hand and glove with me and that he would do everything in his power to aid me in divorcing entirely and forever the State Charitable Institutions from the strange hold of politics; that he would endeavor to have it embodied in the republican state platforms and would argue it from the stump in every county in Kentucky. How well he complied with his promise is shown by the radical changes which have taken place since his election in the management of the charitable and correctional institutions of the state. Yet with all this Mr. Armentrout did not even mention my name in the history of these institutions written for the Courier-Journal and the Herald. He did not refer to bringing before the people of Kentucky these facts which culminated in the appointment of the present board of control and of the radical changes for the better which this unsalaried board has accomplished and is accomplishing. I think I deserve credit for the pioneer work I did in bringing all this about. Will you not inform the public of this by writing a letter to the Courier-Journal and to the Herald, calling attention to Mr. Armentrout's articles and to the fact that he utterly ignored me in them, which was evidently unfair.

In writing to Jonas in reference to my subscription to the Herald I mentioned the Armentrout letters and his failure to give me even a look in. Am enclosing a letter from him, in which he advises me to send a letter or two for publication in the Herald, as you will see. You upon more than one occasion told me that you would do anything for me, hence I am asking that you will write to him about my letters and that you would more fully command the attention of the people of Kentucky. I should be glad if you would publish what I have written or such portion of it as you may wish to, in the State Medical Journal. Let me congratulate you and Kentucky upon the splendid work you have done and are doing. Mrs. Jonas informs me that the women of the state are praising you from the Big Sandy to the Mississippi. With kindest possible regards for you and your wife and for your father and his wife. Sincerely, your friend.

The following complimentary notice of Doctor Dixon appeared in the New England Medical Monthly for August, 1908: "Though Dr. Archibald Dixon is doubtless more familiarly known to physicians of the Middle West than to those of New England, nevertheless many of us here in Connecticut have met the genial, whole-souled physician from Henderson, and will not soon forget that he is not only exceptional as a clubman and surgeon, but that he is the most manly of men and carries the big sympathetic heart of a woman in his bosom. Doctor Dixon, himself, was, we think, the most popular "president" that has yet held the official position and, at the same time, honorable position of the head of the Mississippi Valley Medical Association. The doctor has been a frequent contributor to the New England Medical Monthly in the past, and we find it not only pleasant but especially interesting to look back to some of these old files occasionally and digest a good deal of rich food for thought which he ever succeeded in furnishing. It will be readily seen that we are exceedingly enthusiastic over this biographical text of ours; but we feel positive that every one of our readers would be infected in a similar manner should they chance some day to be brought, as we have, into personal relationship with the genial ex-president of the Mississippi Valley Medical Association."

The following tribute was paid Doctor Dixon by that distinguished physician and philanthropist, Dr. Joseph M. Matthews, of Louisville, Kentucky. "I have known him for years, and in all that time he has not fallen below my ideal. In all these years of intimacy, familiarity has never bred contempt in me. I have watched him as a younger brother watches, lovingly jealous, yet proud of him, alert for a failing or weakness which I never found, or if I thought I found a flaw in him knew it to be that character too strong, too generous for me to criticize."

On December 14, 1864, Doctor Dixon married Margaret Herndon, daughter of Judge John C. Herndon and his wife, Margaret Clark Herndon, of Frankfort, Kentucky. Their daughter, Margaret Herndon Dixon, the wife of Edward A. Jonas, editor of the Louisville Herald is, and has been for some years, employed by the State of Kentucky to teach domestic science, and has been a most capable and efficient teacher.

A younger daughter, Julia Ballard Dixon, married David Clark, Jr., a tobacconist of Henderson, Kentucky. Two sons were born to them, David Henderson Clark and Archibald Dixon Clark. David Henderson Clark, at the age of seventeen, graduated with high honors from the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Maryland, in 1917, was in the United States navy to teach domestic science, and has been a most capable and efficient teacher.

The birth of F. W. Ferguson took place at Louisville, Kentucky, and he is a son of John Ferguson, Jr., and a grandson of John Ferguson, Sr., a native of Scotland, who emigrated to the United States in young manhood, settling at Wheatley, Massachusetts, where he died in 1860. He was a clergyman of the Presbyterian Church, and very well educated. He was married after coming to this country, and his son, John Ferguson, Jr., was born at Wheatley in 1815. His death occurred at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1880.

In 1829, when fourteen years of age, John Ferguson, Jr., came to Louisville, Kentucky, and remained there for many years, becoming one of the most extensive wholesale grocers of that city. In time his interests necessitated his establishing another house at New Orleans, Louisiana, and he divided his time between the two cities, but spent his latter days at Louisville. He was a republican. In his religious faith he espoused the creed of the Presbyterian Church, and gave to the local congregation of that denomination a most hearty support. John Ferguson was married to Sarah Jane Moore, who was born at Louisville, Kentucky, September 23, 1829, on the present site of the Gault House, where the old home of her family then stood. She survives her husband and still lives at Louisville. Their children were as follows: John Moore, who died at Louisville at the age of fifty-six years, was in an insurance business; E. H. Moore, who married a daughter of Mr. Clay of Louisville, was president and owner of the Kentucky Refining Company, cottonseed oils, and also of the Louisville Soap Company; Eva, who married John E. Churchill, a son of Samuel B. Churchill, now deceased, formerly secretary of state of Kentucky, and she resides at Louisville, her husband, who was in the insurance business, being now deceased; F. W., who was fourth in order of birth; Ella F., who married J. T. Reed, an attorney of Louisville, now deceased, is a resident of Louisville; James A., who was general manager of the Louisville Soap Company, died at Louisville aged fifty-two years; R. H., who was connected with the Kentucky Refining Company, died in the Northwest aged forty-four years; L. K., who was president and owner of the Globe Refining Company, cottonseed oils, died at Louisville aged forty-two years; and Minnie M., who married Isaac F. Starks, a member of the firm of Cruger & Starks, clothiers, of Louisville, died.

W. Ferguson associated in the public schools of Louisville and was graduated from its high-school course, following which he attended the Highland Military Academy of Worcester, Massachusetts. He left school when he was twenty years of age and entered the Bank of Kentucky, and, beginning at the bottom, worked himself up to be receiving teller, occupying that position during the last three years he was with the bank. In 1888 he went to Pitkin, Colorado, and was associated in a private bank with Edward G. Richmond, a son of Dean Richmond, the first president of the New York Central Railroad Company. After four years, during which time Mr. Ferguson and Mr. Richmond owned and operated this bank, Mr. Ferguson disposed of his interest, returned to Louisville, entered the general insurance business in that city, and was occupied with the business until the 29th of January, 1899. He then retired from the duties pertaining to his present office, as actuary of the state insurance department, to which he was appointed by John J. Craig, state auditor. His offices are in the New State Capitol, and he lives at 218 West Campbell Street, but maintains his legal residence at the Courtland in Louisville. He is a republican. The Episcopal Church holds his membership. Fraternally he belongs to Frankfort Lodge No. 530, B. P. O. E. At one time he was president of the Alvery-Ferguson Company, conveyors of Louisville, but sold his interest in 1904. During the later war he was connected with the Federal food administration, especially in the sugar distribution in Kentucky, which took up all of his time for a year. He bought bonds and War Savings Stamps to the extent of his ability, and did everything within his power to assist the administration in carrying out its policies. He is not married.

His long association with the insurance business qualifies him for his present office, but he is also fitted for his duties because of his natural capabilities, and is giving to them a conscientious attention which is resulting very favorably for all concerned. A man of the highest standing, he has won appreciation from his fellow citizens and is an excellent example of the best element in his state and party.

Miles Everett Lee, state custodian of public buildings and grounds at Frankfort, is one of the capable and reliable men of Kentucky, who has won his appointment through merit and who is giving universal satisfaction because of the efficient manner in which he is discharging his duties. He was born near Elizabethtown, Hardin County, Kentucky, May 12, 1886, a son of Silas Lee, and grandson of Miles Lee, who died near Belmont, Bullitt County, Kentucky, before the birth of his grandson. For many years he was very active as a farmer and became a successful man. Miles Lee married Sarah Cundiff, who also died in Bullitt County. The Lee family was established in Virginia during the Colonial epoch and came to this country, when its representatives came from England.

Silas Lee was born near Belmont, Bullitt County, Kentucky, in 1815, and was there reared, but moved to Hardin County after reaching his majority. Here he has continued to live, and has devoted himself to agricultural pursuits with gratifying results, as he is now one of the leading farmers of his neighborhood. In politics he is a democrat. From the time he joined the Baptist Church he has continued to be one of its active supporters and liberal contributors. Silas Lee was married to Almeda Lee, who was born near Elizabethtown, Kentucky, in 1844, and died in Hardin County, Kentucky, of pneumonia. They had a son and four daughters: Miles Everett and his sister Lizzie, who married Alonso Pate, a farmer in the vicinity of Vine Grove, Hardin County, and a prominent democrat of that region.

Miles Everett Lee attended the Hardin County country schools, the Hardin Collegiate Institute and Center College at Danville, Kentucky, but left the latter in 1909, at the close of his freshman year. For the subsequent eight years he taught in the town and rural ha- and in June, 1907 Mr. Lee was married near Elizabettown, Kentucky, to Miss Ethel K. Purcell, a daughter of Leven and Catherine (Stader) Purcell. Mr. Purcell, who was a farmer of Hardin County, is now deceased, but his widow survives and makes her home at Louisville, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Lee have two children, Carl Purcell, who was born November 5, 1900; and Almeda Catherine, who was born May 16, 1914.

Mr. Lee is a man who has steadily risen, never failing to justify the confidence reposed in him. His fellow citizens long ago recognized the fact that in him they would have a dependable and conscientious representative, and he is living up to the record he made formerly in the work he is doing in his present office. Such men as he add prestige to the state and set an example those who come on the scene of action in subsequent years will do well to follow.

JOHN H. SHOWALTER. With the completion of the magnificent new capital at Frankfort has come the necessity for first-class men to carry on the work of operating the various departments of the building, and one who is ranked with the best is John H. Showalter, chief engineer of the power plant, a man widely known and recognized as an expert in his line. He is a native of Frankfort, where he was born April 22, 1888, a son of W. B. Showalter, and a grandson of Daniel Showalter, who was born at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, where his ancestors had settled upon coming to this country from Germany during the Colonial epoch in this country's history. At an early day he moved to Virginia, where he was engaged in the manufacture of sewings and siddles, but in 1851 came to Kentucky, and settled in Paris, Bourbon County, where he occupied for many years as a distiller. He produced the first corn whisky in Kentucky, calling it Bourbon after the county in which it was manufactured, and thereafter
the name has been applied to whisky made from corn.
He died at Paris, Kentucky, at a date prior to the birth of his grandson.

W. B. Showalter was born in Virginia in 1833, but was brought by his parents to Kentucky in 1841, and was reared in Bourbon County, leaving it to come to Frankfort in 1851, and here he has since resided, his home now being at 526 Shelby Street, this city. For fourteen years he was a distiller with J. & J. M. Saffel, having installed the plant, and he was also with the Pepper Distillery, the Old Crow Distillery and the Hermitage Distillery. He invented the slop dryer used in all distilleries, which converts the slops into a dry cake that can be handled as room. He then became very interested in distilling corn whisky and soon occupied for many years as a distiller. He produced the first corn whisky in Kentucky, calling it Bourbon after the county in which it was manufactured, and thereafter
the name has been applied to whisky made from corn.
He died at Paris, Kentucky, at a date prior to the birth of his grandson.

John H. Showalter attended the public schools of Frankfort and was graduated from the high-school course of this city in 1900. For the subsequent four years he was employed on his father's farm in Franklin County, and then engaged with the Standard Oil Company at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, as a boilermaker's helper, and remained there for two years, leaving to go with the Holly Pump Company of Buffalo, New York, as assistant to the wrecking engineer. After a year there he came to Frankfort and installed the pump used by the Frankfort Water Company; which is a triple expansion pump, costing $90,000. It is one of the best in the country. This work of installation consumed five months, and when it was completed Mr. Showalter became assistant engineer for the Frankfort Water Company, and was later promoted to be chief engineer, holding the latter position for eighteen months.

On July 1, 1918, Mr. Showalter enlisted in defense of his country during the great war, and was sent to Fort Thomas, Kentucky, for three weeks, but was then transferred to Camp Humphreys, Virginia, and from there overseas, landing in France, June 1918, after trip of four days. He was trained there until October 16, and was then sent to the Saint Mihiel sector and the Argonne front, and was in this campaign of twenty-six days with the One Hundred and Seventeenth Division of French Colonial Troops. This division was lacking up the Thirty-third, Twenty-ninth and Twenty-sixth American Divisions, and the last two days of the drive was lacking up the All-American Eighty-second Division. Mr. Showalter was then assigned to the One Hundred and Thirtieth Engineers Construction Corps, and remained with the latter command in France until July 29, 1919, when he was returned to the United States, and was mustered out of the service at Camp Taylor, Augusta, Georgia, on August 29, 1919, after having done his duty as a soldier, entering the employ of the Kentucky Wagon Works at Louisville, and was engaged in removing two boilers from the Kentucky Distillery to the Kentucky Wagon Works in Louisville, a very important piece of work. These boilers weighed twenty-five tons each. Then, until January 20, 1920, Mr. Showalter was transportation boss for Asa F. Gregg Transportation Company of Louisville. At that time he was appointed chief engineer of the state capital power plant at Frankfort, and is still efficiently discharging the duties pertaining to this very important position. The plant and offices are located on the Kentucky River, just east of the new state capital building.

Mr. Showalter has the same political convictions as his father, and holds the Republican ticket. He belongs to the Roman Catholic Church. Fraternally he belongs to Frankfort Council No. 1483, K. of C., in which he has been made a Third Degree Knight. He is one of the zealous members of the American Legion. Mr. Showalter is unmarried, and resides with his father and sister, but owns twenty-seven city lots on Capitol Hill.

Asa F. Goodwin was born near Tolu, Crittenden County, Kentucky, December 11, 1886, a son of Judson Bennett and grandson of John Bennett who was born in Kentucky, in 1807, and died at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, in 1903. He came to Livingston County in an early day and developed a valuable farm near Salem, where he spent many years. The Bennett family have been in Kentucky since the Colonial epoch of this country, from whence migration was made into Kentucky. Judson Bennett was born in what is now Livingston County, Kentucky, in 1846, but came to Crittenden County in young manhood, and resided on a farm two miles west of Tolu until he retired, at which time he moved to Marion, Kentucky, and here since 1903 has been one of the honored residents of the county seat. For many years he was one of the most progressive farmers and stock raisers, and was very successful. He is a democrat. A zealous member of the Presbyterian Church, he has always been active in his support of the local congregation, and was the prime mover in securing the erection of the new church edifice at Tolu. Judson Bennett married Bettie Wallace, of Crittenden County, a daughter of Dr. William Wallace, now deceased, and many years was one of the leading physicians of Crittenden County. Mrs. Bennett was born in Virginia in 1817, and died in Crittenden County in 1899. Their children were as follows: Mary, who married T. F. Harris, for twenty years a prominent merchant of Tolu and now living on the Bennett homestead; Wallace, who was drowned in 1909 in the wreck of the steamer "Goleta," in which disaster thirty-five persons lost their lives; Henry, who died in 1900, was a merchant of Tolu; Hugh, who is a merchant and farmer, resides at Tolu; and Trice Cowan, who was the youngest born.

Trice Cowan Bennett attended the public schools of Tolu and Marion, Kentucky, and was graduated from the Marion High School in 1904. He then entered the Central University of Kentucky, where he took the full legal course and was graduated therefrom in 1907 with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He is a member of the German Letter college fraternity Phi Delta Theta. In 1907 he began the practice of his profession in the Southern District of Indian Territory, where he remained until in October, 1911, when he returned to Crittenden County and established himself in a general civil and criminal practice at Marion. His offices are in the Carnahan Building, and he has a very valuable connection and has been associated with some of the most important jurisprudence since he has come back to the county. A strong democrat, he was elected on his party ticket county attorney, and served as such from 1913 to 1918. The year of 1918 Mr. Bennett spent in the legal division of the United States Government at Washington, D.C., during the great war. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church. A Mason, he is a member of Bingham Lodge No. 259, A.F. & A. M., and he also belongs to Princeton Lodge No. 1115, B. P. O. E., and is a charter member of Rosewood Camp No. 22, W. O. W., of Marion. In addition to his other interests he is a director of the Pinnaclce Leasing and Developing Company, and owns a modern residence on Poplar Street, Marion.

Mr. Bennett was first married in 1908, at Marion, Kentucky, to Miss Minnie Haynes, daughter of H. N. and Lizzie (Adams) Haynes. Mr. Haynes died in 1920, having been a very prominent man in his day. He was the founder of the Kentucky Fluor Spar Company, and was elected Circuit Court Clerk of Crittenden County on the republican ticket, of which he was a zealous supporter for many years.

Mrs. Haynes survives her husband and lives at DeLand, Florida.

The first Mrs. Bennett died December 7, 1912, having borne her husband two children: Mary Elizabeth, who was born April 7, 1910; and Mildred Wallace, who was born February 3, 1912.

Mr. Bennett married on December 4, 1915, at Dycusburg, Kentucky, Miss Ida Lou Ramage, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ramage, the former of whom is a farmer and stock-raiser of Dycusburg, but the latter is deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett have no children.

Mr. Bennett is a man of flaring sincerity and great natural ability. A close student, he has trained himself and developed his capabilities until he is now easily one of the leaders in his profession and party in the county. Personally popular, he has made many warm, personal friends, and his patriotic action in going to Washington to aid the Government during the period of the war met with the approval of his fellow citizens. Such men as he form the real bulwark of true democracy and can be depended upon to rise to the occasion whenever there is need of their special services, as well as to do their duty day by day during ordinary times.

Edward H. Blake. Of the agriculturists of Bourbon County who in their activities are displaying the possession of true progressiveness and modern tendencies, one of the best known is Edward H. Blake, of Centerville, on the Georgetown pike, eight miles northwest of Paris. Mr. Blake was born near Stony Point, Bourbon County, January 1, 1858, a son of Thomas and Nora (Burke) Blake.

Thomas Blake was born June 24, 1824, in County Limerick, Ireland, and was twenty-eight years of age when he emigrated to the United States and settled for a short time in New York. He then went to Canada, where he lived for one year, and in 1851 came to Nicholasville, Kentucky, where as a railroad laborer he helped build the extension from Lexington to Nicholasville. During this time Mr. Blake knew much of hard work and was taught to respect the value of money. While in Canada he had arisen each morning at 3 o'clock and worked until 10 o'clock at night, cutting hay with a scythe at a time when it was too cold to wear anything else but light trousers, all for $5 per month. Although he was a little better in the railroad work, and later he was an operator of a railroad turnpike builder, a vocation which he followed until 1863, during which time he built among others the turnpike from Jackstown to Paris. During these five years Bourbon County labor was worth $1.10 per day and board was $2.25 per week, while eggs were delivered at 5 cents a dozen.

Returning to Kentucky, Mr. Blake moved to Scott County and rented a farm from Milton Kinville for two years, subsequently spending a like period on a farm rented from another party. Returning to Bourbon County, he lived for four years on the old George Coley farm, and in 1870 came to Centerville and purchased eighteen acres of land, on which he built a home. This is now a part of the property owned by his son, Edward H., and the original building is included in the present house. He also has a and Mrs. Blake located at Stony Point, where Mr. Blake began farming. After the time of a turnpike builder, he participated the years. This known as the man's affection and active in the ranks of his party, and although not an office seeker kept well posted on all events and issues and supported worthy movements. He had received a good common school education in his youth and was a man of intelligence and good judgment. He was a member of the Catholic Church at Paris and consistent in his support and attendance, as was his worthy wife, who died in 1900 at the old home. They were the parents of the following children: Edward H.; Margaret, who married Edward Walsh, a railroad man; MINNIE, who married Albert H. Kellogg, the sheriff of Paris, who was formerly deputy sheriff of Bourbon County for eight years under Sheriffs George Bowen and Wallace Mitchell; Thomas, who died at the age of eighteen years in 1884; and John, who died on the home farm as a bachelor in May, 1914, aged forty-seven years.

Edward H. Blake received his education in the public schools of his native locality and grew up on the home farm. At the time he attained his majority he began looking after all the details on the home place, and about 1890 took full charge thereof as manager, since which time he has bought out the other interests and is now sole owner. He has remodeled and enlarged the home, has erected a large tobacco barn and other buildings, and in various ways has added to the impressiveness of his property, making it one of the attractive and valuable properties of Bourbon County. At this time he has 125 acres of highly productive land with three sets of buildings, and in his operations grows large crops of tobacco, hay, corn, wheat, etc. He is modern in his methods and displays the ability of making an intelligent use of the latest improved machinery and appurtenances. While farming has been his chief interest and business, he has also participated in other ventures. He was one of the organizers and a director of the Peoples Bank.
and when that institution was consolidated with the Deposit Bank, as the Peoples Deposit Bank, he became a member of the directing board of this house, which enjoys an excellent reputation in banking circles. Politics and public affairs have played only a secondary part in his career, but he has not failed in his discharge of these duties of good citizenship and worthy measure have always found in him a staunch supporter and ill-cooperator.

Mr. Blake was married October 15, 1913, to Miss Agnes Kerr, who was born and reared at Memphis, Tennessee, and as a young woman came to Lexington, where she entered the home of Mrs. Thomas Grace, the aunt of Mr. Blake. To Mr. and Mrs. Blake there have been born: Edward Anthony, born June 13, 1915; and Mary Margaret, born June 2, 1918. Mr. and Mrs. Blake are members of the Catholic Church of the Annunciation at Paris.

James Franklin Cummings. With the exception of an interim of six years James Franklin Cummings has been identified with insurance matters in Western Kentucky for twenty-two years, and since March, 1918, when he became an independent operator, has built up one of the largest enterprises of its kind in this part of the state, his headquarters being at Paducah. Mr. Cummings is a native Kentuckian, born in Henderson County, February 11, 1853, a son of A. J. and Harriet Walker (Johnson) Cummings. The Cummings family originated in Scotland, whence they emigrated to America during Colonial times, making their new home in North Carolina. In that state was born the grandfather of James Franklin Cummings, Moses Cummings, who was the pioneer of the name into Henderson County, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death. He married a Miss Sinclair, a native of Tennessee, and among their children was A. J. Cummings, who was born in Tennessee, in 1816. He was still a child when brought to Henderson County, Kentucky, where he was reared and educated, and where he became a successful farmer. In 1858 he removed to Daviess County, this state, where his death occurred in the same year. He was a member of the democratic party and of the Baptist Church, and was a man of strong religious principle. He married Harriet Walker Johnson, who was born in 1829, in Henderson County, Kentucky, and who survives her husband and resides on the home farm at Curdsville. They became the parents of three children: Robert N., a carpenter and builder who died in Christian County, Kentucky, at the age of fifty-five years; James Franklin; and Caroline Williams, who died when nineteen years of age.

James F. Cummings secured his early education in the rural schools of Daviess County, Kentucky, until he was twenty years of age, in the meantime devoting the summer seasons to working on the farms of the home community. When he was twenty-one years old he secured a school in Daviess County, and while teaching his class spent his spare time in studying higher subjects, attending night school at Owensboro and a commercial college at that place. He was thus engaged for three years, following which he established himself in business as the proprietor of a grocer at Curdsville, conducting this establishment for six years. He then resumed teaching in Daviess County, and continued therein for several years, and in 1897 went to Owensboro, near which place he taught school for eight months. Mr. Cummings began his connection with the insurance business at Owensboro in 1898, and remained there until 1900, when he removed to Evansville, Indiana, and followed the same line for one year. Returning to Owensboro, he was connected for eight months with the Commonwealth Insurance Company, being subsequently transferred by that concern to Louisville, Kentucky, and made assistant superintendent. In 1907 he came to Paducah as superintendent of this company, a position which he held for four years, and then temporarily left the insurance business, becoming city circulator for the News-Democrat, a position which he retained for six years. In March, 1918, Mr. Cummings resumed operations in the insurance line, this time on his own account. He is the present operator of the largest enterprises in Western Kentucky in the handling of life, accident, fire, automobile and other kinds of insurance. He maintains offices at 705 City National Bank Building. Mr. Cummings is a stockholder in the Seven States Oil Company and owns a modern residence at 703 South Ninth Street, as well as other real estate at Paducah. In politics a republican, he has taken an independent and nonpartisan line. He has served as police judge at Curdsville and as a member of the Paducah School Board for four years. He is a member and deacon of the Presbyterian Church, and belongs to the Masonic fraternity.

In 1881, in Daviess County, Kentucky, Mr. Cummings was united in marriage with Miss Archie A. Blincoe, who was born in that county, a graduate of Mount St. Joseph College. To this union there have been born children as follows: Mary Ollie, a graduate of the Owensboro High School, now the wife of Paul Rausch, chef in a large hotel at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin; Mary Lima, a graduate of the International Correspondence School at Scranton, Pennsylvania, who resides at home and is an efficient stenographer in the employ of Rubel’s Dry Goods Store; Nettie, the wife of L. H. Gates, proprietor of an implement store; and Robert Hobart, a graduate of St. Mary’s College, Paducah, and now assistant manager of the Otis Hidden Company, wholesale furnishing, of Louisville; and Christine, the wife of Charles Fowler, of 1302 Broadway, Paducah, connected with the Illinois Central Railroad shops.

James L. F. Paris. For a quarter of a century Mr. Paris has been actively associated with the educational affairs of Crittenden County, and is a member of the Board of Education of that county. He was born in 1852, on his father’s farm in Crittenden County, Kentucky, and died on July 1, 1878. He was a farmer and with his son James, is four miles southeast of Marion. Politically he is affiliated with the republican party, and was a very devout and active member of the Baptist Church. He was married, first, to Miss Sarah E. Walker, who was born in Tennessee in 1844, and died at the old homestead in 1909. She was the mother of eight children: Charles H., a farmer residing near Woodville, Mississippi; Sarah Ellen, wife of J. F. Conger, and their home is also a farm near Woodville; H. C., a minister of the Baptist Church who lives at Marion; N. W., who was in the internal revenue service for many years, resided at the age of thirty-nine; James L. F.; Paul, a farmer in Crittenden County; Carrie, wife of Talmadge Hill, a Crittenden County farmer; and Linnie, unmarried and living at Woodville, Mississippi.

James L. F. Paris acquired his early education in the rural schools of Crittenden County, graduated from the grade schools of Marion and finished his high school course there at the age of thirty-nine. Afterwards he qualified as a teacher and forthwith began his long experience as a teacher in the rural schools of Crittenden County. He was a popular worker in the country schools of the county and in November, 1917, was elected county superintendent, beginning the duties of his four-year term in January, 1918, and has recently been re-elected for another four years as the superintendent of the Crittenden County schools. He has had the chief responsibility of maintaining the efficiency of the schools in a very critical period, and has under his supervision sixty-five schools, twenty teachers, and a scholarship enrollment of three thousand. His offices are in the O. M. James Building on Carlisle Street in Marion.

Mr. Paris is actively identified with the County and State Teachers Associations. He is a republican, a member of the local school board, and a member of the Sunday School in the church. While he owns a good home in town, on Depot Street, he also owns, as above noted, his father's old farm home southeast of Marion, and spends part of the year in that suburban residence.

In 1898, in Crittenden County, he married Miss Cora A. James, daughter of H. A. and Drucilla (McDonald) James. Her parents live on a farm near Marion and her father is a dentist by profession. Mr. and Mrs. Paris have five children: Jamie, born April 26, 1902, a student in the Marion High School; Ruth, born April 26, 1904, also in the High School at Marion; Gladys, born December 4, 1907; Christine, born June 5, 1910, and Evelyn, born in 1914, are all pupils in the grammar schools.

CHASTAIN WILSON HAYNES. An acute, cool-headed man of business may command respect because of his great capacities in managing vast enterprises and his power to change circumstances and conditions to suit his will, and may have as chosen associates others of like caliber and similar power and interests, but in order to secure the confidence and esteem of his fellows he must have other qualities to win the support of his constituents for public office. Chastain Wilson Haynes, mine operator and mayor of Marion, is a man who stands very high among business men, and is making a splendid record for himself as chief executive of the county seat of Crittenden County.

Mayor Haynes was born at Marion, Kentucky, March 18, 1882, a son of Harry A. Haynes, and grandson of Robert Fulton Haynes, who was born in Crittenden County, Kentucky, in 1831, and died at DeLand, Florida, in 1898. Mr. Haynes located in Marion and has resided there ever since, except for a brief period while he was in college, when he resided in Crittenden County, where he was an extensive farmer, and at one time served as sheriff of the county, and for many years was magistrate of his magisterial district. Studying law, he was admitted to the bar and for some years practiced law, and at all times he has been prominent as a republican. In 1884 he moved to DeLand, Florida, where he became a fruitgrower and was married, April 28, 1905, to M. N. M. (Margaret) Clayton, a native of Crittenden County, Kentucky. Their marriage produced four children. The eldest, Mrs. Carrie A. Price, is the wife of S. L. Price, of Rizpah Temple, A. O. N. M. S., of Madisonville, Kentucky. He is also a member of Blackwell Lodge No. 57, K. of P., of Marion. He was the son of a modest family, and was educated in the public schools of Marion and graduated in 1905 with the degree of Bachelor of Science and as a member of the Greek Letter college fraternity Phi Delta Theta. For one year between his collegiate courses he served as deputy Circuit Court Clerk under his father.

In 1905 Mayor Haynes entered the employ of the Kentucky Fluor-Spar Company as bookkeeper, and held that position until 1908, in which year he went into a mail order business with his brother Wilbur V., this connection continuing until 1912. Mayor Haynes then returned to the Kentucky Fluor-Spar Company and was its secretary and treasurer until 1918, at which time the company was sold, and for the subsequent year served as president of the company. Since then he has been occupied with operating several fluor-spar mines for himself. These mines are located in Crittenden County. A strong republican, he was elected mayor of Marion in 1917 and has been re-elected on each successive occasion. He is also a member of the school board and one of the most progressive men of this part of the county. The Methodist Episcopal Church holds his membership, and he is serving the Marion congregation as steward. A Mason, he belongs to Bigham Lodge No. 256, A. F. and A. M.; Crittenden Chapter No. 70, R. A. M.; Wingate Council No. 40, R. and J.; Madisonville Commandery No. 34, Knight of Pythias; Rizpah Temple, A. O. N. M. S., of Madisonville, Kentucky; and is also a member of Blackwell Lodge No. 57, K. of P., of Marion. In addition to his other interests Mayor Haynes owns stock in the Marion Bank, and his modern residence on West Bellville Street, one of the finest bungalows in Marion. During the late war he took an active part in all of the local war work, and was manager of the Marion branch of the Red Cross.
of the sales of the Fourth and Fifth Liberty Loans in Crittenden County, and raised the full quota for both.

In 1909 Mayor Haynes was united in marriage at St. Louis, Missouri, to Miss Susie Gilbert, a daughter of A. M. and Fannie (Crawford) Gilbert. Mrs. Gilbert, who was the daughter of the late Dr. J. W. Crawford, a pioneer physician of Crittenden County, and who for 40 years kept an office in Uniontown, to which place her husband was born, was a man of the highest standing, is deceased, but Mr. Gilbert is living and is now police judge of Marion, where he resides. Mrs. Haynes was graduated from the Marion High School and also attended the University of Kentucky at Lexington, Kentucky. Mayor and Mrs. Haynes have one daughter, Elizabeth Lee, who was born April 12, 1910.

James H. Orme of Marion, has been in the drug business in that city continuously for more than a quarter of a century. His enterprise has contributed in many ways to the material progress of his home city and county, and his good citizenship has come to be regarded as no less reliable in times of public need. Mr. Orme, who is of Irish ancestry, his paternal forefathers having come from Ireland, his maternal forefathers from Vermont, was born in Uniontown in Union County, Kentucky, June 25, 1871. His father, George W. Orme, whose birth occurred at Shepherdsville in Bullitt County, Kentucky, in 1837, grew up in his native county and then moved to Union County, where he was married and where he exercised his skill and ingenuity as a harness maker. He conducted a shop, hired a number of skilled workmen, and at a time when articles classed under the title of saddlery were made by hand, and made well and durably, he developed a manufacturing establishment, one of the most extensive in the state. He sold his factory in 1881, and after that was engaged in business as a retail merchant of buggies and carriages until he retired in 1898. The last ten years of his life he was retired at Uniontown, where he died in 1908. He was a democrat, served as a member of the Council at Uniontown, was a member of the Christian Church and was a very ardent Mason. While his years were devoted to business, he invested his surplus means in land and became a large land owner, chiefly near Morganfield in Union County. This property since his death has been distributed among his children. George W. Orme married Margaret Ray, who was born near Morganfield in Union County and died at Uniontown, September 26, 1871. She was the mother of three children: Martha, wife of W. C. Bland, a grain merchant at Uniontown; R. L., who was a druggist at Evansville, Indiana, where he died May 9, 1918; and James H.

James H. Orme grew up at Uniontown, attended the public schools, also the S. K. College of Hopkinsville, spent one year in Pilot Grove Institute at Pilot Grove, Missouri, and took the regular course in the School of Pharmacy of Vanderbilt University at Nashville and graduated Ph. G. in 1892. Immediately following his graduation he returned to Marion and entered the drug business as a member of the firm Moore & Orme. A year later he bought out the interests of his partner, R. L. Moore, and since then has been sole proprietor of a business that has been kept growing and improving and steadily maintained its prestige as the leading drug store of Crittenden County. Mr. Orme owns the large, modern store building in which the business is conducted and also an adjoining building. He constructed those buildings in 1905, after the destructive fire which destroyed so much of Marion, including three business buildings owned by Mr. Orme. He is also owner of a comfortable home on Depot Street, and has a half interest in his brother's old farm of 400 acres near Morganfield. Mr. Orme is also president of the Marion Milling Company, flour manufacturers.

He served several terms on the City Council, is a democrat, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and fraternityally is affiliated with Rosewood Camp No. 22, Woodmen of the World, and Princeton Lodge No. 1115, of the Elks. In 1893, at Marion, he married Miss Bessie Carnahan, daughter of W. G. and Clara (Doughlas) Carnahan. Her mother is still living at Marion, while her father, who was a capitalist, died in 1917. Mrs. Orme is a graduate of the Marion High School. The son, born July 19, 1895, graduated from the Marion High School, attended Kentucky State University two years, and left university in January, 1918, to receive training at Camp Taylor, Louisville, and was in service until mustered out in November, 1918, with the rank of second lieutenant. He is now associated with his father in the drug business at Marion. He married Louise Clement, daughter of Col. The daughter, Margaret Orme, was born June 11, 1904, and is now in the sophomore year of Hamilton College at Lexington.

V. O. Chandler. Not only is the office of sheriff one of the most important in a county, but it is also the most dangerous, and no man can hope to properly measure up to its requirements unless he possesses certain qualifications. A man who has the principles and characteristics of V. O. Chandler has all he pre-eminently brave, unflinchingly honest, tirelessly energetic, and he is a good judge of men and their motives so that he can understand them and predict their actions. All who are elected do not have these qualifications, and quite a few are failures, but one of the men who is certainly fitted for his office is V. O. Chandler, sheriff of Crittenden County and one of the most highly esteemed men and prosperous citizens of his section.

V. O. Chandler was born in Crittenden County, January 8, 1884, a son of William J. Chandler, and grandson of George Chandler, a native of North Carolina, who died in Sumner County, Tennessee, about 1848, having been the pioneer of his family into that region, where he carried on farming. The maternal great-grandfather, Alexander Clark, was born at Belfast, Ireland, and came to the American Colonies prior to the Revolution, in which he participated as a member of the Colonial Army. In return for his services the Government awarded him a land grant in the eastern part of Crittenden County, Kentucky, to which he moved. Some of this he cleared, and he became a large and prosperous landowner. Alexander Clark married Mary Mc German, who was born in New England and died in Crittenden County. She is still living in the Clark and Chandler families that she used to relate about witchcraft. The maternal grandfather, William Clark, was born in Crittenden County, where he spent his entire life, and there he died before the birth of his grandson.

William J. Chandler was born in Sumner County, Tennessee, in 1837, and died in Crittenden County February 7, 1897. All his sons were farmers. One of them, of 400 acres near Morganfield, who was a druggist at Evansville, Indiana, where he lived from 1837 to 1857, married Margaret Carnahan, daughter of W. G. and Clara (Crawford) Carnahan. Her mother lived until she died in 1917 at Marion, Kentucky. Her father was a capitalist, died in February 7, 1897. All his sons were farmers. One of them, V. O. Chandler, was born in Crittenden County, Kentucky, January 8, 1884, and died in Crittenden County, Kentucky, October 21, 1918. Their other children were as follows: Joseph L., who is a farmer, resides thirteen miles east of Marion; William Riley, who is a farmer in the same neighborhood as Joseph; Jefferson Monroe, who is a merchant of Marion; Chester M., who is operating the old home farm for his brother, Sheriff Chandler; Sheriff Chandler, who was the fifth in order of birth; and Oat, who lives two and a one-half miles east of Marion, is a farmer.

Growing up in his native county, Sheriff Chandler was reared as any farmer's son of his neighborhood and period, being sent to the rural schools during the winter months and taught in the schools at his home and on the farm during the summer ones. He turned his attention to farming, and conducted his father's farm until 1908, when he moved to Blackford and was engaged in a hardware business there until 1913, when he sold and returned to the farm for about a year. In December, 1913, he was appointed deputy sheriff of Crittenden County, assuming the duties of this office in January, 1914, and during the succeeding four years made such an admirable record that he was the logical candidate of his party for sheriff, and was elected in November, 1917, by a handsome majority. In January, 1918, he took office for a term of four years. His offices are located in the Court House, Sheriff Chandler is a Republican, and in addition to the offices already enumerated, has held that of deputy assessor of Crittenden County for a term of two years. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Well known in Masonry, he belongs to Ashley Lodge No. 706, A. F. and A. M., of Blackford, Kentucky. He also belongs to Blackford Lodge No. 337, f. O. O. F., and at one time belonged to the Modern Woodmen of America. While residing at Blackford he was a director of the Blackford Bank. In addition to the 100 acres he owns of the old homestead he also owns a farm of 118 acres adjoining, and a third which has nearly 105 acres. For a time he has carried on a general farming and stockraising business, and is a recognized leader in agricultural matters.

On October 13, 1900, Sheriff Chandler was married to Miss Ethel I. Metcalf, a daughter of John and Permelia (Ashley) Metcalf, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Metcalf was at one time a buyer and seller of timber, and specialized in railroad ties. Mr. and Mrs. Chandler have three children, namely: John William, born January 20, 1904; Ada, born May 5, 1911; Emmett Ashley, who was born July 20, 1913; and Venera Ada, who was born February 4, 1916.

During the period of the war there was no more zealous worker in behalf of the various drives launched for the sale of Liberty Bonds and war organizations than he, and he subscribed to his very limit to all of them. Since he has been sheriff he has made his name a terror to law-breakers, who recognize the fact that he insists upon the upholding of law and the maintenance of order. However, while he is stern in his insistence on this, he is equally firm in his determination to give to every person, no matter of what he be accused, a fair deal, and all, while they fear him, also respect him and accord to him a confidence a man of another caliber could not inspire.

Frederick Warren Nunn. Seventeen years of practice and the exercise of his individual time and abilities have brought Frederick Warren Nunn the rank of effective leadership in the dental profession of Crittenden County. He is a man widely known for his other interests, including an effective share in the agricultural and horticultural development of his home county.

Doctor Nunn was born in Henderson County, Kentucky, October 25, 1877. The family is of Scotch origin, but was established in Virginia in Colonial days. His early years he has carried, he was a native of Kentucky, belonged to a pioneer family of Henderson County, and spent his active life there as a farmer. M. Y. Nunn, father of Doctor Nunn, was born in Henderson County in 1851 and is now living with his son Frederick W. at Marion. Until he retired at Marion in 1912 his interests and activities centered largely in the name of an extensive farming proposition in Henderson County. He is a democrat, and a very faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He married Sallie E. Denton, who was born in Henderson County in 1854 and died at Marion in 1916. Of their three children Frederick W. is the youngest. Clarence, the oldest, spent his active life as a farmer and died at the age of sixty-four in Daviess County. Olgia, the only daughter, is the wife of Eugene Sights, an oil operator living at Fowlerton, Texas.

Frederick W. Nunn acquired his early training in the rural schools of Henderson County, and as a youth acquired considerable proficiency in farm labor and management. In 1903 he received the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery from Louisville College of Dentistry, and since that date has been busily engaged in his profession at Marion. His offices are in the McComb-Wiggin Building on Carlisle Street. He is a member of the State and National Dental Societies and is now serving as dental examiner for returned soldiers in Crittenden County, having been appointed to that office by the dental supervisor of the Seventh District at Cincinnati.

Doctor Nunn is a democrat, is a steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is affiliated with Bingham Lodge No. 490, A. F. and A. M., at Marion, Blackwell Lodge No. 57, Knights of Pythias, Rosewood Camp No. 22, Woodmen of the World, and Marion Chapter of the Eastern Star. Doctor Nunn's efforts as a farmer and fruit grower are expended on his farm of 120 acres a mile south of Marion. Forty acres of this farm is devoted to an extensive apple orchard. He has his modern suburban home on that farm, which owns considerable other real estate in Marion. He is also president of the National Farm Loan Association of Crittenden County.

In 1900, in Henderson County, Doctor Nunn married Miss Mary Louise Harris, a daughter of B. L. and Sallie (Cromwell) Harris. Her father was a farmer and died in 1919, and her mother is living in Corydon, Kentucky. The three children of Doctor and Mrs. Nunn are: N. Y., named for his grandfather, born August 1, 1912, and is attending the Elkina Training School; Frederick Bruce, born May 9, 1906, attending the public schools of Marion; and Mary Charlotte, born June 29, 1909, also attending the Marion schools.

T. Atchison Frazer, M. D. One of the men longest in service as a physician and surgeon in Crittenden County is Doctor Frazer of Marion, who has spent more than a quarter of a century in the work of his chosen vocation, and his attainments have brought him many unusual distinctions among medical men in southwestern Kentucky.

Doctor Frazer was born in Hopkins County November 12, 1869. His birthplace was a log cabin, not so much a sign of poverty of the family as the typical habitation of the fairly well-to-do residents of that section in the period immediately following the close of the Civil War. Doctor Frazer is descended from a family originally French, the name being spelled Frazee. From France they went to Ireland, and his great-grandfather came to America and settled in Warren County, Kentucky, where he spent the rest of his life as a farmer. There was a relative of the family who held the rank of general and was killed in the Revolutionary War. The father of Doctor Frazer was Thomas Alexander Frazee, who was born in Warren County in 1838 and died in Hopkins County in 1873. He was reared in Warren and Hopkins counties, and at the beginning of the Civil War enlisted in the Union Army from Hopkins County as a member of the Seventeenth Kentucky Cavalry. When the war was over he established his home in Hopkins County, and successive years brought him more than ordinary prominence and prosperity as a farmer and stock man. He voted as a republican and was very faithful in the performance of his duties as a churchman, being active in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He married Mary Jane Lynn, who was born at Slaughtersville, Kentucky, in 1844, and died on the old homestead in Hopkins County in June, 1910. These parents had a large family of children, twelve in number, and nearly all the sons have attained allegiance to the soil as practical farmers. The oldest is James Hamilton, a farmer in Hopkins County. Doctor Frazer is the second in age. Isaac Shelby, the third born, John S., the fifth, Thad. A., the seventh child, and Robert A., the ninth, are farmers in Hopkins County. The fourth is Lula, wife of J. H. Buchanan. Lizzie is the sixth child and is the wife of A. O. Ellis, a Pullman car conductor living at St. Louis, Missouri. Kittie, the eighth child, is the wife of John D. Lausden, a farmer at Nebo, Kentucky. Mattie, the youngest, is the wife of Lysander Bone, a farmer near Dalton in Hopkins County.

T. Atchison Frazer while growing up on the farm and having the benefits of a rural environment early looked to a professional career as the means of satisfying his special abilities and ambition. He was educated in country schools, and the M. and F. Academy at Providence, Kentucky, and from there entered the medical department of Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, and has his M. D. degree in 1894, and at once entered on a busy practice at Blackford, Kentucky. From there in 1900 he removed to Marion, where for twenty years he has carried on his work as a general physician and surgeon. His offices are in the old Post Office Building on Carlisle Street, and he has a modern home on Depot Street.

Doctor Frazer is a county health officer of Crittenden County, and has held that post for nineteen years. He has used his office as a means of safeguarding the people and homes of the county, and has made much progress in public health work in this section of the state. He was active during the war, being chairman of the Crittenden County Council of Defense, under appointment by Governor A. O. Stanley. He also served as the medical member of the Crittenden County Draft Board, and is now acting surgeon of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, and is examiner for the Vocational Training Board. He is a member of the Crittenden County, State and American Medical associations, the Ohio Valley Medical Society, the Southern Medical Society and the Southwest Kentucky Society. Doctor Frazer owns a farm of 270 acres adjoining Marion on the northwest. He is a republican in politics and is an active member and trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternally he is a past master of Bigham Lodge No. 256, A. F. and A. M., serving as master in 1908, and just ten years before he was master of Ashley Lodge No. 706 at Blackford. He is also affiliated with Crittenden Chapter No. 70, R. A. M., and Windgate Council No. 40, R. and S. M.

In 1895, at Marion, Doctor Frazer married Miss Cleo Nunn. Her parents, S. A. and Anna (Clement) Nunn, live in Crittenden County, her father being a well-known farmer of that section. Mrs. Frazer was a teacher in the schools of Crittenden County for three years before her marriage. They have seven children, Carl O., Joseph S., Theodore R., Robert N., Ada Nell, Edwin Walker and Chastain Lynn. The three youngest are pupils in the public schools of Marion, while Robert N. is in the Marion High School, Carl O., at home and engaged in farming, is an ex-service man of the World War and spent a year with the Expeditionary Forces in France and in Germany. The second son, Joseph S., is a motor mechanic, and Theodore R. is with the U. S. G. S.

John S. Roebuck, Jr. It is a third of a century since John S. Roebuck, Jr., was admitted to the bar and began practice at Newport. Since then he has handled a large volume of general practice in the courts of Newport, Covington and Cincinnati, and as a citizen his interests have been intimately identified with his community through all the years.

Mr. Roebuck was born at Prescott, Ontario, Canada, February 22, 1865. His grandfather was Henry Roe- buck, who was born in India. His mother, being left a widow, brought her six sons from India to Canada and established her family on a homestead at Coteau, Ontario. Her maiden name was Elizabeth Hyde. After coming to Canada she became the wife of David Buch- man, a prominent merchant of Montreal, who was a native of customs at Brockville. Henry Roebuck was reared and educated in Canada, for a number of years was a steamboat captain on the St. Lawrence River and finally retired to his farm and died at Coteau in 1877. He was a man of exceptional physique, his chest measure being fifty-four inches. This characteristic is noteworthy because both his son and grandson seem to inherit it, and while the Newport lawyer has been devoted to his profession, his enthusiasm is readily aroused by any subject connected with outdoor life and he has written many short stories and sketches for such publications as the Outing and the Forest and Stream of New York. His father was a type of the perfect all around athlete, and had an almost national reputation as an amateur boxer, fencer and wrestler. At one time he was superintendent of the Cincinnati Gymnasium. Time was employed as a guard when in athletic condition weighed 190 pounds. Henry Roe- buck married a Miss Nichol, a native of the Isle of Guernsey, who died at Montreal.

John S. Roebuck, Sr., was born at Coteau, Ontario, in 1833, was reared there, was married in the neighboring City of Brockville, and was a bank cashier at Coteau and Prescott. In 1869 he brought his family to Newport, Kentucky, and for the next thirty years was a prominent and influential man. Many prominent people in this section of Kentucky will readily pay tribute to the splendid work she did for years as a teacher of music and art. She began teaching these subjects fifty years ago, and taught practically everyone who has shown some special distinction in those arts at Newport and vicinity. She retired from this professional work about 1905. Of her three children John S. Roebuck, Jr., is the youngest and only son. Catherine S., who has been a practicing physician at Newport for the past twenty-five years, lives at 223 East Fifth Street in Newport and is the wife of N. D. Evatt, a solicitor. Mary W. Roebuck became the wife of Otto Mulot, a physician and surgeon at Brooklyn, New York.

John S. Roebuck, Jr., was about four years of age when his parents moved to Newport, and he received his early education in the public schools of Cincinnati. He graduated L.L.B. from the Cincinnati Law School in 1887, and is one of the older members of the Alumni Association of Cincinnati University. He began prac- tice at Newport and has also handled much legal busi- ness in the cities of Cincinnati and Covington. His offices are at 313 York Street in Newport. He is a member of the Cincinnati Bar Association and a member of the Episcopal Church and has to his credit nine years of service in Company B, Second Regiment, Kentucky State Guards. During the World war he was deeply interested in every phase of patriotic work and served as a member of the Home Guards at Newport.

In 1894, in Mason County, Kentucky, he married Miss Emma M. Massman, daughter of Louis J. and Louise (Leasure) Massman. Her father was a graduate of Notre Dame Academy of Cincinnati. Mrs. Roebuck is a graduate of the Notre Dame Academy of Cincinnati. Their only child, Zipporah L. Roebuck, is an art student in the Cincinnati Art Academy.

Benjamin L. Nisbet, member of one of the oldest and most prominent families of Hopkins County, qualified for this privilege and is a graduate of the University of Cincinnati. His great-grandfather was James Nisbet, a native of North Carolina, who a century or more ago came to Kentucky and lived out his life as a farmer in Hopkins County. His grandfather, the Madisonville lawyer, was also James Nisbet and was born in Hopkins County in 1827. He was a man of much prominence, served two terms as sheriff of Hopkins County, owned a large amount of farm land, and was interested in the ice factory in Madisonville. He died at Madisonville in 1894. His wife was Jane Davis, who was born at St. Charles, Kentucky, Hopkins County, and died at Madisonville in 1897. Their son, J. C. Nisbet, was born in Hopkins County in 1856, and for many years has been one of the county's leading farmers and stock men. He lives at Madisonville, and in addition to the handling of his own properties he is manager of the farms of the Nisbet estate, comprising about 4,000 acres owned by the late W. A. Nisbet, the well-known coal mine operator, banker and farmer. J. C. Nisbet served as a lieu sheriff under his father for eight years when he was a young man, also as constable in Madisonville ten years, and has given much time to public affairs. He has served as chairman of the school board in the Munn's school district. He is a democrat and is a member of the Grapevine Christian Church, the oldest church of that denomination in Hopkins County. J. C. Nisbet married Sallie E. Wheatley, who was born in Owen County, Kentucky, in 1859, and died in Hopkins County in 1903. They had one child, Mary Wheatley and Benjamin L. The daughter, who died in January, 1920, was the wife of C. C. Woodruff, who is assistant superintendent of the Fox Run coal mines at St. Charles, Kentucky.

Benjamin L. Nisbet acquired some of his education in the rural schools of Hopkins County. He graduated from the Madisonville High School with the class of 1912, and in 1915 received his LL.B. degree from Kentucky State University at Lexington. He entered upon a general practice of law at Madisonville immediately after graduating. About the same time, in June, 1915, he enlisted in the Kentucky National Guard. During the fall and winter of 1916-17 he was called from his work as a lawyer to serve with the National Guard on the Mexican border. While there he was regimental commissary sergeant on the non-commissioned officers' staff. In 1917, he was transferred, September 1, 1917, to Camp Shelby, Mississippi, as a member of the Sixty-third Depot Brigade on Gen. Roger Williams staff. He was next transferred to the One Hundred and Forty-ninth Infantry and was promoted to first lieutenant December 14, 1917. He served as division instruction officer in the One Pound Cannon School. Mr. Nisbet went overseas in September, 1918, landing at Southampton, England, and crossed the channel to La Havre in October. After going abroad, he was transferred from the One Hundred and Forty-ninth Infantry to the One Hundred and Sixty-first Infantry, First Depot Brigade, and served as commanding officer of the Headquarters Company Specialty Schools at Contres, France. The last of December, 1918, he was transferred from the One Hundred and Sixty-first Infantry to Classification Camp at St. Aignan, France, and subsequently assigned on the staff of the Seventy-first Regiment at Lake Charles, Louisiana, for his own return to the United States. He sailed from Brehat March 1, 1919, landed at Hoboken, New Jersey, was sent to Camp Merritt, New Jersey, and then to Camp Taylor at Louisville, where he was mustered out in April, 1919.

Mr. Nisbet resumed the active practice of law at Madisonville July 1, 1920, and is now in the full swing of his professional career. His offices are in the Overall Building on East Center Street. He is a democrat, a member of the Christian Church, and is affiliated with Madisonville Lodge No. 738 of the Elks, of which he is lecturing knight. He lives in a very attractive bungalow residence on North Main Street. Mr. Nisbet married at Lexington in February, 1918, Miss Helen Lafferty, daughter of W. T. and Maude (Ward) Lafferty, her father being dean of the Kentucky State University Law School. Her parents are both prominent socially in Lexington, and her mother is one of Kentucky's prominent women. Mr. and Mrs. Nisbet have one daughter, Helen Louise, born April 21, 1919.

Letcher F. Fox has been one of the leading members of the bar of Madisonville for the past twenty years, is the present county attorney, and his abilities are in line with the substantial traditions of a family that has been in this section of Kentucky for more than a century.

His great-grandfather Fox was born in North Carolina in 1747, and about the year 1800 came to Kentucky and established a home on a farm in Hopkins County, near St. Charles. On that same farm was born Letcher F. Fox and also his father and grandfather. The great-grandfather died on the homestead in the fall of 1839. He had cleared and farmed the land, and made a good standing of it. His wife was Cynthia Laffoon, also a native of North Carolina. She died on the Kentucky homestead, The Laffoons were a Holland Dutch family, while the Foxes are Scotch-Irish.

The grandfather of Letcher F. Fox was John Critenden Fox, who was born near St. Charles in Hopkins County in 1822 and spent all his life on that homestead. He died there in 1884. While he was a democrat, in early life he was a strong Union sympathizer and became a republican after the war. He was a member of the Christian Church and for many years an elder in the Christian Privilege Church, the oldest church of that denomination in Hopkins County.

John C. Fox married Mahalia Moore, who was born in Hopkins County in 1830 and died on the home farm in 1870. They were the parents of four sons and one daughter: Harmon — who returned home; William, who was transferred to the One Hundred and Forty-ninth Infantry, and who died of measles; James H., father of the present county attorney; Mattie, who is the wife of T. P. Woodruff and lives on a farm near St. Charles; Franklin Pierce, a farmer near St. Charles; and George Buchanan, who is a farmer in the same community.

James H. Fox was born in the old homestead January 22, 1847, had a rural school education, and in October, 1863, became a Union soldier in the 35th Kentucky Infantry. He was in the battle of Salt Works, Virginia, and in many skirmishes. After the war he returned home, was a farmer near St. Charles until 1888, then for eighteen years conducted a saw mill business in Hopkins County, and since then has lived retired in Madisonville. He is a staunch republican, and while living in the country served thirteen years as magistrate in the St. Charles district and for two terms police judge of St. Charles. He is a member of Madisonville Post of the Grand Army, is a Mason, and has been almost a life-long member of the Christian Church. In 1867, in Hopkins County, he married Miss Mildredie Robinson. She was born near St. Charles in 1840 and died at the Fox farm in 1881. She is survived by three children: Ida, wife of Eugene Brown, a carpenter and builder of Hopkinsville; Claude U., who lives in Chicago and is a salesman for the wholesale dry goods house of Carson, Pirie & Scott; and Letcher R., the youngest. In 1883, in Hopkins County, James H. Fox married Miss Martha Jane White, who was born in that county in 1862. They have two children: Vada, wife of J. H. Vannoy, a merchant at Madisonville, and Edgar F., a hardware merchant at Madisonville.

Letcher R. Fox was born on the old home near St. Charles, March 25, 1879, and all his early years were spent in that community. He attended the rural schools, the grade schools at St. Charles, and the South Kentucky College at Hopkinsville, and studied law under Judge J. B. Landis of Hopkinsville, the late judge of the St. Charles district. In the meantime, from the age of eighteen to twenty-one, he taught in some of the rural schools of his native county. Admitted to the bar in 1900, Mr. Fox immediately began practice at Madisonville, and his professional work has included a wide range of civil and criminal cases, many of them the most important tried in local courts. He has improved his professional reputation through the vigorous manner in which he has handled his duties as county attorney. He was elected to that office in 1917, and began his term of four years in January, 1918.

Mr. Fox has acquired many other associations with his home city. He is a stockholder and director in the Citizens Bank & Trust Company of Madisonville, and besides his own modern home at 322 South Scott Street owns two business buildings on Main Street and a farm near St. Charles. He invested of his personal resources in war securities, and was a speaker and worker in all the campaigns for the sale of Liberty Bonds and other drives. As a republican he was a staunch admirer of Theodore Roosevelt, attended the Chicago convention as a Roosevelt delegate, and later landed on the Roosevelt ticket. During that campaign he was himself candidate for Congress from the Second Kentucky District. He is a member and deacon of the Christian Church, and is affiliated with Madisonville Lodge No. 143, A. F. and A. M.; Madisonville Lodge No. 738 of the Elks; Eureka Camp No. 25, Woodmen of the World; White Oak Camp No. 35, Order of Owls; Madison County Camp of Modern Woodmen of America; and Victoria Lodge No. 84 of the Knights of Pythias at Earlington. In 1904, in Christian County, near Hopkinsville, Mr. Fox married Miss Ora Lee Clardy, daughter of James H. and Annie Maria (Cayce) Clardy. Her parents are retired farmers living at Lafayette in Christian County. Mr. Fox's maternal grandfather, George Cayce, was one of the original members of the Mystic Order at Madisonville;

Roosevelt Eastwood is one of the young county officers of Hopkins County, represents one of the old and substantial families of the county, and practically ever since he left high school has been engaged in some duties at the courthouse in Madisonville.

Mr. Eastwood was born on a farm in the north part of Hopkins County, near Slaughters, November 6, 1886. His paternal ancestors were English and first settled in North Carolina. His grandfather, Wylie Eastwood, was a native of North Carolina, but as a young man came West and settled in Hopkins County, Kentucky. He followed farming and planting and at the time of the war between the states joined the Confederate Army and gave up his life for the South in the battle of Fort Donelson early in the war. He married a Miss Ashby, a native of Hopkins County. C. H. Eastwood, father of Roscoe Eastwood, was born in Hopkins County in 1858 and has spent all his active years here. Though he was left fatherless at an early age, he has achieved more than ordinary success, is one of the largest land owners of the county, having about 1,000 acres, and has been very successful in raising hogs on an extensive scale. Since 1910 his home has been on a farm a mile and a half east of Slaughters. He is a democrat and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. C. H. Eastwood married Sallie A. Orton, who was born near Slaughters in 1867. Roscoe is the oldest of their children. Lottie is the wife of M. E. Toombs, a farmer near Slaughters; C. W. Eastwood is a farmer in the same vicinity; Frank is a student in the Kentucky State University at Lexington; and Benjamin is still carrying on the work of the farm to which he was brought up.

Roscoe Eastwood grew up on his father's farm, made the best of the advantages of the rural schools and in 1910 graduated from the Madisonville High School. Soon after leaving high school he was appointed deputy county clerk, and performed those duties for two and a half years. Following that he was deputy sheriff, two years, and in November, 1915, had the honor of being elected Circuit Court clerk of Hopkins County, a very distinctive honor for a young man who was but twenty-six years of age at the time of his election. He began his official duties for a term of six years January 3, 1916. The only interruption to his official service came when he entered the army in 1918, spending two months in a training school at Cookeville, Tennessee, then for three months at Fort Leavenworth, and two and a half months at Camp Meade, Maryland. He was mustered out January 28, 1919, and at once resumed his duties as Circuit Court clerk. Mr. Eastwood is a democrat, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and affiliated with Madisonville Lodge No. 143, A. F. and A. M.; Madisonville Chapter No. 123, R. A. M.; Madisonville Commandery No. 27, K. T.; Rizpah Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Madisonville; and Madisonville Lodge No. 738 of the Elks.

William Walter Crick, present county judge of Hopkins County, was born on a farm seven miles southeast of Madisonville, near the mouth of Flat Creek, April 5, 1883, and has achieved business success and public honor in communities where the people have known him.

Judge Crick's paternal ancestors came from Ireland in Colonial times. His grandfather, James Crick, was born in Coffee County, Tennessee, in 1818, was reared and married in his native county, was a farmer there, and as a stanch Union man joined the Union Army in the Civil war and served throughout as a non-commissioned officer. At the close of the war he moved to Indiana, but in 1870 settled in Christian County, Kentucky, and lived on his farm there until his death in 1885. He was a republican and a Methodist. James Crick married Sallie Mangrum, a native of Coffee County, Tennessee, where she died a few years after their marriage.

William Walter Crick, father of Judge Crick, was born at Tullahoma, Tennessee, in 1857, accompanied his father to Indiana after the war, and was still young when the family settled in Christian County, Kentucky, in 1870. At the time of his marriage in Madisonville he was carrying the United States mail between Madisonville and Providence. Subsequently he moved to the farm seven miles southeast of Madisonville where William W. Crick was born, but in 1884 moved to another farm near White Plains, two miles east of that village, and is still actively engaged in agriculture in that location. He has been successful as a farmer, and particularly as a tinner, and has made the largest cultivated orchard in the southern part of Hopkins County. He is a Republican, and was candidate on that ticket for the office of county jailer of Hopkins County in 1910. For thirty-six years he has been one of the leading members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in his community and is an elder. He has been identified with the Masonic order for forty-one years. W. M. Crick married Mary Hardiman, who was born at Madisonville, Kentucky, in 1903. Her father, George Washington Hardiman, was born in Buckingham County, Virginia, in 1822 and came to Hopkins County, Kentucky, during the Civil War. He was a well known and successful farmer and a leading Democrat of his community. He died in Hopkins County in 1890. He and his father while living in Buckingham County, Virginia, were extensive slave holders and during the war were members of the Confederate Army. George W. Hardiman married Lucy Cotton, a native of Kentucky, and she died on the Hardiman farm in Hopkins County. W. M. Crick and wife were the parents of seven children, William W. being the second. The oldest, Serena, is the wife of John L. Josey, a miner living at Mortons Gap, Kentucky; James George is a machinist living at Johnson City, Tennessee; Leota lives at Evansville, Indiana, with Frank Redmond, who was a building contractor; Elsie is the wife of Otis Dillingham, a farmer near White Plains, Kentucky; Herbert W. in 1910, when twenty-one years of age, was supervisor of Christian County Schools, was graduated from Bowling Green University in 1920, and is now principal of the Mortons Gap schools; Nora Lee is a teacher in the Whitley school near White Plains, and between times carries advanced studies in Bowling Green University.

William Walter Crick acquired his early education in the common schools of Hopkins County, and from the age of seventeen to nineteen gave all his time to his father on the home place. Following that for a year he was an employee of the construction department of the Illinois Central Railway. His longest business association was with the Hope Milling Company at White Plains, where he was a miller for fifteen years, beginning in the mechanical department, and for the last nine years was manager of the mills. Mr. Crick always showed an active and public spirited interest in local affairs, and in 1909 was appointed county judge of White Plains by Governor Willson, and was regularly elected to that office for two terms. He resigned upon his election as county judge, of Hopkins County on the republican ticket. His election to the office of county judge was the most important political event in Hopkins County, which is normally democratic. He led his ticket by 730 votes, and his personal majority was 914. He was elected in November, 1917, and began his four-year term in the courthouse in January, 1918. In October, 1919, he was given a distinctive honor by election for a term of one year as president of the County Judges Association of Kentucky. The first session of the Kentucky legislature in 1920, Judge Crick was nominated on the republican ticket for State Senator, Sixth Senatorial District.

Judge Crick is a stockholder in the Citizens Bank & Trust Company of Madisonville, in the Hope Milling Company of White Plains, and is also the exclusive agent for Hopkins, Muhlenberg and McLean counties for the Studebaker automobiles. Judge Crick as a resident of Madisonville moved into a very complete and modern home which he built in 1920 at the corner of Sugg and Seminary streets. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, is a past master of Orphans Friends Lodge No. 523, A. F. and A. M., at White Plains, having held the post of worshipful master four different years; is affiliated with Madisonville Chapter No. 123, R. A. M.; Madisonville Commandery No. 27, K. T.; Rizpah Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Madisonville; Madisonville Lodge No. 738 of the Elks, Willow Camp No. 113, Woodmen of the World, at White Plains; Willow Grove No. 113 of the Woodmen Circle; and is a member of Mortonsville Chapter of the Eastern Star and the Daughters of the Rebekah. He is especially prominent in Odd Fellowship, being a member of Mount Carmel Lodge No. 246, at White Plains, and at the age of twenty-six was elected as an active deputy grand master.

Judge Crick married at Springfield, Tennessee, in 1902, Miss Maude D. Farmer, daughter of John and Jennie (Bruce) Farmer, both deceased. Judge and Mrs. Crick have two daughters, Ruth, born June 7, 1903, in the second year of the Madisonville High School, and Grace, born January 8, 1910.

Augustus R. Steele. One of the enterprising young business men of Paducah, now engaged very successfully in a real estate and insurance concern, is a veteran of the great war, and holds the respect and confidence of his fellow citizens both as a former soldier and reliable man of affairs. He was born at Clarksville, Tennessee, August 1, 1880, a son of James Steele, now a resident of Cleburne, Texas.

James Steele was born in Ireland in 1865, and resided there until he came to the United States and settled first in New York State, from whence he came to Clarksville, Tennessee. After a number of years spent in that locality, during which period he was engaged in farming, he moved to Paris, Tennessee, in 1901, and then, in 1910, went to Texas, at present being interested in agricultural matters in the vicinity of Cleburne. His political convictions are such as to make him a Democrat, and while he was living in Paris he served as a police magistrate. Having been reared by careful parents, he early joined the Methodist Episcopal Church as an outcome of their teachings, and has since continued one of the firm supporters of the denomination in the several places in which he has resided. His wife bore the maiden name of Susan Sanders, and she was born at Clarksville, Tennessee, in 1859, and died at Paris, Tennessee, in 1901, having borne to her husband two sons and two daughters, R. L. who was the eldest born; W. R., who was a carpenter and builder, died at Paris, Tennessee, in 1918; David, who is a tailor, lives at Cleburne, Texas; Broadus, who is manager of a theater at Kent, Ohio; and Leonard lives at Cleburne, Texas, and is in the tailoring business.

Augustus R. Steele attended the public schools of Paris, Tennessee, and the Brannah & Hughes Preparatory School for boys at Springfield, Tennessee, and was graduated from the latter in 1903. Immediately there after he moved to Jackson, Tennessee, to become superintendent of the Nashville, Tennessee, Life Insurance Company, and held that position for two years. In 1905 he came to Paducah as manager of the collection department of the Home Telephone Company, leaving it after five years of effective work to become sales manager of the Billings Printing Company, and remained with that concern for two years. Mr. Steele, however, had always felt that he would rather be in a business of his own, and when the opening came in 1913 for him to establish himself in a general insurance business he grasped it, and his success proves the wisdom of his choice. He also handles real estate, with offices at 203-4 Citrus National Bank Building, is general agent for the Philadelphia Life Insurance Company, agent for the Massachusetts Bonding Company, agent for the American Central Fire Insurance Company, agent for the Mechanics & Traders Insurance Company, agent for the American Alliance of New York City, agent for the Victory Insurance Company of Philadelphia, agent for the Ohio Valley Insurance Company, and is prepared to write insurance in almost any of the old line companies, both life and fire.

Like his father, he is a democrat and a Methodist, in the latter connection maintaining membership with the Fountain Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, is chairman of its Board of Stewards, superintendent of the Sunday School, and scoutmaster of the troop. He bought to Paducah Lodge No. 26, K. of P.; and Paducah Homestead No. 4453, B. A. Y., and is serving the latter as secretary.

In 1900 Mr. Steele was married at Paris, Tennessee, to Miss Ruth Hastings, a daughter of F. M. and Harriet (Dortch) Hastings, the former of whom is a farmer residing at Paris, Tennessee. His wife died several years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Steele have no children.

In August, 1918, Mr. Steele entered the United States service with the Young Men's Christian Association, and was sent overseas for France. After his arrival in France he was assigned to general camp work as divisional secretary, having charge of forty-eight secretaries during the greatest period of the war. He remained in an active position until May 1, 1919, when he was stricken with pleuro-pneumonia. After leaving the hospital he was mustered out on account of disability, and returned to Paducah on May 30, 1919, and resumed his business operations. He is an experienced insurance man and understands reality values, so that those desiring to invest in either line find that it is safe to rely on his judgment.

Reginald V. Bennett, principal of the Lindsay-Wilson Training School at Columbia, and a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is one of the scholarly men and earnest prelates of Kentucky, who both by precept and example, is exerting a strong influence for good on his generation. He was born at Carlavo, Ohio County, Kentucky, March 9, 1885, a son of Sam P. Bennett, and grandson of Timothy Bennett, who was born in Virginia in 1827, and died at Center- town, Ohio County, Kentucky, in 1908. Coming to Kentucky in young manhood, he settled in Ohio County, developed a farm, was married to Miss Martha Tichenor, a native of the county, and both rounded out their useful and honorable lives upon their farm.

The Bennetts are related to the American Colonists from Scotland and settled in Virginia.

Sam P. Bennett was born near Rockport, Ohio County, Kentucky, and has spent his life in Ohio County with the exception of the six years he lived at Louisville, Kentucky. He has been an extensive farmer, and is still engaged in that calling, living on his fine farm at Narrows, Kentucky. While he was at Louis- ville he was in the employ of the Illinois Central Rail- road Company, but found that he preferred an agricul- tural life and so returned to Ohio County. While he has always voted the democratic ticket, he has not been active in politics. The Missionary Baptist Church holds his membership and he has always been a strong supporter of its cause.

His wife was Miss Naomi Shultz before her marriage. She was born near Hartford, Kentucky, in 1861, and died at Narrows, March 25, 1907. Their children were as follows:

Clarence S., who is an electrical engineer of Port- land, Oregon, is with the General Electric Company; Reginald V., who was second in order of birth; Joseph E., who is a druggist of Cairo, Illinois; Arthur R., who is chief engineer of the United States Shipp- ing Board of New York City, is a veteran of the World war, in which he served as a member of the Coast Artillery; and Roswell, who is now a student at the Kentucky State University at Lexington. During the World war he enlisted in the Aviation Corps, and after being trained was sent overseas to England, which he had just reached when the armistice was signed, so that he was not at the front.

Mr. Bennett attended the rural schools of Ohio County and Vanderbilt Training School at Elkton, Ken- tucky, from which he was graduated; then entered the Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, and was graduated therefrom in 1912 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts and as a member of the Phi Beta Kappa Greek letter college fraternity, which is an honorary fraternity.

In the meanwhile Mr. Bennett had begun teaching school, and was so engaged in Ohio County during 1904 and 1905. During 1906 and 1907 he was professor in the Vanderbilt Training School, and during 1908 and 1909 he taught in the Wilson Training School of Fayetteville, Tennessee. For the subsequent two years he was principal of the Franklin County High School in Tennessee. In 1912 Mr. Bennett joined the Louisville Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was sent to Corydon, Kentucky, as pastor of the church that he succeeded, and remained there until 1916, when he was transferred to Beechmont Church, Louisville, and remained there until 1918. In the latter year he was elected principal of the Lindsay-Wilson Training School at Columbia, and entered at once upon the discharge of his duties. The school was established in 1903 and belongs to the Liverpool Conference of the Methodist Church, South. The buildings are all modern brick structures and are known as the Administration Build- ing, the Girls' Building and the Boys' Building. These buildings are in ten-acre grounds, and are located at the eastern edge of Columbia. Mr. Bennett has six teachers and 200 pupils under his supervision.

A man of strong convictions, he prefers to vote inde-pendently by his convictions, and for the different purposes, bought bonds and stamps to the limit of his means, and contributed very generously to all war organizations.

On June 22, 1912, Mr. Bennett was married at Decherd, Tennessee, to Miss Augusta M. Carpenter, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Carpenter, residents of Decherd, Tennessee, Mr. Carpenter being a loco- motive engineer for the Nashville, Chattanooga & Saint Louis Railroad. Mrs. Bennett attended the normal school at Winchester, Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Ben- nett have four children, namely: Louise, who was born June 19, 1913, is a student of the Lindsay-Wilson Training School; Jessica, who was born December 15, 1915; Reginald Victor, who was born December 12, 1917; and Joel Samuel, who was born in 1920.

Since Mr. Bennett has assumed charge of the Lind- say-Wilson Training School this institution has been infused with new life, and the progress has been rapid and commendable. Pupils from this school a number of years ago have been of the highest order. Mr. Bennett is constantly introduc- ing improvements in methods, for he is a very pro- gressive man and is never content to rest upon laurels already won, but is seeking new ones through con- tinued study and effort. His interests are centered in his work, although he takes his civic responsibilities seriously and strives to lend his influence to all moral reforms and uplift movements. Personally he has a large following, and is recognized as one of the striking figures in the educational and religious life of his part of the state.

Wesley Monroe Rardin. It is just forty years since Wesley Monroe Rardin began his career as a lawyer at Butler. The reputation associated with his name today is the result of accumulating achievements and an extensive business that has reached out far beyond the borders of his home county. He is one of Kentucky's foremost men and in earlier years also bore a prominent part in politics.

His family has been in Kentucky for more than a century. His great-great-grandfather was John Rardin, a native of County Cork, Ireland. The family for several generations spelled the name O'Rardón. John Rardin was a settler in Pennsylvania in Colonial days and was killed there by the Indians. His son, John Rardin, was born in Pennsylvania in 1755, and when about nineteen years of age enlisted under General Daniel Morgan as a member of the Bucktail Guards, and served under that commander during the siege of Boston in 1775-76. Later he was with Morgan in the Southern campaign, participating in the battle of Cowpens. His record showed participation in other important campaigns of the Revolution, and after the war he was a school teacher in the county.

In 1779 he married Nancy Record, who was born in Maryland in 1781 and moved to Rardin Farm in 1783. Her son, Greenberry Stuart Rardin, was born in Campbell County, Kentucky, September 19, 1832, and besides farming he operated steam saw mills and grist mills. July 16, 1874, he moved to Butler, was a farmer and also a carpenter, and built a number of the older homes of that community. At one time he was also a star route mail carrier. In politics he was a Republican. For twenty years he served as street commissioner of Butler, and laid out and built many of the streets and highways in that locality. He was a faithful member of the Baptist Church from 1857 until his death, which occurred September 19, 1912, and he was one of the principal organizers and people in the Baptist Church from its beginning.

He left a most exemplary Christian family. Fraternally he was an Odd Fellow. His wife was Mary Jane DeMoss, whom he married in Campbell County, where she was born December 14, 1840. She died at Butler, January 9, 1920. Of her two sons, Wesley Monroe is the older. The second, Cary Alvin, was born in Campbell County, May 20, 1863, also became a lawyer and for twenty years practiced with his brother, until 1912, when he removed to Covington and was a collector in the office of the Bank of Kentucky.

Wesley Monroe Rardin was born in Campbell County, September 28, 1858, attended rural school there, and took a four-year course, ending in 1874, in the Beech Grove Academy at Beech Grove. During the winter terms of 1874-75 and 1875-76 he was an assistant in the public school at Butler, and taught in rural schools of Pendleton County in 1877 and 1878. During 1878-79 he was a law student and assistant to General Scott and Charles Drake. His work as a teacher continued in the schools of Pendleton and Campbell counties until May, 1883, and during the last year he was in charge of the academic department of the Alexandria School at Alexandria, Kentucky.

In the meantime he had employed his leisure time in the study of law, being a student in the offices of Judge A. E. Howe of Butler and Judge Edward Riley at Alexandria. He was admitted to the bar August 21, 1885. He was examined and admitted to the Twelfth Judicial Circuit, Judge James O'Hara of Covington, and Judge T. P. McKibben of Newport, all distinguished and eminent men in the Kentucky bar. It was in September, 1883, that Mr. Rardin turned his undivided attention to his law practice at Butler. For many years his chancery has been an extensive one, and there is seldom a session in which he does not have cases pending before six circuit judges in six different courts. His reputation as an attorney is well established in Pendleton, Campbell, Kenton, Bracken, Grant and Harrison counties, and occasionally he has handled business in Nicholas and Fleming counties. His great forte as a lawyer has been in land and equity litigation. He has also handled considerable criminal practice, and figured as chief counsel for the defense in one celebrated case, that of the Commonwealth of Kentucky vs. Wallace Bishop. Bishop and a companion had murdered a hobo at the Lagoon at Ludlow, Kentucky, and figured in a spectacular attempt to escape to Cincinnati, being intercepted by the police at the suspension bridge between Covington and Cincinnati. During the encounter that followed he shot and killed a policeman, McQuerrey, and when hemmed in by his pursuers jumped into the river, but was rescued and captured. He was indicted and tried in July, 1900, Mr. Rardin having accepted his defense. He was convicted and sentenced to hang, but Mr. Rardin carried the case to the Court of Appeals and was acquitted before the full bench, the opposing counsel for the state being Attorney Robert C. Breckinridge. The decision of the lower court was sustained by the Court of Appeals, and when Mr. Rardin filed a petition for a rehearing and at the rehearing he obtained a complete reversal. The second trial was held in the Kenton County Circuit Court, resulting in a verdict of life imprisonment.

Professional work has given Mr. Rardin a full program and one well calculated to satisfy his ambitions. He has accumulated considerable property, including his office building, modern home and other real estate in Butler, and also a farm of seventy-five acres a mile north of town. He was for sixteen years city attorney and town clerk of Butler. He was reared in a Republican family and cast his first vote for Garfield in 1880, and consistently supported that party until 1904, when he completely changed his political creed and has been devoted to the case of the Greenbacker since his political activities while he was a Republican. In 1890 he was a candidate for Congress and succeeded in greatly reducing the majority of his opponents. He was presidential elector for the Sixth District in 1892 and in 1897 was Republican candidate for the State Senate from the 20th Senatorial District.

Mr. Rardin is a member of the Covington and Newport Bar Associations, is affiliated with the Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias, and is Charter Warden in the Christian Church. During the World War he was permanent legal adviser for the Pendleton County draft board, a member of the County Fuel Administration, and he and his two daughters filled out 500 questionnaires for recruited men from Pendleton, Kenton and Campbell counties.

It is a matter of interest to note that "Rardin Farm," referred to in previous paragraphs, remained in the possession of the Rardin family for just a hundred years and one month.

On May 13, 1885, near Butler, Mr. Rardin married Miss Ida May Yelton, daughter of Charles G. and Rosa (Stephenson) Yelton, now deceased. The Yeltons were a family of pioneers in Pendleton County and her father was a farmer. The great-grandfather was Charles Yelton, who came to Pendleton County in 1798. Mrs. Rardin was liberally educated and was a teacher.
before her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Rardin had four children: The second, Eugene S., died at the age of one year. Charles Vernon, the oldest, born April 1, 1886, graduated from Butler High School, and since October 20, 1916, has been a division clerk in the purchasing department of the Air Craft Service of the War Department at Washington. On November 12, 1913, he married Enid Estelle Cadiz, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Estelle Cadiz of Louisville, Indiana and they have a little son Robert Eugene Rardin. Rosa Evelyn Rardin, born April 5, 1892, is the wife of Ernest F. Sharp, and they live on and operate Mr. Rardin's farm near Butler, and they also have a young son, Roger Ernest Sharp. Lilly May, the youngest child, was born August 23, 1894, and was married February 19, 1921, to John W. Bradbury, and maternal development of the county. For many years, he was an ex-service man and was in France from May 1, 1918, to November 10, 1918. He was in the Twenty-eighth Division, participated in the Marne campaign and was wounded in the battle of Fismes.

One of the chief delights of Mr. Rardin's busy life is when he is in the company of his little grandsons doing his part in training their young minds so they will become loyal and good citizens of our great state and nation.

Richard A. Magraw. With offices in the McCarty Building on Main Street in the thriving Town of Cadiz, judicial center of Trigg County, Mr. Magraw here conducts one of the leading general insurance agencies of the county, and he is one of the representative business men of the younger generation in his native county. He was born at Roaring Springs, this county, on the 7th of March, 1883, and is a son of Flavian A. Magraw, who was born on a farm ten miles south of Cadiz, this county, in the year 1843, and was one of the honored citizens of Roaring Springs at the time of his death, September 8, 1906. He was reared on the old home farm which was the place of his birth, and upon attaining to his legal majority he engaged in the general merchandise business at Roaring Springs, where he built up a representative business in this line and where he was a leader in community sentiment and action. His political allegiance having been given to the democratic party. His widow, whose maiden name was Bettie Burke, now resides with her children. She was born and reared on a farm only one mile distant from that which was the birthplace of her husband, and the dates of their birth are 1852 and 1853. She is the mother of three children she is associated in the ownership of the old homestead farm of the Magraw family ten miles south of Cadiz, this place comprising 250 acres. Of the children the eldest is Dr. Norris C., of whom individual mention is made on other pages of this volume; Bzie is the wife of Major T. Carter, a prosperous farmer in Christian County; Mary is the wife of E. Peut Dawson, a representative farmer in the vicinity of Roaring Springs; Zilph is the wife of Samuel Moore, and they reside in the City of Memphis, Tennessee; Richard A., of this review, was the next in order of birth; and Betsie is the wife of Eugene H. Hester, who is a successful farmer in Christian County.

The Magraw family was founded in Trigg County in the early pioneer days by the great-grandfather of him whose name initiates this sketch. Richard A. Magraw, whose honor- ed ancestor was born in North Carolina, where the original American progenitors settled in the Colonial period of our national history, upon immigration from Ireland. Archibald B. Magraw, grandfather of Richard A. of this review, was born in Trigg County, in 1809, and here passed his entire life, during which he contributed his quota, as had his father in earlier stages, to the civic development of the county. More years he was engaged in the general merchandising business at Linton, the while he continued his association with farm industry. He was one of the patriarchal citizens of the county at the time of his death, which occurred at Linton, in 1893. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Burbridge, was born in Trigg County in the year 1829, and she was venerable in years at the time of her death, which occurred in 1912, at Sturgis, Union County.

After having duly availed himself of the advantages of the schools of Linton, the native county, Richard A. Magraw completed a commercial course in the Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green, where he continued his studies until the year 1905. Thereafter he served thirteen months as deputy clerk of the Circuit Court for his native county, and for the ensuing seven years he gave effective service as deputy clerk of the county court. Still continuing his residence at Cadiz, on the 6th of January, 1915, Mr. Magraw removed himself in the insurance business, and as an underwriter for a number of leading insurance companies he has built up a substantial and prosperous business. In January, 1915, he was appointed master commissioner of the County Court of Trigg County, and of this office he has continued the incumbent, besides giving careful attention to his individual business enterprise. He was re-elected master commissioner of the Trigg County Court in 1920. Mr. Magraw is a staunch advocate of the principles of the democratic party, and during the nation's participation in the World war he was signall active and loyal in the furthering of the agencies through which the Government was supported in its war activities. He was a vigorous worker in the forwarding of the local drives in connection with the Government, and in the 1919-20 draft the draft it is certain that no resident of Trigg County gave more continuous and valued assistance in the making out of questionnaires for the men whose age made them eligible for military service. This work was done by him in a gratuitous way, and in other lines he gave evidence of his loyalty and patriotism. Mr. Magraw owns and occupies one of the attractive modern residences of Cadiz. He and his wife are members of the local Baptist Church, and he is affiliated with Cadiz Lodge No. 121, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

On the 6th of October, 1911, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Magraw, at Nashville, Tennessee, to Miss Lucy Hopper, a daughter of Thomas E. and Alice (Peal) Hopper, who reside on their farm two miles west of Cadiz. Mr. and Mrs. Magraw have three children whose names and respective dates of birth are here recorded: Elizabeth, January 12, 1913; Thomas, January 25, 1915; and Lucy, June 14, 1917.

Frank J. Hardesty is an ex-service man who served in both the artillery and the aviation departments of the army, is an electrician by profession, and since the war has been manager of the Kentucky Light and Power Company at Princeton.

Mr. Hardesty was born at Campbellsville, Kentucky, June 12, 1894, a son of James F. and Susie O. (Sullivan) Hardesty. His father was also born in Campbellsville and was a blacksmith by trade. He and his wife were married in Henry County, Kentucky, and she was born there in 1864, and is now living at Eminence. There are four children: Moses, an electrician at Memphis, Tennessee; Estelle, also an electrician, whose home is at Franklin, Indiana; Frank J. and Eugene, employed in electrical work at Louisville.

Frank J. Hardesty was educated in the public schools of Eminence, Kentucky, attending high school through the sophomore year and until he was about seventeen years of age. After some varied employment in that village he entered the service of the Eminence plant of the Kentucky Utilities Company. During the next three and one-half years he farmed himself with routine duties and also became proficient in the electrical trades, and has all the fundamentals of experience and practice connected with the profession of electrical engineering.
Mr. Hardesty joined a local company of the National Guard in May, 1915, and on June 15, 1916, was commissioned first lieutenant in the First Kentucky Infantry. For two months he was in the field, then was transferred to the Field Artillery, and remained with that branch of the service until April 1, 1918, when he was transferred to the air service at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, and given a course in aerial observation, which was completed June 8, 1918. On June 13, 1918, he was sent to Mount Clemens, Michigan, and was given further intensive drilling in aerial gunnery until July 8, 1918. He was then ordered to Park Place, Texas, a suburb of Houston, and was assigned to the Second Provisional Wing, but before being called overseas the armistice was signed and he was mustered out with the rank of first lieutenant December 31, 1918.

Mr. Hardesty was not long in resuming his place as a citizen, and on January 24, 1919, came to Princeton as electrician for the Kentucky Light & Power Company and two months later was promoted to manager of the plant at Princeton and Dawson Springs, the post of responsibility he holds today, with offices on West Main Street. In keeping with his Republican affiliations, he is an active member and steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is affiliated with Eminence Lodge No. 218, A. F. and A. M., and is a former member of the Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America. He also belongs to the local post of the American Legion.

Mr. Hardesty and his wife, whose home is in the Henrietta Apartments, were married July 17, 1918, at Madison, Indiana, to Miss Edna Grace Turner, a daughter of James H. and Elma (Grinstead) Turner. Her father is a farmer, and both her parents reside at Nicholasville, Kentucky.

John William Thomson is a veteran flour miller in Hopkins County and is proprietor of a milling institution at Madisonville that has been in existence forty years. Mr. Thomson is a native of Hopkins County, and he and his people were early settlers here.

His grandfather, John Thomson, was born near Richmond, Virginia, and was a wealthy planter and slave holder. In 1832 he started West to establish a new home in Hopkins County, Kentucky. Accompanying him were his own family and his slaves, making a total of sixty persons altogether. The journey was accomplished by slow stages, and some of its incidents indicate the broad and generous hospitality of that day. While on the way to Western Kentucky they stopped for a visit of two weeks with a brother who lived in Eastern Kentucky, near Paris. There were supplies and accommodations for the entire party, though needless to say the visit of such a household to any modern home would be regarded almost as a calamity. When the party moved away from Paris John Thomson was told by his brother to fill a wagon with bacon. At that time hogs ran wild in the woods of Hopkins County and bacon was one of the most easily procured food commodities. John Thomson on completing the order carried $250 in cash to a small store of land four miles north of Madisonville, and developed that into a large and attractive plantation. He lived here the rest of his life. His wife was a Miss Ellis, also a native of Virginia, who died in Hopkins County.

Their son Robert S. Thomson was born near Richmond, Virginia, in 1830, and was twelve years of age when he came to Kentucky. He was reared on the old plantation, and lived on a portion of this farm for many years. His enterprise led him into the saw-milling industry, and he conducted the first steam saw mill in Hopkins County. He continued that business on a large scale until ill health compelled him to abandon it in 1876, and he died the following year. He was a democrat in his political affiliations, and after middle age was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He was a zealous Mason. Robert S. Thomson married Phoebe Ann Pritchett, who was born in Hopkins County in 1827 and died here in 1897, at the age of seventy. She was the mother of a large family of fourteen children, a brief record of which is as follows: Florence who was the wife of L. Fowler, a Hopkins County farmer, and both are deceased; Elizabeth, who married Richard Bailey, a farmer in Webster County, Kentucky, and they are deceased; Verda is the wife of C. M. Steffy, a real estate man at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; Annie is the wife of W. T. Bailey, a merchant at Bartlesville, Oklahoma; Elsie, who lives at Bisbee, Arizona, is the widow of W. S. Grace, a farmer; John William is the sixth of the family and was born on his father's farm four miles north of Madisonville March 4, 1860; W. S. is in the real estate business at Madisonville; Bernard was a young farmer in Hopkins County when he died; the next three children, who died in early childhood, were Waller, Janie and Edgar; Helen was married to J. Y. Orton, a farmer in Hopkins County, and both were deceased; Robert, Jr., was a saw mill owner and operator in Hopkins County and died unmarried; and James Q., the youngest, died on his farm in Hopkins County.

John William Thomson acquired a rural school education, and he lived on the old homestead of his father to the age of thirty. Appointment to the office of deputy tax assessor brought him to Madisonville in the fall of 1890. After filing that office about a year he served four years as deputy sheriff, and in November, 1894, was elected to the office of sheriff, beginning his term January 1, 1895. He was elected for three terms and was the first sheriff of the county elected under the Constitution. After performing the duties of his office with a high degree of efficiency and credit he became a local grocery merchant for seven years, but on March 4, 1905, bought the flouring mills of Mrs. J. A. Lunsford. For five years he conducted these mills with a partner, John H. Haukins, and on March 3, 1912, he became sole owner and operator. He has since then done the work of the mill under his personal supervision until 1918, since which year his son John William, Jr., has been assistant manager. The mill was erected in 1880, but the modern flour milling machinery now in use was installed in 1904. The mill has a capacity of seventy-five barrels per day, and grinds a large part of the wheat produced by local farmers and manufacturers grades of flour in great demand over this section. The mill is at the corner of Center and Mill streets.

Mr. Thomson is owner of one of the finest farms in Hopkins County, located seven miles east of Madisonville. It comprises 216 acres and is 1 1/2 miles long. The land is very level and fertile. Mr. Thomson also owns a business building on Center Street and a modern residence at 233 Sugg Street. He served two years as school trustee of Madisonville, and for one term was mayor of the city. Mr. Thomson is a democrat, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is a member of Madisonville Lodge No. 143, A. F. and A. M. He was one of the citizens of Madisonville who responded loyally to every demand made by the Government in the course of the war, and gave not only his personal means but his leadership and influence as well.

At Madisonville Mr. Thomson married Miss Mamie Hopewell, daughter of Rev. J. H. and Florence (Gooch) Hopewell. Her father was one of the splendid old time preachers, a minister of great ability and force. of character, and widely known in the Baptist Church of Kentucky. Mrs. Thompson is a graduate of the Madisonville High School. Seven children have been born to their marriage. The oldest, John William, Jr., was born August 23, 1897, is a graduate of the Madisonville High School, and on his twenty-first birthday registered for army service and was in training at Camp Taylor when the armistice was signed. As noted above, he is assistant manager of the flour mills. The younger children are: Florence, a student in the Lindenwood Female College of St. Charles, Missouri; James Hopewell, who died at the age of eighteen; Frances, in the Madisonville High School; W. O. and Helen, both in grammar school; and Edward.

Leslie Gerald Ray has become widely known over Hopkins County as a very successful and skillful dental surgeon, and is also a citizen of Madisonville enjoying many property interests and close association with the community’s welfare.

Doctor Ray was born in Livingston County, Kentucky, January 18, 1876. His grandfather, Joseph Ray, was born in Kentucky in 1812 and was one of the early farmers of Livingston County, and died on his land there in 1887. The great-grandfather, Joseph Ray, was born in Virginia. The grandmother of Mr. Ray, Mary Ellis, was born in New York. Her parents came from the Island of Guernsey. She married at the age of seventeen and died at the age of fifty-eight years. Charles Ray, the father of Doctor Ray, was born in Livingston County in 1841, and spent all his life in that locality with increasing and very profitable interests as a farmer and planter. He died on his farm ten miles west of Smithland in 1915. He was a democrat and a very active member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Charles Ray married Miss Sarah Alice Foster, who was born in Livingston County in 1849, and died on her old homestead in 1881. Ella Lee, wife of Sidney A. Trail, a farmer in Livingston County; Miss Ida, who lives with her brother Ernest on the farm adjoining the homestead; Josie, who died at the age of twenty-four; Leslie Gerald; Ernest, a farmer and landowner in Livingston County; Courtney Ellis, operating the old homestead farm; and Alton, also of the age twenty-two.

Leslie Gerald Ray attended the rural schools and the grade schools at Hampton, Kentucky, and acquired the equivalent of a high school education. His duties and interests were associated with the home farm until he was twenty-six, and he then prepared for his professional career at the Louisville College of Dentistry, graduating with the degree Doctor of Dental Surgery in 1905. Doctor Ray practiced for nine months in Princeton, Kentucky, fourteen months at La Center in McCracken County, and since then has been a busy professional man at Madisonville, associated with Dr. E. B. Hardin. They have elaborately furnished and equipped dental parlors in the McLeod Building on South Main Street, and they represent the very highest standards of the dental profession.

He is also director of the Citizens Bank and Trust Company of Madisonville, and is owner of a half interest in the old homestead farm of 320 acres in Livingston County. He was one of the local citizens most keenly interested in the success of local campaigns for the successful prosecution of the war, and gave both of his time and personal resources to that patriotic cause. He is a member of the State Dental Association, the West Central Dental Association and the National Dental Association. Doctor Ray is a democrat, and while reared in the Presbyterian Church is now affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is a member of Madisonville Lodge No. 738 of the Elks and Eureka Camp No. 25, Woodmen of the World.

December 24, 1908, in Livingston County, Doctor Ray married Miss Bettie Vivian Duley, daughter of W. W. and Bettie (Gammon) Duley, who now live at Elizabethtown, Illinois, as retired farmers. Mrs. Ray was educated at the Normal School at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and for six years before her marriage was a popular teacher in Livingston County.

John G. White, M. D., has achieved marked success and prestige in the work of a profession that was dignified and honored by the character and services of his father, and is actively engaged in the general practice of his profession at Cerulean, Trigg County, Kentucky, since 1894, with secure status as one of the representative physicians and surgeons of the county and also as a citizen of prominence and influence. The doctor is president of the Bank of Cerulean, of which he was one of the organizers, and in other connection he has done much to further the civic and material prosperity and advancement of his home community.

Doctor White was born at Spring Garden, Alabama, on the 17th of March, 1871, and is a son of Doctor Thomas N. and Mary. (Amberston) White, the former of whom was born at Ellerton, Georgia, in 1839, and the latter was born at Spring Garden, Alabama, in 1848. His death having occurred in 1871, his daughter of this union, Anna, is the wife of George Garnett, a retired merchant residing at Piedmont, Alabama; William T., is a representative merchant in the City of Birmingham, Alabama; Martha is the wife of John Whorton, a farmer near Cave Springs, Georgia; Mary is the wife of Dr. Joseph P. Allgood, who is engaged in the practice of dentistry at Piedmont, Alabama; Dr. John G., of this review, was the next younger.

After the death of his first wife Dr. Thomas N. White married Josephine Glover, who was born at Goshen, Alabama, in 1839, and whose death occurred at Spring Garden, that state, in 1884. Of this second marriage were born three children: James N. is a merchant at Rome, Georgia; Hugh H. is a lawyer and is engaged in the successful practice of his profession at Gadsden, Alabama; and Paul B. is engaged in the wholesale grocery business at Rome, Georgia. For his third wife Doctor White wedded Miss Fannie Mitchell, who was born and reared at Spring Garden, Alabama, where she has continued to reside since the death of her husband, in 1910.

Dr. Thomas N. White was graduated from the medical college at Augusta, Georgia, and was a young man when he engaged in practice at Spring Garden, Alabama. He was there actively following the work of his profession when the Civil war was precipitated, and he forthwith subordinated all personal interests to tender his services to the Confederate Government. He served as a surgeon in the Confederate Army during the entire period of the war, and thereafter he continued the active and successful practice of his profession at Gadsden, Alabama; and Paul B. is engaged in the wholesale grocery business at Rome, Georgia. For his third wife Doctor White wedded Miss Fannie Mitchell, who was born and reared at Spring Garden, Alabama, where she has continued to reside since the death of her husband, in 1910.

effectively supplemented along academic or literary lines by his attending Oxford College, at Oxford, Alabama, in which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1892 and with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. In preparation for his chosen profession he elected to enter the medical department of Vanderbilt University, at Nashville, Tennessee, where he effectively supplemented the instruction previously received under the able preceptorship of his father and where he was graduated in 1894, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. In that year he initiated the practice of his profession at Cerulean, Kentucky, and here he has long controlled a large and representative general practice, with high standing as one of the able physicians of the region. He is an appreciative and valued member of the Trigg County Medical Society, and holds membership also in the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. The doctor owns the building in which his office is established, on Main Street, and also his modern residence on the same street. He is found staunchly arrayed in the ranks of the democratic party and is essentially loyal and public-spirited in his views and actions.

In 1903 Doctor White became prominently identified with the organization and incorporation of the Bank of Cerulean, of which he has been continuously a director and of which he has been the president since 1905. J. Lloyd Blakely is vice-president; Samuel J. Roberts, cashier; and W. Eugene Turner, assistant cashier. The bank bases its operations on a capital stock of $15,000; its surplus fund now aggregates $7,500; and its deposits are about $130,000. The institution has proved a valuable acquisition in furthering the business interests of Cerulean and the surrounding districts, and has met with a loyal and representative support.

In June, 1905, was recorded the marriage of Doctor White to Miss Josephine Southern, who was born in Kentucky but who was a resident of Clarendon, Texas, at the time of her marriage. Doctor and Mrs. White have no children.

ALPHEUS E. ORTON. Thirty years ago the present site of Dawson Springs was a farm, with but a house or two upon it, and its owner and the people of the neighborhood had no realization of the wonderful natural resources lying below the surface which were to make this region famous the world over. On July 2, 1881, the first mineral well, known as the Arcadia Chalybeate Well, was discovered by W. I. Hamby, and on June 7, 1893, while boring for water to run his hotel, he accidentally struck an inexhaustible stream of mineral water capable of supplying water for 100,000 persons or more daily. It is known as Hamby's Salts, Iron and Magnesia Well, is located on Main Street, thirty feet from the door of Hamby's Hotel, and is owned and operated by the Dawson Salts & Water Company, of which Alpheus E. Orton is secretary and treasurer.

Alpheus E. Orton was born at Hanson, Hopkins County, Kentucky, February 15, 1875, his grandfather having moved to that region from North Carolina, where he was born. His son, Edward W. Orton, father of Alpheus E. Orton, was born on the farm near Hanson in 1823. He spent his life in Hopkins County, living near Hanson until 1882, and being engaged in farming, but in that year moved to Hanson and for many years served as its police judge, having had experience in this line, as he had been a magistrate of his district while living on his farm. He was a democrat, and a very prominent factor in his party. Early joining the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he gave it an earnest and generous support, and he was equally zealous as a Missionary. His death occurred at Hanson in 1902, and he was mourned by a wide circle of persons whom he had attached to him. During the war between the North and the South he had served in the Union Army as a member of Company B, Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry Regiment, and was a gallant soldier until the close of the war. He married first a Miss Stevens and for his second wife Miss Anna Almon, who was born in Christian County, Kentucky, in 1840, and died at Hanson in 1889. Their only child was Alpheus E. Orton.

Growing up in Hopkins County, Alpheus E. Orton attended the public schools of Hanson and the College of Pharmacy at Louisville, Kentucky, and was graduated from the latter in 1896 as a graduate in pharmacy. For the succeeding year he was engaged in clerking in a drug store at Owensboro, Kentucky, and then held a similar position at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, for six months. During that time he established a wholesale drug house, and had charge of the laboratory of both the Evansville Drug Company and the Carlstedt Medicine Company until in September, 1901, when he came to Dawson Springs and engaged in the natural and concentrated mineral water business in association with his father-in-law, W. I. Hamby, and his brother-in-law, H. G. Hamby, under the firm name of the Dawson Springs & Water Company, Incorporated, which connection is still maintained.

The company ship their mineral water to every state in the Union and to foreign lands, including France, Spain, Canada and even Germany, which formerly was considered to have the most efficacious mineral waters in the world. It is claimed that the water from the Hamby well will cure indigestion, jaundice, constipation, boils, chills, appendicitis, heartburn, torpid liver, nervousness, nephritis, Bright's disease, dilation of the stomach, catarch of the stomach, duodenitis, cystitis, dysentery, neurasthenia, chronic eczema, rheumatism, gout, calculi, female irregularities, nervous and sick headaches, obstructed menstruation, blood diseases, dyspepsia, diarrhea, hysteria, malaria, dizziness, dropsy, diabetes, albuminaria, glycosuria and similar maladies requiring the use of those minerals held in solution in this water. It contains an excess of sodium magnesium sulphates, and iron, manganese, calcium nitrate, sodium phosphate, free carbonic acid gas and associate minerals. It is particularly effective in the treatment of rheumatism, and remarkable cures in this disease have been made through its use all over the United States and in foreign countries.

The offices of the company are located in the Dawson Springs & Water Company's Building at 120 South Main Street, this building being one of the principal structures of the business section of Dawson Springs, and is the property of the company. In addition to being secretary and treasurer and a stockholder of this company Mr. Orton has other interests and is a director of the New Century Hotel, the Commercial Bank of Dawson and the Dawson Springs Auditorium Company. He owns one of the best modern residences in the city, in one of the most desirable locations, and also considerable real estate at Dawson Springs. Alpheus E. Orton is the owner of the news business of Dawson Springs, which is operated under the name of Orton & Hamby, and he is recognized as one of the wealthy men of this locality. For two terms he was a member of the City Council, being elected on the democratic ticket; for two terms was city clerk, and is now in his second term as city treasurer. He belongs to the Christian Church, of which he is a deacon, and he is a member and secretary of its official board. A Mason, he belongs to Dawson Lodge No. 628, A. F. and A. M.; Madisonville Chapter No. 27, R. A. M.; Princeton Council, No. 43; Princeton Commandery No. 35, K. T.; Grand Consistory of Kentucky, A. A. S. R., in which he has been raised to the thirty-second degree; Rizaph Temple, A. A. W. W. M. S. of Madisonville; Queen Mother Chapter No. 133, O. E. S., of which he is a past patron, and he is a past grand patron of the Grand Chapter of Kentucky, O. E. S. Mr. Orton was elected grand junior warden of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky Masons in October, 1920. Mr. Orton also belongs to Dawson Lodge No. 110, I. O. O. F., of which he is a past grand; Magnolia Camp No. 73, W. W. W. of Dawson Springs; Dawson Springs Benevolent Lodge No. 1, M. W. A.; and for the past twenty years has belonged to Post J. T. P. A., of Evansville, Indiana.

During the late war Mr. Orton was one of the most effective workers for the cause, was chairman of the committee having charge of the drive for the Salvation Army in this district, and lavishly bought bonds, stamps and subscribed to all of the drives. He was also made chairman of the Finance Committee of the United States Government Hospital now being erected at Dawson Springs, and is still discharging the duties pertaining to this responsible office.

On December 22, 1897, Mr. Orton married Miss Minnie Hamby at Dawson Springs. She is a daughter of W. I. and Stacy (Menser) Hamby, of Dawson Springs. There have been two children. Mr. Hamby has retired, but is one of the most prominent men of this section. To him is due in large degree the remarkable expansion of the farm site into a thriving health resort of 1800 people, forty hotels and boarding houses, newspapers, electric lights, water works, sanitary sewers, bath houses, manufactories, bottling works, up-to-the-minute business houses and every improvement to make it any first-class resort of this character. While he now leaves the details to his son and son-in-law, Mr. Hamby still retains his interest in his hotel and well, and takes great pride in them and the city itself.

Mr. Orton is a man well fitted for the business to which he has devoted the best years of his life. His professional training and knowledge enable him to correct judgment and the value of the waters, and his business ability guides him in marketing the product. His faith in the locality led him to make investments which have proven exceedingly valuable, and his prosperity has been honorably earned through his capabilities, natural and trained, and his recognition of the properties of the well which has not only made its owner and those associated with him men of large means, but Dawson Springs famous the world over.

Henry Dennert from the age of three was reared an orphan boy, went to work for his own support at the age of twelve, and for all the disadvantages and handicaps of such a youth has achieved a high and commendable position in Newport affairs, where he is one of the leading manufacturers and citizens.

Mr. Dennert was born at Newport, March 25, 1873. His father, William Dennert, was born in Germany in 1846, came to America when a young man and settled at Newport, and for a number of years was a contractor in road work. He was a republican and a member of the Lutheran Church. His wife was Margaret Leap, who was born in Campbell County, Kentucky, in 1848, and died at Newport in 1876. William Dennert the same year started for the West, and his family heard nothing of him again. He left three children. Charles is now foreman in the Newport Foundry Company. Carrie became the wife of William Fisher, a worker in a shoe factory, and both died at Newport, she at the age of thirty-seven.

Henry Dennert, the youngest of the children, was educated in the St. Joseph Orphan Asylum at Cold Spring, Kentucky, but at the age of twelve began earning his own living and from that time until he was twenty-two spent the daylight hours working in a shoe factory and part of the night time assisting in a bakeshop at Newport. From 1895 to 1903 he was employed by the Sharp & Kenflus Company and the Mann Shoe Company.

Mr. Dennert became a pants manufacturer at Newport in 1903, starting with a very limited capital and with an equipment of only three machines. The business has steadily grown under his active supervision until the factory today, at 918 Liberty Street, is one of the modern industrial plants of Newport, has equipment of 100 machines and capacity for 1,000 pairs daily. Two hundred persons are employed in this business, of which Mr. Dennert is sole owner and proprietor.

His interests as a manufacturer of clothing have had an even wider scope than this one industry. In 1914 he established an overall factory at Eighth and Madison streets in Covington, beginning with fifty machines, and after two years moved to 515 Scott Street in the Crigler & Crigler Building at Covington, where he installed 250 machines and built up the business to a regular working capacity of 1,800 dozen overalls a week. This business he sold October 12, 1918, to The U. S. Overall Company.

As a sales organization for the handling of the output of his pants factory Mr. Dennert organized in 1913 the Ufit Pants Company, whose offices are in the Swift Building at Third and York Street, Cincinnati. This company is in the medium through which all his manufactured product is marketed to the retail trade. Mr. Dennert is president of the company and his partners in the business are J. Bass and Charles Brosney. Mr. Dennert during his active business career has acquired much realty property, including a business block at 633-57 York Street, Newport, a modern home at 925 Isabella Street and a dwelling and store adjoining and also another dwelling at 912 Liberty Street.

Besides giving all his moral support to the Government during the war Mr. Dennert fulfilled his patriotic duty by seeing that his plant turned out with prompt efficiency work involving the manufacture of 250,000 pair of pants for the Government. He is a republican in politics, an active member of Corpus Christi Catholic Church of Newport, Newport Council No. 134, of Columbus, Catholic Order of Foresters, St. George Benevolent Society and Newport Chamber of Commerce.

In 1885, at Newport, he married Miss Anna Sendelbach, a native of Campbell County, who completed her education in the John's Hill School of that county. To their marriage were born eight children: Marie died in infancy; Harry, born January 8, 1900, attended the Corpus Christi parochial schools and Miller's School of Business at Cincinnati, and is now his father's bookkeeper; Arthur, born March 5, 1902, was educated in the parochial schools and the Newport Business College, and is now manager of the Mutual Tailoring Company, located at 633-57 York Street, Newport, Kentucky. This business was established in April, 1921. Lillie died at the age of five years; Henrietta, born October 1, 1906, is a student in the Corpus Christi Primary School; Bertha, born December 15, 1908; Loretta, born October 24, 1910; and Olivia, born September 24, 1912, all pupils in the Corpus Christi parochial schools.

Mrs. Dennert, who is deeply interested in church and philanthropic causes, being a member of the Ladies' Auxiliary, the Mothers' Society and the Married Ladies' Society in Corpus Christi parish, is a daughter of Antonio Sendelbach. He was born in Campbell County, Kentucky, in 1850 and died at St. Elizabeth Hospital in Covington in June, 1917. He spent practically all his life in Newport, where he was a tailor. He was a democrat and a Catholic. His wife was Mary Shearer, who was born in Indiana in 1854 and died at Newport, March 25, 1900. Mrs. Dennert's grandfather, Jacob Sneedell, was born in 1788, and his active life was spent on a large farm at John's Hill in Campbell County, where he died in 1878, at the age of ninety. Mrs. Dennert is the oldest of a family of twelve children. A brief reference to her brothers and sisters is as follows: George, manager of the U. S. Overall Company's factory, a resident of Fort Thomas; John, a farmer in the Renkin Paper Box factory at Cincinnati and a resident of Dayton, Kentucky; Michael, who died at the age of three years; Charles, an employee of the U. S. Overall Manufacturing Company at Newport; Rosie, who died when four years of age; Edward, shipping clerk for the U. S. Overall Manufacturing Company at Newport; Ollie, an employee of Mr. Dennert's manufacturing establishment; Eva, of Newport, widow of Otto Roebber, who was a member of the mounted police of Cincinnati; Frank, in Newport, Kentucky, first resident of the city.

As a young man, John spent six years of his life in Kentucky, still a farmer, his early experiences having been diversified as an agriculturist in that locality until his death in April, 1920. While the old home is three-quarters of a mile west of Princeton, part of the farm is within the city limits. This is a very valuable property. It was appraised for the purpose of determining the inheritance tax at $35,000. William H. Jones, with the influence and activities of his family, brought the farm into the civic and business life of his community. He was for three years a Union soldier during the Civil war, and was one of the leading republicans of his section of the state. For six terms he represented Caldwell County in the Legislature. He was an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and at the time of his death was the oldest member in that denomination in Caldwell County, being a member and a past master of Clinton Lodge No. 82, A. F. and A. M., at Princeton. William H. Jones married Maggie E. Fryer, who was born twelve miles north of Princeton in 1856 and is still living on the homestead west of Princeton. Doctor Jones is the second in a family of five children. The oldest, Lena, is the wife of J. F. Morgan, a hotel proprietor at St. Louis, Missouri; Charles F., the third in age, has gained prominence as a Kentucky banker, being cashier of the National Bank of Kentuckiana at Louisville, one of the largest banking institutions in the Middle West; William E. is a farmer at Princeton and for a number of years was a civil service Government employee, and also participated in the World war, going to France and being mustered out as a sergeant; the youngest is Clyde, a farmer six miles west of Princeton.

John R. Jones was born at the old homestead three-quarters of a mile west of Princeton on May 25, 1881, and acquired his early education partly at rural schools and partly in the schools of Princeton, graduating from the high school in 1898. He immediately entered the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville, graduating in 1902, and since then as a means of refreshing himself in professional technique has attended a number of clinics and lectures at Chicago and Louisville. He began practice at Princeton in 1902, and has carried the work of a general physician and surgeon. Since 1902 he has been surgeon for the Ketterjohn Construction Company. His offices are in the Williams Building on Main Street, and he also lives there. Doctor Jones is unmarried.

He was enrolled in the Medical Corps August 10, 1917, with the commission of first lieutenant, and attended the Medical Officers' Training Camp at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, where he was on duty in several camps on this side of the water, and in September, 1918, went overseas to France. He was on duty with the 118th Field Artillery, 31st Division, and during the remainder of the war and for some months afterward was abroad. He returned and was mustered out December 21, 1919.

Doctor Jones is a Republican. He is present city health officer of Princeton and is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations. He is active in the Central Presbyterian Church, is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and with Princeton Lodge No. 1115 of the Elks.

THOMAS LYNCH LOGAN. The career of Thomas Lynch Logan of Madisonville has been almost entirely identified with business affairs. He held one office, was candidate for one office, and his candidacy was a test of his popularity in Hopkins County. He was the youngest man to ever hold the office of sheriff in the county.

Mr. Logan, who is now doing a successful business as general agent of the Provident Life and Accident Company, was born on a farm near Charleston in Hopkins County, August 18, 1854. His grandfather, Tom Logan, was a native of Ireland, came to America early in life, served as a soldier in the War of 1812, and spent his business career as a farmer in Hopkins County. He died at a good old age, about forty years ago, at his home near Hanson in Hopkins County. He married a Miss Blue. S. M. Logan, father of former Sheriff Logan, was born in the northern part of Hopkins County, near Hanson, in 1857, and shortly after his marriage settled on his present farm, a mile north of Charleston, where for many years he has conducted his agricultural operations on an extensive and successful scale. He is a democrat and one of the most active members of the Universalist Church in the community. S. M. Logan married Dixie Lynch, who was born at Charleston in Hopkins County and was the daughter of North Carolina, coming from that state to Hopkins County, Kentucky, and for many years was a farmer, merchant and tobacconist at Charleston, being one of the county's leading citizens. He died at Charleston in 1896. Mack Lynch married Rebecca Franklin, a life-long resident of Hopkins County. The children of S. M. Logan and wife are: Mack, who assists in the management of the home farm; John, in the employ of a farmer in Madisonville; Thomas Lynch; Clint, a coal miner living at Madisonville; Brad, a clerk in the postoffice at Owensboro; Ray, the home farm.

Thomas Lynch Logan acquired a rural school education and also attended the Southern Normal University at Bowling Green until 1908. After completing his education and leaving the farm he taught one year at Bulan, Kentucky, was principal of schools at Charlestone one year and served as assistant county examiner. He then studied mining at Ashbyburg in Hopkins County. The following four years he spent as assistant bookkeeper and outside foreman for the Crabtree Coal Company at Isley in Hopkins County.

Mr. Logan learned the duties of sheriff as deputy to Sheriff J. B. Stanley, a brief service which was followed by a year as manager of a general store at Earlinton, Kentucky. Then for six months he was employed in closing out a bankrupt stock of goods for the Morrow Dry Goods Company at Nebo. In 1913, he came to Madisonville, where for a time he was bookkeeper for the Coal Company. In the primary elections of 1913 his name was presented to the voters as candidate for the nomination of sheriff. There were eight other candidates, all good men, since there is always keen competition for the honors of sheriff. Mr. Logan received a plurality of 750 votes in the primaries, and in the general election was chosen by a majority of 775. He was one of the biggest majorities ever given a candidate for county office by either party in Hopkins County. As previously noted, he was the youngest sheriff the county ever had. He began his official term January 1, 1914, and during the next four years justified all the confidence entailed by the voters as to his abilities and efficiency. About the time he left the sheriff's office he was appointed chairman of the Hopkins County Exemption Board, and for a year, until the work of the board was closed, early in 1916, gave practically all his time to its duties.

Then leaving public life Mr. Logan became general agent for the Providence Life and Accident Company of Chattanooga. He has supervision of ten Kentucky companies, Madisonville being one of them. His offices are over the Citizens Bank and Trust Company. Mr. Logan also owns a valuable farm of 100 acres four miles west of Madisonville, and has one of the good homes of the city, on Hall Street. He is a democrat, a member of the Christian Church and is affiliated with Buhlah Lodge No. 669, A. F. and A. M., and Madisonville Lodge No. 738 of the Elks.

He married Mabel Stover of Princeton, Kentucky, in 1914. Miss Helen Davis, daughter of Professor W. B. and Helen (Winstead) Davis. Her father is an educator, and he and her husband now live at Clovis, New Mexico. Mrs. Logan is a graduate of the high school at Fredonia, Kentucky. To their marriage were born two children: Helen Lynch, on June 13, 1916, and William Owen, on April 9, 1920.

John Franklin Hoover. Some of the most representative business men of this part of Kentucky are located at Dawson Springs, finding in this city excellent opportunities for the development of their faculties and securing a fair share of prosperity. One of them is John Franklin Hoover, manager of the City Water Company, who has been one of the experts in his line and a citizen of marked public spirit. He was born at Livermore, McLean County, Kentucky, July 28, 1872, a son of George Burdett Hoover, and a grandson of Richard Hoover, who was born in Virginia and died in Ohio County, Kentucky, in 1883. He was a farmer by occupation and the first of his family to come to Ohio County.

George Burdett Hoover was born in Ohio County, Kentucky, in 1839, and died at Livermore, Kentucky, in 1881. Reared and educated in Ohio County, he became a farmer of that region, but later moved to Livermore and embarked in a mercantile business, which occupied him until his death. Both in his native county and at Livermore he supported the candidates of the Democratic party. He was equally earnest in his connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church of both places, having early joined that organization. He married Susan Simmons who was born in Ohio County, Kentucky, in 1843, and died at Dawson Springs, Kentucky, in 1912, surviving her husband for many years. Their children were as follows: Volle T., who died at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1918, was in the employ of the Florida Tobacco Company; James B., who married a Mrs. Ratterree, a druggist of Louisville; John Franklin, who was the third in order of birth; Belle, who married C. B. Long, a retired merchant of Madisonville, Kentucky; and Georgia, who married Dr. C. A. Niles, a physician and surgeon of Dawson Springs, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work.

John Franklin Hoover attended the public schools of Livermore until he was sixteen years old, and then left school and came to Dawson Springs, arriving here in 1888. For a time he did whatever work he found to do, and later became a dealer in real estate, buying and holding it until he could sell at a profit. In 1918 he became superintendent of the City Water Company, and still holds that position, his offices being located on Railroad Avenue, at Sycamore Street. The company manufactures and sells water and manufactured ice, and Mr. Hoover superintends the operation of both plants.

In addition to his duties as superintendent Mr. Hoover has numerous realty holdings, including his substantial modern residence on Franklin Street, which is supplied with city water, electric lights and other improvements, live dwellings, a business block on South Main Street, and in partnership with Dr. C. A. Niles owns sixty vacant lots in the city. He also has an interest in the Tolo Water Company's building and the company itself, and he is a stockholder and secretary of the City Water Company. A democrat, he served as a member of the City Council for several terms, and is active in his party. Fraternally he belongs to Dawson Lodge No. 216, A. F. and A. M. In the war Mr. Hoover was one of the most zealous workers in behalf of the cause, and bought bonds and subscribed to the various organizations to the utmost extent of his means, and did everything within his power to aid the administration in carrying out its policies.

In 1898 Mr. Hoover married Miss Cora Simpson, at Carmi, Illinois. She was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Simpson. Mr. Simpson is now deceased, but was a farmer of White County, Illinois. His widow, who survives him, is residing at Carmi, White County, Illinois. The first Mrs. Hoover was a college graduate. She died at Carmi, Illinois, in 1903, having borne her husband one son, John Franklin, Jr., who died at the age of ten weeks. In November, 1912, Mr. Hoover married at Jeffersonville, Indiana, Miss Stella Pearl Dishman, born in Marshall County, Kentucky. She was graduated from the public schools of her native county and attended its high school course. Mr. and Mrs. Hoover have one child, Gene, who was born February 11, 1920. Having lived at Dawson Springs for so many years, Mr. Hoover naturally is interested in it, for he has assisted in its development and has been instrumental in the many improvements, both as a private individual and as a public official.

Robert Crenshaw is one of the veteran and distinguished members of the bar of Trigg County, in whose metropolis and judicial center, the City of Campbellsville, has been engaged in the practice of his profession for more than half a century. Aside from his admirable achievement in his profession and his status as an influential citizen, further interest attaches to his career by reason of the fact that he is a native of Trigg County and a son of a family whose name has been worthily identified with the history of this county for more than a century. His grandfather, Cornelius Crenshaw, was born in Virginia; his father, James Crenshaw, in the old Ordinance County, that state, that he wedded Miss Nancy Kent. He represented the historic Old Dominion State as a soldier and officer in the War of 1812, during which he was stationed the greater part of the time at Norfolk, Virginia. In 1819 he came to Kentucky and became one of the pioneer settlers and most influential citizens of Trigg County, where he acquired a large tract of land and became an extensive farmer. His success was distinctive and he was one of the largest taxpayers of the county. Both he and his wife long held membership in the United Baptist Church, but eventually transferred their membership to the Christian Church. He was a man of fine mentality, upright and honorable in all of the relations of life, and ever moved by a high sense of personal stewardship, this being shown in earnest Christian service and in kindly consideration extended to his fellow-men. The lineage of the Crenshaw family traces back to sterling English origin, and the American prophet, but settled in Virginia in the Colonial epoch of our national history.

Robertson Crenshaw, father of him whose name initiates this review, was born in Halifax County, Virginia, in September, 1816, and thus was a child of about three years at the time the family home was established in Trigg County, Kentucky, where he was reared to manhood under the conditions and influences of the pioneer days and where eventually he became a prominent citizen and prominent member of the stock industry, with a large and valuable landed estate in Roaring Springs precinct, where he continued his residence until the time of his death, which occurred on the 12th of February, 1853. In politics he was an old-line Whig, and both he and his wife were earnest members of the Christian Church. He maintained active affiliation with the time-honored Masonic fraternity, was at years of age, and during the following two years was influential in community affairs and commanded secure place in popular confidence and respect. In 1839, at Cadiz, was solemnized his marriage to Miss Mary Frances Walden, who was born in Trigg County, then a part of Christian County, in the year 1810, and whose death occurred in 1852. Mrs. Crenshaw was a sister of Dr. John C. Walden, who achieved distinction as a minister in the Christian Church at Maysville, Christian County, Kentucky.

Robertson and Mary Frances (Walden) Crenshaw became the parents of six children: Albert, who became a representative agriculturist in Trigg County, died at the age of fifty-five years; James, a retired merchant, resides at Earlinton, Hopkins County; William is a prominent physician and surgeon in the State of Oklahoma; Robert, the immediate subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; John, is a representative physician and surgeon at Cadiz, and is individually mentioned on other pages of this work; and Cornelius is a substantial farmer near Greenville, Texas.

Robert Crenshaw acquired his early education in the rural schools of his native county and was reared in the home of his uncle, Thomas Crenshaw. He was born in Roaring Springs Precinct, Trigg County, on the 7th of June, 1839. He was very young at the time of his mother's death, and his father died in the following year, so that the boy was taken into the home of his father's brother, as noted above. In pursuance of progressive educational work he attended in turn the A. J. Wyatt School for young men, near Concord, Christian County, and also the preparatory school conducted in the same county by G. P. Street. He continued his educational acquirement until he was nineteen years of age, and during the following five years was actively associated with farm enterprise. He then began reading law under the able and punctilious preceptorship of Judge Thomas C. Dalney, whose daughter he later married, and in 1868 he was admitted to the bar. Judge Crenshaw has been continuously engaged in the practice of his profession at Cadiz, his offices being situated in a building on Main Street, opposite the county courthouse. His professional novitiate was of short duration, as he soon proved his powers as a resourceful trial lawyer and well fortified counsellor, with the result that he built up a substantial and representative practice, his clientele having been one of important order during the long intervening years and having involved his appearance in connection with much of the important litigation in the courts of this section of Kentucky. Judge Crenshaw has held inviolate his allegiance to the democratic party, and while he has been influential in its local councils and campaign activities he has invariably refused to become a candidate for office, save in line with his profession. He served four years as county judge, 1872-7, and for three years presided on the bench of the County Court, 1884-7, his administration having shown that he possessed the true judicial cast of mind and his rulings having been marked by the fairness and equity that ever conserve the ends of justice. Few of his judicial decisions met reversal by courts of higher jurisdiction. For two years, 1872-4, Judge Crenshaw served as school commissioner of Trigg County, and he has ever shown loyal and helpful interest in community affairs and in the advancement of his native county along both civic and material lines. He is one of the oldest and most honored members of the Trigg County Bar Association, of which he is president at the time of this writing, in 1920. He is an elder in the Christian Church of Cadiz, in which both he and his wife have long been zealous workers.

Their beautiful home is one of the fine residences characteristic of Cadiz and the surrounding county. It is the headquarters of the community in the vicinity of West End Street, and the grounds being adorned with fine shade trees, ornamental shrubbery and well-kept lawns. This home, with Mrs. Crenshaw as its gracious and popular chataelaine, has long been a center of much of the representative social life of the community.

Judge Crenshaw is the owner of other real estate in his home city, as well as a valuable farm eighteen miles west of Cadiz, on the Tennessee River, and another farm near Pembroke, Kentucky.

Judge Crenshaw has always been earnest in the furtherance of those measures and objects which tend to advance the welfare of humanity, and has never lacked the courage of his convictions. His characteristics make him well qualified for leadership in popular sentiment and action, and he is well fortified in his opinions concerning Governmental and economic policies. He has made numerous contributions to the newspaper press, and his writings have been widely quoted. The Judge took a high stand on the matter of the liquor traffic, which he believes to be a public menace, and he was an active worker in behalf of the cause of prohibition. In 1894 he was chosen chairman of the executive committee which initiated a canvass of Trigg County in behalf of the prohibition party and the elimination of the liquor traffic within the borders of the county. The prohibition in the county was submitted to popular vote in that year, and the righteous cause was carried by a majority of more than 500 votes. For this result Judge Crenshaw is consistently to be accorded a large measure of credit, and his work in the connection gained him the commendation of the best element of citizenship in his native county. Concerning his splendid work for the elimination of saloons in the county, the following estimate has been given: 'He undertook a task which by many was considered unpopular, and one in which few men could hope to succeed, but not the magnitude of the undertaking nor the jeers of the enemies of temperance nor the opposition of so-called business interests could deter him from throwing the full force and weight of his influence against a social wrong and in favor of the best interests of society.' Mrs. Crenshaw, as a wife, has the many social qualities and has marked literary talent, as shown in her frequent and invariably interesting contributions to literary and religious periodicals.

As may naturally be inferred, Judge Crenshaw was active and influential in the furtherance of the various Governmental and adjunct activities advanced in support of the nation during its participation in the great World war. He assisted earnestly in the various drives for subscriptions for the Government loans, the support of the Red Cross, etc., was himself a liberal and loyal subscriber to the loans, and he also gave timely and valued assistance in the filling out of questionnaires for young men called upon to register for military service, his work in this connection having brought to him special compliment on the part of Government officials.

In the year 1877 was solemnized the marriage of Judge Crenshaw to Miss Minnie Dabney, daughter of the late Judge Thomas Dabney, to whom a memoir is dedicated on other pages, as before stated. Mrs. Crenshaw has long been a leader in the social and religious circles of Cadiz, and during the World war period she was specially active in Red Cross work and in other service tending to support Governmental agencies in their mission. Mrs. Crenshaw is the mother of seven children: Susan Moore, who became the wife of Roger L. Clark, now a resident of Tennessee, died in Trigg County at the age of twenty-two years. James Rumsey is general claim agent for the Standard Growers Exchange Company at Orlando, Florida. Dabney Hewell is general freight-claim agent for the Charleston & Western Carolina Railroad, and also for the Georgia Railroad, with headquarters at Augusta, Georgia. Robert Waldeau was graduated in the law department of the University of Kentucky and is now engaged in the practice of his profession in the City of Atlanta, Georgia, as a member of the representative law firm of Anderson, Roundtree & Crenshaw. John W. was graduated in the law department of Cumberland University in the year 1874. In the year 1868 he was admitted to the law in the City of Atlanta, where he is senior member of the firm of Crenshaw & Lindsay. He volunteered for service with the Young Men's Christian Association when the nation became involved in the War, and was in active service with this organization in England and France for twelve months. Albert, who was graduated in the law department of the University of Kentucky in the year 1869, died in New York City in the year 1893 at the time of his death, in July, 1911. Archie Douglas is associated with the firm of Ernst & Ernst, certified public accountants in the City of Atlanta, Georgia. He became a member of the United States Navy in July, 1918, passed three months in the Officers' Training Corps at Lexington, Kentucky, and was thence transferred to the Great Lakes Naval Station at Chicago, Illinois, where he remained until he was mustered out and honorably discharged, with the rank of master at arms, in February, 1919.

THOMAS C. DABNEY. The character and achievement of Judge Dabney marked him with all of the certitude as one of the honored and distinguished lawyers and jurists of the State of Kentucky, and this publication cannot fail to pay a tribute to his memory.

Thomas C. Dabney was born in Louisa County, Virginia, September 20, 1823, and died at Cadiz, Trigg County, Kentucky, on the 12th of November, 1886. He was a son of Albert Gallatin Dabney and Ann Eliza (Cutlett) Dabney, representatives of patrician Virginia families that were founded in the Old Dominion commonwealth in the remote past. Judge Dabney gained his academic education under the able direction of Elder George P. Street, and after completing his literary and scientific courses he turned his attention to the study of law when a youth of eighteen years. It was soon after initiating his law studies that he established his residence at Cadiz, the judicial center of Trigg County, Kentucky. Here he served as deputy county and circuit clerk under J. E. Thompson, and simultaneously he continued his law studies under the apprenticeship of Hon. C. D. Bradley, who was at that time one of the leading members of the bar of this section of the State. After his admission to the bar Judge Dabney engaged in the active practice of his profession at Cadiz in 1844, and his fine personal qualities and exceptional professional talent soon brought him a due measure of success and prestige. He served several terms as county attorney, and in 1852 was elected to the bench of the County Court. In July, 1857, there came to him further judicial honors, as he was then elected judge of the Circuit Court of the Second District of Kentucky, this district having at that time consisted of seven counties. With marked distinction he continued his administration on the circuit bench until the expiration of his term in 1862, when he declined re-election and resumed the private practice of his profession, which was dignified and honored by his noble character and large and worthy achievement. His was a nature of marked spirituality and gentleness, and thus he was kindly, tolerant and considerate in the relations of life, with naught of intellectual bigotry, and with keen appreciation of the well-springs of human thought and action. His home life was ideal in every way, and in the community he showed his stewardship in aiding all worthy causes and undertakings, as well as in offering succor to those in affliction and distress. He was ever a student, and his reading comprised each of the best in literature, including earliest study of the Bible, by whose teachings his course was ever guided and governed. He was a stanch and effective advocate and supporter of the principles of the democratic party, and was active in upholding its cause, though he never consented to become a candidate for public office save in line with the work of his profession.

Albert Gallatin Dabney, father of Judge Dabney, was born in Louisa County, Virginia, in 1798, and became an extensive planter and slaveholder. In the autumn of 1810 he came with his family to Kentucky and established his residence in Christian County. While a resident of Virginia he served as a major in the State Militia, and concerning him the following estimate has been written: "He was a typical gentleman of the old regime, and carried himself, as he wore his military title, with stately dignity." His father, J. J. Dabney, was a prosperous planter and representative citizen of Louisa County, Virginia, where he remained until his death, as did also his wife, whose family name was Winston. He was of French-Huguenot ancestry and a descendant of one of three brothers—Cornelius, John and Isaac—who fled from France to escape the persecution incident to the revolution of the Edict of Nantes. He was Governor of Virginia. The original autograph of the name was D'Aubigne, and the motto on the crest of the coat of arms of this patrician French family was "Faithful and Grateful." Of the three brothers who came to America Cornelius figures as the ancestor of the subject of this memoir.

On the 7th of March, 1848, was solemnized the marriage of Judge Dabney to Miss Susanna Rumsey, who was born at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, July 30, 1826, the only child of James D. Rumsey, and she survived her honored husband by about four years. She continued to reside in the old home at Cadiz until she too passed to eternal rest, on the 10th of August, 1890. Her father was a native of Maryland and was a son of Dr. Edward Rumsey, who became one of the pioneer physicians and surgeons in Christian County, Kentucky, and who was one of the honored citizens of the county at the time of his death, the Rumsey family being likewise of patrician distinction and its name having been long and worthy identified with American history. Mrs. Dabney received excellent educational advantages and was a woman of culture and gracious personality—one whose memory is revered by all who came within the sphere of her gentle influence. Concerning her reading and intellectual bent, her daughter has written: "She continued her reading through life, and at her death had studied and gained understanding of more books than any other woman in the commonwealth of Kentucky. Her great-uncle, James Rumsey, and her own uncle, Edward Rumsey, were men of great ambition, and to the former is now universally conceded the discovery and applica-Irvin A. Brandon, a man of energy, ability and progressiveness, achieved distinctive success in connection with agricultural enterprise in his native county, where for many years he gave virtually his undivided attention to farm industry. For ten years he was engaged in the general merchandise business at Wallonia, where also he was actively identified with the lumber business, his connection with which he owned and operated a saw mill. He died on his farm near Wallonia on the 2d of January, 1916, a citizen of liberality and loyalty, a successful business man and a native son who commanded high place in the esteem of the people of Trigg County. He was a democrat in political adherency, and was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as is also his widow, who still resides on the old homestead near Wallonia. Of their eight children George L. of this review, is the elder of the two surviving. Glenn resides with his widowed mother on the home farm, of which George L. has the active management.

George L. Brandon is indebted to the rural schools for his early education, which was supplemented by his attending the public schools, including the high school at Cadiz. Thereafter he completed a course in the commercial department of the General Normal College at Danville, Indiana, in which institution he was a member of the class of 1895. He then returned to the parental home, but on the 16th of December of the following year entered service as deputy county clerk under the administration of F. K. Grasty, This position he retained ten years, and thereafter he was for eighteen months secretary and treasurer of the Cadiz Hardware Company. Upon resigning this position he engaged in the general insurance business at Cadiz, and this enterprise he has since successfully continued, his insurance agency being one of the most important in the county in the scope and efficiency of its service. In November, 1917, Mr. Brandon was elected clerk of the County Court for a term of four years, and he assumed the duties of this office in January, 1918. His strong hold upon popular confidence and esteem in his native county was significantly shown in the fact that for this office he had no opposing candidate in either the primary or general elections.
Mr. Brandon has been active and influential in the local councils of the democratic party. He holds membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, while Mrs. Brandon is a member of the Baptist Church.
He is affiliated with Cadiz Lodge No. 121, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Green River Lodge No. 54, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is a past grand. In addition to his attractive modern home on East Main Street, Mr. Brandon owns a well improved farm of 120 acres five miles north of Cadiz, and also has an interest in the old homestead farm of his father. He was liberal and influential in the furtherance of the various war activities in Trigg County during the World War, and as a citizen he is progres-active and public-spirited, with abiding interest in all that concerns the welfare of his native county and state.

On the 27th of January, 1901, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Brandon to Miss Jimmie A. Glover, doughter of James H. and Sallie A. (Terry) Glover, who reside at Cadiz, Mr. Glover being a retired farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Brandon have six children.
Felix Redford, who was born August 16, 1905, is in 1921, a student in the John Locke Training School at Elkton, Kentucky, completing the high school course, and Sarah Agnes, who was born May 25, 1915, is attending the primary department of the Cadiz High School.

R. W. HUBERT SCHMITZ. The early history of the Roman Catholic Church in Kentucky bears record of missionary zeal, hardship, cheerful endurance and great accomplishment. It is possible, however, to venerate
the early priests of the church and never lose sight of what their great faith, perseverance and determined resolution brought about in the wilderness, and at the same time turn a thoughtful glance in the direction of the grave responsibilities resting upon their most worthy successors, who face the perplexing questions and facts of life in their priestly capacity in the twentieth century. One of these faithful servants of the church is found in Rev. Hubert Schmitz, pastor of St. Joseph’s Roman Catholic Church at Luftelberg. He is an experienced priest who not only looks carefully after the spiritual welfare of his large parish, but has displayed great executive ability concerning its temporal progress.

Rev. Hubert Schmitz was born at Luftelberg, near Bonn, Germany, September 10, 1878, a son of Peter Joseph and Margare (Welter) Schmitz. Peter Joseph Schmitz was born at Luftelberg in 1836 and died there in 1892. His business throughout life was the manufacturing of pottery. He married Margaret Welter, who survives and resides at Defiance, Ohio. She was born in 1857 at Odendorf, Germany. Of their family of four children Hubert was the firstborn, the others being: Gerhard, who is pastor of St. Michael’s Roman Catholic Church at Defiance, Ohio; Peter, who died in the old home in Germany, at the age of twenty-three years; and Joseph, who resides at Tiffin, Ohio, and is vice president of the Monarch Manufacturing Company.

Father Schmitz first attended the parochial school at Luftelberg for eight years, then spent five years in a high school and college at Steyl, Holland, where his record stands of having completed the regular six-year course in five years. In preparation for the church he then spent two years in the study of philosophy in a seminary at Vienna, Austria, and one more year in the study of humanistic sciences in a year of theological training following in the great University of Bonn.

In 1867 Father Schmitz came to the United States and for two years attended Mount St. Mary’s Seminary, Cincinnati, Ohio. In 1900 he was ordained by Bishop Macs, and his first appointment was as assistant pastor, under Rev. Tom Major, of the Good Shepherd Church, Frankfort, Kentucky. Five months later he was appointed assistant to Rev. M. G. Leicke at Corphie Church, Newport, Kentucky, where he continued for three years, and for the following three years was assistant pastor under Rev. I. M. Ahhen, of St. Aloysius at Covington, Kentucky. In 1916 Father Schmitz came to Warsaw as pastor of St. Joseph’s Church. This parish was founded and church dedicated in 1888, and Father Schmitz found much to be done in a material way as well as a large parish to be cared for spiritually. The church and rectory are situated on the Sparta Turnpike and the structures were remedied in 1920. Father Schmitz ministers to forty families, his parish taking in all of Gallatin County and additionally the voting precinct of Sanders in Carroll County, together with one half of Owen County, in which the city of Owenton is included. The pastor of St. Joseph’s leads a busy, useful life and is much esteemed not only by his own parish but by the several with whom he comes into friendly intercourse in everyday affairs.

Robert Wesley Brandon, M.D. Three generations of the Brandon family have contributed to the medical and surgical history of Tennessee and Kentucky, starting with Dr. Wesley Brandon, continuing through the career of Dr. Finis and bringing the achievement of the present time in the person and work of Dr. Robert Wesley Brandon, one of the leaders of the medical profession of Christian County, who has followed his honored calling at LaFayette since 1908. The services of these three able, learned and conscientious medical men have covered a period of three-quarters of a century of the history of their profession and have served to make the name honored and respected wherever known.

Dr. Robert Wesley Brandon was born at Linton, Trigg County, Kentucky, July 6, 1882, a son of Dr. Finis and Cornelia Eugenia (Coff) Brandon. He belongs to a family of Scotch-Irish stock, the original American ancestor of which immigrated to this country in Colonial times and settled in Virginia, whence an early member of this branch migrated as a pioneer to Stewart County, Tennessee. There was born the great-grandfather of Dr. Robert W. Brandon, Christopher Bratton, who prided his entire life as a farmer in Stewart County. His son, Dr. Wesley Brandon, was born in Stewart County, in 1826, was educated for the profession of medicine, and spent his long and honorable career as a physician and surgeon, his death occurring at Bumpus Mills, Tennessee, in 1897. He married Miss Harriet Wallace, also a native of Stewart County, who died before the birth of her grandson.

Dr. Finis Brandon was born near Dover, Stewart County, Tennessee, in 1857, and was reared and married in that county. He was educated at Vanderbuilt University and the University of Nashville, from both of which institutions he received the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and began his professional career at Linton, Kentucky, whence he came to LaFayette in 1889. He continued in the active practice of his calling until 1897, when he removed to Chicago. He was prominent among the medical men of Christian County. Doctor Brandon was a life-long democrat, but his close devotion to professional duties precluded the idea of his entrance upon the political arena. He was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to the movements of which he was a liberal contributor.

Doctor Brandon married Miss Cornelia Eugenia Coff, who was born in Christian County, Tennessee, and who survives him as a resident of LaFayette. There were two children in the family: Dr. Robert W.; and Carter Hillman, a merchant of LaFayette.

Robert Wesley Brandon was educated primarily in the public schools of LaFayette, and after his graduation from the high school as a member of the class of 1890 enrolled as a student of Vanderbuilt Training School, Elkhorn, Kentucky, where he spent two years. In the fall of 1904 he entered Vanderbuilt University, from which he was duly graduated in 1908 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and while at that institution he joined the Phi Beta Pi Greek letter college fraternity, in which he still retains membership. Doctor Brandon has been the subject of many studies at the time of his graduation, as he has been a capable and useful student of his profession, and has taken two post-graduate courses, first at the Chicago Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat College, in 1917, and later at the Lovola Post-Graduate School, New Orleans, in 1918.

Doctor Brandon began his professional career at LaFayette in 1908, and since then has built up a large, lucrative and respectable general practice. He has risen to a recognized place among the leaders of his calling in Christian County, and has gained and retained the confidence of the general public and the esteem and regard of his fellow-practitioners. His offices are located in the Brandon building, which is owned by him, as is also the barber shop building and a farm of 175 acres located one-quarter of a mile southwest of this. He is a member of the Christian County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, while his non-professional connections include identification with LaFayette Lodge No. 151, A.F. and A.M.; LaFayette Camp No. 11470, W. W. A., and other bodies, and he is an ex-member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. As a/display of interest in politics, he has shown a public-spirited interest in local affairs, and at present is a member of the town Board of Trustees. With his family he belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Doctor Brandon was married in 1909, at Nashville, Tennessee, to Miss Jennie Lacy Doss, daughter of R. M. and Martha (Reams) Doss, the latter a resident of Akron, Ohio, where Mr. Doss, now deceased, was formerly a railroad detective. Mrs. Brandon is a lady of numerous graces and accomplishments and a graduate of the Hume-Fogg High School, Nashville, Tennessee. Doctor and Mrs. Brandon are the parents of three children: Ruth Virginia, born November 30, 1910; Robert Wesley, Jr., born October 11, 1912; and Martha Eugenia, born March 29, 1915.

Henry D. Cowand came to Hopkins County just twenty years ago, and his first experience in business was in a position that netted him a salary of only six dollars a week. Hopkins County people now know Mr. Cowand as active head of a splendid department store at Madisonville, as member of a mercantile corporation operating a large chain of stores, and as one of the busiest and most successful men of affairs in this section of the state.

Mr. Cowand was born at Windsor, North Carolina, October 15, 1870. He is of Scotch-Irish stock. His grandfather, Albert Cowand, was born in Northampton County, North Carolina, and spent his active life as a planter and at one time before the war owned seventy-five slaves. From the age of thirty-five to fifty-two he lived in Bertie County, North Carolina, and then returned to Northampton County, where he died. He married Miss Eugenia Burden, a native of Virginia, who died in Northampton County. Robert A. Cowand, father of the Madisonville merchant, was born at Windsor, North Carolina. His mature years were also devoted to planting on a large scale, and prior to the war he employed many slaves in the cultivation of his fields. He served as a captain in the Confederate Army, and was present at the battle of Gettysburg and in other campaigns. Active in local affairs he served as county commissioner and was an influential democrat in his section. At the age of eight years he was converted and joined the Missionary Baptist Church, and his church was always one of the strongest interests of his life. He died in advanced years at Windsor, in 1882. Robert A. Cowand married William Julia Burden, who was a life-long resident of Windsor, where she was born in 1847. They reared a family of five sons, John T., William J., Robert Lee and Henry D. The four oldest are all farmers in Bertie County, North Carolina, Henry being the only representative of the family in Kentucky.

Henry D. Cowand was educated in the public schools of his native town, and the day he reached his majority he left his father's plantation and arrived at Madisonville, Kentucky, October 18, 1880. He earned six weeks he earned sixty dollars a week in the store of Dulin & McLeod. Leaving there to accept a salary of $12 a week, he was employed from January to September, 1901, in the Victory Drygoods Company's store at Earlington. The next step of progress promoted him to $15 a week as clerk in the commissary store of the St. Bernard Mining Company at Earlington. He was with that business for eight years, and while there laid the founded on a sound mercantile experience and knowledge. With this experience and with such capital as he had been able to accumulate he opened, on January 15, 1900, a general retail store under the name of Barnes-Cowand Company at Earlington. In 1912 he became individual proprietor of the Cowand Mercantile Company at Earlington and continued business there until he sold out in October, 1917.

He thereafter removed to Madisonville and became a member of the Cowand-Hauger Company, a syndicate which now operates a chain of stores from Flint, Michigan, to Fort Worth, Texas. There are forty-two stores capitalized and operated through the central management of the Cowand-Hauger Corporation. Mr. C. D. Hauger is president of the company, Mrs. H. D. Cowand is vice president, and H. D. Cowand is secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Madisonville department store of the firm. This is a business that has rapidly grown, and the store on North Main Street in Madisonville is one of the model institutions of the kind in this part of Kentucky.

In addition to his mercantile interests Mr. Cowand is also a director in the Citizens Bank & Trust Company at Madisonville, is a director and stockholder in the Invader Oil Company of Fort Worth, Texas, and has accumulated some valuable farming interests in Kentucky, including 700 acres totaling 285 acres in Hopkins County. He is a very successful agriculturist in his part of the state. His home is one of the most complete modern residences in Madisonville, located at 127 East Broadway.

Mr. Cowand is a democrat, is a member and deacon of the First Christian Church, and is affiliated with Madisonville Lodge No. 738 of the Elks, and Eureka Cacles in No. 25, Woodmen of the World. During the war Mr. Cowand was county chairman of the publicity department promoting Liberty Loans and all other authorized drives and campaigns for the successful prosecution of the war.

In 1866, at Earlington, he married Miss Virgie Rule, daughter of John and Mary Rule. Her mother is still living at Earlington. Her father was foreman of the St. Bernard coal mines. Mrs. Cowand died in 1910, leaving two daughters, Mary Lynna, born January 6, 1876. In 1913, at Madisonville, Mr. Cowand married Miss Lynna Galoway, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lynn Galoway. Her father, now deceased, was a merchant and farmer at St. Charles, Kentucky, where her mother is still living. Mrs. Cowand is a graduate of the Kentucky Bethel College, Hopkinsville, Kentucky, receiving the A. B. degree, and has diplomas in painting and music and is a thorough artist.

Basil M. Brooks. Though only forty years of age Basil M. Brooks has had a wide range of business experience and achievement, was a bank cashier and bank president in very early manhood, has been prominent in public and civic affairs, and for several years past has lived in Madisonville, where he is the senior member of one of the leading general insurance agencies in that section of the state.

Mr. Brooks was born in Webster County, Kentucky, May 3, 1880. His paternal ancestors came from England and were Colonial settlers in Maryland. His great-grandfather, Charles Brooks, was a native of Maryland, and early in the last century came to Kentucky and developed a pioneer farm in that part of original Hopkins County which is now Webster County. He lived there the rest of his life. Absalom Brooks, his son and grandfather of the Madisonville insurance man, was born in what is now Webster County in 1813, and spent his life as a farmer in that community, where he died in 1860. He married Susan Bailey, who was born in Hopkins County in 1830 and died in Webster County in 1876.

Willis C. Brooks, father of Basil M., was born in 1851, in the same house in which his son Basil was born. In 1861 his father brought his family to Hopkins County, where he was reared and educated. After his marriage he lived in Webster County, on his farm three miles west of Slaughters. In 1881 he again returned to Hopkins County. His business as a farmer was notably successful, he was a breeder and dealer in live stock, and made his farm, eleven miles north of Madisonville, one of the most productive and valuable places in Hopkins County. In 1890, while still retaining the ownership and supervision of his farm, he moved into the village of Slaughters in Webster County, where he lived until his death on September 26, 1908. Outside of his immediate business he was prominent in other affairs, being president of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Slaughters from 1902 until his death. He was one of the organizers of this bank and was also a successful merchant, having been one of the founders of the Slaughters Mercantile Company, conducting the leading department store in Webster County. He was a democrat, and was a life-long Methodist, being one of the leading laymen of the church.

William C. Brooks married Katherine Murphey, who was born in Hopkins County, eight miles east of Madisonville, in 1859. She now lives at Slaughters. Her grandfather, Charles Murphey, was of Scotch-Irish ancestry and one of the pioneer farmers of Hopkins County, where he is buried. Katherine Murphey's father was John Murphey, who was born in Hopkins County in 1826, leading his active life as a farmer and tobacconist, acquired extensive land holdings, and died in the county in 1895. He married Ann Davidson, who was born in Hopkins County in 1840 and died in 1906.

Basil M. Brooks is the older of two children. His sister, Mayme, is the wife of E. K. Coffman, an insurance man at Slaughters. Basil Brooks was educated in public and private schools at Slaughters, and during 1895-96 attended the W. R. Smith Business College at Lexington. Then, at the age of sixteen, he began an active business career. During 1896-97 he was employed as a bookkeeper in Madisonville. In 1898 he taught a school in Webster County, and in 1899 for a time was associated with a mercantile business in Slaughters. In the fall of that year he entered the University of Kentucky, where he continued his studies until 1901February 28, 1901, he was elected cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Slaughters, but did not take charge of the office until he came home from the university on July 1, 1901. He was cashier of the bank until May 8, 1909. At that date he resigned and took personal charge of the home farm and his father's state still remained a farmer and farmer of the Slaughters Bank. On June 10, 1909, he was elected president of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Slaughters, and proved his financial judgment and ability in managing the affairs of this bank until 1917. In the meantime, from 1901 to 1909, he had engaged in the insurance business. In July, 1916, Mr. Brooks left the home farm and re- nounced the insurance business. December, 1917, has devoted his energies to building up a large and important general insurance agency at Madisonville, his offices being in the Citizens Bank & Trust Company Building on South Main Street.

While the past twenty years have been filled with many exacting business responsibilities, Mr. Brooks has also taken an intelligent part in public affairs. He served on the Town Council at Slaughters and was chairman of the Council, from 1904 to 1910 was a member of the Board of Trustees of the Kentucky State University from the Second Congressional District, and was one of the organizers and is still an active member of the Hopkins County Drainage Commissioners. He is a democrat, is a member of the Board of Stewards of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Madisonville; is a charter member of the St. James Masonic Lodge, and a charter member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity of the Kentucky State University. During the war he was actively associated with all the campaigns in his home locality to strengthen the arm of the Government in the great war, and was county sales chairman for the Fourth and Victory Loans, and a liberal investor in Government securities himself.

On December 11, 1881, at West Point, Kentucky, Mr. Brooks married Miss Margaret Ogden, daughter of William C. and Margaret (Kuykendall) Ogden. Her father, now deceased, was a merchant at Slaughters, Kentucky. Mrs. Brooks is a popular member of Madisonville social circles, particularly interested in music and skilled vocally and instrumentally in that art. She is a graduate of music from the Woman's College of Oxford, Ohio, and is a member of both the Chautauqua and Woman's Clubs. Mr. and Mrs. Brooks have had three children. Margaret K., born December 1, 1903, graduated from the Madisonville High School in 1920 and is now in the first year at the Kentucky State University. Willis C., born February 14, 1905, is a graduate of the high school of the town where he was born. Harry Ogden, born October 25, 1914, died in his third year, June 21, 1917.

WILLIAM N. STICE. The same ambition and determined purpose which enabled Mr. Stice to gain through his own application and efforts a liberal education and to become a successful teacher in the schools of Kentucky have stood him well in hand in his business career, and he is now the owner of the well equipped and thoroughly modern flour mill at Cerulean, Trigg County, this milling plant having been erected and equipped by him in 1902 and its output capacity being sixty barrels of flour a day.

Mr. Stice was born in Edmonson County, Kentucky, March 10, 1857, and is a son of David M. and Martha Slaughters found of David's first married to Margaret Logan, a native of North Carolina, in the year 1810, and the latter was born near Brownsville, Edmonson County, Kentucky, in 1827. The father died on his farm near Brownsville in 1875, and the mother remained in that county until her death in 1881. David M. Stice was a boy at the time of the family removal from North Carolina to Edmonson County, Kentucky, in the early part of the nineteenth century. His father, Andrew Stice, a native of North Carolina, having died while en route to the new home and the widowed mother having continued with her children on the sad and arduous overland journey to Edmonson County, where she passed the remainder of her life and where she reared her large family of children. A devoted and unselshfish mother, she endured the hardships and privations incidental to the pioneer life in Kentucky. Her husband had rendered gallant service as a patriot soldier in the war of the Revolution.

David M. Stice was reared under the conditions that marked the pioneer period in the history of Edmonson County, where eventually he became an extensive and successful exponent of farm industry and where he remained until his death. The family name of his first wife was Diets, and she was a young woman at the time of her death. He later married Miss Marilda Logan, who survived him by about six years, and of their four children William N., of this review, is the eldest; Catherine is the wife of Monroe Wilson, a farmer near Tilford, Butler County, Kentucky; Susan, who resides in Grayson County, is the widow of Joseph Woodley, who was a substantial farmer of that county; and Elizabeth, who married Mr. B. M. Johnson, had been reared at home on the farm, but having died in the State of Arkansas, where Mr. Johnson had been a successful timber dealer.

The rural schools of his native county afforded William N. Stice his early education, and his higher scholastic training was acquired through his own efforts, including determined application to private study and reading. He was but seven years of age at the time of his father's death, and until he was fourteen years old he found employment that enabled him to aid in the support of his widowed mother and the younger children. He was fourteen years old when his beloved mother passed away, and thereafter he continued to be employed by the month, the while he used his earnings wisely in the furtherance of his education. Thus it was that he defrayed the expenses incidental to the completion of a course in the high school at

Leitchfield, judicial center of Grayson County, in which school he was graduated as a member of the class of 1890. Thereafter he devoted fourteen years to successful service as a teacher in the public schools, and this active pedagogic work, as combined with his zealous study and reading, enabled him to gain the equivalent of a liberal education. He was popular in every school he entered. He taught in the schools of Grayson and Hopkins counties, and after terminating his service in this important field of endeavor he was for three years engaged in operating a flour mill at Dawson Springs, Hopkins County. He sold this milling plant and business in 1902, in which year he came to Cerulean, Trigg County, and erected his present fine milling plant, to the operation of which he has since given his close attention, the while he has developed a substantial and prosperous business, as the products of the mill are of the highest standard and constitute the best advertisement and commercial asset of the business.

Mr. Stice is one of the leading citizens and business men of the thriving Village of Cerulean, where he is serving as police judge at the time of this writing, in 1920. He is a democrat of utmost loyalty, he and his wife hold membership in the Baptist Church, and he is a member of the Jewish Congregation of the same name. As a member of the Ancient and Accepted Masons, and Cerulean Camp No. 238, Woodmen of the World. In addition to his mill property, Mr. Stice owns a substantial and attractive residence at the corner of Main and Washington streets, this being one of the best and most modern houses in the village.

At Newport, Campbell County, in the year 1896, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Stice to Mrs. Carrie K. Graham, daughter of Thomas J. and Theresa (Horn) Graham, both of whom are deceased, Mr. Graham having been a successful merchant and farmer in Grayson County. Mr. and Mrs. Stice have seven children: Lois, who is now at the parental home, was graduated from the University of Louisville as a member of the class of 1920, and received therefrom the degree of Bachelor of Arts; Eunice is, in 1920, a student in the musical conservatory of the University of Louisville; in the academic department of which institution she is a member of the class of 1923; Mary is a member of the sophomore class in the same institution; Rachel and Rebecca, twins, were graduated from the Cerulean High School as members of the class of 1920; William is a member of the sophomore class in the same high school; and Sarah likewise is attending the public schools of Cerulean. The family is one of prominence and unqualified popularity in connection with the representative social activities of the home community.

George E. Hatcher, M. D., is a young man whose professional ability marks him as one of the able physicians and surgeons of Trigg County and whose resourcefulness and versatility is shown in his finding time to give his personal supervision to his valuable farm property in this county. With residence and headquarters in the Village of Cerulean, he has built up a prosperous general practice and gained definite vantage ground as one of the representative physicians and surgeons of his home county.

Dr. George Edward Hatcher was born at Pekin, Illinois, April 20, 1883, and is a son of Henry C. and Ellen (Clauser) Hatcher, who still maintain their home at that place, where the father is now living virtually retired after many years of active association with the harness and saddlery trade and business. Henry C. Hatcher was born in Canton, Stark County, Ohio, April 14, 1843, and when he was a lad of nine years his parents removed thence to Tremont, that state, where he was reared and educated and where he was residing at the time when the outbreak of the Civil war caused him to tender his aid in defense of the Union. He enlisted in a regiment of Illinois volunteer infantry, and during the major part of his period of service was called upon for clerical duties in connection with the officers’ headquarters of his command. After the close of the war he established his residence at Pekin, Illinois, where he has since maintained his home and where he served eight years as deputy Circuit Court clerk for Tazewell County. He is a democrat in politics, and has served with the Grand Army of the Republic and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. On August 15, 1865, he solemnized his marriage to Miss Ellen Clauser, who was born at Pekin, Illinois, July 12, 1846, and of this union have been born nine children: Don died at the age of ten years, as the result of an accident which caused concussion of the brain; Frank E. is a commission merchant in the City of Butte, Montana; Charles C. has engaged in the real-estate business at Pekin, Illinois; Mary Katherine is the wife of Schnuyer C. Striger, of Pekin, Illinois, her husband being in the internal revenue service of the Government; Fred F., is Wisconsin state manager for the John Deere Plow Company, with headquarters in the City of Milwaukee; Laura L., remains at the parental home; Dr. George E., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Poston died at the age of ten months; and Rose Lou is the wife of Fred F. Newman, a jeweler and watchmaker at Chenoa, Illinois.

In the public schools of his native place Dr. George E. Hatcher continued his studies until his graduation from the Pekin High School as a member of the class of 1900. For two years thereafter he was employed in a drug store at Pekin, and in the meanwhile he received license as a registered assistant pharmacist. In 1902, in consequence with his ambition and well formulated plans, he entered the medical department of the University of Tennessee, in the City of Nashville, and in 1906 received from this institution his well earned degree of Doctor of Medicine. While at the university he became affiliated with the national medical fraternity known as the Alpha Kappa Kappa. After his graduation Doctor Hatcher gained fortifying clinical experience by one year’s service as an intern in the Nashville City Hospital, this preference having been won on the score of his having received second honors of his class at the time of its graduation. From 1907 until February, 1910, Doctor Hatcher continued in the practice of his profession at Nashville, where he was then appointed assistant physician of the Tennessee Central Hospital for the Insane. Of this position he continued the incumbent until July, 1914, when he established his residence at Cerulean, Kentucky. He has since been engaged in the general practice of his profession, with a large and representative clientele and with specially high reputation in the field of surgical work. The Doctor owns a modern residence and well equipped office building on Main Street, and two miles northeast of his home village he is the owner of a fine farm estate of 250 acres, this tract being fertile and productive bottom land, its improvements being of excellent order and the farm being the stage of progressive enterprise in agriculture and the raising of high-grade cattle and horses.

Doctor Hatcher takes loyal and public-spirited interest in community affairs, is a member of the Board of Education of Cerulean, is a democrat in politics, and he and his wife hold membership in the Christian Church. He is serving at the time of this writing, in 1920, as president of the Trigg County Medical Society, and holds membership also in the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is appointed as a consultant or reviewer of mental diseases in connection with the United States Public Health Service, and during the World war was zealous in the advancing of the various Governmental loans and other war activities. The Doctor is one of only five Kentucky physicians holding membership in the American Medico-Psychological Association, and in his home
Charles Greenleaf Franklin, city judge of Madisonville, began the practice of law ten years ago, is a native of Hopkins County, and has gained the honors of his profession among people who have known him all his life. Judge Franklin was born at Dawson Springs in Hopkins County March 11, 1883. He represents the fourth generation of the Franklin family in Hopkins County. His great-grandfather, Thomas Franklin, was a native of Virginia but when a young man came West and settled in Hopkins County, where he was married and where he spent many years as a farmer near Dawson Springs. The grandfather of Judge Franklin was who was born near Dawson Springs in 1830. He was a merchant, served as a Confederate soldier all through the war, and died at the home of his son Benjamin L. Franklin, in 1900. His first wife, the grandmother of Judge Franklin, was , who was born near Dalton in Hopkins County and died near Dawson Springs. Finis Franklin married for his second wife , a native of Caldwell County, Kentucky. Benjamin L. Franklin, father of Judge Franklin, was born near Dawson Springs in 1862, and has lived in that one community practically all his life. For the past thirty-five years he has conducted a successful mercantile establishment near Dawson Springs. He is a democrat, a member of the Universalist Church, and is affiliated with and a member of the Masonic Order. Judge Franklin was a merchant in Dawson Springs in 1864 and died there in 1905. A brief record of their children is as follows. Ila, wife of George Finley, a farmer between Earlington and Dawson Springs; Charles G.; Flora, at home; Ruby, principal of schools at Nebo, Kentucky; Della, wife of L. B. Wilkey, a farmer at Nortonville; Vaden, wife of H. W. Fitzsimmons, farmer; , home being on a farm near Dawson Springs; , rural teacher; , who is bookkeeper for a coal company at Lynch, Kentucky; and , at home. Benjamin L. Franklin married for his second wife , a native of Hopkins County. They have two children, , both at home and attending school. Charles Greenleaf Franklin secured his early education in the rural schools, attended the high school at Dawson Springs, graduated with the Bachelor of Science degree in 1901 from the Southern Normal University at Bowling Green, and after leaving college was for four and a half years chief clerk in the state auditor's office at Frankfort. This employment furnished him an opportunity to pursue the study of law and also permitted him to earn the money to complete his legal education. Judge Franklin is a graduate of the Law School of Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, completing his course and receiving the LL.B. degree in 1910. He is a member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon college fraternity. On being admitted to the bar Judge Franklin opened his office at Madisonville, and his talents have been in large demand both in civil and criminal practices. His offices are in the Baker & Hickman Building on East Center Street, opposite the Courthouse. Judge Franklin was elected city judge in August, 1916, for a term of two years. In 1923, 1925, he was nominated for county attorney by the democratic party, the opposing party offering no opposition. During the war he spoke over Hopkins County in behalf of the various war drives, and was otherwise a leader both by personal example and through his influence to promote the success of all local campaigns. He has prospered in his affairs, is owner of a farm near Silent Run in Hopkins County, has a dwelling on Scott Street and his own modern home at 252 West Broadway. He is a member of the County and State Bar, is a member of the Masonic Order, and is a prominent member of the Masonic Order. Judge Franklin has served as superintendent of his Sunday School two years and is affiliated with the Masonic Order and Madisonville Lodge No. 738 of the Elks.

In April, 1914, at Madisonville, he married Miss Minnie Sugg, daughter of John Will and Armita (Johnson) Sugg. Her mother is deceased, and her father, a retired shoe merchant, lives with Judge and Mrs. Franklin. The latter have two children: , born April 23, 1916, and , born April 3, 1919. Samuel Coombs, county judge of Carroll County, has for many years been a leader in rural and agricultural activities in that section of Kentucky. He won his prosperity directly from the soil by the hardest kind of labor; he has a hardhead, and prefers work to words. He certainly merits the position of influence he enjoys today. Judge Coombs was born in Hardin County, Kentucky, June 20, 1851. His grandfather, Thomas Coombs, was a native of Virginia and was a pioneer farmer of Trimble County and finally conducted a hotel at Ewing Ford in Carroll County. He died in Henry County, Kentucky. His son, Isham Coombs, was born in Trimble County, and his family has been in Kentucky practically throughout the period of statehood. He grew up in Trimble County, but before his marriage moved to Hardin County and for many years conducted a large farm. He joined the Masonic Order, was a democrat, and a loyal member of the Christian Church. His wife was , a native of Trimble County, Kentucky, and a leading member of the Sunday School, where they have been members for many years. They have three children: , born in 1922, and , born in 1924, and , born in 1926. They are residents of the village of Franklin, Hardin County, and are the parents of a large family of children: [additional information redacted for brevity].
He was elected county judge in 1917, and has given close attention to his duties at the Court House since January 1, 1918. Judge Coombs is a member of the Carrollton County Farm Bureau, the Farmers Union, the Eureka Union, the Burley Tobacco Growers Association, is a director in the Carrollton National Bank, a stockholder in the Farmers Loose Leaf Tobacco Warehouse Company at Carrollton, and the economic and civic welfare of his county is a matter that never fails to arouse his interest. Judge Coombs is a democrat, for twenty years has been an elder in the Christian Church, and is a past grand of Harmony Lodge No. 64, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Like all other good citizens of Carroll County he was ready with his time, influence and resources to support the cause of the Government in the World war.

Judge Coombs has a fine family. He married in Trimble County in 1874 Miss Evaline Mitchell who died May 20, 1921. She was a daughter of Addison and Emily (Coombs) Mitchell, now deceased. Her father was a farmer. Judge and Mrs. Coombs had nine children. The oldest is Marcellus, a farmer in Carroll County; Addie Vernon is the wife of T. A. Maddox, a Carroll County farmer; Mattie Thomas died in Carroll County at the age of thirty, the wife of W. M. Carlisle, now a farmer in Indiana; Emma Lola is the wife of J. C. Cantwell, living on a farm in Carroll County; Charles has also pursued agriculture; Homer Ous died in Carroll County at the age of seven years; Eunice died at the age of two; Martha is a housewife in Illinois; J. M. is now a woodcutter in the Forest, a machinist by trade, living at home, answered the call to the colors in November, 1917, was trained at Camp Taylor, then at West Point, and went overseas, spending five months in France and had completed his intensive training ready for front line duty when the armistice was signed, being a machine gunner in a machine gun corps of the Field Artillery; John, the youngest of the family, is active manager of the home farm near Carrollton.

THOMAS O. TURNER is consistently to be designated as one of the representative citizens and business men of Trigg County, of which he is a native son. He is a prominent merchant at Cadiz, the judicial center of the county, is the owner of valuable farm property in Trigg County, as well as in the states of Mississippi and Texas, and has important financial interests in his home county.

The Rev. Thomas Turner was born at Cereal Springs, this county, June 20, 1872, and is a representative of one of the old and influential families of this county. His paternal great-grandfather, James Turner, was born and reared in North Carolina, and became one of the pioneer exponents of farm industry in Trigg County, Kentucky, where he and his wife, whose family name was Rogers, passed the remainder of their lives and where he died in the 40's. His son R. R., grandfather of him whose name introduces this review, was born at Cereal Springs, this county, in 1812, became one of the substantial farmers and influential citizens of the Cereal Springs section of the county and here remained until his death in 1882. His wife, whose maiden name was Leah Goodwin, was born at Cereal Springs in the year 1806, and her death there occurred in 1887. Mr. Turner served thirty-five years as a justice of the peace and was familiarly known as 'J. J. Turner'.

J. J. Turner, father of the subject of this sketch, was born on the old homestead at Cereal Springs in the year 1843, and there he passed his entire life, one of the leading exponents of agricultural industry in that section of his native county and as a citizen whose sterling character gave him secure place in popular confidence and good will. He was a staunch supporter of the principles of the democratic party, was influential in local affairs of public order, and he and his wife were zealous members of the Primitive Baptist Church. He served as a gallant young soldier of the Confederacy during the climacteric period of the Civil war, as a member of Company B, Eighth Kentucky Infantry. Among the important engagements in which he took part were those of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. He was with the forces that opposed General Sherman in his historic Atlanta campaign and subsequent march from Atlanta to the sea. At Fort Donelson he was captured by the enemy, and thereafter was held a prisoner of war near Indianapolis, Indiana, about nine months. Mr. Turner's death occurred in April, 1893, and in his passing his native county lost one of its most honored citizens. His wife, whose death occurred in April, 1920, was born near Golden Pond, Trigg County, in August, 1848, and was a representative of another of the sterling pioneer families of this favored section of the Blue Grass state. Of their children the eldest was William R., who was a prosperous merchant at Cereal Springs at the time of his death, in November, 1919; Ella died at the age of one year; Thomas O., immediate subject of this review, was the next in order of birth; Leah is the wife of Charles K. Warren, a merchant at Cereal Springs; Martha is the wife of J. L. Blakely, a farmer near that place; D. D., who died in 1918, was a carpenter and builder at Cereal Springs; Benjamin is a merchant at Cereal Springs and J. M. is postmaster of the City of Cadiz and is individually mentioned on other pages of this work; Woodson is the wife of Oscar E. Stewart, who is identified with coal-mining operations in Illinois, their home being at Cercy, that state.

Thomas O. Turner gained his youthful and limited education in the public schools at Cereal Springs, and he was seventeen years of age when he left school. Thereafter he was associated with farm enterprise in this same locality, and he had been brought up, with the majority, when he engaged in the general merchandise business at Cereal Springs, where also he conducted the Cereal Springs Hotel for a period of ten years, in the meanwhile continuing his alliance with farm industry. In 1915, he established his present mercantile business at Cadiz, though he did not take up his residence in this city until 1917. He has disposed of the major part of his interests at Cereal Springs, though he still owns and conducts his well equipped general store at that place. In 1919 he established also a drug store at Murray, the county seat of Calloway County, and it will thus be seen that he is one of the most progressive, even as he is the most successful, business men of this section of Kentucky. His large and finely stocked and appointed mercantile establishment at Cadiz is the leading department store in Trigg County, and his store at Murray has equal precedence in Calloway County. The Cadiz store is located on Main Street, opposite the Courthouse, and its effective service has gained to it a large and appreciative supporting patronage. Mr. Turner owns and occupies one of the attractive modern residences of Cadiz, on Main Street, and in addition to being the owner of a well improved and valuable farm property near Cereal Springs he has a farm of 320 acres in Jones County, Texas, as well as one of 320 acres in Tippah County, Mississippi. He is a director of the Bank of Cereal Springs, a stockholder in the Cadiz Bank & Trust Company, and is a stockholder also in the Henry Clay Fire Insurance Company and the Southern Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Turner is a stalwart in the local ranks of the democratic party, and is a member of the Democratic Executive Committee of the First Congressional District of Kentucky, but is not a bitter partisan in politics; he holds membership in the Primitive Baptist Church, in which he has served as clerk of the Board of Trustees for fully quarter of a century. Mr. Turner was most loyal and active supporter of the various war activities in his county during the nation's participation in the World war, and was a liberal subscriber to the various Governmental loans in support of the war service.

In 1892, at Cerulean Springs, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Turner to Miss Laura Ladd, daughter of the late H. F. and Josephine (Arnstrom) Ladd, both of whom died on their homestead farm near Cerulean Springs. Mr. and Mrs. Turner have no children living, but one son died at the age of three days, in 1896, and another son died at the age of six years, 1907. Mrs. Laura Ladd Turner has been a member of the Missionary Baptist Church since childhood.

Benjamin Morgan Plain served a long and thorough apprenticeship as a merchant's clerk at Madisonville before he went into business for himself, and his training, experience and exceptional talent for business have enabled him to develop one of the largest and most complete hardware establishments in this section of Kentucky.

Mr. Plain was born on a farm near Bremen in McLean County, Kentucky, January 23, 1875. The Plains were Colonial settlers in Virginia, and his grandfather, Daniel Plain, was born in that old commonwealth. As a young man he came West to McLean County, Kentucky, was married there, and while a brick mason by trade, owned and operated a farm in his native county many years ago. His wife was a Miss Coffin, a native of Virginia, who died in McLean County. Benjamin Plain, father of the Madisonville merchant, was born in McLean County in 1822, was reared and married in his native locality, was first a merchant and later a farmer, and in 1870 moved to a farm in Muhlenberg County, where he continued the vocation of mercantile until his death in 1890. He was a democrat, a very interested member and worker in the Baptist Church, and a member of the Masonic fraternity. Benjamin Plain married Sarah Morgan, who was born in Muhlenberg County in 1816, and died at Madisonville in 1908. They were the parents of nine children: Misses Ruth and Annie, living at Madisonville; John, who died at Summers Store in Muhlenberg County, wife of Charles Martin, now a minister, living at Greenville, Kentucky; Mollie, wife of Rev. F. E. Burkett, a Presbyterian minister in Illinois; Sallie, who died at the age of nineteen; Earl, who died when twenty-four; Benjamin Morgan, who was the seventh in age; John, who died at the age of twenty-three; and Miss Kate, who lives with her unmarried sisters at Madisonville.

Benjamin Morgan Plain spent his early life on his father's farm, and while there attended the rural schools of Muhlenberg County. He also attended school at Madisonville. Reaching the age of seventeen, he went to work as clerk in the general store of Bailey & Company at Madisonville. He was there two years, but it was his association for seven years as a clerk for C. E. Olson & Company that brought him a complete and well rounded knowledge of the hardware business. Knowing the retail hardware trade thoroughly, he was for a year a traveling salesman for the Hart Hardware Company of Louisville, covering Western Kentucky. Then, in 1902, he engaged in business for himself under the firm name of Finley & Plain. After three years he sold his interest to his partner, and in 1905 established his present hardware house at 109 North Main Street. This is the Plain Hardware Company, for some years a partnership, but has been under the sole ownership of Mr. Plain since 1910. The company handles all kinds of hardware, farm implements, vehicles, stoves and ranges, and does a volume of business which entitles it to distinction as probably the largest general hardware house between Owensboro and Paducah.

Mr. Plain is also owner of a comfortable modern home on East Broadway. He was a buyer of Government securities during the war and lent his active influence in other ways to the success of local campaigns. He is a member and elder of the Presbyterian Church, and has served as a member of the City Council.

On March 30, 1905, at St. Charles, Kentucky, Mr. Plain married Miss Ionecell Galloway, daughter of L. B. and Margaret (Woodruff) Galloway. Her mother is still living at St. Charles, where her father died, and he having been a merchant for a number of years. Mrs. Plain is a graduate of West Kentucky College at Hopkinsville. To their marriage were born two children: Nell Morgan, on August 26, 1908; and Margaret, on April 28, 1910.

Sam J. Roberts is a young man who has made for himself a prominent place in connection with banking activities in Trigg County, where he is giving efficient service as cashier of the Bank of Cerulean, one of the substantial and well ordered financial institutions of this progressive section of the Blue Grass State.

Mr. Roberts was born at Tobacoppor, Stewart County, Tennessee, on the 10th of August, 1886, and is a scion of stanch old southern stock, the American progenitors of the Roberts family having come from England and settled in North Carolina in the Colonial period of our national history. In that state Robert Roberts, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born in St. Louis, Kentucky, in 1822, and as a young man he settled at Tobacoppor, Tennessee, where he followed the vocation of mechanic for many years and where he became a substantial and valued citizen. There he remained until his death in 1870. There also was solemnized his marriage to Miss Elizabeth Elliott, who was born in Tennessee, in 1822, and who passed the closing period of her life in the City of Nashville, Tennessee, in her 93rd year, in 1915, leaving her thirteen years of age. Of the surviving children the eldest is Thomas J., who is engaged in the insurance business in the City of Nashville; Allen likewise resides in that city, where he is in the employ of the Government; John H. is engaged in the insurance business in the City of Washington, D. C.; Robert E., a mechanic, is a resident of the City of St. Louis, Missouri; Edward, the second in age, is a clerk in the Post Office, and Manie, who now resides with her brother, Thomas J., is the widow of Jesse Hicks, who was a farmer in Stewart County, Tennessee.

F. S. Roberts, father of him whose name introduces this review, was born at Tobacoppor, Tennessee, in the year 1852, and there his death occurred on the 11th of November, 1917. In that locality he passed a full and eventful life, and he was one of the extensive farmers and substantial citizens of Stewart County at the time of his death. He was a loyal supporter of the principles and policies of the democratic party, maintained affiliation with the Masonic fraternity, and was a zealous and earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as is also his widow, who still resides at Tobacoppor. As mentioned before, Joennell, his eldest daughter, was born at Tobacoppor, Kentucky, March 11, 1871, and the birth having occurred at Tharp, Tennessee, in 1861. Of the children the eldest is George B., who is a progressive exponent of farm industry near the old home town of Tobacoppor; Sam J., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Beulah is the wife of Robert Brandon, a farmer near Tobacoppor; Earl S. is likewise identified as a farmer near Tobacoppor; Irene is the wife of Claude Hamilton, likewise a farmer in that locality; and Billie remains with his widowed mother.

Sam J. Roberts gained his early education in the public schools at Tobacoppor, Tennessee, and in 1905 was graduated from the high school at Bumpus Mills, that state. Thereafter he completed an eighteen months' course in the Bowling Green Business College at Bowling Green, Kentucky, in which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1908. For the ensuing ten years he continued his active alliance with farm industry in his native county, and he then, at Cowan, Tennessee, but in the following year came to Cerulean, Trigg County, Kentucky, where he has served efficiently as cashier of the Bank of Cerulean since February, 1919, further mention of this stanch institution being made on other pages, in the personal sketch of its president, Dr. John G. White. Mr. Roberts has identified himself fully and loyally with the economic welfare of Cerulean and its serving as treasurer of the village. At Limeport, Tennessee, he is affiliated with Limeport Lodge No. 207, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He was a loyal supporter of the various loan drives and other Governmental activities in Trigg County during the American participation in the World War. He and his wife are earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and they are popular factors in the social life of their home community.

June 4, 1913, recorded the marriage of Mr. Roberts to Miss Vira Ross, of Legate, Tennessee, where her widowed mother still resides, her father having been one of the representative farmers of that locality. Mrs. Roberts is a daughter of Melvin and Mary (Bibbs) Ross, and prior to her marriage she had graduated from the high school at Huntingdon, Tennessee, and in 1913 entered the University Department of Agronomy, the field of study which he early selected as a vocation. John T. Stanly, who was born February 28, 1918, and who holds undisputed dominion in the attractive home of his parents.

NORRIS C. MAGRAW, M. D., who is engaged in the practice of his profession at Cadiz, judicial center of Trigg County, has gained secure vantage ground as one of the representative physicians and surgeons of his native county. He was born in Trigg County, Kentucky, on the 28th of February, 1883. In January, 1901, he became engaged in the practice of medicine at Cerulean, and is still a steadfast to his community. He has been a resident of Cadiz since 1912, when he moved from his birthplace. He has been a prominent and successful professional man since then, and has been a devoted supporter of the Democratic party in the county.

In December, 1894, shortly after his graduation from medical college, Doctor Magraw was united in marriage to Miss Letitia Hayes, who was born and reared in Trigg County, where her father was a representative farmer and a member of the Democratic party. Mrs. Magraw is a daughter of John W. and Lucy (Leford) Hayes, both of whom are deceased. Doctor and Mrs. Magraw became the parents of five children, all of whom remain at the parental home except the eldest, Raymond, who entered the military service of his country in October, 1917, and who died of pneumonia at Camp Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky, on March 13, 1918. The fourth of March, his life having been sacrificed to patriotism as fully as were those of the fine young Americans who fell on the battle-scarred fields of France. C. Cottrell is a member of the class of 1923 in the Cadiz High School, as is also Norinne, and Ralph and Paul are grade students in the public schools of Cadiz.

EDWARD WILSON HOLT was born and reared in some of the chief coal producing sections of Pennsylvania, began work in a coal office as soon as he left public school, and mining and the coal business have constituted the chief interest and work of his mature career. Mr. Holt has been a resident of Kentucky for six years, is prominent as a coal operator, being associated with his brother in the ownership and operation of one of the largest coal mines in the state. Mr. Holt was born in Center County, Pennsylvania, June 1, 1876. His paternal ancestors came from England and settled in Pennsylvania in Colonial times. His great-great-grandfather John Holt was a colonel in the Revolutionary Army and was buried in Milesburg, Pennsylvania. The grandfather, Vincent Benton Holt, was a cousin of Governor Curtin of Pennsylvania, and was born at Clearfield City on August 21, 1810, and died May 5, 1883. He spent all his mature career in that section as a lumberman. His wife was Miss Nancy Wilson of Clearfield. She was born October 23, 1815, and died March 13, 1881. Their son, Alfred Holt, was born April 6, 1859, in Clearfield County and lived in that and the adjoining county of Centre all his life. He was a lumberman and farmer and died in Clearfield County December 28, 1878, at the early age of twenty-eight years. He was a modern democrat and a member of the Presbyterian Church.
In Clearfield County he married Elizabeth Ann Briggs, who was born in England in 1856, but was reared in Clearfield County, Pennsylvania. She became the mother of two sons, Edward W. and Benton Briggs, both of whom were very small children when their father died. She afterwards married A. W. Cowder, a retired farmer and lumberman, and is still living in Clearfield County.
Edward Wilson Holt attended the rural schools of Center County until he was about fifteen years of age, when he was taken into the coal office of the Bent-ton Coal Company at Hastings, Pennsylvania. He remained there three years, working and acquiring experience. He then left Pennsylvania and for a year was a cowboy with some of the large cattle outfits operating in the Yellowstone Valley at Montana and Wyoming. One winter he also spent in the copper mines of Butte. Returning to Pennsylvania in 1897,
Mr. Holt was for two years manager of the Ponfeigh Coal Company at Garrett, then managed for six years
the Colonial Coal Company at Hooversville, Pennsylvania. In 1906 he affiliated the Federal Coal Company and the Whitney and Kemmerer interests of Philadelphia at Hooversville. He was financially interested in these mines as well.
Disposing of his Pennsylvania business in 1905, Mr.
Holt came to Central City, Kentucky, and opened the coal mine of the Holt Coal Company. This mine was continued in active production under Mr. Holt until sold in 1920. On October 11, 1921, he and his brother bought the mine of the McHenry Coal Company, located a half mile south of McHenry. This mine has a capacity of a thousand tons of bituminous coke per day, and the services of about 200 men are required for its operation. The Holt brothers are sole owners.
Edward W. Holt is president of the Western Kentucky Coal Companies Association, an organization for mutual benefit representing the larger part of the producing companies in Western Kentucky. Mr. Holt is also a stockholder and vice president in the First National Bank of Central City, where he resides. He and his brother own a farm of 500 acres a mile south of McHenry and he and his brother are joint owners of the town of McHenry. His brother, Mr. J. A. Holt, has a modern home on Center Street in Central City.
During the World war he was chairman of the Red Cross drive for one half of Muhlenberg County and threw the full influence of his moral and financial support to every campaign to help win the war. Mr. Holt is a republican in politics, is a trustee of the Methodist Eiscopal Church South, and is affiliated with Mos-hannon Lodge No. 301 F. and A. M., at Phillipsburg, Pennsylvania.
At Phillipsburg in 1906 he married Miss Mary C.
Childs, daughter of James Bingham and Margaret (Brown) Childs now deceased.
Benton Briggs Holt, younger brother of Edward Wilson Holt, is also a resident of Central City and like his brother is a northern Pennsylvania boy by birth.
He married Miss Bessie Woodburn of Central City, and they have two children, Elizabeth, born in 1912, and Benton, born in 1915.

James M. Turner is giving a most effective and popular administration in the office of postmaster of Cadiz, judicial center of Trigg County, to which position he was appointed on the 4th of July, 1914. Mr.
Turner is a popular representative of one of the old and honored families of Trigg County and was born on the fine homestead farm of his father, near Ceru-lean Springs, on the 20th of December, 1884. In the same locality his father, John J. Turner, was born in the year 1850, and in that section of the county the latter passed his entire life, his death having occurred April 4, 1893. He became the owner of a large and valuable landed estate in his native county, and was a progressive and successful exponent of agricultural and live stock industry throughout his entire active career.
He was a loyal advocate and supporter of the cause of the democratic party, gave valiant service as a soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war, during virtually the entire period of which he was in active service, and was a life member of the Primitive Baptist Church.
As a young man John J. Turner married Miss Martha E. Atwood, who was born near Canton, Trigg County, in 1840, a representative of another of the sterling pioneer families of this section of Kentucky. Mrs. Turner survived her husband more than a quarter of a century, and her death occurred at Cerulean Springs in 1920. Of the couple the first born was William R., who was a retired merchant at Cerulean Springs at the time of his death, when he was fifty-one years of age; T. O. is engaged in the dry-goods business at Cadiz, as one of the leading merchants of Trigg County; Leah is the wife of C. K. Warren, a merchant at Cerulean Springs; Martha is the wife of J. L. Blakely, a prosperous farmer in the Cerulean Springs section; and Susan, who died in 1917, was a life member of the local Relief Society of the Primitive Baptist Church.

Robert Turner, grandfather of the postmaster at Cadiz, was born in Virginia in 1808, and became one of the pioneer settlers and representative agriculturists in the vicinity of Cerulean Springs, Trigg County, Kentucky, where his death occurred in 1888. He long served as a justice of the peace, and was widely and familiarly known as 'Squire Bob Turner. His wife, whose maiden name was Leaha Goodwin, was a member of another of the influential pioneer families of the Cerulean Springs district.

The public schools of Cerulean Springs afforded to James M. Turner his early educational training, and under the effective preceptorship of Professor Benjamin E. Thom he received the virtual equivalent of a high school course. He continued his studies until he was eighteen, when he was apprenticed to learn the clothier business, after which he was employed as a clerk in mercantile establishments at Cerulean Springs. In 1913 he took a clerical position in a grocery store at Cadiz, but on the 4th of July of the following year was appointed postmaster of this fine little city. His efficiency in office needs no further voucher than the fact that at the expiration of his first term he was reappointed, on the 3d of October, 1918, for a second term of four years. He has been an active and loyal worker in the ranks of the democratic party in his native county, and he served six years as clerk of the Village Council of Cerulean Springs. He is affiliated with Cadiz Lodge No. 121, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Their home, 428 Main Street, is one of the modern residence properties of Cadiz, and is a center of generous and most entertaining hospitality. Mr. Turner was vigorous and influential in supporting the various war activities in Trigg County during the period of the nation's participation in the World war, and did much to further the success of the local drives for subscriptions to the Government loan.

At Hopkinsville, Christian County, in the year 1910, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Turner to Miss Anna Rawls, daughter of William G. and Corna (Mc-Connell) Rawls, of Cerulean Springs, where Mrs.
Rawls is a retired merchant. Mrs. Turner was graduated in the Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green and prior to her marriage had been a successful and popular teacher in the schools of Trigg and Christian counties. Mr. and Mrs. Turner became the parents of two children, of whom the younger, James Minos, died at the age of three years. The surviving child, Anna Garvin, was born October 16, 1911, and is now attending the public schools of Cadiz.

CHARLES M. ECKLER, M. D., has been one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Grant County for thirteen years, with home at Williamsport. He is member of an old and honored Grant County family, grew up in a rural district, and from his earnings as a railroad clerk gained the funds which enabled him to complete his medical education, and the energy and self reliance that carried him through those early years have been important factors in his professional success.

His great-grandfather was a native of Virginia, and one of the pioneer settlers of Harrison County, Kentucky, and he lived out his life as a farmer. The grandfather, Jacob Eckler, was born in Harrison County and as a young man removed to Grant County, where he married and where he followed farming in the Dry Ridge community. He married a Miss Byers, a native of Harrison County, who also died in Grant County. Their son, Francis M. Eckler, was born near Dry Ridge in 1839 and he lived and died on part of his father's home farm, and his brother, Charles M. Elder, is also living on the old farm.

Francis M. Eckler married Ann Elizabeth Harrison, who was born near Heckin in Grant County in 1839 and died at the old home farm in August, 1916. Her children were: William Jacob, owner and operator of the homestead farm; Perry, who died in infancy; Edward W., a farmer 2 miles northwest of the home; Minos, who practiced medicine at the old Miami Medical College of Ohio in 1901, and practiced until his death at Falmouth in October, 1918, at the age of thirteen-nine.

Charles M. Eckler, the fifth and youngest of the family, was born on the farm near Dry Ridge March 31, 1880, and in that environment he spent the years until he reached manhood. He attended country schools and the Williamsport High School until he was eighteen years of age and for two years in the county district. During 1900 he took a course in Bartlett's Business College, now the Miller Business College, of Cincinnati, and following that was a clerk in the office of the master mechanic of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad at Covington until 1905. With a portion of his earnings and savings he entered the medical school of the University of Louisville, and graduated M. D., June 20, 1906. In October following his graduation he located at Williamsport, and has since practiced both medicine and surgery. His offices are in the Webb Building, and he owns one of the most complete and modern homes of the city, on Main Street.

Doctor Eckler has been a member for twelve years and for seven years secretary and treasurer of the Grant County Medical Society, and since beginning practice has also been affiliated with the Kentucky State and American Medical Associations. As one of the public spirited men of the community he was of course actively identified with the war program of Williamsport. For three consecutive years, 1917, 1918, 1919, he was master of Grant Lodge No. 85, F. & A. M., a member of Houser Chapter No. 116, R. A. M., at Falmouth, Indra Consistory No. 2, of the Scottish Rite at Covington, and also the Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Covington. He is a member of Centurion Lodge No. 100, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Doctor Eckler is a republican. He has been local surgeon for the C. N. O. & T. P. Railway Company since April, 1920.

On June 3, 1913, at Covington, he married Miss Nora Eloise Conrad, daughter of Clay and Mary Elizabeth (Webb) Conrad, residents of Williamsport. Her father is a retired farmer and for many years has been a prominent figure in the democratic party of the county, being a former county judge and former Circuit Court clerk. Mrs. Eckler, who is a graduate of the Williamsport High School, became the mother of three children: Minos, Elizabeth, born August 7, 1916; Charles William, who died at the age of four months; and James Connor, who died when two months old.

JAMES J. BACKUS, M. D., is successfully established in the practice of his profession as one of the able and representative physicians and surgeons of Christian County, where he maintains his residence and professional headquarters in the village of Gracey. In this section of the county he controls a large practice that vouches alike for his technical ability and his secure hold upon popularity.

Dr. James Jackson Backus was born in Norfolk County, Province of Ontario, Canada, on the 24th of July, 1856, and that the family had long been established in that attractive section of the Dominion of Canada is attested by the fact that the Doctor's father, Edward M. Backus, was born in the same county in 1820. The father attained to venerable age and was living in the City of Chicago, Illinois, at the time of his death in 1900. Dr. Charles Backus, who passed his entire life in Norfolk County, Ontario, where he died about the year 1890, his entire active career having been marked by effective association with farm industry. The original American representatives of the Backus family came from England and settled in Ontario, Canada, in the pioneer period of its history, the family name having been long and wisely identified with the annals of Norfolk County. Edward M. Backus was raised on a farm and educated in his native county, where he became a successful farmer and where also he owned and operated a grist mill. In 1864 he removed with his family to Lagro, Indiana, where he engaged in the lumber and live-stock business and where he remained until 1890, when he removed to Versailles, Ohio, and became a dealer in poultry. About the year 1870 he engaged in the produce commission business at Logansport, Indiana, where he remained for a number of years until his retirement at a resident of his old home county in Canada, and after his return to Indiana he followed the milling and mercantile business until 1885, when he came to Kentucky and turned his attention to farm enterprise near the City of Bowling Green. After the death of his wife he retired from active business, and his death occurred in the City of Chicago, as previously noted. He was a devoted patriot, and both he and his wife were zealous members of the Christian Church. Mrs. Backus, whose maiden name was Violette Contryman, was born in Norfolk County, Ontario, Canada, in 1836, and her death occurred on the home farm near Bowling Green, Kentucky, in the year 1901. Of the children the eldest is Abram Contryman Backus, who is a director and the manager of a leading pressed steel corporation in the City of St. Louis, Missouri; William is engaged in the marble and granite business at Bowling Green, Kentucky; Edward M., a retired capitalist, died in the State of Florida, on the 15th of June, 1920; Dr. James J. of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; and Frank, a skilled bookkeeper and accountant, resides in the State of Texas.

Dr. James J. Backus gained his early education in the public schools of Ontario, Canada, and the states of Indiana and Ohio. After the removal of the family to the vicinity of Bowling Green, Kentucky, he began reading medicine under the effective preceptorship of Dr. William H. Blakeley, a leading physician and surgeon of Bowling Green, and during the winter of 1883-4 he was a student in the Chicago Homeopathic Medical College, in which institution he later continued his studies until his graduation and his reception of the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1886. In 1886, he was in Kentucky Board of Medical Examiners, received his license and engaged in the practice of his profession at Bowling Green. After his graduation from the medical college he there continued in practice until January, 1887, when he came to Christian County and became the first physician and surgeon to engage in practice in what is now the thriving little village of Gracy, from which headquarters he has developed a large and representative practice that marks him as one of the prominent exponents of medical and surgical science in Christian County. In his home village he owns his attractive residence and office property, as well as other local realty, and also a well improved farm situated four miles northwest of the village.

Doctor Backus is affiliated with the Christian County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is a staunch advocate of the principles of the democratic party, and is one of the most loyal and public-spirited citizens of Gracy, where he has served many years as president of the Village Council, a position of which he is the incumbent at the time of this writing. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and both he and his wife are members of the Baptist Church. The Doctor was especially vital and earnest in supporting Governmental agencies in Christian County during the nation's participation in the World war, and tendered his service as a member of the medical corps of the United States Army, though he was not called into active service by reason of his age. He aided in the furthering of the war drives in support of the various Government loans, and was otherwise influential in war activities in his home county.

On the 19th of May, 1886, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Backus to Miss Margaret E. Blakely, daughter of Jones and Virginia K. (Bryant) Blakely, the former of whom died on his farm near Gracy, and the latter still remains on the old home place. Doctor Backus and Mrs. Backus have four children: Miss Virginia K. remains at the parental home; Sadie K. is the wife of John M. Major, a farmer near Hincksville, Christian County; Margaret Louise is the wife of George M. Major, who is a farmer in Trigg County and who is a brother of John M. Major, mentioned above; and Lowena remains a member of the parental home circle.

David Franklin Ramsey, an ex-service man, is one of the popular young citizens of Madisonville, has been a banker but is now proprietor of one of the leading automobile sales agencies in the city.

Mr. Ramsey was born at Madisonville May 29, 1896. His father was the late Frank D. Ramsey, one of the largest property owners in Hopkins County and who at his death in Madisonville in 1914 left a large estate. He was a prominent lawyer in Kentucky, in 1850, was reared there, but as a young man moved to Hopkins County and bought a farm near Nebo. About 1873 he moved to Madisonville and laid the foundation of his fortune as a tobacco dealer. He was also a large land owner, one of the organizers and directors of the Hopkins County Bank, a director of the Providence Coal Company, and had numerous business interests. He was a democrat, and was a charter member and one of the leading members of the Baptist Church at Madisonville. At Madisonville he married Janie Langley. She was born in Webster County, Kentucky. There were three children. Marie, the oldest, is the wife of Rev. Stuart R. Crockett, a Presbyterian clergyman now in charge of a church at Montreat, North Carolina. James Carr, the second child, is a farmer and lives at Madisonville. David Franklin is the youngest, unmarried and lives with his mother at 370 North Main Street at Madisonville.

Mr. Ramsey graduated from the Madisonville High School in 1915. He also spent a year in the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, and while there had some military discipline that fitted him for active service in the volunteer army. In June, 1916, he joined the Federal troops that were sent to the Mexican border. He was there as a member of the First Kentucky Infantry for nine months. He was mustered out in March, 1917, as battalion sergeant major. On April 12, 1918, he joined the National Army, was sent to Camp Shelby, Mississippi, was commissioned a second lieutenant of infantry, subsequently was at Camp Pike, Arkansas, and finally was a member of the Tank Corps at Camp Polk, North Carolina. He received his honorable discharge December 28, 1918. On returning home Mr. Ramsey became teller of the Hopkins County Bank on March 4, 1919, and performed his duties with that institution until August 20, 1920, and is still one of the bank directors. Since leaving the bank he has been selling automobiles as the authorized agent at Madisonville for the Buick cars and the Samson tractors. He has a well equipped garage and offices on North Main Street and is doing a thriving business. Mr. Ramsey is a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church, and has fraternal affiliations with Madisonville Lodge No. 143, A. F. and A. M., Madisonville Chapter No. 123, R. A. M., Madisonville Commandery No. 27, K. T., Rizpah Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and Madisonville Lodge No. 738 of the Elks. He is one of the large owners of real estate in Madisonville, his properties including seven business buildings besides a number of residences.

Rev. Peter H. Pleune, Numbered among the earnest, scholarly and popular young divines of his denomination, Rev. Peter H. Pleune, is pastor of the Highland Presbyterian Church of Louisville. He was born at Grand Rapids, Michigan, May 17, 1883, a son of Martin C. Pleune, still a resident of Grand Rapids, who was born in Holland in 1850. His widowed mother brought him to the United States in 1866 and located at Grand Rapids, and there Martin C. Pleune was reared and educated, and developed into a successful wood and coal merchant, but is now practically retired from business activities. He has always been a strong advocate of republican principles and candidates. The Reformed Church holds his membership, and he is a very active worker in the church, and has held the offices of both elder and deacon. Martin C. Pleune married Minnie Thomas, who was born in the Netherlands in 1852, and her mother, also a widow, brought her to the United States when she was young, and she grew up at Grand Rapids, Michigan. Their children were as follows: Anthony, who is manager of the Cedar Rapids Gas Company; lives at Cedar Rapids, Iowa: Christine, who married H. J. Spirk, an executive manager of the United States Steel Corporation, at Grand Rapids; Frederick, who is stereotyper for the Evening Press, lives at Grand Rapids; Reverend Peter H.; Grace, who married A. Olman, Jr., a painter and paperhanger of Grand Rapids; and Henry, who lives at Grand Rapids, is secretary to the president of the United Light & Railway Company of Grand Rapids.

Rev. Peter H. Pleune attended the public schools of Grand Rapids until he was fourteen years old, and then began to be self-supporting by becoming an employe for the Baxter Laundry Company of Grand Rapids, with which he remained for four years. All of this time the ambitious lad cherished the determinarion to fit himself for the ministry, and took the first steps when he entered Hope College Preparatory School at Holland, Michigan, and from it he was graduated in 1905. He then became a student of Hope College, and graduated therefrom in 1909 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts.

His theological training was obtained in the New Brunswick Theological Seminary at New Brunswick, New Jersey, from which he was graduated in 1912 with the degree of Master of Arts. In 1913, 1914 and 1915 Reverend Pleune took post-graduate work in the Union Theological Seminary at New York City.

In the meanwhile, in 1912, he became pastor of the Church of the Comforter in New York City, and remained there until 1916, when he was transferred to the Presbyterian Church at Paducah. In October, 1919, he moved to the picked winds of the Highland Presbyterian Church. The church is located at the corner of Cherokee Road and Highland Avenue. This is one of the leading Presbyterian Churches not only of Louisville but of the state and has a membership of 890.

Mr. Pleune is a man well versed in the doctrines of his creed and an eloquent speaker, and he is also an inspiration for activities of the best kind, and few moral and mental qualities have been so thoroughly incorporated into the moral standard and the betterment of conditions generally are carried to successful completion without his aid being requested. He has always possessed a distinct impulse toward the humanities among the leaders of thought, and is recognized as a man of great influence and dignity. While he is not readily deceived in men or the motives which actuate them, he is so broad in his charity, so liberal in his conception of his fellow man, that he can forgive bountifully, and encourage hopefully, so that he has friends in every rank of life.

Mr. Pleune is a Mason and belongs to Plain City Lodge No. 449, A. F. and A. M. Long a member of the Paducah Rotary Club, he was elected its president for 1920-21.

On June 5, 1912, Mr. Pleune was united in marriage at Gundy Rapids, Michigan, to Miss Louise Margaret Melis, a daughter of John C. and Margaret (Buob) Melis, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Melis was a printer by trade and for some years a resident of Grand Rapids. Mrs. Pleune attended the public schools of Grand Rapids, and was graduated from its high school course. She is a lady of charming personality, thoroughly in sympathy with her husband's work. Their little daughter, Louise Margaret, was born on January 4, 1918.

JOHN GRIZZLE YOUNG, M. D. Nine years of effort to maintain the health of a large part of the population of Kiddville has drawn the career of Dr. John Grizzle Young within the fold of a large and emphatic need, giving him an increasing outlet for a wealth of professional and general usefulness. He was born in Lawrence County, Kentucky, November 23, 1874, a son of William and Sina (Grizzle) Young, and a grandson of John W. and Mahala (Kelcey) Young.

Jesse Young, the great-grandfather of Doctor Young came from Virginia to Kentucky about the year 1803 and settled in Lawrence County, his old home being still in the family name as the property of the widow of Thomas Young. John W. Young bought and patented a tract of 3000 acres of good land on Irish Creek, thus laying the foundation for what is now being called the Young farm, ranging in acreage from 250 to 300 acres each. A leader in his community he was a justice of the peace for twenty-four years, and was one of the organizers of the Irish Creek United Baptist Church, in the faith of which he died at the age of seventy-five years. Like his honored father William Young devoted his career to agricultural operations on the same tract of land. The year before he died he sold this and bought land in Greenup County where he died at the age of fifty-two years, his widow still surviving him being a resident of Greenup County and aged sixty-eight years. Of their twelve children, nine grew to maturity and eight are living at this time. Dr. John G.; Rufus B., a resident of Greenup County; Della, the wife of Richard Griffith, of Huntington, West Virginia; James Monroe, a mechanic of Portsmouth, Ohio; Mahala, who died at the age of twenty years; Anna, the wife of Robert Wheeler, an agriculturist of Greenup County; Ulysses S., resident of Portsmouth, Ohio; Fairet E., also a resident of Portsmouth, Ohio; and Nola, who is unmarried.

John Grizzle Young remained on the home farm until he was twenty-six years of age, at which time he began teaching in the rural schools in the vicinity of the home. In the meantime he attended the Blaine Normal School, where he quickly completed a medical course at the age of twenty-seven years at the Kentucky School of Medicine, Louisville. Graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1906, he started practice June 30 of that year in Greenup County, following which he went to Morgan County. In 1912 he came to Clark County and opened an office at Kidville, where he has built up a splendid practice. Young has been deservedly successful, and is a necessary adjunct of many of the finest households in this part of the county. Doctor Young belongs to the Clark County Medical Society, of which he was formerly president, and the Kentucky State Medical Society. He is interested as an agriculturist in general farming and tobacco and corn growing on his well-cultivated farm at Kidville, and has other interests.

On December 25, 1906, Doctor Young was united in marriage in Lawrence County, with Mahala Carter, and to this union there have been born two children: Erie, born in 1909; and Loomis, born in 1911. Doctor and Mrs. Young are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Indian Fields, 1 1/2 miles from their home. He is ex-worship master of W. H. Cunningham Lodge No. 572, at Schollsville, which he has represented in the Grand Lodge. Particularly, he is a man of rare discretion, tact and helpfulness, an earnest and painstaking exponent of the best tenets of medical science, and an indefatigable seeker after those things which produce health and therefore happiness to the human race.

LEO M. SEWELL. The younger generation of successful business men and competent public officials of Clinton County, is well and honorably represented by Leo M. Sewell, who has been postmaster at Albany for three years and who also conducts a thriving mercantile business. In the conduct of his establishment Mr. Sewell has shown himself enterprising and progressive, and in the discharge of his official duties has displayed a conscientious endeavor to give the public the maximum service, all of which tends to give him an excellent standing in the respect and confidence of his fellow-citizens.

Mr. Sewell was born at Livingston, Overton County, Tennessee, January 24, 1895, a son of John Albert and Bettie (Nivens) Sewell. His grandfather, Rev. Isaac Sewell, was born in 1822, in Jackson County, Tennessee, where he followed farming and was a clergyman of the Baptist Church. He likewise was a resident of Overton County for some years, and late in life moved to Texas, where his death occurred in 1907. Rev. Mr. Sewell fought as a soldier of the Confederacy during the war between the states. He married a Miss Morgan, who was born in 1857 in Putnam County, Tennessee, and died in Texas in 1905.

John Albert Sewell, father of Leo M. Sewell, was born in 1856, in Jackson County, Tennessee, and was reared and educated in that county, but as a young man went to Clay County, that state, where he was married. He was a sawmill owner and operator there for about ten years, following which he removed to Overton County and continued to follow the same line of business. He is now one of the successful sawmill operators. of his locality and also owns and operates a flour and grist mill. Mr. Sewell has always been a man of industry and his good management of his affairs has resulted in the accumulation of a gratifying property. In politics he is a republican, but his interest in political matters is confined to that taken by every good citizen. As a lifelong member of the Baptist Church he has been active in its work and liberal in the support of its missionary work.Personally, he is affiliated with the Masonic order.

Mr. Sewell married Miss Bettie Nixens, who was born in 1866, in Clay County, Tennessee, and they are the parents of seven children: Etta, who married James Davidson, a farmer of Gainsboro, Tennessee; Hassell, a farmer and sawmill operator of Byrdstown, Pickett County, Tennessee; Arnold; Isaac Thomas; Leo M.; James Morgan; and R. Jones, who resides in Crawford, Tennessee. Of these children, three of the sons saw service in the fighting forces of the United States. Arnold Sewell, who was in the United States Army for eight years, and had the rank of first lieutenant, was stationed at Atlanta, Georgia, as an instructor during the World War. He is now a conductor on trains running from Jacksonville, Florida, to Washington, D.C., and is a member of the railroad service. Isaac Thomas Sewell was a member of the famous Buckeye Division of the American Expeditionary Forces and spent ten months at the front in France, during which time he participated in five of the major battles and a number of the minor engagements. He now resides with his parents and is employed as a mechanic at Monroe, Tennessee. James Morgan Sewell enlisted in the United States Navy during the World War and made several voyages across the ocean on transports conveying soldiers to the battle areas. As stenographer to the captain of the vessel it was his duty to post news for the soldiers on board ship. Since his discharge he has resided with his parents at Monroe, Tennessee, and is employed as a mechanic.

Leo M. Sewell acquired his education in the rural schools of Overton County, Tennessee, and the public school at Albany, and in 1915 put aside his studies to become a salesman in a general store at Albany. He continued to be thus engaged until October, 1918, when he was appointed by President Wilson as postmaster of Albany, a position which he has since occupied. His conduct of the postoffice has been satisfactory in every particular and his intelligent handling of affairs has resulted in putting the mail service at Albany on a higher plane, much to the gratification of the citizens of the community. At about the time of his appointment to the postmastership, Mr. Sewell established himself in commercial affairs as the proprietor of a mercantile establishment, which he has built up to generous proportions, his store being located on the south side of the Public Square.

In political matters Mr. Sewell is a democrat. He is a member of the Christian Church, in the work of which he is active, having served for some time, as at present, as secretary and treasurer of the Sunday school. Fraternally, he is affiliated with Albany Lodge No. 206, F. & A. M. During the World War period he interested himself actively in every movement inaugurated for the assistance of the soldiers and sailors, serving on committees and subscribing liberally to funds, and was also manager of the drive that resulted in every soldier from Clifton County receiving a generous package from home, Christmas, 1918. Mr. Sewell is unmarried and makes his home at the Smith Hotel.

Frank J. Conly. For more than a century some of the men who have attained to prominence in statesmanship, the professions, commerce or industry, have had a debt of honor in the field of school-teaching, and found that the discipline they were necessarily forced to exert over themselves in order to control their pupils, and the contact with human nature, in the making, were of inestimable value to them in after life. Johnson County has its full quota of these representative men, who, after having won popular approval in the schoolroom, have become equally valuable in other lines, and among them it is but just to mention in this connection Frank J. Conly, manager of the Paintsville Fork of the Little Lick Fork of Jennie's Creek. He is, however, one of the well-known educators of this region.

Frank J. Conly was born at Paintsville, December 17, 1882, a son of James Hayden and Ellen (Rice) Conly, both of whom belonged to old and representative families of Johnson County. James H. Conly was born at Hagerhill, Johnson County, in June, 1839, and died in 1913. He was a son of John Conly, also a native of Hagerhill, Johnson County, and the first representative of his name in Johnson County. He was a strong democrat, and was a member of the militia, and was a Southern sympathizer. He owned a farm on the Rockhouse Fork of Paint Creek, near Paintsville, and he was also noted as an instructor, for thirteen years being one of the leading educators of the county. One of the oldest Masons in Johnson County at the time of his death, he was zealous in behalf of his cause and always maintained membership with the lodge at Paintsville. He was one of the organizers of the Farmers Alliance in Johnson County. In politics he was always a democrat. His wife was a daughter of William Rice, and she was born on Jennie's Creek. She is now over eighty years of age, and lives on the old Rockhouse homestead. Of the ten children born to James H. Conly and his wife, all are now living, and the youngest is now thirty-two years of age. They are as follows: Louisa, who is the wife of John Reynolds, lives on Barnett Creek in Johnson County; Millard V., who is a farmer on Big Paint Creek near Paintsville; John C., who is a farmer living on Little Lick fork of Jennie's Creek; Sola, who is the wife of William Trumble, lives on Upper Barnett Creek near Oil Spring; Lindsey S., who is a resident of Paintsville; C. F., who is living on a portion of the old Rockhouse homestead; Carrye, who is married and is a member of the Church of Christ; Genoa, who is the wife of Alonzo Conly, a farmer of Rockhouse; Frank J., whose name heads this review; Virgia Lee, who is the wife of Ray Turner, assistant cashier of the Paintsville Bank & Trust Company.

Frank J. Conly received his early educational training in the public schools of Paintsville, later becoming a student of the Sandy Valley Seminary, and completed his education in the State Normal School at Bowling Green, Kentucky. For four years he was principal of the Van Leer graded school, and then for one year was a substitute at the Sandy Valley Seminary. Going to Oklahoma he was for one year in charge of the commercial department of the Ada High School, and then returned to Paintsville. For a time he was engaged in teaching two rural schools at Boones Camp. It was then that he left the educational field to become a clerk in the employ of the Northeast Coal Company at Thelaka, later becoming a member of the office force of this company. In 1919 he accepted his present position, he, with others of his old associates in the Northeast Coal Company being the owners of this concern. In 1917 Mr. Conly ran on the democratic ticket for the office of county superintendent, and was defeated by less than 100 votes, which testifies to his strong personal popularity as this county has a majority of 2,000 republican votes.
In 1911 Mr. Conly was married to Clara Mollett, a daughter of John R. Mollett, and they have four daughters, namely: Alice Vivian, Frances Ellen, Ruby Virginia, and Joanna. Mrs. Conly was born at Boones Camp. Her father was a son of John R. Mollett, the second Baptist preacher in Kentucky. The Mollett family is an old one in the Big Sandy Valley. The family was founded in America by Noah Mollett who was an English soldier sent to the colonies during the American Revolution. So impressed did he become with the justice of the American cause that he left the English forces and joined the Colonial Army, and after the war was over, settled in the land for whose liberty he had fought. With other Revolutionary soldiers he was given a grant of land, the patent to which bears the signature of James Monroe, then governor of Virginia, but subsequently President of the United States. This land was located in what later became West Virginia. From Montgomery County that state, the Mollett family later migrated to Eastern Kentucky, some of its members settling on Rockcastle Creek in Martin County, and others on Grassy Creek in Johnson County. It is to the latter that Mrs. Conly belongs. Both Mr. and Mrs. Conly are earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Conly is a Mason. They are fine people, and have gathered about them a congenial circle of warm personal friends. Mr. Conly has never lost his interest in educational matters and is always striving to raise the educational standards and stimulate public interest in public improvements for the betterment of the schools. Having cultivated his intellectual faculties beyond the average, he is able to take a broad outlook on life and to mould the present and future phases of public affairs. His fellow citizens appreciate this and look to him for advice on many matters, and feel for him a respect which is shown in numerous ways.

Ora Lee Roby. Trained faculties and an enlightened understanding, in these modern days, contribute materially to individual success, and more and more is the world at large asking for educated men not only for the accepted professions, but also for those along agricultural lines and in the field of public life. The trained thinker is demanded for the deciding of public questions, which, while they may be perplexing to the general public, must be clear to the lawmaker. Thus it is seen that the work of the educator is becoming increasingly and that only men of sound ability should be placed in positions where they are called upon to accept the responsibility for the education of the youth of our land. In Ora Lee Roby, Bullitt County has a County Superintendent of Schools whose long experience, thorough training and natural abilities qualify him thoroughly for the discharge of the duties of his position and in support of this statement is given the evidence of the elevated standards and increased efficiency of the school system in the county during his regime.

Mr. Roby was born on a farm in Bullitt County, Kentucky, September 15, 1881, a son of William J. and Joan (Hibbs) Roby, natives of the same county. His paternal grandfather was William Roby, who was born in Virginia, while his maternal grandparents were Isaac C. and Annie Elizabeth (Goldsmith) Hibbs, natives of Kentucky. William J. Roby was a farmer during his earlier years, but eventually disposed of his property and turned his attention to salesmanship, in which he spent the closing period of his life. Mr. Roby was perhaps the best known and most beloved of Elizabethtown, Kentucky. She and her husband were the parents of two sons and one daughter.

The eldest of his parents' children, Ora Lee Roby was reared on farms in Kentucky and Missouri in his boyhood, and his education was acquired in the rural and town schools, several normal schools and a Baptist Co-Educational College, at Bardstown, Kentucky. After leaving the latter, at the age of twenty-four years, he adopted the profession of teaching, and has been engaged in educational work every since. Mr. Roby served his apprenticeship in the rural districts of this state, but after his probationary period was over, his abilities were recognized and his appointments became more important in character. Eventually, in 1911, he was elected to the office of County Superintendent of Schools of Bullitt County, a post which he has since filled to the entire satisfaction of the people of this locality. He is earnest, enthusiastic and energetic in his methods, practical in his aims and successful in the application of his principles. In his work he is able to develop the abilities of the rural-workers, the teachers, and this spirit of helpfulness has done much to raise the standards and to advance the general system. Mr. Roby is a democrat in his political views, is a Master Mason fraternally, and in his religious connection belongs to the Baptist denomination. Since locating at Shepherdstown he has made and retained numerous warm friendships.

James M. Withrow has for many years lived on a farm near Spring Station in Woodford County. His farm and home, his family relationship as well, as his personal character, are all matters of more than ordinary interest to those who appreciate the substantial qualities in the old time Kentucky citizenship.

The Withrow residence is half a mile back from the pike, and stands on what was once the site of an old Indian stockade. The location of this pioneer place of protection is permanently identified by a fine spring, excavated out of solid rock to a depth of thirty feet with steps leading down from the grade to the spring. While the practical value of the spring is no longer regarded, it is a place of much curious interest to the historically minded.

Mr. Withrow was born at Frankfort, Kentucky, November 26, 1849. His father John S. Withrow was a native of Pennsylvania. There were three brothers one of whom went West, one to Virginia and John S. Withrow went with his parents to Kentucky. He was a child when his parents moved to Harrodsville, Kentucky. He secured his early business training in Frankfort, where for a time he was a partner with Jacob Swigart. About 1850 he moved to Woodford County, and prior to the Civil war located on the farm now occupied by James M. Withrow. John S. Withrow married Catherine McKeel of a noted family of that name whose record is given in some detail on other pages of this publication. She inherited the present Withrow farm and most of her life was spent in Woodford County. For a number of years they lived on the old Blackburn farm of 479 acres, and later moved to a farm near Midway, another part of her share in the McKeel estate. Mrs. John S. Withrow died in 1880, survived by her husband about twenty years. They reared three sons and two daughters: James M.; Lillie, wife of Dr. J. C. Hughes, dean of the Keokuk Medical College of Keokuk, Iowa, and President of the Iowa Medical College; and Mary, who became the wife of Luther Eastin and both died at Lexington; and John, who died in young manhood while on the old farm near Midway. He married Miss Ernie America Davis, who is also deceased, leaving one son, John Eastin Withrow.

James M. Withrow grew up in Woodford County, and the greater part of his life has been spent on his present farm. He married Maude Davis, of Woodford County, and their one child is Catherine McKee, a student in high school.

Mrs. Withrow is a granddaughter of Samuel Cassell, who was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, March 7, 1814, son of John and Hester Cassell. Samuel Cassell, a pioneer in the Middle West, operated the first steam mill at Lexington, and later erected a steam mill on his farm five miles south of Lexington. Samuel Cassell in 1838 married Sally Bryan of Jessamine County, daughter of Withrowia and Margaret Bly, native Kembuckians. Her father was a soldier in the War of 1812 and was with General Dulphy at his defeat at Fort Meigs, Ohio. William T. Bryan, who died September 6, 1852, was a member of the Providence Christian College in Jessamine County. The mother of Mrs. Withrow was one of the first students in Hamilton College at Lexington. Through her mother she had an interesting relationship with the historic Bryan and Oist families of old Kentucky. Her mother, Sally Bryan, was a daughter of Margaret (Gist) Bryan, Margaret being a daughter of William and Mary (Gatewood) Bryan of Virginia. One of the American officers of the battle of Kings Mountain was Ensign Nathaniel Gist. William Bryan was a son of Daniel and Elizabeth (Turner) Bryan and Daniel Bryan’s sister, Rebecca, was the wife of Daniel Body. The history of this Ally is closely associated with the Bryan Station in Kentucky.

Mrs. Withrow’s father was Hillary Oufft Davis. The present Davis home near Midway is possibly the oldest house now standing in Woodford County. It was erected in 1779. One room was known as “Preacher’s Rest.” It was called Locust Grove for many years, but all the trees that furnished the title have disappeared. Another feature of the homestead was “Lovers’ Retreat,” a seat between two immense trees. The estate altogether comprised about 4,000 acres. Right of way for the first railroad in the state was donated by John W. Davis, father of Hillary Oufft Davis. It was William Davis, father of John W., who erected the house in 1779.

Hillary Oufft Davis, who died in June, 1886, at the age of forty-five, was born at the old homestead and was married to America Gaines, who died when past eighty years of age. Her brother, Edmund Pendleton Gaines, was born in Virginia in 1779 and was made a major general in 1814 at Fort Erie. He was in the Regular Army until his death in 1840, and had the distinction of capturing Aaron Burr at Fort Stoddard on Tombigbee River.

Leslie M. Vance was born on the old homestead farm of his father on Green River, in the western part of Green County, the date of his nativity having been January 3, 1870. His father, E. L. Vance, who resides in the vicinity of Eve, this county, was born in that district in 1856, and has resided continuously on the old homestead farm which was the place of his birth. He has long been one of the progressive and successful exponents of farm enterprise in his native county, is a republican in political allegiance, is well read and public spirited, and commands unqualified popular esteem, and is a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. As a young man E. L. Vance wedded Miss Nannie A. Cantrell, who was born near Holly Grove Church, Green County, and who died on the old Vance homestead farm at Eve on May 17, 1887, the subject of this sketch being the eldest of the children of this union; William E. is in the railway mail service and resides at Elizabethtown, Hardin County; Minnie L. is the wife of John Womack, a farmer near Mason City, Illinois; Mattie L. is the wife of A. S. Cole, who is engaged in the real estate and insurance business at Campbellsville, Kentucky; Hattie, who died at the age of thirty years, was the wife of Sylvester Lamar, who now resides at Campbellsville, who has given his life to farming since his retirement from the internal revenue service in Kentucky.

For his second wife E. L. Vance wedded Miss Ada McBubbin, who was born in the vicinity of Eve, Green County, in 1861. Of this union there have been born the following children: Offie is a merchant and farmer at Eve; Mary Alba is the wife of Leslie Scott, a prominent Green County farmer; Charles is a substantial farmer near Powder Mills, Hart County; George is similarly engaged in the vicinity of Lobb, Green County; Muriel is the wife of William Close, a farmer near Lobb; Lulu is the wife of Roscoe Ragg, a farmer near Eve; and Ruby, Sanford, Odell and Leo remain at the parental home.

After having profited by all the advantages offered in the rural schools of his native county Leslie M. Vance continued his studies in East Lynn College at Buffalo, Larue County, in which institution he completed in 1886 the work of the senior year. In the meanwhile, at the age of eighteen years, he became a teacher in the rural schools of his home county, and his services as a successful and popular teacher here continued during the years, besides which, he also actively identified with farm enterprise during this period. He still owns one of the well improved and valuable farms of Green County, the same comprising 400 acres and being situated three miles west of Greensburg.

Mr. Vance remained on his farm until 1906, when he entered the United States internal revenue service as a storekeeper and gauger for the Fifth Revenue District of Kentucky. He continued his service seven years, with official headquarters at Greensburg, and in 1913 he was elected cashier of the People’s Bank of Greensburg, of which position he has since continued the popular incumbent. This bank was organized in 1902 and was duly incorporated under the Kentucky banking laws, its operations being based on a capital stock of $40,000, and its deposits now aggregate $100,000. The interest paid on its $300,000 of long-term bonds and undivided profits aggregate $8,000. The banking offices are modern in equipment and facilities, and the institution plays a large part in the furtherance of the general business and industrial prosperity of Green County. H. A. Moss is president of the bank, E. E. Perkins is vice-president, and the assistant cashier is A. B. Perkins.

Mr. Vance is not only one of the representative business men of the capital town of his native county but is also one of its most vital and progressive citizens. He is chairman of the Greensburg Board of Education, is a republican in political allegiance, and he and his wife held membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the local church of which he was a member for several years as superintendent of the Sunday School. Mr. Vance was affiliated with and is a past master of Greensburg Lodge No. 154, Free and Accepted Masons, and is a member also of Greensburg Chapter No. 36, Royal Arch Masons; Marion Commandery No. 21, Knights Templars, at Lebanon; Greensburg Chapter No. 232, Order of the Eastern Star of which he is past patron; and Kosair Temple Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Louisville. He is affiliated also with Greensburg Camp No. 560, Woodmen of the World.

Aside from his alliance with the bank and with farm enterprise Mr. Vance is president of the Greensburg Loose Leaf Tobacco Warehouse Company and president of the Green County Progressive League. His home, with a modern house and attractive grounds, is situated on North Cross Street, and in addition to this he is the owner of other valuable realty in Greensburg.

The war activities of Green County gained much from the loyal and energetic service rendered by Mr. Vance, who was chairman for the county in all of the drives for subscriptions to the Government loans, and he played a big part in causing the county to go over the top in finding more than designated quota in each of these drives, in connection with which he himself gave subscriptions to the full limit of financial consistency.

On March 27, 1899, in the City of Nashville, Tenness-see, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Vance to Miss Mattie R. McCubbin, daughter of the late John P. L. and Mary (Heiser) McCubbin, who were honored citizens of Green County, where Mr. McCubbin was a successful farmer for many years, and prior to his death, Mrs. Vance was afforded excellent educational advantages, including those of the Young Ladies Institute at Cammer, Hart County, and she is a popular leader in the social activities of her home community. Mr. and Mrs. Vance have six children: Nannie M., who was born March 12, 1902, was graduated from the Greensburg High School as a member of the class of 1920, Miss L. E. 1921, and Ray and Mary, born June 24, 1926, are students in the Kentucky College for Women, Danville, Kentucky, the former being a member of the class of 1922 and the latter being in her freshman year; Elizabeth, born June 9, 1912, and Cora Frances, born October 28, 1914, are attending the public schools; and William, the youngest of the children, was born May 31, 1918.

Vincent Monroe Williamson has long been a prominent figure in the business, public and political affairs of Christian County. He represents the county in the Legislature, and has a large and prosperous business at Hopkinsville.

Mr. Williamson is of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and his forefathers were Colonial settlers from Ireland. His grandfather, John Thomas Williamson, was born in the State of Illinois, and about 1832 came to Christian County, Kentucky. He lived a few years as a farmer in this county, but later went back to Illinois, where he died. He married Nancy Wood, who was a native of Christian County, Kentucky.

Their son W. T. Williamson was born in Illinois September 5, 1844, and was about eight years of age when his parents came to Christian County, where he was reared and married, and where in mature years he achieved much success and prominence as a farmer and citizen. In 1888 he moved to Hopkinsville, and in 1891 was elected county jailor, beginning his term in January, 1892 and filling that office for seven years, having been re-elected in 1895. In that year he was also elected a member of the Official Court, and began a four-year term in 1896. He had established a livery business at Hopkinsville in 1886, and gave it his personal management until 1917. For a number of years he lived retired, and he died at Hopkinsville August 9, 1917. He was a republican in politics, was a very liberal supporting member of the Baptist Church, was a director in the Bank of Hopkinsville, and a director in the Acme Milling and Elevator Company. When the Civil war came on he joined the Confederate Army, at first in the Third Kentucky Cavalry and later with the Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry. He fought at Shiloh, Chickamauga, Perryville, Gettysburg and many other battles of the war.

W. T. Williamson married Adelia Renshaw, who was born in Christian County in 1847 and died at Hopkinsville in 1897. They were the parents of seven children: Deby, who is the wife of James M. Davenport, a retired merchant of Hopkinsville; H. R., in the garage and automobile business at Colbert, Oklahoma; J. B., farmer of Christian County; Ellen, whose first husband was Mack Perkins, who had a transfer business at Hopkinsville, and she is now the wife of J. P. Watson, connected with the Keach Furniture Company of Hopkinsville; Vincent Monroe is the fifth in age; W. E. Williamson is a farmer of Christian County; and James A., the youngest, is in the automobile business at Hopkinsville.

Vincent Monroe Williamson attended the rural schools of Christian County, also the city schools of Hopkinsville, and in 1891 graduated from J. O. Ferrall's High School in that city. For two years after completing his education he was deputy sheriff, spent one year in a grocery store, and then for a time had an interesting western experience, including life as a cowboy in Indian Territory. Returning to Hopkinsville, Mr. Williamson on January 30, 1899, bought and enlarged a transfer business with limited capital and facilities but has seen it prosper and enlarge under his direction until it is now the largest transfer business in Christian County. The barns and offices are at 116-117 West Seventh Street. For many years he has done a large business in selling horses and mules. He has invested much capital in real estate, and formerly owned a number of dwellings in Hopkinsville, but sold them all during 1919 except his modern home, one of the best in the city, at 712 South Virginia Street.

Mr. Williamson is one of the prominent leaders in the republican party of Western Kentucky. For two years, in 1907-08, he was chairman of the Republican County Executive Committee and from 1909 to 1914 was postmaster of Hopkinsville, during the administration of President Taft. In 1912 he again became chairman of the Republican County Committee. In November, 1919, he was elected a member of the Legislature to represent the Fourteenth District of Christian County, and was one of the influential men in that body during the 1920 session. He was chairman of the suffrage and election committee, member of the committee on rules and other committees. While in the Legislature he introduced the Jeff Davis Memorial Park Bill, for the purpose of establishing a park at the birthplace of the president of the Southern Confederacy near Hopkinsville. This bill was passed. He also introduced the Williamson Bill, providing a tax of 60 cents on 100 pounds of tobacco, designed to keep the tobacco crop in Kentucky for manufacture so that this state could have the benefits of the manufacturing tax instead of going to other states. Mr. Williamson put up a great fight for this bill and it passed the House.

Mr. Williamson is a member of the Christian Church, Hopkinsville Lodge No. 37, A. F. and A. M., Hopkinsville Lodge No. 545 of the Elks, Blackwell Lodge No. 57 of the Knights of Pythias, Rosewood Camp No. 22, Woodmen of the World.

In Hopkinsville April 27, 1897, he married Miss Lillian Henderson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. M
Henderson, now deceased. Her father was a Todd County farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Williamson have two children: Thelma and Douglas E. The son attends the public schools of Hopkinsville, while the daughter finished her education in Georgetown College at Georgetown, Kentucky.

CYRUS M. WILLIAMSON, a popular young business man of Hopkinsville, an ex-service man who was wounded in France, is proprietor of the Sudden Service Station, one of the largest in the city. He was born in Hopkinsville August 20, 1895. His father was the late William Thomas Williamson, a prominent citizen of Hopkinsville, who died August 9, 1916. He was three times married, and a son of his first marriage is Vincent Monroe Williamson, a Christian County citizen whose record precedes this sketch. The third wife of W. T. Williamson was Laura L. Cook, a native of Virginia, still living at Hopkinsville with her son, Cyrus. The older of her two children is Adelia, wife of J. T. Jackson, Jr., of the Jackson Lumber Company of Lexington.

Cyrus M. Williamson was educated in the Hopkinsville schools, spent two years in McLean College, and in 1914 bought an interest in the Blades-Cary Company, bought the yard and the tracks of the Sudden Service Station, and then came the Cary-Williamson Company, and was continued under that title until 1920, when it was sold to the Cooper Warehouse Company. On retiring from this business Mr. Williamson built the filling station on Twelfth and Main streets known as the Sudden Service Station, and has done a tremendous business from his new quarters.

On December 30, 1917, Mr. Williamson married Miss Elizabeth S. Harris, daughter of Judge S. D. Harris, of Henderson, where Mrs. Williamson was reared and educated.

Mr. Williamson joined the colors April 28, 1918, and went to England and thence to France, landing June 15, 1918, less than two months after the date of his enlistment. He spent only eleven months in France. He was a corporal and sergeant, took part in the St. Mihiel campaign, in numerous battles in which the American forces were engaged, and in the great conflict of the Argonne Forest was wounded October 19th. He was then taken to the evacuation hospital, where his wound in the left arm was treated, and he was then sent back to the United States about eight miles from Nevers. He received his honorable discharge May 1, 1919, and returned home and resumed his business and civilian career as noted above.

Mr. Williamson is affiliated with Lodge No. 545 of the Elks, Hopkinsville Chamber of Commerce, the Woodmen of the World, the First Baptist Church and is one of the public spirited young men of progress in the city of Hopkinsville.

OSSO WILLIS STANLEY. In the eight years since his admission to the bar Osso Willis Stanley has achieved most favorable recognition as a lawyer in Nelson County and is also one of the prominent and progressive young men in republican politics in that section of the State.

He was born at Bardstown January 29, 1887, son of Osso and Iola (Neal) Stanley of that city. His parents were born in Nelson County and his father for many years was a leading architect and building contractor. One of six children Osso Willis Stanley was reared at Bardstown and from an early age his ambition compelled him to make the utmost use of his opportunities. In school he partly by his own efforts and earnings he acquired a liberal as well as a professional education. He attended public schools, took a business course at Bowling Green, and for several years was clerk in the Louisville offices of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad. While thus supporting himself he attended night sessions of the Jefferson School of Law, and received a diploma in 1911 and in the same year was admitted to the bar on examination at LaGrange. Mr. Stanley began practice at Bardstown in May, 1913, and for several years has ranked as one of the able lawyers of the county.

In 1920 his name was on the republican ticket as candidate for presidential elector in his district. Governor Morrow appointed him chairman of the committee to receive for the State the "Old Kentucky Home" at Bardstown, but he resigned this office before the work of the committee had been completed. He is also member of the staff of Gov. Edwin P. Morrow with rank of Colonel. Mr. Stanley is a Knight Templar Mason, is past master of Duval Lodge No. 6, F. and A. M. at Bardstown, and is an active member of the Methodist Church. In 1908 he married Miss Amanda Sisco. They have three children: John C., Charles Hayden and Virginia Willis Stanley.

SYLVESTER PIKE was born in Meade County where his father, Joseph Pike, a native of Maryland, was a pioneer settler. Sylvester Pike married Sarah Newton, a native of Marion County, Kentucky. Surviving them are two sons and four daughters. Sylvester Pike was a successful and industrious man when he went to Union County. Out of the multitude of Union County mechanics of that day, one often persons of diligent prosecution of his work as a farmer he was able to identify himself at Uniontown in 1880 with a larger business career as a merchant and banker. He was a man of fine intelligence and good business sense and amassed a large estate.

He was before his death known as one of Union County's leading citizens and was also known for his integrity of character and his progressiveness in all civic matters. He was a staunch friend of education and a generous supporter of the Catholic Church. During his declining years he removed to Louisville, and died in his home in that city in 1914 at the age of sixty-eight.

The Rev. W. D. Pike, at present pastor of St. Joseph's Church, Bardstown, Kentucky, is the youngest son of Sylvester Pike.

WILLIAM HOBSON. In considering the relative importance of any man to his community it is necessary for the biographer to weigh carefully his services not only as a factor in the professional and industrial life, but also as a factor in his community. William Hobson of Jamestown affords ample scope for reflection and consideration, for it shows a man who has accomplished what is somewhat unusual. Mr. Hobson was one of the leading attorneys of Russell County and also a manufacturer of no mean importance in all of his work never allowing the duties of one calling to infringe upon that of the other.

William Hobson was born at Scottsburg, Indiana, February 10, 1870, a son of Jesse L. Hobson and grandson of William Hobson, who was born near Shelbyville, Kentucky, in 1803 and died near Scottsville, Indiana, in 1873. For the greater part of his life he lived in Shelby and Spencer counties, Kentucky, and was a farmer by occupation. The elder William Hobson married a Miss Thomas of Bardstown, Kentucky, and she, too, died near Scottsville, Indiana. The father of the elder William Hobson moved to Shelby County, Kentucky, from Virginia and there became a successful farmer.

Jesse L. Hobson was born at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1837, and died at Campbellsville, Kentucky, in August, 1907. He was reared at Louisville, but after his marriage lived at Scottsville, Indiana, until 1886 when he returned to Kentucky and spent the remainder of his life at Campbellsville. For many years he was extensively engaged in farming and was a man of large means. Later on in life he retired from agriculture and for the last fifteen years of his life he was associated with his son. A republican by conviction and in practice he felt it incumbent upon him to give his country his services during the war of the '60s and belonged to Company H, Twenty-second Indiana Volunteer Infantry. After serving during the first eighteen months of the war, he was severely wounded and invalided to Arkansas, as to be incapacitated for further service and consequently was honorably discharged. The Methodist Episcopal Church had in him a sincere member and he always gave the church a strong support. Jesse L. Hobson was married to Millie M. Kidlen, who was born at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1815 and died at Campbellsville, in 1889. Their children, William, Charles, and Nelson, were born in Campbellsville, and at the age of nine, the elder two were sent to school at Louisville. William spent ten or twelve years in Kentucky and was a well known farmer and stockholder of the Matson Lumber Company. Nelson, the youngest, is now located in Campbellsville, where he was born and spent his boyhood, and is a successful architect and contractor in the city.

Mr. Hobson was one of the most successful and influential men of Campbellsville; he was a representative member of the State House of Representatives; and was a member of the Board of Education. He was also a member of the Board of Directors of the Campbellsville Bank, and was a member of the Board of Directors of the Bank of Campbellsville. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was a life member of the Board of Directors of the Campbellsville and Green River Bank.

Mr. Hobson was the father of four children, two daughters and two sons. The eldest daughter, Mrs. Mary M. Hobson, is the wife of Judge William W. Hobson of Campbellsville, and is the mother of four children. The second daughter, Mrs. M. L. Hobson, is the wife of Judge W. W. Hobson of Campbellsville, and is the mother of four children. The eldest son, William W. Hobson, is a lawyer and is the father of four children. The second son, Charles W. Hobson, is a farmer and is the father of four children.

Mr. Hobson was a man of remarkable organizing and systematizing powers and accomplished much for the good of the several communities in which he resided. As a lawyer he was keen, resourceful and well versed in the law, and his standing in his profession an enviable one. His wide and strong influence in politics was early recognized and he was one of the active republicans of this part of the state. His court work was not commensurate with his other accomplishments and he built up a large and flourishing plant by uniting energy and remarkable initiative.

Arch H. Pulliam. For over forty years the name Pulliam has been prominently and favorably known in the official life of Nelson County. Arch H. Pulliam is now in his third consecutive term as Circuit Court clerk. He is the son of John W. Pulliam, who was also an honored county official.

Mr. Pulliam's grandfather, Archibald Pulliam, was a native of Virginia and on coming to Kentucky first settled in Shelby County, where he spent his active life as a farmer and where he died in 1885. John W. Pulliam, his son, was born in Shelby County in 1842 and as a young man moved to Nelson County, was a farmer, and in 1865 was elected county jailer, an office he filled twelve years. He was then chosen county assessor and by appointment from Governor Beckham served eight years as receiver for the Lake and Asylum. He spent his last days at Bardstown, where he died August 10, 1910, at the age of sixty-nine. He was a lifelong democrat in politics. His first wife was Lydia Glass, a native of Anderson County, who died in 1892 at the age of forty-five. She was the mother of two children, Arch H. and Mrs. Morgan Edelen. John W. Pulliam afterwards married Mrs. Margaret Glass McClain, a sister of his first wife. She died in 1910.

Arch H. Pulliam who was born in Nelson County May 31, 1877, attended the public schools, and in 1899 graduated from the Northern Indiana Normal School and Business University at Valparaiso. He was only sixteen years of age when he became a deputy in the circuit clerk's office under Frank E. Daugherty. After graduating he used his skill as a stenographer to good advantage and for sixteen years served as court reporter for the Templer Judicial District. In 1900 he was elected Circuit Court clerk, and was reelected in 1913 and again in 1921. In 1920 Governor Morrow appointed him a member of the Old Kentucky Home Commission and he was elected by the Commission a chairman at its first meeting, held in Bardstown, in October, 1920. Mr. Pulliam is active as a democrat, is a Knight of the Temple and a member of the Presbyterian Church. December 12, 1905, he married Miss Alice May, daughter of John S. and Annie E. May of Bloomfield. Mrs. Pulliam was one of the victims in the fateful tragedy of the Shepardsville railroad wreck in 1917. Her sister, Miss Sallie May, became the wife of Mr. Pulliam August 19, 1921.

Francis Napoleon Gardner. It is not given to all men to make a success in business, but those who do possess the faculty of knowing the line for which they are best fitted, and are clear-sighted enough to concentrate their energies upon it, can be reasonably certain of satisfactory results. One of the men of Paducah who has become one of the leading furniture manufacturers and retailers in the West. Among these qualities is Henry Napoleon Gardner.

The birth of Mr. Gardner occurred in McCracken County on April 7, 1866, and he comes of one of the old and honored American families of Scotch-Irish descent, the representatives of which came to North Carolina during the Colonial epoch, and from there have spread out over the United States. It was in North Carolina that Mr. Gardner's father, Levi Gardner, was born. Mr. Gardner's grandparents were Hico and Williamson, and Levi's grandparents were Hico and Williamson. Mr. Gardner has been one of the leading furniture manufacturers in the country for many years, and is a member of the firm of McCracken Gardner, located at McCracken County, Kentucky, for four years, entering the educational field when he was only nineteen years old. In 1880 he came to Paducah and secured employment in a retail and wholesale drug store, where he remained for a year, and then took up the insurance business, which he carried on until 1896 as a representative of the Prudential Insurance Company, and built up a large clientele. However, it was his ambition to own his business, and he made a start on his present road of endeavor when in 1896 he opened a book, stationery and music store on Broadway, between Fourth and Fifth streets, and conducted it until the spring of 1897. His experience during these few months taught him that while he was fitted to be a merchant, he had not the kind of business that offered sufficient scope, and in April of that year he established his present business, but only in a very small way, his capital being $500. Small was the beginning, but the start was in the right direction. Mr. Gardner has found himself, and from the first he was successful. Under his astute management this business has been gradually expanding, until it now occupies one of the key positions in Western Kentucky. His large establishment is located at 114-116 South Third Street, and he handles a general line of house furnishings, including furniture, rugs and floor coverings of all kinds, and his trade territory embraces Western Kentucky, Southern Tennessee and Southern Illinois. Mr. Gardner has other interests and owns a modern residence at Paducah, and is a member of the Republican Republican party, and is a member of the Republican party.

HISTORY OF KENTUCKY

409 and there he was engaged in the livery business. In young manhood he was a railroad contractor. He owned the first wharf boat ever used at Huntington, West Virginia. The democratic party had in him a firm supporter. For many years he was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His only female companion was the late Mrs. Knapp, a member of the Knapp and Ladies of Honor. The children born to John H. Kennett and his wife were as follows: Mrs. Gardner, who was the eldest; Levi, who is a hotel man of Ashland, Kentucky; Andrew Clay, who lives at Wheeling, West Virginia; Julia Starr, who married Mark Russell, a commission merchant of Williamson, West Virginia; Sallie E., who is the wife of Dr. Turner, sales manager of St. Louis, Missouri; at Portersburg, Michigan; and John Grover Cleveland, who died at Huntington, West Virginia, when nineteen years old.

Mr. and Mrs. Gardner became the parents of two children, namely: William Kennett, whose brief life story is told on preceding pages, and John David, who was born July 30, 1900, died at Huntington, West Virginia, on July 29, 1910. After a brief illness and understanding of the requirements of his trade, Mr. Gardner has been able to increase his business rapidly, and yet safely. During all of the years he has been employed in building up his own interests he has not been negligent of his civic duties, but has taken an intelligent part, always as a private citizen, in the progress of Paducah, and is proud of the growth of the city and the place it is rightfully taking among the centers of importance in the state and the surrounding country.

WILLIAM KENNETT GARDNER, who left life just at the threshold of promising achievement, was born at Paducah October 29, 1900, and died just a few weeks before attaining his twenty-first birthday, on September 22, 1921. He graduated from the Paducah High School June 5, 1919, and thereafter for two years was rapidly growing in wisdom and efficiency as an associate of his father's furniture business. He shared the political views of the democratic party, and from the age of eleven had been a member of the First Baptist Church and was active in the Young Men's Bible Class, for which he acted as pianist. In other ways he was identified with the musical life of this community, was a member of the Paducah Country Club and was a member of the Alumni Club. The Club of Paducah prepared the following resolutions, that may properly supplement the brief record of an all too brief life:

"Recently the all-leveling hand of death reached out and touched one of our number, the first of this fraternity to be called to the Beyond since our organization. In that summons this club has lost a friend and a comrade, a member whose absence all of us keenly feel. "Those of us who knew Kennett Gardner personally, as companion and friend and cham, feel most acutely the silence when his name is spoken. Around the club table where he met with us there is a chair that is vacant, and the voice once lifted in happy fellowship is heard no longer. His presence, his personality, his kindly advice and willing service to the organization, all are missed. But in the passing of Kennett Gardner this club has not alone been loser. Aside from those who were closest and dearest, and whose grief can never be assuaged, not even by the healing scythe of time, his passing is felt in a broader sense. For it is the young men of the type of Kennett Gardner that constitute the future citizenship of our city. It is to young men of his splendid character and lofty ideals to whom Paducah looks for her leadership in the coming years. Men of his stamp are rare and Paducah needs them. That this club should have lost Kennett Gardner is a source of sorrow, that the city should have lost him is to be deplored. There can be no progress without leadership; there can be no real and lasting and effective leadership without energy and intelligence and character, without vision and hope and enthusiasm. These attributes Kennett Gardner possessed in marked degree. They served to endear him to every member of this fraternity, to popularize him everywhere. Whatever measure of success would have come to Kennett Gardner in the passing years, and surely success would have come to him, that reward could not be richer than the deserving heart and mind and soul which merited them by his own stellow manhood.

"To the members of the Alumni Club pay this last tribute to our fellow worker in the sincerity of appreciation, and in the full knowledge that our words are but intiute against the oppressive grief which has come to those who loved him most. But in our own sorrow at his passing we sympathize most keenly with his parents, and to them we humbly bring condoleance as best we may.

"As a member of the club, the death of Kennett Gardner is severely felt by this organization. No member served more willingly or with more zeal and enthusiasm, none worked with greater skill and application in the tasks that presented opportunity for service. In the musical life of the club he meant much to us; and in that sphere he is especially missed. In every other activity of our fraternity his death has occasioned the deepest sorrow."

ORLAND C. SEELEY. A business experience covering a number of years is, according to its nature, honorable or otherwise, but in either case it develops capacity and either broadens or lessens the outlook on life. While every type of business man must possess certain qualities to insure success in his undertaking, those indispensable to the banker rest on a higher plane than in many lines, and for this reason, if for no other, the banker occupies a position in a community removed from many of his fellow-citizens. As a bank represents the most conservative of all institutions, so must those connected therewith be regular, steady and substantial in their actions and characteristics. Orland C. Seeley, cashier of the Black Mountain Bank of Evarts, Kentucky, has spent some years behind the counters of financial institutions in this state, for although he is still a young man he has in four years of banking, which he has gained much experience. This has taught him conservatism, but at the same time it has given him a correct idea of the value of a certain amount of progressiveness, and it is the combination of these two in his character that makes him valuable to his institution and has placed him in a position or recognized importance in his line of endeavor.

Mr. Seeley was born at Portersburg, Clay County, Kentucky, April 19, 1893, a son of Pleasant D. and Lizzie (Martin) Seeley. His father, a resident of London, Kentucky, was born in Laurel County, this state, in 1865, and was there reared and married. For a number of years he devoted himself exclusively to farming, but later began to carry on this vocation in conjunction with work as a traveling salesman, and since 1908 has made his headquarters at London, where he occupies a comfortable home. He is highly thought of in his community and is accounted an industrious, capable and versatile man and one who can be depended upon to discharge fully the highest responsibilities of good citizenship. He is a republican in his political allegiance, holds membership in the Masonic fraternity, and is a member of the Baptist Church and a supporter of the movements therefor. Mr. Seeley married Miss Lizzie Martin, who was born in 1893 in Laurel County, and resides at London, a faithful member of and worker in the Baptist Church. They have been the parents of the following children: Raina, who is the wife of Henry Doan, a carpenter of London, Kentucky: Carl, a traveling representative for large mercantile concerns, who makes his headquarters at Lexington; Cash, who is clerk in the commissionary of a large coal concern at Highspoint, Harlan County; Orland C., of this review; Clyde, who is of adventurous spirit and has no settled place of residence or occupation; Claude, the twin of Clyde, who died at the age of eight months; and Gladys, who is residing with her parents at London.

Orland C. Seeley acquired his primary educational training in the rural schools of Laurel County, following which he entered the high school at London, which he attended until reaching his senior year. He was nineteen years of age when he left school to receive his knowledge through personal experience in financial affairs, and was given his introduction to the banking business as clerk in the Farmers' State Bank of London, an institution with which he was identified for four years. In April, 1918, Mr. Seeley enlisted in the United States Army and was sent to Indianapolis, to the vocational training attachment, where he remained eight weeks. He was then transferred to Camp Hancock, where he remained thirty days, following which he was sent to the Raritan Arsenal, and remained at Metuchen, New Jersey, for thirty days. Later he was stationed at the Aberdeen Proving Grounds in Maryland, and remained there from August, 1918, to March 4, 1919, and on March 13, 1919, was honorably discharged at Camp Taylor. Upon his return to civil life he entered the National Service Grain Corporation, and in the institution he was assistant cashier from April 1, 1919, until September 20, 1919, at which time he resigned to come to Evarts and accept the position of cashier of the Black Mountain Bank, a position which he has retained to the present. This bank was opened for business September 15, 1919, and has been a great success as a state bank. Its officers are: president, T. G. Wright, London; treasurer, W. F. Johnson, Junction, Kentucky; and cashier, Orland C. Seeley. The capital stock of the institution is $25,000, and its approximate deposits at this time are $100,000. Mr. Seeley devotes his entire time and attention to the duties of his position and has won the esteem of his associates and the confidence and good will of the bank's patrons. He is a man of religious beliefs, although he has had no times for political matters, and his religious faith is that of the Christian Church.

Mr. Seeley was married February 2, 1918, at London, Kentucky, to Miss Lucy Mooney, daughter of James and Mary (Nicholson) Mooney, residents of London, where Mr. Mooney is the proprietor of a blacksmith shop. Mrs. Seeley is a graduate of the high school at London. She and her husband are the parents of one child, Helen Joyce, who was born May 11, 1920.

WILLIAM S. NAPPER, M. D. In adding the name of Dr. William S. Napper to its citizenship in 1905, Lebanon Junction was to profit by the services of a man who possessed both the ambition and ability to make himself a factor of large professional usefulness. Increasingly he has been recognized by his long practice, but has gained the well-merited confidence of the community, and his public-spirited citizenship has at all times been a factor in the furtherance of worthy civic and other movements.

Doctor Napper was born on a farm in Bullitt County, Kentucky, January 21, 1860, a son of William and Sally Shaver Napper. Dr. Napper's grandfather on the paternal side was John Napper, a native of Virginia, of Scotch descent, who moved in young manhood to Nelson County, Kentucky, and there rounded out his career in the pursuits of agriculture. His son, William Napper, the grandfather of Doctor Napper, was born in Nelson County, and as a young man adopted farming for his work, a vocation which he followed uninterruptedly throughout a long and honorable career. He married Patsic Duvall, and among their children was William Napper, who was born in Nelson County. As a young man William Napper the younger came to Bullitt County, where he was married and where he devoted himself to tilling the soil four miles east of Lebanon Junction. He was a man of industry and ability, and won personal success and the esteem of his fellow-citizens. Mr. Napper married Susan Catherine Shaver, who was born in Bullitt County, daughter of Anthony and Elizabeth (Johnson) Shaver, natives of the same county, the former being a son of Jacob Shaver, a native of Germany. Elizabeth (Johnson) Shaver was a daughter of William (Bill) Johnson, of the same family as Congressman Ben Johnson.

William S. Napper entered the district school near his father's farm in the vicinity of Lebanon Junction, following which he went to the graded and high schools at Baylis, Illinois. He pursued his medical studies at Louisville University, from the medical department of which institution he was graduated with his degree as a member of the class of 1891, and at that time began practice in the rural districts of Nelson County, with his headquarters near Benton. For fourteen years he ministered to the needs of that locality, and in 1905 came to Lebanon Junction, where a gratifying patronage has grown up around him and a large following has responded to his practical demonstrations of skill and resource. He has a tactful and sympathetic manner, and a personality which inspires confidence. His personal character and good qualities of mind and heart have made him a respected and an honored citizen of his native county. He is a member of the Bullitt County Medical Society and the Kentucky State Medical Society, and is railway surgeon for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad at this point. As a fraternalist he is a Knight Templar Mason and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine, and his political allegiance is given to the candidates and principles of the republican party. His religious faith is that of the Baptist Church to which his membership and those of his family also belong. He has supplied an element of strength and substantiality to his community for the past sixteen years and has been one of the most interested as well as active observers of its developing prosperity.

In 1884 Doctor Napper was united in marriage with Miss Catherine M. Masden, a native of Bullitt County, daughter of Jonathan Masden, a well-known agriculturist of Bullitt County, who made his home here for many years.

WILLIAM H. SLOANE, who has recently retired from the poultry business at Paintsville, Johnson County, was one of the leading representatives of this line of business during the period of his residence in that county for a period of sixteen years, and he is now living with secure standing as one of the representative citizens of Paintsville, where he is chairman of the Board of Education.

Mr. Sloane was born on a farm near Davisville, a village in Lawrence County, but the place of his nativity is in Johnson County, where he was born June 27, 1877. Mr. Sloane is a son of Marvel F. and Elizabeth (Wheeler) Sloane. The father was born in Scott County, Virginia, May 24, 1847, and was a son of John Sloane, who came with his family from that county to Johnson County, Kentucky, when the son Marvel F. was a boy. John Sloane became a substantial farmer in the vicinity of the hamlet of Sip, this county, and was one of the wealthy and honored pioneers in those sections of Johnson County at the time of his death in 1866. He represented Kentucky as a gallant soldier of the Union in the Civil war, his service having been with the Fourteenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry. Marvel F. Sloane was reared and educated in Johnson County and eventually became one of its representative farmers, his farm lying but a short distance from his old homestead of his father. His death occurred in 1914. His widow was born on Laurel Creek, and survived him by less than one month. Both were earnest members of the United Baptist Church. Marvel F. and Elizabeth (Wheeler) Slone became the parents of seven sons and nine daughters, of whom William H. was the seventh in order of birth. The eldest son, Isaac, is now county jailer at Paintsville, Kentucky.

William H. Slone secured a liberal education principally in the village schools of Blaine and Paintsville, and thereafter continued his studies in the University of Kentucky, at Lexington. He taught four terms of school, and depended upon his own resources in defraying the expense of his higher education. Finally he became a traveling salesman for the Snyder Hardware Company, of Louisa, Kentucky, which prominent wholesale firm he represented throughout the Big Sandy and Licking Valleys. He continued his effective service "on the road" for a period of three years, and then engaged in the poultry business at Paintsville. He built up a substantial and prosperous business in the buying and shipping of poultry and after continuing operations along this line for sixteen years he retired from this business to take up larger activities in coal, oil and timber.

Mr. Slone is a member of the board of directors of the Paintsville National Bank, has been actively identified with oil-development enterprise in this section of the state, and has been liberal and progressive both as a citizen and business man. He takes special interest in educational affairs, and is serving as chairman of the Paintsville Board of Education. He is a republican in political adherence, and is affiliated with the local Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Independent Grand Lodge, and is a member of the Odd Fellows. His wife is an active member of the United Baptist Church at Paintsville, and their home is one of the most attractive, even as it is the most hospitable, in the county seat of Johnson County.

The year 1901 recorded the marriage of Mr. Slone to Miss Pearlina Pack, who likewise was born and reared in Johnson County, and whose father was a soldier in the Fourteenth Kentucky Infantry in the Civil War, the same regiment in which the grandfather of Mr. Slone served. Mr. and Mrs. Slone have two sons, Darwin, who was born in Paintsville, Kentucky, August 23, 1907, and Leroy, born August 18, 1909.

PAUL ROGERS. Among the farmers of Clark County the results of whose operations render a good account of their husbandry, is Paul Rogers, who carries on a large and successful farm a few miles east of Winchester, on the Eaton Pike. Mr. Rogers was born near Irvine, Estill County, Kentucky, July 24, 1863, a son of Marcus D. and Lucinda (Tipton) Rogers.

The grandfather of Mr. Rogers, Elder William Rogers, was a pioneer minister of the Christian Church, in which he labored for more than forty years after coming to Kentucky from Virginia, he being well known in the mountain sections of Clark and other counties. He passed his life as a farmer and preacher and was greatly revered by the people of his community, who recognized in him an earnest, God-fearing man of many splendid qualities of character. He and his wife were the parents of twenty children, of whom two were living in 1920: Isiyacar, of Powell County, and Mrs. Sally Meadows of Wolfe County, both in extreme old age. Marcus D. Rogers was born September 5, 1833, in Estill County, and with the exception of four years passed on the Ben Groome farm in Clark County, spent his entire life on the old home place, where he died October 11, 1907, his wife, who was born June 14, 1838, dying October 13, 1895. During the many years that he made his home on this property, Mr. Rogers did not suspect that this tract was a valuable oil property, but such proved to be the case, as some twenty of the most valuable wells of the region are located thereon, yielding a handsome and consistent income in royalties. One of the sons, J. Floyd, farming nearby, has many productive wells, while William T., another son, has an extensive oil tract in Texas. Marcus D. and Lucinda (Tipton) Rogers were the parents of seven sons: William Simpson, formerly a farmer, but now a grocer at Dayton, Ohio; James Buchanan, a farmer of Powell County; Martin and Marcus D., twins, who, the former a farmer of Estill County and the latter deceased at the age of thirty; Reuben, who died at the age of thirty-nine years at Dayton; Paul; and Stephen A. D., a mechanic at Dayton.

Paul Rogers received his education in the public schools of Estill County, and was there married December 24, 1883, to Priscilla Cockerum, daughter of James and Caroline (Cooper) Cockerum, and step-daughter of John Rice. She was born March 25, 1865, in Breathitt County, Kentucky, where her father died when she was a child, and she was brought by her mother to near the Rogers home in Estill County. To Mr. and Mrs. Rogers there have been born the following children: James F., born September 22, 1886, taught school for eleven years from his eighteenth year, five years being in the local schools and the rest in other schools; William C., born November 20, 1895, is president of the electric light company, and also interested in a water and ice company at Irvine, Estill County; he married Clay Tipton and there were born unto them five children: Glen Clive, Gracie Marie, Dixie Irene, Troy Hulen and Lula May; Margaret E., who died in childhood; Cora Lee, who also died in childhood; William T., born May 10, 1897, engaged in farming on a property adjoining that of his father, married Ella R. Howell and they are the parents of two children, one died in infancy and William T., Jr., an infant; and James J. Rogers, born November 20, 1895, who married Emma Lowrey, is associated with his father on the home farm. He spent two years in the United States Army, during several months of service in France, and was honorably discharged in February, 1919.

Following his marriage, Paul Rogers settled on a part of the home farm in Estill County, where he carried on operations until 1917, in that year coming to his present farm. He had acquired all of the old property and had built a new residence thereon, although the old home in which he was born is still standing. His present farm was acquired from Asa Kidd, who had erected the residence here in 1912, this house of brick is situated on a hillside with large old oaks and other shade trees, its views are fine, the property comprises 172 acres, and as Mr. Rogers is a careful and thorough farmer his labors have been attended with good results. He takes a good citizen's interest in public affairs, and whatever measures are proposed tending to promote the general welfare meet with his earnest support. The family has been identified with the Bethlehem Christian Church since the time of his preacher-grandfather.

RICHARD MORGAN HOCKER. A capable and energetic representative of the banking interests of Bullitt County is found in Richard Morgan Hocker, who since his arrival at Lebanon Junction in 1889 has gained a financial footing in every way commensurate with his most sanguine expectations. In invading the realms of finance, Mr. Hocker has swung far from the moorings of his youth, for his earliest associations were those with railroading, although he came of agricultural stock. Mr. Hocker was born on a farm in Marion County, Kentucky, August 15, 1856, a son of Samuel and Mary Jane (West) Hocker. Samuel Hocker was born of respectable and respected parents in Lincoln County, Kentucky, and as a young man went to Marion County, Kentucky, where he followed farming until he was drafted in 1876, when he was sixty-three years of age, his birth having occurred April 8, 1813. While he was a quiet, honorable and inoffensive citizen, at the close of the war between the states he was accused of having been a sympathizer of the Confederacy; and in 1865 was arrested by so-called local Unionists, but of doubtful character. In the dark days of the Reconstruction period, men’s passions were easily inflamed and it needed but small excuse or none at all for the worst element to cause distress to even the most peaceful and innocent man. While Mr. Hocker was released, his farm buildings and crops were burned, causing him a loss of $3,000. Mr. Hocker was a democrat in politics, and in character was a true member of the Meth. By his first marriage he had three children. His second wife was Mary Jane West, a native of Simpson County, Kentucky, and they had seven children, among whom was Richard Morgan.

Richard Morgan Hocker attended the district schools and was reared on the home farm until the age of sixteen years, at which time he began clerking in a store. This he continued for a period of years, and in 1841, he was chosen to the place of Moderator of the First Baptist Church of Lebanon, Kentucky, and held that position for nearly four decades. In 1850, Mr. Hocker located at Lebanon Junction and established himself in the hotel business, which he followed for ten years. He then became cashier of the Lebanon Junction Bank, and after several years was made president of that institution, as such having served to the present. Mr. Hocker may be said to be a departure from the long-accepted type of banker, having a degree of adaptability and public spirit rarely associated with his prototype of some years ago. He relieves the arid and unchangeable routine of his labor with participation in politics and society, in both of which heields a sane and progressive influence. While he is a democrat, he is not radically so. His religious faith is that of the Baptist Church. He has always taken an active interest in fraternal work, and is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, a Knight Templar Mason, and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine.

On May 8, 1889, Mr. Hocker was united in marriage with Miss Mollie Ricketts, a native of Bullitt County, and a daughter of Jonathan Ricketts.

John H. Collins. The energy and business ability of John H. Collins have built up a threshing machine and sawmill business in Bullitt County which compares favorably with the best establishments of the kind in this part of the state. Mr. Collins has a thorough knowledge of his business, sufficient courage to weather inevitable depressions in trade and sufficient wisdom to realize that only by maintaining a high standard can he hope for uniform and continued success.

Mr. Collins was born on a farm in Bullitt County, Kentucky, April 30, 1862, a son of Benjamin H. and Nancy (Kineson) Hays, of Bullitt County, Kentucky. He was reared on a farm near Deatsville, Lebanon, Kentucky, where his great-grandfather, Deats, was born. His parents were married near Lebanon, Kentucky, and they had four sons and a daughter. Mr. Collins was married to Miss May Hays, daughter of James Hays and Rowena (Kineson) Hays, of Bullitt County. Mr. and Mrs. Collins have one son: Ben H., a graduate of the Kentucky State University, and a resident of Hamilton, Ohio, where he is the Superintendent of the Andrews Asphalt Paving Company. Ben H. Collins married Bessie Hayden, also a graduate of the Kentucky State University.

Samuel B. Robinson, M. D. For sixty years the name of Robinson has been honorably known at War saw, Kentucky, in the field of medicine as well as in public affairs of moment, and probably no resident was better or more favorably known here than Dr. Samuel B. Robinson. The Honored Pioneer. The Honored Pioneer was born here November 21, 1856, and was his chosen home throughout a long and busy life. His parents were Dr. John T. and L. C. (Oloore) Robinson, and his paternal grandfather, Samuel B. Robinson, was the pioneer of the family in Gallatin County.

Dr. John T. Robinson was born April 11, 1829, at Princeton, Indiana, a son of Samuel B. and Lydia (Kermit) Robinson. Both parents have lived at Princeton, Indiana, and the latter at Kansas City, Missouri. There is no record of Samuel B. Robinson attending West Point Military Academy, but his brother was there as a classmate of Humphrey Marshall. In the early part of 1850 Samuel B. Robinson went to Princeton, Indiana, and later in the year came to Gallatin County, Kentucky, locating at Jackson's Landing, about six miles from Warsaw. He was a merchant and worked in the iron trade, and his life and death in 1853. Dr. John T. Robinson began his business life early as a pilot on the Ohio River, and remained a river man until 1853, in the meanwhile becoming captain of several well known river steamers, one of these vessels, the "John T. Cline," plying between Madison, Indiana, and Louisville, Kentucky, and another, the equally well known "A. H. Ander," 1855 until 1860 he followed merchandising at Warsaw, in the latter year entering Cleveland Medical College, from which he was graduated in 1861. Doctor Robinson.
The late Dr. John T. Robinson was a lifelong democrat in his political views. He was a Union man in sentiment at the time of the war between the states, in everything except the emancipation of the slaves, which he deemed an unwise and unjust measure at the time. He served in the office of provost marshal. He was a Royal Arch Mason, was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in all his relations, professional or private, set an example of true manliness and high character.

Samuel B. Robinson obtained his general education in the public schools of Warsaw, and greatly to his father's satisfaction, early decided upon a medical career, in preparation for which he entered Pulte Medical College, Cincinnati, from which he was graduated with his degree in 1881, but for three winters following returned and took post graduate work at Harvard. He was licensed by his father until the latter's death and then continued alone along the same line of high class medical and surgical general practice and is very successful. He is a valued member of the Gallatin County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association.

At Covington, Kentucky, in 1891, Doctor Robinson was married to Miss Hattie Swope. Her parents are deceased; she having been a large farmer and tobacco dealer in Gallatin County. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a steward in the church and a teacher in the Sunday School. A democrat by inheritance and from conviction, Doctor Robinson was honored many times by his party in election to important public offices, the duties of which he performed most efficiently and to forward the best interests of Warsaw. He was mayor of the city for a number of years, a member of the city board of trustees for many years, and United States examiner for war risk insurance for Gallatin County. During the period of the World war he was medical examiner for the Gallatin County draft board, and patriotically expended time and means in the furtherance of every movement sanctioned by the Government.

Doctor Robinson is a member of Tadmor Lodge No. 163, F. and A. M., Warsaw, and Warsaw Chapter No. 38, R. A. M., and of Warsaw Council, Junior Order U. A. M. In addition to his profession he has property and other interests, the former including a farm situated between Warsaw and Sparta, his office building on Main Street, a handsome modern residence on the same street and business buildings here. He has always encouraged home enterprises and is a stockholder in three large furniture companies at Warsaw, and also a stockholder in the Kentucky-Demand Deposit Bank, at Florence, Indiana, and at other points is interested in tobacco warehouse property.

Roscoe I. Kerr, M. D. One of the recent additions, speaking comparatively, to the medical men who have the health and sanitation of Bullitt County under their care, is Dr. Roscoe I. Kerr, of Shepherdsville. While he has been located in his present community only four years, he has already gained the confidence and patronage of a large and representative practice and in a number of difficult and complicated cases has displayed the possession of marked skill and trained faculties.

Doctor Kerr is a product of the farming districts of Harrison County, Indiana, where he was born August 1, 1851, to Samuel and Sarah Elizabeth (Hart) Kerr, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Kentucky. Enos W. Kerr, the paternal grandfather of Doctor Kerr, was born in Virginia and in young manhood removed to Indiana, where he passed the remainder of his life in agricultural pursuits. His son, Enos S. Kerr, adopted the vocation of teaching school in young manhood and followed it to some extent throughout his life, although he also had extensive agricultural interests. Doctor Kerr and would doubtless have achieved a notable success in life, but his career was cut short by his death at the early age of forty-six years. A democrat in politics and a man of some influence in his community, he was held in high regard by his fellow-citizens, who elected him to several local offices in Harrison County, Indiana, where he always made his home. His widow, Catherine, married Dr. Roscoe I. Kerr, of Shepherdsville, Kentucky, in 1910. Beginning practice at Louisville, he was so engaged until January, 1913, when he took charge as superintendent of Highland Hospital, a position which he held for one year. He was then identified with Back Hospital, Kentucky, for two years, and in 1917 came to Shepherdsville, where he has since been engaged in a constantly-growing practice. His movements have been those of a steady character and his practical nature have been demonstrated along the regular lines of his calling. At present he is serving as health officer for his county. Doctor Kerr continues to be a student and takes advantage of the opportunities for advancement offered by membership in the Bullitt County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is a democrat in politics, a Master Mason and a member of the Baptist Church, and in connection with his profession, Doctor Kerr owns and conducts the only drug store at Shepherdsville.

In 1910, at Louisville, Doctor Kerr was united in marriage with Miss Catherine E. Gilbert, of that city, and they are the parents of four children.

Rev. William A. Worthington, a clergyman of the Reformed Church in America and a prominent figure in educational work in Kentucky, is superintendent of the Annville Institute at Annville, Jackson County, an excellent institution maintained under the auspices of the Reformed Church.

Professor Worthington was born on a farm near Poplar Grove, Boone County, Illinois, and the date of his nativity was May 30, 1857. His paternal grandfather, Thomas Worthington, was born at Manchester, England, in 1804, and was reared and educated in his native land, where he learned and followed the trade of calico printer. At Manchester his wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Sidebotham, was born in the year 1807, and there their marriage was solemnized. They continued their residence in England until 1825, when as young folk of ambition and earnest purpose they came to the United States and first settled in Rhode Island, where Mr. Worthington gave his attention to farm industry for the ensuing decade. In 1835 he located a pioneer settlement in Boone County, Illinois, near the present Village of Poplar Grove, and there he homesteaded and developed a productive farm. Both he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives in that county, where his death occurred in 1880. Mrs. Worthington attained to the extremely venerable age of ninety-three years and was one of the revered pioneer women of Illinois, though she passed the closing period of her long life in Richmond, Minnesota, where her death occurred in 1906.

George W. Worthington, father of him whose name initiates this review, was born in Boone County, Illinois, in 1843, and died at Long Branch, New Jersey, in 1903. He was reared to manhood in his native county, received good educational advantages, as gauged by the standards of the locality and period, and became a prosperous farmer. He was a gallant young soldier of the Union in the Civil war, in which he served three years as a member of Company B, Fifteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with which he participated in many important engagements, including the historic battles of Shiloh and Chickamauga, as well as the siege of Vicksburg and the battle of Corinth. After the war he continued his active association with farm enterprise in Boone County, Illinois, and he sold his farm and, in consequence of the impaired health of his wife, established his residence at Eustis, Lake County, Florida, and remained there until 1902. He then removed to Long Branch, New Jersey, where his death occurred in the following year. His political allegiance was given to the republican party, he was actively affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic, and both he and his wife were earnest and influential communicants of the Reformed Church in America.

As a young man George W. Worthington wedded Miss Elizabeth Van Valkenburg, who was born in Columbia County, New York, in 1844, and who was summoned to the life eternal in 1884, at Eustis, Florida. Of their children the eldest is Mary Elizabeth, wife of George O. Butler, a civil engineer by profession, their home being maintained at Miami, Florida; Ella is the wife of Francis Alger, a sugar planter, Eustis, Florida; Rev. William A., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth and is the youngest of the children. The public schools of Lake County, Florida, afforded William A. Worthington the major part of his preliminary education, and there he studied the curriculum of the high school at Eustis. Thereafter he was for one year a student in historic old Rutgers College at New Brunswick, New Jersey, where he next entered the New Brunswick Theological Seminary, which, like Rutgers College, is an old established institution of the Reformed Church in America. He was graduated from the seminary as a member of the class of 1899, and was duly ordained a clergyman of the Reformed Church. Until the various departments of the work of which his service has consisted, the present position he has achieved a most excellent work since assuming the position of superintendent of the Annuity Institute, which was established in 1910 and which under his vigorous and earnest executive and scholastic administration has attained to a high standard of academic efficiency. The institute is situated on the north side of Pond Creek, at Annuville, and is fifteen miles northwest of the county seat. The buildings include the administration building, the classroom buildings, two dormitories for boys and two for girls, besides the two cottages that serve as the residences of the superintendent and assistant superintendent. A corps of thirteen efficient and enthusiastic teachers is retained, and the enrollment of students at the time of this writing, in the summer of 1921, is 267. The institute has secure place as one of the valuable educational institutions of Kentucky, and offers to students the best of advantages in all of its departments.

Professor Worthington has identified himself fully and loyally with community interests since establishing his home at Annuville, and his influence is felt in the directing of public sentiment and action in Jackson County. His political faith is that of the republican party, but he has had neither time nor desire for public office. He is a director of the Bond State Bank at Bond, Jackson County. During the nation's participation in the World war Professor Worthington bent his ability and energies to effective patriotic service by aiding in all of the local drives in support of the Government war bond issues, etc., and by active service in the promotion of the Red Cross and other patriotic work.

In 1909, at McKee, judicial center of Jackson County, Kentucky, was solemnized the marriage of Professor Worthington to Mrs. Henrietta A. (Zwemer) Tekolste, the widow daughter of Rev. James F. and Kate (Nyland) Zwemer, who reside at Holland, Michigan, in which fine little city, founded by sturdy Hollanders in the pioneer period of Michigan history, Doctor Zwemer is the distinguished and honored president of the Western Theological Seminary of the Reformed Church in America. Mrs. Worthington was graduated from the Mary McLeod Bethune College, of which she was the first president, and was a woman of culture and gracious personality, and plays a large part in the refined social and academic activities of the educational community in which she lives and in which her circle of friends is coincident with that of her acquaintances.

John G. Tye, M. D. By the possession of those sterling characteristics and that specific ability that make for maximum success in his profession Doctor Tye has gained high vantage place as one of the representative physicians and surgeons of his native county and is established in the successful general practice of his profession at Barbourville, the county seat, with offices in the Parker Building on Knox Street.

Doctor Tye was born on the homestead farm of the family near Barbourville, and the date of his nativity was May 15, 1881. His preliminary educational advantages were those of the rural schools, and in 1903 he was graduated from the high school department of Union College at Barbourville. Thereafter he continued his studies one year in Cumberland College at Williamsburg, Whitley County, and after thus fortifying himself along academic lines, he entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, in which excellent institution he was graduated in 1909, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He has continued a close and appreciative student along professional lines and has availed himself of the advantages of the clinics of the City Hospital of Louisville, which he visits for this purpose nearly every year, and in which he has served, as an intern, with distinction.

Upon his graduation from the medical school Doctor Tye established himself in practice at Barbourville, where he has since continued his earnest and effective professional labors, the success of which is best attested by the broad scope and representative character of his practice.

The Democratic party receives the unequivocal allegiance of Doctor Tye, and as a member of the same he was elected to the City Council of Barbourville, in which he gave effective service marked by liberal and progressive politics. He and his wife are influential members of the Christian Church in their home city, and he is serving as a deacon of the same. In a professional way he maintains lining he adheres to the Knox County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. The Doctor has completed the circle of both York and Scottish Rite Masonry, in the latter of which He has received the thirty-second degree, as a member of the Sovereign Consistory in the City of Louisville, where also he holds membership in Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine. His ancient craft affiliation in his home city is with Mountain Lodge No. 187, Free and Accepted Masons, and here also he holds membership in Barbourville Lodge No. 187, R. O. M., and also in the old Masonic orders, and while his chivalric affiliation is with Pineville Commandery of Knights Templar at the county seat of Bell County. He is a member also of the Barbourville Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America. The Doctor is a stockholder in the National Bank of John A. Black at Barbourville, and also in the Kentucky Oil Shale Company. He is the owner of valuable real estate at Barbourville, including his attractive residence at Red Crossing. John Tye is still a member in 1921, and he was a member of committees in charge of the local drives in support of the Government war loans and Savings Stamps, the while he made his financial contributions to these causes of consistent liberty.

The year 1911 recorded the marriage of Doctor Tye to Miss Jessie Miller, daughter of Judge J. S. and Carrie (Brittin) Miller, the latter of whom is deceased. Judge Miller was living at Barbourville, formerly served as county judge of Knox County. Doctor and Mrs. Tye have three children, whose names and respective dates of birth are here recorded: James Gorman, July 23, 1912; Anna Lois, February 9, 1916; and Gene, August 2, 1918.

Doctor Tye is a representative of one of the oldest and most honored pioneer families of Southeastern Kentucky. He is a descendant in the fifth generation of John Tye, who was born in Virginia, where the family was founded in the early Colonial era of American history. John Tye became one of the earliest settlers in Whitley County, Kentucky, where he cleared and reclaimed the first farm on Big Poplar Creek, a work in which he had the service of his retinue of seventy-eight slaves. The house which he erected as a family home at Carpenter is still in the same scale of the most venerable landmarks of Whitley County. This honored founder of the Tye family in Kentucky served as a patriotic soldier in the war of the Revolution. His son, Joshua, great-grandfather of Doctor Tye of this sketch, was born in Virginia and was young at the time of the family removal to Kentucky. He became one of the leading farmers and influential citizens of Whitley County, where he passed the remainder of his life, as did also his wife, who was born in Virginia and whose family name was Cummins, George W. Tye, grandfather of the Doctor, was born in Whitley County in 1811, and died at Tye Bend, near Barbourville, Knox County, in 1886, he having become an extensive farmer in that locality and having been the owner of a large number of slaves in the period prior to the Civil war. He married Miss Anna Owens, who likewise was a native of Whitley County, and whose death occurred at their old home at Tye Bend, Knox County. Their son, Henry Clay Tye, was born at the old home at Carpenter, on Big Poplar Creek, Whitley County, in 1849, and his death occurred near Barbourville, Knox County, in 1907. He was a boy at the time his parents established their home on the farm at Tye Bend, Knox County, where he was reared to manhood and received the advantages of the common schools of the period. A man of strong individuality and marked ability, he long held prestige as one of the extensive and substantial representatives of farm industry in Knox County, and his death occurred on his fine homestead farm one mile south of Barbourville. He was a staunch democrat, served as a soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war, and was a man whose character and achievement marked him for inviolable place in popular confidence and good will. His widow, whose maiden name was Diana Glasscock, still resides at the old family home near Barbourville. The subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; J. J. is engaged in the practice of law at Barbourville; Charles H. is associated with the drug business in this city; Thomas owns and operates the old home farm; and Kager is a traveling salesman for the Louisville Grocery Company, which he represents in Bell and Harlan counties.

Leander Porter Holland, of Paducah, has given thirty years to the service of the Ayer & Lord Tie Company of Chicago, and for the past eighteen years has been superintendent of its purchasing department in Kentucky and adjoining territory. The Ayer & Lord Tie Company is the largest organization of its kind in the world as manufacturers, contractors and dealers in railroad and telegraph poles and similar material. While the headquarters of the business are in Chicago, its productive organizations and branch agencies are found in practically every timbered section in America.

Leander Porter Holland, who entered the business at the bottom and is one of the experts in the organization today, was born in Lyon County, Kentucky, August 8, 1861. The Hollands have been in Kentucky since about the close of the Revolutionary war, and were previously Colonial settlers in Virginia. Mr. Holland's grandfather, John Holland, was born in Caldwell County, Kentucky, in 1792, and lived there all his life as a farmer, dying in 1877. William Holland, father of Leander P., was born in Caldwell County in 1828, but spent nearly all his life in Lyon County, where he was a farm owner and operator. Before he owned 70 acres of the rich soil along the Cumberland River. He died in 1913. He served several terms as justic of peace, was active in community affairs, but was rather non-partisan in politics. He was one of the most active members of his Baptist Church and was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. At one time he was a member of the State Militia. William Holland married Mary Jane Hopper, who was born in Lyon County in 1858 and died there in 1898. They became the parents of a large family of fourteen children, a brief record of whom is as follows: John A., a farmer in Lyon County; Rebecca L., widow of C. Lady, a prosperous farmer in Lyon County, where she is still living; Marion, who died in infancy; W. W., who began his career as a farmer, subsequently his state business agent of the Farmers and Laborers Bank of Louisville, and then worked under his brother Leander for the Ayer & Lord Tie Company and died at Cumberland City, Tennessee, at the age of forty-eight; James M., a prosperous farmer and owner of a portion of the old homestead in Lyon County; Sarah, who died in infancy; Mary J., living at Paducah and owner of the fine farm of her late husband, Joseph Chaudet, on the Tennessee River in Pike County; Leander P.; Moncho, the ninth child, a son, died in infancy; Martha Ann, wife of W. P. Hildreth of Lyon County; Eliza Frances, wife of F. P. Hildreth, living on their farm in Lyon County; Ellen, deceased wife of G. L. Gray, a farm owner in Lyon County;
Alice, deceased, married Y. L. Smith, a mechanic at Kuttawa in Lyon County; and Ida May, who died in 1902. The wife of W. V. Knoll, a farmer in Lyon County.

Leander P. Holland grew up on his father's large farm in Lyon County, attended the rural schools, and remained at home until he was twenty-five. For two years after that he followed farming on his own account in Lyon County, also spent one year in Trigg County, moved to Grand Rivers in 1889 and served twelve years as a merchant and for the following two years conducted a meat market at Kuttawa. These were his business experiences prior to the time he entered the tie business for the Ayer & Lord Company. He began his work under the direction of a cross tie inspector on the Cumberland River, and knows every phase of the business from that of a timber worker to office management. He became superintendent of the purchasing department for the Tennessee, Cumberland and Ohio rivers in 1902, and his offices are on the tenth floor of the City National Bank Building at Paducah. He is also a director and stockholder in the Ayer & Lord Company, and is a stockholder and director in the Paducah Chero-Cola Company.

Mr. Holland is a republican, a member of the Baptist Church, whose Baptist beliefs are in accordance with the Lord's direction. He is of the Quaker and Odd Fellow order. His home is at 1438 Broadway. He married in Trigg County, Kentucky, in 1888, Miss Jennie L. Holland, who though of the same family name is not related. Her parents, W. C. and Maria (Clements) Holland, now deceased, lived in Trigg County, where her father was an ore miner. L. was raised in infanly; Virginia Dare, whose mother married B. L. married in 1888, B. L. married in 1888, and Mrs. Holland were in the seven children; Hal, who died at the age of two and a half years; B. L., now living at Charleston, Massachusetts, was for eight years in the United States Navy, and after the World war was with the Allied Troops at Scapa Flow. Witnessing the surrender of the German fleet; Will C., in the lumber business at Inka, Mississippi; Rebecca J., who now owns a store, and Mrs. Holland; whose husband, N. T. Tull, lives at Jackson, Mississippi, and has charge under the budget system of the Baptist missionary work for that state; Grace Trueman, wife of C. C. Jordan, a lumberman and livestock dealer at Inka; and Leander Porter, who bears her father's name and is still at home.

George Riley Keen M. D. The debt owed by humanity to the medical profession is one that cannot be fully discharged, nor ought it to be regarded lightly for from the men connected with it have come the most illuminating truths regarding the race and the methods to be followed in curative and preventative measures. Especially has this been true during recent years when the self-sacrifice of the profession has been demonstrated in every possible way. The Kentucky physicians and surgeons stand foremost among those of the country, and Allen County has contributed its quota to the long list, one of being Dr. George Riley Keen of Scottsville.

Doctor Keen was born in Allen County, February 3, 1855, the son of Dr. Robert Keen, a pioneer and on the first school board. In 1856 he came to Sumner County, Tennessee. He was born in Sumner County, Tennessee, in May, 1837, a son of Elisha Keen, a native of Virginia, who passed away in Sumner County, Tennessee, where he located many years ago, and became a prosperous farmer. Asbury W. Keen was born of his marriage with Sarah Wolfe, his second wife, who died in Allen County. After holding the office of physician in Allen County, Kentucky, and Sumner County, Tennessee, in 1917, Mr. Keen retired from the ministry and is now residing in Stockville. Strong in his convictions, he has supported the candidates of the republican party from its organization. He is a zealous Mason. One of the men of Kentucky to enlist in the Union Army, he served as a soldier for two years, and took part in several very important battles including those of Shiloh, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge, of the war between the North and South, but serious disability, incurred while in the service, necessitated his honorable discharge and he returned home. He married Martha Mitchell, born in Allen County in 1832, who died in that same county, June 27, 1815. They became the parents of five children: Dr. J. E., who died in Allen County when twenty-eight years old, was the wife of George Smith now a farmer of Denton County, Texas; William David, who is a farmer, resides at Lewisville, Texas; James W., who is a farmer of Allen County; Henry W., who died in Allen County when twenty years old; Mary E., who died at the age of fourteen years; and Dr. E. J., who is a physician and surgeon of Woodburn, Kentucky, is mentioned elsewhere in this work; and Dr. George Riley, who was the youngest.

When he was eighteen years old George Riley Keen struck out for himself, and made practical use of the knowledge he had acquired in the rural schools of Allen County, by teaching school in his home county, following that path for four years. He then entered the medical department of the University of Tennessee at Nashville, and was graduated therefrom in 1900 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. In 1917 he took a post-graduate course at the Chicago Polyclinic in order to perfect himself along certain lines. In 1900 he located in Trousdale County, Tennessee, and there spent eleven years, and the few years during which he has since remained building up a name and connection for himself which testify to his skill and popularity. Doctor Keen maintains his offices in the Keen Building, which is also the home of the Oliver drug store, and which he owns, and he also owns his modern brick residence which he remodeled in 1920, making it one of the most desirable houses in the city. It is conveniently located on Fifth Street at Market. In addition to these two pieces of real estate Doctor Keen is the owner of three dwellings at Scottsville, and is a director of the Scottsville Utilities Company.

While he gives his unqualified support to the republican party, he confines his participation in politics to casting his vote for the party candidates. The Baptist Church has always been his church of worship, and he is not only one of its efficient members, but for the past six years has been a deacon of the Scottsville congregation. A Mason, he belongs to Graham Lodge No. 208, A. F. and A. M. Professionally Doctor Keen belongs to the Allen County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association. During the late war Doctor Keen was a very zealous war worker, and was especially active in behalf of the Red Cross, although he rendered material assistance in all of the drives. His purchase of bonds and stamps and contributions to all of the organizations were very liberal.

In July, 1898, Doctor Keen was married in Allen County to Miss Emma Dalton, a daughter of Dr. Burge Dalton, who resides on his farm in Allen County. Mrs. Dalton is deceased. Doctor and Mrs. Keen have one son, Douglas, who was born March 9, 1904. Doctor Keen is a man of strong personality and warm sympathies, and his patients not only learn to rely implicitly upon his judgment, but become very deeply attached to him.

Robert E. Callahan has been chief of police at Ludlow continuously for almost thirty years, a period of service that indicates the vigor and efficiency with which he has performed his duties.

Mr. Callahan was born at Harrison, Ohio, October 2, 1858. His father, Dennis Callahan, was born in Ireland in 1836, as a young man came to America and located at Harrison, Ohio, where he married and where he followed his trade as cooper. In 1859 he moved to Manchester, Ohio, and in 1862 to Aurora, Indiana, working at his trade during these years. In 1888 he moved to Ludlow, Kentucky, and at the time of his death in 1900 was foreman for the passenger department of the C. & O. and T. P. Railroad companies. He served as city assessor at Aurora, Indiana, was a democrat and a member of St. James Catholic Church at Ludlow. He married in 1857 Kate Brady, who was born in Ireland in 1837 and died at Aurora, Indiana, in 1871. Robert E. is the oldest of their children; Lizzie is the wife of Charles Taylor, a blacksmith at Ludlow; Catherine is the wife of John Connor, a Chesapeake & Ohio locomotive engineer at Covington; William is in the boiler shops of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad at Louisville; Miss Hattie keeps a hotel at Detroit, Michigan; Nora is the wife of James Cowan, a shoe salesman, living at Price's Hill, Cincinnati; and James is a boilermaker at Cincinnati. His second son, John, is a teacher in his county. The parochial and public schools at Aurora and while a schoolboy worked in his father's cooper shop. Leaving school at the age of seventeen he was employed by the O. & M. Railway Company and in the rolling mills at Aurora, and for two years was on the police force. Chief Callahan moved to Ludlow in 1890 and after a year and a half in the Southern Railroad shops was elected chief of police in 1892. He has been chosen a member to every election since then. Mr. Callahan was one of the sternest patriots who helped fulfill the war program of Ludlow. He is an independent in politics, a member of the Catholic Church and is affiliated with the Kehoe Council No. 1764, Knights of Columbus. He owns a modern home at 121 Oak Street. In 1885 at Aurora, Indiana, he married Miss Sarah Downton, who was born at Aurora in 1863 and died at Ludlow in 1898. She was the mother of three children: Emmett, a machinist at Ludlow; William, a boilermaker by trade, was in training as a member of the Engineer Corps when the armistice was signed, and Earl, an employe of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad living at Bromley, Kentucky. In 1903 at Ludlow Chief Callahan married Mrs. Mary (Griffin) Jones, daughter of James and Mary (Carroll) Griffin, By marriage Mr. Callahan has two sons, John, who is a teacher in the LaSallette Academy at Covington.

CLARENCE O. MESSINGER, superintendent of the Glogora Coal Company at Glo, Floyd County, is a practical coal mining man and engineer, and is constantly studying so as to keep abreast of the advances made in his industry. He acquired the fundamentals of his profession while teaching school. After he had mastered the technical part from courses with the International Correspondence School, he put this knowledge to practical use, and since then has risen rapidly, his being a responsible position.

The birth of Mr. Messenger occurred in Roane County, West Virginia, June 30, 1887, and he is a son of W. L. and May (Conley) Messenger, both natives of West Virginia. W. L. Messenger was a farmer, and a carpenter and builder. A zealous Methodist, he always took an active and effective part in church work.

Growing up in his native county Clarence O. Messenger attended the local schools of Roane County, and was fitted for school-teaching. For three years thereafter he was engaged in teaching in the various counties of West Virginia, but one of these years being in the Red Jacket Coal Company. During this time he studied engineering and surveying, as before stated, and when he had completed the courses with his correspondence school was able to take a position with the United Thacker Coal Company of Williamson, West Virginia, as rodman on their engineering staff. At the close of his second year with this company he was made resident engineer of the Thacker Coal & Coke Co., which position he held for eighteen months when he left to go with the Red Jacket Consolidated Coal & Coke Company at Red Jacket, West Virginia, and during the two and one-half years with them he became their assistant general superintendent. During the latter part of 1916 he left the Maderia Hill-Clark Coal Company, and during his three and one-half years with them he became their assistant general superintendent. During the latter part of 1916 he left the Maderia Hill-Clark Coal Company and went with the Ederdon Coal Company as their general superintendent, remaining with them for five months when he accepted the position of general manager of the Kanawha Valley Coal Company, with which he continued until 1918, at which time he was made general manager of the Wells, Elkhorn Coal Company. In March, 1920, he assumed the responsibilities of his present position, and since then has been superintendent of the Glogora Coal Company. It is interesting to note in this connection that Glogora means best coal in the Welsh language.

On June 10, 1900, Mr. Messenger was married at Williamson, West Virginia, to Miss Jessie Windle, a daughter of J. M. and Sophronia (Lake) Windle, farming people of Taylor County, West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Messenger have four children, namely: Burl, Hale, Lake, and Doris Eleanor. They suffered a sad bereavement in the death of their eldest son, Robert M. Messenger, on May 22, 1917. They have two children, Paul and Clarence Ogden, Jr. The former died in January, 1919, and the latter two weeks later.

Mr. Messenger belongs to the Chapter and Scottish Rite of the Masonic fraternity. Brought up as he was in a strictly religious home and taken to the services of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, it was but natural that he should early unite with that denomination, and he has continued one of its most zealous members.

Outside of his home and business ties his chief interest is his church and he is a generous contributor to it of time and money.

COL. WILLIAM ROBERT MARSEE. On Owens Branch of Big Brush Creek, six miles southeast of Barboursville, Knox County, lies the fine old homestead farm which figures as the birthplace of Wm. R. Marsee, who is vice president of the National Bank of John A. Black, and who is prominently concerned also in coal mining enterprises in this section of the state, besides which he has developed a substantial business as a contractor in road construction and street paving. It is thus due that in this publication Mr. Marsee be accorded recognition as a progressive business man of large and varied interests and as a citizen of distinctive loyalty and public spirit.

The birth of Mr. Marsee occurred on the 29th of October, 1841, on the old homestead mentioned above, and he is a representative of an honored family that was founded in Southeastern Kentucky in the pioneer days, his paternal great-grandfather, Rev. Thomas Marsee, having been a pioneer clergyman of the Baptist Church in this section of the state and having also developed a productive farm in Bell County, where he continued to reside until his death. His son, Chadwell, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born on the old home farm on Yellow Creek, Bell County, in the year 1807, and was one of the venerable and honored citizens of Knox County at the time of his death in 1890. His active career was one of close and effective association with farm enterprise, through the medium of which he contributed his quota to the good fortune of the majority of Bell and Knox counties, in each of which he had representative farm interests during his residence within their respective borders. His wife, whose name was Drusilla Burkett, passed her entire life in Bell County. Their son, W. D., father of him whose name initiates this review, was born in Harlan County, in November, 1835, his parents having maintained their home in that county for a comparatively short period and having removed to Knox County when he was a boy. In this latter county he was reared to manhood, here his marriage occurred, here he became a substantial farmer, and here he continued to reside on his home farm situated three miles southeast of Barbourville until his death on August 21, 1888. Of conditions that existed in this section of Kentucky in the period of his boyhood an idea is conveyed in the statement that he was a sturdy lad of receptive mind when he and his brother James first had the privilege of seeing a regular wagon. The vehicle was being driven by its owner near the Four Fork of the Cumberland River when it was descried by the two wondering boys, and they followed the wagon a distance of three miles, waiting to observe what they were sure would prove a natural result—that the rear wheels of the wagon would overtake and run over the front wheels. Mr. Marsee marked the passing years with worthy achievement and worthy living; his political allegiance being given to the republic he was reared in, and he has been an steadfast member of the Missionary Baptist Church. As a young man Mr. Marsee married Miss Arilla Owens, who was born on her parent's home farm on Owens Branch of the Cumberland River in Knox County in 1836, that branch of the river having been named in honor of her father. Mrs. Marsee survived her husband by about seven years and remained on the home farm until her death in 1921. Of the surviving children, is a prosperous farmer near Artemus, Knox County; Joseph D. has for the past thirty years been successfully engaged in farm enterprise near Rogersville, Greene County, Missouri; Elizabeth, the wife of King Johnson, died in 1916 in the farm which is still the place of residence of her husband. Another daughter, who now resides in the same county, is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. In 1881, on Owens Branch of the Cumberland River, Knox County, was the wife of Frank Hamilton, who now resides at Warren, this county, and who is actively identified with coal mining; Mary Jane first became the wife of Calvin Lawson, a farmer and school teacher, and after his death she became the wife of Rev. Adam petry, a clergyman of the Baptist Church, and now resides in the same county. Another daughter, who now resides in the same county, is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. In 1881, on Owens Branch of the Cumberland River, Knox County, where his death occurred, his widow being now a resident of Hazard, Perry County; W.R., immediate subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Annie, whose death occurred in 1911, on Brush Creek, Knox County, was the wife of Thomas Gibson, who is still a farmer and coal miner in that locality; Virginia Belle is the wife of William Ricketts, who is a carpenter by vocation, and they reside at Barbourville; George M. resides at Wheeler, Knox County, in which vicinity he is engaged in coal mining; Thomas, a locomotive engineer, resides at Artemus, Knox County; Cordelia is the wife of Sherman Sharp, a farmer and coal mine foreman in the State of Illinois.

The rural schools of Knox County were the modum through which William E. Marsee received his youthful education, and he continued to be associated in the activities of his father's farm until he was twenty-two years of age. Thereafter he gave his attention to independent farm enterprise in his native county until 1906, when he sold his farm and engaged in the real estate business and in the operating of coal mines on Brush Creek, this county. In 1910 he established his residence at Barbourville, and he is still prominently identified with coal mining operations. He was the first to operate a mine in the Hazard coal field in Perry County, and in this connection effected the organization of the Blue Grass Coal Corporation, to which he sold his mine on the 3d of September, 1917. He is now the owner of a mine at Highspire, Harlan County, and this mine has an output capacity of 300 tons daily. He is interested also in a mine on Beaver Creek, Floyd County, this mine having a productive capacity of 500 tons daily. Mr. Marsee, as previously noted, is vice president of the National Bank of John A. Black, an old and substantial institution at Barbourville that had its inception in the private bank established many years ago by John A. Black. As a coincidence Mr. Marsee at the time of this writing is giving his attention to the construction of Kentucky rock-asphalt paving on the streets of Barbourville, his contract in this connection being one of $50,000. He owns and occupies one of the modern and attractive residences of Barbourville, the house, on Depot Street, being of two stories, with eight rooms and with the best of modern equipment and facilities. A man of seemingly unheeding capacity for work, Mr. Marsee is finding time to give effective service as police judge of Barbourville, and he is chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Barbourville Baptist Institute of which specific record is given on other pages of this work. He is a deacon in the Baptist Church in his home city, and is chairman of the executive board of trustees of the new Baptist Church edifice at Barbourville. In politics he is a stanch republican. He was colonel on Governor James D. Block's staff, Governor Block being a democrat and Mr. Marsee a republican. He is also president of the Southeastern Kentucky Fox Hunters' Association. Mr. Marsee was vigorous and characteristically loyal in the furthering of all local war activities during the period of American participation in the World war, he having served on committees in charge of drives in support of the Liberty and Victory Loans, and War Savings Stamps, Red Cross work, etc. He was a member of the Local Advisory Board with which field of work Mr. Marsee worked through the former and devised ways and means for the advancing of patriotic service along all lines. He gave individual financial cooperation of liberal order, especially in subscribing for the Government bond issues and Savings Stamps. The year 1887 recorded the marriage of Mr. Marsee to Miss Hannah Ricketts, who likewise was born and reared in Knox County and who is a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. W.L. Ricketts of this county. The Rickettses, like Mr. and Mrs. Marsee, have been interested citizens of this county at the time of their deaths. Mr. Ricketts was long numbered among the representative farmers of Knox County and was a veteran of the Civil war, in which he gave gallant service in defense of the Union, his service with the Forty-ninth Kentucky Volunteer, Infantry having covered a period of three years. Mr. and Mrs. Marsee have a fine family of children, and in the following record it will be noted that they gave four of their sons to the nation's service in the great World War: Spencer, eldest of the children, resides at Harlan and is a machinist in coal mines in that vicinity. J.W. remains at the parental home and is in charge of construction work in connection with his father's street-paving contract enterprise; H.W. has been actively identified with coal mining operations in this part of Kentucky. He had the highest physical examination of any boy in the county, and became a member of the Eighty-fourth Engineering Corps of the United States Army, with the rank of sergeant, and was in active service in France for a period of eleven months. P.M., who is chief clerk in the meat market of the Steel Company at Bernham, Harlan County, enlisted in the United States Navy when the nation became involved in the World war, his training having been received at the Great Lakes Training Station near the City of Chicago, and thereafter he was in service as a machinist on the battleship Maine on the coast of Cuba during the winter of 1918-19. Thereafter he was in transport service on vessels.

John Parker conducts one of the leading mercantile establishments in the thriving little City of Barbourville, Knox County, and is known and valued as one of the progressive merchants and loyal and public spirited citizens of the county seat of his native county. He was born on the home farm of his parents, on Little Poplar Creek, this county, on the 2d of October, 1871, and in that same locality his father, Alexander Parker, passed his entire life, his birth having occurred in 1843 and his death in 1906. His entire active career was spent upon the farm, Stony Fork of Little Poplar Creek, and he was one of the substantial and highly honored citizens of his native county at the time of his death. His political adherence was with the republican party, and lasting honor attaches to his name by reason of his loyal service as a soldier of the Union in the Civil war. He served somewhat more than three years as a member of the 18th Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and among the many important engagements in which he took part were the battles of Chickamauga, Stone River and Gettysburg and the siege of Vicksburg. He was an honored member of the Grand Army of the Republic at the time of his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Martha F. Warfield, was born in Knox County, on the Cumberland River, in 1849, and now resides at Barbourville, the county seat; they have the children detailed above who resides at Gray, Kentucky, and is one of the representative physicians and surgeons of Knox County; Gordon is a prosperous farmer of the Stony Fork district of the county; John, of this review, was the next in order of birth; W. R. is a merchant in the City of Yakima, Washington; Dr. A. L. is engaged in the practice of dentistry at Barbourville; Dinah is the wife of Joseph S. Davis, a farmer near Rain, Knox County; Pleasant resides upon a part of the old home farm and is well upholding the prestige of the family name in connection with agricultural industry; Lucinda is the wife of A. B. Partin, a farmer near Corbin, Knox County; and Jemima is the wife of W. A. Campbell, another of the successful farmers of Knox County, near Corbin.

After profiting by the advantages of the rural schools of his native county, John M. entered Cumberland College, Williamsburg, in which institution he continued his studies until he was twenty-four years of age, though, in the meanwhile, at the age of eighteen years, he had initiated his successful service as a teacher in the rural schools of his native county. His active work in the pedagogic profession was continued for a period of seven years, and in 1897 he was elected clerk of the County Court, of which office, by re-election in 1901, he continued the incumbent until 1906. In 1903, in addition to his official service, he had established a general merchandise business at Barbourville in association with his brother W. R. The enterprise was conducted under the firm name of Parker Brothers until 1905, when W. R. Parker sold his interest to Benjamin E. Parker, a cousin, whereupon the firm title of Parker & Parker was adopted. With the splendid growth of the enterprise it was found a matter of commercial expediency to incorporate the business in 1908, and under the title of the Parker Mercantile Company the principals of the concern erected the Parker Building at the corner of Knox and Liberty streets and established the business in large and attractive quarters in this modern structure. In 1915 the partnership relations between John and Benjamin E. Parker were dissolved, and thereafter John Parker was a successful traveling salesman throughout the United States. He died on the 8th of June, 1918, as a representative of Engelhard & Sons, importers of and wholesale dealers in teas, coffees and spices, with headquarters in the City of Louisville.

In March, 1918, Mr. Parker established his present enterprise at Barbourville, as a dealer in men's furnishing goods, hats, caps, etc., and his ability and personal popularity have been potent forces in placing him among the leading business of this order in Knox County, the modern and well equipped store being eligible situated on the Public Square.

Mr. Parker is aligned loyally in the ranks of the republican party, and he and his wife are zealous members of the Baptist Church at Barbourville, in which he is serving as a deacon and also as treasurer. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is the oldest member of the lodge in the county, and Order of Red Men. He is a member of the Board of Trustees of the Barbourville Baptist Institute, and served twelve years as president of this board. He is a director and also the secretary of the Barbourville Cemetery Company, which has developed the local cemetery into one of distinctive beauty. In addition to owning the attractive residence which he occupies on College Street he is the owner of a farm which was the place of his birth, and thus continued his alliance with productive farm industry in his native county. Mr. Parker was alert and patriotic in furthering the various local service in connection with American participation in the World war, and his personal contributions to the purchase of the Government war bonds were of maximum liberality as gauged by his available financial means.

The death of Mr. Parker is a great loss to his family, to the residents of Barbourville, and to the people of Knox County. Mrs. Parker has four children: Harold, who was born October 6, 1902, is a student in Marion Military Institute at Marion, Alabama; Mary Ellen, who was born September 9, 1904, is attending the Barbourville Baptist Institute, as are also Anna Elizabeth, born in 1906, and Miriam Kathryn, born June 5, 1909.

Mr. Parker is a son of one of the old and honored families of Knox County, with whose history the family name has been closely linked for more than a century. His grandfather, John Parker, was born in the Little Poplar Fork district of this county in 1816, and on the Stony Fork of this stream his death occurred in 1891. He developed the fine old homestead farm on Stony Fork, and was one of the substantial agriculturists and influential citizens of his native county for many years prior to his death. He married Miss Lucinda Terrell, who was born on Indian Creek, this county, in 1815, and died at the age of eighty-three. Gordon Parker was a son of Richard Parker, who was familiarly known as Dickey Parker and of English parentage, who came from his native State of North Carolina to establish himself in pioneer farm enterprise in the Little Poplar Creek district of Knox County, his marriage having been solemnized in this county August 23, 1804, to Sarah Stephens, of German parentage. They were among the first pioneers in the Poplar Creek vicinity, and there passed the remainder of their days and are buried near the old homestead.

Andrew J. Johnson was born in a coal district, has been working in and around coal mines since he was a boy, and in recent years has played a prominent part in the coal mining development of Eastern Kentucky. In 1917 he organized and developed the mines of the Standard Elkhorn Company, and was president of the corporation until it was reorganized in 1920 and he is now its vice president and general manager. This company has a lease on 1,327 acres and has ten openings with all the modern machinery and equipment for profitable and efficient mining operations. The company has an extensive market for its cannel coal, found in a vein twenty inches thick. Cannel coal contains four per cent ash. The cannel coal underlies a stratum of bituminous coal from forty-four to forty-six inches thick.

Mr. Johnson was born in Tioga County, Pennsylvania, October 10, 1857, son of Lawrence and Sophia (Anderson) Johnson. His father has spent all his active life as a coal miner and in the coal districts of Pennsylvania. He is now living in his eighty-first year, while the mother passed away July 14, 1920. Andrew J. is one of a family of seven sons and one daughter, all living but one son. Two of his brothers are also coal miners.

Andrew J. Johnson acquired his schooling before he was ten years of age, though in the routine of his business he has been a student of text books and through correspondence courses and by study and experience has become a mining engineer of unusual ability, as his career indicates. At the age of ten he was working in the mines as a trapper boy, and at fourteen he ran the first coal mine in the young county. He Johnson was promoted to foreman in 1866 and in 1901 to mine superintendent. In 1902 he became general superintendent for the J. H. Weaver & Company with headquarters at Philadelphia. A year later he was appointed district superintendent for the Consolidation Company in the Garrett district. He remained there until 1904 when he was sent to the Derby mine in the mining district of the county. In 1906-7 he was again a mine superintendent in Pennsylvania and came to Kentucky in the western fields as general superintendent under a receivership. For two years he had supervision of some large mines in that section and after that until 1910 was a consulting engineer for Standard Elkhorn.

From there he came into Eastern Kentucky for the Consolidation Company at Van Leer on Miller Creek in Johnson County, and in 1915 he began his experience in the Beaver Creek district, where he organized and developed the mines of the Stanley Coal Company, and later was identified with the Duncan Elkhorn Company and later organized the Standard Elkhorn Company. In addition he has developed other mines, including the Jack's Creek Coal Mine and is president of that company.

In 1887 Mr. Johnson married Christina Olsen. Their two sons are both practical coal men. John O. is superintendent and engineer for the Standard Elkhorn Company, while William H. is electrician and machinist in charge of the machinery at the Jack's Creek mine.

James O. Evans. The farming activities of James O. Evans, eight miles north of Winchester, are perhaps chiefly distinguished by his specialty as a grower of blue grass seed. He is one of the largest producers of this seed in the state, and usually has several hundred acres devoted to the crop.

In the house he and his family still occupy he was born April 23, 1877. This is the old Captain Wright farm and close to the Bourbon County line. His parents were John and Eliza (Bian) Evans. His grandfather was also named James O. Evans and his great-grandfather was George Evans. The coal hunter Archie Evans came out to Kentucky in 1800 as representative of other parties in looking up lands and he acquired land of his own on Donaldson Creek in Clark County, and remained there the rest of his life. He brought his son John with him from Culpeper County, Virginia, he being then five years old, having been born May 29, 1795. John married Sally, daughter of Dr. Benjamin Donley and both of them spent their lives on the old homestead in Clark County, where he died at the age of seventy-five and his wife at eighty. Damarias Evans spent her last years in the home of her son, John. She had four children, the sons being Thomas and John, while the daughters were Sally, who married David Bratton, and lived near the old homestead, and Mary, who became the wife of William Allen and removed to Green Castle, Indiana. The son, Thomas Evans, spent his life near North Middletown, where he died at the age of seventy-five. His two daughters were Mrs. William M. Jones and Mrs. A. G. Jones, both of North Middletown.

John Evans, father of James O. Evans, was born in Donelson's Creek November 26, 1826, and grew up in that vicinity. At the age of thirty-seven he married Eliza Bean and in 1867 he bought the Captain Wright farm, which then contained about four hundred forty-five acres. The house on the farm had been built by Captain Wright, is a stone structure, but has been remodeled by subsequent owners. It was one of the first houses in that section to have glass windows and some of these windows with the sash are still in use. The frame timbers are made of black locust and walnut. John Evans, who lived on the farm until his death on February 24, 1907, was extensively engaged in raising fat stock, particularly cattle. He was a leading and prosperous farmer and for eight years was postmaster of the post office, and he was a democratic in politics. For years he made a practice of exhibiting his thoroughbred jacks at local fairs. He was also a stockholder and director in several banks. John and Eliza Evans had seven children: Sally, who married Nelson Mason and lived on an adjoining farm; Mary, wife of Cass P. Goff; Anna, now living at home with her mother, is the widow of Dr. E. H. Cooper; John T., a pharmacist of Portland, Kentucky; Dr. Robert; Billy Boy; and Damie, wife of C. C. Hadden of Bourbon County. James O. Evans has given his active years to the management of the home farm and now directs the cultivation and handling of 725 acres, a very valuable property. This includes the old Evans homestead, which he owns himself. Mr. Evans has 450 acres in blue grass for the production of seed, and his annual crop is about five thousand bushels. In addition he is extensively interested in raising fat cattle, sheep and hogs chiefly. Mr. Evans has served as a school trustee, is an elder and deacon in the Christian Church at North Middletown, Kentucky. He has also been much interested in the work of High Church, and was an officer of Governor Beckham as a delegate to a Game Conservation Convention at Norfolk, Virginia. Mr. Evans is a stockholder in the Clark County National Bank, Citizens National Bank, and Peoples State Bank and Trust Company of Winchester and the North Middletown Deposit Bank of North Middletown.

At the age of twenty-five he married Mary Best Tarr of Bourbon County. Her father was the late William Tarr, of Lexington, one of the prominent citizens of the state. Mr. and Mrs. Evans have three sons, William K., J. Hughes and Iras C.

Beverly P. Jones, M. D. On a picturesque mountain-side farm near Manchester, Clay County, Kentucky, Dr. Beverly Patterson Jones was born September 1920.
HISTORY OF KENTUCKY

18, 1880, and there was little local augury to indicate that with the passing years he was destined to gain place as a leader in the profession of medicine and surgery of another Kentucky county. He proved, however, the artificer of his own destiny, chose his vocation in life, prepared himself thoroughly for his exacting profession and is now established in active and successful practice at Barbourville as one of the able and influential physicians and surgeons and popular citizens of Knox County. The Jones family was founded in Clay County; and besides the exigent desire of the fact that here Milton Jones, grandfather of the doctor, was born and passed his entire life. He was one of the substantial farmers of the county at the time of his death, his home farm having been four miles east of Manchester. On this farm now resides his son Preston, who owns the property and who has resided in that vicinity from the time of his birth, which occurred in the year 1881. His farm operations are conducted on an extensive scale and he is a leader in progressive industry of this important order in his native county. He is a democrat in politics, and while he has had no desire for political preference he has at all times been liberal and public-spirited and taken loyal interest in community affairs. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah Hounchell, was born on a farm near Goose Creek, five miles east of Manchester, Clay County, in 1856, and is a representative of one of the best known families of that county. Of the children of this union the eldest is Montgomery, who resides at London, Laurel County, and is a construction foreman in the service of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad; Dr. Beverly P. of this review, was the next in order of birth; Rachel became the wife of Gabriel Dezm, who is a farmer six miles east of Manchester. She died in her death of cancer in 1913, her husband having subsequently contracted a second marriage, with Miss Maude Herd; Joe died on the old homestead farm of his parents in 1915, having been associated in the work and management of the place.

Supplemental to the discipline which he gained in the public schools of his native county was that which Dr. Beverly P. Jones acquired in the St. Bennet Memorial College at London, Laurel County, in which he completed the work of the junior year. He then entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, prosecuted his studies with characteristic earnestness and receptiveness, and was graduated as a member of the class of 1900. After thus receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he established his residence in September of the same year, at Manchester, Clay County, where he served his practical professional novitiate. On the 4th of March of the following year he was retained as surgeon for the Coalport Coal Company, of Coalport, Knox County, where he continued his service in this capacity until the spring of 1921. In 1909 he became official surgeon also for the Trosper Coal Company at Trosper, Knox County, and in 1915 he extended his professional functions by association with the Coopertown Coal Company at Warren, Knox County. He continued his service as surgeon for these three coal-mining corporations until the 14th of April, 1921, and in the meanwhile he had accorded similar service to the Wheeler Coal Company at Anchor and Trosper, with which he became thus associated in April, 1915. He served simultaneously as surgeon for the Roth Coal Company at White Oak and in addition spread his facilities upon his attention in these connections, he developed also a large private practice in an extended rural district. He was thus engaged at the time of the great epidemic of influenza in 1918-19, and in the former year he treated 1,600 cases of influenza, while in 1910 he had 300 cases. It can readily be understood that his high sense of professional stewardship has been on a parity with his earnest and effective service, and few practitioners have worked harder or more faithfully. On the 14th of April, 1921, Doctor Jones retired from the practice of medicine and entered upon the medium of which he had gained broad and varied clinical experience of much value, and it was at this time that he established his residence at Barbourville, where he is meeting with the success that is his just due as a skilled physician and surgeon and as a citizen of sterling characteristics. He maintains well appointed offices in rooms over the Cole & Hughes department store Oldfield, and is the recipient of new field of professional work one of most inviting order. He is identified with the Knox County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He has purchased and occupies a modern residence on Depot Street, and is the owner also of an improved building lot on Pine Street. At Barbourville he is a stockholder in the National Bank of J. B. Black, one of the most substantial financial institutions of this part of the state, and he is a stockholder also in the Cooper Ridge Coal Company, at Highspoint, Harlan County. Doctor Jones is aligned loyally in the ranks of the democratic party and is affiliated with Mountain Lodge No. 187, Free and Accepted Masons; Barbourville Chapter No. 137, Royal Arch Masons; and London Commandery of Knights Templars. He was born in Barbourville, Laurel County, on the 21st of December, 1915, son of J. A. Bryant and Miss Hannah King, daughter of the late John B. and Serrilda King, the father having been a representative farmer in Jackson County and having served a number of years as a county official. Doctor and Mrs. Jones have no children.

SHEPARD H. BRYANT. It is not so wonderful for a man to succeed when everything turns out right, when each investment yields a fair percentage of profit, and every effort is crowned with success. When, however, adversity falls to his lot and he still perseveres, then a man has every reason to be satisfied with his achievements. Shepard H. Bryant, who owned the largest dry goods house between Louisville and Nashville, and was recognized as the embodiment of the prosperity of Scottsville, was one who rose in spite of obstacles, and owed his success to his grit, determination and faith in his own capabilities.

Mr. Bryant was a native son of Allen County, having been born within its confines December 9, 1870. His father, A. J. Bryant, was born at Scottsville in 1846. He was married in Nashville, and from then until 1866, when he came to Allen County, he lived on a farm near Red Boiling Springs. Both in Tennessee and in Allen County he operated as an extensive farmer, but retired in 1892 and moved to Scottsville, which continued to be his place of residence until he was claimed by death. From the organization of the church he was a faithful member and a part of its support. He was a steward of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, long was one of its sincere members. He married Mary Ross, who was born in Tennessee in 1836, and died at Scottsville in 1912. Their children were as follows: O. S., who is a retired financier of Scottsville; Sis, who died near Scottsville, married Montgomery Oliphant, a farmer, who died in Texas; John, who is a farmer of Allen County; William, who was a merchant, died at Scottsville when fifty-six years old; James K., who was a physician and surgeon, died at Nashville, Ten- nessee, aged thirty-four years; A. C., who is a mer- chant of Scottsville; Lou, who is unmarried, lives at Scottsville; and Shepheard H., who was the youngest brother.

Shepheard H. Bryant was reared on his father's farm until he was eighteen years old, when he established his present mercantile venture in a very small way. Twice his store was wiped out by devastating fire, but each time he went right to work to re-establish his business, and at the time of his death had the Public Square, his trade having assumed vast proportions. Mr. Bryant made a special feature of the service he rendered his customers, many of whom continued with him during all of his years in business.

Like his father, he was a republican. At one time he belonged to the Woodmen of the World, but was not connected with any fraternity at the time of his death. He owned a comfortable modern residence on Market Street. During the late war he took a zealous part in all of the local war activities, assisting in all of the drives, buying bonds and War Savings Stamps, and contributing to all of the various organizations to the extent of his means.

In 1882 Mr. Bryant married at Scottsville Miss Mollie Pitchford, daughter of J. F. and Hellen (Brown) Pitchford. Mr. Pitchford was county super- intendant of schools of Allen County at the time of his demise. Mrs. Pitchford died in 1903 at Scottsville. Mr. and Mrs. Bryant had three children, namely: Curtis, who was born September 1, 1898, is an oil well driller, and lives at Scottsville; at Scottsville, Ken- tucky, in 1909, he married, for the second time, Miss Ethel Garrett, daughter of Abner and Alice (Walc- lace) Garrett. Two children were born, one dying in infancy and the other still living. Randall the second son of Mr. and Mrs. Bryant was born November 19, 1912, and Barry was born July 12, 1918.

It was not only as a merchant that Mr. Bryant rendered a service to his community, for he was never backward in giving an effective support to all measures looking to a permanent bettering of existing conditions, and very few men have done more in this way than he. Sane and reliable, he of course did not favor any waste of the taxpayers' money, but he did believe that the progressive city must keep abreast with the times in the way of public improvements, and endeavored to bring others of his fellow citizens to his way of thinking by his results. Such men as he are a valuable adjunct to any section for their influence is always constructive and elevating.

The death of Mr. Bryant occurred August 20, 1921, at Scottsville.

Joseph Birchel Campbell, who is engaged in the successful practice of law at Barbourville, is one of the prominent and influential younger members of the bar of his native county, which is one of the most populous and impor- tant in Southeastern Kentucky. He was born on a farm near Barbourville, on the 7th of August, 1881, and is a scion in the fourth generation of a family whose name has been worthy linked with civic and industrial history in this county. At the early pioneer days, his great-grandfather Campbell, a native of North Carolina, having been one of the very early settlers in Knox County, where he reclaimed a farm from the practical wilderness and where he passed the remainder of his life. His son, William M., who, though not of German lineage, gained the local sobri- quity of "Dutchy Billie," having been born since the turn of the 19th century, and was a farmer in the locality during the major part of his active career, though he passed the closing period of his life in the State of Indiana, where he died in 1910, near Orwell.

His whose name initiates this review is a son of John A. and America (Thompson) Campbell, both of whom were born in the Indian Creek section of Knox County, the former on the 2nd of August, 1849, and the latter on the 17th of September, 1850. They were married in Barbourville, and their fine homestead farm lies on Indian Creek, in the locality that is endowed to them by the gracious memories and associations of many years. John A. Campbell was born on this farm and has long been known as one of the most progressive and successful exponents of agricultural industry in the county. His experiments in the cure of hogs have been identified with extensive lumbering operations. He is a democrat in his political allegiance, and while he has never desired political office he has wielded much influence in community affairs as a citizen of sterling character and strong mentality. Of the children the eldest is W. H., who resides on his farm on Indian Creek, Knox County, and who is engaged also in the mercantile business and the manufacturing of lumber; Mary is the widow of M. B. Cooper and remains on his home farm on Indian Creek; Joel died at the age of fifteen years; Elizabeth became the wife of Jacob Engle, a farmer and merchant in the Indian Creek dis- trict, where he died at the age of fifty years, she having been born on this farm in 1858; and Edward, who is the wife of G. M. Cooper, a farmer and merchant in that same part of Knox County; and Joseph Birchel of this sketch, is the youngest of the number.

The discipline which Joseph B. Campbell received in the public schools of his native county was supple- mented by a course in the Kentucky State Normal School at Richmond, in which he was graduated in 1897, and by the period of attendance of the University of Kentucky in the senior year. He forthwith entered the law de- partment of the University of Kentucky, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1912, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He had simultaneously pursued a course in the academic or literary de- partment of the university, and in the following year, 1913, he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts. In the autumn of the latter year he returned to his native county and became a candidate on the democratic ticket for the office of county superintendent of schools. He made a splendid showing at the polls but was defeated. In the following spring he established his residence at Barbourville, where for the ensuing six years he was associated with W. D. Tubb, and during the term, on the 1st of December, 1919, opened an office on Knox Street, on the Public Square, where he has since maintained his headquarters in the individual practice of his profession, in which he has a representative clientele and has developed a most substantial law business. He has proved himself a vital and resourceful lawyer, has appeared in connection with im- portant causes presented in the courts of this section of the state, and is one of the progressive and public- spirited citizens of the thriving county seat. He is president of the Harlan Gen Coal Company, which is incorporated for $60,000, and which is successfully operating mines at Ages, Harlan County, its output capac- ity being 300 tons a day. He is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Barbourville, and also a director of John A. Black National Bank of this city, besides which he is associated with J. J. Tye in the ownership and conducting of a leading fire-insurance agency at Bar- bourville. With characteristic zeal and loyalty he assisted in the local drives in support of the Government war loans and other patriotic activities in his native community during the four years of the World War. His personal contributions to the various causes were limited only by his available means, his subscriptions to the war bonds and savings stamps having been liberal, and his having been generous contributions to the work of the Red Cross, Salvation Army, Young Men's Christian Association, etc. Mr. Campbell is staunchly aligned in the ranks of the re-
S. B. Dishman has a record of many years of effective achievement in the legal profession and as a judge of the Circuit Court of the district comprising Knox, Clay, Laurel, Jackson, Owsley and Leslie counties, while further evidence of his commanding place in popular confidence and esteem is that of his having been elected by the Legislature of Kentucky to the high administrative position as mayor of his fine little home city of Barbourville, judicial center of Knox County.

Judge Dishman was born at Barbourville, his present stage of professional activity, and the date of his nativity was March 29, 1856. His father, John Dishman, was born in the State of Virginia, in 1822, and was a son of William Dishman, likewise a native of and passed the closing period of her life at Barbourville, he having died in Jessamine County. John Dishman was reared and educated in Central Kentucky, and in 1852 established his residence at Barbourville. For many years he was here engaged in the practice of law as one of the really distinguished members of the bar of this section of the state, besides which he was an influential figure in the councils of the democratic party in Southern Kentucky. He was, perhaps, as a first man in Jessamine County and thereafter was engaged in the practice of his profession in the City of Lexington, where his marriage occurred, and where, as a strong supporter of the Confederate Government during the period of the Civil war, he was held virtually as a prisoner by Federal authorities during a part of the war. He thereafter served as commonwealth attorney of the mountain districts of Kentucky, serving Knox, Haenn, Leslie, Perry, Breathitt, Owsley, Clay, Jackson and Laurel counties, his incumbency of this office having covered a period of six years. He also gave effective service as special judge, and held court in the mountain district of Southeastern Kentucky many different times. He was actively affiliated with the Masonic fraternity for many years prior to his death, which occurred at Barbourville in 1894.

James H. was a man of important business interests at Barbourville at the time of his death, when fifty years of age; Laura is the wife of A. K. Cook, who is engaged in the practice of law at St. Petersburg, Florida; Judge Dishman of this review was the next in order of birth; Carrie, who resides at Barbourville, is the widow of John P. Dickinson, who was a prosperous business man at Middleboro, Bell County, at the time of his death; Lillie is the wife of Dr. C. W. Sanborn, a farmer at North Yakima, Washington; Virginia is the wife of W. W. Stephens, who is general manager of the street railway system of Kansas City, Missouri; and Annie is the wife of William McKee Kelly, who is engaged in the real estate business at St. Petersburg, Florida.

Judge S. B. Dishman acquired his preliminary education in the public schools at Barbourville and thereafter pursued a higher academic course of study in Tusculum College, near Greeneville, Tennessee. In preparing himself for the bar he entered the law department of Central University at Richmond, Kentucky, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1877. His appointment as Justice of the peace was virtually coincident with his admission to the bar of his native state, and he forthwith with engaged in practice at Barbourville, where he now has prestige as a veritable dean of the bar of Knox County. He long controlled a large and representative general law business, but he now confines himself to civil practice, the while his valuable counsel is frequently sought in connection with criminal causes.

He was appointed circuit judge to fill the unexpired term of Judge J. H. Tinsley, resigned, and under this appointment he continued his service on the bench for a period of six months. Judge Dishman now resides at his home in the John Dishman Building on Knox Street. He has been a leader not only in the local councils of the democratic party but also in community sentiment and action in his native city and county. He was appointed circuit judge to fill the unexpired term of Judge J. H. Tinsley, resigned, and under this appointment he continued his service on the bench for a period of six months. At a later period he was again called upon to fill out a similar unexpired term of six months on the bench of the judicial circuit comprising Knox, Clay, Laurel, Jackson, Owsley and Leslie counties—the same district that had engaged his previous administration in this office. Judge Dishman had the distinction of being elected the first mayor of Barbourville after it had received a city charter, and he served two years as such. Thereafter he served two years as a member of the City Council. Both he and his wife are earnest and valued members of the Christian Church in their home city, where also he is affiliated with Mountain Lodge No. 187, Free and Accepted Masons, and Barbourville Chapter No. 137, Royal Arch Masons, besides which he has long been an appreciative and honored member of the Kentucky State Bar Association. He is a stockholder and director in several important coal mining corporations in this section of the state and also in the Dixie Wholesale Grocery Company of Barbourville. His real estate interests include his attractive home property on Knox Street, where he has a modern brick house of seven rooms; the building in which his law offices are maintained, on Knox Street; another residence property at Barbourville; his farm of thirty-five acres lying within the corporate limits of the city; and the tract, 5 1/2 miles west of Barbourville, that is widely known as Dishman Springs, the fine mineral waters of which attract many visitors, both for the benefit to be gained from the medicinal water and also to enjoy the attractions of the beautiful place, this farm estate comprising 300 acres, and the judge and his family have annually spent a summer as a summer home. In addition to these noteworthy properties Judge Dishman also owns 300 acres of coal land in Knox County.
American participation in the World war received the earnest and fruitful co-operation of Judge Dishman, who aided actively in the campaigns in support of the Government war loans, etc., made liberal subscriptions to these loans and to all subsidiary war causes, and gave effective service as chairman of the Knox County Draft Board.

At Barbourville, in the year 1878, was solemnized the marriage of Judge Dishman to Miss Annie Hinkle, who died in 1912, leaving an only daughter, Bertha. Mrs. Dishman was buried at Barbourville, Kentucky, both of whom are deceased, Mr. Hinkle having been the owner of valuable farm and mill properties and having been one of the prominent and honored citizens of Knox County at the time of his death.

In conclusion of this review is given brief record concerning the children of Judge and Mrs. Dishman: Capt. E. B. Dishman, D. D. S., is a graduate in dentistry but gives much of his time and attention to oil-producing operations, in which field of industry he is handling properties in Columbia, South America, his home being still at Barbourville, where he was born and reared. He represented Knox County as a gallant young soldier in the World war, in which he became captain of a brigade of artillery and had command of the regiment for the remaining three months of active service in France. Laura is the wife of J. A. Mc- Dermott, a progressive real estate broker and coal operator, their home being at Barbourville, William G. Likewise remains in his native city, where he is engaged in the practice of law. He was in service in the United States Navy during one year of the American participation and service, and is a graduate in law by profession, is employed in the war department at Washington, D. C., and was in the nation's military service during one year of the war, he having attained to the rank of second lieutenant and having been stationed in the great military camp at Battle Creek, Michigan, during the greater part of his period of service.

JOSPEH H. ALLEN, M. D. The substantial results of years of effort, intelligently directed by a trained mind, are gratifying to the one who has devoted his life to carrying out the highest ideals of a certain calling. No man can be greater than his appreciation of the debt he owes the world, and the professional men who rise highest are those who rendevoir towards their fellow-men. One of the leading medical men of Floyd County, whose career shows marked capability, and who is also well known in business circles as president of the Sandy Valley Hardware Company, is Dr. Joseph H. Allen, of Langley.

Doctor Allen belongs to one of the old and honored families of the Beaver Creek Community, where he was born May 20, 1888, a son of Thomas G. and Susan (Stephens) Allen, and a grandson of Samuel and Sarah Allen, natives of Kentucky. Thomas G. Allen was born on Beaver Creek, near Alphoretta, December 5, 1844, and as a young man engaged in the family occupation of farming. Through good management and wise investment he greatly added to his inheritance, and at one time was the owner of 3,000 acres on Beaver Creek. He took an active part in the affairs of the community, and as a friend of education served capably in the office of school trustee. He died in 1912. Mr. Allen married Susan Stephens, daughter of Samuel and Sarah Stephens, and they became the parents of three sons and three daughters: Rosa, the wife of Hon. W. P. Leslie, district judge of Colorado, Texas; Dr. J. S. Allen, of Bosco, Floyd County; Charles E., who is engaged in farming in the vicinity of Northern, this state; Schuyler C., also a farmer at Northern; and Octavia, the wife of Towne Combs, a civil engineer of Langley.

Joseph H. Allen received his early education in the home schools and completed his literary training at Valparaiso, Indiana. He then began preparation for his profession, and June 30, 1910, was graduated from the medical department of the University of Kentucky, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. During his college days, Doctor Allen established a splendid record as an athlete, and has always maintained his love for manly and invigorating pastimes, in which he still excels. In 1910 he commenced the practice of his profession at Langley and here has built up a large practice. He wields the scalpel and surgery and established himself firmly in the confidence of the public and in the esteem of his fellow-practitioners. A man of broad ideas, comprehensive knowledge and varied ability, he has put to good use the talents which he possesses and has made himself a useful member of society. He holds membership in the Floyd County Medical Society and the Kentucky State Medical Society, and as a fraternalist belongs to Wayland Lodge, F. & A. M. In politics he is an adherent of republican principles. Early in the World's war, Doctor Allen joined the Medical Corps, and after training at Fort Oglethorpe received a commission as first lieutenant. He is present of the Sandy Valley Hardware Company, a large and growing concern at Allen, and has various other business enterprises.

On November 12, 1912, Doctor Allen was united in marriage with Miss Bertha May, daughter of George A. May, and to this union there have been born four children: George E., Claude L., Harriet and an infant. Mrs. Allen is a leading member of the Methodist Church.

HERMON JACKSON. Of all of the offices within the gift of a county, that of sheriff is the most responsible, and no man need hope to make a praiseworthy record unless he be courageous beyond the common run of men; quick in decision so as to meet and solve the many complexities which constantly arise; cool in judgment; wise in his estimation of human nature, and kindly in his treatment of men. He may at the same time give to his charges fair and unprejudiced treatment. All men are not fitted by nature or training to be such an official, but Hermon Jackson, the present sheriff of Butler County, is proving his worth as a citizen, and displaying just these characteristics in his work of maintaining law and order.

Hermon Jackson was born on a farm seven miles west of Morgantown, in Butler County, December 20, 1833, a son of Burrell Jackson, who was born in Muhlenberg County, Kentucky, and died in Butler County, in 1897. Brought to Butler County in childhood, he was here reared and married, and here he carried on a large farming business. Zealous as a member of the Baptist Church, he lived in his life the creed he professed, and was a fine type of Christian manhood. He married Dora Hawes, who was born in Butler County, and died in the same county in 1895. Their children were as follows: Nora, who died at the age of thirty years in Butler County, never having been married; Sheriff Jackson, who was second in order of birth; Pearl, who never married, died at the age of forty-five years; Len; who is a student of Peter Goodman, a farmer of Butler County, resides in Muhlenberg County.

Sheriff Jackson was reared on his father's farm and remained there until he had reached his seventeenth year, at which time he began working for neighboring farmers, and so continued until he was twenty-one. From 1905 until 1907 he was a school teacher in different schools in Butler County, and one at Morgantown, and in the latter year went with the Home Telephone Company at Glasgow, Kentucky, and spent a year. For the subsequent year he served as postmaster at South Hill, Butler County, and at the same time carried on a mercantile business, but in 1909 returned to Morgantown and for eight years was deputy sheriff, in that office proving so brave and ef-
Thomas D. Tinsley. One of the most beautiful and progressive little cities of the picturesque mountain district of Southeastern Kentucky is Barbourville, the judicial center of Knox County, and the people of the city have shown excellent judgment in choosing as its mayor the native son whose name initiates this paragraph and who further has prestige as one of the representative members of the bar of his native city and county.

Mr. Tinsley, who is giving a most loyal and progressive administration as chief executive of the municipal government of Barbourville, was born in this county January 27, 1889. He is a son of one of the honored and influential pioneer families of this section of the Blue Grass State, as is evident when it is recorded that his paternal grandfather, George Tinsley, was born on the site of the present Village of Middleboro, Bell County, a son of William Tinsley, who was born in that same section of Kentucky, not far from Cumberland Gap, in the year 1790, his father, William Tinsley, Sr., having been born near Salem, Virginia, a representative of a sterling family of English lineage, that was founded in the historic Old Dominion commonwealth in the Colonial period of American history. William Tinsley, Sr., became one of the very early settlers in the vicinity of the present town of Middleboro, Bell County, where he became a prosperous farmer and slave-owner and where he passed the remainder of his life and died. His wife, whose maiden name was Marie Amner. At the time of his settlement near Middleboro that section was still a part of Knox County, and he cleared the ancestral homestead and became one of the substantial and influential citizens of his native district, having passed his life in the original Knox County from which Bell County was segregated, and his career having included effective service as sheriff of Knox County at the time of the Civil War. He passed the closing years of his life at Barbourville, where his death occurred in the year 1872. His wife, whose maiden name was Mollie Craig, was born in that part of Knox County now included in Bell County, and the family home was in Bell County at the time of her death. George Tinsley, who became one of the successful representatives of farm industry in Bell County, died while the Civil war was in progress, and his wife, whose maiden name was Annie Ingram, passed her entire life in what is now Bell County. Their son, William W., father of him whose name introduces this review, was born in the Cumberland Gap District of Kentucky in the year 1829, and he married and made his old homestead farm, upon which Middleboro now stands. Since 1870 he has maintained his residence at Barbourville, and he was engaged in Government contract work in connection with star mail-route service until 1887, from which year until 1908 he held the office of clerk of the Circuit Court, a position of which he thus continued the incumbent for more than twenty years and in which he made a record almost unprecedented in duration, as well as efficiency, in this part of the state. Since his retirement from this office he has maintained a general supervision of his well-improved farm near Barbourville, and he has at the same time been a continuous service as referee in bankruptcy for this county since 1909. He is a stalwart in the local ranks of the republican party, and he and his wife are zealous members of the Christian Church, and he is affiliated with Mountain Lodge No. 187, Free and Accepted Masons, at Barbourville, and with Barbourville Chapter No. 137, Royal Arch Masons, of which he was high priest in the year 1905. His wife, whose name is Mrs. Maudie Tinsley, is the widow of William W. Tinsley, and has been for many years a member of the Democratic party, and is affiliated with the Order of the Eastern Star.

Mr. Tinsley is a deacon of the Christian Church at Barbourville, of which his wife likewise is an earnest member. He is affiliated with Mountain Lodge No. 187, Free and Accepted Masons; has served two terms as high priest of Barbourville Chapter No. 137, Royal Arch Masons, and represented the same in the Grand Chapter of Kentucky, in which he was chosen grand master of the first veil. He will be recalled from previous annotation in this review that the mayor's father is serving as high priest of the home chapter of Royal Arch Masons at the time of this writing. Mayor Tinsley is vice president of the Cumberland & Manchester Railroad Company, has substantial interests in connection with coal-mining industry in this section of the state, and on Main Street of Barbourville he owns and occupies one of the most modern and attractive residences of the city.

The mayor of the county seat city of Knox County took an active part in the furtherance of local patriotic service and co-operation during the nation's participation in the World war. He aided in all of the drives for war objects, his influence was extended also by his liberal contributions of financial order, and he was chairman of the campaign here conducted for war service under the auspices of the Associated Charities of Barbourville.

In the City of Louisville, on the 7th of October, 1914, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Tinsley to Miss Annie D. Albright, daughter of Dr. G. H. and Annie (Costello) Albright, who reside at Barbourville, where Doctor Albright is a representative physician and surgeon. Mrs. Tinsley, like her husband, is a graduate of Union College, an institution which draws much of its influence from Barbourville as one of the important educational centers of the state. Mayor and Mrs. Tinsley have one son, William Granville, who was born August 4, 1917, and who still maintains much of autocratic dominion in the pleasant family home.

Rev. Lathey E. Curby, A. B., has made a record of able and effective service both as a clergyman of the Baptist Church and as a representative figure in educational work in his native state. That he is now president of the Barbourville Baptist Institute, at the judicial center of Knox County, attests the high estimate placed upon him as a successful educator and executive, and in his present official position he is showing the characteristic enthusiasm and consecration of effort that give assurance of progressive service by the school over which he is placed in charge and of which specific mention is made in an article following this brief review of his personal career.

Prof. Lathey Ernest Curby was born in Green County, Kentucky, on the 24th of February, 1879. His paternal grandfather, George Washington Curry, was born in the State of South Carolina in 1800, and moved to Kentucky, to that county, at the time of his death in 1887, his entire active life having been passed as a farmer in that locality, where his father was a pioneer settler and a man of influence in community affairs in the early days. George W. Curry married Miss Martha Willis, who was born in Green County in 1822 and whose death occurred in 1901. Their son, A. W., was born in that county on the 28th of May, 1853, and died on his home farm near Pierce, that county, July 9, 1914, having well upheld the prestige of the family name as a substantial farmer and as an upright, loyal and liberal citizen of his native county. He served four years as magistrate in his home community, and was otherwise influential in public affairs of the county. He was, besides, a member of the Baptist Church, as is also his widow, and he was called upon to serve in virtually all official positions of lay order in the church of which he was a member and in which he was a deacon for many years. His widow, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Lucinda Sandige, was born near Crailhope, Green County, April 8, 1862, and now resides at Pierce, in that county. Of the children the subject of this review is the eldest; Henry A. is a prosperous farmer near Pierce, Green County; Thomas died on the old home farm at the age of thirty-one years; Professor D. P. is a member of the faculty of the Western State Normal School of Kentucky at Bowling Green; Rev. T. S., a clergyman of the Baptist Church, resides near Pierce, Green County; Laura died in infancy; L. C., who has been for several years principal of the consolidated school near Hardyville, Hart County, is, in 1921, a student in the State Normal School at Bowling Green, while his is the honor of having represented his native state as a gallant young soldier in the World war, he having been in France eight months and the armistice having been signed shortly after he had there been ordered to the front; Tara Selena is the wife of H. L. Sinclair, D. D. S., who is engaged in the practice of dentistry; and Prof. Elizabeth L. Curry, A. M., is a successful farmer near Pierce, Green County; and Miss Inez remains with her widowed mother. The maiden name of the first wife of A. W. Curry was Ellen O'Bannon, who was born in Hart County, and whose death occurred on the home farm of her husband in Green County, she being survived by one daughter, Ellen, who is the wife of J. E. Shirley, a farmer near Pierce, Green County.

Lathey E. Curby gained his early education in the rural schools of his native county, and his parents gave him all possible encouragement and aid in continuing his educational work. He attended the normal schools at Greensburg and Camber, and on the 6th of June, 1897, was graduated at Greensburg College at the county seat of Scott County, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. While a student in that institution he was an appreciative and popular member of the Ciceronian Literary Society. He initiated his pedagogic career when he was twenty years of age, and he gave ten years of successful service as a teacher in the rural schools in Green and Hardin counties. He taught during the years in the graded school at Cave City, Barren County, and in 1917 became principal of the high school at Smithfield, Henry County, besides which he served as pastor of the Baptist churches at Pleasureville and Bethlehem, he having in the meanwhile been ordained a clergyman of the Baptist Church. In 1918 he became principal of the high school at Barbourville, where he continued his service until 1920, besides retaining the two pastoral charges mentioned above. In July, 1920, he became president of the Barbourville Baptist Institute, and in addition to his vigorous and effective administration of this excellent institution he conducts pastoral services at the Baptist Church of Artemus, Knox County, twice each month, and also preaches in London, Corbin, Middleborough, Barbourville and two or more rural churches. His energy and self-abnegating devotion are on a parity with his ability and enthusiasm, and he is achieving a large and eminent service both as a clergyman and an educator. President Curby resides at Brown Hall, a dormitory building of Barbourville Baptist Institute. He is aligned loyally in the ranks of the democratic party, and is affiliated with Pleasureville Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons. He was characteristically zealous in the promotion of patriotic service and objects during American participation in the World war, and in Henry County he delivered many speeches in the furtherance of war activities, besides making consistent financial contributions to the war effort.

On the 28th of June, 1905, in Hart County, was solemnized the marriage of Professor Curry to Miss Henry T. Hedgepeth, daughter of J. R. and Mollie (Bale) Hedgepeth, who reside on their farm near Defries, that county. Professor and Mrs. Curry became the parents of three children, of whom the first born, Pauline Elizabeth, died in infancy. The surviving children are Alva Edith, who was born July 29, 1914, and Lathey Ernest, Jr., who was born February 6, 1920.

Barbourville Baptist Institute. In the little city, nestling in the picturesque mountain district of Knox County and constituting the metropolis and judicial center of the county, Barbourville, is found an admireable institution that is doing splendid service in advancing effective educational work in this section of Kentucky, and of the executive dawn was editorially given by the Cumberland River Baptist Church. The first sessions were held in the church house, but later the public-school building at Barbourville was rented for the use of the school. The institute was from the beginning so well patronized that the trustees determined to give the school a permanent home, with the result that in 1902 a small brick building was erected on the campus for the comfort and increased efficiency of the students. Bar. discouragements, but finally the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention came to its aid. Through the assistance of this board and the generosity of friends of the institution the administration building has been enlarged and two dormitories, one for boys and one for girls, have been erected. The Home Mission Board has continued its support and has contributed liberally to the improvements and expenses of the school. The institute has been a great help to the young people of this section of Kentucky, and it may consistently be said that no other school in the mountains of Southeastern Kentucky has had a finer body of students.

The Administration Building is a substantial brick structure which provides class rooms and a large auditorium used for chapel and assembly purposes. The Boyd Home is a three-story brick building erected in 1911, modern in construction and equipment, with hot and cold water on each floor, with shower bath, with steam heat and electric lighting. Brown Hall, the Girls' Home, is a brick structure of five stories and the most modern appointments and accessories. These homes are in close proximity to the Administration Building and are under the direct supervision of the faculty. The students live with the pupils in these homes, while Brown Hall has the large and excellently conducted dining hall which serves both teachers and students. A well-improved little farm owned by the institution provides the best of garden products, besides having its cows and other farm live stock. Without modification is the following quotation from the catalogue of the Barbourville Baptist Institute. "We do not claim to have the only good school in the land. There are many excellent schools, but if you are looking for a school that offers strong literary departments, a thorough, up-to-date course for teachers, a practical course in domestic science, a valuable agricultural course, the best advantages in music and expression, you will find this institution is the place. The atmosphere of our school is cheerful. Our students are cheerful and are every day a credit to the school and the community. With our strong faculty, healthy and beautiful location and our well appointed buildings, we have no hesitation in claiming superior advantages."

The courses of study in all departments of Barbourville Baptist Institute are well co-ordinated and are of the best modern standard and include a commercial department. The expenses of students are kept as low as possible but the greatest demand for service. The administration is that of the school. The school has high place among similar institutions in Kentucky, and has won its rank by the service which it has given and which it continues to give, with ever increasing efficiency. The faculty has been carefully selected to insure the maximum of efficiency in each department, and there is a spirit of enthusiasm and oneness of interest that animates both teachers and students. Barbourville and Knox County may well take pride in having within their borders this noble and well regulated institution of learning and service, and its Board of Trustees give most earnest, unselfish, and liberal co-operation in maintaining and advancing the work of the school, which has gained inviolable vantage-place in the confidence, good will and supporting patronage of the people of this favored section of the Blue Grass state.

George W. Weaver. Statistics prove that more reliable and dependable men are developed in the calling of a farmer than in any other industry. The independence and self-reliance of the farm bring out qualities which are valuable in any line of endeavor, while the patience and hard work necessary to bring about fruitful results form habits of industry and thrift not easily thrown off. The agricultural lands of the Allen County so valuing and own many of these young men, who sometimes remain on their properties until their retirement, and then again, in the full maturity of their usefulness, embark in other channels where the lessons they have learned are exceedingly useful. George W. Weaver, clerk of the Circuit Court of Allen County, is a native son of Allen County, and until he was thirty-two years of age, gave to agriculture his undivided attention. He has always been himself equally valuable as a public official, and is recognized as one of the best types of Kentucky manhood.

George W. Weaver was born on a farm in Allen County, August 14, 1877, a son of William T. Weaver, and grandson of William Weaver, who was born in Virginia, and died in Allen County before the birth of his grandson. One of the early farmers of Allen County, he became a prosperous resident of this region. He married Elizabeth Dobson, who was born in Virginia, and died in Allen County. The Weaver family is an old one in this country, its representatives having come here from Scotland, and located in Virginia when it was still a colony of England.

William T. Weaver was born in Allen County in 1828, and died in this county in 1896, having spent his entire life here, and being occupied in farming, in this industry achieving a well-merited prosperity. His political sentiments made of him an ardent republican. The Baptist Church had in him an earnest supporter, and he was one of the most effective workers in the local congregation of that denomination. During the war between the two sections of the country, he was one of the sons of Kentucky who espoused the cause of the North, and he served in the Twentieth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and later as a nurse in a hospital. He married Amanda Williams, who survives him and resides on the home farm which is located eight miles north of Scottsville. Mrs. Weaver was born in Allen County in 1830. Their children were as follows: Henry T., who is a farmer, lives on the homestead; John W., who was a successful man and mine operator, died at West Virginia, is deceased, and left four children; Charles, is a mine operator; and Mary, who married Lemuel E. Henderson, a farmer, is now deceased, as is her husband, both of them passing away in Allen County; Charles, who is engaged in farming near the family homestead, has been a magistrate for the past twelve years; Annie, who married R. B. Justice, county judge of Allen County, and a resident of Scottsville, is spoken of at length elsewhere in this work; also the late C. H. Tabor, Attorney for Allen County; Nannie, who died at the age of eighteen years; George W., who was the eighth in order of birth; Amanda Allen, twin sister of George W., who married C. H. Tabor, a merchant of Halifax, Allen County; Dr. L. M., who is a captain in the regular army, is stationed at Camp Punson, Kansas, is a veteran of the Great War. He was the first to enlist in the medical corps from Allen County, and spent nearly three years in France.

George W. Weaver attended the rural schools of
J. V. Nichols was born in Grayson County in 1820, and died at Clarkson, Kentucky, in 1914, having spent his life in his native county. During the war between the North and the South he enlisted in the Union Army and served as a soldier for three and one-half years as a member of the Twenty-seventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry. He participated in the Battle of Knoxville, Tennessee, and was in all of the battles and skirmishes of his regiment. Because of the exposure and hardships of his service his health was practically shattered, and he and his family were for years very poor. Arthur L. Nichols was born in a little log home which continued to be the family residence for a long period. While he was a farmer, his strength did not permit his carrying on any extensive operations, and his children were forced to work hard to assist him and get a start in life. A man of high principles, he did not regret his service, and brought up his children to be good and loyal citizens. The republican party received his steadfast support. A Christian in the highest sense of the term, he took his creed into his everyday life, and was always an exemplary member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Lovina C. Salsman, who was born in Grayson County in 1846, and died at Clarkson in 1918. Their children were as follows: Elizabeth, who married D. R. Line, a farmer, resides two miles from Clarkson, Kentucky; Bertie, who died at the age of twenty-eight years, was survived by his husband, M. D. Grayson, a farmer living near S. C., who was the third in order of birth; George C., who lives near Clarkson, is a farmer; S. E., who is a druggist of Louisville, Kentucky; and five others who died in infancy.

Arthur L. Nichols is essentially a self-made man and has had to work very hard for all he has acquired. His educational training was limited to that afforded by the country schools of Grayson County, and he attending school he had to work hard on the farm, where he remained until he was nineteen years old. At that time he secured employment in the timber business in Grayson County, and so occupied during a period of six years. During all of that time he was making friends for himself on account of his warm-hearted cheerfulness under adversity, and his ability to overcome obstacles. He was appointed postmaster of Clarkson by President Roosevelt the community rejoiced with him over his good fortune. President Taft reappointed him, but his successor was named when there came a change in political administrations. So capable did he prove himself, however, as postmaster that when he was nominated on the republican ticket for the office of county court clerk, he received a very hearty support at the polls in November, 1917, which elected him by a handsome majority, and he assumed the duties pertaining thereto in January, 1918, for a term of four years, and was re-elected in 1921 by an increased majority for another four-year term. His offices are located in the Court House at Leitchfield. Reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he affilates with that denomination. He belongs to Wilhelm Lodge No. 720, A. F. and A. M.; Leitchfield Chapter, R. A. M., and he is a member of Kennedy Camp No. 24, W. O. W., and Clarkson Camp, M. W. A. He owns his seven-room bungalow, a modern residence on Main Street, and a farm which is located one mile north of Clarkson.

During the latter part Mr. Nichols was one of the effective workers in behalf of all of the drives in Grayson County, and rendered great service to the drafted men by assisting them to fill out their questionnaires. He bought bonds and War Savings Stamps and contributed to all of the war organizations to the full extent of his means.

On August 12, 1909, Mr. Nichols was united in marriage with Miss Mildred Alexander, of Brownsville, Kentucky, the only child of J. T. and Alice (Hazelp) Alexander, the former of whom is a banker and capitalist of Brownsville. Mrs. Nichols attended the Western Kentucky State Normal College at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and there specialized in elocution, and is a very talented lady. Mr. and Mrs. Nichols have two children, namely: Alexander, who was born May 13, 1910; and Alice Mildred, who was born June 10, 1920.

Genial, generous to a fault, unfailing in his loyalty to a friend, a man of ideas, he is a type of indefatigable resource that is the builder of character.

Claudy Esty Gary. The capacity for finding enjoyment in what one has to do, of being able to invest one's labor with interest and enthusiasm, are essentials of success which have been incorporated in the career of Claudy Esty Gary, Superintendent of Schools of Butler County, Kentucky. From the time that he began educational work, fifteen years ago, Mr. Gary has not only been a student and participant in the development of the educational system in Kentucky, but has always found pleasure in his labors, no matter how onerous, and perhaps this is one reason why his achievements are touched with the mark of originality and individuality and why they have borne so much fruit.

Mr. Gary was born at Welch's Creek, Kentucky, July 23, 1887, a son of John M. and Mahala (Wilson) Gary. The branch of the family of which he is a member had its origination in England and the first immigrant came to America during the early history of Colonial Virginia. The great-grandfather of C. E. Gary was William Gary, who was born in the Old Dominion and was a pioneer of Butler County, Kentucky, where his last years were passed in agricultural pursuits and where he died in advanced age well esteemed and respected.

William Gary, son of William, the pioneer, and grandfather of Claudy Esty Gary, was born January 10, 1839, in Butler County, Kentucky, and had little more than passed his majority when occurred the outbreak of the war between the North and the South. In this struggle he enlisted in the Union forces and fought in all its battles, when he returned to the peaceful pursuits of farming. These occupied his attention and energies during the remainder of his life, which extended beyond four-score years, his death occurring September 16, 1920. He was a man of splendid qualities and had the respect and warm regard of those with whom he was associated. He married Caroline Davis, who was born in 1835, in Ohio County, Kentucky, and died in Butler County, in 1900. For his second wife, the grandfather married Armilda Burden, a native of Butler County, who survives him as a resident of Grayson County, this state.

John M. Gary, father of Claudy Esty Gary, was born in 1867, at Welch's Creek, Butler County, Kentucky, and received his education in the rural schools of his neighborhood. He afterwards, like his father, grew to manhood, adopted the occupation of agriculture, and was married, and for many years carried on operations as a successful and progressive Butler County farmer. In 1918 Mr. Gary transferred his attention to the oil industry, having realized on several investments therein, and at the present time is located at Goose Neck, Texas, where he is working as an operator for valuable properties. He has resided in that community since 1918 and has received splendid returns from his investments. In political matters Mr. Gary gives his firm allegiance to the cause of republicanism, although he has not been a seeker after personal preferment of a political or public nature. He joined the Baptist Church as a young man and has always been a member thereof, and has lived his faith. Mr. Gary married Miss Mahala Wilson, who was born in 1860, in Butler County, Kentucky, and died here in 1916.

The youngest of his parents, Claudy Esty Gary, received his early education in the rural schools of Butler County, following which he pursued a course at the Butler County High School, at Morgantown, from which he was duly graduated with the class of 1905. At that time he entered the Western Kentucky State Normal School, at Bowling Green, which he left after one year. In the meantime, in 1905, Mr. Gary had completed his labors as a country school teacher. His probationary period extended over something like eleven years, during which time he was broadening his education, enriching his experiences and gaining an intimate knowledge of his work and of the motives and hearts of the children placed in his care. Thus when, in 1916, the call came and he was elected to be county superintendent of schools of Butler County, he was fully prepared and ready for the place. He took office in January, 1918, and entered upon his duties for a four-year term, with his offices in the Courthouse at Morgantown. He has achieved much in the way of reforms and innovations, and has won the respect and confidence of the teachers and pupils, as well as of the general public. Under Mr. Gary's charge are ninety schools, 101 teachers and 101,500 pupils. He takes a deep and pleasurable interest in his work and at all times is endeavoring to make his services more valuable.

Mr. Gary is the owner of his own pleasant and attractive modern home on Roberts Street, Morgantown, and is a director in the Butler County Oil and Gas Company. In politics he adheres to the principles of the republican party, the candidates of which he supports without question. He holds membership in the Kentucky Educational Association and belongs to the Baptist Church at Morgantown. During the period of the great World war, Mr. Gary took an active and constructive part in all local war activities in Butler County and contributed his full share toward the success of every project.

In 1916, in Butler County, Mr. Gary was united in marriage with Miss Emma Belle Ingram, daughter of H. D. and Josie (Embry) Ingram, who reside at Tiftord, Butler County, where Mr. Ingram is engaged successfully in the general merchandising business. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Gary: Joffre S., born May 23, 1917; and Emma Lois, born December 27, 1919.

Leslie Martin. The high position occupied by Leslie Martin in the esteem and confidence of his fellow citizens in the locality of Cynthiana, five miles west of which place he is the owner of a valuable farm, is the result of long years of honorable agricultural endeavor and accomplishment and a public service of twelve years as magistrate, during which he has exemplified a conscientious desire to discharge fully and capably the duties of his office.

Mr. Martin was born April 3, 1872, son of Hon. C. B. and Sarah (Stump) Martin, and his birthplace was the old Martin homestead just across the road from his present farm. The old homestead is now occupied by his brother George C. Martin, and the interesting record of the father and other members of the family is given elsewhere in this publication. Leslie Martin acquired his early education in the public schools of Harrison County. He then completed a business course in a commercial college at Flemingsburg. When he graduated from this college he was equipped to take up a business career, but instead returned to farming, to which he has applied himself with gratifying results ever since, he being at this time the owner of a two hundred and five acre tract five miles west of Cynthiana. He raises all the standard crops and engages to some extent in stock raising, and the substantial buildings, modern machinery and general equipment and the air of prosperity hovering around the estate speak eloquently of the good management and progressive ideas of the owners. Mr. Martin married, February 6, 1896, Miss Fannick Rees, a daughter of Hyson Rees. She acquired her education in the public school of Harrison County and in Smith's Classical School of Cythiana. Four children have been born to this union: C. B., Jr., who died in childhood; Jean, a graduate of the Cythiana High School, class of 1921, and now a student of Transylvania College, Lexington, and M. E. Martin, who is working on the railroad.

C. J. Nelson. The railroad man of today is the product of a system which affords to the faithful worker ample opportunity for individual development in various branches. The numerous divisions in the work necessary to successfully operate a railroad create a situation which in no other great enterprise have the best men of the country become associated with one or other of the great systems which are actually the backbone of all industrial, commercial and agricultural life. One of the men who has risen in the service and is now connected in an important capacity with the railroad work of Kentucky is C. J. Nelson of Paducah. Nelson was agent for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. He was born at Winterset, Iowa, on September 1, 1887, a son of S. J. Nelson.

S. J. Nelson was born in Sweden, near Christiania, in 1832, and lived there until he was thirteen years old. At that tender age he left his native land and came all by himself to the United States and settled near Biggsville in Henderson County, Illinois, and after working for farmers until grown, took up farming on his own account and continued to follow that calling until he retired. From Biggsville he moved to Mount Pleasant, Iowa, where he was married, later going to Winterset, Iowa, and finally to Albia, where he is still living. He has always given a strong support to the republican party, and been equally faithful in his adherence to the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he has long been a member. His wife bore the maiden name of Lucetta Simmons, and she was born at Mount Pleasant, Iowa, in 1856. They became the parents of two children: C. J., who was the elder, and Frank S., who is cashier of the Peoples National Bank of Albia, Iowa.

After graduating from the Winterset High School C. J. Nelson entered the student of the Highland Park College of Des Moines, Iowa, and later took a commercial course of a year's duration. He then entered the employ of the Western Union Telegraph Company as a telegraph operator, and was stationed at Fairfield, Iowa, for eighteen months. Leaving the telegraph company, he then became associated with his present road and has continued with it ever since. His first employment with it was as telegrapher at Beckworth, Iowa, and he held similar positions along the main line of the road, and was also station agent during the peak years of the telegraph company. He then entered the traffic department of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad at Burlington, Iowa, and was made traveling freight agent. During the late war he was transferred to Washington, District of Columbia, and was traffic expert of the inland traffic service for the United States war department, handling shipments of Government freight of all kinds, moving troops, and rendering a service which cannot be easily overestimated. After the signing of the armistice he returned to Burlington, Iowa, and resumed his duties there. Mr. Nelson has become too important a man for his old position to tact his road recognized, and on March 11, 1920, he was sent to Paducah, Kentucky, to take care of his interests as a commercial agent. His offices are located at 1016 City National Bank Building. His territory covers Illinois as far north as Centralia, and the lines of the Nashville, Chattanooga & Saint Louis Railroad from Paducah, Kentucky, to Columbus, Georgia, and the border from there to the international line.

In 1912 Mr. Nelson was united in marriage with Miss Frances Lucille Trimble at Albia, Iowa. Mrs. Nelson is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Trimble, now living at Montezuma, Iowa. Earlier in life Mr. Trimble was a farmer, but after a number of years of successful operation of his farm lands he retired and is now enjoying the fruits of his years of industry. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson have one daughter, Marguerite Ann, who was born October 11, 1918.

Mr. Nelson prefers to vote independently, using his judgment in his selection of a candidate. Both by inheritance and conviction he is a Methodist. Well known in Masonry, he belongs to Astor Lodge No. 707, A. F. and A. M., Albia, Iowa, and Rajah Temple, A. A. & A. M. Mr. Nelson is a member of the Paducah Board of Trade. Possessing as he does a comprehensive knowledge of the vast and intricate problems connected with the conduct of gigantic systems of transportation, he is eminently prepared to handle the responsibilities of his present position. His connection with the war department gave him an experience by which he is able to render valuable service, and added to his usefulness to his organization. While he is one of the recent additions to the City of Paducah, his important position and striking personality have already brought him to the notice of the public, and he is acquiring a local interest in this beautiful Kentucky city and its hospitable people which will be augmented as time passes.

ANTHONY R. ROBERTS. One of the oldest families along Shelby Creek in Pike County is that of Roberts, located in that region of Eastern Kentucky through four generations and from pioneer times. Anthony R. Roberts is an engineer of broad, practical experience, and for some years past has been in the lumber business in Pike County. He has been a member of the church since 1898 and has had a strong interest in the work of the church. He was born August 7, 1886, on Shelby Creek below the present location of Esco. His parents were John and Sarah Elizabeth (Damron) Roberts, his grandfather being Daniel Roberts and his great-grandfather James Roberts. James Roberts was the pioneer who came from the eastern side of the Cumberland Mountains and secured a grant of land on both sides of Shelby Creek extending for a long distance. He and his son Daniel, who was also born on Shelby Creek, gave their time and energies chiefly to farming. John Roberts who was born October 7, 1856, at the location on Shelby Creek where he lives today, also being a farmer, but for a number of years was in the timber business, rafting timber down the Big Sandy. His father Daniel was a Confederate soldier and a member of the regular Baptist Church. The mines of the Elkhorn-Shelby Creek Mining Company are located on land leased to the company by John Roberts. Sarah Elizabeth Damron, who was the wife of John Roberts, was born at Louisa, Kentucky, February 16, 1859. 'Of the fourteen children of their marriage nine are living."

Anthony R. Roberts attended the home school, also went to school at Prestonsburg and the Eastern Kentucky Normal at Louisa. He excelled in mathematics, and after completing his education he taught school five years. For four years he was teacher of higher mathematics in schools near Seattle, Washington. While in the Northwest he entered and for six years was in the Regular Army, being with the 28th Coast Artillery. While there he met and married Monroe, Virginia, in 1893, and returned to Kentucky. He received the unusual promotion to the non-commissioned staff of gunners.

After making this record in the army Mr. Roberts returned to Kentucky and assisted in the organization of the Elkhorn-Shelby Creek Coal Company and opened its mine. He continued with the company until its property was sold, after which he engaged in the sawmill and lumber business on Shelby Creek and besides manufacturing native Kentucky lumber they operate a lumber yard at Virgie.

June 21, 1910, at Virgie Mr. Roberts married Miss Mattie Bentley, daughter of K. P. Bentley. She was born at Granville in Indian Creek in Pike County. They have two children, Howard and Ruth R. Mr. Roberts is a member of the Knights of Pythias at Ashland and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Douglas and in political affiliations is a Democrat.

Oscar B. Bertram. A Kentucky lawyer of twenty years' standing, Oscar B. Bertram has for the greater part of that period been a member of the Monticello bar, and in Wayne County has found an interesting divine of his profession and a profitable association with business affairs as well.

This family was established in Wayne County by his great-grandfather, William Bertram, who came from Virginia soon after his marriage. His grandfather was Jonathan Bertram, who was born in 1823 and died in 1893, spending his life as a farmer in Wayne County and also combining the duties of a minister of the Baptist Church. His wife was a Miss Atkins, who also lived all her life in Wayne County.

Alvin Bertram, father of the Monticello lawyer, was born in Wayne County in 1847, but in 1865 moved to Clinton County, where he lived on a farm. He early became an ordained minister of the Baptist Church, and his services have covered a wide range in a number of Southern States, and he is particularly well known in Clinton, Wayne, Pulaski, Russell and Cumberland counties. At one time he preached in Missouri. He is now pastor of the church and lives and resides at Alvaton. He is one of the few ministers of the Gospel who have sat in the Kentucky Legislature, and twice represented Wayne and Clinton counties during the sessions of 1894 and 1898. He is a democrat and a member of the Masonic fraternity. Alvin Bertram married Rosa Young, who was born in Clinton County in 1839 and died at Albany August 19, 1910. She was the mother of six children: William, a farmer in Clinton County; Elza, law partner of his brother Oscar at Monticello, who was a state senator in 1910-12; Joseph, a farmer in Wayne County; Oscar B.; Prentice, a farmer in Albany; and Lena, wife of Silas Denney, manager of a lumber plant at Spiceland, Indiana.

Oscar B. Bertram was born in Clinton County January 27, 1875, was reared in a rural district there, attended country schools and also the high school at Albany. From the age of twenty-two he taught for two years in his native county, was in the meantime studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1900. For three years he practiced at Albany and from 1903 to 1912 at Jamestown in Russell County, and since the latter date his home and offices have been at Monticello, where with his brother he handles a very extensive civil and criminal practice. His offices are in the J. L. Eads Building. He owns one of the best homes in town, on Kendrick Avenue, and has a farm in Wayne County.

During the World War Mr. Bertram was a member of the County Draft Board and devoted much of his time filling out questionnaires for recruited men. He is a member of the Official Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is a democrat in politics and is a public spirited citizen ever ready to lend his cooperation and support to every civic movement in the community.

At Albany, Kentucky, December 18, 1901, he married Miss Ermine Ballenger, daughter of F. M. and Minerva (McFarland) Ballenger, deceased. Her father was for a number of years a traveling representative of the Louisville drugstore house of J. M. Robinson, Norton & Company. Mr. and Mrs. Bertram have six children: Allan O., born August 29, 1902, who after completing his education in the Monticello High School joined the Regular Army and is still in the service; Leeta W., born November 16, 1904, attending high school; Philip A., born July 20, 1906, Frances M., born September 16, 1909, Nima born September 16, 1909, and George, born May 31, 1911, all pupils in the grammar school at Monticello.

J. C. Denney was for a number of years identified with farming and business in Wayne County, but for the past eight years his time and energies have been almost entirely bestowed upon his official duties in the Court House, first as County Court clerk and now as county judge.

Mr. Denney represents a family that has been in Wayne County four generations, having been established here by his great-grandfather, who came from Virginia. His grandfather was Jackson Denney, a life long resident of Wayne County, who died at the village of Denney in 1866. His active years were devoted to farming. He married a Miss Dick, also a native of Wayne County, C. S. Denney, father of Judge Denney was born in 1843 and died in December, 1910, at Griffin, and during his active life accumulated extensive land holdings and was one of the leaders in the agricultural affairs of the county. He was a republican in politics. C. S. Denney married Sarah J. Ryan, who was born in Wayne County in 1844 and is now living at Monticello. She was the mother of seven children: J. R. Denney, a merchant who died at Griffin at the age of thirty-seven; W. M. Denney, a Monticello merchant; T. S. Denney, a farmer at Oil Valley in Wayne County; Miss Minnie and Miss Nannie J., at home with their mother; J. C. Denney; and J. L. Denney, a merchant who died at Monticello at the age of thirty-four.

J. C. Denney was born in Wayne County, January 27, 1875. He has attended the schools of eighteen attended the rural schools, subsequently broadening and advancing his education by home reading and study. Six years of his early manhood were devoted to the practical tasks of a farmer. Following that he was a merchant at Monticello until 1914. He has an interest in his father's estate of a thousand acres located near Griffin, a valuable property comprising timber, coal and oil lands. He also owns other real estate in Huntington, West Virginia, and has what is regarded as the best home in Monticello.

In November, 1913, Mr. Denney was elected County Court clerk, and filled that office for four years, from January 7, 1914. In November, 1917, he was elected county judge, and took the official oath of office January 5, 1918. He is a republican and a Baptist. During the World War his individual patriotism and official position prompted him to every possible effort in behalf of the Government in loco jure work. Judge Denney married at Knoxville, Tennessee, in 1914, Miss Osa B. Young, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Young. Her mother is deceased. Her father is a traveling salesman living at Buckhannon, West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Denney have one daughter, Beatrice Mae, born May 17, 1915.

Joe Parker Harrison is a lawyer, business man and farmer, and his interests have identified him prominently with Monticello and Wayne County for a quarter of a century.

He is of an old Virginia Colonial family, of English ancestry. His great-grandfather came out of Virginia and was a pioneer of Daviess County, Kentucky. His grandfather, J. G. Harrison, was born in Daviess County in 1800 and spent his life there as a farmer, was a leader in the old Whig party and at one time held the office of sheriff. He died at Owensboro in 1865. J. G. Harrison married Margaret Wilson, who was born in Daviess County in 1804 and died in Franklin in 1869. The father of the Monticello attorney was Rev. T. G. Harrison who was born at Owensboro March 24, 1837, was reared in Daviess County, and for many years was identified with the Louisville Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as an itinerant minister. His pastoral duties were discharged chiefly in Hardin, Hopkins, Henderson, Pulaski and Wayne counties. He died at Monticello March 23, 1906. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity and a democrat. In Pulaski County, Rev. Mr. Harrison married Miss Lucy Parker, who was born near Monticello in 1847, and died there in April, 1918. Joe Parker is the oldest of their children, and there were 6 others: R. E., who died at Madisonville at the age of fifteen; F. R. Harrison, an attorney at Akron, Ohio; Thomas and Lucy, unmarried and living at Monticello; Eddie, who died at the age of five years; and Nellie who died at Monticello in 1919, wife of C. C. Duncan, a member of the Monticello bar.

Joe Parker Harrison was born at Somerset in Pulaski County November 14, 1867. His early educational opportunities were given him by the common schools of Taylor and Hardin counties, and in 1885 he graduated from the grade school at Monticello. For the next ten years his work was largely teaching in Wayne, Lyon and Hart counties. He studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1887, but did not begin active practice until he located at Monticello in 1895, and since then has done much important work as an attorney. His offices are in the Citizens National Bank Building, and he is a director of that bank. For four years he was police judge of Monticello. His home is an attractive brick bungalow half a mile north of Monticello on the Burnside Pike, where he owns a farm of fifty acres. He has another farm of 325 acres on the Normanc Ferry road near the Cumberland River, and is profitably engaged in general farming and stock raising. He is also a director of the Monticello Improvement Company and the Monticello Cemetery Company and rendered patriotic service as a member of the various committees performing war duty in Wayne County. He is a democrat, a steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a member of Monticello Lodge No. 431, F. and A. M., is a past high priest of Monticello Chapter No. 152, R. A. M., and a member of the Monticello Bar Association.

In December, 1916, at Pleasureville, Kentucky, Mr. Harrison married Miss Sophia Parker, daughter of E. F. and Eliza Ann (Gover) Parker, now deceased. Her father was a farmer and miller in Pulaski County. Mrs. Harrison completed her education in the Mansville Academy in Taylor County.

JAMES FRANKLIN YOUNG, M. D. The entire county of Wayne has a place of peculiar esteem for Doctor Young, who has practiced at Monticello for thirty years, and his combined with the duties and obligations of a capable man of medicine, the character and activities of a good citizen and a kindly friend and neighbor.

Doctor Young was born in Wayne County July 6, 1839. His great-grandfather, John Young, moved his family from Pennsylvania in pioneer times, settled near Mount Pisgah in Wayne County, lived on a farm there until after his children were grown, and then started for Kentucky. He and his subsequent experience and fate were unknown to his family. His son, Israel Young, grandfather of Doctor Young, was a native of Pennsylvania but grew up and spent practically all his life in Wayne County, where he followed farming. He was an ardent Whig in politics. His wife was Esther Anderson, a lifelong resident of Wayne County. Andrew Young, their son, was born in Wayne County June 17, 1862, and was a skilled mechanic, being a blacksmith, and while living on his farm conducted a shop for the repair of wagons and other implements. He died in Wayne County October 11, 1905. He was a leading member of the Baptist Church, and was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. Andrew Young married Elizabeth Tuggle, who was born in Wayne County in 1832 and died there in 1915. She was the mother of five children: Bernatta Jane, wife of Harvey Burnett, a retired rancher at Tri- lume, Kansas; James Franklin; Martha; Georgia, and Emma, who married Thomas Sutton in Wayne County; Mary, wife of Ahile Buttram, a railroad man living at Parsons, Kansas; and Minnie, wife of Virgil Sutton, a farmer in Wayne County.

Dr. James F. Young made the best of his early advantages in a rural district of Wayne County during his youth. He attended rural schools, graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Science from the National Normal University at Lisbon, Ohio, in 1881, and subsequently took the medical course in the University of Louisville, graduating in 1891. In that year he located at Monticello and began the practice of medicine, which he has continued with the utmost devotion ever since except the years 1900-01, when he was connected with the Interior Department at Washington D. C. In addition to the demands of his private practice he has for the past twelve years performed the duties of physician to several large institutions for insane, and when the World war was examining surgeon for the Wayne County Draft Board, a duty requiring a large part of his time while Wayne County was filling its quota of enlisted men. Doctor Young performed a similar service for the Government in the Spanish-American war in 1898. He has one of the very desirable homes of Monticello, and also a farm of 200 acres, eight miles southwest of that city. He is a member of the County, State and American Medical Associations, is a republican and a Methodist.

On April 12, 1882, in Wayne County, Doctor Young married Miss Helen Daugherty, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Daugherty, now deceased. She died in Monticello in 1884, leaving no children. In 1887, in Pulaski County, Doctor Young married Miss Lizzie Sutton, daughter of John and Martha Tuggle, both of whom died, and also E. F. and Amanda Campbell. Her parents are also deceased. Doctor and Mrs. Young had three children: Frank, the eldest, died at the age of twenty years, while a senior in the Monticello High School. Anna Lee born January 30, 1894, is a graduate of the Monticello High School and completed her education in Valparaiso University in Indiana. Harry, the youngest, born in 1897, is a high school graduate, spent two years in Georgetown College in Kentucky, and while teaching in the public schools of Wayne County he is also completing his higher education in the Kentucky State University at Lexington.

JOHN M. CAMPBELL, one of the most efficient members of the bar of Grayson County, comes naturally by his ability and sternness of character, for he is descended from some of the fine old families of Virginia which was founded in America by representatives of it that came to this country from Scotland in search of religious and political freedom at an early day, and thereafter took a constructive part in the development of affairs in their locality. John M. Campbell was born in Grayson County, near Millers- town, May 13, 1876, a son of A. S. Campbell, and Wannah of McCreary, Kentucky. He was born in Culpepper County, Virginia, and died near Crenshaw, Russell County, Kentucky, before the birth of his grandson. He was one of the very early farmers of Russell County. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Frances Rowe, was also born in Culpeper County.
Mr. Connor was born at Uniontown in one of the important centers of the coal fields of Pennsylvania October 11, 1883. He is a son of Charles and Jane (Munsgrove) Connor, his father a native of Scotland and his mother of England, where the parents were married. Charles Connor began working in the mines of Scotland when only nine years of age. Late in the seventies he came to the United States and after satisfying himself of the advantages of this country he brought his family from England in 1880 and established a home at Uniontown, Pennsylvania. After coming to America he attended night school and also took correspondence courses in mine engineering, and this thorough knowledge of the engineering was to bring him growing responsibilities. He was mining superintendent, for eight years was mine inspector of the Fifth District and was assistant chief inspector of West Virginia, but has now retired from active work. He is also proprietor of the S. Charles Hotel at Norton. He is held in wide regard as an expert on coal properties and has made examinations and reports on a number of coal fields. He is still active at the age of eighty-one and his experience is great. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and Charles Connor is a Scottish Rite Mason.

Their family consists of four sons and three daughters, and all the sons have become identified with some department of the coal industry. Charles W. Connor is a graduate of the high school of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and spent three years as a student of mine engineering in the Pennsylvania State College. During his vacation he was connected with engineering departments of mines. Beginning in 1904 for two years he was in the Engineering Department of the H. C. Frick Coke Company, for three years was mining engineer at Elsworth, Pennsylvania, for the Elsworth Coal Company, and for one year was cashier of the Elsworth National Bank. He then returned to the Frick Coke Company as assistant superintendent and left that corporation to become general mine superintendent for the Carter Coal Company at Coalwood, West Virginia. He was on duty there two and a half years and for four years was superintendent for the Solvay Collieries Company at Marytown, West Virginia. It was this wide and useful experience that he brought to his duties as general manager of the Elkhorn Shelby Creek Company at Esco, Kentucky.

Mr. Connor in October, 1917, married Miss Agnes Turnbull, daughter of Matthew Turnbull of Uniontown, Pennsylvania. They have one son, Charles W. Connor. Mr. and Mrs. Connor are Methodists, and he is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge at Pikeville, the Knight Templar Commandery and Shrine at Ashland, and has also attained the thirty-second degree of Scottish Rite. He is a republican.

CHARLES W. CONNOR is a mine engineer, and has been identified with executive responsibilities in mining operations ever since leaving university. Since April 15, 1918, he has been general manager of the Elkhorn Shelby Creek Coal Company at Esco in Pike County, and is also vice president of the Northeast Kentucky Coal Association and on the executive board of the Pike County Association.

WILLIAM EDWARD WOODROW. A graduate in medicine, in the active practice of his profession at Monticello for twenty years, Doctor Woodrow retires from that vocation a few years ago, and practically all his entire time and capital are now enlisted in development and production work as one of Wayne County's leading oil men.

Doctor Woodrow was born at Newburg in Jefferson County, Kentucky, February 20, 1807. His people have lived in that section of Kentucky since almost the period of earliest settlement. The family was established by his great-grandfather, a native of England, who before the close of the eighteenth century came to Kentucky and settled on a farm two miles south-east of the village of Newburg, where he lived out his life. He was a volunteer at the time of the second war with Great Britain, and was under Commodore Perry at the battle of Lake Erie. The grandfather of Doctor Woodrow was Alexander Woodrow, whose entire life was spent in the Newburg community at Louisville, where he was born in 1800 and died in 1872. He always lived on his father's farm there, and he earned a military record as a soldier in the Mexican war. He was county surveyor of Jefferson County, Kentucky, for many years. His wife was a Miss Guthrie, a native and life-long resident of Jefferson County. William G. Woodrow, father of Doctor Woodrow, was born April 15, 1837, and died April 17, 1886, having lived all his life at Newburg. He was widely known as a successful horticulturist. In politics he was a democrat, and was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and the Masonic fraternity. William G. Woodrow married Sarah Elizabeth Cee, who died April 21, 1886, and died at Newburg July 19, 1919. She was the mother of six children: Anna May, wife of Charles M. Robb, a farmer at Buechel in Jefferson County; Thomas Alexander, a farmer in the same community; Elizabeth, of Louisville, widow of William Cahill, who was a farmer in Jefferson County; William Edward; Clarence Elmer, a machinist in the shops of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad at Louisville; and Ada Emma, whose husband, William R. Taylor, was a farmer, carpenter and builder and tobacco dealer, with home at Owensboro. He died July 10, 1920, and his widow now resides at Louisville.

William Edward Woodrow spent his early life on his father's old homestead and fruit farm in Jefferson County, which continued until 1919. While in practice he had a variety of early experiences entered the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville in 1896, receiving his M. D. degree in 1898. During 1901 he went back to Louisville for a special course in rectal surgery under Doctor Matthews. Doctor Woodrow after graduating began practice at Monticello in 1898 and earned a high rank in his profession by his earnest labors, which have established him as an active member of the County, State and American Medical associations, and during the World war was assistant medical examiner for the Wayne County Draft Board and made many speeches over the county in behalf of the Liberty Loan campaigns.

Doctor Woodrow has been deeply interested in the oil development work in Wayne County since 1907, and has devoted much time in developing his discoveries. He has given him wide note as one of the county's leading oil producers. He is a democrat in politics, and has to his credit one term as councilman and two terms as mayor of Monticello. He is a deacon in the Christian Church, a teacher of the Men's Bible Class, and is affiliated with Monticello Lodge No. 431, F. and A. M., and is a past high priest of Monticello Chapter No. 152, R. A. M.

January 2, 1865, at Arthur, Illinois, Doctor Woodrow married Miss Ada Belle Cahill, daughter of Caleb Grandson and Ophelia (Monday) Cahill. Her parents both died at Lawrenceburg in Anderson County, Kentucky. Her father during his active life was a prosperous farmer, and he had a record of three years' service in the Civil War, soon after the war was commanded by Colonel Wolford, Dr. and Mrs. Woodrow have one son, Jennings Earl, born August 10, 1897.

JAMES W. SIMPSON was one of the founders and is the proprietor and editor of the only newspaper in Wayne County, known as the Wayne County Outlook. It is a high class country weekly, influential, informing, and furnishes a splendid medium of publication for all legitimate interests represented in the county.

Mr. Simpson was born at Monticello March 7, 1881. His grandfather, Reuben Simpson, was the founder of the family in Wayne County in pioneer times, and had extensive farming interests there. He was a native of North Carolina. Moses Simpson, father of the Monticello editor, was born in Wayne County in 1825 and spent practically all his life at Monticello. For fully half a century he had the leading business as a saddler and harness maker and dealer in the county. Moses Simpson, who died at Monticello in 1866, was a democrat in politics, resident of Monticello, the Christian Church. He was also affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife was Anna McGee, who was born in Wayne County in 1839, and died in 1918. They had four children: Emma, wife of A. H. Baugh, pastor of the Christian Church at Hustonville, Kentucky; Miss Mattie, of Monticello; Joseph, a farmer at Wasco, California; and James W. Simpson, the present resident of Monticello only to the age of fourteen, and after that gained his education by frequent and diligent contact with work and everyday affairs. For about ten years he was a clerk in stores, hotels and postoffice, then, in 1904, assisted in organizing the Wayne County Outlook, and during the same year became owner and has since become sole proprietor and editor. The Outlook circulates throughout Wayne County, over many adjacent sections of the state, and Wayne County people who go elsewhere always have the Outlook follow them. It is independent in politics. Mr. Simpson owns his offices, newspaper plant and residence on Short Street.

He is a stockholder and treasurer of the Wayne Taxi Company of Monticello. He is a member of the Kentucky Press Association, has been a deacon in the Christian Church, and in 1910 was elected commissioner of Wayne County. He is a republican in politics. During the World war his newspaper gave the full force of its influence to the support of the Government, and Mr. Simpson was personally active as well as in the various campaigns. At Berea, Kentucky, in 1900 he married Miss Eimbra Robinson, daughter of Dr. T. A. and Latha (Ponder) Robinson, residents of Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Simpson have two children: Margaret, born February 28, 1912, and William, born July 2, 1918.

JAMES BALLINGER TARTER, M. D. Belonging to one of the most important professions, Dr. James Ballinger Tarter of Russell Springs is making a record for himself which reflects credit on him, his family and his country, and adding up a force of men whose labors are valuable. He was born on a farm near Sunshine, Russell County, Kentucky, November 25, 1881, a son of Wesley Monroe Tarter, grandson of Squire Tarter, and great-grandson of the Tarter who brought the family from Virginia into Kentucky and became one of the leading farmers of Russell County. Squire Tarter was born in Kentucky in 1810, and died in Russell County in 1897, having spent the greater part of his life in Russell County, and devoted himself to blacksmithing and farming. He married Polly Schoolcraft, who was born and died in Russell County.

Wesley Monroe Tarter, who is now living at Irvine Store, Russell County, was born at Waterloo, Pulaski County, Kentucky, in 1861, and has resided in Russell County since he was four years of age. Adopting farming as his life work, he is still engaged in agricultural pursuits which have proved remunerative. He is a democrat, but he has never cared for office. A member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he gives the local congregation of that denomination a strong and sincere support. Wesley Monroe Tarter married Narcissus Tacker, who was born in Russell County in 1838. Their children are as follows: Mollie, who resides at Irvine Store, married J. C. Gosser; Doctor Tarter, who is second in order of birth; Joseph, who is a farmer residing at Big Oak, Russell County; Elmer E., who is a graduate of the State University at Lexington, Kentucky, is a teacher in the high school of Carlisle County, Kentucky; Jennie M., who lives at Brady, Russell County, married Daniel Roy, a farmer and owner of a saw-mill; Christian V.
who is a farmer and merchant of Jabez; and Lola, who is a student of the Western Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green, Kentucky.

Dr. Tarter was born in his father’s farm and attended the rural schools and the graded schools of Middleburg, Kentucky. Displaying even as a child unusual talents, it was decided that he should adopt a profession, and he entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, took the regular course, and was graduated the following June 30, 1910, and at once entered upon the practice of his calling at One, Russell County, where he remained until 1918, in that year coming to Russell Springs, where he has been since occupied with a general medical and surgical practice. He owns his modern residence, where he maintains a comfortable home, and a modern office building both of them being on Main Street, a dwelling also on Main Street, and a farm of 130 acres of land located one mile west of Russell Springs. He has followed in his father’s footsteps in politics and religion, and is very active in church work, now serving as superintendent of the Sunday school. A Mason, he belongs to Russell Springs Lodge No. 840, F. & A. M., and he also is a member of Russell Springs Lodge No. 180, I. O. O. F. Professionally he belongs to the Russell County Medical Society, which he is now serving as president, and the Kentucky State Medical Society. During the late war he was active in war work, serving as chairman of the Civilian Relief Committee of Russell County, and as assistant medical examiner for the draft board of the county. He bought bonds and stamps and contributed to all war organizations to the limit of his means.

On July 16, 1910, Doctor Tarter was married in Russell County to Miss Ada Wade, a daughter of Hugh L. and Lucy (Smith) Wade, farming people and merchants of Irivns Store, Kentucky. Doctor and Mrs. Tarter have two children, namely: Eleanor, who was born May 20, 1911 and Dravo, E., who was born January 6, 1918. Doctor Tarter is a man who has thrown his whole soul into his work, and has never ceased to be a close student. Not only is he a carefully trained physician and surgeon, he is also a broad-minded man of striking personality who is able to infect his patients with some of his own wholesome outlook on life, and consequently those to whom he ministrates become his firm friends. As a citizen he is ever alive to the needs of the community work with reference to sanitation and the handling of those questions which come within his sphere of action, and always holds himself ready to render any service which will bring about a further improvement of existing conditions. Such men as Doctor Tarter are a constructive element in their communities and their efforts are always exerted in behalf of progress.

W. H. Nunn. The influence exerted in the development and furtherance of the interests of a community by a live and enterprising newspaper cannot be lightly disposed of, for the editor of such a publication occupies a vantage ground from which he is capable of swaying community action and molding public thought and opinion. Albany, the county seat of Clinton County, is to be congratulated, therefore, upon the possession of such a clean, reliable and energetic newspaper as The New Era, and Doctor W. H. Nunn, for the last ten years the firm and reliable proprietor, has been identified with newspaper work since the beginning of his career and who, since taking over the ownership of this sheet, in 1911, has contributed materially to the welfare of his adopted community.

Mr. Nunn was born near Glasgow, Barren County, Kentucky, September 14, 1886, a son of James and Elizabeth (Knipp) Nunn. His grandfather, Thomas Nunn, was born in Virginia, a member of an old and highly honored family of the Old Dominion State, who became a pioneer of Barren (now Cumberland) County, Kentucky, and was engaged in farming near Marrowbone, where he died prior to the birth of his grandson. James Nunn, father of W. H., was born near Marrowbone, July 19, 1838, and resided in his home community where he received his education in the public schools.

As a youth he went to Metcalfe County, Kentucky, and at the outbreak of the War between the States enlisted in the Union Army and served with bravery in that struggle. On his return from the war he was married in Metcalfe County, and shortly thereafter removed to Barren County, this state, where he secured property near Glasgow and engaged in agricultural pursuits during the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1890.

He was a republican in politics, but took no part in public life, preferring to devote himself entirely to his farming interests. He married Miss Elizabeth Knipp, who was born in 1854, in Metcalfe County, and survives him as a resident of Glasgow, and they became the parents of four children: Thomas, who is the proprietor of a tailoring establishment at Glasgow; W. H.; Joe R., a printer of Glasgow; and W. E., the owner of a public garage at Glasgow.

W. H. Nunn secured his education in the rural districts of Barren County, and at the age of eighteen years left school to enter the office of the Glasgow Republican, a newspaper with which he was connected for a period of four years. From that community he went to Horse Cave, Kentucky, where he assisted in the publication of the Baptist Advocate for one year, and spent the following year working as a journeyman printer at St. Louis. His next location was Smith Grove, Kentucky, where he was foreman in a printing office for eight months, and in 1908 he arrived at Albany.

In the spring of 1908 there had been established at Albany a newspaper known as the New Era, by Clarence L. Bell, of Lexington. Mr. Bell soon began disapproving with his venture, and this gave Mr. Nunn and Blaine Campbell an opportunity to purchase a part interest in a newspaper. They accepted it and conducted the newspaper in partnership until 1911, when Mr. Nunn bought Mr. Campbell’s interests, since which time he has been the sole proprietor and editor. He conducts The New Era as a republican organ, but endeavors to give his readers a clear, unbiased view of all questions, political or otherwise, and has built it up to the leading newspaper in Southern Central Kentucky. It is reliable in its reports, avoids a partisan discussion of topics, and gives interesting feature matter, as well as timely editorials.

The people of the community have encouraged Mr. Nunn’s efforts by subscribing liberally, and he has the support of the merchants and professional men in his advertising columns. The paper circulates freely in Clinton and the adjoining counties. Mr. Nunn is the owner of the building and plant, situated on Washington Street, on the Public Square, and has facilities for doing all kinds of first-class job printing.

On May 25, 1918, Mr. Nunn was inducted into United States service, being sent for training to Camp Taylor, whence he was transferred to Camp Beauregard, Louisiana. He embarked for overseas August 6, 1918, with the Thirty-ninth Division, an infantry contingent of the American Expeditionary Forces, and was in France until January, 1919, when he was transferred to the Eighty-ninth Division, a field artillery unit, and sent to Germany. Mr. Nunn was attached to a field battery being stationed at Irall, Germany, until May 18, 1919. He then returned to the United States and was mustered out at Camp Taylor, with the rank of corporal, June 10, 1919. On his return, he at once resumed the publication of his newspaper. Mr. Nunn is a republican in his political allegiance and as a fraternalist belongs to Albany Lodge No. 206, F. & A. M., in which he has numerous friends. In his investments in Albany real estate he has given evidence of the faith which he possesses in regard to the future development and growth of this city and of the increasing property values which will follow.

Mr. Nunn was married in 1910, at Byrdstown, Tennessee, to Miss Minnie Smith, daughter of J. P. and Leona (Smith) Smith, residents of Albany, where Mr. Smith is proprietor of the Smith Hotel. Mrs. Nunn died in May, 1912, without issue.

EDWARD OWEN BURDON as a boy had some thought of a professional career. When he was eighteen his father died, and he then surrendered his ambition to attend college, and went into business on a small scale as a huckster. In later years he has been known as one of the most prominent farmers and land owners in Jefferson County, and is a leading dairyman, being one of the largest individual contributors to the milk supply of Louisville. Mr. Burdon's home is at Fisherville, seventeen miles southeast of Louisville. This old village was named in honor of the man who built a mill there 125 years ago. This mill has recently been torn down.

Mr. Burdon was born not far from Fisherville July 28, 1833, son of James W. and Mary (Pound) Burdon. His grandfather Ahasuerus Burdon came to Jefferson County from Lexington. It is said that he was one of the nineteen sons, all of whom married. Ahasuerus Burdon was a farmer in Jefferson County, but at his death was laid to rest in the family cemetery in Shelby County. He was the father of eight children, there being five sons: John who became a physician; James W.; Willis who lives at Louisville; Luther of twenty-seven he married Mary Pound, who was then twenty-one. She is still living, and represents some of the old families of Kentucky. She is descended from Hezekiah Pound, who was born in New Jersey in 1761 and served as a Revolutionary soldier. From New Jersey he removed to Maryland and in 1790 came to Kentucky and died in Bullitt County in 1839 and was laid to rest at King's Church in that county. His son John Pound was born in Jefferson County in 1790, and married Millie Malatt in Jefferson County in 1815. He married Polly Boyer. Their son James Pound was born August 17, 1809, and died while visiting his brother Pressley in Linn County, Missouri, December 7, 1855.

James W. Burdon died in November, 1861, at the age of forty-seven. He was born December 25, 1814. After his marriage he had lived for two years in Henderson County, and then returned to the old homestead and was devoted to its management and cultivation until his death. He was a democrat and a member of the Fisherville Christian Church. He had five children: Edward O.; Minnie, wife of Calvin Bryant, a farmer in Jefferson County; Charles Alvin, the merchant at Fisherville; William Clarence who died when thirty-five years of age; and Pressley, a telegraph operator and railroad agent at Jeffersonville.

Edward O. Burdon continued his first enterprise as a huckster until he was past thirty. He also operated a slaughter house and sold meat at wholesale and also operated a number of wagons that carried meat direct to the consumers in the country. His business grew until it amounted to $50,000 annually and employed twenty people. He bought his stock all over Shelby, Spencer and Linn counties, and when he was 30 years Mr. Burdon bought land until he now owns 700 acres, paying as high as $75 and as low as $10 an acre. This land is divided into three farms, and he gives his personal supervision to all of them.

His dairy business is now conducted with a herd of seventy-five cows, producing milk for the Louisville market. Mr. Burdon fifteen years ago came to his present home the William Driscoll farm, containing about 300 acres. The residence was erected about 1865 by Mr. Driscoll. Mr. Burdon has done much to improve and beautify the farm and home. He is an elder in the Fisherville Christian Church.

April 11, 1907, he married Miss Ida Snyder of Spencer County, daughter of Mark and Mary (Herdon) Snyder. Her mother is still living. Her father was a farmer and died when about fifty years of age.

WILLIAM G. D. FLANAGAN, M. D. Russell County has some of the most reputable and skilled physicians of this part of the state, men whose lives have been devoted to their professional work, and who stand deservedly high in public esteem, and of them none is more worthy of mention than Dr. William G. D. Flanagan of Jamestown. He is a native son of the county, having been born here October 7, 1865. His father, Wesley Flanagan, and his grandfather, Bryant Flanagan, were doctors. His great-grandfather, John Flanagan, was born in North Carolina, from whence he came to Russell County, and here he died after having been a farmer of this locality for many years. The Flanagan family is one of the old-established ones of the county, the emigrant of the name having come here from Ireland during Colonial days. Bryant Flanagan was a farmer of Russell County, where he spent his whole life, and here he died, as did his wife, Mrs. Millie (French) Flanagan, who was also a native of the county.

Wesley Flanagan was born in 1828 and died in 1897, having spent all of his life in his native county with the exception of one year he lived in Iowa. In his younger life he was a farmer, but for twenty years he served as pension attorney of Russell County, and then, in 1889, he retired. He was a Republican, but not active in politics. As a member of the Christian Church, he took a deep interest in religious matters. Wesley Flanagan married Elizabeth Catherine Bailey, who was born in 1833, in Russell County, and died in this county in July, 1917. Their children were as follows: Margaret, who died at the age of twenty-eight years; Sarah C., who resides at Ono, Russell County, on her farm, is the widow of Cicero Wilson, formerly of Fort Hill, Russell County, married Rev. C. L. Bradley, a clergyman of the United Baptist Church, who died at Cains Store, Pulaski County, Kentucky; Willard, who resides on her farm near the Cumberland River, is the widow of A. F. Bolin, formerly a farmer, now deceased; Doctor Flanagan, who was the sixth in order of birth; Mary, who married Elmer Hughes, a farmer and former merchant, lives at Ono, Kentucky; and three who died in infancy.

Doctor Flanagan was reared on his father's farm and attended the rural schools. He was engaged in farming from the time he reached his majority until 1889, and in that year entered the medical department of the University of Louisville and spent a year. Leaving that institution, he entered the Louisville Medical College, and was graduated therefrom in 1890 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He took post-graduate courses, and in 1900 took a general course in medicine at the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville. In 1890 he began the practice of his profession in Russell County, and in 1897 located at Jamestown, where he has since built up a very desirable professional connection. He is the owner of his modern residence and office on Jefferson Street. A republican, Dr. William Flanagan served as health officer of Russell County for six years. He belongs to the Christian Church. Fraternally he is a member of Jamestown Lodge No. 359, I. O. O. F., while professionally he belongs to the Russell County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. Like all loyal Americans Doctor Flanagan took an active part in local war work during the World war of Russell County.

In 1882 Doctor Flanagan married in Wayne County, near Bart, Kentucky, Miss Angie Norfleet, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Norfleet, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Norfleet was a farmer of Wayne County. Doctor and Mrs. Flanagan have no children.

Isaac Harrison Thurman, lawyer and banker at Springfield, and for eighteen years judge of the seventeenth Judicial Circuit and re-elected now for a fourth term; has rounded out thirty years of membership in the Kentucky bar, and represents the third generation of a family who have contributed to the dignity and achievements of the legal profession.

Judge Thurman was born at Springfield, Kentucky, January 5, 1864, son of Livingston Rudder and Sarah Ellen (Froman) Thurman, also natives of Washington County. His great-grandfather Livingston Thurman with two brothers came from Virginia to Kentucky in pioneer times. Livingston Thurman was a settler in Marion County. The paternal grandparents of Judge Thurman were George C. and Maria (Rice) Thurman. The former became one of the leading lawyers in the early bar of Springfield, served as commonwealth attorney and died when still comparatively young in 1856. His children were Livingston Rudder and George W., and Elizabeth and Catherine. Both sons took up the legal profession, George W., practicing at Hodgenville; Livingston Rudder Thurman was a well-ordered lawyer, but when he died in 1882 at the age of fifty-one he had been incumbent for nearly twenty-five years, practically half of his life, of the office of County Judge of Washington County. He was a Mason and a Presbyterian. He was survived by his widow who died at the age of fifty-six. Their children were Maria Rice, Katy, William R., Nannie Ray, Isaac II., Mary Lou and Elizabeth, all of whom were reared in Springfield, where Judge Thurman was born and reared.

Isaac Harrison Thurman was eighteen years of age when his father died. In the meantime he had acquired a good education in the Springfield country schools and in Central University at Richmond. He studied law in the University of Virginia and was licensed to practice in Kentucky in September, 1891. Since that date he has been one of the strong and able lawyers of Washington County. In 1893 he was chosen county attorney to fill an unexpired term and was re-elected for a full term. Governor Beckham appointed him to fill out an unexpired term as Circuit Judge of the Eleventh District, comprising Washington, Marion, Taylor and Green counties. He was elected to succeed himself in 1900, and was chosen for a third term in 1915 and in 1921 for a fourth term. His record as a jurist has been one of unquestioned integrity and scholarly interpretation of the law, and has contributed not little to the general confidence reposed in the Circuit Bench of the state.

Judge Thurman lives on his farm near Springfield and farming is his chief avocation and recreation. For the past thirteen years he has been president of the Peoples Deposit Bank of Springfield. He is a democrat and a member of the Presbyterian Church. In 1893 he married Miss Alice McElroy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. Y. McElroy, of Washington County. Their two children are Livingston R. and Hattie Rodman, the latter the wife of S. L. Barber of Louisville, Kentucky.

John A. Logan. During the past sixteen years John A. Logan has been engaged in the practice of law at Brownsville, and by his devotion to the duties of his profession, his close study and his pronounced ability has won a liberal and representative clientele. He has maintained throughout his entire career a high standard of professional ethics and honorable principles.

Mr. Logan was born in Butler County, Kentucky, September 29, 1878, a son of Stanford J. and Catherine (Henderson) Logan, who were native Kentuckians, and were early settlers in Scotland, whence it came to America in Colonial times and settled in Virginia, in which state, in 1804, was born M. M. Logan, the grandfather of John A. Logan. His father having died when he was a child of three years, in 1807 M. M. Logan was brought to Kentucky by his mother, traveling on horseback, in the same party that brought the old and honored Lindsey family to this state. He experienced the hardships of pioneer life in Edmonson County, where he grew to manhood, and there he was an early timber man and hunter and later a farmer. He was prominent in public affairs and greatly esteemed by the people of his community, and for forty years occupied the position of justice of the peace. After the death of his wife, Nancy Murlin Logan, he moved to Grayson County, in the evening of life, and there passed away in 1882.

Stanford J. Logan, father of John A., was born in 1835 in Edmonson County, Kentucky, and died in that county September 5, 1900. He was reared and married in his native locality, where he was engaged in farming until he enlisted in the United States Army for service during the Civil war, as a member of the Eleventh Kentucky Regiment, Volunteer Infantry. He was with this organization for more than three years, during which time he established a war record for brilliancy and devotion, and took part in a number of important engagements, including Shiloh. At the close of his military service he returned to his farm, was married and then went to Butler County, Kentucky, where he became a timber worker and also engaged in agricultural work to some extent. Returning to Edmonson County, he settled near Brownsville, and late in life retired from active pursuits. He was a man of his position and while a resident of Butler County served in the capacity of justice of the peace. He was a faithful member of the Christian Church, and his fraternal connection was with the Masons. Mr. Logan married Miss Catherine Humphrey, who was born in 1835 in Edmonson County, and died in Butler County in 1879, and they became the parents of three children: Charles L., who was engaged in teaching school until his death, at the age of twenty-two years, in Butler County; Merley, who died when a school pupil at the age of fourteen years; and John A.

John A. Logan secured his early education in the rural schools of Butler County, and began teaching school at the age of eighteen years. He began at Brownsville and later taught at Rock Hill and other places in Edmonson County during a period of eight years for six years of which time he was a member of the Edmonson County Board of Examiners. During this time, also, he attended a preparatory school, the Lee Seminary, in Grayson County, for three years, and read law in the office of Gen. M. M. Logan, a cousin, being admitted to the bar at the age of twenty-one years.

When he gave up school-teaching Mr. Logan entered upon the practice of law at Brownsville, where he has since made rapid advancement in his calling. He lives in his own home, one of the most substantial and modern at Brownsville, on Washington Street. He is a republican, has served two terms as county attorney of Edmonson County, six years as master commissioner and was elected in November, 1921, commonwealth’s attorney for the Eighth Judicial District. He is a member of the Christian Church. As a fraternal-ist he is affiliated with J. S. McCorkle Lodge No.
355, A. F. and A. M.; and Brownsville Lodge No.
164, I. O. O. F., of which he is a past grand. Mr.
Logan is a member of the Kentucky State Bar Association and a stockholder and local attorney for the Kentucky Rock Asphalt Company.

For the community, citizens labored harder or more faithfully in the movements that were inaugurated for winning the war. He was chairman of the Third, Fourth and Fifth Liberty Loan committees; chairman of the Red Cross Chapter of Edmonson County, a position which he still retains; was legal advisor for the Draft Board and national government appeal agent; was chairman of the Fuel Commission and chairman of the Edmonson County Council of Defense; and bought bonds, stamps, etc., freely, and contributed generously to every worthy cause.

On December 1, 1901, Mr. Logan was united in marriage in Grayson County, Kentucky, with Miss Elizaabeth F. Roberts, daughter of Joseph and Mary (Wilson) Roberts, both deceased, the former of whom was a pioneer of Grayson County. They have been happily married a gun shop. Prior to her marriage Mrs.
Logan was engaged in teaching school for three years in Grayson County. Three children have been born Mr. and Mrs. Logan: Rex, born in 1900, a member of the freshman class of the Kentucky State University, Lexington; Victor R., born in 1904, in the United States Navy, stationed at the Great Lakes Naval Station, Chicago, Illinois, and Ben T., born in 1910, who is attending the public school at Brownsville.

CLYDE E. PURCELL, M. D. A Kentucky physician and surgeon whose work has been distinguished by original research and application of new principles of his science, Doctor Purcell was born in Lewis County, Kentucky, January 25, 1872, and represents an old American family. His first American ancestor was George Purcell who came to the American colonies from France during the Revolution. George Purcell married Margaret Randolph and their only child was John Purcell, who married Mary Bland. William C. Purcell, grandfather of Doctor Purcell, married Margaret Randolph and their only child was John Purcell. William Purcell was born in Kentucky, Benjamin Purcell, father of Doctor Purcell, married Mary F. Norris, daughter of Jackson Norris of Alburn, Kentucky.

Doctor Purcell acquired his early education in district schools of Lewis County, also in a private school, and at the age of nineteen entered the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, where he graduated in 1896, and he also took a classic course at the Southern Normal, Huntington, Tennessee. For seven years he was a teacher in city and graded schools in Kentucky and in 1903 graduated from the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville, as valedictorian of his class.
Since his graduation he has been in practice at Paducah and for a number of years past his work has been as a specialist in the eye, ear, nose and throat. Post graduate studies in his special field have been pursued in the Ophthalmic Eye and Ear Institute of New York, and he has kept in touch with the eminent men of his profession in the various societies. He is former secretary and president of the Southwest Kentucky Medical Society, a member of the American Medical Association, during the World war was member of the Medical Advisory Board, and is a member of the McCracken County Medical Society, and Kentucky
State Medical Association.

Doctor Purcell was on the program of the American Medical Association at its convention in St. Louis in June, 1910, delivering an address on the Submucous Resection of the Nasal Septum illustrated by instruments of his own invention for that operation. Doctor Purcell was the first to use the bronchoscope to revive an apparently dead child due to diphtheritic membranous obstruction in the lung, and was also first in Kentucky and second in medical history to use the bronchoscope to remove such membranous diphtheritic obstruction. Doctor Purcell is a democrat and a mem-er of the Elks.

MARTHA GRASSHAM PURCELL was almost instinctively drawn into educational work when a girl, and the high ideals of an educator have remained with her during subsequent years. Mrs. Purcell is one of Ken-tucky’s able women, a leader in school and social progress, an author and historian, and for years has been in the vanguard of any progressive movement in her home city of Paducah.

She was born at Dycusburg, Kentucky, February 24, 1867, daughter of Montgomery and Martha Elizabeth (Mahan) Grassham. Her father was a native of Tennessee and her mother of Kentucky, and both descended from old Virginia families. Mrs. Purcell’s brothers were Hon. C. C. Grassham, William M. and K. Oliver Grassham. Her sister was Emma, Annie, Lucy all deceased, and Sarah D.

When Mrs. Purcell was a child her parents removed to Salem, Livingston County, Kentucky, where she was reared and acquired her early education. She was only thirteen years of age when her courage and resourcefulness were tested by her appointment to teach in a country school near Salem. Her own education was continued in the National Normal School at Lebanon, Ohio, and the Southern National University at Huntington, Tennessee, of which she is a graduate.
She taught during her college career, and subsequently returned to the Southern Normal University at Huntingdon, Tennessee, as instructor, and while there she was married. Mrs. Purcell organized the first two graded schools in Livingston County, serving as principal of both, conducted a number of teachers’ institutes and summer normals and for several years was on the County Board of Examiners in Livingston County.
Altogether she was for twelve years a member of the board of teachers’ examiners and has been a member of the Board of Education of Paducah.

Mrs. Purcell is author of “The Settlements and Cessions of Louisiana,” “Stories of Old Kentucky,” “A Short History of Kentucky,” “An Outline of American Literature 1608-1913,” “Paducah in History,” and numerous poems and punitive writings.

She was organizer and chairman of the School Improvement League, an organization which extended its influence over the thirteen counties of the First Congressional District. Mrs. Purcell introduced the resolution in the local Paducah Woman’s Club which subsequently was endorsed by city, county and state health officers and resulted in the law prohibiting public drinking cups in Kentucky. She has been president since its organization of the Women’s Hospital League and recently was elected president for life. She was for several years chairman of the Legislative Committee, of the State Federation of Women’s Clubs of the First Congressional District and in the United Daughters of the Confederacy she has been chairman of the educational department, corresponding secretary and chairman of the Year Book. During the World war she was chairman of the Food Administration for McCracken County, assisted in appointing other chairmen of the other twelve counties of the First Congressional District, and was originator of the Pennyrile Patrician Plan whereby food was canned in every school district, part being distributed to needy families of soldiers and the surplus sold for patriotic purposes.

As historian for McCracken County for the World war she has nearly completed the three principal divisions of her work. One is a complete record of all enlisted men and the history of all civic organizations doing war work. The second is a War Museum, containing one of every article made by the Red Cross and many trophies from overseas. The third is the memorial avenue of trees, one for each of the 2,000 men who went out from McCracken County. She is Chairwoman of the McCracken County, Kentucky Federation of Women's Club. In this work she is marking all historical sites in Southwest Kentucky.

Mrs. Purcell has acted as chairman of the Speakers Bureau of the democratic party for McCracken County, is a member of the Filson Club of Louisville, the Jefferson School Improvement League, the Paducah Woman's Club, Paducah Country Club, the Church Furnishing Society, and both she and Doctor Purcell are devout members of the Christian Church, in which she is a teacher in the Woman's Bible Class.

To her marriage with Dr. Clyde E. Purcell three children were born: Ewart Edison Grassham, deceased; Sarah La Verne, one of the popular students of the University of Kentucky, president of the Lucy Jefferson Chapter, Children of the American Revolution, and a pledge of the Epsilon Omega Chapter, Kappa Delta, Lexington, and during the World war member of the Red Cross. She married and has the remarkable record of faithfulness of not having missed a pay day since she entered the employ of the company. Mr. Doom, as before stated, is manager for the Kuttawa branch of the Louisville, Kentucky, house of Davidson, Seay, Adams Produce Company. This is one of the largest of its kind in Kentucky, Tennessee and Missouri.

In his politics Mr. Doom is a democrat. He is a member of Swanson Lodge No. 199, A. F. and A. M., of Kuttawa; a charter member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He owns a modern residence on Sycamore Street, which is a substantial, comfortable bungalow, one of the best at Kuttawa, and a business building occupied by Doom Brothers, millers. During the late war Mr. Doom took a very active part in all of the local war work, buying Liberty Bonds, War Savings Stamps to his limit, and also subscribed very generously to all of the various organizations.

In 1912 he married, at Kuttawa, Miss Dixie Gaines, a daughter of W. T. and Mollie (Doom) Gaines. They reside at Kuttawa, where Mr. Gaines is a blacksmith. Mr. and Mrs. Doom have one child, Ben Wesley, Jr., who was born April 15, 1918.

GUY DAVIS. The Bankers of America form the backbone of the nation's prosperity and secure its continued prestige in international and commercial affairs. Without exception these astute men of large interests have preserved the country from disastrous panic during the trying days of the war and reconstruction periods, and as the business of the world is gradually recovering, are safely guiding the people into sound channels of investment and achievement. In every community, large or small, the banker is a man of importance, and his financial establishment is the barometer of the actual prosperity of his locality. Owing to its immense and varied industries Kentucky has need of the services of some of the sanest and most experienced bankers of the South, and one of these men who has displayed a sagacious conservativeness so necessary during the troublous times of the past few years is Guy Davis, cashier of the Bank of Marrowbone.

Guy Davis was born at Marrowbone, Cumberland County, Kentucky, November 16, 1859, a son of W. R. Davis and grandchild of John Davis. The Davis family came from Scotland to Virginia during the Colonial epoch of this country, and there John Davis was born in 1808. Inheriting the same spirit which had prompted his ancestors to leave their home in Scotland, John Davis migrated from his in the Old Dominion and became the pioneer of his family in Cumberland County, Kentucky, making the then long and somewhat dangerous trip immediately following his marriage. He and his bride, who had borne the maiden name of Kittie Miller, and was also a native of Virginia, settled at Marrowbone, and here both rounded out their useful lives and passed away, the year of their demise being in 1868. John Davis was a farmer and acquired considerable wealth, and won the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens.

W. R. Davis was born at Marrowbone in 1834, and died here August 6, 1906, having spent his entire life in this vicinity. In addition to being an extensive and successful farmer, during his younger years he served for two terms or eight years as superintendent of schools of Cumberland County. Under the administration of President Cleveland he served the Government as a gauger and storekeeper. In politics he was a staunch democrat. As a member of the Presbyterian Church he was earnest in his support of the local congregation of that denomination, and was very active in religious work. A Mason, he held membership in Ashmole Lodge No. 450, F. and A. M., which he joined in 1854, and for thirty-six years he also belonged to the chapter of this fraternity.

He married Sophia Alexander, who was born in Cumberland County in 1838, and died at Marrowbone, Kentucky, February 7, 1909. Their children were as follows: Lanretta, who married Dr. Joe R. Schooling and died at Los Angeles, California, in 1918, and he died at Marrowbone, Kentucky, having been in life a successful merchant; L. W., who was an engineer and married Lauretta, Miss W. B., and they live near Wintonville, Illinois; W., who married W. E. Alexander, a locomotive engineer who met his death at the post of duty in a railroad wreck at Dodge City, Kansas, married for her second husband, James D. Davis, a farmer and merchant of Bowling Green, Kentucky, where he died in 1913, his widow continuing to reside in that same city; Kate, who married Frank L. Smith, died at Marrowbone, in 1903, he having died at Mora, Illinois, in 1901, as an instructor in the public schools of that city; W. E., who is a farmer residing at Marrowbone; and Guy, who is the youngest in the family.

Guy Davis is a very well-educated man, having supplemented his training in the rural schools of Cumberland County with a course of two years at the Western State Normal School at Bowling Green and one year at the University of Michigan, and was graduated from the last named institution in 1901. In the meanwhile he has begun teaching school, entering the educational field at the youthful age of eighteen years. At different times he taught school in Cumberland County for four years, and from 1901 to 1903 he taught in Washington County, Mississippi. From 1903 to 1904 he was in the employ of the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley Railroad Company. In the latter year he entered the Bank of Marrowbone as cashier, and held that responsible position until 1906, when resigned and was engaged in farming for himself until 1917, and during 1916 was also engaged in teaching school. In 1917 he returned to the Bank of Marrowbone as cashier, and still holds this position. The bank, which is a state institution, was established in 1902, and its principal officials are: James I. Alexander, president; Reuben Norris, vice president; Guy Davis, cashier; and Daisy Pace, assistant cashier. This bank has a capital of $15,000; surplus and profits of $15,000, and its deposits are $150,000. The bank occupies commodious quarters in a brick building on Main Street. Mr. Davis is no politician, although he gives an earnest support to the democratic ticket. The Presbyterian Church holds his membership. Fraternally he belongs to Cumberland Lodge No. 413, F. and A. M., of Burkesville; Royal Arch Chapter No. 45, Glasgow; and Cumberland Camp No. 11837, M. W. A., of which he has been clerk for eight years. He owns his farm of 110 acres, which is situated two miles east of Marrowbone, but resides at Marrowbone. During the late war he was one of the enthusiastic workers in behalf of administration policies, and was awarded a medal for his sales of War Savings Stamps and Liberty Bonds. He assisted very materially in all of the drives, both by making extensive purchases and generous contributions, and securing donations from others. His interest never wavered nor did his efforts slacken as long as there was any need of his exertions.

On November 18, 1918, Mr. Davis was united in marriage at Leslie, Kentucky, to Miss Pearl Allen, a daughter of George N. and Theresa (Hutchens) Allen, residents of Leslie, Kentucky, where Mr. Allen is engaged in farming. Mrs. Davis was graduated from the University of the State of Michigan College of Burkeville, Kentucky. The only child born to Mr. and Mrs. Davis, little William George, died in infancy. They are recognized as being among the leading people of Marrowbone, and number their warm, personal friends by the hundreds, for they are deservedly popular. In everything Mr. Davis has undertaken he has displayed consummate ability and could have made a name for himself, if he had chosen to do so. He has been a successful man as an educator, and the people of Cumberland County would be glad if they could induce him to again assume the responsibility of training their children, but he feels that he can render a better service in connection with his bank. However, he is always glad to give advice, which is practical and wide in its scope, for he not only is well-educated; but also a well-read man, and takes a warm interest in the younger generation, especially those who desire to go into business on their own account.

WILLIAM ALFRED KINNE, president of the State Bank of Stearns and land industrial agent for the R. L. Stearns Coal and Lumber Company, was founder of the Town of Stearns-in-1890 in many ways has been a very influential factor in its development. Mr. Kinne is also one of the prominent men in Kentucky politics.

He became associated with the Stearns industrial and capitalistic interests in Michigan, his native state. He was born at Leroy, Ingham County, July 31, 1865, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, a son of Newton Irving and Wealthy M. (Littk) Kinne. His father was born near Willsboro, New York, and was engaged in banking and was a merchant by trade. In 1872 he moved to Northern Michigan, took up a homestead of Government land, and lived on his claim until 1888, when he moved to a farm near Scottsville, Michigan, where he is still living at the age of eighty-three. He has been retired since 1891. For many years he was one of the leaders in the republican party in his locality, and served as county superintendent of poor of Lake County two terms, eight years. He is an active member of the Baptist Church and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He has to his credit a record of three years and five months of service as a Union soldier in Company I of the Eleventh Michigan Infantry. His wife was also born in Otsego County, New York, in 1840.

William Alfred Kinne attended the district schools of Michigan, and graduated in October, 1887, from Bartlett's Commercial School at Lansing. Following that he clerked in the store of a large lumber company at Wingletton, Lake County, was acting postmaster, and for three years was in the employ of J. S. Stearns at Stearns, Michigan. While thus employed he held the office of township highway commissioner and supervisor, and in 1890 was candidate for County Court clerk, being defeated by twenty votes. Two years later he was elected county treasurer of Lake County, an office he filled four years.

On leaving the county treasurer's office Mr. Kinne engaged in lumber and logging operations, and became associated with the Stearns Salt & Lumber Company's interests in 1897. In 1901 he came to Kentucky as the representative of the Stearns interests in the purchase of coal and timber lands and was instrumental in founding the town of Kingman and in the operation of coal and timber lands. He has been a land industrial agent for the Stearns Coal & Lumber Company. He was also at one time director for the Kentucky & Tennessee Railway Company.

The State Bank of Stearns was organized in 1930. Mr. Kinne being one of the principal stockholders and its president. He is a stockholder in the Stearns Cooperative Coal Company, operating with a capital of $600,000.

Mr. Kinne has been a recognized man of power in the republican party in his section of the State. He has served as chairman of the McCrory County Republican Committee for eight years and in 1921 was elected to the State Senate. While in Michigan he served as highway commissioner and supervisor of Elk Township of Lake County from 1892 to 1896, as township treasurer for four years, county treasurer from 1886 to 1900, and for a portion of that time was deputy sheriff.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Kinne have performed the duties of a school official during the greater part of the time since 1886. He is a member of the Baptist Church, is a Knight Templar Mason and is affiliated with the Eastern Star, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On May 1, 1863, Mr. Kinne married at Stearns, Michigan, Miss Nola E. Miller, daughter of Zach and Elizabeth Miller. On May 4, 1921, at Lawrenceburg, Kentucky, he married Miss Lena Frazee. Mr. Kinne has three children, Theresa, Howard and Frances. Theresa was married in September, 1915, to Brinkley Barnett, of Somerset, Kentucky, now professor of electrical and mechanical engineering at the University of Kentucky. The daughter Frances was married to Capt. Solander Taylor of Somerset in June, 1920. He served overseas during the World War. The only son, Howard L. Kinne, was a first lieutenant in the Aviation Corps and was shot down over Orge, France, September 18, 1918.

Col. John B. Wathen, of Lebanon, is a foremost business man, acting as postmaster, stock farmer, is one of Kentucky's best known citizens and has achieved many distinctions as a man of affairs.

He was born at Lebanon, Marion County, March 24, 1853. He is a descendant of Marion County, from Baltimore, Maryland. He married a Miss Spalding, a sister of Archbishop Spalding of Baltimore, Maryland. The grandfather of Colonel Wathen was John B. Wathen, Sr., who was born near Lebanon, Kentucky, and was a pioneer merchant of Lebanon. William Wallace Wathen, father of Colonel Wathen, was for many years a merchant of Lebanon, also postmaster, and died there August 14, 1894, at the age of sixty-two. He married Ann T. Graves, a daughter of Thomas Graves, a leading distiller, farmer and stock raiser, and an uncle of Capt. A. Graves, who was member of State Legislature and member of Congress, and Col. John Graves, both men of military and public distinction in Kentucky. Mrs. Ann Wathen died November 22, 1902, at the age of seventy-two. Her oldest child, Nannie L., became the wife of W. R. Spalding, a leading merchant of Lebanon, and the other child, Frances R. Spalding, who was a well known farmer, stock dealer and breeder, and both nephews of Archbishop Spalding.

John B. Wathen was educated at Lebanon, attending St. Mary's College and Cincinatti College. His business life was begun in his father's store and later he was with L. A. and W. F. Spalding & Company at Lebanon. Later he became a traveling salesman and represented Kahn, Wolf & Company of Louisville, Kentucky, and later the J. & L. Seasongood & Company of Cincinnati, and from there he went with Nathan Brothers, of New York, wholesale clothiers. When Luke P. Blackburn became governor of Kentucky Mr. Wathen was honored by being appointed a member of his staff, with the rank of colonel.

President Cleveland appointed Colonel Wathen to an Indian agency in the Northwest, with headquarters at Chicago, whence he moved his family. The illness of his wife, the climate not agreeing with her, interfering with the discharge of his duties in that location, he was offered a transfer to western territory, but declined that post and returned to Kentucky. About the same time he also refused the post he held as agent at Washington. His most cherished business interests for years have been the Highland View Farm Stock Farm, within half a mile of the City of Lebanon. This farm contains 200 acres, and for years has been the source of some of the registered trotting and saddle horses. His breeder's stock sales have been attended by the stock men of different parts of the country. Among the fine horses produced on his farm were Gazette, with a record of 2:07 1/4; Alleene, 2:07 1/4; Norvaline, who made a trial record of 2:20 8; Allert, 2:13, and he bred a large number in the 2:30 class, besides two that broke the world's record. He was the first man in Marion County to sell a horse for $10,000, that being the sum he received for Gazette 2:20 8. From time to time Colonel Wathen has continued to improve and beautify the Highland View Farm, and still continues within the family. His farm is a business method farm, keeping accurately a set of books on all his transactions. His farm is noted as one of Kentucky's show places, and still continues under the direct personal management of Colonel Wathen, though his other official and business reponsibilities are very exacting. In September, 1915, he was appointed postmaster of Lebanon, as a result of the influence of his life long friend and college mate, Hon. Ben Johnson of Bardstown, congressman of the Fourth Kentucky District. Colonel Wathen holds the post office under civil service. His years of experience have only added to his geniality and his friends multiply with the passing time.

Colonel Wathen is a member of the Catholic Church, a former member of the Knights of Columbus, has been identified with many movements and organizations of a public nature, and in politics is a democrat.

He was born at Lebanon, Marion County, March 24, 1853. He is a descendant of Lebanon, who married Fannie E. McCloskey of Louisville. The bride was given away by Governor Blackburn, and the best man was Judge Charles E. Kincaid. Her father, the late Judge William E. Russell, was one of Kentucky's distinguished lawyers. Colonel and Mrs. Wathen enjoyed a happy union about twenty-five years. Her death on July 8, 1908, inflicted grief upon the entire community. She was beloved and esteemed as a gracious friend, a perfect wife and mother, and a most devoted member of the Catholic Church. The funeral services were conducted by the Very Rev. Joseph A. Horgarty, who in his sermon paid tribute to her exceptional life and character, her liberal education, her gifts as a musician, and her hospitality. During her lifetime she had many times made her home a place of entertainment for the most distinguished men in Kentucky. Colonel Wathen was accorded the honor of a most charming hostess.

Colonel and Mrs. Wathen had a family of seven children. Charles Kincaid, born February 28, 1885, was engaged in clerical and newspaper work at Louisville, later in New York, and is now at Buenos Aires, South America. Mary Edith, born October 31, 1886, holds a responsible position in the treasury department at Washington, D. C. The next two children were Nannie L., born February 14, 1888, and William Wallace, born May 11, 1890, both of whom died in infancy. Fanny Russell, born January 1, 1892, is also employed at Washington in the treasury department. Susie Elder, born September 27, 1803, is an assistant auditor in the treasury department. All these daughters graduated with honors at Loretto Academy. The youngest child and son, John B., Jr., was born August 22, 1806, and is a special life and fire insurance agent, with headquarters at Washington, D. C.

On March 2, 1916, Colonel Wathen married Miss Eleanor Allen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Allen of Louisville. They were married in the Cathedral of the Assumption by the pastor, Very Rev. P. M. J. Rock, Charles Kincaid Wathen, son of Colonel Wathen, was best man, and the maid of honor was Miss Jessie Mansfield of Indianapolis, cousin of the bride. The Mansfield family has long been a prominent one socially and otherwise in Louisville, and Mrs. Wathen was one of that city's most popular young women. Her father, William Mansfield of New York City, is a prominent railroad official. Mrs. (McCorns) Mansfield was noted for her stately beauty, charm of manner and high Christian ideals, and was born and reared in Philadelphia. Since the second marriage of Colonel Wathen the Highland View home has been restored to much of his former social activity, and Mrs. Wathen is a gifted, educated lady, of many talents, a real social leader, and deeply interested in many philanthropic and benevolent movements.

Newton S. Shaw. There is no profession in which the adoration to “make haste slowly” can be more advantageously followed than that of the educator, it being an acknowledged fact that those who have attained to the highest plane of their craft have been of the most thorough preparation. However great their native talents, the unformed fledglings do not reach the high posts of honor today, but those whose education and training have enabled them to survey a broad field of knowledge before they fairly entered the activities of their career. Newton S. Shaw, superintendent of schools of Allen County, Kentucky, is a typical modern educator who has laid a broad foundation for continuous personal development and professional progress.

Mr. Shaw was born in Allen County, Kentucky, January 23, 1887, a son of Berry W. and Applewhite (Brawner) Shaw, and a member of an old family of Allen County, which was founded here by his great-grandfather, a native of Virginia, who was one of the pioneer agriculturists of this county. John J. Shaw, the grandfather of Newton S. Shaw, was born in Allen County, where he was engaged in farming until the outbreak of the Civil war. He enlisted in the Ninth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, for service in the Union army as a fifer, and participated in many important engagements until stricken by measles. He was on the road to recovery, but suffered a relapse which caused his death at Columbia, Kentucky, when he was still a comparatively young man. John J. Shaw married Elizabeth Stinson, who was born in 1839, in Allen County, and died in 1918.

Berry W. Shaw was born in 1855, in Allen County, Kentucky, and has been a lifelong farmer, his property at present being near Amos, twelve miles east of Scottsville. He has been an industrious, painstaking and persevering farmer and as a result has accumulated a valuable and extensive property. In politics Mr. Shaw is a republican, and his father's connection is with Acresville Camp, M. W. A., of Monroe County, Kentucky. He is a regular attendant and active supporter of the Baptist Church and a man who is held in the highest esteem in his community because of his many sterling traits of character. He was first married to Miss Applewhite Brawner, who was born in 1858, in Allen County, and died on the home farm, January 9, 1888, leaving one son, James R., who is engaged in farming in Allen County; Lela M., wife of F. A. Coots, a farmer near Amos, Allen County, and Newton S. Mr. Shaw took for his second wife Miss Sallie M. Belk, who was born in 1867, in Barren County, Kentucky, and they became the parents of two children: Robert W., who is engaged in farming near Amos; and Joe Jackson, a farmer in the same community.

Newton S. Shaw received his primary educational training in the rural schools of Allen County, and his further schooling, which was secured at various periods until he was twenty-one years of age, included attendance of forty weeks at the Western Kentucky State Normal School, Bowling Green; five months at the Allen County High School, Scottsville, and five months at the Mount Eden High School, in Spencer County. During all this period, and up to the present, he has been a close student, being an omnivorous reader of history, the classics, good current literature, etc., and a seeker after information in various fields. He began his teaching career as a teacher in 1908, and from that time until 1917 he taught in the rural districts of Allen County. Becoming broadly and favorably known because of his erudition, capacity for instilling his own knowledge in others, his personality and popularity caused his name to be advanced in 1917 as a candidate for the superintendency of Allen County's schools, a position to which he was finally appointed and served from January, 1918, for a term of four years. He has discharged his responsibilities in an entirely capable manner and his administration has been featured by a number of improvements and innovations which have served to elevate the educational system here and to contribute to the welfare of the schools, the pupils and the community. Mr. Shaw has under his supervision sixty-eight white and five colored schools, sixty-two white and six colored teachers, and 4,400 scholars. He maintains offices in the Guy Building, on the north side of the Public Square, Scottsville. In politics Mr. Shaw is a republican. He belongs to the Kentucky Educational Association and Holland Camp, M. W. A., and is an ex-member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He owns a comfortable modern residence on Third Street. Mr. Shaw has always encouraged worthy movements by his support and cooperation, and during the World war period displayed the attributes of a public-spirited and loyal citizen by working effectively in behalf of the war activities.

In 1914, in Allen County, Mr. Shaw was united in marriage with Miss Ivy D. Holland, who was born near Amos, Allen County, Kentucky, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William T. Holland, the latter now deceased, and the former a farmer in that community. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Shaw: Irene, who died at the age of two years, six months; Norville, who died aged three months; Clarine, born July 22, 1918; and Guy Ovelena, born November 6, 1920.

Mrs. Daisy (Davis) Pace. No record of the annals of Cumberland County would be complete without some extended mention of the life and actions of some of its members of the so-called weaker sex. The chivalry of the men and the beauty of the women of Kentucky remain unaltered, but there has come into consideration of late years a new factor, the ability of the women and their efficiency in other walks of life aside from those formerly accorded to them. One of the best examples of the modern woman of the Blue Grass State is Mrs. Daisy (Davis) Pace, who is not only well known because of her success in farming, but also for her dependability as a banker, she now being assistant cashier of the Bank of Marrowbone.

Mrs. Pace was born at Marrowbone, Kentucky, December 25, 1876, a daughter of George H. Davis, and granddaughter of William Davis. The last named was the original settler in the vicinity of the old Cumberland Springs, and is a native state for Cumberland County, Kentucky, soon after his marriage and located at Marrowbone, and there he died before the birth of Mrs. Pace. After coming to Cumberland County he bought extensively of farm land, which he operated with his own slave labor. He was a man of prestige at Marrowbone, and of large means. His wife, who was Patsy Harvey before her marriage, was born at Richmond, Virginia, and died at Marrowbone, Kentucky, in 1879.

George H. Davis was born at Marrowbone in 1845, and died there, August 21, 1866, having spent his entire life in the place of his nativity. He was an extensive farmer and one of the leading live-stock dealers of this part of the state, raising handling and shipping a high grade of live stock. He also dealt heavily in cattle and horses. A man of progressive ideas he introduced new methods and machinery in his work, and bought the first binder ever brought into Cumberland County. Up to his death he continued in keeping his farm supplied with the latest improved machinery and appliances, and his experiments were followed with much interest by his neighbors. He was a democrat, but not active in politics. The Presbyterian Church held his membership, and he was long recognized as a pillar of the church. His wife was Sallie A. Beck before her marriage, and she survives him and makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. Pace. Mrs. Davis was born at Marrowbone, Kentucky, November 16, 1853. She, too, is a Presbyterian. Mrs. Pace is the only child of her parents.

Growing up in her native town, Mrs. Pace was given a more liberal education than falls to many of her sex, and after she had completed her studies in the rural schools of Cumberland County, she became a student of Liberty College, Glasgow, Kentucky, which institution she left in 1894, at the close of her sophomore year.

On January 10, 1895, Mrs. Pace was married to Marrowbone to James E. Pace, who was born in Cumberland County, Kentucky, in 1870, and died at Marrowbone January 7, 1917. Mr. Pace attended the rural schools of Cumberland County, Alexander College at Burkesville, the Glasgow Normal School at Glasgow, Kentucky, and completed his education at the Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee. Until 1902 he was engaged in merchandising at Marrowbone, where he had been educated for a guide, and during all of this time being engaged in farming. In 1902 he entered the Bank of Marrowbone as assistant cashier, later was elected cashier and held that position until his death. He was a staunch democrat. The Presbyterian Church held his membership, he was a great worker in the church and Sunday School and a liberal supporter of both. Fraternally he belonged to Cumberland Camp No. 683, M.W. A., as clerk of the lodge, and was in the committee in charge of the cemetery and the library.

In 1913 he carried out a project he had long entertained and visited the Holy Land on a Cook's tour, visiting Palestine, Egypt, Greece, Italy, England and other countries, and taking many pictures of the interesting places, which later afforded great pleasure and gave instruction to many, for he had these views made into slides with which he illustrated a lecture he prepared. So popular had his lecture become that he was asked to deliver it to churches all over this part of Kentucky. Mr. Pace was a pleasing and forceful talker, and carried his audiences with him on the wonderful trip he had taken, and of which he had made so faithful a record. He was a son of H. S. Pace, born in Metcalfe County, Kentucky. H. S. Pace died at Louisville, Kentucky, in June, 1902, although he was at that time a resident of Auburp, Kentucky. He was a veteran of the war between the states, having been with the 18th Kentucky as a private under General Morgan, and participated in that command's celebrated raids. Mr. Pace was taken prisoner and thereafter confined in a Federal prison until the close of the war, his capture occurring on one of the last of General Morgan's raids. Following the close of the war H. S. Pace came to Marrowbone, and was here extensively engaged in farming until 1898, when he moved to Auburn in order to give his children the advantage of attending the superior schools of that city, but he retained possession of his farm. He married Mollie Barton, who was born in Metcalfe County, Kentucky. She survives her husband and lives at Waterview, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. James E. Pace bore them the parents of two children, Georgia Alexander, who was married in 1917 at Jeffersonville, Indiana, to W. L. Alexander, and they reside at Marrowbone, where he is a prosperous farmer and live-stock dealer, and they have two children, James Ledmon, born December 31, 1918, and Daisy Belle, born September 10, 1920, and James Fred, who was born May 26, 1900, and is a graduate of the Western State Normal School of Bowling Green. He is now student at the State College at Ames, Iowa. He was graduated in 1919 from Castle Heights Private Military Academy at Lebanon, Tennessee.

Mrs. Pace owns a farm, which is within the corporate limits of Marrowbone and comprises 400 acres of very valuable land. She manages this large farm herself, and is noted for her progressive methods. She bought the first tractor and first tobacco settler in Cumberland County, and follows her father's example in operating her farm according to the best and most approved methods, in all of her work being ably assisted by her son, James Fred. Mrs. Pace owns a modern residence, with up-to-date out-buildings and equipments, and operates a first-class hotel at Marrowbone. Her Duroc-Jersey hogs of blooded stock, of which she raises a large quantity, are noted for their superior quality, and command exceptional prices.

Mrs. Pace finds pleasant relaxation in her membership with the Royal Neighbors which fraternity she joined during the life time of her husband, who was so much interested in the Modern Woodmen of America, of which it is an auxiliary. During the World war she was very active, proving herself in every respect a hundred-per cent American. She bought heavily of Liberty Bonds and War Savings Stamps, and contributed to all of the war organizations, particularly those in behalf of the Red Cross. For some years she has been assistant cashier of the Bank of Marrowbone, and is equally competent in this capacity. Indeed it would be difficult to find anything beyond the capabilities of Mrs. Pace, and her fellow townsmen are vastly proud of her and appreciate her value to the community. She has decidedly proven that a woman can accomplish much and still neglect none of the duties of a devoted wife and watchful and loving mother.

James Thomas Basham. In the election in November, 1917, of James Thomas Basham to the office of county attorney of Grayson County, expression was given of the recognition of the abilities of one of the county's younger generation of lawyers. Mr. Basham has been a member of the Kentucky bar only since 1914, but during the period since his admission both at Hardinsburg and Leitchfield has displayed qualifications that have won him public confidence and respect and contributed materially to his advancement in his calling.

Mr. Basham was born at Stephensport, Breckinridge County, Kentucky, on his father's farm, January 17, 1887, a son of Winston L. and Melissa B. (Shelton) Basham. The family originated in Scotland, and the first of this branch to come to America settled in Virginia during the period of the war of the Revolution. George W. Basham, grandfather of James T., who came in young manhood to Kentucky and settled in Breckinridge County. A pioneer of the region that afterward become Stephensport, he was a sturdy, self-reliant agriculturist of substantial qualities, who won and held the respect and esteem of the people among whom his life was passed. George W. Basham married a Miss Campbell, who was born in Tennessee, and both passed away in Breckinridge County before the birth of his grandson.

Winston L. Basham was born in the vicinity of Hardinsburg, Kentucky, in 1857, and was there educated, reared, and married. Following the course of the majority of the male members of the family, he early adopted agriculture as his life work, and to this vocation has devoted his energies throughout a long, useful, honorable, and successful career. In his old age, he is still accounted one of the active and extensive farmers of Breckinridge County, where he has occupied a high place in the esteem of those who know him. In politics he is a republican, and his fraternal affiliation is with the Masonic Order. Mr. Basham married Melissa B. Shelmear, who was born in 1863, near Union Star, Breckinridge County, and they became the parents of four children: James Thomas; Mary B., the wife of W. H. Gibson, a farmer near Stephensville; and deputy sheriff of Breckinridge County; Paul M., clerk of the Circuit Court of Breckinridge County; and a resident of Hardinsburg; and Eva S., the wife of Zeno Miller, bookkeeper in the Louisville National Bank.

James Thomas Basham was reared on the home farm and attended the rural schools of Breckinridge County until reaching the age of eighteen years, at which time he began teaching the country districts. After two years of this work, he entered Kentucky State Normal College at Bowling Green, from which he was graduated in 1910, and then again took up the vocation of teaching, which he followed for one year in Breckinridge County and a like period in Monroe County, Kentucky. Following this Mr. Basham took a special course in law at the University of Louisville, and was admitted to the Kentucky bar in May, 1914. He entered upon the practice of the profession at Hardinsburg, where he remained until July, 1916, and at that time secured his introduction to the people of Leitchfield, where he has since made rapid progress in his profession. Mr. Basham was engaged in a general practice until November, 1917, when he was elected county attorney of Grayson County, and filled out the greatest number of questionnaires of any person in the county. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and president of the Young Men's Sunday school class. He owns a modern residence on Main Street, a comfortable two-story home, as well as other real estate. He is well known in fraternal circles, holding membership in Leitchfield Lodge No. 296, F. and A. M., of which he is junior warden; Leitchfield Chapter No. 143, R. A. M.; Elizabethtown Commandery No. 37, K. T.; Kosair Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Louisville; and Leitchfield Camp, M. W. A., in which he has filled all the chairs.

On November 5, 1918, Mr. Basham married Miss Effie Sadler, daughter of H. G. and Mary Catherine (Durbin) Sadler, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Sadler having been a well-known and highly respected citizen of Shrewsbury, Kentucky, where he was variously engaged in merchandising, milling and farming. Mrs. Basham, a graduate of the Western Kentucky State Normal College, Bowling Green, was elected county superintendent of schools in November, 1917, by the largest majority ever given a candidate for public office in Grayson County, and occupies that position at present. A woman of many graces and accomplishments, she is a member of the State Historical Society and county historian for Grayson County. Mr. and Mrs. Basham have no living children.

Sam Elswick is one of the active merchants of Pike County, his place of business being at Penny on the Caney Fork of Shelby Creek. Mr. Elswick grew up in that locality and was formerly a railroad man until an unfortunate accident terminated his career in that line, and he then turned his attention to merchandising.

Mr. Elswick was born on Caney Fork, March 23, 1888, son of George W. and Eliza (Branham) Elswick. His father who was born near Pikeville in 1836 is still in the best of health in spite of eighty-five years and lives on his farm on Caney Fork. All his active years have been devoted to agriculture and he has lived at his present location on Caney for half a century. He is a citizen held in the highest esteem for what he has done and also for what he is. In politics he supported the democratic ticket for many years but is now a republican. His church memberships are with the old Union Church in South Leitchfield and the Mount Vernon Baptist Church of the regular Baptist faith. His first wife, Eliza Branham, was born in the same year as her husband and died in 1896. The second wife of George Elswick was Elizabeth Greer, also a native of Pike County.

Sam Elswick is the youngest of a family of eight children. All but one live in Pike County. He attended common schools on Caney Fork and at the age of sixteen was earning his own living on farms and in the mines. From this occupation he entered the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad as a brakeman and continued until he lost his right foot in an accident. Then in 1918 he invested his capital and experience in a general stock of merchandising on Caney Fork, a mile from Penny Station and at Penny Postoffice. He has a good trade, and besides the income he derived from his business he owns a fine farm.

In 1918 Mr. Elswick married Alma Sword, daughter of Masey Sword. She was born on Island Creek and her family came here from Virginia.

G. A. Hunt. No community can be greater than the business interests centered within its confines, so that it is easily possible to measure the importance of a city by the commercial rating of the men engaged in doing business at that point. As a center of distribution, as well as the county seat of Allen County, Scottsville occupies a prominent place because of the dependability and enterprise of its business men who have worked hard to build up an enviable prestige among those of their calling in different parts of the state. One of these men is G. A. Hunt, one of the leading tobacconists of the state of Kentucky, his modern warehouse is a monument to the importance of the tobacco industry, and the acumen of its owner.

G. A. Hunt was born in Allen County, May 1, 1868, a son of I. N. Hunt. His grandfather lived and died in Simpson County before his grandson had outgrown childish things, having been one of the early farmers of that region. I. N. Hunt was born in Allen County, in 1810, and died in 1864, December 10. During the war between the North and South, although only a lad of thirteen years, he enlisted in the Confederate service under General Morgan, and was captured at the close of the war, being at that time stationed in Virginia. Following the declaration of peace, he continued to reside in Virginia until after his marriage, when he returned to Allen County, and was engaged in farming and dealing in tobacco, his homestead being located eight miles north of Scottsville. In 1908 he left the farm for Scottsville, and continued to deal in tobacco until his death, his operations being at all times carried on upon an extensive scale. A stanch democrat, he always gave his party the foremost place, and for many years he served as a magistrate. He was a member of the Baptist Church and very active in his support of the local congregation. A Mason, he belonged to Gainesville Lodge, A. F. & A. M. He married Elizabeth Porter, who was born in Virginia, in 1819, and died at Scottsville, in the home of her son, in 1914. Their children were as follows: G. A., who was the eldest; Chasten, who is a tobacconist of Bowling Green; Ada, who was the wife of John L. Grubb, a farmer of Allen County; John W., who is a farmer and tobacconist, lives at Scottsville.

G. A. Hunt attended the rural schools of Allen County, and was reared on his father's farm, on which he remained until after he had reached his majority. He was then taken into partnership with his father, and they operated together in the tobacco business until the death of the elder man in 1916. That year the two organized and incorporated The Farmers Loose Leaf Tobacco Company, under the laws of the state of Kentucky, and commenced the erection of the immense warehouse, mentioned above, but I. N. Hunt did not live to see it completed. G. A. Hunt carried on the work of construction, and now maintains his offices in it. This building is located on the south side of the Glasgow turnpike. The officers of the Planters Loose Leaf Tobacco Company are as follows: L. Atwood, president; and G. A. Hunt, secretary, treasurer, and manager. The company handles all grades of loose leaf tobacco. The warehouse owned by the company is the first one ever built in Allen County. Politically Mr. Hunt is a democrat. He belongs to the Baptist Church and Gainesville Lodge, A. F. & A. M. In addition to his modern residence on the south side of the Glasgow turnpike, Mr. Hunt owns a farm of 113 acres located eight miles north of Scottsville, on which he carries on general farming. During the late war he took an active part in local war work, and helped in all of the drives.

In 1900 Mr. Hunt was married at Lafayette, Tennessee, to Miss Zela Motley, a daughter of Eddie and Nancy (Ritchey) Motley, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Motley was formerly a farmer of Allen County, and a very well-known man. Mr. and Mrs. Hunt became the parents of the following children: Loren, who was born in 1903, is attending the Allen County High School; Ruth, Mrs. Motley, who was born in 1909; Grace, who was born in 1915; and G. A., Junior, who was born in 1918. One of the solid, responsible men of Allen County, Mr. Hunt naturally holds a very high position among the tobacco operators of this region, and his fellow citizens regard him with respect because of the integrity and straightforwardness of all of his actions.

AUBREY F. CROW. In nothing is the progress of the age more clearly shown than in the changes which have taken place in the methods of caring for the dead. The modern funeral director is today a man who has been carefully trained in his chosen profession, who holds certificates of merit and has an appreciative understanding of the proper manner of arranging the last ceremonies so as to render a dignified and gratifying tribute to those who have departed this life. One of these men is Aubrey F. Crow. Mr. Crow is one of the best funeral directors, not only at Scottsville, where he maintains his headquarters, but also throughout a wide territory contiguous to the city.

Mr. Crow was born in Allen County, September 3, 1889, a son of Wesley W. Crow, a grandson of James William Crow, and a member of one of the old families of this region, as his great-grandfather was one of the pioneer farmers of Allen County, coming here from Virginia at a very early date and spending the remainder of his useful life in this section of the state. James William Crow was born in Allen County, and died at Vernon, Texas, in 1888, although he lived in Allen County the greater part of his life. He was a merchant and was at different times engaged in business at Lucas, Rocky Hill, Gainesville and Scottsville, Allen County, prior to his removal to Texas near the close of his career. He married Sarah Frances Hinton, who was born in Allen County in 1828, and died at Vernon, Texas, in 1914.

Wesley W. Crow was also born in Allen County, in 1859, and died at Scottsville in 1905. Reared and married in Allen County, he made this portion of the state his permanent home. By trade a carpenter, he later became a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was a very effective preacher and exhorter. From 1880 to 1890 he was at Scottsville, and then for five years was a resident of Vernon, Texas, but at the expiration of the period returned to Scottsville, where he remained until death claimed him. His political principles were in accordance with those of the democratic party. Wesley W. Crow was married to Lucy Frances Follis, who was born in Allen County in 1859, and died at Scottsville in 1895. Their children were as follows: Annie Alice, who married J. H. Ayers, a farmer of Gargett, Texas; Thomas W., who is in partnership with his brother, Aubrey F., lives at Scottsville; Ethel, who is unmarried, lives with her brother, Aubrey F.; Perrie Lon, who died at the age of four years; Aubrey F., who was the fifth in order of birth; Mary S., who married A. H. Dorsey, a druggist of Horse Cave, Kentucky.

Aubrey F. Crow was educated in the rural schools of Allen County, and when he was fifteen years old began to earn his living in the spoke factory at Scottsville, in which he remained for a year. For the next eighteen months he clerked in a grocery store, and for the following year was in a drug store. During all of this period he saved his money, and in 1915 was able to embark in a business of his own, he and his brother establishing themselves in the undertaking business. Mr. Crow had learned all of the details of this calling with Pearson & Tabor, undertakers of Scottsville. The Crow brothers have so firmly established themselves in the community that the public has become accustomed and they now have the largest undertaking establishment between Louisville and Nashville. They are the only firm of their kind in the county. The offices and storage rooms are on East Main Street.

Mr. Crow is a democrat, and for the past two years has been a member of the City Council. Both as a member and steward of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he exerts a strong influence for good in his community. Well known in Masonry, he belongs to Graham Lodge No. 208, A. F. & A. M.; and Scottsville Chapter No. 171, R. A. M. He owns a comfortable modern residence on Bowling Green Avenue, and with his brother owns a farm of fifty-five acres, located one-half mile north of Scottsville. During the late war Mr. Crow was one of the effective workers in behalf of the local activities of the United States. He bought bonds and war savings stamps, and contributed to the various organizations to the full extent of his means.

In 1900 Mr. Crow was married at Bethpage, Tennessee, to Miss Irene Lovelace, a daughter of Sidney J. and Julia (Payne) Lovelace. Mrs. Lovelace is residing at Scottsville, but Mr. Lovelace, who was a merchant and county judge of Allen County, resides at Bowling Green, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Crow have two children, namely: Elizabeth Lovelace, who was born January 25, 1914; and Aubrey F., Jr., who was born May 3, 1916. Mr. Crow is one of the substantial men of Scottsville and takes a proper pride in the progress of the city. Professionally he is recognized as one whose sympathetic handling of the details of his calling is soothing and dependable in the period of greatest bereavement.
H. Clay Howard, of Paris, has been a lawyer for over a third of a century, has enjoyed many distinguished honors in his state and outside, and has contributed to the many distinctions associated with the names of his ancestors in Kentucky.

He is a son of Henry Clay Howard, Sr., and his mother was Elizabeth Payne Lewis Howard, and he therefore belongs to the famous Clay and Lewis families of Kentucky. Mr. Howard was born at Mt.
Sterling, November 14, 1860, and was liberally educated, attending private schools, and in 1884 received the LL. B. degree from Columbian (now George Washington) University. He was president of his graduating class the following year received the degree
Master of Laws from the same university.

Admitted to the bar in 1885, he began active practice at Paris in 1887, and early achieved prominence as a lawyer. He was elected and served from 1894 to 1898 as county judge of Bourbon County, and from 1898 to 1911, for seventeen years, was referee in bankruptcy.
In national affairs Judge Howard gained a reputation as a diplomat while serving as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Peru, South America, from March 4, 1911, to September 9, 1913. In 1919 he was appointed colonel upon the staff of Governor Morrow of Kentucky.

Judge Howard is a republican, was delegate to the Republican National Convention in 1900, and was chairman of the state campaign committees in 1900 and 1904. He is a member of the bar of the highest court of the state, and editor of the life writings and speeches of Cassius M. Clay. Judge Howard lives at Paris and in his city he married Margaret Helm Clay on January 27, 1892.

Joseph F. Jones passed his entire life in Clark County, Kentucky, as a member of one of the distinguished pioneer families of the favored section of the state and in all of the relations of life he maintained the gracious patrician standards of the fine old Southern regime of ante-bellum days. He was actively concerned with civic and industrial affairs in his native county as one of its representative agriculturists and stock-growers and public-spirited citizens, and his character and co-operation was the subject of the most consistent the memorial tribute here entered.

Joseph Francis Jones was born on a farm adjoining the fine old place on which he died, in Clark County, and the date of his nativity was November 20, 1833.
He was a son of Thomas Ap Jones and Elizabeth (Famntleroy) Jones. His paternal grandfather, Maj.
Thomas Ap Jones, was born and reared in Virginia, where the family was from the time of the early century, and he served with distinction as an officer in the Patriot Army in the War of the Revolution. His birth occurred in Richmond County, Virginia, and there he married Miss Frances Carter, a daughter of Counselor Robert Carter, son of King Carter. They
the time of the war and Major Jones was there the owner of a large plantation, the while he was one of the influential and honored citizens of his community.
Thomas Ap Jones, Jr., father of the subject of this memoir, was reared and educated in Virginia and at Mars Hill, Richmond County, was solemnized his mar-rriage to Miss Elizabeth Famntleroy. Thereafter he conducted a successful planter in Rockcastle County, Virginia, until May, 1870, when he settled here Kentucky accompanied by his family and by his retinue of slaves, nearly 100 in number. Six months were required to complete the long overland journey through a virtual wilderness, and the family passed the first winter at Harrodstown, Boyle County, a town from which was developed the present fine little city of Danville. In the spring removal was made to Clark County, where Mr. Jones became the owner of nearly one thousand acres of land, his prime reason for locating in this county being the accessibility to the Kentucky River by means of which he could obtain transportation for the crops of tobacco which he proposed to raise on his pioneer farmstead. Just prior to coming to Kentucky he had sold his old plantation, Bathurst, in Virginia, for $3,000 and thus he was in excellent financial cir-Cumstances when he resolved his future as a Kentucky pioneer. His landed estate in Clark County included the old homestead later owned and occupied by his son Joseph F., and in the substantial brick house which he here erected and which eventually was destroyed by fire he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives.
He was fifty-four years of age at the time of his death,
April 20, 1870, and his widow passed to eternal rest on the 31st of August in the same year, after nearly seventy-five years. Of their ten children all but one attained to years of maturity: Frances Tasker, Thomas Ap (III), Griffin Famntleroy, Roger, Eliza (Mrs. Samuel T. Martin), Joseph Llewellyn Cadwallader (became one of the leading members of the bar of Clark County and was serving as county clerk at the time of his death in 1892), Sarah Jane (wife of General Armstead Blackwell), and Joseph Francis (subject of this memoir) and twin sister who died in infancy.

Joseph Francis Jones was reared on the old home plantation and received in his youth excellent educational advantages as gauged by the standards of the locality and period. As a young man he wedded Miss Emma Virginia Morford, who was born at Richmond, Virginia, but reared and educated at Nashville, Tennessee, and having been brought up in the beautiful, unspoiled Kentucky at the time when she formed the acquaintance of her future husband. Her father, Noah Barton Morford, was an artist of no little distinction at Trenton, New Jersey, and was but thirty-six years of age at the time of his death. Mrs. Jones is a woman of culture and most gracious personality, and she proved a popular chafeline of the beautiful rural home which she enjoyed while her husband lived. She has been honored and respected as a woman, a wife, and a mother, and by her husband, the same having become widely known as a center of hospitality and patrician social activities. In the death of Joseph Francis Jones on the 10th of December, 1910, Clark County lost one of its most honored and popular citizens. He was but ten years of age at the time of his father's death, and when a little fourteen years he assumed a large share of the management of his father's farm and fulfilled the noble duty of remaining on the homestead until his death, the remains of both he and his wife being interred in the family cemetery on this homestead. The ancient regime of refined hospitality which marked the beautiful home during the life of the original owners was effectively continued after the place came into possession of Mrs.
Jones, who here had a valuable large place in the nearly seven hundred with characteristic equanimity and retained to the last the management of his estate and business. He cast his first Presidential vote for Franklin Pierce and his last for President Woodrow Wilson, though he left his sick-bed to achieve this result. He was an earnest member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he served many years as an elder and of which his widow and wise is a devoted member. Mrs. Jones still remains on the old home place and still delights to extend in the ancient and stately mansion a gracious welcome and entertainment to her many friends. Of the children the eldest is Thomas Barton, who is a successful breeder of fine horses in Fayette County; Henry M. likewise is a prominent horseman, is a member of state-bred "knightly" horses, and a resident at Winchester, L. C. J. being a successful breeder of fine horses in Fayette County; Ann E. remains at the old home with her widowed mother; William M. is the subject of an individual sketch that immediately follows this memoir; Sallie F. and Lucy E. remain with their widowed mother; Joseph F., Jr., is a skilled machinist and is now a resident of the State of California; and L. Catesby remains with his mother and sisters on the old home place, of which he has the active management.

WILLIAM M. JONES. In the foregoing memoir, dedicated to his father, the late Joseph Francis Jones, is given adequate record concerning the family history of William M. Jones, who was born on the old homestead mentioned in the preceding article, the date of birth being January 24, 1807. On this fine old homestead he was reared to manhood, and his higher educational discipline was obtained in old Transylvania College at Lexington. He had active charge of the old home place at the time of his marriage, in 1888, and in the following year he erected his present modern and attractive house, on a part of the old homestead, of which he owns about seventy acres, though he utilizes a total of about two hundred and thirty acres for his farm. He is a goodly skilled and successful enterprise as an agriculturist and stock-grower. He raises principally tobacco, corn and wheat, and in the livestock department of his farm industry he has a fine herd of twenty-five Shorthorn cattle at the time of this writing, in 1920. He has exhibited Shorthorn cattle at various county and state fairs and has won numerous prizes on such exhibits. On his farm he also raises Hampshirite swine of the best type, and his place is known as the Weways Stock Farm. He also feeds each season a goodly number of hogs, and in this special field of enterprise he is associated with his son in Woodford County. For thirty-one years Mr. Jones operated a threshing machine each successive season, and in this connection he became widely known throughout Clark County, where he covered the same territory with his threshing outfit for a number of years. His praiseworthy names appeared continuously on his list for fully thirty years. Mr. Jones has distinctive mechanical ability, and thus he was able to maintain his standard of service in the threshing enterprise up to the highest point. He has taken loyal interest in community affairs and is known as a progressive and public-spirited citizen of his native county. He has appeared on one or more occasions as a candidate for the office of county sheriff, but political exigencies have compassed his defeat each time. He is actively affiliated with the time-honored Masonic fraternity, in which his ancient craft affiliation is with Pine Grove Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He is a member of the Commandery of Knights Templars at Winchester, and the temple of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Lexington. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian Church, and his wife holds membership in the Christian Church.

In 1888 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Jones to Miss Jennie Sweeney, of Lancaster, Garrard County, and of this union have been born four children: Elizabeth is the wife of James B. Ellison, of Madison County; Joseph M. is a prosperous agriculturist and stock-grower in Woodford County, whose maiden name was Mary Catherine Watts, having been born and reared in that county; Annie Morford, who remains at the parental home, is a graduate of the Winchester High School; and William M., Jr., who likewise remains at home, is a member of the class of 1921-in the high school at Winchester, the home place being situated nine miles southwest of that city.

CAPT. WILEY L. DIXON, a captain of infantry in the regular army, now stationed at Fort Thomas, Kentucky, is a native of the state, his ancestors for several generations have been prominent in Henderson County, and he is a descendant of an American officer in the Revolution who particularly distinguished himself at the battle of Camden.

This patriotic ancestor was Henry Dixon, a life-long resident of North Carolina, who served as captain, major and lieutenant-colonel of the Continental Troops under General Washington. He was inspector general on the staff of General Greene at the time of the battle of Eutaw Springs. His wife was Miss Martha Wynn, and one of their sons, Wynn Dixon, served as a lieutenant in the Revolutionary Army. However, the line of paternal descent to Capt. Wiley Dixon is through another son, Henry Dixon, Jr., who was born in Caswell County, North Carolina, and about 1804 established his home in Henderson County, Kentucky, where some of his descendants live today. He was a successful planter, operating his fields with slave labor, and had the honor of representing Henderson County in one of the early State Legislatures. He married Mary Johnston, a native of Virginia, who died in Henderson County. Their son, Henry Dixon the third, great-grandfather of Capt. Wiley Dixon, was born in Henderson County in 1809 and spent his life there as a farmer, planter and slave owner, and was a major captain in the Kentucky State Militia. He died in 1870. His wife was Anna Maria Ashby of Virginia ancestry. The next generation of this old Henderson County family was represented by John Edward Dixon, who was born in 1831 and died in 1900, having spent all his life in Henderson County. In a business way he was identified with farming and planting. He married Miss Mary Sugg, who is still living, at the age of eighty-two, in Henderson, and was born in that county in 1830.

The father of Capt. Wiley Dixon was Dr. Wiley Lee Dixon, who was born in Henderson County in 1860, received a high school education there, and graduated from the St. Louis College of Medicine. He practiced at Morganfield in Union County, Kentucky, until 1902, when he removed to Clarkston, Missouri, and followed his profession there until his death in 1907. He was a democrat, served in the school trustee at Clarkston, and was affiliated with the Episcopal Church and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Doctor Dixon married in Henderson County Miss Nancy Dixon Moseley, now living at Henderson. She was born in Henderson County May 10, 1870, and is a graduate of the Henderson Female Seminary. Wiley L. is the oldest of her three children: Thomas Edward is connected with the Samuels Cuddy Company at St. Louis, Missouri. Her daughter, Martha Elizabeth, lives at home.

Capt. Wiley L. Dixon was born in Henderson County, December 30, 1890, was educated in the public schools of Morganfield, at Clarkston, Missouri, and finished his freshman year in the Henderson High School. He studied law and was admitted to the bar in December, 1914. At the age of sixteen he became an employee of the Henderson Journal, remaining with that newspaper seven months. His first newspaper work began April 1, 1917, as a member of Company B of the Third Kentucky Infantry, National Guard, and for six months he was on duty during the Night Riders disturbances of 1908. Up to January, 1910, he was an employee of the Mann Brothers Department Store at Henderson and was then appointed deputy clerk of the Henderson Circuit Court, an office he filled until April 14, 1912. Then as a major in the National Guard he was on duty in the adjutant general’s office until December 11, 1913, being relieved upon his entrance into the race for the chief clerkship of the Kentucky Senate. He was elected and served during the Session of 1914, and was also connected with the state treasurer's office until September 15, 1915. After leaving Frankfort he returned to Henderson and was in the insurance business until January, 1917, and for several months following was in the valuation accountant's office of the Lousiville & Nashville Railroad Company at Louisville. From July until August 25, 1917, Captain Dixon was a bookkeeper with the prominent contracting firm, the Mason & Hanger Company, who had the contract for the construction of the 1917 flood levee on the Ohio River at Taylor. He left this employment to enter the Second Officers Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana.

A complete detailed record of Captain Dixon's military service may be appropriately entered in this connection. His record in the Kentucky National Guard is as follows: enlisted April 19, 1907, in Company B Third Kentucky Infantry, appointed corporal, elected second lieutenant February 10, 1910; appointed First lieutenant March 11, 1911; appointed captain, infantry, O. R. C., November 27, 1917; assigned to Eighty-eighth Division, Camp Dodge, Iowa, attached to the One Hundred and Sixty-third Depot Brigade, January 1, 1918, attached to the Three Hundred and Fifth Second Infantry, January 4, 1918. Transferred to Camp Hancock, Georgia, May 25, 1918, assigned to Twenty-fourth Recruit Company, R. R. Depot, May 28, 1918, Assigned to the main training depot MGTC, Camp Hancock, Georgia, June 19, 1918. Announced as adjutant, June 19, 1918. Promoted August 19, 1918, to be major infantry, with rank from August 15, 1918. Commanded training group No. 2, main training depot, MGTC, Camp Hancock, Georgia, August 16, 1918. Command Sixth Battalion, group two, September 1, 1918. Assigned to command group two, October 21, 1918. Assigned to Sixth Battalion about December 1, 1918. Assigned to command the training battalion, Camp Hancock, Georgia, January 1919. Assigned infantry officers' school, Camp Lee, Virginia, March 14, 1919, with orders to report April 1. Attached to the Sixty-second Infantry, Camp Lee, Virginia, April 20, 1919. Assigned War Department, Commission on Training Camp Activities, May 26, 1919, given the Tenth District, with headquarters at Chicago, Illinois. Assigned War Plans Division G. S. and as officer in charge of the music sub-section camp activities section, October 16, 1919. Assigned A. G. O., E. and R. Division, June 26, 1920, same duties. Assigned Fort Thomas, Kentucky, August 17, 1920, as education and recreation officer. Accepted permanent commission in captain infantry, regular army on September 20, 1920.

While Captain Dixon is now at the Recruit Depot at Fort Thomas, his permanent residence is at Henderson, and his permanent post office address is the War Department at Washington. He is a democrat in politics, a member of the Episcopal Church, belongs to the September 15, 1913, is a native of Cincinnati, is a lifetime resident of Kentucky. Captain Dixon’s Lodge No. 883 F. & A. M., the Lodge of Ben Hur, and Henderson Camp, Modern Woodmen of America. September 25, 1913, at Frankfort, he married Miss Gazelle Toombs, daughter of Walter K. and Sarah (Minter) Toombs, residents of Louisville, where her father is connected with the Stewart Dry Goods Company. Mrs. Dixon is a graduate of the high school of Frankfort. They have three children: Nancy Mildred, born June 26, 1914; Wiley Lee, Jr., born December 13, 1915; and Robert Toombs, born May 25, 1917.

William Dingus has been widely and favorably known among the people of Floyd County for a long period of years, was in early life a teacher and merchant, studied law and was admitted to practice a quarter of a century ago, is also an ordained minister of the Baptist Church, and is the present county attorney of Floyd County at Prestonsburg.

Mr. Dingus was born at the Forks of Beaver in Floyd County, October 21, 1857, son of James H. and Sarah B. (Halbert) Dingus and grandson of William Dingus of Scott County, Virginia. James H. Dingus was a native of Scott County, Virginia, and came to Kentucky when a young man about 1855. He was a Union soldier during the Civil War, being with Company F of the Thirty-ninth Kentucky Mounted Infantry under Captain Webb. He was in the battles of Salfworks and Puncheton and other important battles, and for a short time was a prisoner of war, but made his escape. His life after the war was devoted to farming in Floyd County, where he died June 3, 1903, at the age of seventy. His wife Sarah was a daughter of John Halbert, who came from North Carolina. She died November 26, 1910, at the age of eighty-five. She was almost a lifelong member of the Methodist Church. One of their children was John L. Dingus, a farmer and business man at Alpharetta in Floyd County; George A. is a farmer in Greenup County; Elman L. is a farmer at Alpharetta; Amanda is the wife of M. L. Preston of Smalley; and Elizabeth is the wife of S. B. May, a merchant and business man at Langley, Kentucky.

William Dingus grew up on his father's homestead, attended the common schools nearby, also was a student at Prestonsburg, and at the age of sixteen qualified as a teacher. Teaching was a profession that engaged him for some years and he taught altogether eight schools. For ten years after his marriage Mr. Dingus was in the mercantile business at Goodloe, Kentucky, and in March, 1901, he removed to Prestonsburg.

William is the eldest of thirteen children. He has been one of the prominent leaders in the Republican party in Floyd County. In 1893 he was the unanimous choice of the Republican convention for United States senator to represent the Thirty-third District. He had no opposition in the election, and in 1895 was reelected over Judge J. K. Dixon. He was in the Senate while Governor Bradley was governor. While in the Senate he diligently pursued the study of law, and was examined by Judges Hazelrigg and J. H. Lewis and admitted to the bar in 1894. He practiced law in connection with merchandising, and since 1901 has been one of the leading attorneys at Prestonsburg. He was chosen county attorney of Floyd County in 1917 and still fills that office.

Mr. Dingus has been a member of the Baptist Church since 1879 and has been an ordained minister of that denomination. He has been especially interested in Sunday School work. Several years ago Mr. Dingus was nominated for assistant secretary of state by J. P. Lewis, but the choice was not approved by Governor Stanley.

Mr. Dingus has sat in the Grand Lodge of Masons and is the present secretary of Zebulon Lodge No. 275 F. & A. M. and affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, is past sachem of the Improved Order of Red Men, and a member of the Macabees.

Mr. Dingus married Pocahontas L. Layne, who was born at Prestonsburg, daughter of J. S. Layne. They have a family of six children: Nora M. is the wife of W. H. Powers, a businessman at Henderson, Texas;
Joseph S. is a teacher and farmer at East Point in Floyd County; T. H. Dingus is now district manager for the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company at Evansville, Indiana. Grace living at Prestonsburg, is the widow of Carl Ford. William A. is associated with the Morehead Supply Company of Prestonsburg. The youngest of the family is Sally B.

Whitfield Family. Whitfield has been a distinguished name in several Southern states throughout a period of seven or eight generations. Two prominent coal operators of Eastern Kentucky bear that name and are of that lineage. Both were born in Marengo County, Alabama, but the family was earlier identified with North Carolina and still earlier with Virginia.

The Whitfields came from Lancashire, England, and the ancient form of the name, Hoit-Feldt, suggests that their ancestors were probably among those Northmen who settled on the coast of Morecambe Bay about or before the time of Alfred the Great. The family coat of arms signifies descent from the sea kings.

Mathew Whitfield came to Virginia by way of Barbados in the ship Prosperous in the year 1679, and received one or more grants of land from the Virginia government for bringing colonists into the country. He is supposed to have owned or chartered his ship. Mathew was a son of Mathew, who was a son of a Sir Thomas Whitfield of the East India Company. He had two children of record, a son, William, born in 1691, and a daughter, Elizabeth, born in 1714. Elizabeth Goodman of Nansemond County, Virginia, and a daughter, Elizabeth, who married in 1717 John Smith, a great-grandson of John Smith of the East India Company. It is recorded that this younger John Smith was baptized at Barbados in 1679.

William Whitfield I and his wife Elizabeth Goodman had eleven children, among these William II, born in 1715, and Rachel Bryan, who was the daughter of Needham Bryan and his wife, Anne Rambeau, and granddaughter of William Bryan and Alice Needham. Alice Needham, born about 1668, was a granddaughter of the Sir Robert Needham of Lambeth, so often mentioned by John Evelyn in his Diary. Rebecca, a sister of Rachel Bryan, married Daniel Boone of Kentucky, who named one of his stations Bryan.

Mathew Whitfield II (1715-1758) and his wife, Rachel Bryan, had a numerous issue, among them, William, born 1743, married Barbara Williams; Bryan, born 1754, married Winifred Bryan; Needham, born 1756, married four times; and Elizabeth, who married first a Smith and afterward Farquhard Campbell. All of these sons were soldiers of the Revolution.

In the battle of Moores Creek Bridge in 1776 William and his brother-in-law, Ben Williams, captured Colonel Ford, and a daughter of MacDonald, both wounded. Colonel Campbell was carried to Rockford, the seat of William Whitfield II, where he was nursed back to health by Elizabeth, whom he afterward married. Some of their descendants live in Sumter County, Alabama. One of them, Robert Macgregor Campbell, was an officer in the recent World war.

General Bryan Whitfield (1754-1817) married Winifred Bryan, daughter of Needham Bryan, who was a son of Hardy Bryan and grandson of Edward Bryan. This branch of the Bryan family is traced back to a royal line in Ireland.

General Bryan Whitfield, above mentioned, was owner of a large estate known as Pleasant Plains, Lenoir County, North Carolina. Immediately after the Revolutionary war North Carolina established a state militia, and the master of Pleasant Plains was appointed major-general. Gen. Bryan Whitfield in the year 1780 was one of the founders of the University of North Carolina and one of its first trustees.

It was on his plantation, Pleasant Plains, that Nathan Bryan Whitfield was born September 19, 1799. Gen. Bryan Whitfield entertained liberally and his house was a meeting place for the cultured people of his section. In this hospitality he shared honors with his wife who, as noted, was the daughter of Nathan Bryan, a large land and slave owner who died in 1798, while a member of the National Congress.

Nathan Bryan Whitfield early developed special intellectual genius. His father, observing the premature development of the child's mental powers, forbade that he should be taught letters before he reached his seventh birthday. At the age of nine he attended school, after a twelvemonth at West Point and University. His prudent father again interfered and sent him to the counting room, the business office of a merchant, where he might be employed in other directions than the study of books. However, the next year he matriculated at the University, where he finished his education at the age of seventeen. At an early age he was counsellor of state for the State of North Carolina. Some years after coming of age he was commissioned major-general to succeed his father. After him his brother George held the commission, and when George moved to Florida the third brother, James, was similarly dignified in the military affairs of the state.

Nathan Bryan Whitfield in the year 1810 married his cousin Elizabeth, or Betsy Whitfield, who was a daughter of Needham Whitfield, mentioned in the preservation. Bryan married Elizabeth Needham Whitfield, of Virginia, of Georgia, and of Alabama. He was the son of Elizabeth, who married, first a Bryan, second a Cowperthwaite, third a Mary, Bryan Watkins, Needham George, Nathan Bryan, Edith and Bessee. In 1834 General Whitfield brought his wife and a large number of slaves to Marengo County, Alabama. Some years later he built his home near Demopolis, Alabama, on the site of the old Indian agency and named it Gaineswood in honor of General George S. Gaines, who was the Government agent at a dead place. Gaineswood was a masterly construction of original architecture. The master was both architect and builder. He had no assistance to draw the plans, no labor was employed except his own slaves until the fresco work and the panel painting were ready to be done. Then he sent to Philadelphia for skilled white workmen. The drawing room was forty feet long and two great Parian mirrors were set in the walls. The heavy carpet was woven to fit the floor without seams. Gaineswood was visited by architects from all parts of the country, and one eminent authority declared it the purest type of Grecian architecture in America. During the Civil war in 1863 Gaineswood was the headquarters of General Polk, one of General Whitfield's lifelong friends. At Gaineswood General Whitfield sunk the second arsian well that was bored on the American Continent. This was done with tools made in his plantation blacksmith shop.

General Whitfield never sought public office. Nevertheless he was one of the strong men and great personalities of his time in the state. He was active in counsel and personal aid of public enterprises, planned the beautiful buildings of the Western Alabama Fair Association at Demopolis and promoted the early fairs held there. His second wife was Betty Whitfield. Nathan was the only child of this marriage.

One of the children of General Whitfield of Gaineswood was Dr. Bryan Watkins Whitfield, who was born in North Carolina in 1828 and died in 1868. He was educated at the University of North Carolina, studied medicine at the University of Pennsylvania and for many years practiced as a physician and surgeon at Demopolis, having spent the greater part of his life from childhood in Marengo County. During the war between the North and the South he entered the service of the Confederate government and gave his time, his services and his plantation to the cause he so ardently espoused. Recognizing the dire need of chemicals and medicines because of the blockade so rigidly enforced he manufactured niter, raised poppies, from which he extracted a crude opium, and from the food grown on his plantation kept those who were in need. There are few instances of a more complete devotion to duty than that offered by the secession affairs of Doctor Whitfield. In politics he was a democratic party and principles had in him an ardent supporter. A communicant of the Episcopal Church, he ever lived up to its highest ideals and contributed generously of his means to it. He was a Royal Arch Mason. Doctor Whitfield in 1855 married Mary Alice Fosque, the original spelling of which name was Foucque. He was married by mail with Carolina in early Colonial times. Mary Alice Fosque was born in her life in Marengo County, Alabama. Her children were Allen, who died in infancy; a son that died in infancy; Bessie Alice, who became the wife of James Whitfield, a physician and surgeon and coal operator and very successful business man, and both died at Demopolis; Jesse George, a civil engineer in Marengo County; Augustus Fosque and Bryan Watkins, who are the Kentucky coal operators and whose individual sketches follow; Nathan, a planter in Marengo County; Alice, who died at San Angelo, Texas, in 1921, wife of Levin Compton, formerly a cotton planter of Marengo County, Alabama, and now a merchant at San Angelo; Hettie, wife of Thomas L. Sharpe, a coal operator of Nauvoo, Alabama; the three succeeding children, two sons and a daughter, a resident of Marengo, and Mary, the youngest, who died at Demopolis, was the wife of Thomas E. McKinley, a manufacturer of wagon material and other woodwork at Demopolis.

Augustus Fosque Whitfield, who represents the Whitfield family in Kentucky, is president of the Clover Fork Coal Company of Kitts, Harlan County, and was formerly identified with the Cotton Coal Company of Arjay in Bell County, these being two of the successful mining corporations operating in this section of Eastern Kentucky.

He was born in Marengo County, Alabama, December 28, 1851, and his early boyhood fell within the period of war and reconstruction. For three terms he attended the Marengo School. When he was two years old he lived on his father's plantation until he was twenty-one. Later for two and a half years he was a student in the Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn, and for five years was in the signal service of the United States Army and the Weather Bureau. He did signal work or field service in the war against Geronimo, while that famous Indian was still holding out against the United States forces. During this duty he was stationed at Fort Thomas, Arizona. From 1890 to 1899 Mr. Whitfield was engaged in surveying and other kinds of work in his native state. In the latter year he entered his present field of endeavor, in which he has found congenial and profitable employment. For seven years he was connected with the coal mining business of Kitts, Alabama, and in that time he and his associates opened two mines at Nauvoo and one in Jefferson County, Alabama. He served as secretary and treasurer of the Black Creek Coal Company and of the Warrior Pratt Coal Company, but sold his Alabama property in 1907 and, coming to Kentucky, with his brother B. W. Whitfield, organized the Left Fork Coal Company of Arjay in Bell County. In 1907 he assisted in organizing the Clover Fork Coal Company, with headquarters at Kitts in Harlan County, and served it as secretary and treasurer until 1917 when he was succeeded by his son, A. F. Whitfield, Jr. In 1919 he was elected president, the office he still holds. The mines of the Clover Fork Company are located at Kitts and have a capacity of twenty-five cars per day.

Mr. Whitfield has his home at Middlesboro, where among other properties he owns his residence at Burnhamwood and Inglewood roads. He is an independent in politics. For many years he has been a communicant of the Episcopal Church. In Masonry he belongs to Pinnacle Lodge No. 661, F. and A. M., at Middlesboro; Louisville Consistory, in which he has been raised to the thirty-second degree, and Kosair Temple of the World war, in which he perfected himself in flying, but as he was a skilled repairer and very useful in the manufacture of airplanes, was kept in this country and used for this class of work during the eighteen months he was in the service, but was mustered out as a sergeant in the aerial service; William, who is a student of the Kentucky State University at Lexington, Kentucky; Hettie, who is a student at Berea College, and is a home companion, Thomas, who is president of the Middleboro High School; Margaret, who is attending the Middleboro graded schools; an infant, twin of Margaret, who died at birth; and Jesse George and Dorothy, both of whom are attending the Middleboro graded schools.

Both in Alabama and Kentucky Mr. Whitfield is recognized as a man who has never failed to his trust. His success in life is of his own making. He is of the caliber that is only stimulated, not discouraged, by reverses. He and his wife have reared a fine family and all of them are held in the highest esteem in the several communities in which they reside.

Bryan Watkins Whitfield, of Kitts, Harlan County, one of the most skillful and successful coal operators in the State of Kentucky, bears the name of his honored father, Dr. Bryan Watkins Whitfield, whose career is briefly noted in the sketch of the Whitfield family. He is not only a namesake, but in every way worthy of his father's name and character, and in business, in the loyalty of good citizenship, and the integrity of manhood is thoroughly entitled to the name of Whitfield.

He was born in Marengo County, Alabama, in 1864. The family fortunes having been largely dissipated as a result of the war, he was reared under the influences that proceeded from his cultured and high-minded parents, but had to realize most of his own advantages beyond the limited facilities available to the family. In high school he excelled in a common school two years, at the age of eighteen entered the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Starkville, Mississippi, where he studied three years. This period of study reinforced his natural abilities for constructive work and engineering. After leaving college he was resident engineer on the construction work of the Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham Railroad until 1896, when he became superintendent for the Galloway Coal Company of Carbon Hill and Galloway in Walker County, Alabama. In 1899, as president of the Black Creek Coal Company, he opened the mines on that company's property at Nauvoo, Alabama, and continued in the capacity of president until December, 1906, at which time he sold his interest in the company. In January, 1907, he also sold his interest in the Warrior Pratt Coal Company in Jefferson County, Alabama, a newly formed corporation then engaged in developing and nearly ready to ship coal. He was also president of this company.

Bryan W. Whitfield in 1907 entered the coal industry of Eastern Kentucky, helping to form the Left Fork Coal Company which opened and operated two mines at Arjay, Kentucky. He was president of that company until the property was sold to the Continental Coal Corporation. He and his associates then formed the Clover Fork Coal Company at Kitts, and he remained president of this corporation until January 1, 1910. He is now president of the Harlan Colliers Company at Aages, Kentucky, and manages with a crew of about twenty-five cars per day. During the past fourteen years through his connection with the companies noted and in other ways his influence has been a constructive one in the development of the coal industry of Eastern Kentucky.

Mr. B. W. Whitfield married Miss Lou Morrow, of Mississippi, who died soon afterward, leaving no children. His second wife was Miss Amme Keyes, daughter of Maj. Robert Brittain of Lexington, Kentucky, and they have three children: Frances, a student of art in New York; Bryan, a student in the Kentucky University at Lexington; and Mary, a student in the Kentucky College for Women at Danville; and a son now deceased.

B. W. Whitfield is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a member of the Mystic Shrine at Birmingham. During the late war his special patriotic service was in the line of his long practical experience. He bent every resource toward the increase of coal production within his own mines and to aid the fuel administration in production and conservation everywhere. He was also a liberal contributor in a financial way to the Red Cross, Loan and War Savings Stamps drives.

Col. C. B. Lyttle is one of the veteran members of the bar of Clay County and achieved marked distinction in the work of his profession, his practice being now confined to occasional appearance in connection with cases of important order. He is a native son of Kentucky, a representative of one of the old and honored families of this section of the Blue Grass State, and in his profession and as a liberal and public-spirited citizen he has contributed much to the prestige which is his. His distinguished father had here given to the family name as a talented lawyer and as a man of much influence in community life and public affairs of more general order.

Colonel Lyttle was born at Harlan, judicial center of the Kentucky County of the same name, and the date of his nativity was March 10, 1850. The lineage of the Lyttle family traces back to sterling Scotch-Irish origin, and the founders of the American branch of the family settled in Virginia in the Colonial period of our national history. Harrington Lyttle, grandfather of the subject of this review, passed his entire life in Lee County, Virginia, was a successful planter and a citizen of prominence and influence and was a resident of Jonesville, that county, at the time of his death, which occurred prior to the birth of his grandson, Colonel Lyttle of this review.

Hon. David Y. Lyttle, father of him whose name identifies this review, was born in Lee County, Virginia, in the year 1821, and died at his fine homestead farm, Cedar Craig, one-fourth of a mile north of the Court House at Manchester, Clay County, Kentucky, in the year 1907. He was reared and educated in the Old Dominion State, and about the year 1846 he came to Kentucky and established his residence at Harlan, county seat of Harlan County, whence in 1856 he removed to Clay County and engaged in the practice of law at Manchester, besides becoming the owner of the nearby Cedar Craig farm, which he developed into one of the fine properties of this section of the state and which continued his place of residence during the remainder of his long and worthy life. He became one of the distinguished members of the Kentucky bar, and for many years controlled an exceptionally large and representative law business, which involved his interposition in many litigations of major importance. He continued in the practice of his profession throughout his entire active career, and was one of the venerable and honored citizens of Clay County at the time of his death. A leader in the councils of the democratic party in this section of Kentucky, he preferred to give his attention to his profession rather than to function in public office, but he consented at one time to represent the Thirty-third Senate District in the General Legislature. The records of the State Senate show the excellent constructive work and loyal service which he gave as a member of that body. He was a lieutenant colonel of the Kentucky State Militia during the climacteric period of the Civil war. Both he and his wife were zealous members of the Christian Church, and he was liberal in the support of its various activities.

As a young man Col. David Y. Lyttle wedded Miss Dorothea B. Brittain of the distinguished family of that name, of Harlan, Kentucky, in 1823, and who died at the Cedar Craig homestead in Clay County in the year 1863. Of the children of this union the oldest is Prof. G. Brittain Lyttle, who now resides in the home of his only surviving brother, Colonel Lyttle of this sketch. Professor Lyttle is a man of high intellectual attainments and has achieved special pedagogic distinction as a teacher of the Spanish language, his profession having been offered in the city of Knoxville, Tennessee, and New Orleans, Louisiana, as well as in various other communities. Dale C. was a farmer near Manchester, Clay County, at the time of his death in 1882. Colonel Lyttle of this review was the next in order of birth. Louisa and William died in infancy. Nancy became the wife of A. J. Hecker, an attorney, and both died at Manchester, Clay County, she having been but thirty years of age at the time of her demise. James was a prosperous merchant in the City of Topeka, Kansas, at the time of his death 1901. Sallie is the wife of Harvey L. Hatton, of Barbourville, Knox County. Robert Lee was a resident of Harlan County at the time of his death in 1891.

After the death of his first wife Col. David Y. Lyttle married Miss Ellen Jett, who was born in Breathitt County, Kentucky, in 1830, and whose death occurred at her homestead near Manchester, Clay County. Their children were born of this marriage: Malva, who became the wife of D. K. Rawlings, died at Cedar Craig, Clay County, in 1884, and her husband was engaged in the practice of law at London, Laurel County, at the time of his death; Cassie, who resides at Versailles, Woodford County, is the widow of B. White, Jr., who was a farmer by vocation and who was murdered by an assassin in the spring of 1921; Leonora is the wife of Frank P. Milburn, a successful architect, and they reside in the City of Washington, D. C.; Margaret is the wife of George Combs, of Washington, D. C., where as a talented newspaper man he represents the Baltimore Sun, a leading paper in the metropolis of Maryland.

The public schools of Manchester, Clay County, afforded Col. C. B. Lyttle his early education, and thereafter he was for four terms a student in the University of Kentucky at Lexington. In preparing himself for his profession he was signally favored in having received the preceptorship of Hon. W. C. Breckinridge and Hon. John T. Shelby, two of Kentucky's most distinguished lawyers. Prior to attending the lectures delivered by these able legists he had so far advanced his technical studies as to prove himself eligible for the bar, to which he was admitted in 1871. In that year he engaged in the practice of his profession at Manchester, and the judicial center of Clay County continued as the central stage of his extensive and important activities for many years, even as it continues to represent his home at the present time, in which he is retired from active practice save when called upon to give his able interposition in cases of major importance. The Colonel has long held high reputation as a skilled and resourceful trial lawyer, and in both the civil and criminal departments of his profession he has won many noteworthy court victories in which he has won with causes of more than local celebrity. He resides upon his beautiful suburban household known as Brooks View, a finely improved farmstead of 300 acres one-fourth of a mile west of Manchester, besides which he retains ownership of a part of his father's old home place, Cedar Craig.

At all times has Colonel Lyttle stood exponent of local, liberal and progressive civic ideals, and his political allegiance has been unreservedly to the democratic party. As a young man he served three terms, a total of twelve years, as county attorney of Clay County, and he served as presidential elector for the Eleventh Congressional District of Kentucky at the time of the election of President Wilson for his first term. He served as a colonel on the military staff of Governor Black. The Colonel has wielded much influence in the furtherance of educational advancement in the county, and in a professional and business way has had important association with railroad affairs in Kentucky. Both he and his wife held membership in the Presbyterian Church at Manchester, and are active in its support and work. Their beautiful home is known as a center of gracious hospitality and as the stage of much of the regenerate social life of the community.

In 1878 was solemnized the marriage of Colonel Lyttle to Miss Bell Garrard, daughter of Gen. T. T. and Lucy (Lee) Garrard, both of whom died in Clay County, Representatives of old and distinguished Kentucky families. General Garrard as a young man served as captain of a Kentucky company in the Mexican war, and in the Civil war it was his to give gallant service as a brigadier general in command of troops that did splendid work in defense of the cause of the Union. Throughout his business career General Garrard was a successful manufacturer of salt near Manchester, and he was long known and honored as one of the influential citizens and leading men of affairs in Clay County. Mrs. Lyttle is a woman of most gracious personality and of distinctive culture, her educational attainments in her youth having included those of Loretta College and the Women's School at Frankfort, Kentucky's capital city. In conclusion is given brief record concerning the children of Colonel and Mrs. Lyttle: John Dishman, eldest of the number, died at the parental home when twenty-one years of age; Theophilus T., who was born in 1881, is a prosperous lumber dealer at Manchester and is also identified with important coal-mining interests in this section of the state; David V., named in honor of his paternal grandfather, has professionally followed in the footsteps of his father and grandfather and is one of the representative younger members of the bar of Clay County, where he was born in 1882 and where he resides on his home farm near Manchester; Emma is the wife of John Lucas, a coal operator, and they reside near East Manchester; James M., a resident of Manchester, is a lumber dealer and coal operator; Lucy is the wife of C. B. Donnelly, who owns and operates a portion of the old Lyttle family homestead farm, Cedar Craig, besides which he is, in 1921, private secretary to Hon. J. M. Robison, representative of the Eleventh Kentucky District in the Congress of the United States; Carl died in infancy; Helen is the wife of M. R. Hill, who is engaged in the insurance business in the City of Manchester; Drusilla is the wife of John C. White, Jr., a prosperous farmer near Park Valley, Clay County.

MRS. MABEL (VAN DYKE) BELL has the unique distinction of being the first and only woman appointed and performing the duties and responsibilities of a United States commissioner. She has filled that place at Covington, in the Eastern District of Kentucky, since January 1, 1912, at which time Hon. A. M. J. Cochran, judge of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky, conferred that office upon her. Her ability and qualifications were not unknown, for she had served in the Federal Court for several years prior to her assuming the commissioner's duties. For nearly ten years she continued in both offices, but the increasing amount of work occasioned by the war made it necessary for her to give up one or the other and she resigned as deputy clerk.

Mrs. Bell was born in Maysville, Kentucky, where her father, L. W. Van Dyke, had located after leaving the home of his father, David Van Dyke, a Presbyterian minister, a descendant of the Van Dykes of Holland, who left the old country and in Colonial days settled in Pennsylvania.

After leaving his Philadelphia home L. W. Van Dyke wandered a little and ultimately settled in Maysville, Kentucky, where he married and where he carried on the business of a merchant, at which time he moved to Covington, Kentucky, and established insurance offices in Cincinnati, Ohio. He was a pioneer in several plans of life insurance, originating the annuity life, and several others. His early death prevented the success coming to him that afterward came to his followers. In 1878 he died, leaving a widow, who survived a few years only, and one child, Mabel.

Mrs. Bell was educated in the West and at a large number of descendants of the Baltimore family of that name. Her father, Abram Howell, early left the place of his birth, education and marriage (Baltimore), and traveling over the mountains in what was then known as a "Dearborn" with his wife, mother-in-law and several children and servants, he came to, admired and therefore settled in Kenton County, Kentucky, where he purchased a large farm. The land comprising that farm is now covered with the tracks and repair shops of the L. and N. and the C. and O. Railways. Mr. Howell was one of the prominent, prosperous and enterprising business men of Covington in those early days and engaged in many undertakings. He owned a large fleet of steam-boats plying the Ohio between Cincinnati and New Orleans, and it is said that he was one of the bitter opponents of the L&N, and when returning from the south, that he and a son-in-law lost their lives in the burning of the boat.

Mr. Howell was an ardent republican, taking active part in the campaigns and torch light processions of that day. He and his wife, Mary Curtis, died within a short time of each other, leaving a family of eleven children, all of whom are now deceased.

Mrs. Bell acquired her education in Covington and at Science Hill, Shelbyville, Kentucky, where under Doctor Poynter she with many other Kentucky girls, was given the best of training under the instruction of that noted and capable instructor.

In February of 1900 Mabel Van Dyke married Francis Johnson Bell, of Danville, Kentucky. She is the proud mother of two sons, both of whom show marked ability along scientific electrical lines. The older boy, David Van, born December 1900, was a student at the Cincinnati Ohio Mechanics Institute when war was declared in April, 1917, and although but sixteen he volunteered, was accepted and enlisted in the Kentucky First. He received intensive training in Hattiesburg, Mississippi, and was sent overseas in October. He returned in January, 1919, and immediately returned to his electricity. The second son, Thomas Helin, born in November, 1902, graduated from Covington High School in June, 1920, and is still a student.

Good health has never been one of the possessions of Mrs. Bell, but with great endurance and energy, together with ambition for her two boys, who were small children when left to her support, she has hewed her way through paths not before traveled by woman. Having blazed the trail, she will, of course, be followed by many others and she wishes them all success. Her achievements have not been great, but have been unusual and original, and for that reason Kentucky should be proud of this daughter. She always says, with a sincere smile, that she could have done nothing without her wonderful friends, and to them she owes everything.

NARET M. WHITE. Well and favorably known in the coal industry of Floyd County is Naret M. White, general manager of the Colonial Coal and Coke Company, of Prestonsburg. Mr. White has been connected with this line of industry practically since he entered upon his career, and the situation therewith has been the incumbent of numerous important positions. In the various communities in which he has been located he has always been found a man of the highest principles and strictest integrity, and at Prestonsburg, where he has lived since 1910, has formed many sincere and lasting friendships.

Mr. White was born on a farm near Rio Grande, Galax County, Virginia, on December 30, 1861, a son of D. A. and Mary J. White, the latter of whom died when her son was still a child. D. A. White, at the outbreak of the war between the states, joined the Union army as a waggonmaster, and later in the war was with the Squelir Rifle contingent when the daring Confederate officer Morgan made his raid into Ohio. After the war Mr. White resumed his activities as an agriculturist, a vocation in which he became very prosperous, and with which he was identified until his death in 1910, at the age of eighty-five years. He was a member of the Methodist Church for many years, and his family were reared in the midst of a strict Methodist atmosphere.

Brought up in a home where truth and industry were placed at their proper value, N. M. White attended the country district schools and later the Rio Grande College, and at the age of eighteen was a circuit school-teacher. One year of this work, however, sufficed to show him that he did not care for the vocation of the educator, and he accordingly accepted a position as clerk in a dry goods store at Jackson, Ohio. He received his introduction to the coal industry as weighmaster for the Emma Coal Company, and one year later was transferred to the Ada mine, a property owned by the Superior Coal Company, at Jackson, Ohio. Later he was accountant for that concern, but five years of constant service in the office broke down his health and his concern transferred him to outside work as superintendent of the mine at Glenroy. After three years he became general superintendent of all the mines, extending from Wellston to Jackson, and acted in that capacity for sixteen years. In 1910 Mr. White became connected with the Colonial Coal and Coke Company, the home office of which is at Pottsville, Pennsylvania. This is a Delaware corporation organized to operate in the Kentucky coal fields, and owns and operates four mines, Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, on the west side of the Big Sandy, and mine No. 1 on the east side of that stream. This was one of the pioneer companies of this region, its operations dating back to 1882.

Since locating at Prestonsburg, Mr. White has built a home and taken an active part in the life of the community, where he is held in the highest esteem. He and his worthy wife are consistent members of the Methodist Church. Mr. White has supported all worthy measures in a public-spirited way, but has confined his interest in public affairs to that taken by a good citizen, his ever seeking office on his own account. He is an enthusiastic Mason and Knight Templar and belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, his fraternal connections being with the bodies at Jackson.

In 1887 Mr. White was united in marriage with Miss Ella L. Crossland, of Jackson, Ohio, and to this union there have been born a son and a daughter: Naret M., Jr., and Ellanoe, the latter of whom is unmarried and resides with her parents. Naret M. White, Jr., received good educational advantages and, having chosen civil engineering as his profession, entered class of 1892 of Engineering at the Ohio State University. Upon his graduation he spent a year in the Berkley Office, Chicago, and later entered the office of Richard S. Williams, at New York City, with whom he was associated for a year. He then entered the office of the Eastern States Engineering Company, at New York, where he has been associated to the present time. Upon his marriage he located at Prestonsburg, where he has resided ever since. He is active in the affairs of the community, and is hearty in the promotion of public activities.

JUDGE ASHLAND T. PATRICK, Circuit Judge of the Thirty-first Judicial District, has earned numerous distinctions during his long career at the bar and in public affairs, covering a period of forty years.

Something in the environment of his birthplace seems to develop able lawyers and influential leaders of men. Judge Patrick was born June 2, 1859, in what is now Magoffin County, then a part of Floyd on Burning Springs Fork of Licking River. In that same locality were three such eminent men as Judge J. P. Adams, Judge David Redwine, Judge Matthew Redwine, Judge D. W. Gardner and a number of other notable Kentucky attorneys.

The parents of Judge Patrick were John W. and Abigail (Salyers) Patrick, both representing old and prominent families of Eastern Kentucky. The Patricks came from Tazewell County, Virginia. The grandfather of Judge Patrick was John Patricks, who was born in Burke’s Gardens in Tazewell County and with his family came to the Licking Valley of Kentucky in 1820, establishing his home on the land where his grandson was born. John Patrick owned and farmed a large tract of land in the Valley and was an active Methodist and a democrat before the war. He proved faithful to the Union in the struggle between the states. He was an uncle of Capt. Reuben Patrick, who stole the flag from Fort Henry May 12, 1861. Thereafter his judgment was that peaceable means of ordnance is now owned by the family at Salyersville. John Patrick was past eighty when he died. John W. Patrick likewise followed farming and was also a merchant. He died in February, 1919, at the age of eighty-two. His wife, Abigail Salyers, was a daughter of Jacob Salyers, who lived at Oil Springs in Johnson County. She died in the month of April following his death at about eighty years of age. They had been married half a century. In their family of eleven children Judge Patrick is the oldest. Bascom C. is a farmer at Salyersville; Martha E. is the wife of Judge W. L. May of Salyersville; John H. is a farmer in Magoffin County; Fernelia is the wife of D. B. Patrick of Salyersville; Dona C. was elected sheriff of Magoffin County in November, 1921; W. S. was married to the late Ada A. Grant of Winchester; Charles B. is a resident of Salyersville; D. P. lives at Picher, Oklahoma; Gemma is the wife of Oliver Patrick of Ivtyon, Kentucky; and Ben, the youngest, lives in Magoffin County.

Ashland T. Patrick was liberally educated in the classics as well as in the law. He attended Georgetown College in Kentucky, and the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware. He finished his university course at the age of twenty-two. He taught three terms of school and in 1881 was admitted to the bar. Judge O’Reary became an attorney the same day. Judge Patrick was associated in his law practice at Salyersville with W. W. House until the latter’s death, and retained his home at Salyersville until 1916, when he removed to Prestonsburg. His abilities commanded the choice of an extensive general practice as a lawyer, but for many years he has shared the responsibilities of public office at the same time. At the age of twenty-four he was superintendent of schools of Magoffin County, serving four years. From 1886 to 1896 he was United States Commissioner. He was elected County Attorney in 1901, and filled that office four years. Judge Patrick was elected Circuit Judge in 1915, being chosen the Republican ticket in a democratic district. Judge Patrick is a member of the older and affiliated Masons, Maccabees, Junior Order United American Mechanics, and was formerly a deacon and is now an elder in the Presbyterian Church.

In 1882 he married the daughter of W. W. House, his former law partner. Judge and Mrs. Patrick have four children. Jemore is the wife of Dr. R. C. Adams, who served with the rank of colonel in the Medical Corps with the American forces in France. Miss Elam is the wife of R. J. Elam, an attorney and also editor of the Independent at Salyersville. The son, Henry B., who answered the call to the colors and was assigned to clerical duty at Baltimore during the war, is now connected with the Land Department of the Elkhead Coal Company at Prestonsburg. The youngest is Effie E., wife of Charles Milby, a traveling salesman with home at Buffalo in Lint County.

John William Moore, who was one of General Morgan’s men during the Civil war, has given more than half a century to the service of agriculture and stock raising, and practically all that time has lived on his present farm at Winooski, Prestonsburg. This is the original T. Thomas Ap Jones farm, and is situated a mile from the Kentucky River, in the southwestern part of Clark County. The farm for years and years was noted as a nursery, and many orchards far and near over Kentucky received their foundation stock from this land. For a number of years past it has been cultivated as a general farm.

Mr. Moore represents a Kentucky family, though he is a native of Missouri. He was born in Scotland County, of that state July 23, 1843, a son of Reuben and Mary E. (Lowe) Moore. His grandfather, also named Reuben, was one of three brothers who came from Allemarle County, Virginia, to Kentucky about 1800. Reuben settled in Madison County, one of his brothers lived in Clark County, and still another went to Tennessee. Reuben Moore, Sr., was born June 27, 1782, and dined in Madison County, Kentucky, September 2, 1846. He married, March 31, 1803, Mrs. Mary (Wagoner) Watts. They had the following family: George T., born August 31, 1807, removed to Missouri, where he died; William W., born July 23, 1812, died in Madison County, Kentucky, at the age of ninety-four, and his family, and represented there; Elizabeth, born October 3, 1816, moved after her marriage to Missouri; Sarah, born June 27, 1818, also married and went to Missouri; Reuben, Jr.; John F., who was born November 24, 1821, and moved to Missouri; Mary M., born in 1824, became a resident of Missouri; and Joseph W., who was born May 11, 1827, lived in Madison County, Kentucky, during the Civil war and then moved to Missouri, where he died. Reuben Moore, Jr., was born May 17, 1829, and on August 18, 1842, married Mary E. Lowe. On their marriage they moved to Scotland County, Missouri, where John W. Moore was born the next year. After two years they came back to Kentucky for the purpose of settling on a farm south of the town of Montgomery. Dr. William Webb. Reuben Moore was administrator of that estate and died about a year after his return to Kentucky. His younger son, Reuben M., was born after his father’s death on the old Webb place, and the widowed mother remained there in Clark County until her death in 1863. At the time of her death her son, John W., was a prisoner in Camp Douglas, Chicago. Reuben, the younger son, lived with his mother and grandmother and after his marriage located at Lexington. He became well known as a breeder and trainer of trotting horses and died at the age of fifty.

John William Moore grew up and lived with his mother until he entered the army. He attended school at Harrisburg and also what is now the Agricultural and Mechanical College at Lexington. He left that school to go into Gen. John Morgan’s Army, and was wounded at Perryville. He then went to Chicago and was naturalized. He finally exchanged after twenty-one months as a prisoner, and in February, 1865, he rejoined his old command in Virginia and served until Lee’s final surrender.

On October 14, 1867, Mr. Moore married Mary T. Jones, a daughter of Fauntleroy Jones and a granddaughter of Thomas Ap Jones. Mr. and Mrs. Moore were married in one of the rooms of the comfortable old residence where they still reside. This home was originally built by an early German settler in this locality, then known as Germantown, and at one time the Post Office was kept in the house. Fauntleroy Jones was moderator of the Church of the Nazarenes. The nursery on the farm for his wife’s father, and about twenty years ago he came into ownership of 125 acres of the Jones place, which originally contained 350 acres. Finally he discontinued the nursery business and has since given his time to general farming.

After more than fifty years of married companionship, Mr. and Mrs. Moore have nine grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. He has one son, William Fauntleroy Pursley. John G. Pursley is widely known as a very successful business man, the owner and manager of 600 acres of farm land in Clark County. Mr. Moore is a member of the Masonic Lodge, Royal Arch Chapter, Knight Templar Commandery at Winchester, the Mystic Shrine at Lexington, and several times filled the chair of master in the local lodge and has been repeatedly representative to the Grand Lodge. A democratic voter, he has never cared for office and in church matters is an elder in Mt. Zion Christian Church.

Lee Salmons, superintendent of the Middle Creek Coal Company and a resident of Prestonsburg, is a native of Eastern Kentucky and as a youth took up mining and has been identified and associated with practically every phase of the great coal developments in this part of the state, one of the greatest sources of wealth to Kentucky.

Mr. Salmons was born near Prestonsburg in Floyd County in April 15, 1872, son of David and Katharine (Campbell) Salmons. Her father was born in Tazewell County, Virginia, in 1819 and as a young man came to the Big Sandy Valley. He had a brief service in the Civil war, and his active life has been spent in farming and in the timber business. He is still living at his home near Prestonsburg. His wife was born in Knox County, Kentucky. Of their family were six sons and six daughters, six at home, living, Jane and Martha at home; Cio, wife of George Chit of Prestonsburg; Lee; Joseph, connected with the Eureka Coal Company; Henry, with the Middle Creek Coal Company; and Thomas, who was also a miner and died at the age of twenty-four.

Lee Salmons had a common school education and as a boy his working experience was on the farm and in the timber. He took many rafts of timber down the Big Sandy and came to know the river perfectly. When he abandoned that industry he began coal mining, and he has worked in the mines and has helped open many shafts and drifts in Eastern Kentucky. For thirteen years he has been connected with the Middle Creek Coal Company, beginning as a machine operator, then as an electrician, with the blessing of God in his labors. While a past master of the art of coal mining Mr. Salmons as a citizen has maintained a public spirited attitude to the best interests of his community and has directed his special influence in behalf of good schools. He is a democrat and Mrs. Salmons is a member of the Methodist Church.

April 28, 1888, she married Emma Crum, daughter of Michael Crum of Prestonsburg. They have one daughter, Anna, now the wife of Goble Brown of Prestonsburg.

Edward L. Grubbs has gained marked success and distinctive prestige in connection with educational work in his native state, where he has been continuously engaged in teaching for somewhat more than thirty years and where he is now superintendent of the city schools of Junction City, Boyle County.

Edward Lee Grubbs was born at Shelby City, Boyle County, on the 29th of June, 1860, and is a son of William Edward Grubbs and Desdemona (Young) Grubbs, the former of whom was born in the State of Virginia, September 22, 1843, and the latter of whom was born in the State of Indiana, November 5, 1850, their marriage having been solemnized at Shelby City, Kentucky, on the 17th of December, 1867.

William E. Grubbs was reared and educated in his native state, where for two years he was a student in the historic old University of Virginia at Charlottesville, and he was one of the gallant young men who represented the Old Dominion State as a soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war. He served in the command of Gen. Robert E. Lee during virtually the entire period of conflict between the states of the North and South, and was with the veteran troops of the Confederate forces, General Lee, at the time of his surrender at Appomattox Court House April 9, 1865. It is needless to say that he lived up to the full tension of the great interminable conflict and took part in many of the important battles marking its progress. After the close of the war, which left his loved native state devastated and industrially prostrate, Mr. Grubbs consulted ways and means for returning to peace and prosperity. In February, 1867, he arrived at Shelby City, Kentucky, and a few months later he married Miss Desdemona Young, a descendant of Andrew McConnell January, of Maysville, who was a member of one of the old and influential families of Eastern Kentucky. At Shelby City Mr. Grubbs became a successful contractor and builder, and he erected many public buildings and private homes in the city and other sections of Kentucky. For some time he was engaged in the milling business, and he served as superintendent of building at Frankfort, the capital of the state, besides which he was a forceful contributor to the newspaper press during a period of fully twenty years. He was twice a candidate for the State Legislature and he served one term as magistrate of District No. 5 in Boyle County. He was one of the very best and most esteemed citizens of this county at the time of his death, August 30, 1911, his cherished and devoted wife having passed to eternal rest on the 27th of July, 1890, both having been devout members of the Christian Church. They became the parents of five children; of whom the subject of this review is the eldest. Lily L., who was born September 18, 1870, became the wife of Embrey Beazley, of Stanford-Lincoln County, in 1898, and there her death occurred on the 29th of July, 1901. Hayden Young Grubbs, who was born November 27, 1872, was graduated from Center College at Danville in 1890, and in 1896 graduated from the United States Military Academy at West Point. He continued in service as a member of the United States Army until his death, received the rank of lieutenant colonel at the time of the Spanish-American war, in which he was in active service as a commanding officer, and was killed in action on the 9th of October, 1899. Bertha V., who was born April 17, 1877, was united in marriage, in 1900, to Hugh F. Ewing, her husband having been engaged in the milling business at Parkersville, Kentucky, at the time of his death, March 8, 1920. The widow and four children are now residents of Boyle County, where Mrs. Ewing is a successful and popular teacher at School No. 1, and DeWitt Clinton Tucker Grubbs, the youngest of the children, was born May 14, 1880, was graduated at Center College in 1900 and at West Point in 1905, and after having served with the United States Army in the Philippine Islands and on the Mexican border he finally participated with his command in the activities of the American Expeditionary Forces in France during the late World War and was promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel. He is now attending the School at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. He was a major of infantry in the United States Tank Corps, and served as inspector of the Eighty-fourth Division while it was stationed at Camp Taylor, Kentucky, at the time of the World war. Colonel Grubbs married Miss Caroline H. Crankite, a graduate of the University of Montana, her home having been at Missoula, Montana, their marriage having been solemnized in 1908. The family home of Colonel and Mrs. Grubbs and their son and daughter is now maintained in the City of Cleveland, Ohio.

After due preliminary discipline Edward Lee Grubbs entered Center College at Danville, Boyle County, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1889 and with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, the supplemental degree of Master of Arts having been conferred upon him by his alma mater in 1892. He was valedictorian of his class and in his sophomore year, 1887, he won the annual prize of a gold watch for excellence in Latin, this prize having been awarded annually since 1872. At Center College he was a classmate of Hon. A. O. Stanley, a former governor of Kentucky. Mr. Grubbs chose the pedagogic profession as his vocation, and such has been his success in the same that he has had no reason to regret his choice. After his graduation he became a teacher in the public schools at Middlesboro, Bell County. In that locality it was then customary for male persons more than thirteen years of age to carry pistols or revolvers, and thus murders were of frequent occurrence. He did all in his power to discourage the bearing of firearms and to eliminate their eminence that caused their use. It is worthy of note that while at Middlesboro Mr. Grubbs supplemented his income by service as a hod carrier, and by this means assisted in defraying the expenses of his senior year in college, and from which he made daily trips from Shelby City four miles distant. He has continuously been engaged in teaching since 1888, and within this long period he has been principal of the high school at Danville for over ten years, has taught in the preparatory department of Center College at Danville for one year; and given sixteen years of service in the public schools of Shelby City and Junction City, Boyle County, in which latter place he has held his present pedagogic office since 1913. He and his family hold membership in the Christian Church, and he is an elder in the church of this denomination at Junction City. In addition to teaching, his Sunday School work and his work in this capacity have covered a period of thirty-five years. In connection with educational, church and civic affairs Mr. Grubbs is a member of the reportorial staff of the two daily papers at Danville, the county seat, and in his home city he is affiliated with and official collector for Camp No. 11342, Modern Woodmen of America, besides being financial secretary of the local organization of the Junior Order United American Mechanics.
At Danville he is affiliated with the Lodge and Chapter bodies of York Rite Masonry, and at Junction City he holds membership in Tent No. 6, Knights of the Maccabees. His wife has been home demonstrator of domestic science in Boyle County since 1915, and prior to her marriage had given special attention to the study of domestic science and economy, in which she had become a teacher prior to accepting her present position, in which her service has proved most successful and popular. Mr. Grubbs has ever maintained allegiance to the democratic party, has been a staunch advocate of woman suffrage and believes that wages and salaries should be regulated by efficiency, with no restrictions by race of sex.

On the 2d day of January, 1901, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Grubbs to Miss Jennie C. Fox, of Shelby City, Boyle County, she having previously been a student in the Kentucky College for Women at Danville. Of this ideal union have been born six children, concerning whom brief record is given in the concluding paragraph of this review.

Fred Meade. The claim of Fred Meade, of Paintsville, upon the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens rests upon twenty-three years of effective work in the field of education. Commencing as a teacher in the rural districts at the age of eighteen years, he has served without a break in the instruction of the young, and since 1910 has accomplished marked beneficial achievements while holding the office of superintendent of schools of Johnson County.

Mr. Meade was born at Oil Springs, Johnson County, Kentucky, June 3, 1860. He attended school at Oil Springs, East Point and Paintsville, and the normal school at Middlesboro. He had his sight impaired before the age started teaching in the rural districts. During the next twelve years his labors as an instructor were confined to the country schools, and in this time he became well known and greatly popular in the localities in which his educational efforts were centered. Recognition of his general worth and all-around ability came in 1891 when he was elected county superintendent of schools. It is a commentary upon his ability and the general satisfaction which he has given, that he has retained this post ever since and has been elected for another four year term, sixteen years in all. He has labored incessantly and disinterestedly in an effort to advance constantly the standard of education in his county, and that his efforts in this direction have not been in vain is indicated by the excellence and efficiency of the schools which are under his jurisdiction.

In 1900 Mr. Meade was united in marriage with Miss Lulu M. Butler, herself formerly a teacher, and to this union there have been born nine children: Augustus E.; Anna Gladys, who died as a child of four years; June E.; Ruth M.; Genoah M.; Georgia Lee; Fred Hamilton; Everett Bruce, who died in childhood; and Murah E. Mr. and Mrs. Meade are faithful members of the Christian Church.

In politics Mr. Meade is a republican, and his fraternal connection is with the local lodge of the Knights of the Maccabees. Always a public-spirited citizen and a supporter of worthy movements, during the World's war he served on many committees of the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., etc., and worked and gave without stint. He occupies a high and substantial place in his prominence and cordial good will of the people of his county.

Urey Woodson. Outside of Kentucky more people know Urey Woodson as a great chieftain of the democratic party than as a newspaper publisher and editor. For many years as member and secretary of the Democratic National Committee Mr. Woodson enjoyed the acquaintance and had the confidence of all the prominent men of the party, and newspaper men generally credited him with knowing as much of what was going on within the inner councils of the party as any other leader.

However, the career of Mr. Woodson belongs peculiarly to Owensboro and to the Owensboro Messenger. He was born at Madisonville, Kentucky, August 1859, son of Samuel C. and Rebecca (Hathorn) Woodson. He has been a resident of Owensboro since he was twenty-two years of age.

In 1914 his initials appeared beneath a few lines published in the Messenger: "Thirty-three years ago today—October 1, 1881—I came to Owensboro a stranger, with but a few dollars in my pocket, seeking a home and a business. Per near a third of a century I have now been identified with Owensboro and the Messenger. Owensboro has been good to me and to the Messenger, and I hope the Messenger under my direction has been creditable to Owensboro."

There were many who knew how to fill in this brief paragraph with deserved tributes to what Mr. Woodson has accomplished. He was a member of two of Kentucky's newspapers to take the cue was the Frankfort State Journal, from which the following paragraphs are quoted:

"The Owensboro Messenger of last Thursday contained a modest paragraph of editorial reminder that thirty-three years ago that day Urey Woodson, a boy, little known and little knowing what would be the outcome of vague new arrived unheralded in the city of Owensboro and bought The Messenger. "Owensboro. The Messenger and Editor Woodson have grown up together, the first to a city of importance, the second into a newspaper of more than corresponding influence and the last named into a prominent figure in national politics as well as in the civic and business life of his city."

"Speculation on what any one of the three would have been dissociated from the other two quickens perception of the close relationship a newspaper bears to the community it serves; and though best known to the world at large, perhaps, by reason of his political career, Urey Woodson is a real newspaper man of exceptional ability, who made The Messenger what it is by personal attention to the details of every department."

"He has other financial interests now and great political honors, but there is no doubt that his newspaper is the pride of Mr. Woodson's life; for he put his life into the making of it those years he spent the better part of twenty-four hours a day building upon and perfecting it."

"The State Journal felicitates Urey Woodson and the city of Owensboro and the paper through which for a third of a century Mr. Woodson has kept his neighbors informed about neighborhood affairs and what was going on in the big world outside, besides occasionally dropping a little well directed editorial SHRILL. Such was the kind of "the Messenger was still on the firing line." The only public office Mr. Woodson ever filled was as railroad commissioner for Kentucky from 1891 to 1895. Previously he had declined appointment as secretary of state of Kentucky for a term of four years, tendered him by Gov. John Young Brown. After his term as railroad commissioner he declined to hold any other public office and has rigidly adhered to this determination. The score years marking his membership as the Kentucky representative on the Democratic National Committee was from 1896 to 1916, and during the years 1904 to 1912 he was secretary of the committee. February 12, 1885, Mr. Woodson married Elizabeth Ford, of Owensboro. To them were born two daughters, Elizabeth Ford (now Mrs. Hamilton Alexander) and Janey Hawthorn (now Mrs. William E. Overstreet) and all make their homes in Owensboro.

R. A. BAKER has been a Kentucky business man for over thirty years. He made a name for himself in the thoroughbred industry, and for about twenty years was identified with the distilling industry. He is vice president of the Frankfort Distilling Company. Mr. Baker was born in St. Louis, Missouri, in September, 1865. The Baker family came originally from England, and Mr. Baker's grandmother was of Welsh stock. His father, William W. Baker, was born at Marietta, Ohio, in 1825, and was a veteran steamboat captain and pilot on the Ohio, Mississippi and Missouri rivers. In early days he operated some of the old keel boats that floated down the rivers with Northern merchandise and produce. For a number of years he was captain and pilot for the Anchor lines of river boats, and also owned and operated boats of his own. He was up and down the rivers all the way from New Orleans to the utmost navigable waters of the Missouri at the foot of the Rocky Mountains. He lived in Missouri a few years, and the old home where he died was in Carrollton, Missouri. He died in 1891. He was a democrat in politics and a very active mem-ber of the Methodist Episcopal Church. William W. Baker married in St. Louis, Missouri, Miss Mary M. Woolfolk, who was born in that Missouri city in 1831 and died at Carrollton, Missouri, in 1876. George, the oldest of their five children was for several years secretary and treasurer of the Frankfort Distillery Company and died at Frankfort at the age of sixty. Zachary, the second son, died at Carrollton in 1882. William Jackson, the third son, died in Massachusetts, in 1916 and was buried at the old home in Carrollton, Missouri. At the time of his death he was secretary and treasurer of the distillery company. The only daughter, Cordelia Taylor, is unmarried and lives at Frankfort.

R. A. Baker, the youngest of the family, was educated in the public schools of Carrollton, Missouri, attending Central High School, at St. Louis, Missouri, in 1885, at the age of twenty, to begin a business career. For two years he was in the employ of the William Barr Drygoods Company of St. Louis, and in 1887 came to Frankfort, Kentucky. Here he became a member of the firm Hinde & Baker, an association still in existence. This firm gained a reputation all over the Central and Southern states in the thoroughbred racehorse business, and Mr. Baker, with "the horses well known to fame, including Dick Wells, Robert and Co., and Joe Hinde." The Hinde & Baker firm own and operate 600 acres of land as one of the high class model farms of Franklin County, Kentucky. Mr. Baker lives on this farm, where he has a modern home, and is still interested in the livestock business. The farm contains some of the finest equipment found on any country place in the state.

It was in 1901 that Mr. Baker turned his attention to the distillery business, when he and associates, including Mr. Hinde, established the Frankfort Distillery Company, manufacturers of Swastika and other brands of whiskey. Mr. Baker has been vice president, Thomas W. Hinde, of Chicago, is president, and the present secretary and treasurer is A. C. Thompson, of Frankfort. The offices are located at the distillery at the Forks of the Elkhorn, four miles east of Frankfort. Mr. Baker and Mrs. Baker also own the Labrot-Graham Distillery, twelve miles from Frankfort and nine miles from Versailles in Woodford County. This distillery manufactured the Old Oscar Pepper brand, one of the oldest brands of whiskey in the world. The offices of the Labrot-Graham Distillery are in the McClure Building at Frankfort.

Mr. Baker is an independent democrat, a member of the Methodist Church, and is affiliated with Frankfort Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., Frankfort Chapter No. 3, R. A. M., Frankfort Commandery No. 4, K. T., and Frankfort Lodge No. 520 of the Elks. In August, 1911, at Frankfort, he married Miss Irma Labrot, daughter of Leopold and Louise (Welch) Labrot. The mother is still living at Frankfort, where her father died. Her father was owner of the Labrot-Graham Distillery.

HERBERT BRENT McCRARY. Self-made men are to be found in every country, but no where have they developed as in the United States, where the opportunities are so much better that the energetic, ambitious man who has inherent talent can always be sure of bettering his condition and rising to a place of preference and prestige among his fellows. In the career of Her-bert Brent McCrary this has been demonstrated repeatedly, and his record likewise proves that a man need not depart from the strict principles laid down by the Golden Rule to achieve the awards of life. While his ambitions have been great, he has never allowed his desire for success to cloud his appreciation of the rights of others, and thus, while he has been advancing in fortune and position, he has retained the friendship and esteem of those with whom he has been associated. The McCrary family is a settlers family and acting manager of the Auburn Mills, at Auburn, Kentucky, and a man well and favorably known to the milling trade in Kentucky.

Herbert B. McCrary was born near Broadhead, Rockcastle County, Kentucky, September 10, 1881, a son of Andrew Kinkade and Elizabeth Belle (Smith) McCrary, and a member of a family that, originating in Scotland, was founded in Virginia in Colonial times. His grandfather, Andrew McCrary, was born in Virginia about 1800, and as a young man went as a pioneer to Rockcastle County, Kentucky, where he eventually became an extensive farmer and large land and slave holder. He was a whisk in politics, and died in Rockcastle County in 1883. Mr. McCrary married a Miss Rollins, who died in Rockcastle County at the remarkable age of ninety-six years.

Herbert Brent McCrary was born July 16, 1844, in Rockcastle County, where his entire life was passed in the pursuits of agriculture. A man of industry and good judgment, he made a success of his operations, and at the time of his death, in 1906, was the owner of a good property. Politically he was a Republican, and his religious faith was that of the Baptist Church, of which he was a strong supporter, and filled the office of deacon for many years. He was affiliated socially with the Masonic order. Mr. McCrary married Elizabeth Belle Smith, who was born January 28, 1863, in Rockcastle County, and died there January 27, 1895. There were three children in the family, namely: Herbert Brent; Andrew Cecil, born September 15, 1883, assistant cashier of the Farmers Exchange Bank of Nicholasville, Kentucky; and Joseph Frank, born September 11, 1891, an employee of a coal company at Dawson, New Mexico.

Henry B. Bland was educated in the rural schools of Rockcastle County, Kentucky, including a rude log structure bearing little resemblance to the modern schools of this time, and when nineteen years of age gave up his studies and started to devote his entire time to the work of the home farm, where he had formerly spent his summers. When his father died, in 1906, he left the farm and went to Louisville, where he secured employment in a hardware store, but the next year resigned to accept the position of cashier of the Farmers Bank of Muhlenberg County, Kentucky, and retained that post from August 3, 1907, to June 1, 1912. He next became traveling representative for a wholesale grocery firm of Owensboro, Kentucky, and in that capacity covered Muhlenberg, Ohio, and a number of other counties in Central Kentucky, until becoming traveling salesman for the Auburn Mills of Auburn, Kentucky, covering this state and Tennessee.

Mr. McClary "made good" in this capacity in such a degree that he was eventually called in from the road, December 4, 1914, to become secretary and acting manager of the mills, positions which he has retained to the present time. The company is incorporated under the laws of Kentucky, and Mr. McClary's fellow officials are: J. Green, president; J. W. Davis, vice president; and W. E. Stevenson, vice president. The mills, situated on Liberty Street, have an actual capacity of 200 bbls. daily, and under Mr. McClary's efficient management all of this product finds a ready market.

Mr. McClary is a republican in politics, and has taken some interest in public affairs. Formerly he was clerk of the Town of Dunmore, and at the time of his arrival at Auburn he was made clerk of this place, a position which he has filled continuously since 1914. He likewise holds the office of clerk in and is one of the deacons of the Baptist Church, of which he has been a member since youth. His fraternal affiliations include membership in Auburn Lodge No. 374, A. F. and A. M., of which he served as worshipful master for two terms; Mount Vernon Chapter No. 140, R. A. M.; and Knob City Lodge No. 29, I. O. O. F., of Russellville. He owns a pleasant home at Dunmore. Mr. McClary took an active part in all local war activities in Logan County, helping in all the drives and being a generous contributor and subscriber to the various funds and causes. He was likewise secretary of the Red Cross during most of the period of the great struggle and gave much of his time to this work.

Mr. McClary married January 19, 1908, at Dunmore, Kentucky, Miss Ethel DePoyster, daughter of J. S. and Vivian DePoyster, the former a druggist and tobacconist at Dunmore, where Mrs. DePoyster died. Mrs. McClary, who attended the Baptist Female College at Hopkinsville, in young womanhood, died March 5, 1918, at Auburn, leaving two children: Frances Elizabeth, born January 18, 1910; and John Heltsty, born April 23, 1913.

On October 1, 1921, Mr. McClary was married at Auburn, Kentucky, to Mrs. Bess (Smith) King, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Smith, old residents and most highly respected residents in the community. She was the widow of Hugh King, who died at Auburn, Kentucky. She has one daughter, Elizabeth King, who resides with Mr. and Mrs. McClary.

John Bland Lasley. Seven years of efficient and faithful service in the capacity of postmaster of Lewisburg has served to place John Bland Lasley high in the esteem and confidence of the people of that enterprising community. Appointed first in 1914, he has since received two other appointments, and during his terms of office has brought the mail system to a high order of efficiency.

Mr. Lasley was born at Lewisburg, August 1, 1887, a son of William W. and Minnie N. (Haden) Lasley. The family of which he is a member is of English origin. Mr. Lasley's great-great-great-grandfather having been the immigrant and an early settler of the Colony of Virginia. His son, Manoah Lasley, was born in Virginia, and November 4, 1797, came to Kentucky and located in Green County, where he labored as a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Mary Wash, who belonged to a prominent Methodist family of Virginia, and both died at Greensburg, this state. James Lasley, the great-grandfather of John B. Lasley, was born in Virginia in 1780, and became the first historian in Green County, although in later years he turned his attention to farming. He died near Greensburg in 1853, and his wife, who had been Nancy Smith, of Virginia, also passed away in Green County.

John Lasley, the grandfather of John B. Lasley, was born in 1806, at Greensburg, Kentucky, and was reared in Green County, whence as a young man he went to Logan County. There he engaged in agricultural operations for many years and died on his farm in 1880. He was a democrat in politics, and as a churchman was one of the stanch supporters of the Methodist Episcopal Church. For several years he served in the State Militia. Mr. Lasley married Minerva Grinter, who was born in 1823, in Logan County, and died at Lebanon. She gave birth to the parents of the following children: Betty, the present Mrs. W. L. Black, former county judge of Randolph County, Arkansas; Mrs. Black now residing with her brother, William W.; Mary E., the wife of A. W. McReynolds, a farmer near Adairville, Kentucky; J. T., a former lawyer of Bylthesville, Arkansas, who died in 1914; William W.; Irene, deceased, who was the wife of the late J. B. Lasley, a physician of Russellville, Kentucky; Nannie, unmarried, who is a resident of Republic City, Missouri; Georgina L., of Lewisburg, widow of the late J. B. Kennerly, a Logan County farmer; S. B., deceased, who was a stationary engineer of Kansas City, Kansas; John M., an architect and builder of Santa Cruz, California; Alice, the wife of W. A. Roadoes, a farmer of Oakville, Logan County; and Manoah, a resident of Belden, California.

William W. Lasley was born in Todd County, Kentucky, March 4, 1850, and received his early education in the rural schools of Logan County. Deciding upon a career as a physician and surgeon, he pursued his medical studies at the Medical University of Louisville, from which he was graduated with his degree of Doctor of Medicine, in the class of 1885. In that year he began practice at Lewisburg, where he has spent many years of splendid professional labors he is still rated as one of the leading physicians and surgeons. He belongs to the Logan County Medical Society and the Kentucky State Medical Society, and as a fraternal holds membership in Lewisburg Lodge No. 324, A. F. and A. M. Doctor Lasley is the main pillar of the Baptist Church, and holds an esteemed place in the capacity of elder. In political adherence he is a democrat. He is the owner of a modern home on Third Street and of a farm of 150 acres three miles south of Lewisburg. Doctor Lasley took a prominent part in all war activities in Logan County, helping in the drives for all purposes, and contributing and subscribing liberally. At Lewisburg, he was united in marriage with Miss Minnie N. Haden, a daughter of J. W. and Mrs. Haden. Mr. Haden was born in 1825, at Auburn, Logan County, and for many years was an agriculturist, although he later turned his attention to selling tobacco as a traveling representative of large concerns. He died in Christian County in 1905. Mrs. Haden married Sally Louisa Thurmond, who was born in 1841 in Logan County, and died at Lewisburg in 1902. Mrs. Lasley was reared in the faith of the Christian Church and has been most active in the work of that faith. She and her husband are the parents of the following children: John Bland;
William T., an attorney of Lewisburg, residing with his parents, who in 1914 became the youngest member of the Kentucky Legislature, was reelected in 1918, serving two regular sessions and a special session, was appointed by Governor Stanley as a captain in the Quartermaster's Department in 1918 but resigned and volunteered for the World war, and was in training at Camp Gordon, Alabama, at the time the armistice was signed; Sarah Elizabeth, the wife of Arnold Lond, cashier of the Lewisburg Banking Company; and Marion G., residing with his parents, who enlisted in August, 1918, and was sent to the Officers' Training Camp at Camp Gordon, where he was commissioned a second lieutenant, and is still a member of the Officer's Reserve Corps.

Lasley was educated in the public schools of Lewisburg and at Bethel College, Russellville, from which he was graduated in 1906. At that time he became sales manager for the Beech Creek Coal Company, with headquarters at Nashville and Memphis, and filled that position until resigning in May, 1914, when he was appointed postmaster of Lewisburg. He was reappointed January 1, 1915, and again November 28, 1917. In the form of four years, as a postmaster, his service has been a very satisfactory one, and the city and its people have profited greatly through his conscientious and efficient labors. Mr. Lasley is a democrat and a member of the Christian Church. He belongs to Lewisburg Lodge No. 324, A. F. and A. M.; Logan Lodge No. 97, I. O. O. F., of which he is a past grand; and Bowling Green Lodge No. 320, B. P. O. E. He owns a comfortable modern residence at Lewisburg. During the World war he took an active and helpful part in the various activities in Logan County, assisting in the Red Cross, Liberty Loan and other drives, and being a generous contributor and liberal subscriber.

In October, 1914, at Nashville, Tennessee, Mr. Lasley was united in marriage with Miss Myrtle Gilliam, who was born in Logan County, and to this union there has come one child, John Bland, Jr., born May 8, 1914.

William Landon Kimbrough. In making a study of the careers and characters of those who have attained business and public success it is but natural to demand the secret of their prosperity and to look for the motives that prompted their actions. Success comes after all to but a few, and careful study of the careers of those who stand highest in public esteem proves that in nearly every case those who have been devoting their lives to their special lines of business have gradually risen. Self-reliance, conscientiousness, energy and honesty, these are characteristics that appear to produce the best results. To these we may attribute much of the success that has rewarded the efforts of William Landon Kimbrough, a leading business man of Guthrie, a representative of Todd County in the Kentucky Legislature, and the present mayor of Guthrie.

Mr. Kimbrough was born in Todd County, Kentucky, December 3, 1859, a son of William Landon and P. B. (Terry) Kimbrough. The Kimbrough family is of Scotch-Irish origin, and was founded in Virginia during Colonial days. Thomas Winston Kimbrough, the grandfather of William L. Kimbrough, the young man who came with his bride, Susan Gaines, also had his origin in Virginia in 1796, to Todd County as a pioneer farmer. He spent the rest of his life in farming here, tilling his broad acres with slave labor, and he passed away at Hadensville December 25, 1868, his wife having died in 1842. They were people who had the unqualified respect and esteem of those among whom they passed their days.

William Landon Kimbrough, the elder, was born at Hadensville, near Guthrie, Kentucky, September 18, 1824, and as a young man adopted farming as his vocation. He eventually became one of the leading farmers of Todd County for his day, and at the time of his death was the owner of 1,600 acres of valuable and highly cultivated land in Todd County, Kentucky, and Robertson County, Tennessee. He likewise gave much attention to merchandising at Hadensville, where he owned a leading establishment, and in agricultural and business circles was known as capable and progressive, while his reputation was that of a man of the highest business and personal integrity. In early years a whig, he later transferred his support to the democratic party, and served four terms in the capacity of magistrate of his district. His fraternal affiliation was with the Masonic Order. Mr. Kimbrough died at Dawson Springs, Kentucky, June 25, 1885, and was married April 14, 1831, in Logan (now Todd) County, and died at Hadensville September 29, 1886. They became the parents of the following children: Lizzie, of Louisville, the widow of R. B. Rankins, who was a retired hardware merchant of that city; Charles G., a farmer of Robertson County, Tennessee, who died at the age of fifty-nine years; Eugenia B., who died at Louisville at the age of fifty-five years; and William Landon.

William Landon Kimbrough, the younger, was educated in the rural schools of Todd County and Bethel College, Russellville, which latter he left in 1879. At that time he started operations on the home farm, to the ownership of which he succeeded at the time of his father's demise, and continued its operation until 1914, although he did not dispose of it by sale until five years later. In 1912 he was appointed postmaster of Guthrie and served in that capacity four years and two months, after which he spent a year in traveling in Texas, New Mexico and Oklahoma.

Upon his return, he settled at Guthrie, where he founded his present feed, seed and coal business, the leading enterprise of its kind in Todd County, the store being situated at the corner of Front and Ewing streets and the warehouse and coal yard on State Street. In addition Mr. Kimbrough is the owner of a pleasant and comfortable modern home on Third Street. In politics a republican, he served two terms as magistrate while still residing at Hadensville, and in 1907 was elected representative of Todd County in the State Legislature, serving in the session of 1908. He was again elected to that body in November, 1919, and served in the session of 1920. On November 8, 1921, he was elected mayor of Guthrie, Kentucky. He was a contributor and constructive member of that body, and worked faithfully in behalf of the interests of his constituents, his county and his state.

Mr. Kimbrough was married October 8, 1883, at Allensville, Kentucky, to Miss Sallie Yost, daughter of E. A. and Nannie (Custer) Yost, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Yost was a merchant at Allensville. To Mr. and Mrs. Kimbrough there have been born the following children: Lizzie, born July 6, 1885, is the wife of Hadley Gregor, a druggist at El Paso, Texas; William Landon, Jr., born March 3, 1887, engaged in the feed and seed business at Tennyson, Indiana; Andrew C., born September 15, 1888, manager of a department store at Lovington, New Mexico; Rankins B., born September 13, 1891, assistant cashier of the City National Bank of El Paso, Texas; Keith K., born December 1, 1894, engaged in the grain business at Guthrie; Sallie, born September 7, 1896, unmarried and residing with her parents; Evelyn, born September 27, 1898, the wife of D. T. Mimms, a farmer near Guthrie; and Robert, born August 1, 1902, at home, a graduate of St. Mary's (Kentucky) College, and a law student in the Kentucky State University.

Phil C. Andrews in Russellville is one of the largest and oldest drug houses in Southern Kentucky, established by the late B. B. Andrews, and continued with increasing prestige and prosperity by his sons, one of whom is Phil C. Andrews, who for ten consecutive years has been the honored and efficient mayor of this municipality.

While the Andrews family have been identified with Russellville for nearly forty years, they did their pioneering when they came over the mountains into Tennessee as well as in Kentucky. The great-grandfather of Phil C. Andrews was George Andrews, who was born and reared and married in the State of Virginia. Ten years after his marriage he moved into Kentucky and in October, 1810, went to Williamson County, Tennessee. Mark Lyell Andrews, grandfather of P. C. Andrews, was born December 2, 1796, at a place between Lexington and Richmond, Kentucky. He was about fourteen when the family moved to Tennessee, and in November, 1819, he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. His mind was kind, though the cares and responsibilities of rearing a family barred him from this profession. He was licensed as a local preacher September 22, 1822, was ordained a deacon in the same year by Bishop Soule, and in 1830 was ordained an elder at Columbia by Bishop Roberts. From the year 1830 until his death next year he was a consecrated and consecrated public servant. In 1836 he was defeated as a candidate for the office of Circuit Court clerk. He was elected to that office in 1840, and until September, 1874, held that position and gave a fidelity and performance to its duties rarely seen. He became an intimate friend of many great lawyers and jurists in Tennessee, inculcated into the rearship of Frankhbell, Foster, Cook, John L., and John B. McEwen, the Hills and R. M. Ewing. A memorable scene was that attending his last day in office. The court was presided over by the late W. P. Martin. Judge David Campbell, who had known the Circuit Court clerk from boyhood, reviewed his life, while other speakers followed, and these speeches, personalities and the complete environment presented a moving spectacle of an aged public servant leaving the theater of his activities. His name for probity and integrity for years had been a proverb. It was said that he had joined more people in the bonds of matrimony than any man who ever lived in Tennessee, and on countless occasions he was the solace and comfort at the bedside of dying men and women in his part of the state. His office was the scene of two meetings of the Board of Franklin, Tennessee, November 16, 1878, aged eighty-one years, eleven months and fourteen days. His long life represented a remarkable devotion to the service of the public and humanity, and few men could live more stately lives. On May 16, 1816, he married Eliza Dean.

Their son, B. B. Andrews, was born in Franklin, Tennessee, in 1838, and died at Russellville, Kentucky, March 16, 1900. He was reared and married in his native Tennessee community, was a graduate in medicine of Vanderbilt University, and after practicing his profession in Franklin, Tennessee, until 1882 he removed to Russellville, Kentucky, and established the drug business now continued by his sons. At the very beginning of the war between the states he enlisted in Colonel Starnes' Fourth Tennessee Cavalry, was in the command of General Forrest, and continued on duty until he surrendered in May, 1865. He was a democrat and for sixteen years was mayor of Russellville. He served as grand chancellor of the State of Kentucky in the Knights of Pythias. He possessed the same genial warmth of heart and mind as his father, lived in an atmosphere of admiring friends, and from first to last was a gentleman in the best sense of the term. After his death it was said of him: "His time was spent almost entirely in his business house and with his family. He was faithful to every trust committed to him. While a soldier for the lost cause he cheerfully met every requirement in the discharge of his duty. He had firmly established opinions on civic and moral questions, yet he differed with others with so much courtesy that they were almost ashamed to have to face him in argument. B. B. Andrews married Martha Easley Wilson, who was born in Williamson County, Tennessee, in 1843 and died at Russellville in 1911. She was the mother of two sons, Phil C. and Clarence Wilson, the latter a partner in the drug business established by his father.

Phil C. Andrews was born in Williamson County, Tennessee, March 26, 1879, and was about twelve years of age when the family removed to Russellville. He completed his early advantages in the public schools and in 1891 graduated from Bethel College. On leaving college he became associated with his father, and in 1909 he and his brother, Clarence, succeeded to the ownership and management of the store, one of the largest retail stores in the county. This modern building stands at 180 North Main Street. P. C. Andrews is also a director in the Southern Deposit Bank.

His citizenship has been a constant exemplification of unselfish public spirit. During the World war he was a leader in securing the success of every local drive, and merits no small degree of the credit for these and other efforts to aid in the material and spiritual growth of the locality. He was chairman of the Red Cross drive in 1918, and as chairman of the War Savings Stamp drive he had the satisfaction of seeing the county subscribe $38,000, exceeding by $10,000 the quota allotted. Mr. Andrews is still on the executive committee of the local Red Cross Chapter.

He was first elected mayor of Russellville in 1914 and reelected in 1915. After serving eight continuous years he was again elected in 1919 to fill an unexpired term of two years. Much of Russellville's progress toward the acquisition of modern municipal facilities has been achieved under the administration of Mayor Andrews. During the ten past years many of the city's streets have been paved with concrete, the city parks beautified, new machinery installed in the city light plant, and the general ideals and tendencies of the community have been given a distinctly forward trend. Mr. Andrews was on the committee which secured the rearrangement of the Dixie Highway so as to pass through Russellville. He is a democrat, is chairman of the lay committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is a past master of Russellville Lodge, No. 15, M. F. A., and is a past high priest of Russellville Chapter No. 8, R. A. M., and belongs to the order of High Priesthood, is a member of Owensboro Commandery No. 15, K. T., the Louisville Consistory of the Scottish Rite and Komas Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Russellville. Besides his modern home at 136 Fourth Street, he is owner of four other dwelling houses in the city. Mr. Andrews married Miss Lena Raetz at Russellville in 1897. Her parents, Fred and Mollie (Weller) Raetz, are deceased, her father having been for many years a merchant in Russellville. Mrs. Andrews is a graduate of Logan College in Russellville.

Lester E. Hurt Occupying a prominent place among the professional men of Lewisburg, Kentucky, is Lester E. Hurt, superintendent of schools and well and favorably known as an educator throughout Logan County. He has practically devoted his entire life to educational work, and in this field of endeavor has risen step by step until he fills a position of large responsibility.

Lester E. Hurt comes from old Scotch ancestors who settled in Virginia in Colonial days, and his grandfather, William Hurt, was born in the Old Dominion. From there he removed to Kentucky and for many years followed farming in Logan County, retiring in old age to Hopkinsville. He married Sarah Hall, who died in Logan County, his death following in 1883, at Hopkinsville.
Lester E. Hurt was born March 5, 1875, at Auburn in Logan County, Kentucky, the only son of Atwood G. and Mary A. (Appling) Hurt, the former of whom was born at Auburn in 1838, and the latter near Auburn in 1848. Atwood G. Hurt spent his entire life in Logan County, in his earlier years being a carpenter and builder and later an extensive farmer. He was a man of exceptionally sound judgment and concerned in all the various neighborhood interests that made Logan a city of prominence. He was a faithful member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, was a republican in politics and belonged to the order of Odd Fellows. He died at Auburn, Kentucky, in 1908. He married Mary A. Appling, who still resides at Auburn. They had two children: Lester E. and Ruby, the latter of whom is the wife of J. P. Haders, who is a farmer near Auburn.

In the rural schools in Logan County Lester E. Hurt received his early educational training, afterward attended Auburn Seminary and was not more than twenty years old when he began to teach country schools in his native county. Subsequently he entered the Southern Normal School at Bowling Green, Kentucky, from which he was graduated with the class of 1910, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. In the following year he received a teacher's certificate, by which he was authorized to teach in the schools of this county for the succeeding three years. In 1918 he came to Lewisburg as superintendent of schools, and the success that has attended his efforts here has proved the value of his constructive policy and the wisdom of his administrative methods. The schools of Lewisburg have never been conducted on a sounder basis nor with more satisfactory results. Mr. Hurt is a man whose personality counts for a great deal, and this was particularly illustrated during the World war, when effort of every kind was demanded for patriotic movements. He not only took an active part in furthering all these, but was especially successful in arousing the interest and emulation of organizations of school boys in farming and gardening, taking it upon himself to be their instructor. Mr. Hurt owns 375 acres of fine land in Logan County, divided into three separate farms:

At Auburn, Kentucky, in 1907, he married Miss Maude Lee, who is a daughter of J. W. and Angie (Farrer) Lee, the latter of whom is deceased. The father of Mrs. Hurt is a farmer in the neighborhood of Homer, Kentucky. Mrs. Hurt is a graduate of the School of Oratory of the Western State Normal College, Bowling Green. Mr. and Mrs. Hurt have one child, Lester E., who was born September 21, 1916. The father of Mrs. Hurt is interested in many intellectual movements for the furthering of research, culture and superior scholarship, and is a valued member of the Kentucky Educational Association. In fraternal life he belongs to Lewisburg Lodge No. 324, A. F. and A. M.; Logan Lodge No. 97, Odd Fellows, of which he is a past grand; Auburn Camp No. 343, W. O. W., Auburn; and Water Valley Camp, Odd Fellows. He has a deep interest in public matters as an earnest, wide awake citizen and votes with the republican party but has no political ambition.

JESSE LEE RUSSELL, M. D. It is impossible for the conscientious devotee of medicine and surgery to arrive at a state of mind where he is satisfied with what he has accomplished, no matter how eminent his achievements, for with an understanding of what is awaiting the man of science the many doors yet unopened which will lead to new realms in the amelioration of the ills of mankind, and in the meantime striving to add to his store of knowledge he, of necessity, keeps on striving for perfection. Among the physicians of Logan County, one who is a close and constant student and ardent investigator, while at the same time caring for a large and rapidly-increasing practice, is Dr. Jesse Lee Russell, of Adairville.

J. S. Russell was born March 3, 1885, in Logan County, Kentucky, a son of J. S. and Sarah (Boyd) Russell. The family to which he belongs is of Irish origin and was planted in America during Colonial days, the first of the name locating in Virginia. The great-great-grandfather came from Ireland in 1759, located in Virginia, and he served in the Continental army. In that state, at Petersburg, was born the great-grandfather of Doctor Russell, Thomas Russell. In 1804 he came to Logan County and in 1813 became an extensive farmer and slaveholder, and where his death occurred. He married a Miss Lester, a native of Virginia, of German descent, and among their children was the grandfather of Doctor Russell, Robert Russell, who was born in Logan County in 1813. Robert Russell followed in the footsteps of his father and for twenty years was an extensive farmer of Logan County, were born there of his marriage.

He was a farmer of some influence and prominence in his community, where he was held in high regard and esteem. He married a Miss Dalton.

J. S. Russell, father of Dr. Jesse Lee Russell, was born in Logan County in 1832, and is still a resident of the county, his home being at Oakville. Here he has spent his entire life with the exception of the time that it served for Confederate cavalryman, first under the intrepid Forrest, and later under General Lyon, with whom he made the campaign in Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama during the winter of 1864-65. At the close of his military career he returned to the peaceful pursuits of farming, in which he continued to be engaged very successfully and extensively until his retirement. He is a staunch democrat and a faithful member and active supporter of the Methodist Church.

Dr. Russell married Miss Sarah Boyd, who was born in 1844 in Davidson County, Tennessee, and died at Oakville, Kentucky, in 1907. They became the parents of ten children: R. A., a resident of Oakville; Ada, the wife of M. E. Moseley, a farmer in the vicinity of Oakville; Mollie, the wife of E. L. Akin, a farmer near Paducah, this state; Ruth, the wife of Albertuity, a mechanic of Oakville; W. A., a farmer of Adairville; Amanda, the wife of R. C. Harper, a farmer of Oakville; John E., an automobile mechanic of Lima, Ohio; W. B., medical missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, now stationed at Soochow, China; Dr. Jesse Lee, of this review; and Carrie, the wife of Roy Orndorff, a farmer of Adairville.

Dr. Jesse Lee Russell secured his primary education in the rural schools of Logan County, attending the schools at Red Oak Grove and Oakville, then entering the Kentucky School of Pharmacy, Louisville, from which he was graduated in 1909, with the degree of Graduate in Pharmacy. In the meantime he had entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, and in 1911 was graduated therefrom with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. In 1911-12 he served as intern at the General Hospital and in the latter year came to Adairville and embarked in practice. He has built up a large, important and lucrative practice in medicine and surgery, and is accounted one of the leaders among the younger members of his profession in Logan County. His offices are situated on the northwest corner of the Public Square. Doctor Russell is a member of the Logan County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association. Holding to high ideals in his professional work, his service has always been characterized by a devotion to duty and with an appreciation of the responsibilities resting upon him. He is a man of broad information, and, keeping in touch with all recent work in his calling, his sound judgment and experience enable him to decide what is valuable and that which is unessential in his practice.

During the World war Doctor Russell enlisted for service in the United States Army Medical Corps, and, September 1, 1918, was commissioned a first lieutenant. He was sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, and later to Camp Greenleaf, Georgia. He served in the General Hospital No. 14 at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, and was ordered with Base Hospital No. 161, for overseas service. He arrived at Hong Kong harbor, and was honorably discharged from Headquarters No. 1, Base Hospital Group, at Fort Oglethorpe, December 24, 1918. Prior to his enlistment he had assisted materially in all the drives launched in his locality, and was one of the nine members of the Council of National Defense of Logan County. He was also a generous contributor to the various movements of the War Department, successor of bonds, etc. A democrat in his political views, Doctor Russell has long been active in public affairs, and from January 1, 1914, to January 1, 1918, served Adairville in the capacity of mayor, giving the city an excellent administration. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. As a fraternalist he belongs to Adairville Lodge No. 278, and is a member of the Barren Springs and Emma Chapter of the Order of Eastern Star. He has been a post master; and Red River Camp No. 348, W. O. W. Doctor Russell is a stockholder in the Adairville Lighting Company, owns a valuable farm of 150 acres seven miles east of Russellville, and has a comfortable, modern residence on South Main Street, and a modern office at the northwest corner of City Square, Adairville.

On July 15, 1912, at Nashville, Tennessee, Doctor Russell was united in marriage with Miss Sadie Mims, a graduate of the Western Kentucky State Normal College of Bowling Green, Kentucky, and a daughter of Carlos and Ella (Boyd) Mims, the latter of whom resides at Webster, Florida, while the former, who was a telegraph operator, is deceased. Doctor and Mrs. Russell have a two children: Sara, born August 23, 1913; and Rebecca, born January 18, 1918, both at Adairville.

Jno. B. Gaines. If all owners of great metropolitan journals were as conscientious as Jno. B. Gaines, publisher of the Park City Daily News and the News-Democrat Messenger, the influence for proper living conditions, clean streets, maintenance and extension of public improvements and a proper administration of affairs would prevail, for it is and always has been his policy to advocate in no unmeasured terms these standards, and through the medium of his newspapers awakened interest in them.

Jno. B. Gaines was born in Warren County, on a farm near Hebbville, September 30, 1854, a son of Samuel B. Gaines and grandson of John B. Gaines, who was born, lived and died in Virginia. Samuel B. Gaines was born in Virginia in 1820, and died in Warren County, Kentucky, in 1856. He came to Warren County, when a boy, and was reared in Warren and Allen counties, and after his marriage, in Warren County, he located on a farm near Old Woodburn, and was a pioneer merchant. At Woodlawn Barren County, he passed away. At one time he was engaged in merchandising at Gainesville, and the place was named in his honor. The democratic party had in him a strong supporter, and he was equally zealous in his work in behalf of the Christian Church, of which he was a consistent member. Samuel B. Gaines was married to Bettie Peter, who was born in Glasgow, Barren County, in 1828, and she died at Bowling Green in 1901. They had two children: Mary Ellen, who died at the age of fifty-eight years, was the wife of Joe S. Kirby, now living at Richardson, Texas; and Jno. B., whose name heads this review.

Jno. B. Gaines attended the rural schools of his native county and Scotts School at Bowling Green, from which he was graduated in 1873. He then entered the railroad business with the Hannibal & Saint Joseph Road Company, in the general passenger agent and ticket office at Hannibal, Missouri, where he remained for two years. He was then made general passenger agent of the Mississippi Valley & Western Railroad Company, located at Hannibal, Missouri, being the youngest man to hold this responsible position. After a year Mr. Gaines left railroad for journalistic work, and, having found his way in the advertising business, he sold his interest in the Ohio Valley News and actively consolidated with the Democrat as the Globe-Democrat. He began his career as a reporter and among other important assignments was that of interviewing Gen. U. S. Grant.

In 1876 Mr. Gaines established the Warren County Enterprise at Woodburn, and later published the Logan County Enterprise at Russellville. His next venture was the Louisville Enterprise, which was established at Franklin. Going to Paducah, he published the Paducah Enterprise, and in 1881 established the Louisville World. In 1882 he located at Bowling Green, where he established the Park City Daily News, which he continues to edit and publish. Since then Mr. Gaines has bought out a number of newspapers in the city, the most successful of which are the Park City Daily News, the Park City Times, the Park City Times-Herald, and these dozen or more in the Park City Daily News and the semi-weekly, the News-Democrat Messenger, both of which are democratic papers. Mr. Gaines is recognized as the "nestor" of journalism in Kentucky, and has been associated with some of the leading newspaper men in the country. His plant and offices are located at 237 Tenth Street, and his equipment is modern, including linotypes and a Perfecting press. The papers circulate in Warren and surrounding counties, and are recognized as authoritative with reference to oil matters in this part of Kentucky. Mr. Gaines is a strong democrat, and served as postmaster of Bowling Green under President Cleveland's second administration. He owns a modern residence in Bowling Green, which contains a comfortable home, and a farm which is located 3 1/2 miles south of Bowling Green. The Methodist Episcopal Church holds his membership. During the late war he both personally and through his papers was very zealous in promoting all of the local work in Warren County. He bought bonds and war stamps to the very limit of his ability, and did everything within his power to aid the Government in carrying out its policies. For two terms he has been president of the Kentucky Press Association, and his fellow members delight in paying him honor, for they are proud of his record as a newspaper man and are attached to him personally.

In 1878 Mr. Gaines married at South Union, Kentucky, Miss H. M. McCutchen, a daughter of Hugh and Mary (Morton) McCutchen, both of whom are deceased. For many years Mr. McCutchen was a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Gaines have three children: Morton B., who is in the advertising business at Indianapolis, Indiana; C. M., who is managing editor of the Park City Daily News, and Anne Norton, who lives at home.

Mr. Gaines went into the newspaper business and learned it at a time when owners of journals realized their responsibility and sought to mould public opinion and gave the people the news in a dignified and accurate manner. He has never subscribed to the policies of "yellow journalism, although he has been broad- gauged enough to keep his organs fully up to the demands of modern progress. It has always been his aim to make his readers feel that what appeared in the columns under his charge was reliable, and has succeeded so well that he is regarded as one of the most dependable newspaper men in the state.

Joseph Alexander Humphreys. "Sumner's Forest," located about eleven miles west of Lexington in Woodford County, now owned by Lucy Alexander Humphreys Johnstone and her sister, Sarah Gibson Chenault, is one of the historic places of Kentucky. It takes its name from General Jethro Sumner, who was born in Virginia about 1733 and who was active and prominent in the measures that preceded the Revolution and in the Revolution itself. In 1760 he was paymaster of the Provincial troops of North Carolina, and in 1772 was appointed colonel of the Third North Carolina Regiment. He served under Washington in the North, was commissioned a brigadier general in 1779, and took part in the campaign under General Greene when the British were expelled from the Carolinas. This Revolutionary soldier died in North Carolina about 1790. For his services he received a grant of about 3,000 acres on the South Elkhorn. The modern Sumner's Forest is about four miles from the village river. General Sumner owned other large tracts, and it is probable that his holdings in this section of Kentucky were near 20,000 acres. It is supposed that he erected or had erected the residence, which was a combined dwelling and fort and is located about two miles from the Village of Fort Garrett and some twelve miles southwest of Lexington, and about eight miles from Versailles. Within the recollection of men still living this pioneer building was surrounded by dense forests. The property and about 3,000 acres of the land was acquired in 1792, or perhaps some years earlier, by John Brown, the first United States senator from Kentucky, whose career is noted elsewhere in this publication. John Brown was the ancestor of the present owner. John Brown acquired it from Thomas Sumner, a son of General Sumner, for $2 an acre. John Brown's wife was from Philadelphia and, not liking the forest life, he abandoned it as a home and brought his father, John, and his mother from Virginia and gave them to the property. In 1803 it passed to another son, Preston Brown, who in turn sold it to his nephew, David Carlisle Humphreys in 1826. The mother of Mr. Humphreys was Mary Brown.

Sumner's Forest has ever been a place of entertainment and noted for its hospitality. The bill of fare is still unchanged. The first of July 1858 was given to thirty-four prominent guests. Almost everything good to eat is listed, and waiters for the occasion were imported from Louisville.

David Carlisle Humphreys, who acquired Sumner's Forest in 1826, had been a merchant, a dealer in flour, buying the entire output of several mills and shipping the product to the sugar planters of Louisiana and Mississippi. When he bought Sumner's Forest it contained 640 acres. He erected a dwelling near the old home of the parents of John D. Haggin, a noted horseman, near Midway, and at Waverly Mr. Humphreys spent his later years. He married Sarah Scott, daughter of Doctor Joseph and Martha (Finley) Scott, of Lexington and Frankfort. To their marriage were born two sons, Joseph Alexander Humphreys and Samuel Brown Humphreys. The family line represented in Samuel Brown Humphreys is now extinct. He married Mary Brown of Virginia, and died when comparatively young on a farm near his father's place. His two sons, David and Thomas, both died childless. His daughter Mary became the wife of Anthony Dey, her cousin, of New York, and she died without issue. Lucy, another daughter of Samuel became the wife of A. J. Alexander, of Woodburn, and they lived at Sherwood, near her father, but her three children died in childhood. The only daughter of David Carlisle Humphreys was Mary Brown Humphreys, who was born in 1830 and was famous for her beauty of person and charm of intellect. Her hand was sought by scores of men before it was finally bestowed. On the walls of the library of Sumner's Forest hang two portraits in oil, one showing this famous beauty in foreground, another her mother, Sarah Scott Humphreys.

Joseph Alexander Humphreys, a son of David C. Humphreys, was born at Frankfort in 1820, and at the age of eighteen months was taken to Sumner's Forest. After the age of twelve he lived with the family at Waverly. His father gave him Sumner's Forest, and he took possession of the property at the age of twenty-one. His talents and education were such as to admirably qualify him for the possession of such a home. He was a graduate of Centre College and also Yale College, and took a special course in medicine at Princeton University. For three years he was a student in Europe, studying at Paris and traveling through nearly all the great centers of culture. In 1853 he married his cousin, Sarah Gibson, daughter of Tobias Gibson, of Terre-bonne Parish Louisiana. Tobias Gibson was a sugar planter, and married Louisiana Hart, a daughter of Nathaniel and Susannah (Preston) Hart, names conspicuous in Kentucky history.

It was during the ownership of Joseph A. Humphreys that Sumner's Forest became noted for its production and its home industries. He employed an expert gardener to plant orchards and vineyards, and made the farm notable for its livestock. He brought from Vermont the first celebrated Morgan race horses, including Mambro Chief, from which the greatest of all horses are proud to trace lineage. "Nancy King" was a great brood mare in the Sumner's Forest stables. Mr. Humphreys introduced to that section of Kentucky the first portable steam engine, using it to replace horse power for threshing grain. He was a student, an observer, and had the courage to try out his advanced ideas. He lived in advance of his time, and many of his enterprises since have been realized in the time of his children. He made extensive improvements and re-modeled the old residence, nearly doubling its capacity. He added entirely new the library section. The possessor of ample means, as he traveled he collected articles of rare value in various countries and exemplifying the best handiwork of special artists. A large part of this collection is still preserved and now has a priceless value. While still unmarried and with no professional attachments, he issued while in Europe a full set of several hundred pieces of rare Bohemian cut glass, which he planned as a wedding present for his future wife. Doubtless this was the first of such work ever seen in Kentucky, and some of it is still in the old home. His collection also included paintings, ivory, jade carving and rare books, and many pieces of magnificent furniture, and practically all of them have special associations with the home and those of the family whose lives have been connected with Sumner's Forest. In the collection are coats of arms of a dozen related families and recorded in books of heraldry. Joseph A. Humphreys lived intensively and enjoyed the resources of the world as he passed through it. He died at the age of thirty-six in New York in 1863. His wife survived him nearly half a century and spent her last years at her father's old estate, Magnolia, in Terre-bonne Parish, Louisiana. To their union were born five children. Lucy, the eldest, became the wife of Lewis Johnstone in 1884, and for many years they have occupied Sumner's Forest. The second child, Louisiana Hart, died at an early age. Belle died in childhood. The other surviving daughter is Sarah Gibson, now Mrs. C. D. Chenault, of Lexington, and a joint owner of Sumner's Forest. They have two daughters, Sarah Gibson, who married G. D. Buckner, and Lucy Humphreys who married M. W. Anderson great-grandson of Henry Clay. The only son, Joseph A., Jr., is in the real estate business at Houma, Louisiana. He has one son Joseph A., III.

Lewis Johnstone, who has given a practical direction to the management of Summer’s Forest as an agricultural property, is a native of South Carolina where his father was a rice planter. His father subsequently removed to Louisiana and became an extensive sugar grower. Mr. and Mrs. Johnstone have lived at Summer’s Forest since 1887 and he entered at once into the affairs of his community and to the promotion of the best interests of Kentucky. He is an extensive sheep grower has made tobacco a special crop of the farm, and is interested in the Fayette Tobacco Warehouse. Mr. Johnstone some years ago was prohibition candidate for Congress against W. C. P. Breckinridge, and the election decided. During the prohibition question squarely before the public.

G. A. Willoughby. The grocery business has one essential advantage—it is an absolute necessity. Nevertheless, too many people trade upon this fact, and, in consequence, are a long way removed from the business. Respectable men known as the twentieth-century grocer. As in all lines of business, a firm will need in order not to fall behind the procession. There are few better qualified to advise in this direction than G. A. Willoughby, a leading merchant of Bowling Green.

Mr. Willoughby was born on a farm ten miles from Bowling Green, Kentucky, at Alvaton, Warren County, February 22, 1852, son of William (Durham) Willoughby and a member of a family which originated in England and the founder of which in America immigrated to Virginia in Colonial times. The great-grandfather of Mr. Willoughby was the pioneer from Virginia to Allen County, Kentucky, where was born Simeon Willoughby, the grandfather of Mr. Willoughby. He farmed throughout his life in Allen County, and did a number of years before the birth of his grandson. Marion Willoughby was born in 1852 in Allen County, where he was reared, educated and married, and in 1878 removed to Alvaton, Warren County, where he subsequently became a substantial farmer and the owner of a large tract of land. He followed agricultural pursuits throughout his life and died in 1888. Simeon Willoughby was highly respected and esteemed. He was a staunch republican in politics and he and the members of his family belonged to the Baptist Church, in the work of which Mr. Willoughby took an active and interested part. He married Nannie Durham, who was born in Allen County, Kentucky, in 1858, and she survives him as a resident of Bowling Green. They have reared three children: J. P., a veteran surgeon of Scottsville, Kentucky; Stella, the wife of J. P. Stiff, a dry goods clerk of Bowling Green; L. B., the proprietor of a wholesale bakery at Bowling Green; G. A.; and S. N., of this city, who is associated with his brother in the Willoughby Grocery Company.

G. A. Willoughby attended the rural schools in the Alvaton community and resided on his father’s farm until he was fifteen years of age, at which time he secured employment driving a grocery wagon for a store at Bowling Green. After six months of this work he was taken into the store as clerk by the proprietor, J. J. Dobson, and during the seven years that he was thus employed learned every phase of the grocery business. He included himself the store until January 1, 1908. Mr. Willoughby established a store of his own and because of his lack of capital it was a modest venture. As is usually the case, he at first belonged to the corner grocery type, but refused to get in a rut and consequently a way was opened for him to develop and grow. He was twenty-three years of age when he embarked in business on his own account, and he marked out his business chart as clearly as his capital, knowledge, field and scope would permit. He moved slowly in the beginning, until he had learned the motion of fortune’s wheel, and never ventured ahead until he had an objective point in view. His capital of $454 was invested in a modest but well-chosen stock, to which he added from time to time as his finances would permit, and in the meantime compelled attention by his departure from threadbare conditions. His goods always have been arranged in orderly and attractive manner, and cleanliness is a feature of his establishment. He directs much attention to supplying the best goods obtainable, has a reputation for reliability that in itself is a trade-winner, and never advertises anything that he has not on hand. He has won out on merit, good nature, commendable ability to succeed, and his store, at the corner of Main and State streets, is now one of the leading groceries between Louisville and Nashville.

Mr. Willoughby is the owner of a modern residence at 1205 West Chestnut Street, one of the most attractive and desirable homes of Bowling Green, and he is interested financially in the oil development in this part of the state. The high esteem in which he is held by his associates may be seen in the fact that he is president of the Retail Grocers’ Association of Bowling Green. He is a director in the Home Builders Company and treasurer of the local Y. M. C. A., and during the World war period was an active worker in and generous contributor to the various movements started to assist in the success of America. Mr. Willoughby is a fraternalist he holds membership in Bowling Green Lodge No. 51, I. O. O. F., of which he is a past grand, and in politics gives his support to the republican party, although he has never been an office seeker. He belongs to the Baptist Church with his family, and is helpfully interested in the work of the Sunday School.

J. J. Dobson, born January 12, 1812, Mr. Willoughby was united in marriage at Bowling Green with Miss Amy Dobson, daughter of J. J. and Nora Dobson, the latter deceased and the former a resident of Bowling Green. Mr. Dobson, under whose training Mr. Willoughby secured his preparatory knowledge of the grocery business, was a pioneer among the merchants of this city and is still engaged in the retail grocery business. He was one of the founders of the business department of Potter College, at one time a celebrated school of Bowling Green, is very talented as an instrumental musician and is widely known and popular in musical circles of the city. She and her husband are the parents of two children: Eleanor, born May 27, 1915; and G. A., Jr., born August 8, 1918, both at Bowling Green.

H. A. McElroy. The name of McElroy is a well-known one all over Kentucky and Tennessee, for it is connected with the dependable five and ten cent stores in all of the leading centers of these two states, operated under that name and managed by the president of the H. A. McElroy Company, H. A. McElroy, who was the founder of the enterprise from the first. Mr. McElroy was born near Scottsville, Allen County, Kentucky, June 13, 1869, a son of M. H. McElroy, grandfather of James McElroy, and great-grandson of Captain McElroy, a cavalry officer of the American Revolution under General Marion’s command. James McElroy was born in South Carolina and died in Allen County, Kentucky, before the Civil War. On the father’s side of his family he is the pioneer of his family into Allen County. James McElroy married a Miss Ham. The McElroy family immigrated from Scotland to South Carolina during the Colonial epoch of this country. M. H. McElroy was born in Allen County in 1828, and died near Bowling Green in 1895. Reared, educated, and married in Allen County, he was there engaged in farming upon an extensive scale until 1884, when he moved to Smith Grove, Kentucky, and for two years
Irested from his labors, which had been quite arduous. In 1886 he came to his farm near Bowling Green, where he spent the remainder of his life. Politically a democrat, he gave his party his earnest support. As a conscientious member of the Baptist Church he upheld the moral standards of his community and set an example in Christian living. He married Karen Hunt, who was born in Allen County, Kentucky, in 1831, and died in the same county, March 13, 1911. Their children were as follows: Ellen, who is residing at Wichita, Kansas, the widow of John W. Whitney, who was a farmer and also foreman in an ax-handle factory of Gallatin, Tennessee; Ollie, who died on a farm near Bowling Green at the age of fifty years, was the wife of T. J. Ham, who is now residing at Bowling Green; J. K., who is a retired merchant of Bowling Green; A. C., who was a merchant of Bowling Green for many years, and died in this city in 1907; and H. A., who was the youngest born.

Until he was twenty-one years old, H. A. McElroy remained on his father's farm, his educational advantages being those afforded by the rural schools of his neighborhood. Leaving home at the time of his majority, he entered a hardware store of Bowling Green as a clerk, and continued in it until 1904. This store was bought and operated by his brother, A. C. McElroy, and in 1904 he bought an interest in it. At the time of his brother's death he and the other brother, J. K. McElroy, took possession of the business and conducted it together until 1909, when H. A. McElroy bought his brother's interest, and remained in it alone until 1919, when he sold it in order to devote all of his time to the chain of five and ten cent stores which had been established in his name. During the time he was the sole owner of the hardware store he developed it into the largest of its kind in the county.

In 1915 the McElroy chain of stores was started by F. V. Andrew, Mr. McElroy furnishing the capital. The company is incorporated under the laws of Kentucky and Tennessee, with a capital of $500,000, and the officials of it are as follows: H. A. McElroy, president; L. G. Singleton, vice president; Roy Claypool, secretary and treasurer. The offices of the company are in the McCormack Building of Bowling Green, and the five and ten cent stores which it operates are to be found in Bowling Green, Somerset, Fulton, Murray, Franklin, Morganfield, Owensboro, Kentucky, and Union City, Dyersburg, Springfield, Paris, Brownsville, Tennessee. The success of this venture has been way beyond the most sanguine expectations, and more will be added to the chain of stores from time to time.

In politics Mr. McElroy is a democrat. He belongs to the Baptist Church. Fraternally he is a Knight of Pythias. Having faith in local enterprises, he has seen fit to invest in some of them, and is now a director of the Liberty National Bank and president of the Jamison Oil Company. He owns a modern residence at 1217 Park Street, where he maintains a comfortable home. Like all loyal Americans, Mr. McElroy gave the administration a hearty support in its war policies, and took a zealous part in all of the local war activities, assisting in every drive and buying bonds and Saving Stamps and contributing to all of the organizations to the full limit of his ability.

In 1906 Mr. McElroy married in Warren County Miss Ethel Claypool, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tom J. Claypool, both of whom are now deceased. He was a successful farmer of Warren County for many years, and died at Bowling Green in December, 1906. In October, 1911, Mr. McElroy married Miss Hailway Payne of Bowling Green, a daughter of W. T. and Janie (Hudson) Payne, who reside in Warren County, where Mr. Payne is engaged in farming. Mr. and Mrs. McElroy have the following children: Frances Ellene, who was born May 15, 1914; Ruth Payne, who was born October 14, 1916; H. A., Jr., who was born February 25, 1918; and John Robert, who was born August 7, 1920.

While the idea of a chain of stores handling articles which could be sold for 5 and 10 cents each did not originate with Mr. McElroy, he has developed new features in the business, and is handling its affairs in the most capable and effective manner as he did those of his immense hardware establishment, born business man of superior executive ability, and now that he is giving all of his time and attention to his company much progress may be looked for in every way. As a citizen he measures up to the highest and most exacting standards, and has done much in a quiet way to improve conditions in his home city. His family is one of the old ones of this section, and he is accepted as an excellent example of native Kentucky, one whose stock is rooted in the traditions of the pioneer days of the great commonwealth.

Will B. Hill. The business interests of Bowling Green have a progressive and enterprising representative in Will B. Hill, proprietor of the leading music store between Louisville and Nashville. Mr. Hill is the acknowledged leader in his line of business in Bowling Green, and through his interest and enthusiasm the people of this community have been enabled to enjoy the performances of a number of this country's celebrated artists.

Will B. Hill was born in Bowling Green, October 13, 1882, a son of Samuel Henry and Mary Prudence (Hall) Hill. The family was founded in Kentucky by great-grandparents of Mr. Hill, who came from Virginia in 1817. During their trip there was born to them the grandfather of Mr. Hill, Thomas G. Hill, whose birth occurred in the year mentioned, in a covered immigrant wagon, at Murfreesboro, Tennessee. As an infant he was taken to Lincoln County, Kentucky, where he spent the remainder of his life as a farmer, dying in 1890, a substantial and highly respected citizen.

Samuel Henry Hill was born in 1838, in Lincoln County, Kentucky, and was reared in his native county. As a young man he located at Russellville, where he engaged in the live stock business, and in the same line came to Bowling Green in 1873, where he established and developed a large and prosperous business. His death occurred in this city, where he was widely and favorably known, in 1908. Mr. Hill was a democrat and was interested in public affairs, serving efficiently in the capacity of city assessor for twelve years. He was affiliated with the Presbyterian Church. During the Civil war period he bought live stock for the Confederate Government. Mr. Hill married at Russellville Miss Mary Prudence Hall, who was born in 1849 in Barren County, this state, and died at Bowling Green in 1886. They became the parents of the following children: Thomas Granville, who served in the United States Navy for several years and then entered the United States Quartermaster's Department and was stationed in the Philippine Islands, where he died at the age of twenty-four years; Jennie Brister, who died at the age of twenty-one years, unmarried; Samuel W., who saw service in the Philippines as orderly to General Humphreys during the Spanish-American war, was later orderly to the late Maj. Archibald W., and died at Pilar, Philippine Islands; Helen L., who served at a Sanitarium at Fort Bayard, New Mexico, while still a member of the Quartermaster's Department; and Will B.

Will B. Hill received his education in the public schools of Bowling Green, which he left at the age of sixteen years to accept a position in a tailoring establishment, where he received $1 a week to start, being gradually advanced during the three years of his connection therewith. When he was nineteen years of age, having thoroughly mastered the details of the

Lewis Johnstone, who has given a practical direction to the management of Sumner’s Forest as an agricultural property, is a native of South Carolina where his father was a rice planter. His father subsequently removed to Louisiana and became an extensive sugar grower. Mr. and Mrs. Johnstone have long lived at Sumner’s Forest since 1887 and he entered at once into the affairs of his community and to the promotion of the best interests of Kentucky. He is an extensive sugar planter and a spiritual leader in a way that brings out the best in him and is interested in the Fayette Tobacco Warehouse. Mr. Johnstone some years ago was prohibition candidate for Congress against W. C. P. Breckinridge, and the campaign served to bring the prohibition question squarely before the public.

G. A. Willoughby. The grocery business has one essential advantage—it is an absolute necessity. Nevertheless, too many people trade upon this fact, and, in consequence, are a long way removed from the hustling, resourceful man known as the twentieth-century grocer. As in all lines of business, a financial creed is necessary in order not to fall behind the procession. There are few better qualified to advise in thisCreed than James Willoughby. Mr. Willoughby, a leading merchant of Bowling Green.

Mr. Willoughby was born on a farm ten miles from Bowling Green, Kentucky, at Alvaton, Warren County, February 6, 1855, a son of Marion and Nannie (Durham) Willoughby, and a member of a family which originated in England and the founder of which in America is believed to be James Willoughby, a native of Virginia, belonging to the Colonial times. The great-grandfather of Mr. Willoughby came from Virginia to Allen County, Kentucky, where he was born Simeon Willoughby, the grandfather of G. A. He was a farmer throughout his life in Allen County, and died a number of years before the birth of his grandson. Marion Willoughby was born in 1852 in Allen County, where he was reared, educated and married, and in 1878 removed to Alvaton, Warren County, where he subsequently became a substantial farmer and the owner of a large tract of land. He followed agricultural pursuits throughout his life and died on his farm February 22, 1888, highly respected and esteemed. He was a staunch republican in politics and he and the members of his family belonged to that party.

Mr. Willoughby took an active and interested part. He married Nannie Durham, who was born in Allen County, Kentucky, in 1858, and she survives him as a resident of Bowling Green. They became the parents of five children: J. P., a veterinary surgeon of Scottsville, Kentucky; Stella, the wife of J. P. Stiff, a dry goods dealer at Bowling Green; L. B., the proprietor of a wholesale bakery at Bowling Green; G. A.; and S. N., of this city, who is associated with his brother in the Willoughby Grocery Company.

G. A. Willoughby attended the rural schools in the Alvaton community and resided on his father’s farm until he was fifteen years of age, at which time he secured employment driving a grocery wagon for a store at Alvaton, Warren County. While in the employment of this store he was taken into the store as clerk by the proprietor, J. J. Dobson, and during the seven years that he was thus employed learned every phase of the grocery business, from the ground up. On September 1, 1908, Mr. Willoughby established a store of his own, and because of his lack of capital it was a modest venture. It is located at the corner of Main and State streets, a location regarded to the corner grocery type, but refused to get into a rut and consequently a way was opened for him to develop and grow. He was twenty-three years of age when he embarked in business on his own account, and he marked out his business chart as clearly as his capital, knowledge, field and scope would permit. He moved slowly in the beginning, until he had learned the motion of fortune’s wheel, and never ventured ahead until he had an objective point in view. His capital of $454 was invested in a modest but well-chosen grocer, in which he added from time to time as his finances would permit, and in the meantime compelled attention by his departure from threadbare traditions. His goods always have been arranged in orderly and attractive manner, and cleanliness is a feature of his establishment. He directs much attention to supplying the best goods obtainable, has a remarkable ability to discern the best, and is always a winner, and never advertises anything that he has not on hand. He has won out on merit, good nature, courtesy and belief in himself and his ability to succeed, and his store, at the corner of Main and State streets, is now one of the leading groceries between Louisville and Nashville.

Mr. Willoughby is the owner of a modern residence at 1265 West Chestnut Street, one of the most attractive and desirable homes of Bowling Green, and he is interested financially in the oil development in this part of the state. The high esteem in which he is held by his associates may be seen in the fact that he is president of the Retail Grocers’ Association of Bowling Green. He is also the treasurer of the local Y. M. C. A., and during the World war period was an active worker in and generous contributor to the various movements started to assist in the success of American arms abroad. As a fraternalist he holds membership in Bowling Green Lodge No. 51, I. O. O. F., of which he is a past grand, and in politics gives his support to the republican party. Although he has never been an office seeker. He belongs to the Baptist Church with his family, and is helpfully interested in the work of the Sunday School.

On June 12, 1912, Mr. Willoughby was united in marriage at Bowling Green with Miss Amy Dobson, daughter of J. J. and Nora (Brite) Dobson, the latter deceased and the former a resident of Bowling Green. Mr. Dobson, under whose training Mr. Willoughby secured his preparatory knowledge of the grocery business, was a pioneer among the merchants of this city and is still engaged in the retail grocery trade. Mrs. Willoughby, who is a graduate of the music department of Potter College, at one time a celebrated school of Bowling Green, is very talented as an instrumental musician and an assistant of the organist of the First Baptist church of the city. She and her husband are the parents of two children: Eleanor, born May 27, 1915; and G. A., Jr., born August 8, 1918, both at Bowling Green.

H. A. McElroy. The name of McElroy is a well-known one all over Kentucky and Tennessee, for it is connected with the dependable five and ten cent stores in all of the leading centers of these two states, operated under that name and managed by the president of the H. A. McElroy Company, H. A. McElroy, whose capital has backed the enterprise from the first. Mr. McElroy was born near Scottsville, Allen County, Kentucky, June 13, 1869, a son of M. H. McElroy, and was reared and educated in Alvaton, Warren County, under the guidance of Captain McElroy, a cavalry officer of the American Revolution under General Marion’s command. James McElroy was born in South Carolina and died in Allen County, Kentucky, before the birth of his grandson. He was the pioneer of his family into Allen County. James McElroy married a Miss Ham. The McElroy family immigrated from Scotland to South Carolina during the Colonial epoch of this country.

M. H. McElroy was born in Allen County in 1828, and died near Bowling Green in 1895. Reared, educated and married in Allen County, he was there engaged in farming upon an extensive scale until 1884, when he moved to Smith Grove, Kentucky, and for two years rested from his labors, which had been quite arduous. In 1886 he came to his farm near Bowling Green, where he spent the remainder of his life. Politically a democrat, he gave his party his earnest support. As a conscientious member of the Baptist Church he upheld the moral standards of his community and set an example in Christian living. He married Karen Hunt, who was born in Allen County, Kentucky, in 1831, and died in the same county in 1872. Their children were as follows: Ellen, who is residing at Wickliffe; Mrs. Kassner, the widow of John W. Whitney, who was a farmer and also foremost in an ax-handle factory of Gallatin, Tennessee; Ollie, who died on a farm near Bowling Green at the age of fifty years, was the wife of T. J. Ham, who is now residing at Bowling Green; J. K., who is a retired merchant of Bowling Green; A. C., who was a merchant of Bowling Green for many years, and died at Bowling Green in 1907; and H. A., who was the youngest born.

Until he was twenty-one years old H. A. McElroy remained on his father's farm, his educational advantages being those afforded by the rural schools of his neighborhood. Leaving home at the time of his majority, he entered a hardware store of Bowling Green as a clerk, and continued in it until 1904. This store was owned by his brother, A. C. McElroy, and in 1904 A. C. went to the front. At the time of his brother's death he and the other brother, J. K. McElroy, took possession of the business and conducted it together until 1909, when H. A. McElroy bought his brother's interest, and remained in it alone until 1919, when he sold it in order to devote all of his time to the chain of five and ten cent stores which had been established in his name. During the time he was the sole owner of the hardware store he developed it into the leading one in the city.

In 1890 the McElroy chain of stores was started by F. V. Andrew, Mr. McElroy furnishing the capital. The company is incorporated under the laws of Kentucky and Tennessee, with a capital of $500,000, and the officials of it are as follows: H. A. McElroy, president; L. G. Singleton, vice president; Roy Claypool, secretary and treasurer. The offices of the company are in the McCormack Building of Bowling Green, and the five and ten cent stores which it operates are to be found in Glasgow, Madisonville, Mayfield, Bowling Green, Somerset, Fulton, Murray, Franklin, Morgantown, Owensboro, Kentucky, and Union City, Dyersburg, Springfield, Paris, Brownsville, Tennessee. The success of this venture has been way beyond the most sanguine expectations, and more will be added to the chain of stores from time to time.

In politics Mr. McElroy is a democrat. He belongs to the Baptist Church. Fraternally he is a Knight of Pythias. Having faith in local enterprises, he has seen fit to invest in some of them, and is now a director of the Liberty National Bank and president of the Jamison Oil Company. He owns a modern residence at 1217 Park Street, where he maintains a comfortable home. Like all loyal Americans, Mr. McElroy gave the administration a hearty support in its war policies, and took a zealous part in all of the local war activities, assisting in every drive and buying bonds and Saving Stamps and contributing to all of the organizations to the fullest extent.

In 1906 Mr. McElroy married in Warren County Miss Ethel Claypool, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tom J. Claypool, both of whom are now deceased. He was a successful farmer of Warren County for many years, and died at Bowling Green in December, 1906. In October, 1911, Mr. McElroy married Miss Havelaw Payne of Bowling Green, a daughter of W. T. and Janie (Hudson) Payne, who reside in Warren County, where Mr. Payne is engaged in farming. Mr. and Mrs. McElroy have the following children: Frances Ellene, who was born May 15, 1914; Ruth Payne, who was born October 14, 1916; H. A., Jr., who was born February 25, 1918; and John Robert, who was born August 7, 1920.

While the idea of a chain of stores handling articles which could be sold for 5 and 10 cents each did not originate with Mr. McElroy, he has developed new features in the business, and is handling its affairs in the capable and effective manner as he did those of his immense farm. He is a born business man of superior executive ability, and now that he is giving all of his time and attention to his company much progress may be looked for in every way. EUGENE R. BAGBY, proprietor of the Ford garage at Bowling Green, is one of the experienced men in this line of business, and a man whose standing in his community is unquestioned. He was born at Louisville, Kentucky, July 29, 1871, a son of Eugene A. Bagby, and grandson of Albert K. Bagby, who was born in Culpeper County, Virginia, and died at Glasgow, Kentucky, in 1863, having been the pioneer of his family in Kentucky, where he was engaged in farming. He married Martha Wooten, who also died in Glasgow, Kentucky. The Bagby family originated in Scotland, from whence immigration was made to Virginia during the Colonial epoch of this country.

Eugene A. Bagby was born in Glasgow, Kentucky, in 1839, and moved to Bowling Green in 1842. Growing up in Glasgow, he became a druggist of that city, but in 1866 moved to Louisville, and for fifteen years thereafter was with McFerran, Shalcross & Company, meat packers, noted for their Magnolia hams and other salted meats. In 1881 he moved to a farm at Midway, Kentucky, but after four years spent in conducting it he went West to Garden City, Kansas, and for a time conducted a real-estate business there. Subsequently he went to California for Kingan & Company, establishing a branch house for this firm at San Francisco in 1890, and was connected with it until 1894, when he returned to Kentucky and for eight years was in the drug business again. He also spent some time with the Kentucky Title Company of Louisville, where he later held the position of manager, having been associated with McFerran, his old firm, who was born at Louisville in 1841, and died at Midway in 1882, having borne her husband the following children: James, who died young; W. A., who died at Glasgow when twenty-six years old, was with the Deposit Bank of that city; Eugene R.; John B., who died in infancy; and an infant daughter who died at birth.

Eugene R. Bagby attended the public schools of Louisville until he was seventeen years of age, at which time he entered the Deposit Bank of Glasgow, beginning at the bottom of the ladder. It was not long, however, before his merits received recognition and he was promoted, and when he left at the end of two years he was holding the position of assistant bookkeeper. He then accompanied his father to San Francisco, and for two years was shipping clerk for Duroc & Company. Mr. Bagby became interested in agricultural pursuits, and for ten years was one of the largest producers of Shorthorn cattle and Duroc hogs in Warren County. Realizing the necessity for a change on account of ill health, he went to Orlando, Florida, and after four years spent there felt sufficiently recovered to return to Bowling Green, but decided it would be better to occupy himself with a business which was not too confining, and so established his present garage in a small way. In it he found congenial conditions and profit, and his business has grown until it is now the largest of its kind between Louisville, Kentucky, and Nashville, Tennessee. His new garage is located on State, at Eleventh Street. Mr. Bagby is associated in this business and is the sole proprietor of his business. His residence is at #212½ State Street. Like his father he is a democrat. Fraternally he belongs to Bowling Green Lodge No. 320, B. P. O. E.

During the period that this country was at war Mr. Bagby was one of the zealous workers and participated in all of the drives in Warren County. Personally he bought bonds, stamps and contributed very generously to all of the war organizations, doing everything in his power to assist the Government to carry out its policies.

In 1892 Mr. Bagby married at Bowling Green Miss Mildred Wallace Woods, a daughter of Dr. John G. and Martha Woods, both of whom are deceased. Doctor Woods was a distinguished physician of Glasgow. A man of public character, he represented the people of Warren County in the State Assembly, and also was state printer. Mr. and Mrs. Bagby have no children. It would be difficult to find a more public-spirited man than Mr. Bagby, or one who is more sincerely interested in the progress of Bowling Green and Warren County. His social circle is wide one, and his circle of friends is almost as large. The service which he renders to the public is appreciated, as the increase in his business plainly demonstrates, and he has every reason to be proud of what he has accomplished in the past decades.

JOSEPH MORRIS RAMSEY, vice president of the Citizens’ National Bank of Bowling Green, has long been accepted as one of the astute financiers of Warren County, and is a man of sterling integrity and wide civic influence. He was born in Clark County, Kentucky, November 2, 1820, a son of William Nathaniel Ramsey, grandson of Joseph Ramsey, and a member of one of the old families of Virginia which state his great-grandfather came to Clark County, Kentucky, just after the close of the American Revolution. Joseph Ramsey was born in Clark County in 1820, and died there in January, 1875. He was a clergyman of the Presbyterian Church, and for many years was an eminent divine, carrying on his ministerial duties in various parts of Clark County, and also was occupied with agricultural activity in connection with his large farming property. He married Miss Cynthia Haggard, a native of Clark County, who passed away in that county.

William Nathaniel Ramsey was born in Clark County March 10, 1841, and was there reared, but he was married in Montgomery County, Kentucky. Until 1890 he was busily engaged in farming, but since that year has lived in retirement at Winchester, that county. Since casting his first vote he has given his support to the candidates of the democratic party, and at one time was chairman of the County Central Committee. The Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., holds his membership, and he is a very strong churchman. A Mason, he is a member and was one of the founders of W. H. Cum- mingham Lodge No. 572, A. F. and A. M., and for forty years has been a member of the Order. During the period of the war between the two sections of the country he was a lieutenant of the Kentucky State Militia. William Nathaniel Ramsey married Mary Elizabeth Morris, who was born September 9, 1836, in Scott County, Kentucky, and died February 16, 1910, in Clark County, at Winchester. Their children were as follows: W. H., who is a farmer of Montgomery County; J. C., who is in the lumber business with the McCormack Lumber Company at Mount Sterling, Kentucky; Kate M., who is the widow of B. F. Patton, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., now resides at Augusta, Georgia; Rena Sue, who married B. S. Haggard, a retired farmer and landowner of Winchester, Kentucky; Joseph Morris; Sallie L., who is the widow of Ed W. Ramsey, at one time in the transfer business at Winchester, Kentucky, a position which she made desirable for her, who married a physician, now located in the Asheville, North Carolina, Hospital; and Mary Elizabeth, who married Dr. C. M. Driver, of Mounds, Oklahoma, a physician and surgeon.

Joseph Morris Ramsey attended the rural schools of Clark County, and the Kentucky Western College at Winchester, leaving the latter in 1801, and entered the joint freight office of the Chesapeake & Ohio and the Louisville & Nashville Railroads at Winchester, starting as a messenger. He was promoted through various grades to be ticket agent, holding the latter position for six years of the ten years he was with this office. In 1901 he resigned to enter the lumber and railroad tie business, with headquarters at Clay City, Kentucky, where he remained for four years.

In 1905 Mr. Ramsey came to Bowling Green to become cashier of the Bowling Green National Bank, which had not been organized, and he continued to occupy that responsible position for six years, when, in 1911, this bank was consolidated with the Citizens National Bank, and he was made vice president and one of the directors of the new organization. He was also secretary and treasurer of the Bowling Green Trust Company, which is owned and controlled by the Citizens National Bank. In 1914 Mr. Ramsey retired from active service in the bank, although he holds his position with the Citizens National Bank, and continues with the Bowling Green Trust Company. In that year he established himself in a real-estate and insurance business, which he is still conducting. He is a democrat, and very active in his party, serving as a member of the City Council for four years. For many years he has been a member of the Minnesota Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., of which he was a deacon for twenty years; and in 1920 was made an elder. Fraternally he belongs to Aeolian Lodge, K. of P.; Bowling Green Lodge No. 320, B. P. O. E., and is active in both. He owns a modern residence at 1307 Park Street, which is one of the most desirable ones in the city and supplied with every modern convenience. During the late war he was one of the zealous workers in behalf of the war effort, and bought bonds and stamps and contributed to all of the war organizations to the full extent of his ability.

On June 20, 1906, Mr. Ramsey married at Sheldon, Iowa, Miss Sadie Frances Gibson, a daughter of Rev. William Gibson, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, who is now deceased, having passed away in 1918, aged ninety-two years, at Fort Collins, Colorado. Mrs. Ramsey was graduated from Hahmemann Medical College, Chicago, Illinois, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and was engaged in the practice of her profession at Bowling Green until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Ramsey have no children.

John Edwin Tyler. For many years the general public has patronized the soda fountain of the soft drink known as Coco Cola, and even within the past two years, when countless other beverages have been placed on the market, this favorite brooks no rival. It is stimulating, healthful and refreshing, and does not cloy the palate as do so many other drinks which are offered for consumption. This beverage was one of the first of the drinks placed upon the market, and it continues to occupy a front place among them all, as any vendor of them will testify. The bottling plant of the company is located at Bowling Green and is owned by John Edwin Tyler, one of the astute business men of the city.

John Edwin Tyler was born in Meade County, Kentucky, December 27, 1876, a son of Thomas E. Tyler, and grandson of John K. Tyler, who was born in Indiana in 1823. He died at Cape Sandy, Indiana, in 1891, having been a farmer there for many years. Thomas E. Tyler was born in Indiana in 1850, and died at Concordia, Meade County, Kentucky, where his parents moved when he was two years old, and there he was reared and married. A carpenter by trade, he left that calling to become a druggist, and was in that business a time of his demise. During the war between the North and the South he enlisted in the Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry, was captured and sent to Belle Isle, and there confined for about a year, when he was released. A staunch republican, he served as a magistrate for many years. With the organization of the Grand Republic of the Republic he enrolled himself as a member of the local post, and continued with it as long as he lived. He married Helen T. Tyler, who was born in New York State in 1850. She survives her husband and lives at Concordia, Kentucky. Their children were as follows: James Newton, who was a retired farmer, died at Louisville, Kentucky; Willis G., who is a railroad employee, lives at Dayton, Ohio; John Edwin, who was third in order of birth; Inez, who married J. E. Buren, a merchant of Rhodelia, Kentucky; and Lila, who married Robert Mattingly, of the Ten Broeck Tile Company of Louisville, Kentucky.

John Edwin Tyler attended the public schools of Concordia, Kentucky, and the Louisville College of Pharmacy, and passed the state board examination in pharmacy in 1895. From then on until 1910 he was connected as a druggist with stores at Louisville, Frankfort and Central, Kentucky. In the latter year he moved to Bowling Green and here opened a drug store that he conducted until 1917, when he bought the Coco Cola bottling plant which he has since conducted. This is the leading bottling business between Louisville and Nashville, Tennessee. The plant and offices are at 816 State Street. Mr. Tyler owns a modern residence at 133 State Street, which is one of the finest and most desirable ones in the city. Politically he is a republican. He is a member of the Bowling Green Chamber of Commerce. A man of progressive ideas, he has never failed to branch out when the opportunity arrived, and has oil interests in the Kentucky fields.

At the time when the acid test was made of men's loyalty Mr. Tyler made a most excellent showing, and for eighteen months devoted nearly all of his time to war work. He was chairman of the Exemption Board, and bought bonds and stamps and contributed to all of the organizations way beyond his means, for his whole heart was in the cause.

In 1909 he married at Shelbyville, Kentucky, Miss Robby Read, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Read, both of whom are deceased. He was a farmer in Shelby County, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Tyler have one daughter, Sarah, who was born December 21, 1910.

J. Mott Williams. There is an old saying that nothing succeeds like success, and the evident truth of it lies on a very solid foundation. The man who has proven his ability to carry to a successful culmination projects which try his ability and endurance, will possess qualities which will insure an efficient operation of similar concerns and prove his worth in the business world. Therefore, others, always on the outlook for dependable and energetic men of affairs, seek his co-operation, and he is given opportunities for investment which would not have been open to him had he been a failure. There are very few successful men whose entire capital is sunk in one enterprise, for they are interested in several lines of business, either in their home city or in those with which the commercial or industrial connections are close. Such is the case with J. Mott Williams of Bowling Green, whose immense clothing and furnishings establishment, the largest between Louisville and Nashville, is the pride of the city, for he has other interests, and is a constructive force in his community.

J. Mott Williams was born near Greensburg, Kentucky, July 27, 1865, a son of Thomas A. Williams, and grandson of Pascall Motley Williams, who was born at Richmond, Virginia, in 1798, and died in Green County, Kentucky, in 1866, having moved there in 1820. At one time he owned 4,000 acres of land and a large number of slaves and was a man of wealth and responsibility. He married Miss Martha Sydnor, who was born in Virginia and died in Green County, Kentucky. The Williams family came to Virginia from Wales during the Colonial epoch of this country's history. The maternal grandfather of Mr. Williams of whom we write was John T. Millen, who was born in Logan County, Kentucky, and died at Liberty, Missouri, before the birth of his grandson. He was reared near Elkton, Kentucky, and was the first sheriff of Todd County after it was created from a portion of Logan County, and was re-elected to the same office. He married a Miss Greenfield, and moved to Liberty, Clay County, Missouri, where he was engaged in farming. Four of his children reached maturity, namely: Mrs. Williams; Gideon T., who is an extensive farmer and breeder of blooded cattle at Liberty, Missouri; Alice, who married Samuel W. Millen; Sam is deceased, as is her husband, and William is a farmer of the same name. The Millen's emigrated from Ireland to Virginia where at one time was still a colony of England. The name was originally McMillen.

Thomas A. Williams was born in Green County, Kentucky, in 1839, and died in Christian County, Kentucky, in 1915. Until 1869 he remained in his native county, where he was reared and became a prosperous farmer, but in that year moved to Todd County, and continued his agricultural operations upon an extensive scale. In 1873 he bought a farm in Logan County, and after conducting it for twenty years sold it and bought one in Christian County, where his life terminated. As a democrat, Methodist and Mason he lived up to the highest ideals of Christian manhood, and was zealous in behalf of party, church and fraternity. Thomas A. Williams married Mrs. Elizabeth Millen, who was born in Todd County in 1838, and died in Christian County in 1898. Their children were as follows: Alice, who married Dr. T. P. Allen, a physician and farmer of Pembroke, Christian County; J. Mott, who was second in order of birth; George W., who was a grocer, died in Christian County, unmarried, and was one of the most energetic of thirty years; Benjamin W., who was engaged in farming, and also in Pembroke, Christian County, died there when forty-three years old; Nellie, who married Stonewall Rees, a farmer now deceased, is living at Pembroke, Kentucky, Thomas B., who was a bookkeeper, died at Alberquerque, New Mexico, aged twenty-five years.

J. Mott Williams attended the public schools of Logan County, and then took a year's course at Bethel College at Russellville, which he left in 1885. For the next five years he occupied himself with work on the farm, but feeling that his abilities would be better developed in the business world than as a farmer he became a clerk in a dry-goods store at Allensville, Kentucky, and held that position for three years. Then, in 1893, he with James V. Walker engaged in a general mercantile business at Olmstead, Kentucky, under the firm name of Walker & Williams. After four years Mr. Williams sold his interests to James V. Walker and founded the firm of Williams, Gill & Viers at Allensville, and opened a general dry-goods store. Here he was engaged very successfully until 1900, when he sold his interest to his partners, and then for three years owned a general store at South Union, Kentucky, which was operated under the name of Williams & Harris. Selling once more in 1904, Mr. Williams went to Louisville, and traveled for the Louisville Dry Goods Company, selling dry goods and furnishings and covering Indiana and Kentucky for six years. For the next three years engaged on a wide scale in the Ferguson-McKenney Dry Goods Company, traveling out of Saint Louis, Missouri, in Texas. In 1911 he bought his present clothing and furnishings business at Bowling Green, which is located at 908 State Street, and operated under the name of Williams & Moore. His associate in this business is Frank P. Moore and the two are equal partners. This house has been developed into the leading store of its kind between Louisville and Nashville, and is one of the most desirable sections in the city, and a dwelling at 131 State Street.

In his fraternal affiliations he maintains membership with Bowling Green Lodge, K. of P., of which he is a past chancellor. He belongs to the Bowling Green Rotary Club, to the Bowling Green Chamber of Commerce, and it one time was president of the latter. During the late war he was one of the very efficient local workers, and served as chairman of the Warren County War Savings Stamp Committee. His certificate of appointment is signed by J. D. Linn, federal director, and James B. Brown, state director. However, he did not confine his efforts to this one feature of the war work, but took part in all of it, and has been a director of the United States branch of the organizations. He a certificate of merit from the United States Government for his services.

In 1901 Mr. Williams married near Rich Pond, Warren County, Miss Lena Harris, a daughter of S. O. and Ellen (Ennis) Harris, both now deceased. Mr. Harrison was at one time one of the prosperous farmers of Warren County. Mrs. Williams graduated from the Nashville, Kentucky, College. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have one daughter, Ellen, who was born January 10, 1902. She graduated from the Lincoln School of Providence, Rhode Island, in 1920, and is now taking voice culture at Boston, Massachusetts. She is a talented young lady, and possesses what is very rare, a real contralto voice.

Mr. Williams is undoubtedly a very successful man, and his prosperity has come to him gradually as the local outcome of carefully laid plans of business development. Gradually he progressed, learning thoroughly each line before he invested his money in it, and then, through the impulse of his vigor and acumen, placing its affairs in such a condition that he was able to realize a handsome profit when he sold. His connection with a concern today is proof that it rests on a sound foundation, and second that its stock will increase in value. Such men as Mr. Williams are the best kind of assets a community can possess, for apathy is dispelled, the people are awakened to the possibilities of the section, natural resources are developed, outside capital is brought in, and all values are enhanced, once they take control.

George H. Moseley. This is the age of progress; old methods are vanishing before the advance of modern ones, and in nothing is this more clearly shown than with reference to the operation of the households of the country. In former years all of household operations were done at home, no matter how few the number of hands to perform the tasks, the only way of lightening the labor was to call into the home outside assistance. Not such methods are not in vogue. Instead of a home-maker wasting her strength and time over the wash tub, she sends her soiled clothing to a dependable laundry and gives it no further thought until it is returned to her ready to be worn. So popular have these laundries become that the business of conducting them is now numbered among the important industries of every community, and it is a small place indeed that does not have at least one of these establishments. Of course in a city of any size there are many laundries, but one which has attained a well-earned reputation for reliability and excellence of service is the Troy Steam Laundry, of which George H. Moseley is proprietor.

George H. Moseley was born in Sumner County, at Gallatin, Tennessee, November 8, 1881, a son of Charles H. Moseley, and grandson of Samuel Moseley, who was born in Jessamine County, Kentucky, in 1812, and died at Gallatin, Tennessee, in 1896, although he spent the greater portion of his life in Jessamine County, Kentucky, where he was engaged in farming, but when he retired he located at Gallatin. He married Mary Singleton, who was born in Sumner County, Tennessee, and died at Gallatin.

Charles H. Moseley was born in Jessamine County, Kentucky, in 1848, and died at Bowling Green in May, 1920. He was reared in his native county, removing to Sumner County, Tennessee, in young manhood, and there he carried on farming and operated a hotel and traded in livestock, being one of the wealthy and influential men of that region for many years. In 1886 he moved to Bowling Green, where he embarked in a real-estate business. In 1905 he went to Birmingham, Alabama, and carried on a real-estate business in that city until 1910, when he returned to Bowling Green, where a little later death claimed him. He was a democrat. The Christian Church held his membership. He married Susan Ann Phillips, who was born in Sumner County, Tennessee, in 1855, and she survives him and lives at Bowling Green. Their children were as follows: William, who died at Gallatin, in infancy; Charles Henry, who died at Bowling Green at the age of thirty years, was a railroad employee; Samuel E., who was a partner of his brother George in the Troy Steam Laundry, died at Bowling Green in 1914, being at that time thirty-six years of age; Anna May, who married Harry Eastman, a wholesale merchant in Nashville, Tennessee; George H., who was the fifth in order of birth; Albert, and Garr, who are both residents of Dallas, Texas, and are there engaged in handling huggies at wholesale and retail; Robert, who died at Bowling Green at the age of fourteen years; and Elizabeth Louise, who married Dr. Wallace Barr, a dental surgeon of Bowling Green.

George H. Moseley attended the public schools of Bowling Green and Ogden College, and was graduated from the University of Kentucky. Having acquired his literary training, he proceeded to secure his business training in the laundry owned by his brother Samuel and operated under the firm name of Breeding & Moseley, of Bowling Green, and in time became his brother's partner, having bought the interest of Mr. Breeding. This association of the two brothers continued from 1903 until 1914, when the elder brother died, and the mother succeeded to his interest, she still being her son's partner. The Troy Steam Laundry also owned and operated an establishment at Paris, Tennessee, until 1916, when it was sold. This laundry at Bowling Green is now the leading one of the State, located between Louisville and Nashville, and is sent to it from all over Warren and neighboring counties for a radius of 100 miles. The laundry plant and offices are at 420 Main Street, and Mr. Moseley and his mother own the building they occupy. This laundry is fully supplied with all modern facilities and equipment, and in connection with the laundry work a dry cleaning plant is also operated. The business is operated under the firm name of Troy Steam Laundry & Dry Cleaning Company. Mr. Moseley is connected with other interests and is now secretary of the Farmers Loose Leaf Tobacco Warehouse Company. He is a democrat, and is a member of the City Council. He belongs to Bowling Green Lodge No. 51, I. O. O. F.; Bowling Green Lodge No. 320, B. P. O. E.; and was a representative to the Grand Lodge, Dallas, Texas, in 1908. He owns his modern residence at 534 Main Street, which is one of the finest and most desirable ones in the city; the Saint James apartment building, the leading apartment house in Bowling Green, located on Chestnut Street; and he did own the Neal Business Block, but sold it in 1920. During the late war he was one of the zealous participants in all of the local activities, helping in all of the drives and serving as chairman of the sales committees in all of the Liberty Loan campaigns. He bought bonds and Saving Stamps and contributed to all of the organizations to the utmost.

On November 1, 1911, Mr. Moseley married at Bowling Green Miss Martine Aull, a daughter of Dr. T. H. and May (Moseley) Aull, both of whom are now deceased. Doctor Aull at one time was a prosperous druggist of Bowling Green. Mrs. Moseley was graduated from the Oxford, Ohio, College. Mr. and Mrs. Moseley have one daughter, Virginia Bohon, who was born July 31, 1920.

Charles Ezra Marvin. For a quarter of a century Charles Ezra Marvin has been one of Kentucky's noted cattle breeders, and has probably done as much to build up the great strain of Aberdeen-Angus in this state as any other one man. His home and industry center in Audubon Stock Farm, located in Scott County, eleven miles northwest of Lexington, on the Bethel and Midway Pike, not far from Payne's Depot. Mr. Marvin's land includes the place owned by his grandfather. He settled down to the interesting work of farming and stock raising after an active career as a railroad builder and railway executive, and his abilities as an engineer were such that would have carried him to a high place among eminent Americans in that profession, in that he continued the work chosen and followed during his early manhood.

Mr. Marvin represents the eleventh consecutive generation of his family in America. During the past three centuries many prominent Americans have carried the Marvin blood, including Samuel Huntington, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. The family was established by Mathew Marvin, who came from Essex County, England, in 1635 and located in Boston. His older brother, Reinold Marvin, settled at Hartford, Connecticut, in 1638. During Revolutionary times there was a Matthew Marvin who was ensign of the train band at Lyne, Connecticut, and captain.

A son of this Revolutionary officer was Joseph Marvin, who was born in 1772 and died in 1873, in his one hundred and first year. He died in Trumbull County, Ohio, whither in 1821, with wife and nine children, he journeyed from Connecticut to join the pioneers of the Ohio Western Reserve. He traveled with wagons and six oxen and a one-horse carriage, and the party were six weeks in making the journey. He settled in the woods in Eastern Ohio.

His son Ezra Marvin was born in 1798, and died at...
Bazetta in Trumbull County in 1863. He was a major of militia and in politics a red hot democrat. He and his family were people of great prominence and influence in that section of Ohio and were represented in the ministry, in education and in politics.

It was largely on account of the bitterness in politics in Ohio that caused him to send his son, Joel Hall Marvin, south for his education. Joel Hall Marvin was born in 1823, and in 1854 graduated from Center College at Danville, Kentucky, where that school was under the administration of Doctor Young. He remained here in his native county and graduated from Lafayette College, and opened what became a noted school at old Bethel Church. Some of his pupils were Gen. John B. Castleman, Gen. Basil Duke, Clifton Breckinridge, Riddle Breckinridge, Theophilus J. Breckinridge, Joseph C. Breckinridge, Madison C. Johnston, E. P. Halley and others of local or national prominence. He gave the school such high standards and such a wide reputation that it became known as Bethel College, and he continued the work until his marriage.

Another of his pupils was Sarah Lewis, whom he married in 1860. She was a daughter of Charles B. and Pauline (Routt) Lewis. Her father came from Rockingham County, Virginia, and in 1829 bought the land now included in the Audubon Stock Farm of Charles E. Marvin. Charles Lewis was one of the earliest settlers in this part of Kentucky. He built a log cabin and erected the first Phoenix Hotel in Lexington. He also had an interesting part in pioneer railroad construction and operation in Kentucky. He was made general manager of the railroad from Frankfort to Lexington when that was a road of stone rails with cars drawn by horses. Under his administration the bed was laid with wooden rails and the first steam locomotive was brought from Pittsburg, being floated down the river on a flatboat to Maysville and thence drawn by oxen to Frankfort and on to Lexington. At the trial run of this engine about 500 horsemen followed the train, and kept pace for a mile or two, when the engineer asked permission to open the throttle and the horses were soon left far behind. Mr. Lewis designed the bevel tread wheels so that the two opposite wheels could be made solid on the axle, overcoming the difficulty of turning curves. He remained as general manager of the railroad until iron rails were brought into use. Though thus active in transportation affairs, Mr. Lewis made his home on the farm in Scott County from 1829 until his death in 1880, at the age of eighty. In 1840 he built the main part of the residence still standing, and an addition to the middle part, which is of stone construction and dates from a previous time. In this old home Sarah Lewis was born in 1820. Joel H. Marvin after his marriage located on a farm near Midway in Woodford County, five miles from the Lewis homestead, but in 1875 bought the Lewis property, Mr. Lewis living with his daughter until his death. The Lewis farm contained about 400 acres, all of it now incorporated in the Audubon Stock Farm.

Joel Marvin was born in 1806, was a justly distinguished man and left a record of service affecting the lives of many individuals. He was principal of a school at Lexington at one time. On his farm near Midway he built a school, where he prepared many boys for college. All his old pupils have cherished his memory. He was a democrat, but never an office seeker, and was a consistent Christian and member of the Presbyterian Church. While he could deliver an effective sermon, he was somewhat timid and not fond of public life.

Charles Ezra Marvin was the only one of his parents' children to reach mature years. He was born August 23, 1861. After his junior year in Georgetown College he entered Washington and Lee University in Virginia and received his B. A. and C. E. degrees in 1882. His teacher in mathematics and civil engineering was Gen. Custis Lee, a son of the great Confederate hero. Following his graduation he entered the Government service and was employed with a staff of government engineers in making a survey of the Missouri River from Sioux City to Kansas City, preparatory to improvements. For another three years he was associated with the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company in building the railroad bridge over the Ohio at Henderson. His associates there included Mr. Courtney, the present chief engineer of the Louisville and Nashville road, also. Mr. Marvin was afterwards assistant engineer of the Ferris Wheel at the Chicago World's Fair.

In 1894 Mr. Marvin began winding up his outside business affairs preparatory to taking full charge of the farm in Kentucky. He embraced the theory and practice of thirty breeding cattle of this strain. He indulged this ambition to found a model stock farm on an extensive scale. In 1896 he went abroad and personally selected in England and Scotland a herd of about twenty Aberdeen-Angus cows, which became the nucleus of the pure bred Aberdeen-Angus that have been a feature of the Audubon Stock Farm for a quarter of a century. He still keeps a herd of about thirty breeding cattle of this strain. Audubon Stock Farm has sent many winners to fairs and exhibitions. The great Aberdeen-Angus "Kloman" was bred at Audubon, and his descendants have been grand champions, he losing won that honor at the International Stock Show in 1913. One of Kloman's get was Plowman, which sold in 1920 for $40,000. Another great animal used on Mr. Marvin's farm was Zaire XV, one of the greatest bulls of the world, and the sire of many grand champions. He also has a fine grand champion cow at almost every show in Canada. The sales from Audubon are largely to breeders and consist chiefly of young stock, always in great demand because of the steadily maintained reputation of Mr. Marvin's stock. For twenty years or more he has been a judge of cattle at various State Fairs and also at the International in Chicago, and has contributed many articles to stock journals. By various purchases Mr. Marvin has acquired all his grandfather's old estate of about 400 acres, and has refused more than $400 an acre offered for his farm. Of his land about sixty acres are kept in tobacco.

In 1867 Mr. Marvin married Julia Halley, daughter of E. P. and Theresa (Combs) Halley, a family of well-known farming people in Scott County, though her parents now live in Lexington. Mrs. Marvin grew up on a farm near the same neighborhood. Mr. Marvin was twenty-one at the time of his marriage. They have three daughters, Louise, Mary Lewis and Julia, the first a student in Hamilton College at Lexington and the second in the higher school at Midway. Mr. Marvin, like his father, has had no ambition for politics. He enjoys hunting and fishing, and has made many interesting excursions through the West and also the South. Both he and Mrs. Marvin have been students of the antique, and their house is filled with priceless mahogany pieces, many of them heirlooms. Mr. Marvin some years ago attended the sale at Washington of the effects of Jerome Bonaparte, and at that sale secured a chair formerly used in the United States Senate.
Hubert D. Graham, manager of the Warren County Strawberry Growers Association, is one of the sage and experienced men of Warren County, who is capably attending to the affairs of his organization and is foremost in the efforts of others, in the interest of the growers, to market their product, and at the same time to protect the fruit pickers. This organization is fast assuming very important proportions, and is one of the vital business assets of Bowling Green. Mr. Graham was born in Bowling Green, September 21, 1861, a son of Lawrence A. Graham, and grandson of Asher W. Graham.

The Graham family came to Virginia from Scotland during the Colonial epoch of this country, but on his mother's side Mr. Graham is of Irish origin. The family was established in Kentucky by his great-grandfather, who left Virginia and became one of the pioneers of Warren County. His son, Asher W. Graham, was born at Bowling Green in 1784, and died in that city in 1864. He was a distinguished attorney and jurist, and was very well-known in Masonry. His period of active practice at the bar extended over thirty years, and during the war between the two sections he was judge of the county of Warren, and was also judge of the Circuit Court for many years.

Lawrence A. Graham was born in Bowling Green in 1827, and died at Austin, Texas, in 1918. Rearied, educated and married in Bowling Green, he found this city a desirable field of operation as a dry-goods merchant, and built up a connection and establishment that was second to none in Warren County, and was the leading one between Louisville, Kentucky, and Nashville, Tennessee. This he successfully conducted, and was recognized as one of the most enterprising business men in this region. In 1887 he moved to Austin, Texas, where for a short time he was in a dry-goods business, but in 1893 he retired permanently from all activities. A strong democrat, he was zealous in behalf of his party, and served in the City Council of Bowling Green for many terms, and as city clerk. He was a ruling elder in the First Presbyterian Church of Bowling Green. In Masonry he reached the Commandery and was a Knight Templar. Lawrence A. Graham married Margaret Dunavan, who was born in Bowling Green, Kentucky, in 1839, and died in this city in 1883. Their children were as follows: Lucien, who is secretary and treasurer of the Bowling Green Ice & Cold Storage Company; Hubert D., who was second in order of birth; Chesse, who married E. C. Rawlins, a telegraph operator of Brooklyn, New York; Lena, who married P. Crow, of Texas; Asher W., who is the traveling representative of a wholesale drug and supply house, with which he has been connected for twenty years, and is a resident of Saint Louis, Missouri.

Hubert D. Graham first attended the public schools of his native city, and then took a course in the old and celebrated Warren College, which he left at the age of nineteen years, for he felt he preferred a commercial to a professional life. His first practical experience of the fundamentals of business were acquired in the dry-goods business of his father, in Lebanon, Kentucky. Lestambition to branch out for himself and for nine years was profitably engaged in handling furnishing goods and shoes. His next business venture was that of handling merchandise as a broker, and he was so very successful in this line that he remained in it until 1909, when he was offered and accepted his present very responsible position.

This section of Kentucky is the natural home of the strawberry, and during the pioneer days the woods and pastures were full of this delicious fruit. For a number of years no attempt was made to improve upon the wild growths, but gradually the more advanced of the agriculturists realized that the cultivated varieties could be introduced and raised to advantage. When they succeeded others followed their example, and finally it was discovered that the farmers were raising many more berries than they could market locally. Once more the progressives saved the day, for they evolved the idea that if arrangements could be perfected to provide a means of shipping the produce to outdoor markets the acreage devoted to strawberry culture could be increased and the fruitgrowers could raise in carload lots. In 1908 thirty acres were planted and five carloads were shipped by the association as a test. The results were so gratifying that the business has been expanded to as many as 621 carloads annually. It is planned to have 2,300 acres planted for 1921.

The organization, which operates under the caption of the Warren County Strawberry Growers Association, is composed of 700 growers, many additional members having been drawn into the organization through Mr. Graham's careful and well-planned management. The market for these crops includes all eastern points, such as Detroit, Chicago, Columbus, Cleveland, Buffalo, New York, Boston and other important centers east of the Mississippi River. During the short season the association loads from eighty to eighty-five cars daily.

In 1919 these crops from 10,000 to 12,000 people are required, and Warren County furnishes one-half of the remainder coming from the adjacent counties. The farmers obligate themselves to take care of the pickers, and so pleasant is the work that teachers, with their pupils, make the harvesting a regular picnicking period. The offices of the company are at 436½ Main Street, and the shipping office is at 923 Adams Street.

Mr. Graham is a democrat, and served as a member of the City Council of Bowling Green, and for the past four years has been treasurer of the city school board. Brought up in the First Presbyterian church, he early united with it, and is now one of its deacons. He is a charter member of Post I, Kentucky T. P. A., and belongs to the Bowling Green Chamber of Commerce. He owns a modern residence at 1262 West Chestnut Street, which is one of the very best in the city; and a river farm of 130 acres and a fruit farm of ninety acres two miles northwest of Bowling Green.

During the late war Mr. Graham gave ample and convincing proof, although none was needed, of his intense loyalty by his activities in selling bonds, stamps and raising funds for the different organizations, and was one of his own best customers, his personal holdings representing an investment which is really beyond his means. He also served as chairman of the fuel commission of Warren County.

In 1884 Mr. Graham married at Campbellsville, Taylor County, Kentucky, Miss Trannie Buchanan, a daughter of John T. and Ellen (Smoot) Buchanan, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Buchanan was one of the leading farmers of Taylor County, Kentucky, for many years. Mrs. Graham was graduated from the Shelbiville Female College. Mr. and Mrs. Graham became the parents of the following children: Lawrence B., who was born October 20, 1884, was graduated from Ogden College, Bowling Green, and also attended the Kentucky State University. He is now engaged in real estate, which he is now operating; and Caldwell S., who was born November 8, 1894, attended Ogden College, and is now a student.

Lewis Granger Singleton, D. D. S. Not only is Dr. Lewis Granger Singleton one of the most dependable dental surgeons of Bowling Green, but he is also Vice President of the corporation operating a chain of five and ten cent stores all over Kentucky and Tennessee, and is regarded as one of the leading professional and business men of the city. He was born in Lincoln County, Kentucky, February 1, 1881, a son of Nathan Singleton, and grandson of Kit Singleton, who died near Eubank in Lincoln County, across the line from Pulaski County, many years before the birth of his grandson. He was one of the pioneers of Lincoln County and a man widely and favorably known.

Nathan Singleton was born near Waynesburg, Kentucky, in 1835, and he died there September 1, 1907, his entire life having been spent in Lincoln County. Both as a minister of the Baptist denomination and a farmer he was a useful man, and his fellow citizens held him in the highest esteem. Politically he was a democrat. He married Julia Ellen Gooch, who was born near Waynesburg in 1842, and died at Waynesburg February 6, 1890. Their children were as follows: McHenry, who died on the homestead at the age of twenty-one years; Martha, who married James Gooch, a farmer of Eubank, Kentucky; Garland, who is county superintendent in Lincoln County; Charles, who resides at Louisa, Kentucky; E. O., who is a railroad freight agent, lives at Rocky Ford, Colorado; Melissa, who died at Stanford, Kentucky, aged thirty-three years; Lucy, who married W. P. Reynolds, a farmer of Eubank; A. C., who is a master electrician in the United States Army, is stationed at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, and served overseas for six months during the late war; T. H., who was graduated from the Hospital College of Medicine, Louisville, Kentucky, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, is engaged in a general practice as a physician and surgeon at Bowling Green; and Lewis Granger, who was the youngest of the family. After the death of his first wife Nathan Singleton married Mary Eoff, who was born near Eubank, Kentucky, and is now living at New Philadelphia, Ohio. There were two children by the second marriage, Alice and Clay, both of whom are living with their mother.

Doctor Singleton attended the local rural schools, and was engaged in teaching in them for five years. He then entered the Louisville College of Dentistry, from which he was graduated in 1864 with the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery. Immediately thereafter he established himself in practice at Bowling Green, since which time he has built up a large and very valuable connection. His offices are located on Park Row. The H. A. McElroy Company, a $500,000 corporation operating the chain of stores above referred to, is one of the important concerns of Warren County, and Doctor Singleton's connection with it as vice president gives it added strength. He owns a comfortable modern bungalow at 115 Laurel Avenue, and a 140 acre farm seven miles south of Bowling Green.

In politics Doctor Singleton is a democrat, but aside from voting his party ticket does not participate in public life. The Baptist Church has in him one of its most zealous members, and he is now assistant financial secretary of the congregation, and one of its most active supporters, this church being one of the leading ones of the denomination in Kentucky. Fraternally he belongs to Bowling Green Lodge, K. of P., and Bowling Green Lodge No. 51, I. O. O. F., of which he is past grand.

On September 15, 1908, Doctor Singleton married at Bowling Green Miss Tempie D. Potter, a daughter of Virgil and Mary (Duncan) Potter, the former of whom, now deceased, was county judge of Warren County at the time of his death, and for many years had been one of the leading democrats of this part of the state and a very prominent citizen. Mrs. Potter survives her husband and lives with her son-in-law, Doctor Singleton. Doctor and Mrs. Singleton have three children, namely: Edmund, who was born August 4, 1912; Marian, who was born June 7, 1914; and Virginia, who was born October 21, 1915. Experienced and skilled in his profession, Doctor Singleton has an extensive practice, and has won approval in this line, but he is esteemed in many other ways, for he is prominent in many lines and never fails to live up to the highest standards of citizenship.

LON D. HANES of Bowling Green, is the leading operator in general insurance and real estate between Louis-ville, Kentucky, and Nashville, Tennessee, and has been profitably engaged as such since 1900, during this period being connected with some of the most important realty transfers in the city and county, and selling a vast amount of insurance of all kinds. He has also played an important part in civic affairs and is today admittedly one of the highest in office in those fields.

Mr. Hanes was born four miles north of Franklin, Simpson County, Kentucky, March 16, 1860, a son of Abram C. Hanes, and grandson of Peter Hanes, who was born in Virginia in 1777, and died in Simpson County, Kentucky, in 1882. He served his country in the War of 1812, enlisting from Virginia or Tennessee. Following the close of that conflict he migrated into Simpson County, Kentucky, and was engaged in farming for many years. His wife was Margaret A. Ford, who was born in Virginia and died in Simpson County. The Hanes family is an old one in Virginia, where the American founder settled when coming to this country from Scotland prior to the Revolutionary war.

Abram C. Hanes was born in Summer County, Tennessee, in 1826, and died at Bowling Green in 1914. He was reared in Summer County, Tennessee, and came to Simpson County, Kentucky, when a youth of fourteen years; there he married. From then on until 1904 he was successfully engaged in farming in that county, but then came to Bowling Green and made his home with his son until his death. From the organization of the republican party until the close of his long and useful life he voted his ticket, and he was equally zealous in his support of the Christian Church, of which he was long a consistent member. Like his father he was a soldier when his country called, and enlisted and served in the Mexican war. He married first Christiana Breedlove, a native of Simpson County, Kentucky, and who died in that county. They had two children, one of whom was Sarah Nancy, called Sallie, who married Charles Mayes, a carriagemaker of Franklin, Kentucky, is deceased, as is her husband. Abram C. Hanes married for his second wife Mrs. Angie E. (Breedlove) Mallory, a sister of his first wife. She was born near Richmond, Virginia, in 1820, and died at Auburn, Logan County, Kentucky, in 1886. The children of the second marriage were as follows: Christiana, who married G. C. Hunt, an extensive farmer near South Union, Simpson County, Kentucky, is now deceased, as is her husband; Lon D., who died second in order of birth; and Abie L., who died in Colorado, near Denver, Colorado.

Lon D. Hanes was educated in the rural schools of Simpson County, and was graduated from the Auburn High School in 1882. He then entered the Spencier Business College of Cleveland, Ohio, and was graduated therefrom in November, 1883. In 1884 Mr. Hanes became a clerk of Ford Brothers, general merchants of Franklin, Kentucky, and remained with them for one year, following which he held a similar position in a store of South Union for two years. In 1886 he went to Garden City, Kansas, and for two years conducted a real-estate and abstract business, but, selling it, returned to Kentucky and entered the service of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company at Russellville. Later he was transferred to Memphis, Tennessee, and after a short time there was sent by the company to Owensboro, Kentucky, and made superintendent of its yards. In 1889 he went into the contracting business, and carried it on for ten years. During that period he became interested in real estate, and in 1900 opened his present offices, and has built up a business which is the largest of its kind in a wide region. He is conveniently located at 931 State Street. He owns a modern residence at 1441 College Street, where he maintains an elegant home. He is a democrat. Mr. Hanes was a member of the City Council for eight years, and also a member of the Board of Education for twelve years was elected its president, which office he is now holding, having occupied it for four years, and was re-elected in 1921.
for another four year term. The Christian Church has its membership, and he is a deacon of the local congregation.

During the late war Mr. Hanes did valiant service in behalf of the cause by buying Saving Stamps and bonds and by contributing to all of the organizations to the utmost extent of his ability. He assisted in all of the drives, and was chairman of the Publicity Bureau of Warren County, and devoted much of his time to helping along all measures promulgated by the administration.

In 1886 Mr. Hanes married at Hopkinsville Miss Lula L. Proctor, a daughter of William and Ellen (Viers) Proctor, who were both now deceased. During his lifetime Mr. Proctor was a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Hanes became the parents of the following children: Lula, who married T. W. Kendrick, proprietor of a men's furnishing and dry cleaning and pressing establishment at Bowling Green; and John L., married Miss Minnie Clark, of Oakton, Kentucky, is teller of the Citizens National Bank of Bowling Green. Mr. Hanes' nephew, Doris A. Hanes, a son of his brother Abe, was partially reared by him. The young man is a resident of San Antonio, Texas, and is in the re-organization department of the United States Army. He enlisted in 1914, and was sent to the Mexican border as a private. From time to time he was promoted through all of the grades to the rank of lieutenant colonel in the contracting department, and served through the great war. While stationed in Texas, he still maintains his residence with his uncle.

In every relation of life Mr. Hanes measures up to the highest standards of American manhood. He has been eminently successful in business, has been accorded civic and religious honors, and has won the regard of a wide circle of business acquaintances and personal friends. In his home circle he is beloved and revered, and his children show the effect of his watchful and devoted care. In his work as a realty operator he has been the instrument by means of which the city has expanded, new buildings have been encouraged, and old ones kept in good repair. Through his agency thousands have been rescued to the expediency and necessity of providing against death and accidents of every kind to their persons and property. It was not given to him to serve his country on the battlefield, as did his grandfather and father, but he rendered it equally valuable service at home, and no man has a better record for conscientious, earnest and purposeful endeavor during the late war. Such men are rare, and when found are prized by their fellow citizens because of the power of their example and the value of their work.

J. Whit Potter. The bankers of the country are the men who control its destinies, for upon their sagacity, sane actions and financial aid depend the continuance of all business from the tilling of the soil to the placing of the completed product in the hands of the consumer. Because of the great importance and the vast possibilities of the office none but the best men for it are placed at the head of the banking institutions. Such an election is an honor craved by many, and of necessity bestowed upon but a few, and it is one which speaks for itself. To be the president of a sound bank means that the man so elevated has through long years proven himself to be utterly reliable in every transaction; dependable in times of stress; an excellent judge of human nature; and a citizen of unquestioned loyalty. The stockholders of the American National Bank have the highest character and reputation in the state, and they elected as their chief executive J. Whit Potter of Bowling Green.

J. Whit Potter was born on a farm eight miles south of Bowling Green, in Warren County, November 6, 1851. He is a son of David Potter, and a grandson of Frederick Potter, who was born in North Carolina in 1781, and died seven miles south of Bowling Green in 1887.

He was a farmer and was the pioneer of his family into Warren County. Marrying Elizabeth Kirby, a daughter of General Kirby, a Revolutionary officer, after moving to Warren County, where she was born, he settled down in that region for the remainder of his life. His wife also died in Warren County. The Potter family was established in Virginia by the original immigrant who came to this country from Ireland in Colonial times, and from that colony representatives moved south on into North Carolina.

David Potter was born in Warren County, Kentucky, in December, 1811, and died in Warren County, Kentucky, 3 March, 1902. His birth occurred on a farm adjacent to the one on which his son was born, and he was reared and educated in Warren County. From very young manhood he devoted his energies and abilities to farming, and was so successful that he amassed a fortune of $100,000 through legitimate agricultural activities, and continued them until 1868, when he moved to Bowling Green, and lived retired until claimed by death. He was an old-line democrat, and cast his vote for Charles O'Connor when he was running against Horace Greeley. When still a lad he united with the Baptist Church, and from then on was one of the most steadfast members of the local congregation. David Potter married Deborah Hagerman, who was born in Warren County, in 1814, and died in Bowling Green in 1871.

J. Whit Potter attended the rural schools of Warren County, Bethel College at Russellville, Kentucky, which he left in 1872, and then for the next seven years was deputy sheriff of Warren County. He became interested in handling live stock, real estate and insurance, and carried on a very extensive business in these lines for five years. These operations led to his establishing in 1886 the banking house of Barclay, Potter & Company, which was merged into the American National Bank in 1909, and at the same time the Potter-Matlock Trust Company was established by Mr. Potter. Since 1906 Mr. Potter has served as president of both concerns. The modern brick and stone building occupied by these institutions was erected in 1907, and is located on State Street. It is one of the finest bank buildings in Kentucky.

The capital of the American National Bank is $125,000; its surplus and profits are over $700,000 and its deposits are $2,000,000. The officials of this bank are as follows: J. Whit Potter, president; Julian W. Potter, vice president; M. O. Hughes, vice president; W. L. McNeal, vice president; and G. D. Sledge, cashier. The Potter-Matlock Trust Company has a capital stock of $50,000; surplus and profits of $4,000 and trust deposits of $400,000. Its officials are: J. Whit Potter, president; Joe W. Ford, vice president; Euclid Hardcastle, vice president; and Julian W. Potter, secretary and treasurer.

In his politics Mr. Potter is a democrat, but has never aspired to public office. Like his father, he is a Baptist, and is a member of the board of stewards of the First Baptist Church, South, and is a deacon of the Sunday School. The present church edifice, which stands on State Street, at Chestnut, one of the finest in Kentucky, was erected greatly through his instrumentality, he serving as chairman of the Building Committee, and contributed lavishly toward the building fund. This church, begun in 1913, was completed in 1914. Well-known as an Odd Fellow, Mr. Potter belongs to Bowling Green Lodge No. 1, O. O. F., in which he is a member, and he has been a representative of the state to the Sovereign Grand Lodge of the order for eighteen years consecutively, and was reelected to this office November 17, 1920. While grand master he dedicated the Odd Fellows' home at Lexington, Kentucky, which was largely the outgrowth of his efforts, he having introduced the first resolution providing for the home. After serving as chairman of the Building Committee of the home Mr. Potter consent to be a member of its directorate, and has continued as such since then, a period of twenty-two years. He has been a member of the Bowling Green Bowling Club, and is president of the Bowling Green Order of the Rotary Club of Bowling Green, and is one of the regents of the Western Kentucky State Normal School, and is now the chairman of the board. Mr.
Potter displayed his executive ability with reference to this institution and was an active force in the erection of the administration building, and a $240,000 dormitory building on Normal Heights. His name and influence have been sought by many clubs of Louisville, and he has consented to serve as a director of the Inter-Southern Life Insurance Company, and as a member of the executive committee of this company. He resides in the Saint James Apartments of Bowling Green. Mr.
Potter owns several farms in Warren County, and considerable realty in the city.

When this country was at war he participated actively in all of the drives, and was chairman of the Second Liberty Loan Committee. He bought bonds and stamps lavishly, and contributed in an equally generous manner to all of the organizations. His benefactions, however, did not cease with the close of hostilities, but continue, and among other things he is a director of the Kentucky Children's Home Society at Louisville.

In 1899 Mr. Potter married at Nashville, Tennessee, Miss Elizabeth Ennis, a daughter of Dr. S. M., and Virginia (Johnam) Janison, both of whom are now deceased. Doctor Janison was a physician of Nashville for many years, and very prominent in his profession.

Mrs. Potter was graduated from the Ward Seminary of Nashville. Mr. and Mrs. Potter became the parents of one child, Julian W., who was born April 15, 1880.
He is now connected with the Guaranty Trust Company of New York City, the second largest financial institution in the United States, and is vice president and manager of its subsidiary company, the Italian Discount & Trust Company, a $20,000,000 institution on Walker Street, at Broadway. For seven years he was vice president of the American National Bank of Bowling Green and secretary of the Potter-Matlock Trust Company, and received his banking training under his father's supervision. During the great war he was in the naval aviation branch of the service, and was stationed at Cambridge, Massachusetts, and at Pensacola, Florida, holding the rank of an ensign.

The record of the accomplishments of Mr. Potter is so filled with notable deeds that it is not easy to do justice to them or the man in an article of such limited space. From this record, however, it is plainly evident that he has never shirked a responsibility, or failed to carry through to successful completion any project he undertook. Keenly alive to the possibilities of his home city, he has always striven to develop them, and to give to its people every advantage possible. Not only is he splendidly typical of the very best element among the great bankers of the country, but he is also of the real American and an embodiment of Kentucky chivalry and courtesy.

WILLIAM F. ENNIS, one of the contractors of Bowling Green, was born in Warren County, Kentucky, April 13, 1856, a son of W. T. Ennis, who was also born in Warren County, in 1825, and died in this county in 1862, spending his entire life within its confines. He was a grist-mill operator and owner, his being one of the very first mills for grinding flour and cornmeal in Warren County. By business was conducted under the firm name of Ennis & Dishman, the junior member being Harvey Dishman. In politics W. T. Ennis was a Whig.
He married Mandane Gatewood, who was born in Warren County in 1833, and died in this county in 1903.
Their children were as follows: Josephine, who is not married, is living with her brother; Marshall M., who is a farmer and public administrator, lives in Warren County; William F., who was third in order of birth;
and Belle, who died unmarried in Warren County when she was forty-eight years old.

T. J. Claypool, grandson of Stephen Claypool, was born in Warren County, Kentucky, April 13, 1856, a son of Ennis & Dishman, the junior member being Harvey Dishman. In politics W. T. Ennis was a Whig.
He married Mandane Gatewood, who was born in Warren County in 1833, and died in this county in 1903.
Their children were as follows: Josephine, who is not married, is living with her brother; Marshall M., who is a farmer and public administrator, lives in Warren County; William F., who was third in order of birth;
and Belle, who died unmarried in Warren County when she was forty-eight years old.

T. J. Claypool attended the rural schools of Warren County, and was reared on his father's farm. After leaving the homestead he operated a farm of his own until 1900. The property is a valuable one, located two miles west of Bowling Green, and contains 200 acres of land, which is devoted to general farming and of which he owns an interest. Since 1900 Mr. Ennis has been engaged in contracting and stone masonry. He introduced ground limestone in Warren County, and now operates a plant manufacturing this commodity. The value of this ground limestone has become so generally recognized that none of the farmers of the county feel that they can do without it. So great is the demand that several other persons have opened up plants to grind the stone. Mr. Ennis manufactures 10,000 tons annually. He also carried on a very large contracting business and has executed all of the cut stone work on never building of consequence erected in Bowling Green during the past ten years. For some time he has been a director in the Bowling Green Chamber of Commerce, and of the Bowling Green Y. M. C. A. He belongs to the Westminster Presbyterian Church, of which he has been an elder since 1900. Fraternally he is a member of Bowling Green Lodge No. 51, I. O. O. F. His offices are located on the Bowling Green Square, and he participated in every drive for funds and bond sales. He contributed liberally to all of the war organizations, and bought bonds and War Savings Stamps to the extent of his means.

In 1888 Mr. Ennis married at Nashville, Tennessee, Miss Beulah Holeman, a daughter of W. K. and Nannie (Sweeney) Holeman. Mr. Holeman is deceased, but for many years was engaged in farming. His widow survives and lives at Bowling Green. Mrs. Ennis died at Bowling Green in 1905, leaving four children, as folows: William F., Jr., who was born October 5, 1890, is with his father in business, and served as an enlisted man during the late war, was at the Plattsburg training camp, and the armistice was signed eighteen days before the date upon which he would have otherwise received his commission; Mandane was graduated from the Bowling Green High School, and is now at home; Noel is attending the public schools; and Leslie is also attending the public schools.

ROY CLAYPOOL, cashier of the Liberty National Bank, is one of the astute financiers of Warren County, and a highly-esteemed resident of Bowling Green, who may merits receive full recognition. He was born in Warren County, on a farm ten miles east of Bowling Green, May 15, 1879, a son of T. J. Claypool, grandson of Stephen Claypool, and great-grandson of Stephen Claypool, who was born in North Carolina, where they family had been established in Colonial times, and from there moved to Warren County, Kentucky, at a very early day, becoming one of the farmers of this and heroine. His birthplace is Pendennis Club of Louisville, was in Warren County in 1817, and died at Scottsville, Kentucky, in 1910, having spent the greater part of his life in Warren County. For many years he was engaged in farming and merchandising, and when he retired he settled at Scottsville. He married first Miss Elizabeth Robertson, grandmother of Roy Claypool, who was born and died in Warren County. After her demise Stephen Claypool married Miss Abbie Moore, who was born in Warren County, but died in Arkansas. The Claypools are of Scotch origin.

T. J. Claypool was born on the same farm as his son, in 1845, and he died on this farm in 1913. His life was spent here and he carried on large operations as a farmer and stockholder. The democratic party had his allegiance. For many years he was a strong supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which he had early joined. T. J. Claypool married Elizabeth Carpenter, who was born in Warren County in 1844, and died on the farm in 1913. They had children as follows: Clyde, who married A. L. Madison, a real-estate operator of El Paso, Texas; C. W., who operates the homestead; A. S., who was a merchant, died in Warren County when twenty-five years old; Ethel, who is deceased, was the wife of H. A. McElroy, of Bowling Green, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work; Roy, who was fifth in order of birth; and Albert, who is chief dispatcher of the Illinois Central Railroad at Memphis, Tennessee.

Roy Claypool attended the rural schools of his native county and the Southern Normal School at Bowling Green, and was graduated from the latter in 1899. For the subsequent four years he was engaged in teaching school in Warren County, and then he went into the mercantile business at Motley, where he remained for six years, moving from there to Claypool, which he continued his home until 1914, at which time he established himself as a hardware merchant at Bowling Green, under the firm name of Claypool & Hendrick Hardware Company. Until 1919 Mr. Claypool continued this association, and then in September of that year assisted in organizing the Liberty National Bank of Bowling Green, of which he has since been cashier. The bank is at 915 College Street. The officials of the bank are as follows: Henry H. Deniard, president; Fred Pushin, vice president; Fred Keene, junior, vice president; Dr. G. W. Townsend, vice president; B. S. Huntsman, vice president; and Roy Claypool, cashier. This bank has a capital of $125,000; surplus and profits of $21,000 and deposits of $800,000. While it is one of the newly organized banks, the men connected with it are of such a character and financial standing that its success was assured from the beginning.

In politics Mr. Claypool is a democrat. He has always been active in the Baptist Church, of which he is a member and head usher. He is secretary and treasurer of the H. A. McElroy Company, a $500,000 corporation operating a chain of five and ten cent stores throughout Kentucky and Tennessee; and he is president of the Planters Loose Leaf Tobacco Warehouse Company, a $30,000 corporation. Mr. Claypool owns a modern residence at 936 Elm Street, where he maintains a comfortable home. During the late war he was an active participant in all of the local activities and assisted in all of the drives. He bought bonds and War Savings Stamps in the sums of his means, and was a liberal contributor to all of the organizations.

In 1904 Mr. Claypool married at Elizabethtown, Kentucky, Lena Motley, a daughter of Robert and May (Claypool) Motley, farming people of Claypool, Kentucky. Mrs. Claypool died in 1913, leaving a daughter, May Elizabeth, who was born January 13, 1900. In 1917 Mr. Claypool married at Bowling Green Miss Sarah Mitchell, a daughter of W. H. and Ida (Claypool) Mitchell, of whom the latter is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Claypool. He is engaged in handling fruits, vegetables, lime and cement as a wholesale dealer. Mrs. Claypool was graduated from the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, and is a skilled instrumental musician. By his second marriage Mr. Claypool has a daughter, Ida Mitchell, who was born February 12, 1920.

J. W. JAMES. The twenty years since he attained his majority J. W. James has employed to such good purpose and so progressively that he is one of the leading business men of Southern Kentucky, and has established and built up at Franklin a wholesale grocery house that is now one of the chief assets of that city as a commercial center. Mr. James was born in Simpson County, Kentucky, May 15, 1880. His paternal ancestors were English and early settlers in Virginia, where his grandfather, John James, was born. The latter in early life moved to Tennessee, followed farming in that state, and died at Hartsville. He married a Miss Ball. John R. James, father of the Franklin merchant, was born in Trousdale County, Tennessee, in 1845, but after the war lived in Simpson County, Kentucky. He was a youth when he enlisted in a Tennessee regiment of the Confederate Army, was in the battle of Shiloh in 1862, and at Chickamauga, and was ordered from the front with his battery until the close of hostilities. For many years he conducted a general merchandise store eight miles east of Franklin, and died in Simpson County in 1901. He was a democrat, a very active and devout Presbyterian, and a member of the Masonic fraternity. John R. James married Mary E. Cluck, who was born in Simpson County in 1853 and now lives at Franklin. She was the mother of nine children, several of whom have become merchants. Nora died in Allen County, Kentucky, at the age of twenty-five, wife of Tom Eubanks, a saw mill operator at Lafayette, Tennessee; Birdie is the wife of B. Dobbs, a merchant in Simpson County; J. W. James is the third of the family; Herbert is a merchant in Simpson County; Nellie is the wife of Carter Jones, a merchant in Allen County; Mary is the wife of George Dobbs, a farmer in Simpson County; Jesse is in the lumber business in Simpson County; Paul conducts a store in Sumner County, Tennessee; while Betty, the youngest, is the wife of Will Stinson, a farmer in Simpson County.

J. W. James attended the rural schools of Simpson County, was twenty-one years of age when his father died, and after that operated the farm for three years. Leaving the farm he entered general merchandising in the rural districts of Simpson County, and continued as a retailer until 1918, when he established his wholesale grocery house in Franklin. He has warehouse and offices on South Main Street, and has perfected a service that now supplies a large part of the retail trade over a wide section of country around Franklin. He is directly and financially interested in seven retail grocery houses in Simpson and Allen counties, Kentucky, and in Sumner County, Tennessee.

Mr. James owns one of the best homes in Franklin, on East Cedar Street. Besides his personal contributions in a financial way he has devoted a great deal of time from his business to perform his duties as a member of the Local Draft Board. He is a democrat in politics, a member and elder of the Presbyterian Church, and is affiliated with Newreo Lodge No. 592, A. F. and A. M., in Allen County, and Graham Chapter No. 80, R. A. M., at Franklin.

Mr. James married at Jeffersonville, Indiana, in 1919 Miss Ida Belle Hammond, daughter of V. D. and Lizzie (Johns) Hammond. Her parents live in Simpson County and her father is one of the prominent citizens here, a farmer, teacher, and former representative in the Legislature. Mrs. James is a graduate of the Franklin Female College and also attended the Western State Normal School at Bowling Green. For several years she was a teacher, part of the time in Simpson County and also at Anchorage in Jefferson County. Mr. and Mrs. James have one child, Johnnie, born May 2, 1920.

WILLIAM Z. JACKSON, M. D. No other profession requires such careful preparation or makes such exacting demands upon its members as does that of medicine, but the remunerations are many, although the remuneration is generally sadly inadequate. The conscientious physician and surgeon cannot help but realize that upon his skill and service depend the health and lives of his community and be inspired to further effort by his results. He gains friendships which endure for life, and oftentimes public honors are bestowed upon him, for his fellow citizens realize that he may be the most intelligent and open-minded among them. One of the best representatives of this learned and responsible profession in Carlisle County is Dr. W. Z. Jackson of Arlington, Kentucky.

Doctor Jackson was born in Bedford County, Tennessee, April 7, 1871, a son of Will Jackson and grandson of Willis Jackson, who was born in Tennessee in 1810 and died in Bedford County about 1871, having gone into that county at a very early day and become one of the extensive landowners and farmers. A mechanic by trade, he also developed large interests as a furniture manufacturer and became a person of wealth and position. He married Nancy Rutledge, a native of Tennessee. The Jacksons came to the American Colonies from England and located in North Carolina.

Will Jackson was born in Bedford County, Tennessee, in 1821, and died in that county in 1883, having spent his life there and become a prosperous man and successful farmer. During the war between the states he served in the Confederate-Army until the battle of Shiloh, in which engagement he had the misfortune to be shot in both legs below the knees. While lying on the battlefield he was captured and taken to Saint Louis, Missouri, and subsequently was exchanged. Mr. Jackson never recovered from his injuries, but suffered from them to the end of his life. From the time he cast his first vote he gave the candidates of the democratic party his hearty support. During his youth he united with the Primitive Baptist Church, and from then on during the remainder of his life he gave his church a very active and earnest support. He married Lizzie Taylor, born in Bedford County, Tennessee, in 1840.
She died in that county in 1918, having survived her husband eleven years. The family followed as follows:
John, who lives on the old farm in Bedford County;
Doctor Jackson, who was second in order of birth;
James Edgar, who lives on his grandfather's old farm in Bedford County; Nannie, who married Alonso Brooks, a railroad employee, resides at Nashville, Tennessee; Thomas Boyle, who is a farmer, resides two miles southeast of Arlington; and Bertha, who married
N. Lamph, a farmer of Bedford Counrie as follows:
Doctor Jackson attended the rural schools of his native county and through the junior year of the Longview High School at Longview, Tennessee, following which he worked on a farm in Illinois for eighteen months. He then entered the medical department of the University of Tennessee, at Nashville, from which he was graduated in 1898, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Since then, he has continued his medical study, and in June, 1900, took a third of three weeks at the Postgraduate Medical School of Chicago. In 1898 Doctor Jackson began the practice of his profession at Berkeley, Kentucky, and remaining there for seven and one-half years. He then came to Arlington, where he has since built up a remunerative general medical and surgical practice and is rightly numbered among the leading men of his profession in Carlisle County, and he is local surgeon for the Illinois Central Railroad Company. His offices are on Main Street, and he owns the building in which they are located, and also his modern residence, which is one of the best in the city.
Doctor Jackson owns a half interest in a farm of 120 acres which is located at South, Illinois. He was married in 1899 to Bella Smith Will, a daughter of John Smith, of Carlisle County.

Inheriting his political opinions from his father, Doctor
Jackson is a democrat. He belongs to the Baptist Church. A Mason, he is affiliated with Arlington Lodge No. 582, A. F. and A. M., and he is also a member of Arlington Lodge No. 399, I. O. O. F., of which he is a past grand. Professionally he belongs to the Carlisle County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, the Kentucky State Board of Health, the Southern Medical Society, the American Medical Association and the Illinois and Y. M. V. A. Medical Society.

In 1899 Doctor Jackson married in Bedford County, Tennessee, Miss Annie Williams, a daughter of Matt and Sarah (Tune) Williams, both of whom are deceased. During his life time Mr. Williams was a farmer.
Doctor and Mrs. Jackson have no children.

Allen Prichard Banfield, M. D. A prominent
and well known over a much wider field, is Dr. Allen Prichard Banfield, of Catlettsburg, specialist in diseases of the eye. He was born in 1871, and was possibly born under favorable conditions. He was named after his paternal grandfather was a longa substantial resident of Garner, Kentucky, but farther back the family records have been lost. Crisley Perry Banfield, father of Doctor Banfield, was a farmer and stockman in Boyd County, a respected citizen of his community and active in church and politics. His death occurred September 4, 1850. On August 16, 1871, Mr. Banfield married to Martha Prichard, a member of a very old and prominent Southern family. She was born January 5, 1832, and died August 25, 1893, the mother of ten children.
Her father was born May 3, 1796, and died in Boyd County, Kentucky, September 21, 1877. His father, William Prichard, had been kidnapped in his native land by the crew of a sailing vessel and was fourteen years when he returned. His residence, after his return, was in Virginia, where he evidently became a man of some importance as the records of that county show that he purchased a tract of land in 1800 and sold the same in 1810, and in the following year he came to Kentucky.

Allen Prichard Banfield had such early educational advantages as were afforded in the private school conducted at Catlettsburg by Mrs. Neppie Roberts, a lady of fine education and accomplishments. It is interests he was prepared to become a teacher himself.
Aside from his professional college training, this was the only "university" that Doctor Banfield ever had the benefit of attending. He had early made up his mind to become a physician, but a medical education even then was expensive, and in a family of ten children, boyish preferences do not usually secure much family attention. He was not discouraged, however, when he learned that he would have to earn the money for himself if he persisted in leaving the farm to acquire a profession, for he knew that he had resources within himself that he could call to his aid. For two years then, he engaged in teaching country schools, reading medical books in the meantime as opportunity offered, and at the end of that time, was accepted as a medical student in the office of his uncle, Dr. Allen Prichard, a leading general practitioner in his day.

Under his uncle's preceptorship, Doctor Banfield made rapid headway, and by 1873 had accumulated both sufficient capital and preparatory knowledge to become a student in a Cincinnati Medical College, from which he was graduated in 1876, with his degree of M. D.
He entered into practice at Buchanan, and during the twenty-two following seven years devoted himself to a general practice of medicine, demonstrating in these years of useful activity, the wisdom of his choice of career in youth. A man of progressive thought in every direction Doctor Banfield decided to increase his scientific knowledge in relation to the diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, with hope of being able to remedy the troubles in these organs that have become so prevalent in late years possibly from changed conditions of living, and in 1893 he went to New York City and in the great New York Post-graduate School and Hospital, took a special course of the most important and exhaustive kind. Since then Doctor Banfield has specialized in this line of work, in which he has attained emi-ence in the state.
Doctor Banfield is yet a student, being of that type that can set no limit to the discoveries of his beloved science, and for twenty years, he has dedicated from one month to three in every year to post-graduate work in one or other of the great medical centers, having studied and operated in clinics in New York hospitals, in the Royal London Ophthalmic Hospital, the largest ophthalmic or eye hospital in the world and also in the Golden Square Hospital of London for ear, nose and throat, and likewise in the celebrated hospitals of Paris, France. In 1900 he came to Catlettsburg, where he has financial interests. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and belongs to the Freemasons and Elks.

NATHANIEL L. ROGERS, M. D. The problems of health are really the problems of life and must pertain to all questions of human interest, so that the physician and surgeon is the most important man of his community. He must possess a wide range of general culture, be an observant clinician and well read neurologist, even though he never specializes along any particular line. To take his place among the attorneys, doctors and clergymen of the communities, he must bear the stamp of an original mind and be willing to be hard-worked, while at the same time his soul oftentimes faints within him when studying the mysteries of his calling. Acquainted with the simple annals of the poor and the inner lives of his patients, he acquires a moral power, courage and conscience which permit him to interfere with the mechanism of physics, relieving its woes and increasing its resistance to the encroachments of disease. Not wonder that a skilled, learned and sympathetic medical man commands such universal admiration and respect, and one who measures up to the highest standards in every respect is Dr. Nathaniel L. Rogers of Wickliffe.

Doctor Rogers was born at Linton, Trigg County, Kentucky, August 1, 1863, a son of Richard S. and Mary J. (Carr) Rogers. Richard S. Rogers was born in Trigg County, Kentucky, in February, 1818 and died at Wickliffe, Kentucky, in 1893. His wife was born in December, 1818, and she died at Wickliffe, Kentucky, March 1, 1905. Reared and married in Trigg County, Richard S. Rogers developed into a merchant and farmer of some prominence, and held the office of a justice of the peace for thirty years. When he retired from active participation in his former employments he moved to Wickliffe, Kentucky, to the North and the South he espoused the side of the Union and later became a republican, voting for the candidates of that party until his death. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity. He and his wife had the following children: Nancy, who died at the age of fifteen years of typhoid fever; Thomas Benton, who enlisted in the Union Army during the war between the two sections of the country and died of smallpox at Bowling Green, Kentucky, while in the service, Cyrus, who was killed while serving as a Union soldier on a gunboat which was on the Ohio River conveying prisoners from Louisville, Kentucky to Nashville, Tennessee; Ann, who married Webster Futrell, and died in Trigg County, Kentucky, when thirty years old, but her husband survives her and is now living in Trigg County retired from his former occupation of farming; Melissa, who married Robert Johnson, and died in Trigg County, as did her husband; Dr. W. J., who died at Wickliffe in 1895, was a practicing physician and surgeon; Miranda, who married Flavius Rasco, a farmer now deceased, is living at Wickliffe; J. B., who is a druggist of Barlow, Kentucky; Mary Douglas, who married W. D. Rasco, a gardener of Wickliffe; David, who died of brain fever at the age of seven years; and Doctor Rogers.

After attending the rural schools of Trigg and Carlisle counties Doctor Rogers took a course at the Farmington Institute at Farmington, Kentucky, and then entered the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville, Kentucky, from which he was graduated June 17, 1890 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He has taken post-graduate courses at the Chicago Polyclinic and one at his Alma Mater at Louisville, Kentucky, in general courses and surgery. In 1890 he established himself in a general medical and surgical practice at Wickliffe, and has built up a connection which not only is extensive but very valuable. He is a charter member of the Ballard County Medical Society and was its first president; he belongs to the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and is enthusiastic relative to the benefits of these organizations. Though not the medical society, Cyrus the Methodist Church he finds expression for his religious creed, and is one of its most valued members at Wickliffe. A Mason, he belongs to Wickliffe Lodge No. 625, A. F. and A. M., and Antioch Chapter No. 74, R. A. M., of Wickliffe. He owns his modern residence on the corner of Cumberland and Fourth streets and three farms in Ballard County, comprising in all 300 acres, as well as several dwellings and two business buildings at Wickliffe, and serves as a director of the Kentucky County Bank on Court and Fifth streets. He is local surgeon for the Illinois Central and the Mobile & Ohio Railroad companies.

In 1891 Doctor Rogers married at Wickliffe Miss Cattie L. Thomas, a daughter of Robert and Sarah (Turk) Thomas. Mr. Thomas was a farmer of Ballard County, Kentucky. Mrs. Rogers was born in Henry County, Kentucky. Doctor and Mrs. Rogers became the parents of two children. The oldest was born in 1897, and is with his father studying medicine. After he had graduated from the Wickliffe High School he entered the Kentucky State University at Lexington, Kentucky, but at the close of his first year entered the United States service during the great war, and was sent to Fort Benjamin Harrison at Indianapolis, Indiana, and from there to the Officers' Training Camp at Fort Fremont, California, where the signing of the armistice released him from the army, and he returned to Wickliffe following his honorable discharge. The second child, Robert Thomas, was born in 1900, and is now a resident of Cairo, Illinois, and is connected with a drug store of that city, having taken a course in the Louisville School of Pharmacy. During the great war, in spite of his youth, he served in the United States Navy for nine months, and was sent overseas twice. The young man, Nathaniel, was born in 1897, and he is upon his high school course at Wickliffe. While his elder sons were in the army and navy Doctor Rogers was doing his part as a loyal American at home, and participated actively in all of the local drives and was a member of the local examining draft board. He offered his services to the medical branch of the army, but was refused on account of physical disability.

The Rogers family is one of the oldest-established ones in the United States its representatives coming here during the Colonial epoch and settling in North Carolina, where they and their descendants took a constructive part in the development of that region. It was in North Carolina that Doctor Rogers' grandfather, David Rogers, was born, and his father, also David Rogers, was born and died in the "Tarheel State." The elder David Rogers was a sea-going man. The younger David Rogers, after he had reached manhood estate, moved to Kentucky, and established the family in Trigg County, and there he was engaged in farming upon an extensive scale. His wife was a Miss Sumner, of North Carolina. It is interesting to trace back in these typical American families, for as an almost universal rule it is found that the desirable characteristics which made of their founders sturdy builders of what is to come must have been transmitted to the intrepid young men in khaki and blue who proved so invincible when pitted against the most carefully and thoroughly trained soldiers ever sent into battle.
Milton C. Anderson. Unless the modern lawyer is a man of sound judgment, possessed of a liberal education and stern training, combined with a keen insight into human nature, there is not much hope of his meeting with success. The reason of this lies in the spirit of the age, with all of its complexities. Modern jurisprudence has become more and more intricate because of new conditions and laws, and the interpretation of many statutes neglected to be here before have become the subject of experience, constant reading and natural inclination must be superimposed upon a careful training for success at the bar, and if this is true with regard to the attorney in a private practice, it is necessarily all the more formidable when applied to those of the profession who are using their talents and knowledge of the law in the discharge of the duties of public office. The records of Ballard County show that never before have there been so many able members of the bar within its confines, so that selection for the office of county attorney becomes more and more difficult each election. However, in the person of Milton C. Anderson, the present incumbent, the people of Ballard County have an ideal official, and one who is giving an unusual measure of satisfaction for the masterly manner in which he is handling the many difficult problems presented to him.

Mr. Anderson was born at Grahamville, McCracken County, Kentucky, March 1, 1887, a son of Herbert Anderson, grandson of Cornelius Anderson, and great-grandson of Robert Anderson. The Anderson family originated in Scotland, from which country immigration made its way to America and settlement effected in Virginia during Colonial times. Robert Anderson was born in Virginia, from whence he came as a pioneer into Christian County, Kentucky, and there established a deaf and dumb school and taught it for a number of years. His death took place in Christian County.

Cornelius Anderson, son of Robert Anderson and grandfather of Milton C. Anderson, was born in Christian County, Kentucky, and died at Wickliffe, Kentucky. Moving from Christian County in 1866, he spent some time at Paducah, Kentucky, and then went to Florence Station, Kentucky. Still later he moved to Woodville, McCracken County, and finally to Wickliffe, where he lived in retirement. His life work was done as an educator in the public schools. Cornelius Anderson married Amanda Smith, who was born in Christian County, Kentucky. She survives her husband and makes her home at Wickliffe.

Herbert Anderson, son of Cornelius Anderson and father of Milton C. Anderson, was born near Hopkinsville, Christian County, Kentucky, in 1854, but was taken by his parents in 1866 to Paducah and later to Florence Station, and he was reared at the latter place and there educated. After he reached manhood's estate he moved to Grahamville, where he is still residing, being extensively interested in farming and fruitraising, having been a successful pioneer in the latter industry in his region. A democrat, he served as a justice of the peace for many years. Fraternally he is a member of the Odd Fellows. Joining the Christian Church many years ago, he has found in its creed and services the religious atmosphere which was congenial, and he has always been one of its strongest and most effective supporters. Herbert Anderson married Etta Belle Holland, who was born near Grahamville, Kentucky, in 1860, and their children are as follows: Jessie, who married C. M. Barbee, a farmer, lives at Springfield, Tennessee. Clarence H., who is a farmer of Grahamville; Milton C., who was third in order of birth; Elizabeth, who is unmarried and lives with her brother Milton C.; S. A., who is a farmer of Grahamville; and Herbert, who is a student at the Georgetown College at Georgetown, Kentucky, and is preparing himself for the medical profession.

Milton C. Anderson attended the rural schools of McCracken County, Hall-Moody Institute, a preparatory school at Martin, Tennessee, and then read law and was admitted to the bar February 10, 1910, and immediately thereafter entered upon the active practice of his profession. From the beginning he took an active part in politics and became an active factor in the democratic party. On its ticket he was elected county attorney, in 1913, and to the same office in 1918, moving his home to Wickliffe at that time. His offices are in the court house, and he owns his modern residence on Tennessee Street, Wickliffe. He is a member of and a deacon in the Baptist Church. A Mason, he belongs to Hazelwood Lodge No. 489, A. F. and A. M., of Barlow; Antioch Chapter No. 74, R. A. M.; Paducah Commandery, K. T.; and Rizpah Temple, A. A. O. O., at Paducah. He has been a member of Oscar Camp, M. W. A., of Oscar, Kentucky; and Wickliffe Camp, W. O. W. Mr. Anderson is attorney for the Bank of Barlow, for the J. T. Polk Canning Company, for the Hendricks Mill and Lumber Company, and the Williamson-Kueny Mill and Lumber Company, and is recognized as a very able corporation lawyer. He has an interest in four farms in Ballard County, totaling 271 acres, and is a man of ample means.

During the period this country was in the great war Mr. Anderson was an active participant in all of the local war work and made speeches throughout Western Kentucky and Southern Illinois in behalf of the various drives. He was very generous, contributing his time, talents and money to the cause, and no calls on him from the Government were made in vain.

On August 2, 1909, Mr. Anderson united in marriage at Metropolis, Illinois, with Miss Pearl Wray, a daughter of J. P. and Annie (Reesor) Wray, now residents of Oscar, Kentucky, where Mr. Wray has extensive farming interests, although formerly he was a merchant. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson have one daughter, Evelyn Pearl, who was born September 3, 1917.

It would be difficult to find a man more thoroughly imbued with the spirit of his times or more anxious to aid in the development of his community. He has traveled far on the road leading to distinction, and the future opens up very bright before him. Such men as Mr. Anderson are a credit to their profession and to the people who place them in offices of dignified responsibility.

Willie A. Simmons. In educational circles of Monroe County Willie A. Simmons has become well and popularly known as an instructor of scholastic and executive ability through the capable manner in which he has discharged the duties of several offices of trust and responsibility. In his present capacity as superintendent of schools of Fountain Run he is adding to his well-merited reputation for accomplishment, and the general confidence in which he is held indicates the value of his services.

Mr. Simmons was born on his father's farm near Fountain Run, Monroe County, September 1, 1885, a son of H. C. and Ellen (Eaton) Simmons. His grandfather, Green Simmons, was born in 1811 in South Carolina, and in young manhood migrated to Kentucky, taking up land in Monroe County which was subsequently developed into the old Simmons homestead. He developed a valuable and productive property, conveniently situated 2 1/2 miles north of Fountain Run, and became one of the well-to-do men of his locality, his entire career being devoted to agricultural pursuits. In his transactions he was always upright and honorable, and as a result he bore an honored name in the community of his home, where he passed away in 1891.

H. C. Simmons was born on the home farm near Fountain Run, where he was reared and received a rural school education. When he reached years of discretion he adopted farming as his life work and to this vocation he has applied his energies unre-mittingly throughout his career. He still continues to make his home 2½ miles north of Fountain Run, where he has an attractive and well-cultivated property, on which are to be found the latest improvements and substantial, up-to-date buildings. He is justly accounted one of the successful children of Willie A. Wilson; review; Claude K., who met an accidental death on the farm when nine years and ten months old, being kicked by a vicious horse; Nellie, who died at the age of eighteen months; Niece, who resides with her parents; Tom, who is a student at the Fountain Run High School; and Grace, who is attending the graded school here.

Willie A. Simmons is largely self-educated. As a boy he attended the rural schools of Monroe County and worked on his father’s farm, where he remained until about the time of attaining his majority. Having decided upon a career as a teacher, he secured a position in the rural districts and for six years continued to instruct the minds of the country youths. Then, feeling the need of further preparation, which he had been unable to secure theretofore, he entered the Western Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green from which he was graduated in 1894. In 1895, for the summer term, he entered the Valparaiso (Indiana) University, and during 1915 and 1916 attended Peabody College, Nashville, Tennessee, specializing in the department of education. Mr. Simmons has continued teaching during this time, in 1913 having been made principal of the graded and high school at Hiseville, Barren County, a position which he held for five years. He was next principal of the Harrison County High School at Oddville, Kentucky, for one year, and in 1919 was elected principal of the graded and high school at Fountain Run, a position which he has since retained.

Mr. Simmons has brought to his work trained faculties and enlightened understanding, combined with real capacity for painstaking endeavor and a meritorious zeal and enthusiasm. With these qualities as equipment he has done much to improve the school system at Fountain Run and to work himself into the confidence and esteem of the people of his locality. He is an active member of the Kentucky Educational Association. In politics he is a republican, and his religious connection is with the Baptist Church. He owns and occupies a comfortable modern residence at Fountain Run. During the World war he was living in Harrison County and was hindered from making speeches in behalf of the cause on account of sickness.

In 1917, near Glasgow, Kentucky, Mr. Simmons was united in marriage with Miss Lora Lenora Tolle, the latter of whom is deceased, while the former is a resident of Glasgow, where he is engaged in agricultural operations. Mrs. Simmons attended the Western Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green, and for eight years prior to her marriage was a teacher in the rural districts of Monroe County. To Mr. and Mrs. Simmons there has been born one child, Elizabeth, born October 26, 1918.

Lee O. Dixon, manager of the Arcadia Hotel at Dawson Springs, is one of the men responsible for the remarkable growth and development of this famous health resort, and he is recognized as one of the best hotelmen in the country. Just as Americans are awakening to the fact that their own country is possessed of scenery far exceeding in grandeur anything afforded by the old world, so are they learning that the natural mineral waters of the wells at Dawson Springs are far superior to those of foreign health resorts. Not only is this appreciation given by Americans, but the owners of the wells are daily filling heavy orders from all parts of the world to bottle these waters.

It is but natural with such a steady and increasing influx of visitors who seek a cure from various ailments or a renewal of health in the wonderful waters of Dawson Springs that the business of affording them proper accommodations should assume very important proportions, necessitating the employment of the best talent in the country. The early efforts of the kindly tavern-keepers harked back the way to carefully systematized hostleries, conducted upon a scale of a certain degree of comfort and luxury not to be excelled anywhere, and men of national repute are placed in charge of the affairs. The growth of the Springs is more dependent upon the capabilities of these efficient men than might be imagined, for if those who are ailing in health and suffering from nervous complaints are not made comfortable and happy they will not remain, no matter how beneficial the waters may prove. Mr. Dixon appreciated this from the first and has thrown his whole heart into making the Arcadia Hotel a model institution, and guests come to it again and again as they return to the Springs.

Lee O. Dixon was born in Hopkins County, Kentucky, March 1, 1878, a son of B. T. Dixon, and grandson of Charles Dixon, who was born in Charlottesville, Virginia, in 1796 and died at Dalton, Kentucky, in 1874. He came to Hopkins County with his wife and three children and located near Dalton and became a prosperous farmer of that locality. The maiden name of his wife was Martha Figg, and she was born in Virginia in 1800. Her death occurred near Dalton, Kentucky, in 1878. The Dixons came from England to Virginia long before the American Revolution.

B. T. Dixon was born near Dalton, Hopkins County, Kentucky, in 1848, and he is now living at Dawson Springs. Brought up in his native neighborhood, he became a country merchant, and in 1882 moved to Dawson Springs, where he was one of the pioneers in the mercantile life of the place. But one house now remains of the few which constituted the village at the time he moved to it, and he has advanced with the prosperity of the place. After being profitably engaged in business as a merchant for eight years he became the proprietor of the Dixon House, and conducted it until 1912, when he sold it and retired. He has always been a democrat. The missionary church which forms the nucleus of his church is very active in its support.

B. T. Dixon married Timmie Sisk, who was born at Silent Run, Hopkins County, Kentucky, in 1856.

Lee O. Dixon was reared at Dawson Springs, and after attending its schools became a student of the County Normal School at Madisonville, Kentucky, but left in 1867, at the completion of his junior year, and was occupied in various ways before he became a traveling salesman through Western Kentucky, coming into Dawson Springs in 1882. For twelve years he was in the restaurant business, disposing of his interests in 1916 to accept the position of manager of the Arcadia Hotel, the original hotel of the Springs and one of the leading ones today. This hotel, which has accommodations for 160 guests, is located on North Railroad Avenue, in a densely shaded park where are numerous wells of the natural mineral waters which have made Dawson Springs famous the world over. Until these wells were developed the famous old number 4, and the Number 1 well, the first one to yield the mineral water, is also in this park. Mr. Dixon is half owner of the Dawson Springs Brick Company. During the late war he took an active part in all of the local war work, and also subscribed to his limit for all of the issues of the bonds, stamps and to all of the organizations. He has always been a democrat. Early joining the Baptist Church, he has been zealous in its work and is now its treasurer. A Mason, he belongs to Dawson Lodge No. 628, A. F. and A. M., and he is also a member of Dawson Lodge No. 118, I. O. O. F., and of Dawson Springs Camp No. 132, M. W. O. R.

On June 17, 1903, Mr. Dixon married at Clay, Webster County, Kentucky, Miss Birdie Dixon Grant, a daughter of E. W. and Fannie (Sun) Grant, farming people of Clay, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Dixon became the parents of the following children: Raymond Ford, who was born May 30, 1903, is a senior in the Dawson Springs High School. Miss Margaret and Arthur, who were born on August 28, 1906, is a freshman of the same school; and Norman Grant, who was born February 9, 1912, is the youngest.

Haying been identified with practically all of the development of Dawson Springs, Mr. Dixon is very enthusiastic with reference to it, and feels that there are no limits to what may be expected of it in the way of further expansion. Nature has lavished this section of the state; there is no lack of sufficient capital for all kinds of improvements; and plans have already been made to utilize to the utmost the remarkable resources of this remarkable region.

Sylvanus Wilson, president of the First National Bank of Russell Springs and proprietor of The Supply Company, is one of the commanding figures in the business life of Russell County, and is a man widely and favorably known all over this part of Kentucky. His transactions, which are of great magnitude, are carried on with scrupulous attention to detail and according to the highest principles of commercial integrity, and he is the recognized leader in many movements of civic importance.

Mr. Wilson was born on a farm near Russell Springs, March 20, 1878, a son of Daniel Wilson, who was born in Russell County in 1812, where his father, a native of Virginia, had settled up coming to Kentucky and becoming a farmer. Until 1887 Daniel Wilson continued to be engaged in farming in the vicinity of Russell Springs, but in that year moved to the city, and for twenty-four years thereafter was one of its leading merchants, but retired from active participation in his business in 1908, although he still maintains his residence in this community. Only a lad of sixteen when the republican party came into being, he was so impressed by the discussions he heard at that time that when he came to vote he enrolled in its ranks and has never left them. The Baptist Church holds his membership, and he is a strong supporter of the local congregation of that denomination; A Mason, he belongs to Russell Springs Lodge No. 850, F. & A. M. During the war between the North and the South he served during the last two years of the conflict in the Thirteenth Kentucky Cavalry. He married Sarah J. Wilson, who, although she bore the same name, was not a relative. Mrs. Wilson was born in Russell County in 1837. Their children are as follows: William A., who is engaged in farming in the vicinity of Russell Springs; and Sylvanus, who has taken his father's place.

Sylvanus Wilson attended the rural schools of his native county and lived at home until he was eighteen years old. From childhood he has displayed a business ability that is remarkable, and when only thirteen years old his father made him manager of his mercantile establishment. Young as he was the lad proved himself capable of discharging the duties laid upon him, and under his management the business was expanded, continuing to develop it until he now has the leading mercantile house of the county. He owns the large modern store building on Main Street which is the home of his establishment, and also a modern residence on Main Street. Mr. Wilson has other interests, for he owns a valuable fifty-four-acre farm which is on the edge of town, a half interest in a farm of ninety-five acres in the vicinity of Russell Springs, and considerable real estate at Russell Springs. In 1906 Mr. Wilson was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Russell Springs, and has continued its president since its doors were opened for business. This bank has a capital of $25,000; surplus and undivided profits of $2,000; and deposits of $450,000. His associates in the bank are H. M. Smith and W. G. Rexxvat, vice presidents, and G. W. Hill, cashier.

During the period that this country was in the World war Mr. Wilson and his wife took a leading part in the local war work, she being especially valuable in the Red Cross work. Mr. Wilson gave generously of his time to the cause, and bought bonds and stamps and contributed to all of the war organizations to the limit of his means.

In 1896 he married at Russell Springs Miss Arizona Kimble, a daughter of George A. and Mary (Bradshaw) Kimble, the latter of whom is deceased. Mr. Kimble is a retired merchant of Russell Springs. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have two children, Lottie May, who lives at Russell Springs, married Guy M. Snow, who owns a half interest in Mr. Wilson's store and is his partner; and Sarah K., who is at home.

The career of Mr. Wilson shows what a man can accomplish when he is permitted to follow his natural bent. While of course one of his ability could have found a place in any line of public usefulness, it is certain that his inclinations and talents all led him to adopt his present calling and that he is eminently fitted for mercantile and financial pursuits. He understands the laws of demand and supply; is able to predicate just about what will be required to meet the demands of his customers within a given time; can look ahead and buy understandingly and profitably, and offer timely stocks at prices as low as is justifiable considering the market and the quality. Having made such a success of his own business he knows how to render excellent advice and conserve the interests of others with reference to their financial affairs. Such a man as Mr. Wilson renders a service to his community, county, state and country not easily over-estimated, and is worthy of all of the confidence he inspires.

G. W. Hill. From Maine to California and from the Canadian border to the Rio Grande, the men of paramount importance in every community no matter what its size are those connected with the banking business, for upon them rests the responsibility of maintaining the financial stability of the business houses and industrial plants in their midst, and sustaining the credits with the outside world. Of necessity they are men of force of character, strong determination, conservative policies and excellent judgment or their stockholders would not have selected them for the positions they hold, nor would their depositors confirm their elections by a continuance of their patronage. Therefore, when it is stated that a man is a banker, immediately he has earned a consideration not bestowed upon all, and few, indeed, are there instances where a man honored proves unworthy of the trust reposed in his integrity and discretion. Accorded therefore his rightful place among his fellow citizens, G. W. Hill, cashier of the First National Bank of Russell Springs, is numbered among the responsible and worth-while men of Russell County.

G. W. Hill was born in Owen County, Kentucky, June 20, 1851, a son of George Hill, who was born in Derbyshire, England, in 1827, and died in Owen County, Kentucky, in 1915. His father, also George Hill, was born in England, where he was reared and married, but in 1831 he left his native land and came to the United States, settling first in Pennsylvania. Later he left the Keystone State for Illinois, and from there went to Saint Joseph County, Michigan, where his death occurred. During all of these changes he was occupied with farming. His wife, whose maiden name was Brown, was born in England in 1802, and died in Saint Joseph County, Michigan, in 1884.

George Hill, father of G. W. Hill, was reared in Saint Joseph County, Michigan, and attended its rural schools, but left that section for Owen County, Kentucky, about 1838, and became a very prominent man of that region, where he was extensively engaged in farming and merchandising. For twelve years he served as a member of the state legislature, and was active in the democratic party. The Baptist Church had in him an earnest and consistent member, and he was a strong churchman until his death. He married Mahala Smith, who was born in Owen County, Kentucky, in 1832, and died there in 1913. Their children were as follows: John, who resides in Owen County, is a farmer; Thomas, who resides at Cincinnati, Ohio, is a prominent Mason and is now acting as superintendent of one of the Masonic temples of that city; Mary, who lives near Johnstown, Pennsylvania, married Robert Noel, a musician; Sarah, who resides at Covington, Kentucky, married Charles Strother, an attorney; G. W., who was fifth in order of birth; J. W., who is in the office of the United States internal revenue department of Louisville, Kentucky; Addie, who is a resident of Owen County, married James Davis, a farmer; Willard, who died at the age of twenty-one years; and Forrest, who is a farmer of Owen County.

G. W. Hill attended both the rural schools and the Owenton High School until he was sixteen years old, and when only seventeen years old began teaching school in the rural districts of Owen County, and was so occupied for a period of five years. He then entered the commercial field and until 1901 was engaged in merchandising at Jonesville, Owen County. That year saw he appointed deputy county clerk of Grant County, and he held that position for five years, during that period acquiring a reputation for painstaking fidelity to any task assigned him. In 1909 he moved to Somerset, Kentucky, and for ten years was cashier of the Citizens Bank of that city, leaving it to become assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Russell Springs in 1920. On May 1, 1921, Mr. Hill's exceptional abilities received proper recognition in his election to the office of cashier of this bank, and he is still in it today. He is a large investor in the stock of the bank.

This sound financial institution was established May 12, 1906, and its officials are: S. Wilson, president; H. M. Smith, vice president; U. G. Rexroat, second vice president; and G. W. Hill, cashier. The capital is $25,000; the surplus and profits are $2,000; and the deposits are $150,000.

Both by inheritance and conviction Mr. Hill is a democrat, but he has confined his participation in public affairs to supporting his party candidates. He belongs to Somerset Lodge No. 75, I. O. O. F., and Somerset Camp No. 48, W. W. W. M. Mr. Hill owns a modern dwelling at Somerset. During the late war he was one of the energetic workers in behalf of local activities, participating in all of the drives, and buying bonds and stamps and contributing to the various war organizations to the limit of his means.

In 1805 he married at Vevay, Indiana, Miss Anna Savers, a daughter of James and Mary E. (Parent) Savers, both of whom are now deceased. He was a member of the church before the marriage, and Mr. and Mrs. Hill became the parents of the following children: Consuela, who married Sylvester Newton and lives at Louisville, Kentucky, where he is an oil distributor; and Margaret, who married D. S. McCord, a clerk of Lebanon, Kentucky.

Add Tarter. Prominently identified among the scholarly men and efficient educators of Russell County, Prof. Add Tarter, principal of the Russell Springs High School, is one of the dependable citizens of this region. His work since coming to Russell Springs marks him as a man who has chosen well his life work, and he has won the affection of his pupils and the confidence of their parents.

Professor Tarter is a native of Russell County, having been born at Decatur, Kentucky, September 27, 1887, a son of Samuel Tarter, and grandson of Reader M. Tarter. The Tarter family originated in Ireland, from whom immigration was made to the American Colonies at an early date, and from then on until the time of Professor Tarter's great-grandfather those of the name continued to reside in Virginia. He, however, struck out into Kentucky and was one of the pioneer farmers of the southern part of Central Kentucky. His son, Reader M. Tarter, was born in Kentucky and died at Decatur before the birth of Professor Tarter. For the greater part of his life he was engaged in farming in the vicinity of Decatur. He married Martha M. Gaberry, a native of Kentucky, who also died at Decatur.

Samuel Tarter, who is still a resident of Decatur, was born in that city in 1861, and there he has spent his entire life. For many years a successful farmer, he is still following that calling. In politics he is a democrat. He married Sarah Emily Cravens, who was born in Kentucky in 1862, and died at Decatur in 1915. Their children were as follows: John F., who is engaged in farming near Liberty, Casey County, Kentucky; Ira, who is a farmer of Font Hill, Russell County; Professor Tarter, who was third in order of birth; and Flonie, who lives at Russell Springs, married L. R. Wilson, Jr., a clerk in a store.

Professor Tarter attended the rural schools of Russell County, the Russell Springs High School, and the Western Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green, Kentucky, from which he was graduated and during this period received the equivalent of a four-year high school course and a two-year college course. In the meanwhile, in 1908, he had begun to teach school, and was connected with the rural schools of his native county for four years. During 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915 and 1916 he served as principal of the graded schools of Oakton, Kentucky, and during 1917 and 1918 was principal of the county high school at Albany, Kentucky.

His work as an educator was interrupted by his response to his country's call, when he enlisted May 27, 1918, in the World War and was sent to Camp Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky. After six weeks there he was transferred to Camp Beauregard, Louisiana, where he remained until August 2, 1918, on which date he was sent overseas to France. Before he left this country he had been made sergeant of a Company of the Second and Third Infantry. After he reached France he was made supply sergeant, first of the Fifth Depot Division, and later of the Central Recorder Office, and remained at Bourges for the greater part of the time. On August 9, 1919, Professor Tarter sailed from Brest, France, for the United States, and was mustered out of the service at Camp Taylor September 4, 1919.

From the time of his return to Louisville in January, 1920, he was a general bookkeeper in the First National Bank at Russell Springs, and in September of that year was made principal of the graded and high schools of this city. He has under his supervision six teachers and 350 pupils, and they, as well as he, are making a record for efficiency and scholarship. Like his father he is a democrat. The Baptist Church holds his membership, and he is a faithful member of the church of which he belongs to Russell Springs Lodge No. 840, F. and A. M., and Columbia Chapter, R. A. M. Professionally he is a member of the Kentucky Educational Association. Professor Tarter is unmarried.

Having steadily advanced, earning the money to prosecute his own studies, Professor Tarter is a man who appreciates the value of a thorough educational training. A natural teacher, he not only imparts knowledge in such a manner as to make study interesting, but also stimulates his pupils to renewed effort, and awakens in their expanding minds the desire for broader fields of intellectual development. At the same time he so regulates his supervision of his assistants as to secure their hearty co-operation, and in this, as in other ways, secures for the rising generation the best of instruction. Having devoted more than a year of his life to the teaching in Berea College, the author has proven in a most effective and practical way his interest in it and its institutions, and may be depended upon to imbue those under his charge with the highest kind of patriotism, and to give to his home community a cheerful and valuable support whenever it is necessary.

L. W. McGee. In the record of business achievements of the merchants of Burkesville, the name of L. W. McGee occupies a conspicuous place. His admirable efforts have not only contributed materially to the business interests of the county seat, but his career has been one that redounds to his credit, and as president of the firm of McGee Brothers, dry goods, shoes and notions dealers, he occupies a place among the leaders in his line in Cumberland County.

Mr. McGee was born at Burkesville, January 15, 1870, and is a son of J. J. and Sallie (Williams) (Baker) McGee. He is of Scotch descent on the paternal side, the original McGee in America having emigrated from the land of the thistle and the heather in pre-Revolutionary war days and settled in the Colony of Virginia. J. J. McGee, the elder, grandfather of L. W. McGee, was a small farmer and the young man with flatboat loads of tobacco, and on one of these trips, while on the Mississippi River, he contracted cholera, from which he died. He and his worthy wife were the parents of a large family of children.

J. J. McGee, the younger, father of L. W. McGee, was born in 1834 in Cumberland County, where he has spent his entire life, being at present a retired resident of the county seat. He was long interested in the operation of farming, an occupation in which he won gratifying success, his industry bringing him large returns which his business ability allowed him to invest with honorably gained profit, and his integrity winning him the respect of his business associates. In 1890 he gave up active labor and retired to his comfortable home at Burkesville, where he has since been in the enjoyment of the fruits of his earlier labor. His home on Columbia Street, one of the most desirable residences at Burkesville, he still owns, but he has disposed of his farms.

He is a democrat and a member of and active worker in the Christian Church. He is a member and a past master of Cumberland Lodge No. 413. F. and A. M., of Burkesville. Mr. McGee first married a Miss Johannah Jones, who died leaving children: J. G., formerly a merchant at Burkesville, who died at the age of forty-eight years; and Mary, who died at Campbellsville, Kentucky, aged forty-nine years, as the wife of John Q. Alexander, who travels out of Louisville as a representative of the Carter Dry Goods Company of that city. After the death of her first wife Mr. McGee married Mrs. Sallie (Williams) Baker, who was born in 1841 in Cumberland County, and died at Burkesville in 1917. By her first marriage she had two children: B. C. Baker, proprietor of the Hotel Burkesville; and Mamie, the wife of T. J. Lawhorn, a farmer and live stock dealer of Burkesville. Mr. and Mrs. McGee became the parents of seven children: Elva, senior member of the Independent Fire Company of Nashville, Tennessee; L. W., of this notice; C. M., who resides at Burkesville and is junior member of the firm of McGee Brothers; Hattie, the wife of Robert Gowdy, a farmer owner and real estate broker of Campbellsville; Charles, a former Cumberland County farmer, who died at Burkesville at the age of thirty-seven years; Jacob T., cashier of the Bank of Cumberland at Burkesville; and Elifie, the wife of W. T. Ortley, a practicing attorney and mayor of Burkesville.

L. W. McGee is indebted for his early education to the public schools of Burkesville, he being a graduate of the high school, class of 1887. He next attended Kentucky University at Lexington, but went only through the sophomore year, when he left college and began to clerk in the store of his father and uncle, G. H. and W. McGee, at Burkesville. After twelve years of clerking he formed a partnership with his brother, G. H. McGee, and conducted a general mercantile business, and when his brother died, two years later, L. W. McGee became sole owner of the enterprise. This he carried on alone until 1921, when he admitted to partnership his younger brother, C. M. McGee, at that time forming the present firm of McGee Brothers, of which L. W. McGee is president. This is now one of the leading dry goods, shoes and notions establishments in Cumberland County, and trade is attracted from all over the countryside to the modern store located on the west side of the Public Square. A full and up-to-date line of goods is carried, particular attention being paid to the wants and needs of the patrons, and efficient service, fair representation, popular prices and courteous attention to the wants of the patrons, establishment a popular and well-patronized place of business.

Mr. McGee is a democrat in politics, but has not sought public office. However, he has never been lax in his citizenship, and has shown a commendable interest in all movements which have promised to benefit his community. In the World war period he was active in working for the success of the Red Cross, Liberty Loan and other drives, and was a generous contributor thereto. Reared in the faith of the Christian Church, he has been an active supporter thereof, and at present is serving in the capacity of elder. His only fraternal affiliation is with Burkesville Lodge, Knights of Pythias, in which he has numerous friends. He owns and occupies a pleasant modern home on High Street.

In 1892, at Burkesville, Mr. McGee was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Waugh, who was born in Cumberland County, a daughter of G. F. and Ada-lie (Owensley) Baker, natives of this county, who are both now deceased. Mr. Baker was for many years a merchant of Burkesville, where he was widely and favorably known in business circles and as a citizen.

Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. McGee: Cecil, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in the vicinity of Mulden, Mississippi; Agnes, who is the wife of Leslie McComas, agent for Dodge and Ford automobiles and owner and operator of the leading public garage at Burkesville, a sketch of whose career will be found elsewhere in this work; and Sallie King, who is a student of the senior class at the Kentucky College for Women.

John M. Waugh, one of the ablest representatives of the legal profession at Ashland, has steadily made his way to the front by sheer ability and a persistence that has never allowed him to lose sight of the ideals and ambitions he learned to cherish as a young man.

Mr. Waugh was born in Carter County, Kentucky, June 19, 1873, son of George W. and Aura (Bellew) Waugh, both natives of Kentucky. Mr. Waugh is of French and German stock. His father was French and his grandfather, German, and both were married in France. His grandmother bore the family name of Duduitt, and was a niece of Governor La Croix, prominently identified with the early French colony that settled along the Ohio River. Some of Mr. Waugh's ancestors were pioneers in the iron industry in the famous Hanging Rock iron region of Ohio at Portsmouth, Mr. Waugh exemplifies some of the characteristics of his ancestry, the French predominating, combined with some of the sturdy qualities of the German. He has the fire and enthusiasm of one and the persistence of the other, and undoubtedly his personal character has been an important asset in his professional and public career. Mr. Waugh's father was a Confederate soldier in the Civil war, serving with a Virginia regiment.

John M. Waugh when a boy moved with his parents from Carter to Lawrence County, where he attended the common schools. While in school he prepared himself for teaching and for twelve years he taught in Carter and Lawrence counties. While teaching he diligently studied law and was admitted to the bar in June, 1895. Mr. Waugh began practice at Grayson in Carter County. He was elected for his first term as commonwealth attorney in 1895, and his record of service since that time was elected in the old Twentieth District, comprising Carter, Boyd, Lawrence, Morgan and Elliott counties. At the close of his first six year term in 1900 he was reelected for the new district, No. 32, comprising Lawrence, Carter, Elliott and Morgan counties. In 1915 he was re-elected for a third term, which expires January 1, 1922. In 1918 Mr. Waugh removed his office from Grayson to Ashland, and formed a law partnership with Mr. Webster. Mr. Waugh was married in 1910, and since then Mr. Waugh has been senior member of the firm Waugh & Howerton. He is a member of the county, State and American Bar Associations, is a Presbyterian, a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, and a democrat in politics. His hobby is baseball, and he is fond of all outdoor sports.

In 1897, at Grayson, he married Miss Anna Frater, daughter of Frank and Jennie Frater, native Kentuckians. Her father was a successful lawyer, who died February 2, 1921. Mr. and Mrs. Waugh have a family of seven children, named Kenneth, Clyde, Charlotte, Annabelle, Louise, Esther and Pauline. The sons Kenneth and Clyde both answered the call to the colors during the World war and were in training at Camp Taylor with the infantry though neither had the opportunity to go overseas.

JOHN G. TALBOT, M. D. Numbered among the distinguished surgeons and physicians of his county, Dr. John G. Talbot is recognized as one of the most dependable and worth-while citizens of Burkesville, where he has resided since 1897. During the World war he gave his country the benefit of his skill and knowledge of his profession, and for twenty years has been connected with the public health service of the government.

Doctor Talbot was born in the State of Kentucky, November 25, 1872, a son of Charles H. Talbot, grandson of John G. Talbot, and great-great-grandson of the pioneer of the family from Virginia to Kentucky. The latter located in the vicinity of Danville, and his son, the great-grandfather of Doctor Talbot, died near Danville, on the Harrodsburg Turnpike, where he had long been engaged in farming. All of the early members of the Talbot family were agriculturists. The Talbot family went over to England from Nearerland in 1606 with William the Conqueror, and several centuries thereafter other members of the family sought refuge from religious persecution in the American Colonies, location being made in Virginia. John G. Talbot, Doctor Talbot's grandfather, was born at Danville, Kentucky, in 1806, and died there in 1876, having spent his entire life at Danville. He was an extensive and successful farmer. His wife bore the maiden name of Smith, and she was born in Garrard County, Kentucky, and died near Danville, where she was buried.

Charles H. Talbot, father of Doctor Talbot, was born at Danville in 1837, and died at Versailles, Woodford County, Kentucky, in February, 1908. Reared at Danville, he attended its public schools and Center College of that city, being graduated from the latter institution with the degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts. Following his graduation he taught school in the Deaf and Dumb Institute of Danville for twenty years, and then for five years more was an instructor in a similar institute at Jackson, Mississippi. Returning to Kentucky, he located at Versailles, where he lived the remainder of his life. In addition to his educational labors Mr. Talbot found pleasurable and profitable during all of the time he was teaching owned and operated farming property. A Republican, he was active in his party, and was chairman of the Republican Central Committee of Woodford County for a number of years, and was otherwise prominent in politics in his neighborhood. A very active supporter of and worker in the Presbyterian Church, he exerted a vast amount of good and carried his religious practice. His offspring died.

During the war between the states he enlisted in 1861 in the Nineteenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and served all through the war with the rank of a first lieutenant. He participated in the Red River campaign, during which one-half of his regiment was lost, and was all through the siege of Vicksburg and in other important engagements. After the close of the Red River campaign he was stationed at New Orleans, Louisiana. For eight or ten years he served in the field with the Grand Army of the Republic. He married Lenora Hann, who was born in Woodford County, Kentucky, and reared and educated at Danville, having graduated from Caldwell College of Danville with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Mrs. Talbot survives her husband and makes her home with her son, Doctor Talbot. Mr. and Mrs. Talbot became the parents of the following children: Alexander, who died at Danville at the age of five years; Elizabeth, who is unmarried, is a missionary of the Presbyterian Church and stationed at Kashin, China; Finley, who was a merchant, died at Versailles, Kentucky, aged twenty-nine years; Eliza, who married Dr. W. H. Venable, a physician and surgeon of Kuling, Central China; Doctor Talbot, who was fifth in order of birth; Addison, who is a missionary of the Presbyterian Church, is stationed in the Chekiang Province, Northern China; Louise, who lives at Pittsfield, Massachusetts, is the widow of Randolph McFiguill, who died at Washington, District of Columbia, having been a wholesale druggist; Ellen C., who is unmarried, is clerk of a senatorial committee and resides at Washington, District of Columbia; Charles H., Jr., who is a clergyman of the Presbyterian Church, resides at Somerset, Kentucky; Lenora, who married Earl Hamilton, a member of the Swedish Church of Urbana, Ohio; and Edwin, who died at the age of fourteen years.

Doctor Talbot attended the preparatory department of Center College, and then for two years was a student of the Kentucky State University at Lexington. In 1894 he entered the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville, Kentucky, and was graduated therefrom in 1897 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Immediately following his graduation he located at Burkesville, where he has since remained, carrying on a general medical and surgical practice. His office is located on the south side of the Public Square. He owns a comfortable residence on College Street, Burkesville. A Republican, he is interested in the success of his party, and served as county health officer of Clermont County for three years. He is designated examiner in the public health service for the United States Government, and has held this office for twenty years, and he is also president of the pension board of the United States at Burkesville. Early united with the Presbyterian Church, he has long been very active in the local congregation, of which he is now recognized as the main pillar, is an elder of it, and clerk of the sessions. Professionally he belongs to the Clermont County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. During the World war, in September, 1918, Doctor Talbot enlisted for service and was commissioned a captain in the medical corps. He was sent to Chickamauga Park, Georgia, later being transferred to Camp Meade, Maryland, where he spent five weeks, and then to Camp Sheridan, Alabama, for a month. He was honorably discharged from Camp Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky, in December, 1918, and returned home.

Doctor Talbot married at Louisville, Kentucky, in May, 1900, Miss Susan Owlsy, a daughter of W. F. Owlsy, Jr., and his wife, Mrs. Sarah (Alexander) Owlsy, and a sister of William Fayette Owlsy, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Talbot was graduated from Miss Nole's Seminary, one of the foremost finishing schools for young ladies. Doctor and Mrs. Talbot have had five children, namely: Sarah, who died in infancy; John G., who was born October 11, 1902, is a student in the Western Normal School of Bowling Green, Kentucky; James Alexander, who was born July 30, 1905, is a student of the Burkesville High School; Owlsy, who was born February 25, 1907, is attending the public schools; and Susan, who was born January 1, 1909, is also attending the public schools.

During the many years Doctor Talbot has lived at Burkesville he has become thoroughly identified with its best interests, and has never failed to take a public-spirited part in all movements which had for their legitimate object the betterment of existing conditions and the raising of the public moral standard. A skilled and very efficient physician and surgeon, he has earned the prestige which is his, and also the confidence and gratitude of his fellow men in numerous ways.

LESS McCOMAS. One of the results of the development of modern civilization is the creation of new lines of business to meet the demands of the people, and among them one which is attracting to it some of the best business men of the country is that connected with the storage and repair of automobiles. When the fact is realized that every sixth person in the country owns an automobile some idea can be obtained of the immense demand for the services of a garage. As the majority of these cars are in everyday use, and the owners of them demand first-class care of them, the men who own and operate garages naturally become those who are experts in the business. One of these men who are meeting with a well-merited success in his work at Burkesville is Less McComas.

Less McComas was born at Blacks Ferry, Cumberland County, Kentucky, June 4, 1897, a son of Dix McComas, and grandson of Jess McComas, a native of Virginia. Leaving the Old Dominion, Jess McComas became the pioneer of his family into this country and settled at Cloyds Landing, Cumberland County, where he bought a large amount of farm land and engaged in agricultural pursuits upon an extensive scale. He died on his farm before the birth of his grandson.

Dix McComas was born at Cloyds Landing in 1868, and was there reared, becoming a farmer and live stock dealer. He moved to Burkesville, where he still resides. Since leaving here he has been engaged in business as a heavy live stock trader, and still carries on his large farming interests, being very successful in both lines. He is also interested with his son in the Burkesville Garage, and is an extensive stockholder in various mercantile concerns of Burkesville. In fact, he is the leading business man of this part of the county. While he votes the democratic ticket, his large business interests have prevented his entering politics to any great extent, although he is much interested in the success of his party and firm in his determination to secure for Burkesville the advantages of proper civic improvements. For many years a strong factor in the Christian Church, he is now one of its deacons, and is very generous in his benefactions to the local congregation. Dix McComas married Gertrude Gentry, who was born at Blacks Ferry, Kentucky, in 1872. Their only child is Less McComas.

Growing up at Burkesville, Less McComas received his educational training in its public schools and was graduated from the Burkesville High School in 1917. Immediately thereafter he established himself in his present business, which is the leading one of its kind in Cumberland County. His store is located at the intersection of Columbia Square and Columbia Avenue, and is well-equipped in every particular. Mr. McComas is a natural born mechanic and finds pleasure as well as profit in his business. He owns a modern residence on Columbia Avenue, built in 1921, which is one of the most desirable and finest at Burkesville; and also a half interest in a farm in the western part of Burkesville. As this land is within the city limits it is very valuable property.

Following in the footsteps of his father, Mr. McComas is a member of the Christian Church and a democrat, and served as one of the town trustees of Burkesville during 1920. During the World war he took a useful part in all of the local war activities, and bought bonds and Savings Stamps and contributed to all of the war organizations to the fullest extent of his means.

In 1917 he married at Celina, Tennessee, Miss Agnes McGee, a daughter of L. W. McGee, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work. Mrs. McComas, who is a highly educated and charming young lady, was graduated from the Normal School; and Mrs. McComas has two children, Donald Keith, who was born in 1918; and Leslie, who was born in 1920.

WILLIAM TURNER CURTIS. A few years ago the visitor to the smaller communities of the country could not help but be impressed by the fact that so few of its business men could be called young. The call of the city and the lure of the more aggressive young men to its ranks, leaving the really important work in the hands of those who in the ordinary course of events would be thinking about taking life more easily. Now, however, the tide has turned in the other direction, and fortunately for the young men themselves, their elders and their home communities these younger men are remaining where their abilities are receiving proper recognition from those who know them and appreciate their possibilities. This condition is especially true at Burkesville, which is the scene of action of some very alert and successful young business men, the majority of whom have at their backs an honorable record of service, either as soldiers or public-spirited citizens during the World war. One of them is William Turner Curtis, a prosperous hardware merchant and a veteran of the war.

Mr. Curtis was born near Meshack, Monroe County, Kentucky, September 9, 1866, a son of J. U. Curtis. The father was born near Mount Hermon, Monroe County, Kentucky, in 1838, and was there reared and educated. He was married near Blacks Ferry, although in Monroe County. Then moving to the vicinity of Mount Hermon, he conducted a mercantile establishment at that point for one year, and then moved to Meshack, where he continued in the mercantile trade for six years. Becoming interested in agricultural matters, he bought a farm on the Cumberland River, in the vicinity of Meshack, and was engaged in operating it for six years. In the fall of 1908 he moved to a farm he had bought one mile west of Burkesville. This farm comprises 600 acres of very valuable land and on it he has since resided. Mr. Curtis also owns another farm, two miles southwest of Burkesville, that contains 300 acres, and is regarded as one of the most extensive farmers of this part of the state. In politics he is a democrat, but has never aspired to public honors, confining his party support to exercising his right of suffrage. Early uniting with the Christian Church, he has ever since given it an earnest and generous support and is one of the leading members. A Mason, he belongs to Cumberland Lodge No. 413, A. F. and A. M. J. U. Curtis married Sallie E. Gentry, who was born near Black's Ferry, Kentucky, in 1876. Mr. and Mrs. Curtis became the parents of the following children: Leon, who operates his father's farm of 300 acres, is a veteran of the World War, having served for eighteen months as a member of the Field Hospital Corps; Clyde, who is unmarried, lives with her parents; William Turner, who was the third in order of birth; Dixie, who died at the age of two years; Frank, who is assisting his brother W. T. in the hardware business; Ruby, who is a student of the Western Normal School at Bowling Green, Kentucky; Hazel and Helen, both of whom are students of the Burkesville graded school.

Granville, in Cumberland County, William Turner Curtis attended its rural schools and the graded and high schools of Burkesville, remaining in the latter through the sophomore year. Then, from 1917 to 1918, he was a student of the Bowling Green Business University. During the summer of 1918 he was employed on the farm home. In the meantime, August 1918, he had enlisted in the United States Navy, and was called up to active duty in October, 1918, and was sent to the Great Lakes Naval Station at Chicago, Illinois. The signing of the armistice, however, resulted in his being released December 15, 1918. During his period of service he was attached to the aviation branch of the navy. In May, 1919, he returned to Burkesville to become manager of the leading hardware store in Cumberland County. It is located on Columbia Avenue, on the Public Square. The business is owned by Mr. Curtis' father and his uncle, Dic McComas, and is in a flourishing condition. Mr. Curtis is a democrat, and has served as town trustee. He is a member of the Christian Church, in which faith he was reared. A Mason, he belongs to the same lodge as his father, Cumberland Lodge No. 413, A. F. and A. M. He also maintains membership with the American Legion. He owns a modern residence at Burkesville, where he maintains a comfortable home, and there he and his wife dispense a delightful hospitality to their many friends.

In June, 1919, Mr. Curtis married at Livermore, Kentucky, Miss Octavie Quigg, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Quigg. Mr. Quigg resides at Louisville, Kentucky, where he is engaged in a cooperage business. Mrs. Quigg is deceased. Mr. Curtis attended college at Union College, in Burkesville, for a year, and then for three years was a student of Randolph-Macon Woman's College at Lynchburg, Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Curtis have no children.

J. WALTER COLLINS. Throughout his career from the time that he left school J. Walter Collins has been before the people of Burkesville and Cumberland County in one or another official capacity, and since January, 1918, has occupied the office of clerk of the County Court. In fact, from the outset of his career he has been identified with this court, and his long connection therewith has been characterized by faithful and capable service which has gained him a high place in the confidence of all who have had business with that tribunal.

Mr. Collins was born in Cumberland County, June 17, 1881, a son of J. M. and Elizabeth (Heard) Collins, and is a member of a family which originated in Ireland and was founded in Virginia during Colonial times. W. C. Collins, the grandfather of J. Walter Collins, was born in Virginia in 1822, and as a young man came to Cumberland County and established the old family home on the bank of Mud Camp Creek. There he spent his life in agricultural pursuits and died in 1903. During the Civil War he served as a Union soldier throughout the struggle. He was a Republican in his political allegiance.

J. M. Collins, father of J. Walter Collins, was born in 1849 in Cumberland County, where he has passed his entire life. He followed farming until 1897, in which year he came to Burkesville and was elected County Court clerk, taking office in 1898 and remaining there for three terms of four years each. He was then elected county judge and served four years, after which he returned to farming for four years, and at the end of that time was appointed master commissioner of the Cumberland Circuit Court. He began acting in that capacity in January, 1918, for a term of six years, and in addition to the duties of that office also discharged those of the office of deputy court clerk. He is a stalwart republican in politics and a man of some influence in the ranks of his party. A life long member of the Christian Church, he is active in the work of that denomination. During the Civil war Mr. Collins served as a member of the Home Guards. In addition to his farm of ninety-three acres near Neely's Ferry, Cumberland County, he owns a modern residence on Lower River Street, Burkesville. Mr. Collins married Miss Elizabeth Heard, who was born in 1845 in Overton County, Tennessee, and died at Burkesville in 1903. They became the parents of eight children: O. C., who is engaged in general merchandising at Campbellville, Kentucky; Ova, who died at Alum Creek, Tennessee, as the wife of Elmore Wright, general workman of that place; Dorothy, who married W. S. Shelley, a farmer of Overton County, this state; J. Walter, who in this review; Franklin, who died at the age of nine years; Ida, the wife of Henry Thurman, a farmer of Burkesville; Wilkie, a carpenter of Cumberland County; and Mattie, the wife of G. H. Hoffman, a teacher in the public schools of Monroe County, Kentucky.

J. Walter Collins received his education in the rural schools of Cumberland County, which he left at the age of twenty years. In 1900 he was appointed deputy county court clerk, a position which he filled efficiently until 1918, when he assumed the duties of County Court clerk, an office to which he had been elected the preceding November. Taking office January 1, 1918, he assumed the responsibilities attaching thereto for a four-year term. In this position he has discharged his duties faithfully and well, fairly earning the confidence in which he is universally held. Mr. Collins' offices are in the Court House at Burkesville. From 1900 to 1918 he was also commissioner of the Cumberland Circuit Court. He is a republican in politics and a member and deacon of the Christian Church. As a fraternalist he holds membership in Cumberland Lodge No. 413, F. and A. M., Burkesville; Glenville Commandery No. 48, R. A. M., Glasgow; and Burkesville Camp, Modern Woodmen of America. He is the owner of a modern residence on Columbia Pike. Mr. Collins took an active part in war work, assisting all the drives and contributing thereto, and was a member of the committee in the Red Cross drive for funds.

On October 8, 1904, he was united in marriage with Miss Edna Jones, of Leslie, Kentucky, daughter of Mr. G. and Lela (Bow) Jones, farmers of near Burkesville. Four children have been born to this union; John Paul, born November 25, 1905, a student in the Burkesville graded school; Lela May, who died aged one and one-half years; Nocie E., who died aged one year; and James M., born July 25, 1913, attending the graded school.

HON. WILLIAM E. MILLER. The career of Hon. William E. Miller, of Burkesville, is one in which he has demonstrated the possession of qualities making for the highest type of public service. For many years he has been the incumbent of public offices of responsibility and trust, in all of which he has faithfully discharged the duties devolving upon him, and since 1920 has been a member of the bench in the capacity of county judge of Cumberland County.

Judge Miller was born September 15, 1838, in Cumberland County, Kentucky, a son of Clinton W. and Martha (Davis) Miller, and belongs to a family which originated in England and came to America during Colonial times, settling in Virginia. In that state was born the grandfather of Judge Miller, Jehu Miller, who moved with his family from Tennessee to Virginia, migrated to Cumberland County, Kentucky, and here followed farming during the remainder of a long and honorable career. Clinton W. Miller, the father of Judge Miller, was born in 1823 in Cumberland County, and as a youth learned the trade of carpenter. This he followed in his native locality until 1886, at which time he practically retired from active labor, although at one time he assisted in the building of the William Owlsley residence. He died at Burkesville in 1890, greatly honored and respected. Mr. Miller was a stalwart republican in his political views and a strong churchman of the Christian faith. He married Martha Davis, who was born in 1827 in Cumberland County, and died in that county in 1878. They became the parents of the following children: Mrs. N. E. Miller, of Raleigh, North Carolina, a physician and surgeon connected with the public health service of the United States Government; Mayne, a student in a technical school at Raleigh, North Carolina, who enlisted in the United States Navy in 1918, and for twelve months was stationed at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, Great Lakes, Illinois; Benton, a clergyman of the Presbyterian Church at Lexington, Nida and Kasey, students at Transylvania University, Lexington, Kentucky and Kingsley, attending the Burkesville High School.

N. S. Hume. Like numerous others who have attained to public distinction, N. S. Hume, of Burkesville, Circuit Court clerk of Cumberland County, began his career as a country school-teacher. In the years that followed he was engaged in a variety of occupations, but since 1912 has been the occupant of official offices in which he has displayed a high order of executive ability as well as elevated ideals of public service. He has occupied his present post since 1916, and his incumbency thereof has been characterized by able discharge of duty.

Mr. Hume was born at Cloyd's Landing, Cumberland County, Kentucky, January 4, 1870, and is a son of James and Caroline (Cloyd) Hume. This branch of the Hume family is of English descent, the original American ancestor having immigrated to the Colony of Virginia some years before the Revolutionary war. The grandfather of N. S. Hume, Charles Hume, was born in Virginia, whence he migrated as a youth to Knoxville, Tennessee, a community in which he was engaged in agricultural pursuits for many years. A few years before his death he moved to Cloyd's Landing, and there passed away at Cloyd's Landing. He married a Miss Nemo, who was born near Knoxville, Tennessee, and died at Atat, Cumberland County.

James Hume, the father of N. S., was born November 10, 1828, near Knoxville, Tennessee, and resided in that community until he was nineteen years of age, securing in the meanwhile a country school education. In 1872 he moved to Cumberland County, Kentucky, where he followed agricultural pursuits during the remainder of his life, his industry and ability combining to make him a well-to-do agriculturist. In politics he was a republican, and his strong religious support was given to the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in the faith of which he died August 13, 1902, at Cloyd's Landing. Mr. Hume married Miss Caroline Cloyd, who was born in 1836 at Cloyd's Landing, Cumberland County, Kentucky, a daughter of John Cloyd, of the family of Virginia, Captain Cloyd, after whom Cloyd's Landing was named, who was a pioneer in Cumberland County and a successful farmer, leading merchant and extensive tobacco dealer. He married a Miss O'Bannion. Mrs. Hume died June 7, 1882, leaving six children: John M., a farmer and ex-merchant of Bowling Green; W. T., who is engaged in farming near Glasgow; Lizzie, who died in February, 1889, as the wife of V. C. Pulliam, a farmer of Burkesville;
Etta, of Tompkinsville, Kentucky, the widow of Sherman Spear, who was a distinguished attorney of that place; N. S. of the Rev. David and Carrie, the wife of F. B. Harlan, a merchant of Ardmore, Oklahoma.

N. S. Hume was educated in the rural schools of his native community, supplementing this by attendance at the normal school at Tompkinsville, and at the age of twenty-one years became a teacher in the rural districts of Cumberland County, a vocation which he followed for three years. For two years thereafter he was employed as a clerk in the store of his brother, John M. Hume, at Cloyd's Landing, and then turned his attention to farming, in which he was engaged until 1909. In that year he came to Burkesville and at first was a clerk in a general store at this place, later becoming the operator of a flour mill. This occupation was followed by various others until 1912, when he became storekeeper and ganger in the United States internal revenue department, holding this position until 1915. In November of that year Mr. Hume was the successful candidate for the office of Circuit Court clerk, and entered upon the discharge of his duties January 3, 1916, for a term of six years. His record in this office has been an excellent one, and he has satisfactorily taken care of all the responsibilities that have devolved upon him. His offices are in the court house at Burkesville. A republican in politics, he has long been one of the stalwart supporters of his party in Cumberland County. While still residing at Cloyd's Landing he served four years in the capacity of justice of the peace. His religious connection is with the Christian Church, to which the members of his family also belong, and his fraternal affiliation is with Cumberland Lodge No. 413, F. and A. M., of which he has been secretary for six years. He owns a modern home on Celina Street. During the World War he did his full part as a 100 per cent American citizen, and was an active worker, all the drives.

On October 2, 1803, at Celina, Tennessee, Mr. Hume was united in marriage with Miss Maggie McCoy, a daughter of M. L. and Margaret (Coe) McCoy, the former a retired farmer of Cloyd's Landing and the latter now deceased. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hume: Winnie, the wife of B. T. Cloyd, a farmer and superintendent of a flour spar mine at Marion, Kentucky; Carrie, residing at home; a teacher in the public schools; and at the Western Normal School at Bowling Green; and Glee, who graduated from the Burkesville High School in 1920 and is now a student of the Western Normal School.

Charles Reuben Hicks. In the arena of political preferment, with its accompaniments of antagonism and jealousy; in the effort, professionally, to maintain order and method in a strenuous and overwrought age, it may be said of Charles Reuben Hicks, county attorney of Cumberland County, that he has kept faith with the people and with himself, and shown a singleness of purpose and clarity of ideals beyond the average thus endowed. During the several terms that he has occupied his present office he has discharged the duties thereof in a manner which has won public confidence and esteem and has added to the reputation which he gained as a private practitioner of his profession.

Mr. Hicks was born in Cumberland County, October 31, 1861, the son of John and Margaret Hicks. His grandfather, Anthony Hicks, was born in Powhatan County, Virginia, where he was reared and married, and resided on a plantation for several years, and in 1822 brought his family to Cumberland County, where he followed farming for more than thirty years. In 1854 he moved to Missouri, where his death occurred in the 1870s. Mr. Hicks married Cynthia Maxey, also a native of Powhatan County, Virginia, who died in Cumberland County, Kentucky, during the 1890s. Reuben Hicks, father of Charles Reuben, was born in Powhatan County, Virginia, in 1812, and was about ten years of age when brought to Cumberland County, where he was reared and educated. As a youth he adopted the profession of an educator, and had the distinction of teaching the first free school class ever organized in Cumberland County. His entire life was devoted to instructing the young, and when he died, at the age of ninety-six years, in April, 1909, twenty years after his retirement from his profession, had a record of having taught in seventy-two elections to this and the two preceding days of the war between the states served in the State Militia with the rank of regimental captain. In politics he was a stalwart republican.

Reuben Hicks was a man of strong and virile qualities, fearless, courageous and conscientious, and during his long and honorable career did much to encourage the principles of morality, education, religion and good citizenship. His death took from Cumberland County one of its most active and helpful citizens. Hicks married Margaret Smith, who was born in 1833 in Cumberland County, and who survives him as a resident of the old home farm eight miles northeast of Burkesville. They were the parents of eleven children: Susan, the wife of Charles Jennings, a mechanic of Omaha, Arkansas; William A., a general workman, who died in Cumberland County at the age of twenty-six years; Mattie, the wife of W. T. Goff, a farmer of Cumberland County; Frances Clayton, a timberman of Cumberland County; Cynthia, who married first Rev. William P. Coop, a clergymen of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and after his death married A. Morrison, a farmer of Cumberland County; George Richard, a farmer of this county; Ardenie, the wife of James Melton, a farmer of Oklahoma; John Edwards, who operates the old home farm with his brother Timothy F.; Charles Reuben, of whose notice we have written; a farmer of Cumberland County, who met his death in 1866 by drowning in the Cumberland River, three miles north of Burkesville; and Timothy F., who assists in the operation of the home farm.

The educational training of Charles Reuben Hicks, as applies to school attendance, was confined to the rural institutions of Cumberland County and the public school at Burkesville, his boyhood and youth being divided between his studies and work on the home farm. At the age of twenty-one years he adopted the profession of his father, that of teaching, and this he followed for a period of eleven years, during which he built up a reputation as one of the most efficient and popular educators in the country districts. Mr. Hicks, however, had ambitions for the legal profession, and during his leisure hours applied himself industriously to that study, with such distinguished success that in 1902 he was admitted to the bar and opened an office at Burkesville. Here he has had a constantly growing practice in general civil and criminal jurisprudence. In November, 1904, he was elected county attorney of Cumberland County, to fill out an unexpired term of one year, and in November, 1905, was reelected for a full term of four years, taking office in January, 1906. He was again elected in November, 1907, taking office in January, 1918, for a four-year term, and in November, 1921, again became a candidate for the county attorneyship, without opposition. His offices are in the Court House at Burkesville. Mr. Hicks' tendency is toward a simplicity of legal interpretation and toward the establishment of those conditions which deepen the channels of human brotherhood. His gifts for usefulness are stable and many-sided.
In political matters Mr. Hicks supports the principles and policies of the republican party. As a fraternalist he belongs to Cumberland Lodge No. 413, F. and A. M., of which he has been worshipful master six times; Columbia (Kentucky) Chapter No. 8, R. A. M.; Columbia Council, R. and S. M.; Burkesville Lodge No. 156, I. O. O. F., of which he is a past grand; Burkesville Masonic Lodge, M. W. A.; and Burkesville Chapter No. 160, O. E. S., of which he has been worthy patron for the past nine years. He owns a one-half interest in a farm of 103 acres in Cumberland County, and has a number of business connections. Always a supporter of worthy movements, during the World war period he distinguished himself by his activity in wartime enterprises for the support of the country’s fighting forces. He has the distinction of being the only man in the county at present, without being on the books of the county, out of charge, for the recruited men than any other person in Cumberland County; was chairman of the War Chest Fund drive in the county, which, when $1,300 was needed, responded with $2,200; and in various other ways assisted every movement by his abilities, time and means. Mr. Hicks is unmarried.

Mrs. Cora (Simpson) Payne. In days like the present, as never before, the world has reason to acknowledge that among the noblest lives led are those of women, and whether they lay claim to equality in life’s opportunities or do not matters little in assemblings facts. Few there are with enlightened minds who will not concede brilliant intellect, warm sense of justice and integrity as the properties of the women who have followed, rather than accompanied, man on his way. The changing time has wrought may be said to have broadened her sphere in her widened area of influence and in her achievements that blossom in every field. This may not be discounted. These reflections come easily when considering the usefulness and efficiency of a life like that chosen by Mrs. Cora (Simpson) Payne, of Burkesville, whose super-intendency over the Cumberland County public schools has been of such profound importance to the cause of education in this county.

Mrs. Payne was born on a farm ten miles southeast of Burkesville, Cumberland County, a daughter of J. J. and Justina (Marcom) Simpson, and a member of a family which came from Ireland to America during Colonial times and settled in Virginia. William Simpson, father of Mrs. Payne, was born in Cumberland County, where his father had settled on his pioneer arrival from Virginia, and there passed his entire life as an agriculturist, the grandfather dying in 1887. J. P. Simpson was born in 1845 in Cumberland County, where he was reared and educated, and when still a mere youth enlisted in the Union Army for service during the war between the states, joining Company E, Fifth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Infantry. He remained with this regiment throughout the period of the war, participating in such engagements as Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge, and established a commendable record for valor and faithful performance of duty. On his return to the life of a civilian he took up farming as an occupation, and after his wife’s death established a home and settled down to an agricultural career. However, he entered enterprises that made him desirable as the incumbent of public offices, and he was called by his fellow citizens to the post of county assessor, following which he served as county clerk and finally as county judge of Cumberland County, filling these positions for nineteen years consecutively. He took a prominent and influential part in republican politics, won the respect and esteem of associates and opponents alike, and in 1906 retired to Columbia, Kentucky, with an honorable record for splendid public service. Mr. Simpson is a very active worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and belongs to the Masonic fraternity and the Grand Army of the Republic. He married Justina Marcom, who was born in 1849, in Cumberland County, Kentucky, and they became the parents of the following children: Elizabeth, the wife of W. J. Payne, a farmer of Ellensburg, Washington; Edna, of Livingston, Tennessee, the widow of Dr. W. H. Thrasher, a physician and surgeon who died at Albany, Kentucky; W. B., who is engaged in general merchandising at Missoula, Montana; G. B., the proprietor of a pharmacy at Rice, Texas; B. L., an attorney at Burkesville; Cora, who is now Mrs. Payne, of this review; Berrie, the wife of James Briley, secretary of a large corporation at Walla Walla, Washington; Otis, a railroad agent at Ellensburg, Washington; and Marvin A., a farmer of Leonard, Texas.

Cora Simpson received excellent educational advantages in her youth, first attending the public schools at Burkesville, later Alexander College at the same place, the University of Chicago, and the Indiana University School, now the Western State Normal School, at Bowling Green, Kentucky, where she completed the junior year. She then entered Valparaiso University, at Valparaiso, Indiana, from which she was graduated with the class of 1905, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. This was followed by postgraduate work at the University of Chicago; Illinois during the summer session of 1905. Her first practical experience of a public educator came as a teacher in the Lindsay-Wilson Training School at Columbia, Kentucky, where she spent one year, and following this she taught in the public schools of Burkesville until 1914. In November, 1913, her abilities were recognized by her election to the office of county superintendent of schools of Cumberland County, and she has held this position ever since. Her work during her first term of office was of such a satisfactory character that in November, 1917, she was re-elected for another term of four years, beginning in January, 1918. Under Mrs. Payne’s supervision are fifty-six schools, fifty-eight teachers and approximately 3,300 pupils. In the conduct of her office she has put many of her personal ideas into operation and has been responsible for innovations which have been greatly beneficial to the school system in the county. She is greatly popular with teachers and pupils alike, and while a strict disciplinarian her sound sense of justice has been responsible for the bringing about of a feeling of understanding and co-operation that has done much to advance the public school cause and the general efficiency of the system. Mrs. Payne’s offices are in the Court House at Burkesville, and she is a member of the United Order of Odd Fellows, and belongs to Burkesville Chapter No. 160, O. E. S.; the Women’s Christian Temperance Union and the Kentucky Educational Association. An active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for a number of years she has taught a class in the Sunday School.

On June 25, 1906, occurred the marriage of Miss Cora Simpson to C. R. Payne at Columbia, Kentucky. Mr. Payne was born in Barren County, Kentucky, and received his education in the public schools of Glasgow and the Kentucky Wesleyan College. Becoming a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he filled the pulpit of the church of that denomination at Burkesville for four years, then being made business manager of the Lindsay-Wilson Training School, a position in which he remained until 1906. During the following year he preached at Davis, West Virginia, and in 1907 came to Burkesville. At present he is engaged, in the operation of his large and valuable farm located fourteen miles south of the county seat. He is a democrat in politics and is fraternal ally affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. and Mrs. Payne are the parents of one child, Justina, born May 20, 1908.

Mr. Payne formerly married Miss Dora Huddleston, daughter of Dr. J. B. and Virginia (Rainy) Huddleston, both now deceased, the former having been a physician and surgeon of southern Cumberland County, where he was likewise engaged in farming. Mrs. Dora Payne died in 1904, at Columbia, having been the mother of twin daughters: Dimple, now a student at Berea (Kentucky) College; and Dora, who died at the age of eleven years.

Bolivar Bond for a number of years was a merchant in Woodford County, but his chief success has been earned during the past dozen years as a real estate operator, and particularly as a real estate auctioneer, with a degree of success in that line little less than phenomenal.

Mr. Bond, whose home is at Versailles, was born in Anderson County, Kentucky, February 24, 1827. His father, Rev. Preston Bond, was a noted itinerant minister of the Methodist Church in the early days, who covered all the mountainous sections of Kentucky and for some years was a settled pastor of the church at Lawrenceburg. He died at the age of seventy-six at his old home in Anderson County, being then on the superannuated list. Rev. Preston Bond was a cousin of the father of J. R. Bond, a business man at Nonesuch in Woodford County. Rev. Preston Bond married Belinda F. Arthur, of Barbourville, Kentucky. She was a sister of the late Edward F. Arthur, to whose career a special sketch is devoted.

Bolivar Bond was educated in the Lawrenceburg High School and Normal and at the age of twenty-one began teaching in Mercer County, where he remained two years, and he taught one term of school at Nonesuch in Woodford County. He there opened a store in partnership with J. R. Bond and continued active in that business, building it up to large and successful proportions for some fifteen or sixteen years. He had full charge of the store while his business partner was away in Canada for several years.

It was in 1867 that Mr. Bond began his real estate business at Versailles. His work has become widely extended all over the Blue Grass, his business has handled farm lands and has done much platting and subdivision work. He is a member of the Fidelity Realty Company and was also actively associated with the syndicate which bought the Ashland tract, the old home of Henry Clay, and made this one of the most successful subdivisions marketed within recent years. Mr. Bond was auctioneer in the sale of this tract. He still holds the Keanoid property, his business has now associated with his two sons, James E. and Doc Bond. The firm became Bolivar Bond & Sons in 1918. In that year they sold more than nine and a half million dollars’ worth of real estate, chiefly farm property, consisting of 36,791 acres and bringing an average of over two hundred and fifty dollars an acre. These transactions covered practically the entire Blue Grass section, and with few exceptions the land was all sold at auction. In several cases Mr. Bond has been the selling agent for one owner through a period of years. While he began his business on a small scale, his reputation is now well established all over Kentucky. His son, Doc Bond, is a graduate of an auction school, and is the right-hand lieutenant of his father, while his son, James E. Bond, was a member of the United States Field Artillery, Nineteenth Division, in the World war, having enlisted in May, 1918, and was honorably discharged in February, 1919, and is an expert clerk of sales.

Recently Mr. Bond erected a beautiful home at Versailles, at a cost of $27,000. He has never been in politics, is a member of the Masonic order. His son, James, is also a Mason, and he and his sons are all members of the Knights of Pythias.

At the age of nineteen Mr. Bond married Helen Dean, of Mercer County, daughter of the late Strother and Elizabeth (Jones) Dean. The former was a land owner of that county. Mr. and Mrs. Bond’s four children, all at home, are Helen T., a graduate of Margaret College at Versailles, James E., Doc, and Jesse Lillard.

Edward F. Arthur was a Kentuckian distinguished by his high character as well as by notable experiences and achievements. He died at his home at Williamsburg, March 11, 1921, at the age of ninety-one.

Mr. Arthur was born in Knox County, Kentucky, June 12, 1830, youngest child of Ambrose and Anne Gilbert (Fletcher) Arthur, the latter a native of South Carolina, while his father came from Virginia and settled in Knox County in 1803. The Arthurs are a notable family of Old Virginia as well as Kentucky. John Arthur was governor of Summer Isle in 1630. In 1638 Governor Sir James Berkeley granted land to his brother South of the James River, where the Arthurs remained 100 years. In 1780 Governor Jefferson made a grant of land in Western Virginia to Col. Thomas Arthur, a Revolutionary hero and grandfather of the late Edward Arthur. Colonel Arthur died and is buried in Knox County. From the early Indian wars to the World war each generation of the Arthurs has furnished soldiers and staunch patriots. Ambrose Arthur, father of the late Edward Arthur, was a month old when the Revolution broke out and in the War of 1812 he commanded a company of volunteers from Knox County and was at Tippiecano and the River Raisin, was one of those who escaped from the defeat and massacre known as Dudley’s Defeat, and subsequently, under General William Henry Harrison, invaded Canada and participated in the battle of the Thames.

Edward F. Arthur from his parents and ancestors inherited length of days and vigor of mental faculties and a robust constitution, and while his life was spent in practical affairs he was also a reader and a keen observer, and a man of unusual information outside the routine of his experience. At the age of sixteen he volunteered his service in the war with Mexico, and after the close of hostilities he was in garrison duty for a term in the City of Mexico. He was a California forty-niner, crossing the plains with some of the early parties that sought a fortune in the gold mines of the West. He returned by way of Panama and New Orleans, and later made a second trip over the plains and came back by way of Nicaragua. A few years later he again took up arms, this time as a Southern soldier, and for four years was with the Confederate army, the City of Mexico close in debt, a ragged veteran, with nothing left but his hope of courage and honor. He met the changed conditions and the difficult problems bravely, and reared and educated eleven children, to whom he left the fair record of an upright and brave life. In all the changing fortunes of a long career his courage never left him and his character was one of absolute sincerity and faithfulness to all obligations. May 1, 1860, he married Susan Hunt, of Anderson County. Of their six sons and five daughters, nine survived with their mother. Mr. Arthur was an uncle of Bolivar Bond, of Versailles, of whom brief mention is made in the preceding sketch.

William C. Keen, M. D. There is no profession to which men devote themselves more dignified in its ethics or more devoted to the benefit of mankind than medicine. Similar claims are made by the church and by the law, but they, while essentially true enough in their assertions, are based on other foundations. The healing art demands of its real followers that natural reverence for the human body that commands the exercise of all the skill that years of study and training have brought to them. Methods may differ, systems may be quite at variance, and in a large number of cases the results for much, but the aim and principle remain the same. Among the members of the medical profession well known in Cumberland County is Dr. William C. Keen, whose skill and faithfulness, together with his determined helpfulness and cheerfulness, have made his presence valued in many households during the last quarter of a century, which period has covered his residence at Burkesville.
William C. Keen was born in Cumberland County, July 30, 1823, a son of John F. and Louisa (Neathery) Keen. The Keen family is of Scotch-Irish origin and was founded in Colonial Virginia prior to the War of the Revolution. Sampson Keen, the grandfather of Doctor Keen, was born in Virginia and as a young man migrated to Cumberland County, where he spent the rest of his life as a farmer and a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was a successful agriculturist because of his energy and business ability, and his good citizenship was displayed on all occasions. Originally a democrat, the issues of the Civil war caused him to change his views to some extent and he became an independent republican. Mr. Keen was a member of the Masonic fraternity. He died November 13, 1892.

He married Louisa Neathery, who was born in 1832 in Clinton County, Kentucky, and died in Cumberland County August 5, 1895. They became the parents of eleven children: Ellen J., deceased, who was the wife of the late Littleton Ballou, a farmer and merchant of Russell County, where both passed away; Dr. William C.; Lucetta, who died in infancy; Burletta A., deceased, who was the wife of Alvin A. Marrowbone, a farmer and surgeon of Metcalfe County; and both died; Helen, deceased, who was the wife ofMin Smith, a farmer of Clinton County, where both died; Dr. Wilbur Thomas, deceased, who was a physician of Cumberland County; Austin Bryant, deceased, who was a farmer of near Burkesville and at one time sheriff of Cumberland County; Robert S., deceased, who was a blacksmith of Cumberland County; who is still living; and six other children.

Louisa Frances, who died at the age of twenty-two years; and Sarah, who died in infancy.

William C. Keen acquired his early education in the rural schools of Cumberland County, and at the age of twenty-three years began teaching in the country districts of Cumberland and Clinton counties. While thus engaged he attended the public school at Burkesville, and later entered the Kenmore Seminary at Louisville, where he spent one year. He next enrolled as a student in the medical department of the University of Tennessee, at Nashville, from which he was graduated in the spring of 1850, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He has continued to be a student of his profession, and in 1885 took another post-graduate course, studying general medicine and surgery in the Postgraduate Medical School of Chicago.

In 1886, immediately after securing his diploma, Doctor Keen began the practice of his calling at Rowena, Russell County, Kentucky, but remained in that community only eighteen months, going then to Albany, Clinton County, where he was engaged in more extensive practice. In 1893 he took up his residence at Burkesville, where he has since built up a large general medical and surgical practice and has worked his way to a leading place among the medical men of Cumberland County. His offices are situated over Brake & Carr's drug store, on the Public Square, where he has a large medical library and a well-equipped surgical operating room. During the past ten years he has served as health officer of Cumberland County, and for a number of years was United States pension examiner. He is a member of the Cumberland County Medical Society, of which he was secretary for twelve years, until his recent resignation, of the Kentucky State Medical Society and of the American Medical Association. A stalwart republican in his political tendencies, Doctor Keen has taken a leading and prominent part in local affairs, and in 1901 was elected to the State Legislature, representing Cumberland and Adair counties in that body during the session of 1902. He is a member and steward of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and as a fraternalist holds membership in Cumberland Lodge No. 413, F. and A. M., of Burkesville; and Clinton Chapter No. 57, R. A. M., of Albany.

He is the owner of a comfortable residence on High Street. The World war period found him active in various movements. He was special advisor to the United States Government in regard to the advisability of sending physicians of this section into the service or retaining them in their home communities, where they would be more useful. In addition to helping in the drives he was a liberal contributor to all causes.

On September 15, 1881, Doctor Keen married Miss Exona Ballou, daughter of John and Frances (Grider) Ballou, both of whom are deceased, Mr. Ballou having been a Russell County farmer. Doctor and Mrs. Keen have four children: Littleton Oscar, who volunteered for the World war and was sent to Fort Riley, Kansas, where he entered the infantry; and John, who is a student in the University of Kentucky; and Oscar, who is a student in the Medical Department of the University of Louisville.

William Sherman Taylor, M. D., one of the skilled and deeply appreciated physicians and surgeons of Cumberland County, is carrying on an extensive practice at Marrowbone. He was born at Gens Fork, Adair County, Kentucky, October 31, 1865, a son of George and Mary (McClellan) Taylor, who was born in Adair County in 1837, and died at Gens Fork in 1888. Their children were as follows: James R., who was a physician and surgeon, died at Columbia, Kentucky, aged twenty-three years; B. F., who died at Columbia, aged sixty-three years, and he, too, was a physician and surgeon; T. Z., who was a farmer, died at Gens Fork, aged sixty-one years; Fannie, who married Dr. J. J. Dyche; and Amos W., who married Mrs. H. B. Garrett, a farmer of Columbia; Dr. W. S., who was the fifth in order of birth; Mary McClellan, who died at the age of one year; Bruce, who is in the timber business, lives in the mountains of Kentucky; Richard, who died in infancy; and Lena, who lives at Columbia, married George McMahan, a poultry dealer.

Dr. Taylor has also attended the rural schools of Adair County, and lived on his father's farm until 1883. In that year he entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, and was graduated therefrom in 1888, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. In that year he began the practice of his profession at East Fork, Metcalfe County, Kentucky, but after three years moved to Gens Fork, and remained there for fifteen years. In 1904 he came to Marrowbone, and has since then built up a very desirable medical and surgical practice. He owns his modern residence on Main Street. He is a republican, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and lives up to his firm convictions in politics and religion. Professionally he belongs to the Cumberland County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. During the late war he took a zealous part in the local war activities, assisted in all of the drives, and boughtgenerously of the bonds and stamps and contributed to the various war organizations to the full limit of his means.

In 1888 Doctor Taylor married at Glens Fork Miss Lillian Blair, a daughter of James B. and Arminta (Wilson) Blair, both deceased. Mr. Blair was a farmer of Adair County. Doctor and Mrs. Taylor have three children, namely: Carrie, who married Flowers Parish, a farmer of Bakerton, Kentucky; Gladys, who married Dennis Smith, a farmer of the vicinity of Marrowbone; and Ray, who lives with his parents.

Doctor Taylor has not only established his reputation as dependable medical man, but has also won and holds the affection of those to whom he has so faithfully ministered and the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens. In every movement in his community which has for its object the betterment of existing conditions and the maintenance of a high moral standard he is sure to be found in the van of progress, for he recognizes the fact that in order to get the best out of life and preserve health it is necessary to advance in every possible way.

WALTER A. ARMSTRONG, one of the leading business men of Creelsboro, has very valuable farming and oil interests in Russell County, and is developing them in a manner which yields him profit and prestige in his community. He was born at Livingston, Tennessee, October 17, 1869, a son of William J. Armstrong, grandson of Thomas N. Armstrong, great-grandson of London Armstrong, a farmer, and great-great-grandson of James Armstrong, who commanded a regiment under General Washington during the American Revolution, and in return for his military service was accorded large grants of land located near the mouth of Wolf River in Tennessee. He moved to this land, developed a valuable and extensive plantation, and died on it.

The Armstrong family was founded in this country during the Revolutionary War, by a soldier who came here from England and settled in Virginia.

Landon Armstrong was born near the mouth of Wolf River, Tennessee, and died near Monroe, Tennessee, having been an extensive farmer and large slave owner. His son, Thomas N. Armstrong, was born near Monroe, Tennessee, in 1809, and died there in 1869, having passed his life in this vicinity. He was a distinguished lawyer, a well-educated man, having graduated from Center College, Danville, Kentucky, and at one time served as attorney general of Tennessee. In addition to his professional duties he owned and operated a large amount of farm land. Thomas N. Armstrong married Mary Cullom, who was born near Monroe, Tennessee, and there died when her son, William J. Armstrong, was a child.

William J. Armstrong was born at Livingston, Tennessee, June 1, 1869. Growing up at Livingston, he was here married, engaged in merchandising, continuing in business there until 1871, when he moved to Creelsboro and continued his merchandising until death, developing a large and important business connection. Both as a democrat and member of the Christian Church he lived up to his strong convictions of right and wrong, and was a very active supporter of the church. He was equally zealous as a Mason and one who was held in every respect. He married Rebecca M. Keeton, who was born at Livingston, Tennessee, in 1847, and died at New Bern, North Carolina, in September, 1917. Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong had the following children: Walter A., who was the oldest; Effie, who married J. D. Babcock and resides in South Carolina, where her husband is engaged in practice as a physician and surgeon; William R., who is a dentist surgeon of Knoxville, Tennessee; Ernest C., who is a real estate and physician and surgeon of New Bern, North Carolina; Alfred P., who is a physician and surgeon of New Mexico; Roy M., a physician and surgeon of Creelsboro.

After attending the rural schools of Russell County Walter A. Armstrong became a student of the high school at Celina, Tennessee, and later at that at Albany, Kentucky. He then entered Transylvania University at Lexington, Kentucky, but left it in 1889 and was employed as a bookkeeper at Fort Wayne, Indiana, for six months. For the following three years he was a clerk on steamboats operating on the Cumberland River. In 1892 he located permanently at Creelsboro and began to farm, and is still so occupied. He now owns 1,000 acres of farming and oil land situated near Creelsboro, on the bank of the Cumberland River, which is extremely valuable. In addition to this property he is also extensively engaged in the lumber business, and for a year was engaged in merchandising at Creelsboro, but sold the business. He has six producing wells on his farm and is drilling another one. His modern residence is located on his farm and is thoroughly up-to-date, as are all of his buildings, and here he and family enjoy life. He is a democrat. While not a member, he affiliates with the Christian Church and is generous in his donations toward its support. During the late war he took an active part in all of the local work, helping in all of the drives and buying War Savings Stamps and contributing to all of the war organizations to the full extent of his means.

In August, 1902, Mr. Armstrong married Miss Cora Campbell, a daughter of John W. and Mary O. (Helm) Campbell, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Campbell was a farmer and live-stock dealer near Creelsboro. Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong have one child, Effie, who married J. O. Miller and lives near Crcous, Adair County, Kentucky. Mr. Miller is a merchant.

FRED BESHEAR. It is a far cry from the primitive makeshift wooden coffin knocked together by a local cabinetmaker or carpenter and the kindly offices of the neighbors, which were all that could be accorded the departed in pioneer days, and the elegant casket and dignified and scientific service rendered by the modern funeral director. It would not be true to say that this generation holds its dead in more affection or respect, but it is correct to state that this age has made wonderful advancement in the method of handling this extremely important matter, and that much of this progress is due to the intelligence and efforts of the men who have directed their capabilities along these lines. It would be difficult to find today a community too small to command the services of a modern undertaker, and in one of the size and importance of Dawson Springs the men representing the profession rank with the best in the state. One who is an honor to his calling and community is Fred Beshear, who in addition to maintaining and operating a thoroughly modern undertaking establishment also handles furniture.

Fred Beshear was born on a farm one mile north of Dawson Springs, February 6, 1879, a son of J. R. Beshear, and grandson of Thomas Beshear, who was born in Hopkins County, Kentucky near Dawson Springs. He is one of the pioneer farmers of this neighborhood, and owned the land upon which a portion of the City of Dawson Springs now stands. It was his father, the great-grandfather of Fred Beshear, who brought the family into Hopkins County, and here ever since the members of this honored family have taken a constructive part in the development of this region.

J. R. Beshear was born near Dawson Springs in 1838, and was reared in the neighborhood. Early in life he was an educator, and taught school in Hopkins and Caldwell counties, but after a number of years of successful endeavor in this field he moved to his farm located a mile north of Dawson Springs, and conducted it until a few years ago, and was also interested in other farming properties nearby. In 1895 he moved to Dawson Springs, where he has since resided, being engaged in general labor. He is a democrat in his political faith. Isla, a devout Christian, carrying his creed into his everyday life and setting an example of uprightness all would do well to emulate. J. R. Beshear married Nancy E. English, who was born in Caldwell County in 1851. She died at Dawson Springs in 1905, having borne her husband the following children: Fred, who is the oldest born; Tennie, who first married Arthur Ridley, a farmer, and after his death she married John Allen, a farmer, and they live at Dawson Springs; Lennie Jane, who married B. F. Dame, a carpenter and coal miner, lives at Dawson Springs; Ed., who is a clergyman of the Primitive Baptist Church, lives in Marshall County, Kentucky; Emma, who died at the age of seventeen years; and Alice, who died the age of five years.

Fred Beshear remained on the farm until he reached his majority, and in the meanwhile he attended the rural schools of Hopkins County. Until 1904 he was occupied in doing general work in the timber and in farming, but in that year he came to Dawson Springs and embarked in a grocery business, buying and selling in a small way, which he justly prized, and sold at a profit at the end of four years. He then organized the firm of Clark, Beshear & Clark, and undertook, of which he is general manager and active head of the firm. This is the leading establishment of its kind in this section of the state, and orders come to it from a wide area. The store is located at 108 South Railroad Avenue, is a democrat, and served on his party ticket as mayor of Dawson Springs for the year 1919, giving his city a sound and businesslike administration. He is a member of the Primitive Baptist Church, and is one of the active promoters of the local congregation. During the late war he was zealous in behalf of the various drives for raising funds and subscribed to all of them until he would go beyond. He married Mrs. M. Belle Bozeman, who was born July 11, 1864, and is a student in the Dawson Springs High School. She has proven herself a brilliant pupil, and will graduate from high school and in music when only sixteen years of age.

Isaac Newton Day, president of the Commercial Bank of Dawson Springs, is one of the experienced bankers and solid men of Hopkins County, whose association with this institution gives it added strength and prestige and his connection therewith will have him classed in a conservative and dependable manner. Mr. Day is a native son of Hopkins County, for he was born on a farm within its confines, located eight miles east of Dawson Springs, January 26, 1857.

The Day family is one of the old-established ones of America and was founded in this country by its representative who came to Virginia from England during the Colonial epoch. The grandfather of Mr. Day, Evans Day, was born in Virginia and died in Roanoke County of that commonwealth prior to the birth of his grandson, having large property interests in that region and being a planter upon an extensive scale.

The father of Mr. Day, John Day, was born in Roanoke County, Virginia, in 1822, and the City of Roanoke stands today on the site of his birthplace. His death occurred on the farm he bought eight miles east of Dawson Springs, May 4, 1884. Reared and educated in his native county, John Day left it in 1847 and sought new surroundings and broader opportunities in Hopkins County. His hopes were amply realized and he became one of the most successful and wealthy men of his neighborhood. In politics he was always a strong democrat. The Church was his inspiration through youth. John Day married in Hopkins County, Ilgeretta Hamby, who was born in Hopkins County in 1826, on the farm adjoining the one later purchased by Mr. Day, on which she died in 1888. Their children were as follows: John Thompson, who is a retired farmer of Dawson Springs; James E., who was associated with his brother Isaac N. in a mercantile business and was a farmer, died at Jacksonville, Florida; Isaac Newton, whose name heads this review; Mary Jane, who married Frank Sisk, a farmer, died at Earlington, Kentucky, as did her husband; and Alice L., who married Claude Oldham, foreman of a coal business of Earlington, Kentucky.

In 1881 Newton Day went to Forest Home College in Jefferson County, Kentucky, for two years after he had completed his attendance at the rural schools of Hopkins County, and then, in the spring of 1889, returned home and began farming and teaching school, and for six years kept himself occupied both winter and summer. In 1889 he established himself in a mercantile business at Saint Charles, Kentucky, but a year later sold his store to Lowry & Wood, the other partner and concluded that he would find success in the business arena rather than in the schoolroom. Coming to Dawson Springs in 1891 he established what grew to be the leading mercantile establishment of Hopkins County. Always progressive, he has endeavored to be a little ahead of the times, and was the first man to put in a glass show-case in the business. In 1904 he opened up his store and made many valuable innovations. In 1912 Mr. Day sold his business so as to devote his time and attention to his banking interests, for he had in 1907 entered the Commercial Bank of Dawson Springs as president, having been one of the organizers of the bank and has been its chief executive for a number of years. The officers of the bank are as follows: Isaac Newton Day, J. F. Herrick, vice-president, and Hal Hardin, cashier. The bank has a capital of $20,000, a surplus and profits of $25,000, and deposits of $500,000. Its resources are over $500,000. The banking house is located on South Main Street, in the center of the business district of Dawson Springs.

Mr. Day is a democrat, served as a member of the Commercial, and for fifteen years has been a member of the School Board. A Unitarian, he is very active in his support of the local congregation. He owns a modern residence on Hunter Street, between Kegan Street and Railroad Avenue, and is it one of the best at Dawson Springs. In addition to this he owns a number of dwellings and other real estate, including two brick business blocks in the city. Mr. Day was the first man to have a house with a pressed brick front, and there are many other instances which could be cited to show how active he has been in developing and improving his community. He owns three farms in Hopkins County and one in Caldwell County, Kentucky, and two farms in the State of Mississippi. During the late war he was one of the zealous, patriotic local leaders, and frequently made speeches throughout the county in behalf of the cause. In addition to the work he did as an individual the bank under his direction was a strong factor in bringing the quota of Hopkins County up to the amount assigned in all of the drives.

In addition to other interests Mr. Day is secretary and treasurer of the Dawson Pharmacal Company, a successful and growing concern of the city; is president of the Business Men's Association, which under his supervision has become one of the most potent bodies of its kind for a town of this size in the state, and is a director of the Auditorium of Dawson Springs.

On March 5, 1901, Mr. Day married at Paducah, Kentucky, Miss Ella M. Baker, a daughter of S. W. and Jane (Miller) Baker, residents of Princeton, Kentucky, the former being a retired farmer, Mr. and Mrs. Day have two children: John S., who was born January 7, 1902, is a student of the Marion Institute, at Annsville, Illinois; and Roy B., who was born August 12, 1906. Mr. Day was one of the factors in bringing the Great Methodist Hospital to Dawson Springs.

Frank G. Wake. Among the prominent men of Madisonville, using the term in its broadest sense to indicate business and financial leaders, a sterling character, public and civic, and upright citizenship, is Frank G. Wake, vice president of the Farmers National Bank of Madisonville and a leading tobacco warehouse owner and operator. Mr. Wake was born in Nicholas County, Kentucky, where his mother was visiting at the time, December 22, 1861, a son of R. W. Wake, and belongs to a family which originated in England and settled in Colonial days in North Carolina, where, in the county bearing the family name, was born the grandfather of Frank G. Wake, Dr. Ambrose Wake. Ambrose Wake was a physician and surgeon who was a pioneer into Webster County, Kentucky, whence he went to the vicinity of Cerulean Springs, but later returned to Webster County and passed near Providence, his death being caused by the complications which followed the sting of a "yellow-jacket." Dr. Ambrose Wake married Miss Mary Calmes, who was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, and died near Cerulean Springs.

R. W. Wake was born in 1833 in Webster County, Kentucky, and died on his farm in Lyon County, on the south bank of the Cumberland River, two miles east of Eddyville, in 1888. He was reared in the vicinity of Cerulean Springs and as a young man removed to Lyon County, for a few years living at Eddyville, where he practiced law. Eventually he located on the farm in Lyon County, and during the remainder of his life devoted his time between agricultural operations and a country law practice. He was a democrat in politics, held membership in the Masonic fraternity, and was a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Wake first married Miss Mary Lyon, who was born in Lyon County, which was named in honor of her father, Chittington Lyon. She died at Eddyville in 1859, leaving one son, Lionel, who resides on the old home place. Mr. Wake took his second wife, Miss Anna Pritchett, who was born at Eddyville in 1838, and she died there in 1863, and they had three children: Frank G.; Flora and Lula, who died in infancy. R. W. Wake married for his third wife Miss Cordelia Hayes, who was born in Lyon County and died without issue on the home place. Mr. Wake's fourth wife was Missentine Hayes, who was born in Lyon County and died there without issue. For his fifth wife he married Miss Nat Ella Doorn, who was born in 1842, in Lyon County, Kentucky, and died at Kuttawa in 1890. To this union there were born three children: Hugh, a leading and prominent business man of Kuttawa, where he is head of the big dry goods concerns of Hugh Wake & Company, and a sketch of whose career will be found elsewhere in this volume; Mary of Kuttawa, the widow of K. S. Doorn, formerly a Lyon County farmer; and Ambrose, who died at the age of one year.

Frank G. Wake was educated in the public schools of Eddyville, graduating from the high school with the class of 1876, and his first employment aside from the work of the home farm was a position as clerk on the steamboat "John S. Bransford," running from Nashville to the head of the Cumberland River. After one year spent in this capacity he went to old Mexico, where during the year of 1886 he bought cochineal, and then returned to this country. Going to Arkansas, he became clerk on the steamboat "Milt Harry" on the White River, a position in which he remained eight months. He next embarked in the tobacco business at Clarksville, Tennessee, as an exporter, and there formed a connection with T. D. Luckett, under the firm name of the Luckett-Wake Tobacco Company, but in 1910 disposed of his stock therein and bought a cotton plantation in Le Flore County, Mississippi, which he sold in 1916. In the meantime Mr. Wake had come to Madisonville, where he had built a loose floor tobacco warehouse, which he has operated with much success to the present time. In 1919 he extended the scope of his operations in this connection by building a similar warehouse at Providence, Webster County, and this he likewise operates. He is widely known in the tobacco industry, where he has the reputation of being a thoroughly informed and capable man, shrewd in his judgments, accurate in his foresight and strict in upholding his business integrity. He is vice president of the Farmers National Bank of Madisonville and has various civic and social interests. In politics he is a democrat, and his religious connection is with the Episcopal Church, in which he is a warden. During the war period he took an active part in all local war activities in Hopkins County, where he helped in the drives for bonds and funds and subscribed to the various movements to the limit of his resources.

In 1894 Mr. Wake married at Madisonville Miss Willie Pritchett, daughter of Dr. O. A. and Mary Ann (Bishop) Pritchett. Doctor Pritchett, who was a well-known physician and surgeon, is now deceased, and Mrs. Pritchett makes her home at Madisonville. Mr. and Mrs. Wake have no children.

R. Harper Gatton. The community of Madisonville takes a great deal of pride in its fine public school system, which since its reorganization less than twenty years ago has been steadily improving and keeping pace with the new standards and needs of educational progress. The executive and administrative head of the schools is R. Harper Gatton, city superintendent, and Mr. Gatton has been actively identified with the schools of Madisonville for the past ten years.

While he was born at Madison, Indiana, February 1, 1891, he represents an old Kentucky family. Originally the Gattons for a number of generations lived in Ireland, and an island off the Irish coast is known as Gatton Isle in honor of the family. His grandfather, John Gatton, was a native of Virginia, but spent his active life as a farmer in Muhlenberg County, Kentucky, where he died before his grandson, Harper Gatton, was born. Rev. J. S. Gatton, father of Superintendent Gatton, was born near Central City in Muhlenberg County in 1845, and has had a long and useful career in the ministry of the Baptist Church. He grew up in his native county, graduated from Bethel College at Russellville, and for about half a century was active in the ministry, largely in Central Kentucky, though about thirty years ago he was pastor of a church at Madison, Indiana. Some of his principal libraries were Elizabethtown, Shelbyville, Eminence and Campbellsville. He is now living retired at Elizabethtown, where he was married. He is a democrat in politics. His wife bore the maiden name of Amy Smallwood. She was born in Elizabethtown in 1838. The Smallwoods were of English stock, and her grandfather, James Smallwood, served with the rank of general in the Revolutionary Army. Her father, who was a farmer, was a lifelong friend of his life as a farmer in Maryland, near Washington, D.C. He married Nan Hutchinson. Rev. J. S. Gatton and wife had five children, Harper being the youngest. Ethel, the oldest, is the wife of Wayne Overall, a farmer in Hardin County, Kentucky; Elizabeth is the wife of L. K. Lazenby, a hardware merchant at Statesville, North Carolina; Rachel is the wife of E. N. Todd, county overseer and state high way commissioner, with home at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; and Harry is a farmer in Hardin County, Kentucky.

R. Harper Gatton was reared and educated in Kentucky, attended the public schools at Eminence and Campbellsville, and in 1912 graduated A. B. from Georgetown College at Georgetown, Kentucky. The fall following his graduation he came to Madisonville as principal of the high school. Two years later he was chosen city superintendent of schools, and has occupied that post and ably guided the city school administration throughout the peculiarly difficult period of the World war. Madisonville has three school buildings, and under his supervision are a staff of thirty-one teachers and scholarship enrollment of 1043. Mr. Gatton is an active member of the Kentucky Educational Association and since 1917 has served as a trustee of his Alma Mater, Georgetown College. He is vice president of the Madisonville Business Men's Association, and was a member of the Speakers Bureau and through his official position and as a private citizen did much to arouse his home town to the support of all war causes. He is secretary of the Hopkins County Public Health League.

Mr. Gatton has also acquired some business connections, being treasurer of the Chickasaw Coal Company and is interested in 500 acres of coal land. He spent some time as a part graduate student in education at the University of Chicago.

He is a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church, and is affiliated with Madisonville Lodge No. 143, of the Masons. He owns a modern home on South Seminary Street. In 1914, at Richmond in Madison County, Kentucky, he married Miss Margaret Lackey, daughter of W. S. Lackey (Coon) Lackey. Her parents still live on their farm near Richmond. Mr. and Mrs. Gatton had two daughters, Winona, born January 28, 1918, and Margaret, born November 19, 1920. Mrs. Gatton died December 12, 1920.

The energies of the Coil family have been transmitted effectively into the industrial and business affairs of Hopkins County for a long period of years. The chief business of Thomas Coil since boyhood has been lumber manufacture, in which he was associated with his father, and for a number of years past has operated and owned the chief lumber milling plant in the county.

Mr. Coil, whose home is at Madisonville, was born on his father's farm three miles northeast of Nortonville in Hopkins County on November 17, 1873. The Coil family came originally from Scotland, but was established in Virginia in Colonial times. His grandfather was Enoch Coil, a native of Virginia, who was the founder of the name in Hopkins County, Kentucky, where he spent the rest of his life as a farmer. William Houston Coil, father of Thomas L., was born in Virginia in 1846, was reared in Todd County, Kentucky, and as a young man established home in Hopkins County, where he married. After his marriage he located on a farm near Nortonville, lived for fifteen years on a farm near Earlington, and in 1884 moved to Madisonville, from which point he continued the operation of his farm and also engaged in the lumber and saw mill business. He was one of the active spirits in Madisonville's commercial affairs, and for many years conducted a thriving lumber industry. He died at Madisonville in April, 1901.

Thomas L. Coil married Permelia Hanks, who was born on a farm near Nortonville in 1846 and is now living at the old homestead in Madisonville. Her children were: W. D. Coil, one of the most prominent coal operators in the State of Kentucky, living at Madisonville; Kena, whose first husband was Wallace Sick, and she is now Mrs. Newman, living in California; Thomas L.; Emma, who lives in Madisonville, the widow of C. B. Hanger, an undertaker; Grace, his wife, a farmer; Mrs. Philip Smith, a truck farmer in California; Eura, wife of Dr. A. L. Thompson, a physician and surgeon at Madisonville; and Frank E., who is employed in the coal business of his brother, W. D. Coil.

Thomas L. Coil acquired his education in the rural schools of Hopkins County, lived on his father's farm to the age of fourteen, and learned the saw milling industry under the direction of his father and was associated with the elder Coil in lumber manufacturing until the latter's death. He has since continued the business for himself. His mills are located near Mantown in Hopkins County, and they manufacture large quantities of both hard and soft wood lumber. Mr. Coil resides at 227 Sugg Street in Madisonville. He is a democrat, and is affiliated with Eureka Camp No. 25, Woodmen of the World.

In Richmond, Kentucky, in 1897, he married Miss Fannie Young, daughter of John M. and Sally (Lafloun) Young. She was three years of age when her father died, and her father is a retired farmer at Madisonville. Mr. and Mrs. Coil have one son, Wallace Houston, born November 14, 1898, who completed his education in the Madisonville High School and is now assisting his father in business.

G. Elgin Sharp is the successful son of a successful father and has distinguished himself by his push and enterprise as a citizen and business man at his native town of Sharpsburg. His chief business interests are represented in extensive farm lands and the production thereof, and he is also a stock trader.

Mr. Sharp was born July 4, 1870, son of Walter and Mettie (Elgin) Sharp, the former a native of Sharpsburg and the latter of Georgetown in Scott County, Kentucky. The life record of Walter Sharp is more fully portrayed on other pages of this publication. He was a remarkable man and built his career on a most substantial foundation, though he had little education. He was a grocery merchant, a buyer of wheat and tobacco, and at one time was one of the largest tobacco producers and dealers in Bath County. He headed the tobacco pool for this county. When he died he left an estate of 2,000 acres. While not a member of any church, he was liberal in support of churches and is gratefully remembered for his many practical acts of philanthropy and helpfulness. As a democrat he represented his county two terms in the Legislature. Of his four children only two are now living: G. Elgin and Walter, the latter a farmer and stock operator at Sharpsburg.

G. Elgin Sharp grew up at Sharpsburg, attended the public schools and also Major Fowler's Military School at Mount Sterling four years and Professor Gordon's school at Lexington one year, finally finishing in Transylvania University of Lexington. He continued to be identified with home interests until 1907, when he married Miss Emily White, who was born in Bath County, but was reared in Montgomery County. Mr. and Mrs. Sharp have two children, Elgin White, born in 1908, who has completed the common school course, and Walter, born in 1913. Mr. and Mrs. Sharp are members of the Christian Church. He is a democrat and is the present chair man of the Sharpsburg School Board and was a member of the board when the new school house was built. Mr. Sharp owns and directs the work on some fourteen hundred acres of land and is a stockholder in the Citizens Bank of Harrodsburg.

MRS. MELZI M. DAY, district president of the Women's Christian Temperance Union and one of the best-known of her sex not only in her home town of Dawson Springs, but throughout the country, belongs to that gallant band of women who have been engaged in a life-long fight that so recently terminated the passage and ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment.

Mrs. Day was born on a farm one-half a mile north of Dawson Springs, Kentucky, the eldest daughter of Bush Alexander, who was born in Hopkins County, Kentucky, in 1841, and his father, Patton Alexander, was born in North Carolina, but died at Dawson Springs, Kentucky, in 1882. Patton Alexander was the pioneer of his family in Hopkins County, Kentucky, coming here when a young man, and here marrying and developing a valuable farming property. He married Christine Menser, a native of Virginia, who died at Dawson Springs in 1886. The Alexanders originated in England, from whence they came to North Carolina in Colonial times, but the Mensers were Hollanders.

Bush Alexander spent his life in Hopkins County, where he acquired a meager public school education. After his marriage, he moved to the site of Dawson Springs, and was very prosperous, specializing in dairying. His death occurred at Dawson Springs in 1910. In politics he was a democrat, but never aspired to public honors. A zealous member of the Christian Church, he was instrumental in securing the erection of the first church edifice at Dawson Springs of that denomination, and continued a generous supporter of it through his life. He belonged to Dawson Lodge No. 628, A. F. and A. M. Bush Alexander married Julia A. Eison, who survives her husband and lives at Dawson Springs. She was born in Caldwell County, Kentucky, in 1845. The children born to Bush Alexander and his wife were as follows: Mrs. Day, who was the eldest; Elma, who married C. E. Cummins and resides on the Alexander homestead; Iva, who married H. C. Boitnott, died at Denver, Colorado, at the age of forty years, but her husband and three daughters survive her and live at Dawson Springs, Mr. Boitnott, being a farmer; and J. H., who was a bookkeeper, died at Forest City, Arkansas, when twenty-four years old.

Mrs. Day attended the public schools of Dawson and those of Madisonville, Kentucky, and completed a high-school course at Dawson Springs. For the subsequent six years she was engaged in teaching in the public schools of Hopkins County, Kentucky, principally as an educator. In 1894 she was married at Dawson Springs to James Evans Day, who was born in Hopkins County, near the village of Saint Charles, September 17, 1834, and died at Jacksonville, Florida, February 6, 1917, although still a resident of Dawson Springs. He was reared in Hopkins County, and completed his educational training in the Forest Home Military Academy at Anchorage, Kentucky. Mr. Day and his brother developed large mercantile enterprises at Dawson Springs and became leading stockmen and farmers of the county, operating under the firm name of Day Brothers. Mr. Day was a stockholder in the Commercial Bank of Dawson, and also handled timber and lumber upon an extensive scale. In politics he was a democrat, and served on the School Board of Dawson Springs, and during that time raised the standard of the school system to its present high level. He realized the necessity for providing proper educational facilities for the rising generation and was always ready to stand back of his convictions. Mr. and Mrs. Day became the parents of three children, namely: Jeanon, a teacher by profession, is now a student in Peabody College, Nashville, Tennessee; Evelyn, who married D. M. Burchfield, one of the prosperous business men of Manila, Philippine Islands, and introducer of the automobile there, has lived there for some years, as his father was the first white man to settle in the islands after the United States acquired possession of them, since which time he has devoted much attention to the advancement of agriculture; and Retta May, who is a student in Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tennessee.

Mrs. Day owns a residence, a modern one, at 405 Kegan Street, and her ample grounds, covering one city block, with a private garage, are well-kept. She is also the owner of the building housing the Dawson Pharmacal Company; a dwelling on Kegan Street; three farms in Hopkins County; one farm in Mississippi and one farm in Caldwell County, and is possessed of ample means.

Her religious convictions led her to unite with the Christian Church, and she belongs to the local congregation of which her father was so generous a supporter, and her own benefactions to it are large. Mrs. Day is one of the women whose outlook has always been broad. Having acquired more than an ordinary amount of culture and general information and developed her natural faculties through study, reading and her educational duties, she soon saw the dire need of concerted action by the women of the country against the liquor traffic. Affiliating herself with the Women's Christian Temperance Union, she soon became a forceful factor in the local body of work that the Drink was doing. Her work was of such a character that attention was called to it throughout the state and other duties were assigned her until today she has the honor of holding the highest office of her district. As is but natural she has given the prohibition party her support, even long before there appeared any opportunity for her to vote its ticket. She has exercised herself in the suffrage movement, and the women of Kentucky have every reason to be proud of her and grateful for her efforts in their behalf. Reared in a comfortable home, happily married and the mother of a fine family of children, as far as her own personal needs were concerned Mrs. Day could have rested content, but she is not of that caliber. She knew the need for work by intelligent women and felt it her duty to give to her sex the benefit of her knowledge and efficiency, and the results are worthy of the woman and her cause. It is perfectly safe to declare that had it not been for the labor, patience and perseverance of the workers for prohibition the Eighteenth Amendment would never have been written. To them, and principally to them alone, belongs the credit for the greatest reform the world has known.

WILL P. SCOTT. Long after Will P. Scott has been called to his last reward the results of his life of endeavor along many lines will remain as an enduring monument to him and his high aims, which is more enduring than marble or granite, and of infinite more value to those who come after him, as well as to his contemporaries. For many years he has been closely identified with the development of Dawson Springs, of which he is now mayor and where he is carrying on a successful wholesale and retail business at the Dawson Pharmacal Company, and of the county, whose good roads testify as to the unremitting fight he has waged in order to secure them.

Will P. Scott was born on a farm near Nebo, Hopkins County, Kentucky, January 25, 1870, a son of W. T. Scott, and grandson of Adam Donald Scott, born in North Carolina in 1807, who removed to Kentucky; and Eliza Beatty, who was a farmer and school teacher he took an active part in the life of Hopkins County, and died here in 1889. He married Jemima Howard, who was born in North Carolina in 1812, and died in Hopkins County in 1888. The Scotts were originally from Scotland, from whence they came to America about 1660 and located in Massachusetts. The name was originally Stuart, but the American emigrant, owing to his Scotch birth, was called "Old Man Scott" so much that the spelling was changed, and for many generations Scott has been used by all of his descendants. He had five sons, one of whom went to Canada, one to Pennsylvania, one to North Carolina, one to Virginia and one remained in Massachusetts. Will P. Scott is descended from the branch which was established in North Carolina. General Scott of Mexican war fame belonged to the same branch of the family.

W. T. Scott was born in Hopkins County, Kentucky, in 1815, and died on the old home farm near Nebo June 30, 1918. All of his life was spent in this county, almost without a break. Will T. Scott was a member of the republican party exemplified his ideas with reference to political creed, and he supported its candidates conscientiously. He was equally zealous as a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and of the Masonic fraternity. During the war between the two sections of the country he enlisted in 1863 in the Seventeenth Kentucky Mounted Infantry, and served until the close of the war, being mustered out at Bowling Green, Kentucky, in 1865. He married Hannah Parker, who was born in 1847 on a farm within a mile of her present farm, in the vicinity of Nebo, Kentucky. She is a daughter of Wylie Parker, who was born near Nebo in 1801, and died on the farm now occupied by his daughter, Mrs. W. T. Scott, in 1853. His father was a farmer of much ability, and settled on this farm, and at one time owned a very large amount of land in the neighborhood of Nebo. This pioneer gentleman of the Parker family married a Miss Graham, whose parents came to America from Ireland, and her father served under Gen. Andrew Jackson in the War of 1812 and took part in the battle of New Orleans in 1815. The children born under this marriage were as follows: Will P., who was the eldest; Roy, who resides at Dawson Springs, where he is operating the Hamby Hotel, of which he is the proprietor; John L., who lives on a portion of the old homestead; and Lena, who married Guy Parish, superintendent of a coal mine at Circle City, Kentucky.

Mr. Scott attended the rural schools of Hopkins County, and at the same time was taught to make himself useful on his father's farm, and these lessons in industry and thrift then learned have been of great benefit to him in his after life. When he was eighteen years old he began teaching the country schools of Hopkins County, and was so engaged for two years, following which he entered the newspaper business at Madisonville, Kentucky; and published the very successful monthly magazine "Grit," which he had established. He then located at Central City, Kentucky, and published the Central City "Republican," and during that same time traveled for a wholesale drug house. In 1856 he came to Dawson Springs and established a drug store, which he conducted until 1904 and then sold it and organized the Dawson Pharmaceutical Company, of which he is president and manager. The company manufactures medicinal and pharmaceutical preparations, and the market extends into every state of the Union and even further, for orders are received from as far off as Bombay, India; Old Mexico, Cuba and France. The warehouse and offices are at 101, 103 and 107 North Railroad Avenue. Mr. Scott owns a modern residence on South Main Street, which is the best one at Dawson Springs. It was built in 1890 and is thoroughly modernized and equipped with electric lights, hot and cold water, and other conveniences. A republican, Mr. Scott served as postmaster of Dawson Springs from May, 1867, until August, 1914. In the meanwhile he read law and was admitted to the bar May 26, 1916, and on June 1 of that year assumed the duties of city attorney, and discharged them until October 1909. In November 1919, he was elected mayor of Dawson Springs, taking office December 1, 1919, and is still the incumbent. He is also engaged in the practice of law. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, of which he is an elder, and was superintendent of the Sunday School connected with the local congregation for fifteen years. Well known in Masonry, he belongs to Dawson Lodge No. 628, A. F. and A. M., of which he is a past master, having served as such from 1900 to 1903; Madisonville Chapter No. 27, R. A. M.; Madisonville Commandery, K. T.; and Rizpah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Madisonville. He also belongs to Madisonville Lodge No. 738, B. P. O. E., and to the Madisonville Bar Association.

During the late war Mr. Scott took an active part in the local war work, assisting in all the detail work. He was chairman of the committees on two of the bond issues, chairman of the Red Cross organization, and still holds that office. He was deputy food administrator of the Dawson Springs district of Hopkins County. As an effective Four-Minute Speaker he did such good work that he was the most sought after man in the district, and his audiences listened to him with the utmost attention whenever and wherever he addressed them.

In 1883 Mr. Scott married at Central City, Kentucky, Miss Fannie Stephens, a daughter of James and Margaret (Jones) Stephens, the former of whom died at Central City, where he was superintendent of a coal mine, but the latter survives and still lives at Central City. Mr. Scott now resides at Madisonville, United States, settling in Kentucky in 1876. Mr. and Mrs. Scott became the parents of the following children: Margaret Hannah, who married James Orange and resides at Dawson Springs, where he is city mail carrier, and while he was in the army and served overseas his brave wife carried the mail for him and looked after the children. Mr. Scott married Mrs. Vaughan P. Frabell, a telegrapher for the Illinois Central Railroad and lives at Marion, Kentucky.

The section of Kentucky embraced in Hopkins and surrounding counties was a number of years ago notorious because of the large number of lawless men who infested the region. There was a large element of criminals, brothel keepers and others, and it seemed impossible for the law to hold them in check. Mr. Scott, who has always stood firm for the enforcement of law and order, made up his mind to do what he could to rid this region of these undesirables. To be better able to cope with them he studied law, and was admitted to the bar when forty-six years of age, a remarkable feat in itself, but he did not cease his struggle. A man of rough element killed Marshal K. H. Keach July 10, 1916, but he was then prepared to fight these lawbreakers and began his war against them. It was an uphill fight, and sometimes it seemed as though he was alone, but other good citizens joined him in his efforts, and now Dawson Springs is one of the most orderly and law-abiding communities of the state. However, the credit for this desirable condition must be accorded him. Mr. Scott also succeeded in having many of the offenders sent to the penitentiary, and the remainder, finding Dawson Springs no longer a desirable place of residence for those of their criminal propensities, left for parts unknown, to the delight of all of the good citizens. The magnificent work accomplished by Mr. Scott will live in the memories of his fellow townsman and his name will be handed down by them to posterity.

Mr. Scott has not confined his public-spirited efforts to elevating the moral tone of his community, but also put up an equally strong fight for good roads, and his work in this cause has resulted in a marked improvement in the roads in this part of Kentucky. When he began the roads in and about Dawson Springs were almost impassable in certain seasons, but now some of the best roads to be found in the state are these rebuilt roads, and Mr. Scott and his supporters are still working to extend the movement so as to improve those in outlying districts. Such men as Mr. Scott are a decided acquisition to any neighborhood in which they see fit to settle, and Dawson Springs is fortunate, indeed, in having him as one of its residents and whole-hearted workers.

E. A. Stevens. The value of the waters of Dawson Springs from a medicinal standpoint is universally recognized and the reputation established for them has brought to Dawson Springs many people who have discovered the value of the waters for curing different diseases. Dawson Springs has become a popular watering place and a health resort and is one of the best known springs of Kentucky. The springs are located in the center of the county, about six miles from Madisonville, and are accessible by a fine roadway.

E. A. Stevens was born in Hopkins County, on a farm three miles north of Madisonville, Kentucky, October 21, 1868, a son of T. J. Stevens, and is a member of an old Colonial family of Virginia, where his grandfather was born. He later, however, brought his family to Hopkins County, Kentucky, and settled near Madisonville, and was engaged in farming the remainder of his life. The great-grandfather was also born in Virginia and died there at the advanced age of ninety-nine years.

T. J. Stevens was born on the same farm as his son, August 26, 1842, and was there reared and educated, and for a number of years was occupied with conducting it, but is now living retired at Madisonville, having ample means acquired from his extensive farming operations. In politics he is a republican. The Christian Church has in him a zealous member and generous supporter. He married Laura Jackson, who was born in Hopkins County in 1851, and died at Hanson, Kentucky, in 1904. Their children were as follows: Walter, who died in infancy; E. A., who was second in order of birth; Edward, who is engaged in the flour milling business and lives at Bowling Green, Kentucky; Lilie E., who is deceased; Martha, who died at the age of nineteen years; John W., who is a flour miller and lives at Nebo, Kentucky; and Emma, who married Lloyd Ashby, manager of the ice plant of Madisonville, Kentucky.

E. A. Stevens grew up on his father's farm, where he remained until he reached his majority, and at the same time attended the rural schools. Leaving the farm, he began to learn the flour milling business at Madisonville, and was connected with it for fifteen years in the employ of U. J. Holland. Mr. Stevens then went to Providence, Kentucky, and for a year was interested in a flour mill with W. M. Farless. For the subsequent seven years he was engaged in a flour mill at Hanson, Kentucky, leaving there for Dawson Springs in 1905, and once more establishing himself in the flour milling business, in which he continued until February, 1930, when he disposed of his interests. In 1917 Mr. Stevens bought the property on which his well is located in Alexandria, Kentucky, and had the well dug for him. The water being considered medicinal, he built a pavilion about it, and finding that it was one of the best wells of the springs he began bottling the water and ships it every day and to every state in the Union.

Elected to the City Council on the republican ticket, Mr. Stevens has taken a constructive part in the development of the policies of Dawson Springs and has a high position in the councils of the community.

William J. Faull. The achievements in the career of William J. Faull, office manager of the St. Bernard Mining Company, of St. Charles, Kentucky, are typical of the accomplishments noted in the lives of other men who are entitled to be known as self-made. When he entered upon his struggle with the world he was a young man possessed of a good common education, and no other qualifications whatever except the ability to do the hard work of the mine. His first occupation was as a miner and he worked his way up through the grades, becoming foreman for one year and locomotive engineer for the company for eighteen months, and in 1902 was made office manager, a position which he holds at this time. Industry, integrity, native ability and fidelity have been the means by which he has secured advancement, and each of his promotions has been won by personal merit. Mr. Faull is noted for the cooperation of his associates and superiors, and the good will and friendship of his men. He is thoroughly informed as to all details of the business, having personally experienced the work in the various departments, and this gives him a sympathetic knowledge of conditions, which, combined with his executive ability, makes him a valuable guide to Dawson Springs. All of the improvements and new properties are located in the St. Bernard Mining Company's store building at Main and Greenville streets.

A republican in his political affiliation, Mr. Faull is one of the influential members of his party, and has rendered valuable service to the city as a member of the council for eight years. Fraternally he holds membership in E. W. Truner Lodge No. 198, A. F. and A., Earlington; Earlington Commandery No. 141, R. A. M.; St Bernard Commandery No 129, K. T.; and Rizpah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Madisonville; and is an ex-member of the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. He has other business interests and is secretary and treasurer of the Buck Run Coal Company at St. Charles; and is also a stockholder in Lincoln Street, a comfortable home with modern improvements, including hot water heating and city water. He was chairman of the Liberty Loan and other committees, including the Red Cross, and during the war period was a liberal subscriber to all movements inaugurated for the support of the Government.

Mr. Faull was married at St. Charles in 1896 Miss Joan McAllister, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles McAllister, the former a native of Scotland and the latter of Ireland, and both now deceased. Mr. McAllister was for some years a coal miner at St. Charles. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Faull: Mona Meade, born in February, 1897, who married T. N. Sisk, a coal miner of St. Charles; Mary, born January 27, 1902, now residing with her parents; and Mary Sue, born February 2, 1911, who is attending school.

Neville Leander Holeman, proprietor of the H. & H. Water Company of Dawson Springs, is one of the leading men of his community and connected with its most important business houses either as an official or stockholder. A practical druggist, he is well qualified to be at the head of a concern like the H. & H. Water Company, and in this capacity, as in all others, he displays his good judgment and fairness of dealing in a manner eminently satisfactory to all parties concerned.

Mr. Holeman was born at Madisonville, Hopkins County, Kentucky, July 14, 1861, a son of N. M. Holeman, who was born at Hopkinsville, Christian County, Kentucky, in 1835. His death occurred at Dawson Springs in 1906, he having played a very prominent part in the development of this place as a health resort. He was educated and educated, in 1888, N. M. Holeman moved to Madisonville, Kentucky, and was one of the pioneer druggists of Hopkins County. At that time the majority of the physicians furnished the drugs to their patients, but he had the distinction of filling the first prescription ever issued in Hopkins County. In 1881 the medicinal water of Dawson Springs was discovered, and in 1882 the Arcadia Hotel was erected. Mr. Holeman's attention was attracted to the place, and in 1887 he was induced to come here and buy this hotel, which he continued to conduct until his death, although in later years he had the assistance of his son, N. L. Holeman, in doing so. He was a man of the highest character, living up to the ideals of the Christian Church and the Masonic fraternity, being a member of both and zealously supporting them. His vote was cast conscientiously for the candidates of the democratic party. It is believed that its principles were the best for the country.

N. M. Holeman married Miss Sallie W. Goodlove, who was born in Hopkins County in 1839, and died at Madisonville in 1913. Their children were as follows: Lelia, who married Judge J. F. Dempsey, a very prominent attorney of Madisonville, who has been connected with the Masonic fraternity; and Mrs. William Prater, who married Judge J. F. Dempsey, a very prominent attorney of Madisonville. Their children were as follows: Lelia, who married Judge J. F. an enthusiast with reference to Dawson Springs and anxious to do everything in his power to develop it still further and add its attractive features. He knows the value of its waters and recognizes the fact that while they are eminently beneficial, however taken, an added efficacy is gained from them when the patient enjoys the advantages afforded by Dawson Springs.

William Thomas Davis, proprietor and publisher of the Dawson Springs "Progress," is one of the most alert young business men of this county. He was born in Daviess County, Kentucky, June 16, 1889, a son of B. T. Davis, and grandson of Archie Gregory Davis, who died in Daviess County in 1902. He was a clergyman of the Baptist Church and the first of his family to locate in Daviess County. The maternal grandfather of William Thomas Davis was Paxton Hale, and his mother, Sarah Davis, still resides at Cairo, Kentucky, in 1879. By occupation he was a nurseryman, and established his family in McLean County, Kentucky, many years ago.

B. T. Davis was born in Daviess County in 1853, where he was reared, educated and married, and where he established himself as a farmer. In the spring of 1888 he came to Dawson Springs with the hope of improving his health, and found the climate of Dawson Springs so favorable that he decided to locate here permanently. He is independent in his political views, but has no aspirations toward office. For many years he has been a member of the Baptist Church, and has always given the local congregation of that denomination his active support. B. T. Davis married Miss Carma Hale, who was born in McLean County, Kentucky, in 1857, and their children are as follows: Charles Gregory, who is resident at the bottom of the county; Charles, who circulates in Hopkins and surrounding counties; the plant and offices are located at 111 Railroad Avenue, and are equipped with all modern machinery, including linotype machines, the plant being one that would do credit to any city. Mr. Davis resides at 215 Railroad Avenue. He is a democrat, but does not carry his politics into his newspaper. Frequently he belongs to Dawson Springs Camp No. 1299, M. O. N. W. N. P. for eight years. He has had a long and varied experience in the newspaper business and is fully qualified for his responsible position as a molder of public opinion, and is unquestionably possessed of a high order of business ability. His evident sincerity, his determination to give his readers a clean, entertaining paper with plenty of local news, unbiased as to politics, and his ability have won for him the approval and support of the best element in the county.

Reverend Niles was born near Calhoun, Kentucky, in 1838, and died in Henderson, Henderson County, Kentucky, in 1914. While still a young man he moved to Henderson County, and as a member of the Holiness Association did evangelistic work in behalf of the Missionary Baptist Church, being the pioneer clergyman in his part of Henderson County. Later he went into the drug store business, and after a few years was the owner of the drugstore in Henderson County, Kentucky, in 1842, and still resides at Cairo, Illinois; Sarah Elizabeth, who was born April 14, 1870, married B. L. Patterson, pastor of the Holiness Church of Nashville, Tennessee; Doctor Niles, who was fifth in order of birth; Ben Edward, who was born February 13, 1825, is an attorney and realtor of Henderson, Kentucky; Lillie Eta, who was born January 18, 1878, married Hal Crews, a newspaper publisher of Springfield, Illinois; Anna Irene, who was born September 2, 1875, married W. Floyd, owner of a plumbing establishment of Morganfield, Kentucky; and Ruth, who was born December 29, 1884, is a school teacher and resides with her mother.

Doctor Niles attended the rural schools of Henderson County, the high school of Cairo, Kentucky, and when he was sixteen years old began to be self-supporting, obtaining a position in the drugstore, and steadily mounting through well-merited promotions until he was made its editor in 1916, and continued to hold that position until the spring of 1918, when he went with the Frankfort State Journal as pressman and remained there for eight months. Then for one month he was with the Madisonville Messenger. On April 1, 1919, Dr. Davis established the Dawson Springs Progress, an independent journal which circulates in Hopkins and surrounding counties. His offices are over the Fullerton Drug Store on South Main Street. Doctor Niles is local surgeon for the Hopkins County Medical Society. He is one of the best medical practitioners in this city, and it is located on South Main Street, where he resides. He owns a fine dwelling at Dawson Springs, the public garage on Princeton Avenue, a half interest in the Dawson Springs Swimming Pool, an interest in the Dawson Springs Tolo (water) Plant, an interest in the Dawson Springs Park, a farm one-half a mile south of Dawson Springs and is a stockholder in the Commercial Bank of Dawson Springs.

A strong republican, Doctor Niles served Dawson Springs as mayor for ten years and eight years. He is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, to which he gives an active support. A Mason, he belongs to Dawson Lodge No. 628 A. F. and A. M., and professionally he maintains membership with the Hopkins County Medical Society and is a member of the Board of Health. During the late war he took a very active part in all of the local war work, assisting in all of the drives and subscribing to his limit, and, in fact, doing everything in his power to aid the administration to carry out its policies.

In early life he was identified with the local tobacco business, but for more than twenty years he has devoted his time and energies to his chosen profession.

His family history goes back to the earliest pioneer times in Kentucky, even while the Colonies on the Atlantic seaboard were being settled. The Boughners were of German descent, and the first son born in this country so far as there is record was Mathias-Boughner, born in Sussex County, New Jersey, in 1710.
The name of his wife is unknown. Of their eight children two sons were William Boughner, born in 1762, and Peter, born in 1764. Both were soldiers in the Revolutionary war on the side of the Colonists.

After the war William remained with the Colonists and was among those who in 1765 founded the first settlements in Norfolk County, Ontario, near Simcoe.
He was the grandfather of Elias Boughner, who had the gift of a born orator and was elected and served a life term as county clerk of Norfolk County. He died in 1820, and he owned the original homestead in Norfolk County. The descendants of these pioneer Boughners hold an annual reunion at Port Dover on Lake Erie. The town of Boughner, Cambi and North County, are named in honor of one of these descendants.

The name of William Boughner’s wife is unknown.
Of her eight children, two sons were Peter Boughner and John Wesley Boughner. These Boughner brothers came down the Ohio River, and while in Ohio were overtaken by the Indians and John Wesley was killed. Peter Boughner came on to Kentucky, married and reared a family of four sons and two daughters.
The names of the sons were Bishop, Bail, Joab and Sall, while the daughters were Dorcas and Margaret.

Peter Boughner, son of William Boughner, was born in Bracken County, Kentucky, in 1801, and lived there all his life, cultivating and managing an extensive farm. He died in 1872. His wife was Elizabeth Blythe, who was born near New Boston in Clermont County, Ohio, in 1814, and died in Bracken County, Kentucky, in 1907. To their union three sons and one daughter were born: William S., John Wesley, George A. and Margaret Boughner. George A. and Margaret never married. William Boughner married Narcissus Thomas, of Augusta, Kentucky, and reared a family on the old home farm where Joab Boughner settled, and one of his sons, William R. Boughner, and a daughter, Margaret Boughner, still live on and own the farm.

John W. Boughner was born in Bracken County June 26, 1821, was reared and married in his native county, and for several years conducted a retail dry goods and grocery store, one of the leading enterprises of its kind in the county. During the war between the states he joined the Confederate Army under General Morgan and was with that leader during the raid at Augusta, Kentucky. In 1867 John W. Boughner moved to Newport, Kentucky, and later became associated with L. H.
Brooks, under the firm name of Boughner & Brooks, in the tobacco business in Cincinnati. For a number of years he was president of the Planters Tobacco Warehouse at Cincinnati, one of the largest enterprises of the kind in the city, and he continued to be a leading and influential figure in the business until his death. He died at Covington August 1, 1908. He was a democrat in politics and a very active worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He and his brother William were charter members of Bracken County Lodge of Masons.

John W. Boughner married Jacova N. Laughlin, who was born in Bracken County February 14, 1840, and died at Covington in 1862. Jacova N. Laughlin was a granddaughter of Benjamin Laughlin, who was of Scotch ancestry and of a pioneer Maryland family. Benjamin Laughlin, as a young man came from Maryland to Fayette County, Kentucky, but the last years of his life were spent in Bracken County. He married Elizabeth Challant, who was born in Maryland in 1790 and died in Bracken County. Their son, Benjamin F. Laughlin, was born in Fayette County November 18, 1808, spent his active career as a farmer near Augusta, and died at Augusta April 21, 1881. He was a leader in educational affairs of his community and a democrat in politics.
His wife was Martha Ann Dora, who was born in Bracken County November 28, 1818, and died at Augusta
June 23, 1802. Jacova was the second of their family of eleven children, the youngest of whom is Dr. Samuel D. Laughlin, a prominent citizen of Augusta, whose individual career is sketched elsewhere in this publication and contains further details of the Laughlin family history.

The only child of John W. Boughner and wife is G. F. Boughner, who was born at Berlin, Bracken County, Kentucky, April 25, 1864, and has lived since infancy in Covington, where he attended the public schools, graduating from high school in 1881. He then took up the study of law with the firm of Carlisle, Goebel & Chalfant, with the late Theodore F. Hallam and later with L. E. Baker. For some fifteen years he was engaged in the leaf tobacco business, but since his admission to the bar in 1898 has been busy in his chosen profession, and throughout those years has had offices with
B. F. Graziani at 508-510 Madison Avenue, Covington.

Mr. Boughner has been a member of the Scott Street Methodist Episcopal church since the infancy of his family. He is a democrat but has never sought public office. He expressed his convictions during the war by putting all his available means at the service of the Government in the purchase of securities and in assisting committees to fill local quotas and gave a large amount of time to war work.

SAMUEL J. DEBORD is now in his third consecutive term as sheriff of Boyd County. He was a popular and successful business man at Ashland before he entered politics, and the manner in which he has assumed and handled his official responsibilities has brought him a growing confidence that has been manifested in increasing majorities every time he has become a candidate for re-election.

Mr. DeBord was born in Lawrence County, Kenty, September 2, 1876, a son of Stephen and Augusta (Hatfield) DeBord, the former a native of Lawrence County and the latter of Floyd County. Stephen De-Bord owned and operated a farm in Lawrence County, but in 1900 removed to Ashland, where he died in 1904 at the age of fifty-one. His widow is still living at Ashland. The family are Baptists in religious connexions.

Sheriff DeBord, one of a family of five sons and two daughters, attended school in a country district in Lawrence County, also at Louisa, and at the age of seventeen was learning business as clerk in a general store at Dingess, West Virginia. About the time he reached his majority, the Spanish-American war broke out and he volunteered in the Third Kentucky Regiment. He saw service in Cuba for about a year during the reconstruction period, when General Wood was governor general of the island and effecting his widely heralded reforms in civic and sanitary measures.
On returning home Mr. DeBord joined his brother, William, and established a store at Ashland. They continued this business until 1910. In the meantime William was studying medicine, and since graduating has been one of the leading physicians of Ashland.

Prior to his first election as sheriff Mr. DeBord was for eight years jailer of Boyd County. The first time he was candidate for sheriff his chief opposition was in Catlettsburg, and he lost that town by 450 votes. Four years later there was a complete reversion of sentiment in his favor at Catlettsburg, which gave him a majority of 400. The third election he carried Catlettsburg by 900.

July 5, 1889, Mr. DeBord married Mollie Carroll, daughter of John Carroll, of Grayson, Kentucky. They have two children, Walter A., and Alma Lucile. Mr. DeBord has a number of business interests, is a director of the Ashland National Bank, a director of the McClintock Fields Dry Goods Company, and is treasurer of the Silver Run Oil Company, one of the producing companies in the East Kentucky territory. As politician he is a Republican, a member of the Kiwanis Club, and is affiliated with Hampton Lodge No. 235 of Catlettsburg, with the chapter and commandery and with El Hesa Temple at Ashland, A. A. O. N. M. S. He is also a member of the Eastern Star, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Junior Order United American Mechanics. Mr. DeBord is one of the active members of the First Christian Episcopal Church of Ashland. He is now on the building committee and supervising the construction of a church edifice that will be one of the largest and finest church homes in the state.

CHARLES D. COLE, secretary and treasurer of the Pope-Cawood Lumber & Supply Company, owner of coal lands, member of the City Council, election commissioner of Harlan, and a director of the Harlan State Bank, is one of the leading men of this section and belongs to a distinguished family. He was born in Laurel County, Kentucky, February 6, 1887, a son of Perry V. Cole, and grandson of Jerome Cole, who was born in Missouri in 1832 and died at McKeel, Jackson County, Kentucky, in 1904. Leaving Missouri after he had passed his majority, Jerome Cole came to Kentucky, and for some years was engaged in farming and teaching in the public schools of Owosky County. Subsequently, he moved to Jackson County, buying a farm near what is now Rollinsville, and while operating it was still engaged in teaching school. In 1902 he retired and located at McKeel, where he lived until claimed by death. He was a republican in politics. The Christian Church held his membership and also had his service as one of its deacons. During the war between the North and the South he served in the Union Army during the last two years of the war, as a member of a Kentucky, mixed regiment of infantry. He married Rhoda Moore, who was born in Owosky County, Kentucky, in 1830 and died on the home farm in Jackson County in 1880. Their children were as follows: Margaret, who died in Laurel County, Kentucky, at the age of thirty years, was the wife of John Hellard; Martha, who died in Jackson County, Kentucky, at the age of forty years, was the wife of David Hellard; James, who is a farmer, of Jackson County; John, who is deceased; Perry V., who is mentioned at length below; Simeon, who died in Jackson County at the age of twenty-two years; William, who is a mine foreman, lives in Harlan County; Harvey, who is a farmer and general workman, resides in Laurel County; and Wiley, who was a farmer, died in Laurel County at the age of thirty years.

Perry V. Cole was reared on his father's farm until he was twenty years old, and at that time left to build a coal mine and worked at this business in Laurel County for five years, when he embarked in a mercantile business at East Bernstadt, Kentucky, conducting this store for six years. For ten years he was in the same line of business at Pittsburg, Laurel County, and during that time served as postmaster. In 1908 he became state mine inspector and moved to Barbourville, Knox County, and lived there for seven years while holding that office. At the expiration of this period he began to operate coal lands in Harlan County, starting in this business without capital, but has done so well that today he owns 250 acres of coal land at the head of Clover Fork, Harlan County. In 1917 he located permanently at Harlan, and since 1918 has been president of the Harlan State Bank. Mr. Cole owns his modern residence, corner of Central and third streets which is one of the most attractive and comfortable homes in the city. He also owns the Kelly Hotel on Main Street, which is one of the leading hosteries in the city. He is a republican. The Baptist Church has him as a member and trustee. A Mason, he belongs to Harlan Lodge No. 879, F. and A. M., is a past master of the Pittsburg, Kentucky lodge, a member of Harlan Chapter No. 165, R. A. M.; Kosair Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., and he is also a Knight-Templar Mason, and belongs to the order of Odd Fellows. During the late war he took the greatest interest in the local war work, as did his son Charles D., and both were heavy investors in bonds and stamps and generous contributors to the war organizations.

On December 28, 1884, Perry V. Cole married in Laurel County, Kentucky, Miss Cassie Wilson, a daughter of John Wilson, a farmer, of Harlan County, both of whom are deceased. For many years Mr. William was a successful farmer of Laurel County. Mr. and Mrs. Perry V. Cole became the parents of the following children: Delbert, who was a merchant, died at the age of twenty-five years; Charles D., whose name heads this review; Ida, who married W. S. Hudson, a printer, lives at Barbourville; Ollie, who married W. T. Chappell, a druggist of Corbin, Kentucky; Arthur, who is in business with his father, is manager of the Kelly Hotel.

Charles D. Cole was educated in the public schools of Laurel County and the Sue-Bennett Memorial School at London, Kentucky, leaving school in 1905 to help his father in his mercantile business at Pittsburg, Kentucky. In 1908 he accompanied his father to Barbourville, and, buying the Mountain Advocate, edited it for two years. Leaving the newspaper field he moved to the First National Bank of Barbourville as assistant cashier, and held that position until his resignation in 1913, when he came to Harlan and became a coal operator. In 1917 he sold his coal interests, although at present he has others at Clover Fork in Harlan County. For several years afterward he was an active operator in the real estate business, leaving it in 1930 to become secretary and treasurer of the Pope-Cawood Lumber & Supply Company, which he still holds. This is the leading lumber company in Southeastern Kentucky, and handles lumber and all kinds of building materials. The offices and yard are situated on Depot Street, opposite the depot.

Mr. Cole is a stanch republican, and is now serving his second year as a member of the City Council of Harlan. He is election commissioner of Harlan County. Well known in Masonry, he belongs to Harlan Lodge No. 879, F. and A. M.; Harlan Chapter No. 165, R. A. M.; Dufield Commandery No. 42, K. T. of Harlan; and Kosair Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Louisville, Kentucky. In addition to his stock in the Harlan State Bank, of which he is a director, he owns and operates a confectionery store on Central Street, and owns his comfortable modern residence on Cumberland Avenue. This is a very attractive home, a feature of it being the use of cobblestones in the outside chimney, porch pillars and for a wall surrounding the premises.

On September 24, 1913, Mr. Cole married at Barbourville, Kentucky, Miss Adah Tinsley Stephens, a daughter of James A. and Nannie (Anderson)
Stephens, residents of Indianapolis, Indiana. Mr. Stephens is a traveling salesman. Mr. and Mrs. Cole have two children, Doris, who was born February 23, 1917, and Charles Marvin, who was born January 9, 1920. Both Mr. Cole and his father have played a very prominent part in the development of the coal industry of Harlan County, their energy and foresight adding very materially to the coal production of this locality. As citizens they measure up to the best standards of American manhood, and their home community owes them a heavy debt for what they have accomplished in every way, for they are men of action and determination, and make a success of whatever they undertake.

John W. Rawlings has been a successful lawyer at Danville for thirty years, was formerly a successful educator, and is one of the best known public speakers and leaders of public movements in the state. He was born on a farm in Marion County, Kentucky. This farm was on the North Rolling Fork near Gravel Switch. His opportunities for education and professional advancement he discovered and made largely for himself. He attended Perryville Academy, Columbia College, taught in a high school for six years, and before and after engaging in law practice served twenty-four years as county superintendent of schools in Boyle County. This long service was largely responsible for many of the present high standards exemplified in our school system.

Mr. Rawlings began practice at Danville in the spring of 1889. For several years he was a partner with Robert Harding, but more recently his work has been done entirely as an individual lawyer. He has handled a large business in all the local and state courts and cases in the Federal courts have taken him before the branches of the Federal judiciary in Kentucky, Ohio, and also in Dallas, Texas. Mr. Rawlings is an unusually gifted speaker. He is deeply versed in a wide range of general literature, particularly the scriptures, and his ready and apt use of quotations lend both force and attractiveness to his oratory. He is in demand as a speaker at many prominent gatherings. He has many times served as a delegate to democratic conventions, and is one of the leading democrats of the state. Mr. Rawlings has valuable real estate in Texas, including 1,000 acres of grazing and farm land. This land is now in the territory where active drilling is in progress for oil development. He is attorney for the L. & N. Railroad Company, the Southern Railway Company, the Singer Sewing Machine Company, and the Commonwealth Power Railway & Light Company. Socially he is a member of Franklin Lodge No. 28, F. and A. M., Franklin Chapter No. 22, Ryan Commandery No. 17, and Kosair Temple of Louisville, A. A. O. N. M. S. He is also a member of the Baptist Church and active in Sunday school work, and for some years taught the Bible class.

March 3, 1881, Mr. Rawlings married Miss Lila Westerfield, who was born near Harrodsburg in Mercer County, Kentucky, attended the common schools of that county, and finished her education at Parksville. Mr. and Mrs. Rawlings had four children. Ada B., who died at the age of seventeen, had already shown pronounced ability as a pianist. Nannie A. is the wife of W. H. Hartman, income tax inspector whose home is at Louisville, but whose temporary location is in Washington, D. C. Miss Margaret Lucile, aged twenty-one, is a graduate of the Louisville Conservatory of Music and Dramatic Art, and is also a graduate of the Carnegie School of Drama, in New York, and is preparing to use her splendid abilities in a professional way. The only son, Henry C. Rawlings, was educated in the schools of Danville, was a telegrapher by occupation until the great war, when he enlisted, July 28, 1918, at Danville, and served as a member of the Three Hundred and Thirtieth Guard and Fire Company until discharged at Camp Mills, Long Island, January 23, 1919.

Perry Cline Sanders, M. D. One of the worthy native sons of Kentucky who has attained distinctive success in his chosen life work is Dr. Perry C. Sanders, of Danville, who is easily the peer of all his fellow men in the qualities that constitute correct manhood and good citizenship. He is what he is from natural endowment and self-culture, having attained his present standing solely through the impelling force of his own strong nature. He possesses not only those powers which have made him successful in the practice of the healing art, but those genuine personal traits which, as a matter of course, must be appreciated and esteemed in any assured social intercourse, and he therefore commands the good will and esteem of all with whom has come in contact.

Perry Cline Sanders was born on a rough mountain farm at the foot of Pine Mountain, near where Jenkins is now located in Pike County, Kentucky, December 7, 1881, and is the son of Jacob and Mahulda (Ison) Sanders. Both of these parents were born and are now living in Lincoln County, Kentucky, where the father continues his original occupation of farming. Perry C. Sanders attended the common schools until fourteen years of age and then began teaching rural schools, teaching during the fall term and then using his pay to take him through normal and high schools during the remaining winter months. He also did teaming, and in this way he continued for nine years, when, not being fully satisfied with this mode of life, he decided to take up the study of medicine. To this end he matriculated in the medical department of the University of Louisville, where he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine June 30, 1910. Immediately thereafter he entered upon the practice of his profession at Elkhorn City, Kentucky, where he met with success, acquiring a good reputation as a skilled physician and surgeon. In 1913 Doctor Sanders became surgeon for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, though not relinquishing his private practice. He also became chief surgeon for the Carolina, Clinchfield & Ohio Railroad Company, which was then doing heavy construction work through the Cumberland Mountains. During the period while he was engaged with this particular work he performed the amputation of seventeen legs and many other operations of a minor character, incidental to construction work of that sort. He has full charge of the sanitary conditions of the camps along the twelve miles of this construction work and, aided by two assistants, he organized, equipped and supervised a modern hospital in which to care for the men employed on the work, prompt and efficient attention being given to all sick or injured workmen. This work was completed and the road joined to the Chesapeake & Ohio road at Elkhorn City in 1916. Doctor Sanders remained in the service of these roads until September, 1919, when he moved to Danville, Kentucky, in order to give his children better educational advantages. Entering upon the practice of his profession here, the Doctor quickly won the confidence and good will of the community and is today in command of a large and constant business, through which he has been successful in his financial affairs and helped to organize the Bank of Elkhorn City, of which he became first president. He is a member of the Boyle County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is also a member of the Free and Accepted Masons.

On July 5, 1900, Doctor Sanders married Ferla Bartley, of Pikeville, Kentucky, and they are the parents of three children, Ernest Victor, Verna Thelma and Virgil Perry, all of whom are attending the public schools in Danville. Personally the Doctor is of genial disposition and generous in his liberality, who easily makes friends, and he is a popular member of the circles in which he moves.

John C. Humphries, the popular and efficient sheriff of Trigg County in 1920, is not only one of the vigorous executive officers of the county, but is also one of its extensive agriculturists and stock-growers, and his standing in the community is such as to entitle him to special recognition in this publication.

John Charles Humphries was born at Princeton, Caldwell County, Kentucky, December 25, 1887, and he is a scion of one of the old and influential pioneer families of this section of the Blue Grass State. His paternal great-grandfather, a native of Virginia, became one of the early settlers in Trigg County, Kentucky, where he developed a productive farm and where he passed the remainder of his life. He was a representative of a staunch family, of Scotch origin, that was founded in Virginia in the Colonial era of our national history. John Charles Humphries, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, who was named in his honor, passed his entire life in Trigg County and became one of its representative farmers and influential citizens. He was for two terms representative of this county in the State Legislature and was a vigorous and effective advocate of the principles of the democratic party. His wife, whose maiden name was Wembly, likewise passed her entire life in Trigg County, both having died prior to the birth of the present sheriff of the county. John O'Hara, maternal grandfather of Sheriff Humphries, was a native of Ireland and became a pioneer agriculturist and slave owner in Caldwell County, Kentucky, where he passed the residue of his life. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Cartwright, was born in 1825, and she passed the closing years of her long and gracious life at Princeton, Caldwell County, where her death occurred in 1912, her husband having preceded her to eternal rest.

John Calhoun Humphries, father of him whose name introduces this review, was born in Trigg County in 1841 and died at Princeton, Caldwell County, in 1906. He was reared and educated in Trigg County, and here his participation in public life began. He remained in his native county until 1885, when he removed to Princeton, Caldwell County, and became a successful tobacco merchant, besides owning a valuable farm property in that county. He was a democrat in politics and was an earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, besides which he long maintained affiliation with the United Confederate Veterans and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was a gallant soldier of the Confederacy during virtually the entire period of the Civil war, took part in many important engagements, including that of Fort Donelson, where he was wounded and captured, and for several months was held as a prisoner of war in the old college building at Princeton, Kentucky, but finally effected his escape and rejoined his regiment, with which he continued in active service until the close of the war. The family name of his first wife was Hardy, and her death occurred in Trigg County. Their only child survived her. Mr. Humphries is a tobacconist in the city of Louisville, and Gertrude, who is the wife of Joseph Barber, a farmer in Trigg County. For his second wife John C. Humphries married Miss Elizabeth O'Hara, who was born at Princeton, Caldwell County, in 1864, and who still maintains her home at that place. Of the children of this union John C., of this sketch, is the eldest; James is deputy sheriff under the administration of his older brother; Mary Evelyn is the wife of Hugh Hammond, a merchant at Hopkinsville, Christian County; Miss Calla remains with her widowed mother; Joseph Blackburn is identified with the automobile business in the City of Princeton; Mrs. Mabel L. Trigg line has long occupied a seat in the office of the sheriff of Trigg County, at Cadiz; and Robert Thomas has the active charge of his father's farm near Princeton, Caldwell County.

The sheriff of Trigg County acquired his youthful education in the rural schools of Caldwell County, where also he pursued a higher course in Princeton College, in which excellent institution he continued his studies until he was nineteen years of age. Thereafter he was associated with the operations of his father's farm about one year, and in the autumn of 1910 was appointed a deputy sheriff of Trigg County, a position of which he continued the incumbent until November, 1917, when he was elected sheriff of the county for a term of four years. He assumed the duties of this office in January, 1918, and his administration has fully justified the popular choice of the incumbent. Since he established his residence at Cadiz in 1909, Mr. Humphries has also been continuously engaged in the real-estate business, and he is the owner of a valuable farm of 120 acres three miles west of Cadiz, as well as a farm of 130 acres adjoining Cadiz at the south and on the Little River, and a farm of eighty acres adjoining the city on the north. Thus he is to be credited as one of the progressive agriculturists and stock-growers of Trigg County. He remained in the democratic party, and he and his wife are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which he is serving as steward. Sheriff Humphries is affiliated with Cadiz Lodge No. 121, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Green River Lodge No. 54, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Hopkinsville, of which he is a past grand; Hill City Camp, Woodmen of the World; Cadiz Camp, Modern Woodmen of America; Cadiz Homestead, Brotherhood of American Yeomen; and Cadiz Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star.

At Cadiz Mr. Humphries is the owner of four residence properties, including his own home, which is one of the most modern and attractive in this thriving little city, with seven acres of well kept grounds, adorned with fine shade trees and shrubbery and recognized as one of the most beautiful places in the best residential section of Cadiz. Sheriff Humphries firmly believes in the Liberty Loan movement of Trigg County and was one of the most vigorous and resourceful factors in the furtherance of the various war activities in the county during the nation's participation in the World war, while his subscriptions to the various Government loans were liberal and patriotic.

In 1912 was solemnized the marriage of Mrs. Humphries with Miss Lena A. Thomas, who was born and reared in Trigg County and who is a daughter of Starkey A. and Inez (Miller) Thomas, the former of whom was a representative farmer of this county at the time of his death and the latter of whom maintains her home at Cadiz since the death of her husband. Mr. and Mrs. Humphries have two children: James Calhoun, born February 23, 1913, and Ruth Evelyn, born February 24, 1915.

Andrew H. Card has been concerned with the lumber business since his early youth, has gained comprehensive and accurate knowledge of all details of the manufacturing and distributing of lumber, and in his independent operations he now holds a position of recognized precedence and influence in connection with this line of industry in Southeastern Kentucky. He is both a manufacturer of and dealer in lumber. In the buying and selling of lumber he is the most extensive individual operator in this section of Kentucky, and he maintains his residence and executive business headquarters in the City of Pineville, county seat of Bell County.

Mr. Card was born in Bedford County, Tennessee,
HISTORY OF KENTUCKY

October 13, 1873, and is a scion of a sterling pioneer family of that state, as becomes evident when it is noted that his grandfather, Samuel Hughes Card, was born in Sumner County, Tennessee, in the year 1800. This native son attained to patriarchal age and was a resident of Bedford County, that state, at the time of his death in 1892. He established his home in Bedford County in the year 1820, and there he became a prosperous farmer and slaveholder, as well as a citizen of prominence and influence in community affairs. There was solemnized his marriage to Miss Margaret Neil, who was born in North Carolina, and who preceded him in death by about three years, her death having occurred in 1889.

The first representatives of the Card family in America came from Scotland to this country and settled in the Colony of Maryland long before the War of the Revolution. Members of the family in a later generation settled as pioneers in North Carolina and Tennessee.

Andrew C. Card, father of him whose name introduces this review, was born in Bedford County, Tennessee, on the 25th of April, 1844, was there reared to manhood and there he was for a long term of years actively identified with important business and industrial interests. He was a merchant and lumber dealer, and also owned and operated saw mills. He continued his activities as a man of large affairs in his native county until 1893, when he removed to Sumner County, where he continued in the lumber business extensively as a manufacturer and dealer. He there owned and operated saw mills until his retirement from active business, and he has since continued to maintain his home at Scotsboro. He served as a Union soldier in the Civil War. He enlisted as a member of Company D, Tenth Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, early in the year 1863, and his service was a term of three years for three years, with a re-election for four months as he continued in the army for some time after the close of active hostilities. He took part in the battles of Murfreesboro, Nashville and other important engagements. He personally recruited a company for the service and was made captain of Company C, Fourth Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, to which he was transferred from the regiment in which he originally enlisted and with which he was identified at the close of the war. His wife, whose maiden name was Adorine Cleveland, was born at Nashville, Tennessee, December 19, 1845, and in her native city her death occurred in April, 1916. Of the children the eldest is Rena, who is the wife of R. A. Coffey, a planter and live-stock dealer at Scotsboro, Alabama, and a former banker; IZora is the wife of W. A. Austin of Mobile, Alabama, and is active in her business at Tuscaloosa, Alabama; Hugh Cleveland resides at Pineville, Kentucky, and is a successful lumber merchant; Andrew H., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Milton E. died at the age of three years in the city of Nashville.

Andrew H. Card attended the public schools of his native county until he was thirteen years old, when he became a member of the Confederate States of America. He worked for the Western Union Telegraph Company at Nashville. He gained two years' active experience in this position, and he then entered the employ of a lumber company at Tullahoma, Tennessee, his alliance with this concern continuing five years, within which by his effective service and the ability which he developed through self-discipline, observation and close application to his calling, he rose to the position of head lumber man. For the ensuing nine years he was bookkeeper and sales manager for J. Bates & Company, leading lumber jobbers in the City of Nashville, and he then put his experience to good use by initiating independent lumbering operations with headquarters at Nashville. For two years he operated saw mills at Stevenson, Alabama, and for the ensuing two years he conducted similar operations at Hollywood, that state. Thefereafter he leased saw mills and continued operations under this arrangement until 1910, when he went to Cincinnati, Ohio, and established a wholesale lumber yard. This he conducted three years, at the expiration of which, in 1913, he came to Pineville, Kentucky, where he has since continued successfully in business as a buyer and shipper of lumber upon an extensive scale. For some time he operated saw mills in Bell County, and he then transferred his operations to Harlan County, where he is still operating the same effectively. At Wasioto, Bell County, he owns and operates a planing mill, the products of which are utilized by the retail trade. Mr. Card has been progressive and resourceful as a business man, liberal and public-spirited as a citizen, and he has so ordered his course as to command unqualified popular confidence and respect. He was at all times a valued member of the Council of Pineville since 1916. Both he and his wife are communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and he is serving as treasurer of the Pineville Church of this denomination. The attractive and modern residence property which constitutes the family home is situated on Virginia Avenue, and is the center of much of the representative social life of the community, with Mrs. Card as a gracious and popular chataelaine. In the Masonic fraternity Mr. Card maintains affiliations as here noted: Bell Lodge No. 601, Free and Accepted Masons; Pineville Chapter No. 158, Royal Arch Masons; Pineville Commandery No. 39, Knights Templars; Pineville Chapter No. 89, Order of the Eastern Star; and Kossair Temple No. 66, the Mystic Shrine. He also holds membership also in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the Knights of the Maccabees, and the Concentrated Order of Hoo-Hoo, a lumbermen's fraternity. In the World war period he served as a trustee of the Bell County Chapter of the Red Cross, was a member of committees in charge of local drives in support of the Government loan drives, Stamp drives, etc., and the liberality of his personal subscriptions gave further evidence of his patriotic stewardship.

On the 16th of February, 1897, in the City of Nashville, Tennessee, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Card with Miss Elizabeth Chamberlin, daughter of Colonel James and Della (Nichol) Chamberlin. Colonel Chamberlin gained his military title through service as an officer in the Union Army in the Civil war, and long held prestige as one of the leading members of the Nashville bar. He finally retired from active practice and continued his residence at Nashville until his death, his widow being still a resident of that city. Elizabeth, eldest of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Card, was graduated from the University of Kentucky in 1920, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. She was successful as a service as a teacher in the public schools of Porto Rico; A. H. Card, Jr., born November 8, 1893, is a student in the Kentucky State University; Hugh Cleveland, who was born October 11, 1902, and Harold Patterson, born August 9, 1905, are students in the Pineville High School; and the youngest of the children is Nelle, born June 6, 1911, she being a pupil in the public schools of Pineville.

CYRUS H. LINN, M. D. In the measure that a man proves the breadth and sincerity of his character and his sense of the responsibility devolving upon him does he deserve and achieve lasting success. This is particularly true in the field of medicine, where without a sane, sound outlook life has no individual existence, and upon others that impression so desirable in order to firmly establish permanent prosperity and wordly reputation. In the medical profession of Lyon County Dr. Cyrus H. Linn has achieved success through the possession of this characteristic as well as through marked ability, grounded on long and faithful training and developed through practical experience.

Linn was born at Matoon, in Lerna, Coles County, Illinois, June 30, 1862, a son of Cyrus C. Linn. His first American ancestor on the paternal side was John Linn the first, who emigrated from Scotland in 1730 and settled on a tract of land in Adams County, Pennsylvania, known as the Manor of the Mask, being accompanied by two brothers, Adam and Robert Linn, the latter of whom died in 1762. John Linn the first died about November 25, 1792, after having spent many years as a planter. He had six children, one of whom married Martha Scott; John, who married Mary Gettys; Samuel, who married Margaret Linn; Andrew, who married Eleanor Scott; David, who married Jeannette Linn; and Hugh. Hugh Linn, the grandfather of Dr. Cyrus H. Linn, was born in 1790 at the Manor of the Mask, and was a pioneer into Coles County, Illinois, where he founded the old Linn homestead. There he passed the rest of his long and useful life, and died in 1867. He was first married, March 8, 1814, to Mary Weir Wilson, born February 8, 1793, who died August 26, 1826. On September 7, 1827, he married Phoebe Crane, who was born in September, 1803, and died January 2, 1867.

Cyrus C. Linn was born in 1837 on the Linn homestead in Coles County, Illinois, and spent his entire life in that county, his death occurring in 1895. He was reared on the old homestead and engaged in farming until 1861, when he enlisted in the One Hundred and Twenty-third Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for service in the Civil War, and was disabled at the battle of Perryville. He was invalided home, but did not recover, dying when his son was only three years old. He was a republican in politics and was a strong churchman of the Presbyterian faith. Mr. Linn married Susan E. Maxwell, who was once engaged to take him to Illinois, and died at Mckean, Illinois, in 1872. They had two children: Edgar C., a veteran of the Spanish-American war and later a machinist at Kuttawa, Kentucky, where he died at the age of fifty-nine years, and Dr. Cyrus H.

The Means family was founded in America by William Means, who came from Ireland, about 1700 and married Nancy Simonton, also a native of Ireland. They settled near Cheyenne, where they removed to Illinois, Pennsylvania, South Carolina. William Means, son of William the emigrant, was born near Staunton, Virginia, May 3, 1763, and when an infant was taken by his parents to Union County, South Carolina. When he was but seventeen years of age he became a "minute man" of the Revolution, and enlisted in the patriot forces from Union County. He served in the battle of Cowpens January 17, 1781, guarding baggage, and applied for a pension. After serving some years he moved to Kentucky, close of the war he removed to Georgia, and after residing in that state for thirteen years went to Adams County, Ohio, where he lived for twenty-three years. He then went to Paris, Edgar County, Illinois, in 1822, and died June 11, 1848. His son, Hugh Means, the maternal grandfather of Dr. Cyrus H. Linn, was for many years engaged in flat-boating to New Orleans from his home community of Eugene, Indiana, where his death occurred.

Dr. Cyrus H. Linn was educated in the public schools of Illinois and Indiana and attended the Collegiate Institute of Princeton, Kentucky, during 1881 and 1882. At that time he secured employment as a wood machinist, a vocation which he followed for five years, during which time he applied his spare time to the study of medicine under Dr. A. D. Purdy, of Kuttawa. Next he attended the medical department at Nashville, where he was a student during the term of 1887-1888, and for two and one-half years practiced under a state license in Livingston County, Kentucky. At the end of that time he entered Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City, being graduated therefrom in 1891, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and in that year commenced practice at Grand Rivers, Kentucky, where he remained two years. Dr. Linn then entered the Navy service, and engaged in practice until 1895, in which year he was appointed surgeon for the Kentucky Branch Penitentiary at Eddyville, and in that capacity two and one-half years. Resuming practice at Kuttawa, he has continued therein to the present time and is now rated among the leading physicians and surgeons of Lyon County. His offices are situated in the Post Office Building.

Doctor Linn belongs to the Lyon County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, the American Medical Association, the Joint Association of Railway Surgeons, the American Association of Railway Surgeons and the Southwestern Kentucky Medical Society, and is local surgeon for the Illinois Central Railway Company. During the war period he offered his services to the United States Army the day before he reached his fifty-fourth birthday, but was not accepted. However, he was made a member of the Volunteer Medical Service, authorized by the Council of National Defense, and took an active part in the various movements necessitated by war's demands. Doctor Linn has been prominent in the ranks of the republican party in his community and was a candidate for Congress in 1900. In 1908 he was a delegate to the Republican National Convention held at Chicago. He is a member and elder at the Presbyterian Church. Doctor Linn is the owner of a modern home in Lyon County, a handsome residence on Oak Avenue, completely equipped with running water, electric lights and all modern conveniences. While his time is fully occupied, Doctor Linn is interested in those measures which tend towards a better education of the masses and an awakening of the people to the necessity for more sanitary regulations and hygienic conditions. He is not bound by his professional knowledge, but is anxious to perfect himself and join with others in working towards effecting improvements that will raise the average man and woman and develop the best quality of citizenship.

Doctor Linn married in 1895, at Kuttawa, Miss Maydwell Wilcox, of this place, and to this union there was born one son, Cyrus H., Jr. He was born September 6, 1896, and was educated in the public schools of Kuttawa and the Augusta Military Academy at Fort Defiance, Virginia. He entered the United States service in November, 1915, as a yeoman in the Navy, and during the World war was on the submarine supply ship Bushnell, being overseas during the greater part of the conflict. He was mustered out of the service in November, 1919, and is now in the United States Merchant Marine service, being on the steamer Atlantis. Doctor Linn's first marriage was unhappily terminated by divorce in 1912. On November 18, 1928, he married Mae L. Mathews, of Kuttawa, Kentucky, who now shares with him a happy home.

Hugh Wake. For more than fourteen years Hugh Wake has been identified with the mercantile interests of Kuttawa, and during this period has developed the largest dry goods enterprise in Lyon County, now conducted by Hugh Wake & Company. A man of public spirit, he has sought at all times to advance the progress of his adopted community, yet has been content to center his activities in business and financial affairs without desiring the emollients or transient honors of public or political life.

Mr. Wake was born on a farm on the south bank of the Cumberland River, two miles east of Eddyville, Kentucky, March 9, 1871, a son of R. W. Wake. He attended the public schools in Kentucky, immigrating to England, immigrated to America in Colonial times and settled in North Carolina, where, in the county bearing the family name, was born the grandfather of Hugh Wake, Ambrose Wake. Ambrose Wake, a physician and surgeon, was a pioneer into Webster County, Kentucky, whence he went to the vicinity of Cerulean Springs, but later returned to Webster County and passed away in Providence. His death was caused by the complications which followed the sting of a "yellow-jacket." Dr. Ambrose Wake married Miss Mary Calmese, who was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, and died near Cerulean Springs.

R. W. Wake was born in 1833 in Webster County, Kentucky, and died on the Lyon County farm on which his son was born, in 1888. He was reared in the vicinity of Cereal Springs and as a young man removed to Lyon County, for a few years living at Eddyville, where he practiced law. Eventually he located on the farm in Lyon County, and during the remainder of his life devoted himself to the improvement of agriculture and to the advancement of educational, cultural and country law practice. He was a democrat in politics, held membership in the Masonic fraternity, and was a member of the Baptist Church.

Mr. Wake first married Miss May Lyon, who was born in Lyon County, which was named in honor of her father, Chittington Lyon. She died at Eddyville in 1856, and was the mother of three children: Frank G., vice president of the Farmers National Bank of Madisonville and a leading and prominent business man; a sketch of whose career appears elsewhere in this work; and Flora and Lula, who died in infancy. R. W. Wake married for his third wife Miss Cordelia Hayes, who was born in Lyon County and died without issue on the home place. His fourth wife was Miss Tennie Hayes, born in Lyon County, and died there without issue. For his fifth wife Mr. Wake married Miss Nettie Doorn, who was born in 1842, in Lyon County, Kentucky, and died at Kuttawa in 1890. To this union were born three children: Hugh; Mary, of Kuttawa, the widow of K. S. Doorn, formerly a Lyon County farmer; and Ambrose, who died at the age of one year.

Hugh Wake received his education in the public schools of Eddyville, and after his high school education returned to the home farm, where he assisted his father. In 1864, he opened a store at Kuttawa with the blessing of the good will of A. B. Irwin & Son, dry goods merchants, and under his own name built up what is conceded to be the largest dry goods business in Lyon County. This business he conducted alone until January 3, 1920, when he admitted his son, J. D. Wake, and J. G. Barnett to partnership, and the business is now conducted as Hugh & Company.

Mr. Wake is the owner of the store building, which is situated on the north side of Oak Avenue; the Post Office Building, a fine new structure of brick, built in 1917; a modern residence on the north side of Oak Street, one of the modern and comfortable homes of Kuttawa; and other valuable real estate. He is a director and stockholder of the Citizens Bank of Kuttawa, having been identified with its sound and stable institution in those capacities for the past eight years, and is president of the Kuttawa Cemetery Board. He was made a Mason December 26, 1900, and is a member of Suwanee Lodge No. 190, A. F. and A. M.; Lyon Chapter No. 61, R. A. M.; Phillip Sweeney Council; R. and S. M. of Eddyville; Paducah Commandery No. 11, K. T.; and Rizpah Temple, A. A. O. N. M., of Madisonville. He took an active part in all local war activities, helping in all the Liberty Bond loans, assisting in the various drives, and subscribing for every purpose to the utmost extent of his ability.

In 1890 Mr. Wake married in Lyon County Miss Rowena F. Hayden, a daughter of W. E. and Polly A. (Wake) Hayden, farming people of Lyon County. Mrs. Wake died in 1912, leaving behind three children: R. W., who died February 14, 1910, at Kuttawa, where he had been cashier of the Citizens Bank for three years, a position in which he had been very active in war work, collecting double the amount of any other person in the county; J. D.; and Sybil Hayden, the wife of G. E. Jones, a hardware merchant of Kuttawa. In 1912, Mr. Wake's family attended the Kuttawa public schools until he finished his sophomore year at the high school, when he left to pursue a course at the Bowling Green Business University in 1913 and 1914. Returning to Kuttawa, he entered his father's store, where he was employed until June 15, 1917, then enlisting in the United States Navy. He was sent to Newport, Rhode Island, for three weeks, and then transferred to Portsmouth, New Hampshire, where he spent three months, following which he was on the U. S. S. Arkansas until February 17, 1918. He spent three months overseas, where his battleship joined the British fleet, with which, November 21, 1918, it assisted in bringing the German fleet into the Firth of Forth, Scotland. He was mustered out as a non-commissioned officer February 24, 1919, and returned to his home, becoming manager in his father's business in January, 1920. J. D. Wake married Miss Freda Mae Bannom, daughter of W. S. Bannum, a farmer and freeholder, in Suwanee County, in 1906, and they have one child, Mary Devona, who died aged four years.

HENRY CLAY CROSS as a boy employed the opportunities afforded by his father, a newspaper publisher, to learn the printing by hand, and newspaper business, and that has been his work ever since. He is now publisher and proprietor of the Western Herald, one of the leading country papers of Western Kentucky, published at Eddyville.

He was born near Brewers in Marshall County, Kentucky, March 15, 1863, and is of Scotch-Irish ancestry. His grandfather, Alexander Cross, came from North Carolina, where he was born, and was one of the early settlers in Marshall County, Kentucky, and died at Brewers in 1868. A. A. Cross, father of W. A. Cross, the Eddyville editor, was born at Brewers in 1862, was reared and married in Marshall County, and spent a number of years as a farmer. Later he entered the flour milling business, owning the roller mills at Benton. Subse-sequently he acquired the Benton Tribune-Democrat, and was editor and proprietor of that newspaper until he returned to Marshall County, and became editor and proprietor of the Western Herald. He is a democrat in politics and an active Baptist. A. A. Cross married Mary Susan Ivey, who was born at Har-ey in Marshall County in 1862. Henry Clay is the oldest of their children: Gania is the wife of W. E. Wyatt, a telegraph operator at Benton; William B. is a student in the College of Electrical and Mechanical Engieering at Davenport, Iowa; Urey Woodson, the youngest, is a schoolboy at Benton.

Henry Clay Cross attended the rural schools of Marshall County, and in 1912 graduated from Clinton College at Clinton, Kentucky. With a good education as a foundation he took up the newspaper business, and had a thorough apprenticeship at Henderson, Kentucky, and at Memphis, Ripley, and Dyersburg, Tennessee, and at brief intervals worked in other places.
In 1916 he bought the Lyon County Herald, and for the past four years has employed all his exceptional personal talents to make that a model of country journalism. The Herald was established in 1906, and has always been democratic in politics. Mr. Cross now has one of the best equipped newspaper plants in Western Kentucky, with a four-year line of type, modern presses and folder, and everything found in an up-to-date newspaper office. The Herald has a wide circulation and influence over Lyon and sur-rrounding counties. Both through his newspaper and personally, Mr. Cross was active in forwarding every movement undertaken at the behest of the Government for the successful prosecution of the war. During 1910 he was county chairman for Lyon County of the War Savings organization.

In addition to the responsibilities of conducting the Herald Mr. Cross has for the past eight years been a guard in the Kentucky Penitentiary. He is a democrat, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is owner of two parcels of improved real estate at Eddyville, including his modern home on South Shelby Street.

In 1913, at Fulton, Kentucky, Mr. Cross married Miss Edna Maes Hanberry, daughter of T. T. and Belle (Litchfield) Hanberry, residents of Eddyville, where her father is an attorney. Mr. and Mrs. Cross have two children, Eugene M., born in July, 1914, and Clay Lamar, born in August, 1917.

WILLIAM M. DEBORD, M. D. One of the busiest physicians and surgeons in Boyd County, Doctor DeBord has been an earnest worker in everything he has ever undertaken. He comes of sturdy stock, pioneers in Eastern Kentucky, and he has the family qualities of self-reliance that have never failed him whether his responsibilities were those of a merchant, a soldier or a physician.

Doctor DeBord was born in Lawrence County, Kentucky, August 25, 1873, son of Stephen and Augusta (Hatfield) DeBord, both natives of Kentucky. The DeBords came originally from France and were identified with the Colonial period of the Carolinas. Some of them served in the Revolutionary war. The great-grandfather of Doctor DeBord was one of the first settlers on the Big Sandy in Eastern Kentucky. He was a hatter by trade, and had a family of eleven daughters and one son. His only son became a very influential man in Eastern Kentucky, was a school teacher, practiced law, was a minister of the Gospel, and one of the best educated men in that part of the state. His family consisted of four daughters and four sons, Stephen being the youngest. Stephen DeBord was a farmer by occupation, but he also took a deep interest in such public matters as school and church.

William M. DeBord was five years old when his father lost his health, and after that he had to work his way while getting an education. He attended the common schools in Lawrence County, and at the age of nineteen completed a normal course at Blaine. He did work at different times and at different places, and at twenty years of age joined the Garard Guard of Kentucky. When the Spanish-American war broke out he went with his company into the Federal service, and was in the Cuban campaign with Company C of the Third Regiment of Kentucky as a non-commissioned officer. He was at Matanzas and La Union, Cuba, for about a year and subsequently he continued his interest in the military establishment of Kentucky and for seven years was a lieutenant and had his honorable discharge a year before the World war broke out, and was unable to get accepted for active duty during that period, though so far as his duties as a physician would permit he helped in all the local drives.

After the Spanish-American war Doctor DeBord and his older brother, Samuel, engaged in the mercantile business. He continued in that line about five years, and his brother sold out and placed his capital to complete his higher education. He took the regular four years' course in Kentucky University at Lexington, and then entered the Medical College at Louisville in 1903, graduating M. D. in 1907. Doctor DeBord at once came to Ashland and has since been in general medical and surgical practice. He is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations, a strong republican, and a member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church. His hobby is outdoor sports, and one of his favorite diversions is going camping with his family.

In 1899, in Boyd County, Doctor DeBord married Miss Susie Compton, daughter of Robert and Rhoda (Cox) Compton, natives of Kentucky. Doctor and Mrs. DeBord have four children: Chloa Mae, Teddie Roosevelt, Carma, and William Howard.

NEWTON WILLARD UTLEY for over twenty years has been a prominent figure in the Lyon County Bar, is a former state senator, a banker and the community has long expected of him leadership in all important public matters. A strong ambition to make himself useful in the world first led Mr. Utley to prepare for the ministry, and as a missionary he did some brilliant work in the far East until his own health and the health of his wife compelled him to return to his native state.

The Utleys were identified with a very early period of settlement in Virginia and also with some of the first settlements in Western Kentucky. They came out of England and were identified with the original Virginia Colony at Jamestown. Mr. Utley's grandfather, Merrill Utley, was a native of North Carolina, but came West and was one of the first to establish a settlement west of the Tennessee River, in Marshall County, Kentucky. He lived out his life as a farmer there and died before the birth of Newton Utley. He was a native of Wales. William Washington Utley, father of the Eddyville lawyer, was born in Simpson County, Kentucky, in 1818, but grew up in what is now Marshall County, where he was married and where he spent his active life as a prosperous farmer. He died in 1878. He was a democrat and in religion was inclined toward the Primitive Baptist Church. His wife, Sarah Ann Holland, was born in Marshall County in 1820 and died there in 1865. They were the parents of a family of nine children: Elizabeth Katherine, who married W. E. Warren, a farmer, and both died at Paragould, Arkansas; John died at the age of seventeen; James Monroe spent his life as a typical westerner, as a miner, prospector and cowboy, saw much of the life of the western states, and died in Nevada at the age of sixty-five; Edna was only twenty years of age at the time of her death; Wilson A. was a minister of the Christian Church in the state at the age of fifty; Jacob V., a farmer, died in Marshall County in 1880; Newton W. is the seventh in the family; Anna, living in Marshall County, is the widow of Richard Ratcliff, who was a farmer and trader; and Viola is the wife of W. J. Ellis, a retired business man living at San Antonio, Texas.

Newton Willard Utley was born in Marshall County May 12, 1860, and lived there on his father's farm to the age of twenty. His early advantages were only those of the rural schools. As a means of helping himself in his career he was a teacher for four years, in Marshall, Hickman and Fulton counties. He then entered Vanderbilt University at Nashville, taking the theological course and received the degree Th. G. in 1887. He remained another year at the University, doing post-graduate work in sciences and modern languages. He was then assigned to duty by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as an independent missionary, but was identified with the Southern Methodist Mission in Japan. He then, under the auspices of that mission, established the Kwansei Gakuin at Kobe, Japan, and in subsequent years has had the satisfaction of seeing that develop into one of the largest mission schools in the world. In the midst of his prosperous labors abroad his health failed and he was compelled to return to Kentucky. He returned to Japan in 1893 as a missionary, and traveled over Southern Japan, establishing and developing mission stations. He continued this work until 1896, when, on account of the failing health of his wife, he was obliged to return to his native land.
In earlier years Mr. Utley had diligently pursued the study of law, and after returning to Eddyville he resumed his studies and was admitted to the bar in 1897, and since that date has been one of the active members of the bar, with a large practice. He still maintains his law offices at Eddyville. His natural qualities of leadership soon brought him into prominence in local politics. On the democratic ticket he was elected a member of the State Senate in 1892, and one of the most influential members during the sessions of 1900 and 1902. After the assassination of Governor Goebel he was designated president pro tem of the Senate, and was elected to that office in 1902 and served as acting lieutenant governor. During the Session of 1900 he was chairman of the conference committee on suffrage and elections, and during the extra session of that year, as chairman of the conference committee on elections, practically drew up and perfected the measure which is now on the statute books of the State Election Laws.

Mr. Utley is vice president of the Citizens Bank of Kuttawa, and is a director of the First State Bank of Eddyville. He served several years as vice president of the Kentucky State Bar Association. During the World War he practically abandoned his profession and other interests to devote himself heart and soul to every patriotic cause, as acting chairman of the Council of Defense, as food administrator for Lyon County, as a member of all the bond and other committees and as chairman of the Red Cross and chairman of the Relief Committees. His church is a vital interest of his life and he is a steward of the Eddyville Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and chairman of the Board of Trustees of the church property. He is a Royal Arch Mason, being affiliated with Joppa Lodge No. 167, A. F. and A. M. The Utley family reside in one of the very best homes of Eddyville, located on Franklin Street.

Mr. Utley married at Eddyville in 1890 Miss Mary S. Childers, daughter of Rev. William and Lucy (Gracey) Childers. Her mother is still living at Eddyville. Her father spent his active life as a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mrs. Utley finished her education in the Woman's College at Nashville, Tennessee. In addition to the substantial achievements of his own life Mr. Utley regards with peculiar satisfaction the careers of his three sons. Willard, the oldest, was born in Japan May 5, 1891, and is a lawyer by training, having graduated from the University of Texas and Southwestern University at Houston in 1912. At the beginning of the war he was an employee of the Department of Justice and the Government refused to release him for army duty. However, he was subsequently commissioned a second lieutenant and attached to the Intelligence Service at San Antonio, Texas, being on duty there from May, 1918, until the close of the war. He is now with the real estate department of the United States Government, with headquarters at San Antonio.

The second son is Francis W., who was also born in Japan, March 17, 1895. He entered the Government service early in the war, in June, 1917, joining the navy and was trained at Newport, Rhode Island. For twelve months he was on the destroyer Cassin, with headquarters at Queenstown, and engaged in convoy work and searching the high seas for U-boats. Francis W. Utley afterwards entered the Vanderbilt Training School at Elkton, Kentucky, and from the Bowling Green Business University. He is now in the safe cabinet business in San Antonio, Texas.

Merrill H., the third son, was born July 11, 1901, distinguished himself as a student and has already gained a promising foothold in business life. He graduated from the Eddyville High School and from the Bowling Green Business University, and is now in the managing department of the Standard Oil Company at Jackson, Mississippi.

Edward Hall James. Forty years of continuous practice as a lawyer gives Edward Hall James the distinction of being the dean of the Lyon County Bar. It is said that in all those forty years he has never missed a term at local court at Eddyville, and has had an active career as a lawyer and as an official of the profession and as a judge of his judicial district.

Mr. James was born and reared in an interesting and picturesque section of country between the Cumberland and Tennessee Rivers, five miles south of Eddyville. His birth occurred on his father's farm January 18, 1859. He represents old American stock of Revolutionary connections. His paternal ancestors were English and were Colonial settlers in New Jersey. Mr. James' great-great-great-grandfather was General Hall, a prominent officer of the Continental Army during the Revolution. General Hall married the Revolutionary heroine, Lydia Darrah, at whose home in Philadelphia General Howe had his quarters. Learning of the intention of the British to attack Washington's Army, she by a clever stratagem went through the British lines and informed an American officer, and thus the Continental troops were fully prepared when the enemy attempted their surprise attack. The grandfather of the Eddyville lawyer was J. L. James, who was born in New Jersey in 1799. He spent most of his life in the iron manufacturing industry, at first at Bridgeport, New Jersey, later at Clarksville and Dover, Tennessee, and he died at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, in 1872. He was a Whig in politics and later a Democrat. He married Miss Armie, a native of Pennsylvania, who died in Montgomery County, Tennessee. The father of the Eddyville lawyer was also named J. L. James. He was born at Bridgeport, New Jersey, and was a small boy when his parents moved to Clarksville, Tennessee. He was reared there and at Dover, was married in Montgomery County of that state, and after his marriage engaged in iron manufacturing, at first at Phoenix Furnace in Tennessee, then at the Great Western Furnace in Stewart County of the same state, and about 1854 came to the Mammoth Furnace in Lyon County, Kentucky. He was associated with the operation of that pioneer iron plant until the beginning of the Civil War closed down the furnace, the product being confiscated by the United States Government. Following that he moved to the farm where his father had settled in Kentucky and the family homestead in the county, and thereafter lived in Eddyville, and for twenty years was a commercial traveler. He retired in 1888 and died at Eddyville in August, 1894. He was a Mason, and, like his father, began voting as a Whig, but subsequently became affiliated with the democratic party. J. L. James married Miss Eliza Ann Smith, who was born in Montgomery County, Tennessee, in 1819, and died at Eddyville in July, 1884. The oldest of their six children was a daughter named Henry, who died in Montgomery County, Tennessee, wife of John Steele, a farmer now deceased; Fannie, the second in age, lived at Eddyville at the age of twenty-five, her husband, Henry Machen, a farmer moving to Missouri, where he died; Bettie, who married F. A. Wilson and both died at Eddyville, her husband being a lawyer; J. L. Jr., is district manager of the oldest refining company; lives at New Orleans; Edward H. is the fifth in age, and Claud, the youngest, is an oil dealer at New Orleans.

Edward Hall James acquired his early education at Eddyville, the family moving there when he was nine years of age. He studied law in the offices of R. W. Wake and F. A. Wilson and in December, 1880, was admitted to the bar and at once began the practice which has been uninterrupted and has brought him such favorable prominence as an attorney. Besides his engagements in private practice he served for eight years as county attorney of Lyon County, for eight years as master commissioner of the Circuit Court, and he also filled out the unexpired term of Judge T. P. Gray as county judge. He was a member of the City Council of Eddyville and has his offices in the Lyon Block on Water Street. Since December 1, 1910, he has also been in the family grocery business, with a store on Water Street, and has developed a very profitable enterprise. His home is a fine residence on Water Street, overlooking the Cumberland River.

In September, 1884, at Eddyville, Mr. James married Miss May Cassidy, daughter of Dan B. and Clara (Wolf) Cassidy, now deceased. Her father was one of the early members of the Eddyville bar.

JOHN JONES. While upwards of four decades of his life have been devoted to the serious business of agriculture in Lyon County, John Jones has also figured at different times in a prominent way in local affairs and politics, and is the present sheriff at the Courthouse at Eddyville.

His grandfather, also named John Jones, was one of the pioneer settlers of Lyon County, coming from North Carolina. The family was established in Kentucky more than a century ago, since William Jones, father of Sheriff Jones, was born in Lyon County in 1811. Practically all his life was devoted to the care and superintendence of his farm three miles north of Eddyville, where he died in 1877. He was a republican in politics. In his native county he married Miss Mary Hoseus of another pioneer family of Lyon County. She was born in 1815. She died on the old homestead in 1871. In a family of nine children Sheriff John Jones is the youngest. Some brief mention of his brothers and sisters is as follows: Ann, who died on a farm adjoining the old homestead, wife of A. E. Lewis, also deceased; R. H. Jones, who spent his life as a farmer in Lyon County, where he died at the age of seventy-one; Thomas, who also died on a Lyon County farm at the age of fifty-eight; Peter, a retired farmer living with Sheriff Jones; W. B., a retired merchant at Kuttawa, Kentucky; Lida, who died in Lyon County, wife of James Lewis, a farmer in the same locality; Lewis, who died on his farm in Lyon County in 1918; and Maggie, who died at Kuttawa aged forty, wife of Frank Cook, who is employed in a box factory at Cairo, Illinois.

It was on the old homestead three miles north of Eddyville that John Jones was born November 8, 1865, and after obtaining his education in the rural schools he took a share in the work and the management of the old homestead, and it was only recently, in 1920, that he moved away from the scenes of his birthplace, and even then did not move far, since his present farm is two and a quarter miles north of Eddyville. He has 240 acres and now, as in the past, does a prosperous business as a general farmer and stock raiser. He also owns a half interest in a farm of 150 acres near Kuttawa.

Outside of an active interest in local politics in his community Mr. Jones did not figure in county politics until 1905, when he was a candidate for sheriff and lost the election by only one vote. In November, 1917, the people gave him generous support in his candidacy, and he began his duties as sheriff in January, 1918, for a term of four years. In his capacity as sheriff and as a leading citizen he was allied with every local movement in the town and county to afford a vigorous prosecution of the war, including his leadership in putting his school district over the top in all war subscriptions.

In 1877, in Lyon County, Sheriff Jones married Miss Cora Glenn, a daughter of William and Celia (Young) Glenn both now deceased. Her father was a farmer in Lyon County. Mr. and Mrs. Jones have six children: Clara, at home; Iva, who married Judge W. T. Fowler, assistant attorney general of Kentucky, a very DUDLEY HERDON EARLE. One of the men who is entitled to considerable credit with relative to the development of the commercial and financial interests of Dawson Springs is Dudley Herndon Earle, hardware merchant, bank stockholder and reliable citizen. He was born five miles north of Dawson Springs, on a farm at Charleston, Hopkins County, Kentucky, September 3, 1862, a son of Dr. Ben P. Earle, grandson of Eziaith Earle, and great-grandson of the member of the family who came to America during the progress of the Revolutionary war and located in North Carolina, where, although a native of England, he took a constructive part in the development of that state and became one of its honored citizens.

Ezaiath Earle was born in South Carolina in 1808, and died in Hopkins County in 1882. At an early day he moved to Robertson County, Tennessee, and thence to Hopkins County in 1856. During the period of the war between the two sections of the country he was in Southwestern Missouri, but returned to Hopkins County after peace was declared and resumed his farming. He was also a minister of the Primitive Baptist Church, and a most excellent man. His first and second wives were cousins, by the name of Clark, and his third wife was a Mrs. Poor, a native of Kentucky, who died in Missouri, and she was the grandmother of Dudley Earle.

Dr. Ben P. Earle was born in Robertson County, Tennessee, in 1816, and died at Charleston, Kentucky, on his farm, in 1918. He was reared in Hopkins County and in Southwestern Missouri, and studied medicine under Doctor Bailey of Logan County, Kentucky, and in the University of Louisville, from which he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He began the practice of his profession at Charleston, being prominent in that neighborhood, and continued his practice for forty-nine years. He was always active in the ranks of the democratic party and in the Western Kentucky Medical Society, which he served as president for years, and the Kentucky State Medical Society, of which he was vice president. He also belonged to the American Medical Association. Not only was he an eminent physician, but he was a close student and scholarly man.

Being beyond the age for service in the great war, he nevertheless took the deepest interest in it and was spared to see it come to a close with the signing of the armistice, which he often declared was his greatest desire. During the period of this country's active participation in the war he exerted himself to the utmost and took part in all of the drives and subscribed to the very limit for bonds, stamps and to the various loyalty war organizations. Had all of the citizens of the country given such practical proof of their patriotism, the resources of these countries would have been greatly augmented. Both by inheritance and conviction he was a believer in the creed of the Primitive Baptist Church, and was always a strong supporter of the local congregation, of which he was one of the most conscientious members.

Dudley Earle married Mary Ann Roberts, who was born at Charleston in 1838 and died at Charleston in 1918, five weeks before her husband. Their children were as follows: Ila, who married Judge W. T. Fowler, assistant attorney general of Kentucky, a very prominent man and a resident of Frankfort; Lula, who married A. C. King, a farmer, resides in South Chris-town, Parke County, Ind.; Dr. R. R., who is a specialist in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, lives at Urbana, Ohio; I. B., who is a civil engineer in the employ of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, lives at Carbondale, Illinois; Thomas E., who is a civil engineer, lives at Union City, Indiana; Dudley Herndon, who was the sixth in order of birth; and Anna McDaniel, who is a housekeeper of Columbus, Ohio.

Dudley H. Earle attended the local schools of his native place and the Kentucky State University at Lexington, Kentucky, which latter institution he left in 1910, and for a year thereafter was engaged in working on the home farm. He then was employed in the Coates drug store at Hopkinsville for a year, but returned to the home farm and remained on it from 1912 to 1918, when he became an employee of the Illinois Central Railroad Company at Dawson Springs, and held that position for a year. Mr. Earle then bought the business of the Staninger Hardware Company, and now has the leading hardware business in Hopkins County, his store being located on Railroad Avenue. He is a stockholder in the Commercial Bank of Hopkinsville and is one of the live and prosperous young business men of this city.

In politics he is a democrat. He belongs to Dawson Springs Camp No. 12302, M. W. A., of Dawson Springs. In 1912 Mr. Earle married at Madisonville, Kentucky, Miss Addie Louise Morgan, a daughter of M. S. and Catherine (Mencer) Morgan. Mr. Morgan was a farmer, but deceased. His widow, Mrs. Morgan, lives at Dawson Springs. Mr. and Mrs. Earle have one son, Herndon Morgan, who was born July 1, 1913.

JUDSON CARL JENKINS. Dawson Springs has established a standard of excellence for its public schools which is attracting attention from educators all over the state, and this admirable man has a part in the story of this success, inasmuch as he has had under his supervision ten teachers and 425 pupils. One of the best graded and high school buildings in Kentucky was erected at Dawson Springs in 1915, and Superintendent Jenkins has raised the standard of scholarship until it surpasses in excellence that of the building. He is an enthusiast in his work, and not only keeps abreast of his profession, but has a talent for imparting knowledge in a manner which is entertaining and impressive, and his pupils show the results of his scholarly and sympathetic training.

Like his father he is a democrat and a member of the Christian Church, and is an elder in the local congregation. A Mason, he belongs to Dawson Lodge No. 449, R. F. & A. M. He also maintains membership in the Kentucky Educational Association and is an active factor in it. In addition to his modern residence on Eixon Street, Dawson Springs, Mr. Jenkins owns a farm in Caldwell County. During the late war he was an ardent worker in behalf of all of the local activities, and subscribed and contributed to his limit to all of the drives. He is a member of the County Board of Defenders of Dawson Springs, and in every possible way did what he felt was his duty to his county and community in such times of great stress.

In 1900 Mr. Jenkins married in Caldwell County Miss Laura Wadlington, a daughter of R. L. and Julia (Brown) Wadlington. Mr. Wadlington, who was a farmer of Caldwell County, is now deceased, but his widow survives him and resides at Princeton, Kenty. Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins have one child, Judson, Jr., who was born September 7, 1919.

Always a supporter of law and order, Mr. Jenkins ranged himself, as a matter of course, with the best element upon coming to Dawson Springs. When it became necessary to adopt stringent measures to drive out a vicious element in this locality he was not found lacking in the courage of his convictions, but did his part in bringing about the reform movement and expelling the evil-doers, although he would be the last one to lay claim to any credit for his work. He is a modest man and whatever he is able to accomplish in the way of civic duty he takes as a matter of course and a part of his day’s action, but the fact remains, nevertheless, that he did exert a very strong and effective influence and rendered an efficient service to the officials in direct charge of the prosecution.

Lonnie Houston Wilkie, cashier of the First National Bank of Dawson Springs, is one of the best-known and alert young business men of Hopkins County. His rapid rise has been watched with interest by his friends, who are glad to accord him the confidence his abilities and business successes entitle him. He was born at Charleston, Hopkins County, Kentucky, September 25, 1893, a son of Walter V. Wilkie, and grandson of Sam H. Wilkie, who was born near Beulah, Kentucky, in 1826, and died near Richland, Hopkins County, in 1903, having been engaged in farming in Hopkins County all of his life. He married a Miss Tirey, who was born near Beulah in 1847, and died near Richland, Kentucky. Their children who are now living are: Walter V., who is mentioned at length below; and William H., who lives at Brush, Colorado, and is engaged in business. The bank and its representatives came to the American Colonies, settling in North Carolina, from whence they migrated into Tennessee, where the great-grandfather, Jackson Wilkie, was born. He was a farmer and circuit rider, and became one of the pioneers of Hopkins County. His death occurred at Beulah, Kentucky, before the birth of his great-grandson, L. H. Wilkie, but he is remembered by the older residents as a most excellent man and successful preacher and farmer.

Walter V. Wilkie was born near Beulah, Kentucky, in 1888, and he was reared, educated and married in Hopkins County. For some time following his marriage he was engaged in farming near Charleston, and then moved to the vicinity of Dawson Springs in 1902, and continued his agricultural operations until 1907, when he came to Dawson Springs, and has been a successful business man ever since. His political convictions make him a Democrat. He belongs to Magnolia Camp No. 73, W. O. W., and Dawson Springs Camp No. 12392, M. W. A. Walter V. Wilkie married Mattie F. McGrigor, who was born near Charleston, Kentucky, in 1868, and they became the parents of the following children: Lova J., who married Callie Holeman, is foreman in the sugar mill of Brush, Colorado; Lonnie Houston, who was second in order of birth; and Lexie J., who is associated with his father in business at Dawson Springs. He entered the United States service in June, 1918, as a member of the navy, and was sent to the Great Lakes Training Station at Chicago, Illinois, from whence he was transferred to Charleston, South Carolina, doing patrol duty on board several ships. For a time he was stationed at Halifax, Nova Scotia, in the naval training department, and was finally mustered out of the service July 17, 1919.

Lonnie H. Wilkie attended the local schools of his native county and the Dawson Springs High School, and was graduated from the class of 1913. In the meanwhile he filled the position of bookkeeper in the Commercial Bank of Dawson for four years while attending school, and in this way gained knowledge of business and banking. In December, 1913, he went to Palo Alto, California, and remained three years at Leland Stanford, Junior University. During the summer of 1916 he was engaged in working on farms, and in November, 1916, entered the United States Marine Corps and was drill instructor at Mare Island, California, until August 31, 1917. On that date he was transferred to the paymaster's department at San Francisco, California, and remained there until November 23, 1917. From there he was sent to the paymaster's department at Washington, D.C., and of Columbia, and then the headquarters of the Marine Corps at Washington until February, 1918. Once more he was transferred and, going to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, was on board the "Von Steuben," a captured German liner, and was attached to the First Replacement Battalion and landed in France February 26, 1918. From Brest he was sent to St. Mieul and thence to Chantilly, where he remained until April 8, 1918, when he was transferred to the chief paymaster's office, Paris, France. Various duties were assigned him which took him all over France, but his headquarters were at Paris until he was returned to the United States April 4, 1919. Returning to Washington, he was granted a furlough, and spent the time from April 11 to April 26 at home. Mr. Wilkie was then ordered to report at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and remained on duty at the office of the paymaster of the Advance Base Force until he was honorably discharged August 30, 1919. While he was abroad Mr. Wilkie visited Germany and Belgium, and is very well posted with reference to war conditions in those countries and France.

Returning home after his discharge he organized the First National Bank of Dawson Springs, which opened its doors for business in 1920. The officers and directors of the bank are as follows: James D. Meadows, president; T. H. O'Brien, vice president; L. H. Wilkie, cashier; and Dessie Glover, assistant cashier. The bank is located on South Main Street, at Railroad Avenue. It has a capital of $2,500, and a surplus of $2,500, and although a new institution it has already taken the place in the community to which the stand-by men backing it entitled it once. The bank is now under the management of Messrs. Dow and Fosdick, who are the owners.

On December 28, 1917, Mr. Wilkie married at Dawson Springs, while home on a furlough, Miss Minnie D. Morris, daughter of Amon and Tina (Claxton) Morris, who are residing on their farm near Dawson Springs. Mrs. Wilkie was graduated from the Dawson Springs High School and then attended the Bowling Green Normal School and Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, for a year, and holds a state certificate for teaching. Mr. and Mrs. Wilkie own their modern residence on Sycamore Street, which is one of the most comfortable homes at the Springs, and here they delight to welcome their many friends. Mr. Wilkie is a Democrat. He belongs to the Baptist Church, and is generous in his contributions to its support. A young man in years, he has had a wide and varied experience, and his knowledge of men and their motives is somewhat profound and especially qualifies him for the responsible position he is now filling.

Francis Monroe Jackson, M.D. Hopkins County has within its confines some of the most skilled and dependable physicians and surgeons of the state, men of the highest character, whose lives are spent in the noble work of caring for the sick and afflicted and in bringing about the best results for their communities. One of these men, who enjoys a well-merited high repute both as a physician and as a citizen, is Dr. Francis Monroe Jackson, of Dawson Springs, whose position in his profession is unquestioned.

Doctor Jackson was born in Hopkins County, on a farm five miles west of Dawson Springs, April 18, 1870, a son of Washington and Beulah (Tinsley) Jackson, who was born in North Carolina in 1809 and died in Caldwell County, Kentucky, in 1863. It was he who brought the family into Caldwell County from North Carolina, and he became one of the most successful and extensive farmers of that region. He married Winnie Creekmur, a native of Ireland, who died in Caldwell County in 1900, aged ninety-nine years.

and eleven months. They had five sons who served during the war between the North and the South, three being in the Union Army and two in the Confederate Army. The Jacksons are of Scotch-Irish descent, and were established in North Carolina when it was still an English colony.

Nathan B. Jackson was born in Caldwell County, Kentucky, in 1835, and he died at Dawson Springs in 1902. In young manhood he left his native county, where he had been reared and educated, and came to Caldwell County, settling on the farm which was his son’s birthplace, and continued to operate it until 1885, when he retired, moved to Dawson Springs and was surrounded by a life in ease and comfort. During the war between the two sections of the country he enlisted in Company E, Twentieth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and served throughout the war, becoming a corporal and participating in the battles of Shiloh, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and Chickamauga, and in the campaign against Vicksburg. On July 1863, he was wounded, his command being at that time pursued for sixteen miles in one hour and fifteen minutes by John Morgan and his raiders, from Lebanon to Springfield, Tennessee. Later Mr. Jackson was with General Sherman on his march to the sea, was present when General Nelson was killed and also when Dick Morgan lost his life, his service in all including the raid was large. For the time he cast his first vote he was a republican. He was married to Sarah E. Smith, who was born in Hopkins County, Kentucky, in 1839, and died at Dawson Springs January 2, 1901. They became the parents of children as follows: W. T., who is a farmer of Dawson Springs; B. T., who is chief of police of Dawson Springs; and Doctor Jackson, who was born in 1871.

Doctor Jackson attended the public schools of Dawson Springs, and was graduated from its high school course in 1892. For the subsequent four years he was engaged in teaching school in Hopkins County, when he was appointed chief of police of Dawson Springs, and discharged the duties pertaining to that office for a period of six years. Having decided upon a medical career, in 1904 he entered the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville, Kentucky, and remained a student of that institution until 1907, leaving it in the latter year to enter the Louisville Medical College, from which he was graduated in 1908 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. That same year he established himself in a general medical practice at Dawson Springs, and has been there continuously ever since, with the exception of the time he was in the service of his Government during the great war. He tried to get accepted in the medical corps and was twice refused on account of disability, and then, in December, 1917, volunteered for mining service for the Sterling Coal Company at Daniel Boone, Kentucky, where he spent three months, and then, in the month of June, in the office of the Mennonite Coal Company of Mannington, Kentucky, completing his work May 1, 1918, and returning to Dawson Springs. His offices are at No. 5 South Main Street. He is a strong supporter of the republican party. The Methodist Episcopal Church has him as one of its zealous members, and he is now serving as a steward of the local congregation. Fraternally Doctor Jackson is a member of the Odd Fellows, Masons’ Lodge No. 628, A. F. and A. M.; Magnolia Camp No. 73, W. O. W.; Dawson Springs Camp No. 12902, M. W. A.; and Grove No. 67, Woodman Circle. Professionally he belongs to the Hopkins County Medical Society, Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He owns his modern residence at No. 9 North Main Street, the finest in the city, and also a dwelling on Franklin Street, corner of Ken-gan Street.

In 1893 Doctor Jackson married in Hopkins County Miss Mary D. Osburn, a daughter of H. C. and Elizabeth (Pool) Osburn, the latter of whom is deceased, but the former, who is a retired farmer, is living at Sebree, Kentucky. Mrs. Jackson was graduated in music, and is a skilled performer in both vocal and instrumental music. Doctor and Mrs. Jackson have one child, Niles Osburn, who was born January 13, 1890. He was graduated from the Bowling Green Business University at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and is now bookkeeper and stenographer in the Planters Bank at Clarksville, Mississippi, where he is held in high esteem by his associates and the customers of the bank. Doctor Jackson has three sons.

Edward F. Coffman, one of the level-headed, resourceful and efficient men of Russellville, holds the office of postmaster, and although one of the younger men, is rightfully numbered among its prominent citizens and trustworthy professional men.

Beau Desert, France. His wife, Nell Howard, was a member of a Red Cross Unit, also with Base Hospital No. 110, and they met and were married while in France.

After attending a private school of Russellville, Edward F. Coffman became a student of Bethel College at Russellville, and was graduated therefrom in 1910, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. For the subsequent year Mr. Coffman studied in the business department of that institution and was graduated in shorthand and typewriting in 1911. Following this he was stenographer for the Crescent Coal Company of Beaver, Kentucky, for a season. He then died at the age of two years at Russellville in July, 1912, and held the office until April, 1919, with the exception of a short time after the demise of his father when he was acting postmaster. On April 1, 1919, he was appointed assistant postmaster at Russellville, and on October 1, 1919, received his appointment as postmaster of the same office for a term of four years under the civil service, standing first in a competitive examination. Like his father, he is a member of the Baptist Church and a member of the Christian Church, and at present he is treasurer of the local congregation of that denomination. Mr. Coffman belongs to the Sigma Alpha Epsilon Greek letter fraternity. His residence is at 680 East Second Street. During the late war he took an active part in local war work, being in charge of the post office activities in the sale of War Savings Stamps for Logan County, which oversold its quota of approximately $56,000, and was reappointed for a second term.

In October, 1916, Mr. Coffman married Miss Emma Hill, a daughter of Robert T. and Emma (King) Hill. Robert T. Hill died December 21, 1920, and his wife, Mrs. Emma (King) Hill, died in 1899. By trade he was a blacksmith, and at one time he served as jailer of Logan County. Mr. and Mrs. Coffman have one child, Emma Hill, who was born July 31, 1917. Mr. Coffman is discharging the responsible duties of his office in a characteristic fashion and giving satisfaction to all classes. He was elected state secretary of the Kentucky State League of Postmasters at the annual convention held at Louisville in August, 1921. Having spent his life in this line of work, he understands it thoroughly and it would have been difficult to get a postmaster better fitted for the office.

James Henry Payne, president of the Bank of Arlington and one of the most dependable and solid men of Carlisle County, is also an extensive farmer and heavy landowner, whose interests are many and varied and whose affairs are well managed under his capable supervision. He was born in Carlisle County, Kentucky, January 30, 1862, a son of William Johnson Payne, and grandson of Joseph Payne, a pioneer farmer of Carlisle County.

William Johnson Payne was born in Van Buren County, Tennessee, in 1814, and died in Carlisle County, Kentucky, at the home of his son, James Henry, in November, 1879. Brought to Carlisle County in 1853 by his parents, he here was reared, married and spent the remainder of his useful and upright life, devoting himself to farming, and through it winning ample material for himself and his family. He was a democrat in politics and a Baptist in religion, always taking an active part in church work. He married Mary Jane Ramsey, born in Carlisle County in 1845, and she died at Bardwell, Kentucky, in 1911. Their children were as follows: James Henry, who was the eldest; David, who died at Bardwell, Kentucky, when he was thirty-four years of age, was a salesman in a store; Thursday Ann, who died at the age of sixty-six years; and George W., who lives at Bardwell, is engaged in practice there as a physician and surgeon.

James Henry Payne attended the local schools and was reared on his father's farm until he was nineteen years old. He then went with his parents to Bardwell, Kentucky, and for the subsequent ten years was engaged in clerking in a dry goods store, and then for another ten years was a traveling salesman for a dry goods house. He then moved on a farm of 700 acres one mile east of Arlington, and since then has been actively engaged in a general farming and dealing in business, having become one of the leading agriculturists of Carlisle County. In 1901 the Bank of Arlington was established as a state institution, and Mr. Payne is now its president, his associates being: R. E. Stanley, vice president, and J. C. Neville, cashier. The bank has a capital of $24,000; surplus and profits of $6,000, and deposits of $175,000. Mr. Payne is also president of the Bank of Bardwell, and belongs to the State Bankers Association and the American Bankers Association. Not confining his interests to the lines already mentioned, he has been very liberal in the investment of his money in local enterprises, and is president of the Arlington Picture Company, is president of the Payne Dry Goods Company, a director of the Blackbottom Oil Company of Bardwell, and owns stock in a number of concerns at Arlington and Bardwell, all of which benefit through his connection with them, for his advice is sage and valuable and his methods unfailingly successful. He is a democrat and Baptist, like his father, and he is serving the Arlington church of his faith as treasurer and deacon.

In 1892 Mr. Payne was united in marriage at Arlington with Miss Sallie Neville, a daughter of R. B. and Clarissa (Berry) Neville, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Neville was one of the early farmers of Carlisle County, and owned at one time the land on which Arlington now stands. Mr. and Mrs. Payne have no children of their own, but have raised three: Emma Lee Carter, who married Guy H. Davis, a traveling salesman; Emma May Payne, eight years old; and James Dewitt Payne, ten years old, residing with Mr. Payne. In every movement which has for its object constructive work for the community Mr. Payne has taken a leading part, but he has never been willing to countenance a wasteful expenditure of public funds or the making of public improvements which are not necessary or those which are destined to benefit the few. He is a man of strong personality, and the effect of his influence is felt in the maintenance of the credits of the county and the equalization of supply and demand.

John Christopher Neville, cashier of the Bank of Arlington, is one of the men who has earned the right to be considered one of the leading men of his community through his own efforts. He was born in Carlisle County, Kentucky, February 22, 1861, a son of R. B. Neville, who was born in Tennessee in 1826 and died in Carlisle County, Kentucky, in 1889. Reared in Tennessee, he attended his schools, but when he reached manhood's estate he came to Carlisle County, Kentucky, and was married after coming to this locality. All of his life he was engaged in farming. A democrat, he served as a justice of the peace, but did not hold other office. Very religious, he is a strong supporter of his Baptist church, the members of which he was a constant member. R. B. Neville married Clarissa Jane Berry, who was born in Carlisle County, Kentucky, in 1839, and died in this county in 1902. Their children were as follows: Elizabeth Ann, who married W. H. Lightfoot, a farmer, is now deceased, but his widow resides at Arlington; W. N., who is engaged in a milling business at Arlington; G. W., who is a carpenter and builder of the race; J. T., who was a carpenter and builder of the race; John Christopher, who was fifth in order of birth; Ida, who married J. T. Rolan, a carpenter and builder of Arlington, is deceased; and Sallie Catherine, who married J. H. Payne, and lives on the Neville homestead one mile east of Arlington.

John Christopher Neville attended the rural schools of Carlisle County and Clinton College, being graduated from the latter institution in 1882. For the subsequent twelve years he was engaged in teaching in his native county, and then went to farming, this calling absorbing his time and attention until 1907, when he went to Arlington, Kentucky, and became cashier of the Bank of Arlington. This bank was established in 1901 as a state institution and has a capital of $24,000; a surplus of $3,000, and deposits of $675,000. The officials of the Bank are: Mr. W. J. Ruby, president; R. E. Stanley, vice president; and J. C. Neville, cashier. It is one of the sound banking institutions of this part of the state. Mr. Neville is a democrat. He belongs to the Baptist Church, which he is now serving as clerk. For some years he has maintained membership with the State Bankers Association and the Commercial Bankers Association. Mr. Neville is farming on a farm one mile east of Arlington, and there he is carrying on general farming and stock-raising.

His residence, however, is at Arlington, and it is near the Illinois Central Railroad station and is modern in construction and equipment.

In 1900 Mr. Neville married at Jackson, Tennessee, Miss Annie Davis, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Swpd Ellis, both of whom are now deceased. In life Mr. Davis was a farmer of Tennessee and a successful man. Mr. and Mrs. Neville have no children.

W. J. Ruby. An important share of the commercial activities of the City of Madisonville have been carried by members of the Ruby family for a number of years. Mr. Ruby, successful head of one of the larger institutions in Hopkins County, the Kentucky Bank & Trust Company, and is one of the youngest bank presidents in the state.

He was born at Madisonville August 18, 1880. His father was J. E. Ruby, who was born in Webster County, Kentucky, in 1849. He was reared in Webster County, and was a graduate of Princeton College in Princeton, Kentucky. While at Princeton attending college he met Miss Vaden Turner, who was born in that college town in 1852. They were married in Princeton, but spent all their married lives in Madisonville. J. E. Ruby for many years owned and conducted a leading grocery and hardware business in Hopkins County, and built and operated the first brick residence in Madisonville. He died when only forty-one years of age, in 1890. He was a democrat, was very closely identified by interests and membership with the Christian Church, and was a member of the Order of the Golden Cross. His widow survived him a quarter of a century and died at Madisonville in 1915. Their children were: T. E. Ruby, member of the board of directors of the leading institutions of Madisonville; L. E. Ruby, also a member of the Ruby Lumber Company; W. J. Ruby; Clyde, who was a societed with the Lumber Company and died at Madisonville in 1914; H. D. Ruby, a graduate from the law department of the University of Louisville, who went to Arizona for his health and died at Tucson; Lucien, the youngest, is manager of the branch of the Ruby Lumber Company at Providence, Kentucky.

W. J. Ruby was educated in the public schools; of his native city and spent two years in the South Kentucky College at Hopkinsville. He left college in 1890, at the request of his mother that he take charge of the grocery business of his father’s estate, and successfully managed that for three years. After that he was in the general insurance business, which year he received the vice presidency of a leading bank, and which year he received the vice presidency of a bank. For two years he was vice president of Morton’s Bank, and since then he has been president of the Kentucky Bank & Trust Company. This company was established March 4, 1901, under a state charter, and during the twelve years that Mr. Ruby has been its president its business and resources have increased until it is one of the leading financial institutions in this part of Kentucky, with total assets of more than $1,125,000. Its deposits are over $1,000,000, and it operates on a capital of $50,000, with surplus and profits of $75,000. Besides Mr. Ruby as president the vice president and cashier is P. B. Ross and the assistant cashier, L. K. Bell.

Mr. Ruby and family live in a charming suburban home, though adjoining the corporate limits of Madisonville. His residence was erected in 1918, and it is on a farm of 200 acres, thoroughly equipped for the business of modern farming. Mr. Ruby is a member of the State Bankers Association, served four years as city treasurer, is a democrat, a member of the Christian Church and is affiliated with Madisonville Lodge No. 738 of the Order of Elks. Through his position as a banker and as one of the well known citizens of Hopkins County he exerted a strong influence in behalf of events of modern farming cities. Mr. Ruby is a member of Hopkins County to support the Government during the World war.

In October, 1917, at Jacksonville, Alabama, Mr. Ruby married Miss Anna Grace Connor, a native of Georgia. They have one son, W. J., Jr., born October 22, 1919.

Charles Orlando Osburn has had forty years of continuous association with the commercial affairs of Madisonville, has been a merchant, banker and public official, and is now secretary of Hopkins County’s leading department store, Dulin’s Incorporated.

The Osburns are an English family which settled in Virginia in Colonial times. The founder of the family in Kentucky was Isaac Osburn, grandfather of the Madisonville merchant. He was born at Leesburg, Virginia, in 1782, and in 1801, when he was twenty-three years old and as a merchant, he went by one of the few available routes at that time, floating down the Ohio River to Louisville and subsequently establishing a home in Nelson County. In 1818 he moved to Richland, Hopkins County, developed a farm there, but spent his last days at Madisonville and died in 1860. William Thomas Osburn, his son, was born in Nelson County, Kentucky, in 1831, and was twelve years old when the family moved to Hopkins County. He was reared and educated in that county and after his marriage moved to Madisonville. He was an expert gunsmith, and that trade was the basis of his business career. He died at Madisonville in 1866. He was a democrat, a member of Madisonville Lodge No. 143, A. F. and A. M., and Oriental Lodge No. 69, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. William Thomas Osburn married Ann Elizabeth Waetzall, who was born at Madisonville in 1849 and died in her native city in 1900.

Only child of his parents, Charles Orlando Osburn was born at Madisonville September 3, 1861. Most of his education was acquired in the public schools of Madisonville when they were under the supervision of Professor Boring. Leaving school at the age of twenty he began his business career as clerk in Bishop and Company’s dry goods store. During the next eight years he laid a sound foundation of commercial knowledge and experience. Then for two years he sold the famous Pinigree shoes, manufactured by Pinigree & Company of Detroit, to the retail trade in Kentucky and Tennessee. After leaving the road Mr. Osburn was in the furniture and undertaking business at Madisonville, and not long after was cashier of Morton’s Bank at Madisonville, and held that post of responsibility for ten years. It was while in the banking business that he was elected and served as county treasurer of Hopkins County for five years. Mr. Osburn has always regarded his most congenial relationship as one of a commercial and mercantile nature, and in 1911 he became a clerk in Dulin’s Incorporated, but has since improved his conditions as department manager, stockholder and secretary of the company. Probably every family in Hopkins County has patronized this model department store on South Main Street.

Mr. Osburn also served as city clerk of Madisonville six years. He is a democrat, a very interested worker and a deacon in the Christian Church, and is prominent Lawrence Waller Pratt is one of the most extensive tobacco growers in Hopkins County. He does farming on a large scale, with diversified production, and is a thorough business farmer, being a business man by training as well as a practical agriculturist.

Judge Clifton J. Pratt, his father, was one of the most distinguished lawyers of Hopkins County for many years. The late Judge Pratt was born near Eureka, Woodford County, Illinois, son of Jonathan Pratt. The latter was born in 1818, moved to Madisonville, Kentucky, when Clifton was a child, and lived there until his death in 1888. Clifton J. Pratt was reared and married at Madisonville and as a young man qualified for the legal profession. For many years he was a member of the oldest law firm of the city, Waddell & Pratt, and was accorded many of the honors of his profession and of politics. He had the distinction of being the first republican ever elected to a political office in Hopkins County. As a young man he was elected to the State Senate, was elected and served one term of six years as judge of the Second Judicial District, and at one time was a candidate for nomination as governor, when his rival was former Governor Taylor. He withdrew from the race and accepted a place on the ticket as attorney general. He was the only republican to hold a state office at that time. During the Civil war he served as a courier in the Union Army. He was an active member of the Christian Church many years. Judge Pratt died at Madisonville May 25, 1918, his death being the result of a stroke of paralysis. He married Miss Salie Waddell, whose father, Otway Waddell, was a member of the law firm of Waddell & Pratt. She was born at Madisonville in 1852 and died in her native city May 29, 1910. Judge and Mrs. Pratt had four children: W. R. Pratt, who lives at Independence, Kansas, where he is engaged in the stationery and office supply business and is a former mayor; Lawrence W.; Otway, who died at the age of seven months; and Virgil, who died at the age of two years.

Lawrence Waller Pratt was born at Madisonville March 24, 1880, attended the public schools of his native city and until 1901 was a student in Center College at Danville, Kentucky. He is a member of the Beta Theta Pi college fraternity. From the time he left college in 1901 until 1904 he was in the stationery and musical instrument business at Madisonville. He then moved West, to Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, and for five years was secretary of the Oklahoma Canning Company. He still owns a residence property in Oklahoma City, at the corner of Twelfth and Hudson streets.

Returning to Hopkins County in 1909 Mr. Pratt has given almost his undivided energies to farming. He and his brother W. R. together own 1500 acres of land. He individually operates 700 acres. His farming is on a diversified scale, but his importance as a tobacco grower is indicated by the fact that his crop in 1918 amounted to 90,000 pounds. Mr. Pratt lives in Madisonville, having a fine modern home at 416 West Center Street.

His name and personal resources were in evidence in local campaigns for the raising of funds and prosecution of other war activities during the World War struggle. He is a republican, is affiliated with Madisonville Lodge No. 738 of the Elks. On August 6, 1919, at Evansville, Indiana, Mr. Pratt married Miss Eleanor Arnold. Her father, William Arnold, was born at Bardstown, Nelson County, Kentucky, in 1852, was reared there, was married at the Village of Boston in Nelson County, and in 1888 moved to Lebanon Junction, Kentucky, and since then has been an employee of the Louisville & Nashville Railway Company. He is a democrat in politics. William Arnold married Marguerite Botto, who was born at Boston in Nelson County in 1852. Their children were: Fannie, wife of Disney Ryan, a locomotive engineer living at Louisville; Joe, an employe of the Louisville & Nashville Railway Company; and Bessie, wife of Arnold Thompson, a locomotive fireman with the Louisville & Nashville Company at Louisville; Mrs. Pratt; Guy, a livestock dealer living at Lebanon Junction; and John, a concrete contractor with home at Louisville. Mrs. Pratt was educated in the public schools of Boston, Kentucky, finished her junior year in Bethel Academy at Bardstown, and then took the course of training for a training nurse, a profession she followed for ten years before her marriage. She is a member of the Graduates Nurses Association and a member of the Catholic Church. Mr. and Mrs. Pratt have one child, Lawrence Waller, Jr., born June 5, 1920.

Samuel Edward Crouch, M. D. Incomplete indeed would be a history of Kentucky without distinctive mention of that large body of men who labor in the broad field of medical service. Some have chosen a particular path and some work under particular combinations of method, but all can be justly credited with scientific knowledge and a due regard for the preservation of the public health together with a faithful devotion to their own patients that has, on occasion, been heroic. To the profession of medicine Dr. Samuel Edward Crouch, of Evarts, Harlan County, early devoted his energies, and after an honorable and successful practice of more than thirteen years stands as a representative of the highest in his line of endeavor.

Doctor Crouch was born at Statesville, North Carolina, January 5, 1865, son of W. D. Adolphus and Eliza Jane (Sisk) Crouch. Stephen Adolphus Crouch was born in 1860 in Tredell County, North Carolina, where he was reared and educated, but as a young man went to Davie County in the same state, where he was married. A millwright by trade, he followed that vocation for some time at Statesville, North Carolina, following his marriage, but in 1886 moved to Williamsburg, Kentucky, where he followed the same vocation until his retirement, some time before his death in 1907. He was a republican in his political views, and a member and strong supporter of the Baptist Church. He married Eliza Jane Sisk, who was born in 1859 in Davie County, North Carolina, and died at Williamsburg, Kentucky, in 1912. They became the parents of the following children: Cora, who married John W. Crowley, principal of the graded and high school at Highspoint, Kentucky; Dr. Samuel Edward, of this review; R. Frank, a millwright at Colmar, Illinois; Della, the wife of Albert White, building superintendent, and the daughter of the Louisville Hospital Medical College, from which he was graduated in 1908, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. In that year he commenced practice at Williamsburg, where he remained until 1912, in that year removing to Pleasant View. That community continued to be the scene of his labors and the place of his residence until 1918, when he came to Evans, and here he has since built up a large and lucrative general medical and surgical practice, his offices being located in the Styles Building on Yocum Street. In addition to having a large private practice Doctor Crouch is acting as company surgeon for the Superior-Harlan Coal Company, the Harlan-Liberty Coal Company, the J. L. Smith Coal Company, the R. L. Brown Coal and Coke Company and the Harlan-Kelokia Coal Company. He serves as county officer of Whitley County during 1915 and 1916, and is a member of the Harlan County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. After so long and faithful a performance of professional duties, during which he has ever upheld the standards of professional ethics, Doctor Crouch may feel somewhat gratified to know that he is held in high esteem by other members of the fraternity and that they number him with the able physicians in a county in which medical ability has reached a high point.

In his political tendencies Doctor Crouch is a Republican, and for some years has taken an active interest in the success of his party, being at present a member of the Republican County Committee and an influential member of the organization. His religious connection is with the Baptist Church, and worthy movements and charities receive his support. A fraternal lodge belongs to Yocum Lodge No. 897, F. and A. M., of Evans, of which he is senior warden; Harlan Chapter No. 165, R. A. M., of Harlan; Pineville Commandery No. 39, K. T.; London Council No. 60, R. and S. M., of London, Kentucky; and Kosal Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Louisville; and to Evans Council No. 157, J. O. U. A. M., of which he is a past counselor, and to Evans Lodge, I. O. O. F.; Doctor Crouch is the owner of a comfortable residence on Harlan Avenue, where he makes his home, a dwelling on Fox Street, and other real estate at Evans. His participation in the war time movements that characterized this section was an active and helpful one, and in addition to being a heavy subscriber and generous contributor to the various drives he acted as medical examiner for the Harlan County Draft Board.

In 1910, at Barbourville, Kentucky, Doctor Crouch was united in marriage with Miss Rosetta Lawson, daughter of Isom and Nancy (Crowley) Lawson, the latter of whom is deceased and the former a resident of near Barbourville, where he is engaged in agricultural pursuits. Mrs. Crouch is a graduate of the Barbourville Baptist Institute and a woman of many accomplishments. She and her husband are the parents of three children: Cora born in July, 1911; Della, born in June, 1917; and Irma May, born in June, 1919.

ARTHUR JENKINS, M. D. The fact that a physician's name for high personal character is as dear to him as his reputation for skill is proven by his effort to live up to the moral obligations of his calling. Few realize how self-sacrificing a medical man must be. Not only has he been compelled to devote years of preparation for his life work, but he must continue to be a student as long as he lives. A large amount of his practice is unremonstrative, and he is called upon to risk his own health and sometimes his life to minister to others. Yet, to the credit of the profession he said that the exceptions to the general rule are so few as to be usually to the standing of the practitioners, while in the book he has not found that most standards are in an overwhelming majority. One of the beloved physicians of Harlan County, who is engaged in a general practice at Harlan, is Dr. Arthur Jenkins.

Doctor Jenkins was born in Meade County, Kentucky, June 28, 1831, a son of L. L. Jenkins, who was born in New York State in 1813, and died at Elizabethtown, Hardin County, Kentucky, in 1886. He was reared in Meade County, Kentucky, and continued to reside there for some years after his marriage, and was engaged in farming. In 1883 he moved to Elizabethtown, where he owned and operated a sales and feed stable, and was well known and highly respected. In politics he was a democrat, and in religion a Baptist. He was also a deacon of the Baptist Church. Eliza Nall, who was born in Daviess County, Kentucky, in 1835, and died at Elizabethtown, Kentucky, in 1890. Their children were as follows: Emma, who lives in Hardin County, is the widow of Andrew Hunt, a farmer of Meade County, Kentucky, now deceased; Mollie, who died in Meade County, was the wife of Robert E., who resides in Hardin County, Kentucky, is the widow of J. T. Bland, formerly a merchant of Brandenburg, Kentucky; C. N., who is a farmer of Meade County; Minnie, who died in Indiana, was the wife of R. O. Cresap; Lula, who married G. T. Dowell, a mechanic of Vine Grove, Hardin County; Doctor Jenkins, who was eighth in order of birth; and Addie, who married Dr. J. T. Wels, a physician and surgeon of Dallas, Texas. They have a capacity of 1,000 tons per day.

Doctor Jenkins attended the public schools of Elizabethtown, and was graduated from the high-school course in 1886. For one year he was a student of the Kentucky State University at Lexington, Kentucky, and then after a year spent at home he entered the University of Louisville and was graduated from the medical department after three years in 1883. In 1883 he received the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Later he took post-graduate courses at the Chicago Polyclinic. In 1891 he began his practice near Jellico, Tennessee, and remained there for six years, leaving that vicinity to locate near Gray, Kentucky, as physician and surgeon for the North Jellico Coal Company. After five years with that company's mines near Gray he spent ten years at the mines of the same company at Wilton, Kentucky. In 1912 he located permanently at Harlan, and has built up a large and valuable general medical and surgical practice. His offices are in the Masonic Building on Central Street. He is a democrat and a Baptist. Professionally he belongs to the Harlan County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. The former lives in Carter County, Kentucky, where he is a coal operator. Doctor and Mrs. Jenkins have three children, namely: Sheryl, who was born in 1896, lives at Detroit, Michigan, and is a salesman for the Frederick Stearns Wholesale & Manufacturing Company, pharmacists; Raymond, who was born in 1898, has charge of the store and offices at his father's Mines; and Arthur, who was born in 1901, is a medical student at the University of Louisville.

Stephen M. Cawood. In naming the citizens of Harlan County who, while winning personal success and prominence, have contributed materially through public service to the welfare and progress of their communities mention should undoubtedly be made of Stephen M. Cawood, coal operator, railroad builder, bank director and real estate man, who has also filled various positions of public trust and at present is city tax collector. He is one of his people's most successful community business men. He is beyond a question one of singular activity and constant advancement, and in the several communities in which he has resided his standing is that of a substantial and reliable citizen.

Mr. Cawood was born at what is now Cawood, Harlan County, Kentucky, April 28, 1874, a son of Stephen and Virginia (Calloway) Cawood. His grandfather, John Cawood, was a native of Tennessee, whence he came as a young man to Harlan County, Kentucky, and here passed the remainder of his life as an agriculturist. He married Miss Nancy Turner who was born in Harlan County, and both died at Cawood prior to the birth of their grandson. Stephen Cawood was born in 1839 at Cawood, and passed his entire life in that community. He was educated in the rural schools and reared to agricultural pursuits, and for many years was engaged in the farming business. He valued his well-improved property in 1897. He was a democrat in politics, but sought none of the honors of public life. Mr. Cawood married Miss Virginia Calloway, who was born in 1842 in Calloway, Bell County, Kentucky, and died at Cawood during the same year as her husband. They were the parents of nine children, as follows: John, who died at Cawood in 1908; Charles, a farmer of Harlan, who was blinded by an accident in 1890; Nannie, the wife of L. S. Ledford, a farmer of Cawood; Bettie, the wife of J. C. Carter, a farmer of that locality; Adna Cawood, who is engaged in the mercantile business and real estate ventures at Harlan, and is one of the largest property owners of the city; Stephen M., of this review; Joann, who died in 1907, at Harlan, as the wife of John H. Nolan, a school teacher in his early years and planter of a farm which is used in 1921; J. F., head of the city water works and engaged in the plumbing business at Harlan; and Mary Belle, the wife of W. W. Smith, a farmer at Cawood.

Stephen M. Cawood attended the public schools of his native locality and was reared on the home farm, on which he resided until reaching the age of eighteen years. At that time he became a clerk in a store at Evarts, but after three months resigned his position and established himself in business at what is now known as Cawood, that community being named in his honor when the post office was established in his store and he was appointed postmaster, a position which he held for fifteen years. In 1908 he came to Harlan, seeking to widen the scope of his activities, and here engaged in the real estate business and mercantile trade. In 1913 he entered the Harlan County Bank at that time until 1917, exclusively, during which time he continued his mercantile operations as a dealer in hardware and implements. This business he sold in 1919. Mr. Cawood retains his real estate holdings at Cawood and is now one of the extensive realtors of that locality, where his holdings are large and important. As a coal operator at the present time he is one of the owners of the Harlan Coal Company of Cawood, and he has a coal and building railroad from Rue to Cawood. He owns an interest in 1,600 acres of coal and timber lands at Cawood. He is likewise a director in the First State Bank of Harlan, the largest and most successful financial institution in the mountain districts of Kentucky; possesses a modern residence on Ivy Street, Harlan, one of the most desirable and comfortable homes in the city; and owns the Cawood Building, a business block on Central Street.

In his various business transactions Mr. Cawood has shown himself alive to every opportunity, but eminently fair and above-board in his dealings. His knowledge of land values is extensive and his judgment shrewd and keen. Independent in politics, he defers to his own judgment in making his choice of candidates and issues. At the present time he is serving capably as tax collector of Harlan, and in this capacity, as in others, is showing a conscientious desire to further the welfare of his fellow citizens. With his family he belongs to the Presbyterian Church, and serves as secretary of the Sunday school thereof. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias, in all of which he is popular. Mr. Cawood took a helpful part in all local war activities, being an active worker in the drives for various causes and a contributor to all worthy enterprises.

In 1897 he married at Cawood Miss Nannie Pope, daughter of M. L. and Jerusha (Skidmore) Pope, the former of whom, a farmer, died at Cawood, while the latter survives and is a resident of Harlan. Mrs. Cawood died in 1898, at Cawood, her infant child dying at the same time. In 1900 Mr. Cawood married at that place Miss Laura Smith, daughter of W. T. and Jerusha (Clarke) Smith, the latter of whom is deceased, while the former is a resident of Virginia. Eight children have been born to this union, as follows: Nola, born in 1901, who is the wife of O. R. Winfrey, the owner and operator of a public garage at Harlan; Estelle, born in 1902, a senior at the Western College for Women, Oxford, Ohio; Ava, born in 1904, who is attending the high school at Harlan; Alva, born in 1906; Mildred and Muriel, born in 1913, all attending the graded school at Harlan; and Carl Edward, born in 1917.

Abner C. Jones. While learning and education are almost universally held at high value, there have been at times those who have deplored the supposed lack of practical business qualities in those whose lives have been more or less given to concentrated labor in the educational field. That this may be an entire misconception is sometimes discovered, a most interesting example being found in Abner C. Jones, county superintendent of schools of Harlan County, Kentucky. Entering the teaching profession in boyhood, Mr. Jones has continued so closely and intimately concerned along this line that seemingly both mental and physical forces have been heavily taxed, yet it would be difficult to find a keener, wider- visioned or thoroughly practical business man. His many well managed interests include numerous enterprises of large importance at Harlan and throughout Harlan County.

Abner C. Jones was born at Pansy, Harlan County, Kentucky, December 25, 1885, and is a son of Milton and Charlotte (Fee) Jones, both of Kentucky parentage. The family was founded in Harlan County by the great-grandfather, Jackson Jones, a native of North Carolina, who came here in early manhood as a pioneer and spent the rest of his life as a farmer near Harlan. The son who survived him was John Jones, who was born on the farm near Harlan in 1824, and died at Harlan in 1899, where he had been a merchant all his life. He married Martha Ceech, who was born near Harlan in 1832, and died there in 1885.

Milton Jones, son of John and Martha Jones, was born near Harlan, Kentucky, in 1858. He spent his entire life as a farmer in Harlan County and died there in 1876. He was a man of sterling character, and was a democrat but never was willing to serve in a public capacity. He married Charlotte Fee, who was born near Hurst, Harlan County, Kentucky, in 1864 and died at Harlan in 1905. Of their family of seven children, Abner C. is the fourth in order of birth, the others being: W. M., who resides near Harlan, is serving in the office of city clerk; J. H., who is a merchant, resides in Harlan County; H. H., who is a miner, resides at Pansey, Harlan County; Lester C., who resides on Wallin's Creek, Harlan County, follows mining; Addie B., who is a teacher of music, resides at Nashville, Tennessee; and Dewey, who is a resident of Harlan, Kentucky.

Abner C. Jones obtained his early educational training in the rural schools, becoming a student then in the academy at Harlan, from which he graduated in 1900, and during 1901 he taught school at Pansey, afterward, at intervals, teaching rural schools in the county for seven years. In 1903 he went to Berea College where he remained in the department of Berea College until 1904, and took special studies at Maryville College, at Maryville, Kentucky, leaving there in 1907. In 1911, when the Harlan County High School was organized at Harlan, Kentucky, Mr. Jones was called to its principalship, and he served in that office continuously until January, 1918, when he assumed the duties pertaining to the office of superintendent of schools to which he had been elected in November, 1917, for a term of four years. In April, 1921, he was elected by the county Board of Education for another term of four years. He maintains his offices on the second floor of the Masonic Building at Harlan, Kentucky, having under his supervision 66 schools, 135 teachers, and 16,000 pupils. The high standard of scholarship maintained by the administration is due, in no small measure, to his constant and anxious co-operation of his teaching force and the interest and enthusiasm of the pupils all bear testimony to the excellence of Mr. Jones' methods and to his executive ability.

In politics Mr. Jones is a republican, and he occupies a position of influence in the councils of his party in the county. As a county official he has devoted his best efforts to the promotion of the public welfare and to the advancement of the public schools, and he is devoted to the furtherance of the interests of the school system. He is a member of the Masonic lodge and of the Odd Fellows, and has been active in all such work as has been done for the interests of education.

Mr. Jones is married to Miss Georgia Howard, who is a daughter of W. M. and Nancy E. (Turner) Howard. Mr. Howard is a resident of Harlan and is Circuit Court clerk of Harlan County. Mrs. Jones is a graduate of Harlan Academy. Mr. and Mrs. Jones have one daughter, Mildred, who was born October 13, 1908. The family home is an attractive, modern structure, and the boys belong to the local Episcopalian Church and the girls to the Presbyterian Church, in which he is an elder. He is a member of Harlan Lodge No. 879, F. and A. M., and professionally is identified with the Kentucky Educational Association.

During the World War Mr. Jones was one of the sturdy, loyal supporters of the various patriotic movements that had so much to do with the ending of strife and proving the unselfishness that permeates the true American when dire need arises to defend his comrades or country. He took an active part in all local measures, was a member of the executive committee of the Harlan County Chapter of the American Red Cross, county chairman of the War Savings campaign, served as a Four-Minute Man, and contributed personally to the extent of his means. He has so lived that he well deserves the esteem and confidence in which he is held.

Hon. George Riley Pope. It is but a step from the practice of law to the holding of important public office, and in most live and enterprising communities members of the bar are to be found occupying offices of trust and responsibility. While their professional knowledge is of great service to them in the discharge of their duties, not all have served as capably or effectively as has George Riley Pope, mayor of the City of Harlan and one of the leading members of the Harlan County bar.

Mayor Pope was born at Cawood, Harlan County, November 5, 1882; a descendant of Scotch ancestors who settled at an early day in North Carolina, and a son of William Solomon and Minerva (Burkhart) Pope. His grandfather, the Rev. William Solomon Pope, was born in North Carolina, and as a young man migrated as a pioneer to Harlan County, Kentucky, where he followed farming and labored as a minister of the Methodist Episcopal faith. In spite of his ministerial calling he was a man of determined opinions upon the issues of the war between the states, and during that struggle fought valiantly as a Union soldier. He married a Miss Ball, who was born in Harlan County and spent her life here, and both died on the farm on Catron's Creek prior to the birth of their grandson.

William Solomon Pope, father of George R. Pope, was born at Cawood, Harlan County, in 1805, and was educated, reared and married in his native community. There he resided until his death, after his marriage, when he removed to near London, Laurel County, Kentucky, where he has been engaged in farming to the present. He has been a good manager and is now in the possession of a large and valuable property, highly improved and very productive. His entire life has been devoted to the development of his farming interests and he has not been interested in politics. He has always been a most active and vigorous supporter of the principles of the democratic party. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church and is an active and generous supporter thereof. Mr. Pope married Miss Minerva Burkhardt, who was born in 1863, at Cawood, and five children have been born to them: George Riley; Joanna, the wife of Joseph Reed, a coal miner at East Kentucky; Lila, who is a stenographer for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, residing at Covington, Kentucky; Emerson, a machinist, residing at Hamilton, Ohio; and Sarah, the wife of Mr. Dixon, who operates a motor in the coal mines at Poor Fork, Harlan County.

George Riley Pope received his early education in the rural schools of Laurel County, and later attended the Sce Bennett Memorial School at London, Laurel County, from which he graduated in 1905. His education was completed by a course in law at the Kentucky State University, from which he was graduated with the class of 1910, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Laws. In the meantime, in 1900, he had commenced teaching, and was thus engaged in the rural districts of Bell County for seven years and in Harlan County until 1918, with the exception of one term at the University of Kentucky college. In 1910 he had taken up his residence at Harlan, where in addition to teaching school he had practiced his profession, and in November, 1917, was elected mayor of the city, taking office in January, 1918. Upon election to the mayoralty he gave up his educational labors in order to devote his time to his official duties, and these, with his constantly increasing law practice, now occupy his entire attention. As mayor he has given the city an excellent administration and has done much work that will be lasting in its benefits. A great friend of civic improvement, he has contracted for $300,000 worth of asphalt streets for Harlan, of which $200,000 worth have already been installed. In other ways his administration has also been business-like, constructive and energetic, and he has won the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens in marked degree. In a professional way he has shown himself a capable, thorough and learned lawyer, and since his arrival at Harlan has made rapid strides in his profession.

Mayor Pope is a republican in his political allegiance. His religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and fraternally he is affiliated with Baxter Lodge No. 879, F. and A. M., of Baxter; and Harlan Masonic Lodge No. 116, A. F. and A. M., with which he has become identified, is a comfortable modern home on Clover Street, four other dwellings at Harlan, and considerable real estate. After the United States entered the World war he took an active part in local war campaigns, serving as Government appeal agent for Harlan County, assisting in all the drives, making speeches throughout the county and contributing and subscribing to the limit of his means.

In 1913, at White Star, Harlan County, he married Miss Verda Howard, daughter of M. J. and Mary Elizabeth (Skidmore) Howard, residents of White Star, in which community Mr. Howard is engaged in farming. Mrs. Pope attended the Kentucky State Normal School at Richmond, Kentucky, where she received a life teacher's certificate, and prior to her marriage taught school for four years in Harlan County. Four children have come to Mayor and Mrs. Pope: Aubrey, born in 1915; Carlos, born in 1917; Bille, born in 1919; and Zelda, born in 1921.

Judson M. Anderson, proprietor of the Hinkston Stock Farm of 200 acres three miles north of Mount Sterling, is one of the most progressive of the agricultural leaders of Montgomery County, and a man who stands high in public confidence. He was born at Side View, Montgomery County, July 19, 1874, a son of English and Cora (McDaniel) Anderson, grandson of Thomas C. Anderson, and great-grandson of John J. and Anna Anderson. John J. Anderson became the owner of 2,000 acres of land, and was a gifted man and good citizen. He had nine children, all of whom are deceased.

English Anderson was born August 4, 1870, and was killed by a negro in 1919. His wife died in 1906. They were the parents of four children, namely: Judson, Corwin, French, an extensive farmer, and Mary, who was in the Government service in Washington, District of Columbia.

Judson M. Anderson grew up on the homestead, and after attending the local schools took a three-year agricultural course, following which he began farming to put to practical use the knowledge he had acquired. Coming to Montgomery County, he bought his present farm, and owns other land, his holdings amounting to 200 acres of valuable land. Here he is engaged in raising stock and specializes on breeding Duroc-Jersey hogs. He is the administrator of his father's large estate, so has his hands full at present. His farm is admitted to be one of the best equipped in this part of the county, and his experiments are watched with great interest by his neighbors, who recognize his expertise in matters pertaining to farming and stock raising.

In 1914 Mr. Anderson married Elizabeth Hart, a daughter of A. S. Hart, and they have one child, Sidney, who was born December 29, 1915. They are members of the Christian Church, and are valued by their fellow men for their marked intelligence and sound judgment. In fraternal matters Mr. Anderson is a Mason and has taken the Knight Templar and Shriner degrees. He is a native of the county with which he has so thoroughly identified himself and its interests, and he is willing and anxious to do everything within his power to enhance its welfare and add to its improvements. He is especially favorable to those having in view the betterment of the roads, for he appreciates the necessity for having good roads all through the state.

John Bradley Carter. To succeed as a member of the Kentucky bar requires more than ordinary ability which has been carefully trained along the lines of the legal profession, as well as a vast fund of general information, and keen judgment with regard to men and their motives. In any of the growing communities there is so much competition, events crowd each other so rapidly, and so important a part in the shaping of events that the lawyer has to be a man capable of grasping affairs with a ready understanding and competent to effect satisfactory results. One of those who has won distinction as a member of the bar of Harlan County is John Bradley Carter, who has succeeded not alone as a private practitioner, but as a public official. Mr. Carter is a native of Harlan County and a member of one of its ancient and most distinguished families. His grandfather was born on a farm at Crummins Creek, Martin's Fork, Cumberland River, May 2, 1875, a son of John Crockett and Nancy (Cawood) Carter.

On the paternal side Mr. Carter is a descendant of ancestors who came from Ireland to Virginia during Colonial times. His paternal grandfather, John Carter, was born in 1813 in Wise County, Virginia, where he was reared, and at the close of the war migrated with his young bride to Harlan County, Kentucky, and was one of the pioneers of this district and assisting in the development of the country through the cultivation of his farm. He died in Harlan County in 1888, aged seventy-five years. John Carter married a Miss Clark, a descendant of George Rogers Clark.

John Crockett Carter, father of John Bradley Carter, resided on the home farm on which his son was born. John C. Carter was born at Carter's Ferry, Martin's Fork in Harlan County, October 4, 1846, and has resided in that vicinity all his life, having been engaged in farming his present property since 1872. His operations have been extensive in scope and proportionately successful, and in his community he is adjudged a progressive farmer and substantial, reliable and public-spirited citizen. In politics he is a supporter of the principles of the democratic party, and his fraternal connection is with the Masons. He belongs to the Baptist Church, as did his wife, who was born in 1858 on Crummins Creek, and died on the home farm in February, 1889. The Cawood family originated in England, whence its earliest members immigrated in Colonial times to New England, and branches then went to Virginia, Tennessee and Kentucky. The maternal great-grandfather of Mrs. Carter, John Cawood, was born in Washington County, Virginia, whence he came to Martin's Fork, Harlan County, and was the original owner of the old home farm in that locality. He passed his entire life as an agriculturist, and died full of years and honors on the property which he had reclaimed. He married a Miss Turner, who was born and passed her life in Harlan County. Their son, John Cawood, the maternal grandfather of Mr. Carter, was born in 1823 at Martin's Fork, and was an extensive farmer in that locality, where he passed his entire life. He was a man of marked capability, of industry and of public spirit, and during the war between the states fought valiantly as a soldier of the Union. Late in life he became embroiled in a feud which sprang up between two families in the mountain districts, and in 1889 was killed by one of the feudists. John Cawood married Louannie Carter, and their children were in Harlan, in Harlan County, and died on the home farm in 1913. Five children were born to John Crockett and Nancy (Cawood) Carter, as follows: Green Gibson, who died in infancy; John Bradley, of this notice; Mildred, the wife of H. H. Howard, of Harlan, sheriff of Harlan County; Mollie, the wife of J. B. Nolan, who does clerical work at Harlan; and Milton, who assists his father in the operation of the home farm.

The rural schools of Harlan County furnished John Bradley Carter with his early educational training, fol-loving which he attended Williamsburg (Kentucky) Academy from 1893 to his graduation May 28, 1898. In the meantime he taught in the primary schools, having also taught for a short time prior to entering the academy. On June 1, 1898, he enlisted for service in the army during the Spanish-American war, and was made second lieutenant of Company H, Fourth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, being stationed around Lexington for a time and later being transferred to Amherst, Alabama. He was mustered out of the service February 12, 1899, and returned to Harlan County, where he resumed teaching in the rural schools for two years. Later, during 1901 and 1902, he taught school two years. In the meantime, however, he had, in 1900, entered Center College, Danville, and after studying for one year in the law department was admitted to the Kentucky bar in 1901. Coming to Harlan at that time, he began the practice of his profession at once, and has been engaged therein ever since, having built up a large and lucrative professional business. Capable of handling large affairs, important interests have been placed in his hands, and whether in the courts or in the relation of counselor, he has given proof of his ability in such enterprises in full term cases or in the handling of actions, that has its foundation in sound legal wisdom. During a period of eight years, from 1905 to 1914, he served as county attorney of Harlan County, and for three years, from 1919 to 1921 inclusive, city attorney of Harlan. On August 6, 1921, he was again nominated on republican ticket for county attorney. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church and attended its meetings, and a charter member of the Odd Fellows Lodge, Harrisburg, with the Lodge and Encampment of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Middlesboro Lodge No. 110, B. P. O. E.; and the Knights of Pythias. He owns a modern home on Ivy Street, one of the comfortable and desirable residences of the city; four other dwellings at Harlan; 400 acres of coal and timber lands in Harlan County, and five acres of very valuable property within the limits of Harlan. Harlan's Harbor offices are situated in the S. C. Howard Building on Central Street, Harlan. He was chairman of the Harlan County Chapter of the American Red Cross during the World war, and exerted himself to the limit of his energy and means in assisting the various campaigns inaugurated for the winning of the war.

Mrs. Carter died in October, 1902, at Harlan, Miss Amelia Howard, daughter of S. C. and Emily (Smith) Howard, residents of Harlan, where Mr. Howard is a retired merchant and hotel proprietor. Mrs. Carter died March 29, 1912, leaving the following children: Florence Clav, born in 1903, a student in the high school at Harlan; Ruby, born in 1905, also a high school student; and Howard, born in 1906, attending the high school. Mr. Carter was again married, at Louisville, in 1916, when he was united with Miss Susan Warren, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cary I. Warren, the latter deceased and the former a retired investor of Louisville. To this union there has been born one son, Warren, born in 1917.

Rev. Alfred Hanses had the great honor and responsibility of being appointed the first resident pastor of one of the largest new Catholic communities in the state, the parish of the Church of the Resurrection at Lynch, one of the great coal mining centers of Eastern Kentucky.

Father Hanses, who previously had been an assistant in the Cathedral at Covington, was transferred in 1901 to Detroit, Michigan, October 16, 1901. His father, Henry Hanses, was born in Westphalia, Germany, in 1844, was reared and educated there, learned the carpenter's trade, and served his regular term in the German Army, during garrison duty at Strassburg. He came to the United States about 1884, locating at Detroit, where he followed his trade until the panic years of the nineties, when he sought employment in the Springfield car shops and later was a motorman for the Detroit Street Railway. He married Miss Mary Hartman, of Detroit, February 27, 1901. After acquiring American citizenship he was a democrat in politics and was always a devout Catholic. In Detroit he married an acquaintance of his boyhood, Baldwin Goebl, who was born in Westphalia in 1866 and came to America and located at Detroit about 1886. She is now living at Covington. There were five children: Henry, a merchant; William, a farmer; Joseph's son; and Alfred Anthony, who died at the age of two and a half years; Henry, assistant pastor of St. John's Church at Covington, Kentucky; and Elizabeth, living with her mother.

Rev. Alfred Hanses received his primary education in the parochial schools at Detroit, attending St. Boniface School. He pursued his classical studies one year in St. Joseph's College at Rensselaer, or Rensselaer, Indiana, and from there entered St. Charles College of the Sulpician Fathers at Elyctt City, Maryland. He was graduated in the classical course in 1911, and in the spring of that year the college building burned and the school is now at Catonsville, Maryland. In the fall of 1911 Father Hanses went abroad and attended the American College in Rome until the fall of 1916, and was named by Bishop of the American Province, Propaganda. After completing his work in philosophy and theology he returned to America and on November 4, 1916, was ordained by Bishop Ferdinand Broxart, the present bishop of Covington. On November 11th he was appointed assistant pastor of St. Mary's Cathedral at Covington and remained there until June 25, 1918, when he was called to his present duties as pastor of the Church of the Resurrection at Lynch.

This parish was established in October, 1918, for the benefit of the numerous Catholic population who live in this mining town. The Catholics in the parish at present number about fifteen hundred, and a handsome new church was completed in December, 1921. Father Jerome Lawrence attended the needs of this parish until Father Hanses was appointed resident pastor.

Dr. T. G. Wright, a skillful and successful dental surgeon who cares for the dental cases in the populous mining community of Lynch, has also proved himself a successful business man, is a banker and has a number of interests in that section of Eastern Kentu-

Doctor Wright represents one of the old established families of Eastern Kentucky. He was born in Letcher County May 15, 1881. His great-grandfather Wright came from Virginia to Letcher County in pioneer times and lived out his life on a farm there. The grandfather, William M. Wright, was a life-long resident of Letcher County, where he acquired extensive land holdings. He died at McRoberts in 1888. His wife also bore the name of Wright and was a life-long resident of Letcher County.

W. S. Wright, father of Doctor Wright, was born on Boone's Fork in Letcher County in 1852, and lived in that one locality all his days. He died January 1, 1900. While he owned a farm and lived in a rural community, much of his business activities were located at the town of Whitesburg. He was a stanch democrat, held the office of justice of the peace eight years, and was a very devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He also belonged to the Masonic fraternity.

W. S. Wright married Lettie Bates, who was born in October, 1851, on Rockhouse Creek in Letcher County and is now living at the old place on the outskirts of the Village of Seco. She is the mother of eleven children: Nancy, wife of James Johnson, a merchant at Robinson Creek, Pike County; Martha, of Seco, widow of William Venters, a farmer; Ritter, wife of L. B. Toller, a farmer on Rockhouse Creek; S. J., a real estate man at Millstone in Letcher County; Mary, wife of W. W. Craft, a farmer at Millstone; William, a farmer who died at Seco in 1902; Dr. T. G.; J. F.
L. F. Parrott is a young ex-service man whose business career has been almost altogether in connection with commissary departments of coal companies, and he is now assistant manager of the United Supply Company at Lynch. He is a native of Tennessee and represents a pioneer family of that state. He was born at Jacksboro in Campbell County January 7, 1895. The Parrots are of Scotch ancestry and the family located in Virginia in Colonial times. His grandfather, Ledford Parrott, was born in Virginia and was a tailor by trade. He settled in Campbell County, Tennessee, in early days and died at Buckeye in that state. His wife was a Miss Sharp, a native of Tennessee, who spent her last year in Missouri. D. W. Parrott, father of R. L. Parrott, was born in Campbell County in 1866, was reared and married there, and after his marriage located at Jacksboro, where he followed farming and later was a merchant and for twelve years postmaster. He was a volunteer soldier during the Spanish-American war period. In 1910 he became a coal operator at Elk Valley in Campbell County, but in 1918, during the World war period, he entered the service of the DuPont Powder Company and was at the DuPont plant at Carney’s Point, New Jersey, when he died in February, 1919. His mother was a faithful Baptist, was a Republican voter, and a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. D. W. Parrott married Mary Bowman, who was born at Newcomb, Tennessee, in 1866, and is now living at LaFollette in that state. Of five children R. L. Parrott is the eldest and the only son. His sisters Nola, Nannie, Leona and Juanita, all live with their mother at LaFollette, Tennessee. The three older are in commercial positions, while the youngest is a high school student. R. L. Parrott attended public school at Jacksboro, completed his junior year in the high school at Elk Valley, and has been making his own way since he was nineteen. For two years he taught school in Campbell County, after which he became clerk in the commissary of the Morley Coal Company at Morley in Campbell County. A few months later he went with the Four Seasons Fork Colliers Company near Hazard, Kentucky, left that firm as clerk with the Algoma Block Company of Lothair in Perry County, with which he remained one year, for four months was with the Clear Fork Coke & Coal Company at Fonde, Kentucky, and was then with the Jellico Wooldridge Coal Company as store manager at Wooldridge, Tennessee, until he answered the call of the colors in July 1918. He trained at Camp Hill, New Virginian, Virginia, and in other camps until September, when he went overseas to France. He was stationed on duty at Camp Saint Sulpice, being a sergeant of Headquarters Company No. 346, Labor Battalion, though most of the time he was on detached service as clerk of Company A of the 346th Labor Battalion. He was made a corporal in April, 1919, and was mustered out at Mitchell Field, Long Island, May 26, 1919.

Mr. Parrott entered the service of the United Supply Company at Lynch on July 18, 1919, beginning as clerk in the grocery department, and the exact and capable performance of increasing responsibilities has brought him promotion to assistant manager, with supervision over the three commissaries of the company at Lynch, and with a force of employees numbering 150. His office is in the Main Street Commission.

Mr. Parrott is a republican in politics. In 1915, at Elk Valley, Tennessee, he married Miss Clossie Baird, daughter of Richard and Lucinda (Lay) Baird, now residents of Linton, Indiana, where her father is a mine foreman. Mr. and Mrs. Parrott have one child, Richard Estler, born August 8, 1918.

PRESTON O. LEWIS, M. D. Medical science has so progressed that advances therein are made almost hourly. Specializing observation on disease has worked marvelous changes in methods of treatment; tireless theoretic experiments have proven the truth of contentions, and only after results have been demonstrated beyond reasonable doubt are discoveries given to the public. In the work of the past quarter of a century are to be noted such practical advances as the development of the pharmaceutical and surgical efforts to wipe out tuberculosis, and the curbing almost to extinction of bubonic plague, cholera, diphteria, typhoid, spinal meningitis and similar maladies. This marvelous progress has not come naturally, but is the outcome of the tireless, aggressive and self-sacrificing work of the men who have devoted themselves to the profession of medicine. One who is practically but entering upon his career of usefulness in this broad field of endeavor is Dr. Preston O. Lewis of Evarts, a rapidly rising member of the Harlan County medical fraternity and president of the Big Black Mountain Coal Company.

Doctor Lewis was born at Eden, Alabama, October 5, 1892, a son of James W. and Emma (Roberson) Lewis. His paternal grandfather, I. R. W. Lewis, was born in 1830 in North Carolina, and as a young married man went to Eden, Alabama, where he was residing at the outbreak of the great civil struggle between the forces of the South and North. Enlisting in the Confederate Army, he saw active service throughout the period of the war, and then returned to Eden, where he engaged in merchandising and in dealing in live stock. He became one of the successful and highly esteemed men of his community, and at his death in 1898 was accounted one of his community’s leading citizens.

James W. Lewis, the father of Doctor Lewis, was born in 1858, at Vincent, Alabama, and was reared in the vicinity of that town, although married at Eden.
Following his union he engaged in agricultural operations, in which he achieved a worthwhile success, but in 1915 retired from the tillage of the soil and removed to Leeds, Alabama, his present home, where he is a bottler of soft drinks. He is independent in his political views, and has been an active and public-spirited citizen. For some time he served as county road commissioner of Saint Clair County, Alabama. A life-long member of the Baptist Church, he has been active and generous in his support of its movements. Mr. Lewis married Miss Emma Robertson, who was born in 1867 at Eden, Alabama, and they became the parents of the following children: James Wallace, Jr., who is his father's partner in the soft drinks bottling business; Leeds, Alabama, and is the proprietor of a retail coal yard; Preston O., of this review; Little, who is the wife of E. T. Hurst, a mechanic of Birmingham, Alabama; and Floy, who is unmarried and makes her home with her parents.

Preston O. Lewis received his early education in the public schools of Pineville, Alabama, graduating from the high school at the latter place in 1900. He then entered the State Normal School at Jacksonville, Alabama, where he spent one year, and entered Birmingham College, where he commenced the study of pharmacy. He lacked only three months of graduating in that study when he left that institution to enter the United States Military Academy at West Point. He entered the University, in Tennessee, from which he was graduated in 1917 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and following that acted as interne at the Hillman Hospital, Birmingham, and at the Birmingham Infirmary for one year.

In 1918 Doctor Lewis began the practice of his profession in Harlan, Mountain, Kentucky, and in 1919 removed to Black Mountain, where he remained until October, 1920. He then took up his residence and began practice at Evarts, where he has since built up a gratifying professional patronage, his offices being situated in the Styles Building on Yocum Street. Although still one of the comparative newcomers in the ranks of his profession, Doctor Lewis has already made a name in the community.

His health and activity have placed him in a high position therein, and in several difficult cases has demonstrated his complete ability and thorough learning. In politics he maintains an independent stand but little of his time is given to political matters, save as they interest him as a good citizen. His religious connection is with the Baptist Church, and fraternally he is affiliated with Succulent Creek Lodge No. 154, F. & A. M.; Harlan Chapter No. 165, R. A. M.; Pineville Commandery No. 30, K. T.; and Kosair Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Louisville. For some time past he has been interested in the coal industry, and now has valuable holdings as president of the Big Black Mountain Coal Company, a going and growing concern. Doctor Lewis occupies his own position, moderate, at Evarts. He was a generous contributor to all the campaigns during the World war period, and assisted materially in the various drives for funds.

In 1917, at Birmingham, Alabama, Doctor Lewis was united in marriage with Miss Willie Griggs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Griggs, residents of LaGrange, Georgia. Their residence is in the upper town. Their marriage blessing. Mrs. Lewis is a graduate of the Southern Female College at LaGrange. She and her husband are the parents of one daughter, Roslyn Irene, born July 4, 1910.

William Clay Turner. Among the representative men of Harlan County, Kentucky, are native sons who have been honorably identified with this section all their lives, and one of those who is widely known and universally respected is William Clay Turner, a foremost citizen of Evarts, where he is a leading figure in the lumber industry and also in other lines through the orderly growth and natural development of his well managed business interests.

Mr. Turner was born near Evarts, Kentucky, October 6, 1872, and is a son of Moses and Bettie (Lewis) Turner, and a grandson of James and Bettie (Clay) Turner. Mr. Turner was engaged in farming near Evarts in Harlan County, and has spent his life in the same neighborhood. He has had large farm interests and is also a merchant at Evarts, of which place he formerly was postmaster. He has long been a recognized factor in republican politics in Harlan County, frequently serving in local offices, and at one time being deputy sheriff. He is one of the older members of the Masonic Lodge at Evarts. He married Miss Bettie Lewis, who was born in 1878 at Poor Fork, Harlan County, and died near Evarts in 1895. They became the parents of the following children: John, who is a farmer, lives near Toledo, Washington; William C.; Mary, who married Carter Lewis and resides at Evarts; Jane, who married Irvin Cornett, a member of the police force at Evarts; George, who died at Evarts; Willie, who attended schools; James and Abner, twins, the former of whom is a merchant at Evarts and the latter, also a merchant, resides two miles east of Evarts; and H. B., who is the present postmaster of Evarts.

William C. Turner attended the public schools of Evarts, and when nineteen years old began to teach in the country schools, teaching about four years in all. In 1894 he entered the business of lumbering at a point one mile east of Evarts, and still owns an interest in a general store at Evarts, although other enterprises have long since claimed the larger part of his attention. Since 1918 he has been largely concerned in the lumber business and has a large lumber yard near the railroad depot at Evarts, where he has ample transportation facilities. Mr. Turner owns considerable valuable real estate at Evarts, including his comfortable private residence on Harlan Street, ten other dwellings and two business properties, one being a feed store near the railroad depot and the other a substantial store building. He is interested in other local enterprises of importance, being president of the Evarts Supply Company and on the directing board of the Black Mountain Bank.

John Richmond, Kentucky, in April, 1866, Mr. Turner married Miss Celia May Creech, a daughter of Jonathan and Leah (Lewis) Creech, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Creech was formerly a dealer in real estate and also a farmer at Paint Lick and other sections. Mr. and Mrs. Turner have three children: Hallie, who finished the high school at Evarts, resides at home; Daisy, who resides with her parents, attended college at Berea, Kentucky; and Imogene, the wife of C. R. Johnson, who is with a grocery house at Harlan, Kentucky. Mr. Turner and his family are members of the Congregational Church, and he is serving as church secretary and treasurer.

While active in business all his life, Mr. Turner has been interested also in a political way and on the republican ticket has frequently been called to accept public responsibilities. He is a member of the board of education, is serving in the city council with marked success, and is also county deputy sheriff. During the strenuous days of the World war he set a patriotic example, taking an active and unselfish part in local measures and loyally supported the various organizations that contributed through various avenues to the ending of hostilities.

Dillard S. Price, M. D. Of Kentucky physicians whose lives left a very strong impress upon their communities, one whose memory should be especially recalled was that of Dr. Dillard S. Price of Clark County.
He was born in Henry County, Kentucky, in 1842, on the 23d of May, and died the 29th of May, 1908. His parents were Doctor Andrew and Eveline (Watkins) Price. His mother died in extreme old age at Bergen, Kentucky. Dr. Andrew Price practiced at Indian Oil Fields, Pilot View and at Bergen. Dillard S. Price was well educated in the classics and in medicine, and when only nineteen years of age began practice. His father had a desperate case of typhoid fever, and the son took charge of this and cured everybody through successfully, and thereafter for the two years before he received his diploma he was busy with a growing clientele. He was the oldest of many members of the Price family who became physicians. He had two brothers, Doctor Ansel and Dr. John Price, who were both physicians at Harrodsburg, Kentucky, and the family is still represented in the medical profession in that town. The only survivor of Dr. Dillard Price is his son, who became the wife of Dr. O. H. Buck of Paris, Kentucky, where she is still living. Dr. Dillard Price began practice ten miles from Winchester, on the Muddy Creek Pike, and in a few years his professional business extended over several counties. He remained in that one locality for twenty-six years, later for four years practiced at North Middletown, while his children were in school, and in 1893 moved to Winchester, where his work as a physician practically extended to the end of his life. For half a century he was one of the honored, busy and highly skilled men of his profession. His ability was widely recognized. He excelled in diagnosis, and when his mind was once made up on a subject he seldom departed from his convictions and his scientific opinions were generally approved by the results. He was very busy in his profession, and acquired great wealth so far as his income and book accounts showed, though he was a poor collector of debts. He left little of his fortune, but his professional life was one of service. He was reared a Presbyterian, but later studies inclined him to the Baptist faith. He was a member of the Masonic Order.

In February, 1868, Doctor Price married Mattie E. Hunt, who is still living. Their children to reach mature years were: William A., an attorney at Covington; Shastine, who lives at Winchester; Gertrude, who was a teacher and died unmarried; Sterling B., a physician and surgeon, with the United States Forces in the Philippines, made a splendid record for his ability in handling some of the savage tribes of those islands, and subsequently, at the age of twenty-six, while en route to Java and Borneo, was killed by hold-up thieves in New York City; Evelyn, wife of R. P. Taylor, cashier of the Clark County Bank at Winchester; Kate now at home, formerly a teacher in the music department of an Alabama College; while two other children, Ansel and Ella, both died in childhood.

James McConnell Hubbard, M. D. Not only is Doctor James M. Hubbard recognized as being one of the most skillful physicians and surgeons of Hickman, but he is also prominent in financial circles, and is now serving as president of the Farmers & Merchants Bank of that city. He was born in Fulton County, 2½ miles east of Fulton, on his father's farm, August 5, 1863, a son of Charles Henry Hubbard.

Charles Henry Hubbard was born at Essex, Massachusetts, in 1832, and died at Hickman, Kentucky, October 1, 1901. His parents, natives of Massachusetts, moved from that state to Paris, Tennessee, when he was a small boy, and when he was six years old they located on a farm 2½ miles east of Fulton, where both later died. After his marriage, which took place at Columbus, Kentucky, Charles Henry Hubbard lived on this homestead, which continued to be his home until he retired from active life, at which time he moved to Hickman, and from 1883 until his demise lived in that city. Like his son, he was a physician, and was graduated in his profession from the Ohio Medical College of Cincinnati, Ohio. In politics he was a democrat. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held his membership. Dr. Henry Hubbard was united in marriage with Sally McConnell, born in Kentucky in 1842, and she survives him and lives at Hickman. Their children were as follows: Dr. James M., who was the first born; and Charles H., the son.

Dr. James M. Hubbard was reared in Fulton County and attended the rural schools, and then became a student of the Kentucky Military Institute near Frankfort, Kentucky, for a year. For another year he attended the Georgia Military Institute at Savannah, Georgia, and then entered the Missouri Medical College at Saint Louis, Missouri, from which he was graduated in 1886 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. That same year he took charge of the practice of his profession at Hickman, where he has since remained, building up a large and lucrative practice in medicine and surgery. At present he is the oldest physician in point of service at Hickman. His offices are on Union Street. He owns his fine modern brick residence on Buchanan Street, which is the most desirable in the city, and is surrounded by large grounds, tastefully laid out and beautifully kept. He also owns the family homestead of 100 acres east and 200 acres west of the Old State Road, five miles east of Hickman, as well as a half interest in a farm of 300 acres in Mississippi County, Missouri. Doctor Hubbard has an eighth interest in 3,500 acres near Dyersburg, Tennessee, and is president of the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Hickman, to which office he was elected in January, 1910, and is a stockholder and director of the Curli Raincoat Company. For the past twenty years he has been local treasurer of the Nashville, Chattanooga & Saint Louis Railroad.

The Farmers & Merchants Bank, one of the strongest financial institutions of Fulton County, was established in 1895, and its officers are as follows: James M. Hubbard, president; C. B. Travis, vice president; R. M. Islar, vice president; and B. C. Rammage, cashier. The bank has a capital of $6,000, a surplus and profits of $70,000, and deposits of $500,000.

In politics Doctor Hubbard is a democrat, has served as a delegate in both state and national conventions, member of the Fulton County Health Board, in both offices rendering a valuable service to the community in securing and enforcing sanitary regulations. Since his youth he has belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church. A Mason, he belongs to Hickman Lodge No. 761, A. F. and A. M.; Hickman Chapter No. 49, R. A. M.; Fulton Commandery No. 34, K. T.; and Rizpah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Madisonville, Kentucky. Professionally he maintains membership with the Fulton County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, the American Medical Association, and the Southern Medical Association.

In May, 1887, Doctor Hubbard married at Brooksville, Florida, Miss Rosa B. White, a daughter of S. N. and Nancy White. At one time Mr. White was the owner of a flour-mill and mercantile establishment at Hickman, but later on in life he bought an orange grove at Brooksville, Florida, where he died, but his widow, an aged lady, survives him and continues to live at Brooksville. Doctor and Mrs. Hubbard have two daughters, Lillie and Charlotte. Lillie Hubbard is a gifted musician. She attended Belmont College at Nashville, Tennessee, studied music under special instructors in New York City, and is an expert in both vocal and instrumental music. She was married to Brantley Turpin, a merchant tailor, and they reside at Hickman. Charlotte Hubbard spent two years at Belmont College at Nashville, Tennessee, and also took up the study of music in the Conservatory of Music at Cincinnati, Ohio, her parents giving her, as they did her sister, every advantage. Both ladies are highly accomplished and the center of a congenial social circle. She has been in doing good, and it is said of him that he never refused to attend a patient no matter at what financial loss. During the many years has been a valuable and respected citizen, has many changes take place, not only in the community, but in his profession, but he has kept abreast of them all and is a recognized authority in his calling. Personally he has won men because of his uprightness, his stalwart qualities, and his unfailing attitude with reference to civic improvement and moral uplift. Such men as he make the world the better for their passage through it, and exert an influence upon their times and locality which live after them.

J. Smith Hurt is not only to be designated as one of the progressive representatives of farm industry in his native county but also has the distinction of owning and residing upon the well improved homestead farm where he is doing the place of his birth, the same being an eligible situated on the north side of Montgomery, county seat of Montgomery County. Here Mr. Hurt was born on the 14th of April, 1880, a son of Harvey and Elizabeth (Mason) Hurt, both likewise natives of Montgomery County, where the former was born January 18, 1830, and the latter on the 25th of November, 1841. Both of the parents were reared on farms in this region and they both so well knew the advantages offered in the local schools that he became a successful teacher in the rural schools of the county while a young man. After his marriage he settled on the farm now operated by his son, J. Smith Hurt, of this sketch, and here he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives, persons of fine character and eminence in the high regard uniformly accorded to them in their native county. The father was a staunch democrat in politics, and he and his wife were zealous members of the Christian Church at Somerset, in which he served as a deacon. Of the nine children, six are living at the time of this writing, in 1921: Mary is the wife of Dr. J. F. Jones, of Mount Sterling; Bettie is the wife of J. R. Hurt; Mary is the wife of James H. Oliver; Catherine remains on the old home farm with her brother, J. Smith Hurt, who is the next younger of the children; and Stella is the wife of J. O. Kirk, of Grassy Lick, Montgomery County.

While the practical discipline of the home farm proved of enduring value to J. Smith Hurt, he did not neglect to make good use also of the advantages offered by the public schools of his native county, his training having included the curriculum of the high school. He has since been actively and successfully identified with farm enterprise, and is the owner of sixty-nine acres of the old homestead. He is still a bachelor, and his sister, Miss Catherine, presides over the domestic economies and social affairs of the old homestead rural home, both being members of the Christian Church and his political support being given to the democratic party.

The Hurt family has been one of prominence and influence in this section of Kentucky for many years. Colonel J. S. Hurt served as a private in the Mexican war, was colonel of a regiment in the Civil war and became one of the leading lawyers of Central Eastern Kentucky. He was prominent in public affairs, and on one occasion was his party's candidate for representative of his district in the United States Congress. William Hurt, an uncle of the subject of this review, was a member of the faculty of the Christian College at Columbia, Missouri. Capt. John C. Mason, great-grand-Leach brought his wife and children to Bourbon County, where he engaged in farming as a renter on the Clay and Keyser Turnpike. Later he bought a property near Centerville, on the county line of Bourbon and Scott counties, mainly in the former county, and there finished his career on the land now owned by his son Ambrose D. Leach the younger. Mr. Leach was a democrat, but did not engage in political affairs until he was past sixty, when he cared for public office. This good citizen, capable and industrious farmer and worthy man died November 16, 1897, and was survived by his good wife until February 20, 1900. They were the parents of the following children: Ann Eliza, who married Joseph May, of Bourbon County; Emily Frances, who married William Sageser and lives near the old home place; Jesse A., a leading farmer of the Centerville community; Joseph L.; James W., who died September 14, 1884, aged twenty-eight years; Augustus, who died January 3, 1887, at the same age; Ambrose Dudley, who owns and operates the home farm and other property; John, who is farming in the vicinity of Centerville; Mollie, who died soon after her marriage to Sam Sageser; and George Thomas, who is farming near the home of his brother Joseph L.

Joseph L. Leach is indebted to the common schools of Harrison and Bourbon counties for his education. He was reared on the home farm, on which he resided until his marriage at the age of twenty-four years to Margaret (Maggie) Sageser, who was born in Fayette County, but lived in Bourbon County, on the Hawkins and Cummings Pike, where her parents, James and Margaret (Jones) Sageser, were neighbors of the Leach family. James Sageser was born in Fayette County and passed his life in farming, his death occurring in 1880, when he was seventy-two years, near Centerville. Mrs. Sageser was born in Kentucky, of Virginia parentage, was married in her teens, and survived to the age of eighty-three years. In the Sageser family there were thirteen children, of whom eight grew to maturity: Sarah Elizabeth, who married Lee Cox and resides near Paris; Mary, who married Eliza Harp and after his death Stephen Shipley and died while in middle life; William Henry, residing on the old home place in Bourbon County; James W., who married Ada Cummings and lives on the old home place; Noah, a resident of Scott County; Margaret; Sophia, the wife of Ambrose D. Leach, a brother of Joseph L. Leach; and Florence, the wife of George Thomas Leach, a brother of Joseph L. Leach.

Following his marriage Joseph L. Leach rented land for some years and then came to his present farm, a tract of 220 acres 5½ miles from Paris, the former David Hume Farm. Here he has erected a fine set of buildings, including a modern residence which compares favorably with any in this section. The home stands at the rear of an extensive and well-kept lawn stretching back from the pike, which is sufficiently inclined to give the residence a commanding position. Mr. Leach likewise farms a part of the Sageser property, one mile distant, and a property of 133 acres that he has rented for thirty-eight years. He carries on a general line of farming and grows cattle, sheep, hogs, and in all his operations has been uniformly and gratifyingly successful. Primarily a farmer, Mr. Leach's unimpeded abilities have led him into business and financial affairs, where he has been equally successful and prosperous, being at this time a director in the First National Bank of Paris and the Independent Warehouse Company, in the advancement and development of which his judgment has played no small part. He is a member of the Baptist church and the Democratic party. A man of sound intelligence, his support has been gratefully received in movements which have tended toward the betterment of local and county affairs.

Mr. and Mrs. Leach have one daughter, Maude, who attended Bourbon College, Paris, a wholesome and accomplished young woman who still resides with her parents. The family belongs to the old Union Christian Church.

William Walker Bridges. While a number of important enterprises have claimed the attention and enlisted the abilities of William Walker Bridges, it is principally as president of the Black Diamond Coal Mining Company that he occupies a position of marked business preference. This company, although having its headquarters at Drakesboro, has such extensive interests throughout the surrounding territory that its operations are indicative of the huge proportions which the coal-mining industry has attained during comparatively recent years in this section of Kentucky. Aside from the magnitude of these interests the prodigious strides made in improving and perfecting the methods of mine-workers through the ingenious contrivances of modern invention, which enhance the facilities of production and multiply the precautionary appliances for safeguarding the public health, which are strikingly manifest in the mines of this concern as definitely directed by Mr. Bridges in his presidential capacity.

Mr. Bridges was born in Union County, Kentucky, March 12, 1873, a son of George W. and Alice (Jarboe) Bridges. His grandfather, David Bridges, was born in 1818, and was a pioneer of Union County, Kentucky, where he passed his life in farming, his death occurring in 1883. George W. Bridges was born in 1840, at Uniontown, Kentucky, and was reared and received his education in Union County. For a time he was engaged in merchandising at Uniontown, but in 1883 went to Russellville, where he was the proprietor of a hotel for two years. In 1886 he made removal to Owensboro, where his death occurred two years later. While he was a resident of Owensboro he was engaged in agricultural pursuits and in 1885 died. Mr. Bridges was born in 1815 at Louisville, Kentucky, and survives her husband as a resident of St. Louis, Missouri. They became the parents of six children: Joseph, who was attending public school at Russellville when he died in 1885; Elhora, the wife of George B. Simmons, a clothing merchant of St. Louis; William Walker, of this review; James T., superintendent of coal mines at Drakesboro; C. G., a general business man of Drakesboro; and Robert A., a wholesale and retail coal merchant at Memphis, Tennessee.

William Walker Bridges received his education in the public schools of Russellville and Owensboro, but the death of his father made it necessary that he should contribute to the support of the family, and when he was only fifteen years of age he secured a position with the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, for which company he was a telegraph operator in Kentucky and Indiana for four years. Mr. Bridges came to Drakesboro August 25, 1892, as bookkeeper for the Black Diamond Coal Mining Company, and later was promoted to secretary of this concern, of which he was subsequently made manager. In 1910 he was elected president, a position which he has since retained, the other officers of this company, which is incorporated under the laws of the State of Kentucky, being: T. A. Isaac, vice president; J. Pierce Jones, secretary; and Miss Frances E. Jones, treasurer. This company owns approximately 2,000 acres of coal lands, with a production of thirty-two carloads daily, and maintains two operations at Drakesboro and Centerville.

A new mine was opened in 1918 with a prospective production of being the largest single producer in the state. Full equipment has been installed to produce 3,000 tons in eight hours of bituminous No. 9 seam coal.

Mr. Bridges gives his chief attention to the direction of this company, but also has various other interests, and is vice president of the Citizens Bank of Drakesboro. He owns one of the finest residences in the city, located on Main Street, a modern and attractive home, has a large number of other dwellings which are occupied by tenants, and is the owner of the drug store at Drakesboro. He has always been a public-spirited and constructive citizen, and during the World war period was generous in his contribution to the various funds, bought freely of bonds and stamps and gave much of his personal time and attention to forwarding the various movements for patriotic affairs. He is a member of the Democratic party, and his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he is an active worker and a member of the Board of Stewards. His only fraternal affiliation is with Cundiff Lodge No. 244, A. F. & A. M., of Drakesboro.

In 1898, in Owensboro, Kentucky, Mr. Bridges married Miss Eleanor Grace Jones, daughter of John W. and Eleanor (Anderson) Jones, the latter of whom resides at Drakesboro, while the former, who was interested in the Black Diamond Coal Mining Company, is now deceased. Mrs. Bridges, a lady of liberal education and numerous graces and accomplishments, attended Logan College, Russellville, in her youth. Two children were born of this union, Mrs. Grace Gladys, born February 12, 1902, a student at the Kentucky School for Women, Danville, Kentucky; and Frances Eleanor, born January 31, 1908, who is attending the graded school.

Mrs. Bridges is a niece of the late James T. Pierce, who came from Alabama in 1888 to Drakesboro and became the owner of the old Drake store, the property now owned by the Black Diamond Coal Mining Company. Mr. Bridges taking up the work where Mr. Pierce left off. Mr. Pierce was identified with the company until his death in 1913, when he was eighty-one years of age, and was one of the highly respected and successful men of his community. He was a thirty-second degree Mason and very zealous as a strict observer of all the rules and rites of that fraternity, and was also an active and conscientious member of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Lizzie (Valentine) Pierce, who survives him, still continues to carry on her late husband's good work in the church, and her charities and good deeds are numerous.

BEVERLY L. BRADSHAW. The qualities of adaptability, perseverance, and good judgment have prevailed in the energetic career of Beverly L. Bradshaw, giving him an enviable rank among the business, political and social elements of Tompkinsville. Mr. Bradshaw began his active career as a doctor of osteopathy, but for some years past has been a member of the leading hardware firm of Bradshaw & Hagan, and since 1914 has discharged the duties of postmaster at Tompkinsville in a highly efficient and satisfactory manner. He is a native of Simpson County, Kentucky, and was born October 28, 1875, his parents being James W. and Sallie (Hatfield) Bradshaw.

William Bradshaw, the grandfather of Beverly L., was born in Virginia, a member of an old and well-known family of that state, and was a young man when he came to Simpson County, Kentucky, where he resided for a number of years. Beverly L. Bradshaw was born in 1835, in Simpson County, where he still resides, at Franklin, in hale old age. As a young man he adopted farming for his occupation, and did so until the Civil War, when he served there for a number of years, so that at the time of his retirement, in 1911, he had accumulated a large and valuable property. In politics a democrat, for many years he was active in the ranks of his party, and his capability and integrity caused his fellow citizens to elect him to a number of offices, while he was also appointed to various others. Prior to the war between the states he served as postmaster at Franklin, later was deputy sheriff of Simpson County and subsequently was postmaster for many years, in all these capacities demonstrating a conscientious desire to serve his community well. Mr. Bradshaw married Miss Sallie Hatfield, who was born in 1843 in Simpson County, and died at Franklin in 1914. They became the parents of the following children: Sam H., a physician and surgeon of Atlanta, Georgia; Erasmus, an attorney of Franklin; William Thomas, a lawyer; Dr. H. W. Harper, a physician and surgeon of Orlando, Florida; Minnie, who married John W. Evans, a merchant of Rockville, Missouri; Beulah, the wife of Russell Duley, a rural mail carrier of Rockville; Pauline, the wife of Charles Fields, a merchant of Danville, Kentucky; Beverly L.; and Jack H., an ex-guard in the State Penitentiary at Edyville, Kentucky, and now engaged in merchandising at Rockville, Missouri.

The rural schools of Simpson County furnished Beverly L. Bradshaw with his primary school education, and his boyhood and youth were passed on the home farm, where he remained until after he had reached man's estate. He has attended the Southern School of Osteopathy at Franklin, Kentucky, from which he was graduated in 1901, with the degree of Doctor of Osteopathy, and at that time first came to Tompkinsville, where he practiced his vocation for one year. He then went to Athens, Georgia, and followed his profession for a like period, then returning to Tompkinsville and still continuing his calling. Embarking then in mercantile pursuits, he in 1903 formed a partnership with S. T. Hagan in establishing the hardware firm of Bradshaw & Hagan, which now conducts the leading hardware establishment in Monroe County, situated on Main Street, Public Square. The firm carries a full and up-to-date line of shelf and heavy hardware, paints, oils, glass, farm machinery, etc., and the large custom which it enjoys has been built up through good management, a policy of straightforward dealing and fair representation and unfailing courtesy upon the part of the proprietors. The firm enjoys an excellent reputation in business circles, and this reflects upon the personal standing of Messrs. Bradshaw and Hagan, who are well and favorably known as business men.

Mr. Bradshaw is a staunch democrat and for a number of years has been one of the strong and influential men of his party. He was elected postmaster of Tompkinsville in 1914, and has continued to occupy that position ever since. His duties have been discharged in a thorough and capable manner, and the people of Tompkinsville and the vicinity have enjoyed excellent mail service. As a citizen he has taken his part in the various movements which have been promulgated to benefit the community, and during the World war he was active in the various enterprises which were founded to give aid and encouragement to this country's fighting forces. He was chairman of the War Savings Stamps drives, spending much time in canvassing Monroe County for the sale of these stamps, and also assisted in the other drives, in addition to contributing freely to all active work. Mr. Bradshaw is the owner of the modern building in which the hardware store is located, of his own home on Main Street, a very desirable modern dwelling, four other residences at Tompkinsville, and a farm of 150 acres just outside of the corporate limits of the city to the west. Fraternally he is affiliated with Tompkinsville Lodge No. 787, F. and A. M.; Glasgow Commandery No. 36, K. T.; and Kosair Temple, A. O. N. M. S., of Louisville.

In 1903 he was united in marriage at Moss, Tennessee, with Miss Chloe E. Evans, daughter of Tom and Maggie (Barr) Evans. Mr. Evans, who was for a number of years a well-known and highly respected merchant of Tompkinsville, is now deceased, but his widow still survives him and resides at this place. To Mr. and Mrs. Bradshaw there have come three children: Thomas Evans, born August 2, 1908; Kathleen, born in June, 1910; and Nellie Ruth, born in 1913. The children are all attending school, as their parents, who believe in the value of education, are giving them good advantages which will fit them for the positions in life which they will be called upon to occupy.

GEORGE A. CLUTTS. Out of little less than fifty years of a life time George A. Clutts has spent over a third of a century at coal mining. He is one of the best known mine superintendents of the Eastern Kentucky fields, and through his industry, perseverance and fidelity has raised himself from the ranks to a large volume of interesting and important positions.

Mr. Clutts, whose home is at Hildason in Pike County, is superintendent for the J. B. Elkorn Coal Company, of the mines of Douglas on the Shelby branch of the Chesapeake and Ohio.

He was born in Greenup County, Kentucky, June 5, 1875, son of Thomas F. and Elizabeth (Gee) Clutts. His father, who was born on the north side of the Ohio River, in Pike County, Indiana, when the age of twenty, while his mother, a native of Greenup County, died in 1913, at the age of fifty-nine. Thomas Clutts, who for several years in his younger life followed farming, was a practical miner the remainder of his active years. His work was done largely in Whitley and Bell counties, Kentucky. He was a mine foreman. During the Civil War he was a Union soldier, first in the 40th Kentucky Mounted Infantry, later being transferred to the artillery, and participated in many battles. He was an active republican, and both he and his wife were Methodists. The family history is notable in many ways than one. There were six sons and five daughters of Thomas Clutts and wife, and all of them grew up and were married. The father attended the marriage of every one of the eleven and the mother was a witness to these marriage ceremonies except in the case of her youngest child. The sons all became identified with coal mining in the Kentucky fields. John W. is electrician for the Kentucky Block Coal Company at Tyro; Charles H. is foreman for the Highsplit Coal Company in Harlan County; B. F. is general manager of the Lotts Creek Company in Perry County; Thomas is assistant electrician of the Kentucky Block Coal Company; and James was killed in a railroad wreck at Sewanne, Tennessee.

George A. Clutts began working in coal mines when he was only eleven years of age. The best and most useful part of his education was acquired in night school in Whitley County under Professor G. M. Cooper. Before he was twenty years of age he was mine foreman at the Old Lily Coal Company’s mine at Paintsville, Kentucky. Subsequently he was foreman for the Pitman Coal Company at Pittsburg, Kentucky, the Black Bear Company at Black Bear, the Mathestic-Jellico Coal Company and was then promoted to general superintendent at Elys. In Harlan County he opened the mines of the Looney Creek Coal Company, and was a stockholder and the general manager in that company. Later he sold his stock and became general superintendent of the Jellico Company at Tousley in Bell County. This group of mines was sold to Jewett, Biglow & Brocks, who are the owners of the J. B. Elkorn Coal Company, and on January 1, 1919, Mr. Clutts was transferred to the Elkorn Company’s mines at Douglas in Pike County. The mine under Mr. Clutts’ direction has been in continuous operation ever since the general depression affecting other mines in Eastern Kentucky.

November 5, 1900, Mr. Clutts married Annie Fulton Johnstone, who was born at Huntington, West Virginia, June 6, 1877, daughter of W. W. Johnstone. They are the parents of four children: Arthur F., May E., Myrde R. and George M. Arthur E., the oldest son, is a youth of very interesting capabilities. He finished his public school work at the age of eleven, then attended the East Kentucky Normal at Richmond, Union College at Barbourville, and took a business course in the Mayo College at Paintsville, Kentucky. He is now foreman of the Elkorn Coal Company at Douglas. Mrs. Clutts is a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Clutts has his Lodge and Chapter affiliations with the Masonic Order at Barbourville, is a member of the Knights Templar Commandery at Pineville and the Mystic Shrine at Ashland. In politics he is a democrat.

HENRY MARSHALL BARNES is a Graves County citizen whose enterprise over a long period of years has been chiefly concentrated upon agriculture and farm management. His home is at Water Valley and he has had much to do with the upbuilding of town communities and is president of the Citizens Bank there.

Mr. Barnes was born in Graves County July 1, 1853. His paternal ancestors came from England and settled in North Carolina. He was born in Shelby County; his father, Benjamin Barnes, was born in North Carolina in 1794, and at an early day left Nash County in his native state and came West, living for a time in Kentucky, but about 1831 settled in Weakley County, Tennessee, where he spent the rest of his life as a farmer and where he died in 1840. For a number of years he held the post of magistrate, and was deeply interested in the welfare of this church, the Primitive Baptist. Politically his vote was always cast as a democrat. Benjamin Barnes married Temperance Ann Taylor, who was born in North Carolina in 1801, and died in Weakley County, Tennessee, in 1846. David Barnes, father of the Water Valley banker, was born in Weakley County in 1831 and grew up in a rather pioneer environment in that section of Tennessee. In 1858 he moved to Graves County, Kentucky, where he was married and where for many years he developed and managed extensive landed interests, emphasizing the raising of horses, mules and cattle. He took much interest in the democratic party, but outside of home and business the chief object of his ambition was to promote the welfare and prosperity of his church, the Cumberland Presbyterian. He did much to maintain interest and a tradition of strong church work, and was also a member of the choir.

For many years he was closely affiliated with the Graves County Grange. David Barnes, who died in August, 1900, married Lucretia Elizabeth Fonville, who was born in Graves County February 5, 1835, and died in the spring of 1900. Henry Marshall is the oldest of a large family of children: William Elijah is postmaster of Water Valley; Joseph Edwin, was foreman of a cotton gin at the age of seven years; Loretta, his twin sister, died at the age of one year; David Adolphus and Thomas, both died in childhood; Annie P., who was born in 1880 and died in 1905, was the wife of Smith Wilson who is now a rancher in Texas; Emma E. is a resident of Water Valley; Charles H., born in 1868, lives at San Antonio, Texas; Berne L., who died in 1879, at the age of twelve years; Benjamin L., owner of some extensive farming interests in Graves County; and Karl Huntington, a dentist at Nashville, Tennessee.

Henry Marshall Barnes grew up and lived on his father’s farm to the age of twenty, acquiring a rural school education. Acquiring an interest in his father’s property, he continued farming for himself to the age of twenty-two and then bought a farm of his own. In all the succeeding years he has been a factor in the advanced program of Graves County agriculture, has owned a number of different places, and has farmed in two localities outside of Graves County, one year in Texas and one year in Hickman County, Kentucky. He sold the greater part of his farm holdings in the fall of 1918. The land on which the Town of Water Valley is built was at one time owned chiefly by Mr. Barnes and by his father-in-law, and a part has since been sold for town lots except about twenty acres which constitutes Mr. Barnes' home and more than 1,000 acres. His home is the finest in the village, a modern brick residence, and he also has four other dwellings.

In 1905 Mr. Barnes took an active part in the organization of the Citizens Bank of Water Valley, and served as vice president until 1917 and since then has been president. The bank has a capital of $25,000, surplus and profits of $8,000, and average deposits of $140,000. E. G. Stokes is vice president and E. Glenn Stokes, Jr., is cashier.

A number of outside interests have attracted Mr. Barnes' capital and enterprise. He is a stockholder and director in the American Fluor Spar Company and the National Fluor Spar Company, and is a stockholder in the Preston Motors Company of Birmingham, Alabama, in the Anchor Cord Tire & Rubber Company of Minneapolis, Minnesota, the Fairbanks Oil Company, and the Inter-Southern Life Insurance Company of Louisville. Interested in affairs associated with the community welfare, he has served as trustee of the local schools, was a member of the Graves County Board of Education, an elder of the Presbyterian Church of America, and a democratic voter.

In November, 1872, at Water Valley, Mr. Barnes married Miss Georgia Stokes, daughter of Samuel and Emaline (Crutchfield) Stokes. Her father was born in 1822, and for many years was a farmer and tobacco dealer at Water Valley, where he died in 1897. Her mother was born in 1826 and lived until 1912. Mrs. Barnes died at Water Valley in March, 1913, and her three children all died in infancy.

In May, 1917, Mr. Barnes married Aldora Cartwright, who was born in Caldwell County, Kentucky, was educated in the public schools of Princeton, and in the State Normal School of Bowling Green. She was a successful teacher in Kentucky and was the mother of Miss Kathleen Cartwright, a native of the Presbyterian Church and its Woman's Missionary Society. Her father, John J. Cartwright, was born in Caldwell County in 1842, was reared and married in that county, but later removed to Franklin County, Illinois, where he continued his life as a farmer until his death in 1882. He married Drusilla Creasy, who was born in Franklin County, Virginia, in 1815, and died at Princeton, Kentucky, in 1896. The second wife of Mr. Barnes died May 1, 1921, and was buried at Princeton, Kentucky.

Charles D. Campbell. One of the substantial and well ordered banking institutions of Adair County is the Farmers Bank of Knifley, and in addition to being a successful banker Mr. Campbell, who is born and reared in Virginia, and who became a pioneer farmer in Casey County, Kentucky, where he remained until his death, served as a gallant young soldier in the Mexican war and was also a soldier of the Union in the Civil war. W. P. Campbell, father of the subject of this review, was born in Casey County in 1840, and there his death occurred in 1878. He passed his entire life in his native county and became an extensive and successful farmer near Liberty, with secure vantage-ground as one of the honored and influential citizens of Casey County. He was a republican in political allegiance, and both he and his wife were zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. When the Civil war was precipitated he enlisted as a soldier of the Union, and as a member of the Tenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry he continued in active service at the front for 3½ years. He participated in many engagements, including a number of the most important battles marking the progress of the great conflict, notably those of Shiloh, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and Gettysburg. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary E. Harrison, was born in Taylor County in 1850, and died in Casey County in 1908. The eldest of the children was Susan, who became the wife of George Shankling and died in Casey County at the age of sixty-two years, Mr. Shankling being now a farmer in Taylor County. Ida is the wife of Clay Evans, a farmer in Marion County. W. S. was an official in the claim department of the Louisville Street Railway Company at the time of his death, when forty-five years of age. Joan is the wife of S. L. Malone, a carpenter and contractor in the City of Louisville. Charles D. of this sketch, is the youngest of the number.

After having profited by the advantages of the rural schools of his native county, Mr. D. Campbell attended the normal academy at Middlesborough and the Presbyterian College at Campbellsville, in which latter institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1903. He learned the trade of telegraphist, and as such was employed as an operator in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, for six months. Thereafter he attended the Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green for one term, and he then entered the service of the Prudential Life Insurance Company as an attaché of the Kentucky headquarters office in the City of Louisville. He made a record of ten years' effective service in the employ of this great insurance corporation, and thereafter he was engaged in farming enterprise in his native county until 1916. He became connected with the Farmers Bank of Knifley as cashier August 16, 1920. This bank initiated business on the day that he was made cashier. It is incorporated as a state bank, with a capital of $15,000, its deposits now being $35,000. W. T. Hendrickson is president of the institution and J. W. Knifley is its vice president.

Mr. Campbell is a member of the banks of the republican party, and he and his wife are members of the Baptist Church, and he is affiliated with Merrimac Lodge No. 27, and accepted Masons; Louisville Camp, Modern Woodmen of America; and Liberty Camp No. 628, Woodmen of the World. He owns and occupies that which is conceded to be the best residence at Knifley, and is the owner of a valuable farm of 180 acres on Casey Creek. During the nation's participation in the World war Mr. Campbell was an influential force in the furthering of local movements in support of war activities. He not only subscribed liberally but also gave much time and energy to the sale of Liberty Bonds in the City of Louisville, where he aided in a campaign for the sale of bonds for the amount of $5,000,000. In the campaign of five days the sale aggregated $7,000,000 in three days, so that Louisville contributed more than its quota and made a splendid record in the connection, as did it also in subsequent bond issues.

December 7, 1909, recorded the marriage of Mr. Campbell and Miss Myrtle Hendrickson, daughter of William T. and Lorana Sanders (Hendrickson), farmers' daughter of Campbellsville, Taylor County, the father being president of the Farmers Bank of Knifley and the owner of large landed interests in Taylor County and in the State of Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell have a win- some little daughter, Kathleen, who was born January 7, 1917.

Henry Deibel. A leading representative of the gardening and truck-growing interests of Jefferson County, who is now retired from active affairs and is living in comfortable retirement at Buechel, is Henry Deibel. He belongs to one of the oldest families of his locality and has been interested in agricultural affairs from his young manhood, at present being vice president of the Farm Bureau, of which he was one of the organizers.

Mr. Deibel was born on the home farm five miles south of Louisville June 1, 1862, a son of Henry and Christina (Kellerman) Deibel, natives of Bavaria,
Germany, where both were born on the Rhine River.
In 1853, at the age of sixteen years, Henry Deibel immi-nigrated to the United States and located in this county where he secured employment. When his industry had resulted in the accumulation of sufficient funds he sent for his brother Peter, who joined him and who later became a farmer in Utica Township, where Peter's son, William, now makes his home on the same property.

At Louisville Henry Deibel met Miss Kellerman, whom he had come to this country when nineteen years of age and to whom he was married in 1853. At the age of about twenty-five Mr. Deibel married a French girl, named Mary Cordie. They were married six years, and from this union there was one daughter, Josephine, who became the wife of John Drescher. A year after the death of his first wife he married Miss Kellerman in 1853. From Louisville Mr. Deibel went to New Orleans, where he began to cut wood by the cord and later secured employment with a German contractor in railroad bridge construction, being thus engaged in the first railroad in Louisiana. The paymaster on the work had commenced defrauding Mr. Deibel of three months' wages, and he decided to return to Louisville, working his passage back by sawing wood. His first employment here was on the truck farm of G. W. Gaulbert, who at the start paid him $5 a month, but who later increased his salary. After leaving Mr. Gaulbert's employ, at the end of two years he started to work for Daniel Daup, a large land owner, who admired the industrious young man so much that at the end of six years he assisted Mr. Deibel to get a start on his own account, he renting a part of the present Deibel farm. The land, however, had been used for growing hemp, and was practically worthless for the growing of other crops, with the result that Mr. Deibel decided to give it up and to endeavor to find something better.
His wife, however, had faith in the land, and after she had had a conference with Mr. Daup the latter induced Mr. Deibel to make a further trial and this proved more successful. Under his management the farm was marked and rapid, and as he got his land fertilized and productive he added to his holdings. He accumulated 127 acres of land, paid $250 per acre for the home farm, and just after the close of the war between the states paid $420 per acre for twenty-eight acres just opposite the home property. For the greater part he specialized in vegetables, something for which the members of this family have been noted in the past. He always kept the farm in good condition for market sale, but devoted himself entirely to his farm, his able management of which was shown in the prize-winning products which he displayed at the local fairs.
He died November 17, 1884, and his wife April 18, 1907, both in the faith of the Lutheran Church, which they attended at Louisville. They were the parents of the following children: Emma, the wife of Phil Eichert, a baker of Louisville; Katie, the wife of Dr. E. Kiek, Kettleton, a physician at Hanover, Ohio; of this notice; Elizabeth and Christina, who are unmarried and live on the home place; and Adeline, the wife of William Barth, a contractor of Louisville.

The only son of his parents, Henry Deibel has passed his entire life on the home place. He acquired his education in the public schools and as a young man adopted the vocation of his father for his own life work, securing forty-three acres of the home farm, for which he paid $700.
To this he added by purchase until he now has eighty-three acres, growing a general line of vegetables, which are sent to the market and always sold at high prices. In the latter end of the war, farming the Deibels comprise one of the oldest families of the locality identified with the same line of business, in which they have been engaged for sixty years or more. Mr. Deibel gives steady employment to nine people, and during certain parts of the year also hires extra help. He was one of the originators of the Farm Bureau, in the organization and development of which he has assisted materially, and is vice president of the local board, of which over 600 members, of whom over 600 are active. He is independent in politics and his religious connection is with the Lutheran Church, of which his parents were early members.

At the age of twenty years Mr. Deibel was united in marriage with Miss Anna Hoock, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Lanter) Hoock, and to this union there have been born four sons: Louis; Henry W., a grocer of Louisville, Theodore and Edward. Henry married
Louise Kiefer and has two sons, Kenneth and Irvin.
Louis, Theodore and Edward Deibel have operated the home farm for the past three years under the firm style of Deibel Brothers, continuing in the same line as that followed by their father and grandfather. They are men of high standing in their community, and are enterprising, progressive and thoroughly reliable in all their dealings. Theodore and Edward are unmarried.
Louis married Miss Nettie Brumley and they are the parents of three sons: Robert, Louis, Jr., Ray, and one daughter, Adele.

Leonidas H. York, M. D., has shown both pro-essional and civic loyalty and progressiveness by es-ablishing and maintaining the well equipped Riverside Hospital at Louisville, Lawrence County, and this institution has proved of inestimable value in the com-unity as well as a splendid adjunct of service in connection with the representative professional activities of its proprietor. Doctor York being essentially one of the leading physicians and surgeons of this section of the state.

Dr. Leonidas Hamil York was born on a farm in West Virginia, West Virginia, January 4, 1851, and is a son of Joseph D. and Eliza (Hamilton) York. The father was born at Higgingsport, Ohio, in the year 1810, a representative of one of the earliest pioneer families of that section of the Buckeye State, and he was reared to manhood in Ohio, where he continued his residence until 1840, when he removed to West Virginia, which was at that time still a part of Virginia. In this removal he was accompanied by his brother, Dr. Joshua, and they were animated by high hopes of future developments in the production of coal and the building of railroads in that section. They secured large tracts of land on both sides of the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River, and a portion of this land is still retained in the possession of the family.

Doctor York also practiced medicine for many years, being a pioneer. Charles T. York is now in charge of this remnant of the farmstead in West County, West Virginia, upon which his mother was born. Joseph D. York did not, perhaps, realize the full measure of the ambitious purpose that led him to establish a home in West Virginia, but he became one of the successful and influential exponents of farm industry in that state, and ever commanded unqualified popular esteem by reason of his high-mindedness and beneficence. Theodore and Edward, his brothers, became one of the representative physicians of that section of West Virginia. Thomas York, brother of Doctor Joshua, was a farmer in Lawrence County and died in this county. During the later years of his life he lost his eyesight. Joseph D. York was a young man at the time of his removal to West Virginia, and in Wayne County, that state, was solemnized his marriage with Miss Elizabeth Ratcliff, who was there born at the falls of the Tug River—a place now known as Glenhayes—in the year 1825. Mr. York was eighty-six years of age at the time of his death, in 1896, and Doctor York was his wife passed to eternal rest at the age of seventy-six years, both having been devout members of the Christian Church and he having been a close student of the Bible, his familiarity with which was such that he could quote with accuracy from all parts thereof. Mr. York was republican in politics, is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, in which he is a past master of the lodge of Free and Accepted Masons at Fort Gay, his caputlar membership being in the Chapter of Royal Ark Mariners at Louisa, the while he is affiliated with the Commandery of Knights Templars in the City of Maysville and with El Hasa Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Ashland. He holds membership in the Missionary Baptist Church, and his wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In 1871 recorded the marriage of Doctor York with Miss Permelia G. Allison, daughter of John H. Allison, Sr., and they have two children: Mary E. is the wife of Dr. A. W. Brumley, who is associated with Doctor York in the professional conducting of Riverview Hospital. Charles T. is business manager of this hospital, he being a graduate of the Kentucky Military Academy, besides which he took a business course in the Kentucky Normal School at Louisa. He married Ethel Kirk, daughter of Judge A. J. Kirk, and they have two children, L. H. York, Jr., and A. K. York.

I. N. Bowles. In the thriving little Town of Summer Shade, located in Metcalfe County, is found an institution typically Southern. The school, with its financial strength, having become the Bank of Summer Shade. This state bank, which was opened for business in December, 1907, has had a successful career, and has been fortunate in possessing the services of capable officials, among whom at present is I. N. Bowles, cashier, who has been identified with the institution since 1908. During his connection with the bank Mr. Bowles has demonstrated the possession of marked abilities, and has played his part in gaining friendships and material prosperity for the concern which he represents.

Mr. Bowles was born at Summer Shade January 1, 1872, a son of LaFayette and Amanda (Payne) Bowles. His grandfather, John Bowles, was born in Virginia and was a young man when he migrated to Metcalfe County, Kentucky, where he married a Miss White. He settled down to agricultural pursuits, in which he continued to be engaged throughout his life, and died before the birth of his grandson, as did also his wife. They were people whose many excellent qualities of mind and heart endeared them to those among whom their lives were passed.

LaFayette Bowles was born on his father's farm in Metcalfe County August 27, 1831, and received a public school education. He was reared as a farmer's son and early adopted the vocation of farming as his life work. He married at the age of twenty-four, and was the father of four children. He died at Summer Shade, where he was born, on October 10, 1887. His death is a matter of deep regret to those who knew him. The death passed, in February, 1907, leaving many to mourn him. Mr. Bowles married Miss Amanda Payne, who was born September 4, 1829, in Metcalfe County, a woman of estimable qualities, and who died at Summer Shade in September, 1892. I. N. Bowles was the only child.

The public schools of Metcalfe County furnish I. N. Bowles with his education, and until he was twenty-one, when he entered college, he enjoyed a term of seven years at the public schools. During this time he was required to attend school and work on the home farm. At the age of twenty-one he traveled extensively, working on farms in Kansas and California, as well as in his native county. While he was thus engaged to manhood he had assimilated the rudiments of the carpenter trade, and during his experiences he had perfected himself in this trade, which

Mr. Phillips adopted and followed until September, 1908. At that time he accepted an offered opportunity and entered the Bank of Summer Shade in the capacity of assistant cashier. On June 30, 1911, he was elected cashier of this institution, a position he has held to the present time, his fellow officials being: J. T. Harbison, President; and T. F. Bartley, vice-president. The bank has a capital stock of $15,000; surplus and profits of $9,000; and deposits of $200,000. It occupies a substantial building at Summer Shade, and has an excellent reputation in the banking circles of the county. Mr. Bowles is very popular with the customers of the institution, and his unfailing courtesy and wise counsel are greatly appreciated by the depositors. He has been an active participant in local affairs and his influence has been both benevolent and constructive in the community. He took a helpful part in all local council activities, devoting much time to the cause, and served on the committee for the bond sales, each of which was put over the top. In political matters he is a democrat, but he has had no time to think of occupying public office. He is the owner of a modern residence in Main Street, the most desirable home at Summer Shade.

On June 20, 1907, Mr. Bowles was united in marriage at Miss. Tennessee, with Miss. J. E. Hensley, daughter of C. S. and Mattie (Hensley) Harbison, residents of Summer Shade. Mr. Harbison had been an agriculturist and well-known citizen of this locality for many years. Four children have come to Mr. and Mrs. Bowles: Guy W., born May 28, 1908; Wilma May, born October 10, 1910; Mabel Ruth, born January 18, 1914; and Mary Catherine, born February 21, 1916. The three first named are attending the Summer Shade public school, and all will be educated in a manner that will fit them for the positions in life which they are called upon to occupy.

Thomas J. Phillips, a mining engineer of wide and varied experience both in the United States and abroad, has in later years become well known in the Eastern Kentucky coal fields and is now a resident of Pike County, being general manager and a stockholder in the Ford Elkhorn Mining Company on Robinson Creek. He and B. H. Ford, of Cincinnati, are owners of this plant.

Mr. Phillips was born at Lanelly, South Wales, April 26, 1879, and comes of a prominent mining family of Southwestern England. His parents were Philip and Mariah Phillips. Philip Phillips with a brother was a coal operator on an extensive scale in Wales for thirty-two years. He died in 1913, at the age of seventy-six, having survived his wife several years.

Thomas J. Phillips enjoyed the best educational opportunities open to a young Englishman. He finished the work of the common schools in Wales at the age of fourteen and then entered and spent four years at Oxford University. After leaving university he continued for three years his technical studies as an engineer at the School of Mines at Wigan. When a boy he frequently dug coal in his father's mines, and his university training was largely supplemental to the practical knowledge of mine engineering. For two years he was in the British consular service in Canada, and in 1905 went to Scranton, Pennsylvania, as superintendent of the coal interests of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad. As an engineer one of his most notable undertakings was the designing at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, of the largest power house in the United States, built for the National Tube Works. For six years he was with the H. C. Frick Coke Company as a construction engineer, and then went to the Northwest as chief engineer for the Issaquah Coal Company. This was a great German syndicate, and it is said that 45 per cent of the stock was owned by the German Kaiser. Mr. Phillips obviously had no knowledge of any other designs or propaganda that might have had its source in this ownership.

Leaving the Northwest, Mr. Phillips returned again to the East and became general manager at Clarksburg, West Virginia, for the McDonald Fuel Company. He is still a stockholder in that corporation. About the same time he acquired his interests in the Ford Elkhorn Mining Company, and has been its president since.

Mr. and Mrs. Phillips are members of the First Baptist Church at Louisa, Kentucky. He is a member of the Scottish Rite Consistory and Shrine at Ashland, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is a republican. He is a member of the Pike County and Northeastern Kentucky Coal Association.

David Arthur Bates, M. D. In the community where he was born and reared and where his people have been honored and respected citizens for several generations Doctor Bates has performed his best work as a physician and surgeon. This old home community is at Okolona in Jefferson County.

He was born on the Bates estate three miles east of Okolona, on the old Sheperdsville Road, twelve miles south of the court house at Louiville, July 10, 1882, son of John and Mary. Melinda E. (Smith) Bates. His father was born on the same farm December 1, 1856. The grandfather, Samuel Bates, was likewise a native of the same community, born there in 1815, and died in 1872, when fifty-seven years of age. The great-grandparents were John and Mary Bates who came from Pennsylvania and were pioneers in Northern Kentucky. The sons of John and Mary Bates were Samuel, Levi, George, Washington and William.

Samuel Bates improved a large farm of 280 acres. His children were: Price, at the old home; Alice, widow of James Jackson; David, who graduated in medicine at Louisville and for thirty years practiced at Sheperdsville, until his death at the age of fifty-four; Henry, of Cincinnati; Jennie, widow of John Hall, living at New Albany; Lydia, widow of W. K. Frver, of Fern Creek; and William S.

William S. Bates, who is still living at Okolona, has long been an active member of the Cummington Presbyterian Church, a church that has had the allegiance of nearly all members of this family in the various generations. The mother of Doctor Bates, Melinda E. Smith, was the daughter of Levi and Jane Smith farmers at Fairmount in Jessamine County. William S. Bates and wife had the following children: Lawrence, who was a merchant at Louisville when he died at the age of thirty-eight; David A.; Meredith, who was accidentally killed when eighteen years old; Emma, who died in 1920, wife of P. K. Miller Jt.; William T., of Elizabethtown; and Euliah, a music teacher at Okolona.

David Arthur Bates spent his boyhood on the old farm. Part of his education was acquired in the Auburn Seminary, and at the age of eighteen he began teaching. He taught school and attended to his medical studies alternately. He was a member of the last graduating class from the old Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville in 1908. He began his practice in a coal mining town in West Virginia, but an accident caused him to give up that work and he then returned to his old neighborhood at Okolona and has built up a very profitable practice here and enjoys the thorough respect and esteem of his old neighbors. He is a member of all the medical societies, but is not interested in politics. Doctor Bates also has farming and stock breeding interests, and organized and was president of the Bullitt County Farmers Association.

At the age of twenty-six he married Miss Lula A. Starks, daughter of a farmer of Bullitt County. She was twenty-one when she married and had been a teacher in her home county. She was educated in high school and in Hamilton College in Lexington and in the Normal School at Bowling Green. Doctor and Mrs. Bates have two children: David A., Jr., and Mary Alice. Doctor Bates is a Mason, a member of the Royal Arch Chapter at Louisville, and Mrs. Bates is a past worthy matron of the Eastern Star and has sat in the Grand Chapter.

ROY HOLMAN. Of all the professions the law, perhaps, requires the largest amount of study along generally uninteresting lines, for the physician is apt to become absorbed in it, and the minister in a part of his reading, while the minister starts out with a mind illumined and a heart atune. The hard facts of the law that have to be learned by themselves, and so learned that the understanding is quickened into the comprehension that may later be drawn upon before judge and jury, have very often discouraged a student at the outset and have resulted in his turning to a much easier vocation. Therefore it may be easily seen that the successful lawyer must possess intellectual qualifications, and his logical understanding, his keenness of perception, his scientific acquaintance with jurisprudence, his tenacity of purpose, and his unrivaled powers of application are all necessary, and these must be developed to their utmost. Roy Holman, of Wickliffe, whose position as a member of the Ballard County Bar is unchallenged, is a man who has the above mentioned qualifications, and he continues to stimulate them by reading and investigation. At the same time he is rendering valuable service to the county as clerk, and is admittedly one of the most representative men of this part of Kentucky.

Mr. Holman was born in Ballard County, Kentucky, October 10, 1845, a son of C. J. Holman, and grandson of William Holman, a native of Ireland, who came into Kentucky and bought 1,000 acres of land on the bank of the Ohio River, near Ogden's Landing, when this part of the state was a wilderness. He then brought his family to his property and developed a farm of great value and magnitude, which he operated a number of years, and he remained in Ballard County until his death. He married Sarah Hawthorne, a native of Ireland. The Holman family is also of Irish origin, its representatives having come from the Emerald Isle to the American Colonies and located in Virginia.

C. J. Holman was born in Ballard County, Kentucky, in 1873, and was there reared, educated and married, and developed into an extensive farmer. In 1918 he moved to Paducah, and is there engaged in an automobile and transfer business under the name of the Holman Transfer Company. His political convictions make him a strong supporter of democratic principles and candidates. He maintains membership with the Odd Fellows. C. J. Holman married Fannie Hodges, who was born in McCracken County, Kentucky, their children are as follows: Roy, who was the eldest; Bernice, who was graduated from the Bandana High School and Saint Mary's College of Paducah, is now taking the business course in stenography, and lives with her parents.

Roy Holman is a Ballard County product, for he not only was born here, but he is a graduate of the Ballard County High School, class of 1916, and was reared on his father's rural estate, where he resided until he was elected county clerk in the fall of 1917, and took office on January 7, 1918, being at that time the youngest officer elected in the State. He is also a young man of much more than ordinary mentality, for he read law, and was admitted to the bar one week after he attained to his majority, and is well versed in his profession. Needless to say, he is a democrat, and very active in local matters. Fraternally he maintains membership with Hesperian Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Wickliffe, and Wickliffe Camp, W. O. W. He owns a modern residence on Fourth Street, where he and his charming wife take pleasure in entertaining their many friends.

During the period that this country was in the great war Mr. Holman was an effective participant in all of the local war activities, was chairman of the Ballard County Council of Defense, and in every way did all he could to aid the administration in carrying out its policies. Mr. Holman was campaign chairman of the Democratic County Central Committee during the candidacy of A. O. Stanley for United States senator, and largely to his efforts is due the eminently successful showing made by Ballard County in the contest.

On June 16, 1916, Mr. Holman married at Metropolis, Illinois, Miss Bonylin Dulworth, a daughter of J. T. and Bertha (Herring) Dulworth, who are now residents of Ballard County, Kentucky. Mr. Dulworth is an extensive and successful farmer. Mrs. Holman is a graduate of the Ballard County High School. Mr. and Mrs. Holman have two children, namely: George Taylor, who was born June 18, 1917; and William Caswell, who was born in May, 1920. Mr. Holman is a young man of towering ambition, who loves to give of his means, time and talents to community and party causes, to be in the forefront of civic movements, and through his achievements draws the attention of his friends and the gratitude of his community.

SAMUEL HARRELD BROWN. One of the most progressive and reliable of the younger members of the Logan County bar, who stands high in professional ability and as a man of broad business and general judgment, is Samuel Harreld Brown, of Russellville. During his comparatively short career he has been identified with some important litigation, in which he has demonstrated the possession of broad and accurate knowledge of the fundamentals of his profession and has displayed the industry, talent and fidelity to the interests of his clients that augur well for his continued success.

Mr. Brown was born at Lewisburg, Kentucky, November 25, 1805, a son of J. W. and Manthis (Harreld) Brown. The Brown family originated in Scotland, whence its first American member came to Virginia during Colonial times, and in that state was born the great-grandfather of Samuel H. Brown, James Brown, James Brown as a young man started from his home in the Old Dominion State with his destination Kentucky, and upon reaching Clarksville, Tennessee, met and married a Miss Lyons, and resided in that city for a time. Subsequently he resumed his journey, with his bride, and eventually reached Logan County, where he became a successful planter and slave-holder, and also owned and operated a water mill. Both he and Mrs. Brown passed away at Lewisburg, this state.

James Samuel Brown, the grandfather of Samuel H. Brown, was born in 1837 in Kentucky, and was reared and educated in the vicinity of Lewisburg, where he became an extensive farmer and planter and a man of influence and influence in his community. He died near Lewisburg, greatly respected, in 1913. Mr. Brown married Nancy Milam, who was born in 1845, near Lewisburg, and died in that community in 1910. They became the parents of eight children: J. W.; C. P., a farmer residing at Lewisburg; J. B., a farmer and cattlemaster of Channing, Texas; Cord; the wife of J. E. Milam, a farmer of S. E. Barbourburg; E. J., a farmer; and Annie, the wife of J. E. Milam, who resides in the vicinity of Lewisburg; Annie, who married P. C. Gaston, a farmer in the same locality; S. A., a cotton broker of Leland, Mississippi; and J. R., also of Leland, a partner of his brother, S. A.

J. W. Brown was born in 1807, at Lewisburg, near which place he was reared on the farm, acquiring his education in the public schools. Later he became a school-teacher, following that vocation during the winter terms and applying himself to agriculture during the summers, and at this time is the owner of a fine farm of 600 acres five miles northeast of Lewisburg. In addition to carrying on extensive operations as a general farmer, as a raiser of stock he has also made a success, and is acknowledged generally to be one of the skilled and capable agriculturists and stockmen of his locality. He is a democratic in his political adherence. He belongs to the Missionary Baptist Church, of which he is a very active supporter. Mr. Brown married Miss Minnie L. Kennerly, a daughter of J. B. and Georgia (Luskie) Kennerly, the latter of whom is a resident of Russellville, while the former, who for many years was a well-known and highly respected farmer of Logan County, died at Lewisburg in 1920. Mrs. Brown is a graduate of Texas College, Waco, Texas. She and her husband have had two children: Clyde Harrel, born May 26, 1910; and Joe Ella, born in June, 1920.

ALDERSON DRAKE MANSFIELD. Modern industry has revolutionized household operations and removed much of the drudgery from a woman's life. Formerly every operation connected with the home had to be performed by the housewife, and the wonder is that she survived to reach even middle age. The pioneer women made all the soap used for all purposes; canned and preserved as well as dried their fruit and vegetables; cured their ham and bacon; spun and wove and then manufactured from the cloth they had produced the clothing for all the members of their family. They knit the socks and mittens, recovered the furniture and of course did all of the cooking. Of all the work, however, none was more laborious than that of a washerwoman. Those were the days when women used to be overshadowed all day Sunday with the realization that on Monday morning they would be forced to bend over the wash tub and wear away their youth and strength to cleanse the family clothing and linen from the accumulation of a week's dirt. The other members of the household also rebelled against washday because it brought only a rehash dinner owing to "mother's" absorption with the wash. Even with the changing times brought into the households of those of moderate means the washwoman, conditions left much to be desired. The confusion of washday, the unwilling some steam of the suds and the upsetting of regular customs put everyone in a bad temper. Finally those conducting laundries for the caring for the linen of the men branched out, installed new machinery and offered improved service to the public, while many families who do not send part, if not all, of their clothing to a laundry. With the success of this branch of the cleansing business assured, another departure was made, and after experiments a system of dry cleaning was perfected so that the many garments today worn by almost every woman, which would not survive immersion in water, are made quite as good as new. All of these improvements have come about because of the vision and foresight of men of enterprise, and their efforts are now being seconded by the younger generation who have taken up the work and further expanded it. One of these enthusiastic young business men of Logan County, worthy of more than passing mention, is Alderson Drake Mansfield, secretary, treasurer and manager of the Russellville Laundry and Dry Cleaning Company of Russellville.

Alderson Drake Mansfield was born at Russellville, April 11, 1897, a son of W. A. Mansfield, who was born near Scottsville, Kentucky, in 1858, and died at Russellville June 13, 1920. He was reared in Allen County, in young manhood came to Russellville, and for twenty years was a leading merchant of the county seat. In politics a strong democrat, he was active in his party, but did not desire office. His chief relaxation outside of his business was horseback riding, which he was a generous and active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. W. A. Mansfield married Laura Johnson, who was born in Logan County in 1862. She survives her husband and resides at Russellville. The children born to W. A. Mansfield and his wife were as follows: Mary Sue, who is unmarried and lives with her mother; Tom, who is a farmer of Logan County; Irl, who is a druggist at El Paso, Texas; Charlie, who is a telegraph operator of Paris, Texas; Alderson D., who was the sixth child; and Rosa Bele, who lives with her mother. Alderson D. Mansfield attended the public schools of Russellville until he was eighteen years old, and then for a year worked in the office of the News-Democrat of Russellville. On June 26, 1916, he enlisted in the United States Army and was sent to Fort Sam Houston, San Antonio, Texas, and two years later to El Paso, Texas, where he spent eight months, and was then honorably discharged. Returning home, a month later he reenlisted in the service and went to Lexington, Kentucky, for four months, and thence to Hattiesburg, Mississippi, for a year. On October 30, 1918, he embarked for England, landing at Southampton November 6, 1918, from whence he was sent to France. He was in the Thirty-eighth Division, but was transferred to the Second Division November 11, 1918. For the subsequent eight months he was with the Army of Occupation in Germany, but was then sent home, and discharged August 18, 1919.

Returning to Russellville, Mr. Mansfield worked in the office of the Russellville Messenger until February 1, 1920, when he came with the Russellville Laundry and Dry Cleaning Company, and on March 15 of that year was promoted to secretary, treasurer and manager. This is the leading laundry between Bowling Green and Hopkinsville. It has modern machinery and equipment and is admirably adapted for the business in hand. The laundry is located on Main at Second Street.

Mr. Mansfield is a democrat. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. His residence is on Main Street. He is not married, but brings to his business a broader vision and greater tolerance because of his period of service in defense of his country, and, like other of the young men of his generation, is going in the years to come be all the better citizen because he risked his life to preserve his native land from invasion.

WILLIAM BASIL HAGAN. One of the worthy and energetic representatives of the younger business element of South Central Kentucky is William Basil Hagan, better known as Basil Hagan, who is manager of the establishment at Tompkinsville of the firm of Bradshaw, Hagan & Company, the leading hardware dealers of Allen County. Mr. Hagan, although still a young man, has acquired that confidence which has brought to his business the confidence of the public and the respect of his associates, and in his present position is laying the foundations for what will in all probability be a career of signal usefulness and success in the business world.

He was born at Fountain Run, Monroe County, Kentucky, March 11, 1867, a son of James Riley and Annie Frances (Mcintosh) Hagan. Basil Hagan was born in 1864 in Monroe County, and was reared in his native locality, where he was married. He later moved over into Allen County, although still near Fountain Run, and there rounded out a successful career as a farmer, dying in 1903. He was a man who was highly esteemed in his community because of his integrity in business, his loyalty in friendships and his public spirit in civic affairs. He was a native of Barren County, Kentucky, born in 1845, in Virginia, and was brought as a child of twelve years to Monroe County by her parents, Willis and Eliza Wood, natives of Virginia. Mr. Wood, who was a pioneer farmer and slaveholder of Monroe and Barren counties, passed away in the latter county when eighty-three years of age, while his wife died in the same county when eighteen years old. Mrs. Melissa Hagan, at the age of seventy-six years, still makes her home on the old farm in Allen County, where she is held in great reverence.

James Riley Hagan was born December 14, 1870, in Allen County, and was reared on his father's farm near Fountain Run, his education being acquired in the public schools of the rural districts. When he was twenty-six years of age started his house and embarked in business as a flour miller at Fountain Run, conducting a mill at that point for nine years. He then made removal to his present handsome farm situated on Main Street, within the corporate limits of Fountain Run, where he owns a property of 105 acres of splendidly improved and productive land, on which is situated one of the most modern and desirable residences in Monroe County, surrounded by well-kept grounds and beautiful shade trees. In addition to being a successful farmer he is also a prosperous stock raiser, and his transactions have always been carried on in such a manner that his business reputation is of the best. He is a democrat in politics, but has not sought public office, preferring to give all of his time and attention to his agricultural interests. He has always been a supporter of progressive movements, and education and religion have found in him a generous friend. On March 12, 1890, Mr. Hagan married in Macon County, Tennessee, Miss Annie Fann Faulkner, who was born March 3, 1871, near Fountain Run. Benjamin Faulkner, the great-grandfather of Basil Hagan on his mother's side, was born August 4, 1804, in Virginia, and was a pioneer of Monroe County, where he followed farming as a slaveholder for many years, and who was a member of the Whig party. His worthy wife, Mary, also a native of Virginia. James Harvey Faulkner, the maternal grandfather of Mr. Hagan, was born near Fountain Run in 1837, and when a young man moved from Monroe County just over the county line into Allen County, where he followed farming during the rest of his life, his death occurring in 1912. He was a man of industry and probity who had the respect of his neighbors and associates. During the war between the states he fought throughout the struggle as a soldier of the Confederacy.

He married Angeline Fran, who was born at Flippin, Monroe County, and still survives him as a resident of the Allen County farm. She is a daughter of John Fran, who was a soldier in Monroe County and passed his life as an extensive farmer and a good citizen, having considerable wealth. He died on his farm in the Flippin community. To James R. and Annie F. Hagan there have been born three children: William Basil; Ammy Angelina, the wife of Floyd Jones, a farmer of Barren County; and Mildred, a student in the graded school at Fountain Run, who resides with her parents.

Mr. Hagan attended the graded school at Fountain Run and then entered the high school at that place, but after one year, when eighteen years of age, left school and returned to the home place, where he became associated with his father in the cultivation of the property. At the age of twenty years he engaged in clerical work, first at Fountain Run, later at Tompkinsville and finally at Louisville, and was so engaged in the latter place when the Confederate War broke out. On May 30, 1918, he enlisted in the United States Naval Service and was sent to the Great Lakes Naval Training Station at Great Lakes, Illinois, serving three months at Camp Decatur. He was then transferred to Hampton Roads, Virginia, where he was made mail clerk for the public works department, and held this position until receiving his honorable discharge January 22, 1919, as a seaman of the second class. Returning to Tompkinsville he was employed by the firm of Bradshaw, Hagan & Company, the leading hardware merchants of Monroe County, in the capacity of manager, a position which he has filled to the present time. He has shown himself capable of handling the management of this important concern, the business of which is growing appreciably under his direction. Mr. Hagan is a democrat, but has found it necessary only to take a good citizen's interest in political matters. His religious connection is with the Christian Church, and he holds membership in James Chisam Post, American Legion, at Tompkinsville.

Mr. Hagan married December 30, 1910, at Glasgow, Kentucky, Miss Florence Simmons, daughter of Ish and Nannie (McIntosh) Simmons, residents of Bowling Green, Kentucky, in which locality Mr. Simmons is engaged in extensive agricultural operations. Mrs. Hagan attended the Western Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green, and for four years prior to her marriage was a teacher in the rural schools of Barren County.

WILLIAM BROWN SMITH, veteran Richmond lawyer and long a prominent leader in democratic politics, is still practicing at the age of eighty-nine, and is one of the few attorneys in the state whose professional record began before the Civil war.

He was born at Richmond May 26, 1832. He is of English parentage and ancestry. His father, Solomon Smith, was born in England in 1804 and his grandfather was Jasper Smith, who brought the family to the United States about 1810 and first settled at Providence, Rhode Island, where he was a merchant. A few years later he moved to Cynthiana, Kentucky, and located on a farm, subsequently buying a farm 2½ miles from Lexington on the Nicholasville Pike, and for fifteen years lived in Lexington, where he died in 1850. His grandson remembers him as an old English gentleman of aristocratic manners. Jasper Smith married a Miss Thompson, a native of England, who died at Cynthiana, 1829, and in 1832 he married Miss Minnie, a veteran of the Revolutionary War, and subsequently engaged in farming. He was succeeded in 1860 by William Thompson, an English soldier who was killed at the battle of Waterloo. The five children of Jasper Smith, all now deceased, were Joshua, Peter, Solomon, William and Patience. Solomon Smith grew up on the farm near Cynthiana, but in 1824 left there and came to Richmond, where he married and where he was in business as a pioneer merchant tailor. He was an old-line Whig in politics and a devout member of the Church of England. He died in 1870. His wife, Maria Brown, was born at Richmond in 1810 and died there in 1875. Of their four children William B. is the oldest and the only survivor. Thomas was a merchant and died at Richmond at the age of sixty-nine; George, a farmer, died at Beattyville aged forty-seven; and Bettie died at Richmond aged seventy, wife of Curtis Moberly, a shoe merchant.

William Brown Smith attended a private school at Richmond and subsequently went East and entered the school founded by Alexander Campbell, Bethany College in Brooke County, Virginia, now West Virginia. He was a student there four years, and graduated in July, 1853, with the first honors in a class of seventeen. Not long after returning to Richmond Mr. Smith went to Texas and taught a school in that state for six months. He studied law at Richmond and was admitted to the bar in 1856, and for about a year was actively identified with the local law fraternity. In 1857 he went to Northwest Missouri, and for five years practiced at Platte City. Since about the beginning of the Civil war he has been in continuous practice at Richmond, for a period of nearly sixty years, and he still maintains offices in the McKee Building.

He was democratic representative in the Legislature in 1884, and was a candidate for the Court of Appeals, his rival, Judge Elliott, being chosen by a margin of one vote. Mr. Smith has been twice a democratic elector. In 1866 he cast the only electoral vote given by Kentucky for Bryan. He was again state elector in 1908, and in that year the Democratic National Committee selected him for active campaigning in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. He is a member of the Christian Church, has been a deacon and superintendent of the Sunday School for thirty years. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity.

Mr. Smith owns one of the most attractive homes in Richmond, located on the Summit, and has much other local real estate and farm property. Though in advanced years he took an active part in all the drives during the World war. On August 10, 1854, in Madison County, he married Elizabeth A. Parks, and they traveled together to Richmond, where they were married the next year. They were parents of five children, the youngest, killed in 1912. She was a daughter of John W. and Nancy (Snoddy) Parks, Madison county farmers. Mr. Smith became the father of four children. Nannie is the wife of John W. Parks, a banker at Las Vegas, Nevada; Cynthia is the wife of Robert Burnam, cashier of the Madison National Bank at Richmond; Minnie, who died at the age of thirty-nine, was the wife of William White, a druggist at Richmond; Margaret, the youngest, died in childhood.

Claude L. Walker. Some men find their inspiration in the multitudinous duties of business life, and through extensive operations develop their natural capabilities until they are able not only to acquire wealth and distinction, but also to render their communities a constructive service of great value. One of the men whose strength of will and calibre of brain, combined with indomitable ambition, have advanced him to the head of the greatest and most important enterprises in this community, and of which he is the owner and manager, is Claude L. Walker, of Hickman, and is a recognized authority on public questions and matters relating to lumbering, real-estate and agriculture, is Claude L. Walker, extensive land-owner and manager of the Mengel Company.

Claude L. Walker was born at Hickman, April 20, 1860, a son of B. R. Walker, and grandson of James B. Walker. The latter was born in Scotland, where the name was spelled Walker, and died in South Carolina before his grandson was born. He came to South Carolina to take possession of large grants of land he had received from the King of England, and developed into one of the wealthy men and large land-owners of that colony. His father accompanied him to South Carolina, and, renouncing the titles to which he might have laid claim, he became a staff officer under General Washington with the rank of Epic. The young Claude L. Walker was born in South Carolina in 1829, and died at Hickman, Kentucky, in 1893. He was reared in South Carolina, where he received his preliminary educational training, but subsequently matriculated at the University of Tennessee, and was graduated therefrom at the completion of his courses, and became an attorney-at-law of considerable distinction. And when he came to Kentucky and entered upon his practice of his profession. In politics a democrat, he was stanch in his support of party policies and candidates, and was rewarded by political honors, as he was twice elected county judge, and served as sheriff for two terms. His record in both offices was of such a high character that it made him known all over his district, and he was the logical candidate of his party for state representative and was twice re-elected to succeed himself, and then he was further honored by election to the State Senate. In him the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, had one of its most earnest and effective members and supporters.

During the war between the two sections of the country Mr. Walker served in the Confederate army under General Forrest and was just as good a citizen as he was a soldier. He was much interested in other important engagements of that war he took part in the battles of Shiloh, Lookout Mountain, Corinth and Fort Pillow. B. R. Walker was united in marriage with Victoria Stephenson, who was born at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1838, and died at Hickman in January, 1890. Their children were as follows: Clinton, who died young; Hubert, who died at the age of nineteen years; Kate, who married E. E. Reeves, lives at New Madrid, Missouri, where he is engaged in a flour-milling business; Claude L., whose name heads this review; and Mentor, who is not married and resides at Hickman.

Growing up at Hickman, Claude L. Walker attended its schools and had planned to attend college, but owing to reverses sustained by his father he was forced to leave school when he was only seventeen years old and go to work on farms in order to assist in the support of his parents. In order to meet his obligations the father was forced to sell the homestead, but later on in life this property was bought back by Claude L. Walker. He continued as a farmer until he was twenty-three years old, and then branched out and became interested in saw-milling and lumbering, and developed these interests until May 1, 1908, when he sold and became general manager of the Mengel Company, one of the very largest box manufacturing companies in the United States. The factory of the company at Hickman is its largest plant, and employment is here given to 900 persons, all of whom are under Mr. Walker's supervision. It was established in 1877 and incorporated in 1880. The other factories are one at Louisville, Kentucky; one at Winston-Salem, North Carolina; one at Eldhurt, Indiana; two at Barbourville, Kentucky; one at Lufkin, Texas; one at Jersey City, New Jersey; one at Mchengwa, Tennessee, and one at Rayville, Louisiana. The tropical operations of the company are at Asim, Gold Coast, Africa; Central America, British Honduras, Sao Domingo, and its products include mahogany logs, mahogany lumber, mahogany veneer, three-ply veneer, packing cases, and numerous other products, packing boxes, tobacco boxes, cigar boxes, fibre boxes, fibre containers, automobile parts and battery boxes. The capital and surplus of the company is $10,000,000. The officers are: C. C. Mengel, president; A. D. Allen, vice president; C. R. Mengel, vice president; C. C. Mengel, Jr., vice president; S. C. Mengel, vice president; J. W. Sliger, vice president; H. P. Roberts, secretary; and V. H. Ryan, treasurer, and these gentlemen, together with the following list, comprise the Board of Directors: C. E. Davis, S. L. Frazer, T. S. Hamilton, D. C. Harris, W. L. Hoge, C. H. Lindley, J. H. Maclay, J. H. Mahler, H. W. Mengel, J. A. Moore, F. Scheicher and R. S. Sliger. The Hickman branch is under the charge of C. L. Walker and H. C. Hoge.

Mr. Walker is a democrat. He was a colonel on Governor McCreary's staff and also on Governor Stanley's staff. When President Taft visited Hickman Mr. Walker was chairman of the Reception Committee. He belongs to the Episcopal Church and is one of its vestrymen. Long a member of the Hickman Board of Trade, he is now its president. His modern residence in Southern Heights, an addition to Hickman which Mr. Walker platted and sold. It is the leading residential section of the city. All of the houses were built subject to certain restrictions, and great care has been exercised to keep out all undesirable people. In addition Mr. Walker owns 3,600 acres of land in Lake County, Tennessee, 8,000 acres of land in Dyer County, Tennessee, and is interested in farming upon an extensive scale.

In 1890 Mr. Walker was united in marriage with Miss Inez Parker at Hickman. She is a daughter of Sam and Lydia (Faris) Parker, who reside in Southern Heights, Hickman. Mr. Parker is connected with the Mengel Company. Mr. and Mrs. Walker have three children, a boy and two girls, sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work: Ruth, who was married September 21, 1911, to Chester L. Barnes, an operator in logs and timber, and they live at Southern Heights; and Ben, who is with his father in the Mengel Company.

Mr. Walker had the grid, vision and a really marvelous ability to overcome obstacles, or he could not have reached his present position, starting out, as he did, a youth without money, influential backing, or the usual educational training, and burdened with the support of others. He is earnest and purposeful and his presence and association act as a mental tonic, and a bracing inspiration to those with whom he is brought into daily contact.

Richard S. Rose, who is presiding on the bench of the Circuit Court of the Thirty-fourth Judicial District of Kentucky, comprising Knox, Whitley and McCreary counties, maintains his residence at Williamsburg, the county seat of Whitley County, and prior to his elevation to the Circuit Bench he had established well his vantage ground as one of the representative members of the bar of his native state.

Judge Richard Sherman Rose was born in the Wolf Creek district of Whitley County on the 27th of June, 1873, and he is a scion of the fourth generation of the Rose family in this section of Kentucky, with whose history the family name has been closely identified for more than a century. William Rose, a native of Ireland, became the founder of the family in Southeastern Kentucky. He settled in Whitley County in the very early pioneer period, when this section was in the initial stages of development, and as a young man of vigor and sterling character he contributed much to civic advancement and pioneer farm industry in the county, where his marriage was solemnized and where he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives. His was the distinction of having been a gallant young patriot soldier in the War of the Revolution. His son, Larkin, grand-father of Judge Rose, married in the pioneer days a farm on Big Polar Creek, Whitley County, in the year 1804, and his entire life was passed in that locality, where he became a successful exponent of farm industry and was influential in community affairs. He married Miss Linda Powers, and they passed the remainder of their lives in Whitley County, where his death occurred in 1879, his wife having preceded him to eternal rest by several years. Their son, Sterling M., father of him whose name initiates this review, was born at the head of Big Polar Creek, Whitley County, on the 11th of May, 1841, and was there reared to adult age, the while his educational advantages were those of the common schools of the locality and period. After his marriage he farmed in various sections of his native county, and it was in this part of its history that he reared his children and continued his residence until 1906, when he removed to his present farm near Swan Lake, Knox County. He is a stalwart democrat, is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and he and his wife are earnest members of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Rose, whose maiden name was Clorinda Crowey, was born in Cape May County, in 1845, a representative of another of the honored families of this section of the Blue Grass State. Of the children the eldest is Mary M., who is the wife of Lewis Pemnett, a farmer on Little Poplar Creek, Whitley County; James is associated with his father in the management of the home farm in Knox County; Judge Richard S., of this review, was the next in order of birth; George M., is a prosperous farmer on the Cumberland River near Barbourville; Sarah Angeline is the wife of Silas Sears, who is engaged in farm enterprise nine miles south of Barbourville; Rachel is the wife of John Adams, another representative farmer of that locality; Nannie is the wife of G. F. Rains, who is employed as a locomotive fireman on the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and they reside at Corbin, Whitley County; William is a prosperous farmer on the county line; Amanda is the wife of William Rutherford, a farmer near Swan Lake, Knox County.

Judge Richard S. Rose is indebted to the district schools of Whitley and Knox counties for his preliminary educational discipline, which was effectively supplemented by his attending the well ordered private college conducted by Prof. John T. Hays at Barbourville, and by his sustained pioneer through the junior year at Williamsburg Institute. For a time he was a student in Valparaiso University, at Valparaiso, Indiana, and in 1898 he was graduated from the law department of Center College at Danville, Kentucky, his reception of the degree of Bachelor of Laws having been practically coincident with his admission to the bar of his native state. In the same year he engaged in the active practice of law at Barbourville, but in the following year he transferred his residence and professional headquarters to Williamsburg, judicial center of his native county, where he has since maintained his home. He developed a large and representative law practice in Whitley and Knox counties, and to the same he continued to give his undivided attention until his election to the bench of the Circuit Court of the Thirty-fourth Judicial District in November, 1917. He assumed his official duties in January, 1918, and in his administration has shown the true judicial acumen which implies broad and exact knowledge of law and precedent and circumspection in preserving justice and equity, with the result that few of his decisions on the bench have been appealed to courts of higher jurisdiction. A resourceful and vigorous advocate of the principles of the republican party. Judge Rose has been influential in its councils and campaign activities in this section of the state, and in November, 1905, he was elected representative of Knox and White counties in the Kentucky Legislature, in which he served with characteristic loyalty and efficiency during the General Assembly of 1906, as an active working member of the House and the various committees to which he was assigned. In 1902-3 he served as police judge at Jellico, Whitley County, though at the time he resided in the county seat. The Jellico is affiliated with Williamsburg Lodge of the Knights of Pythias, and he is the owner of six residence properties at Williamsburg, including his attractive home place on River Street, and he is the owner also of a farm that lies partly within the corporate limits of the same thriving little Kentucky city. He was influential in local war activities during American participation in the World war, aided in all of them, and himself of Government war bond issues, savings stamps, Red Cross work, and made personal contributions in a financial way as great as his resources justified. He did effective service in assisting recruits to fill out their questionnaires and was ready at all times to do his part in furthering all patriotic measures and enterprises.

At Jellico, Tennessee, in 1899, was solemnized the marriage of Judge Rose to Miss Lucy Rawlings, who had been a student in Valparaiso University at the time when he was attending that institution. She is a daughter of La Fayette and Fannie (Kogar) Rawlings, her father being a prosperous farmer near Burning Springs, Clay County, Kentucky, and her mother being deceased. Judge and Mrs. Rose have two children, Fannie, who was born April 27, 1907, and William Lindsey, who was born September 9, 1915.

PHINEAS L. SKINNER. Of the substantial and highly-respected residents of Clark County who belong to the yesterday rather than the today of this region, but who are still remembered because of sterling qualities of character which impressed themselves upon their associates, one who always merited the high esteem in which he was held was the late Phineas L. Skinner, of the Winchester community. Mr. Skinner belonged to the only one of the original families to remain on the land of his ancestors. Phineas L. Skinner, was born in the family home which stands but a commanding rise, a commodious structure commensurate with the surroundings of an extensive property, seven miles east of Winchester, on the Mount Sterling Pike, June 6, 1846, his parents being Isaac C. and Fanny (Lauder) Skinner.

Cornelius Skinner, the grandfather of Phineas L., located in Clark County prior to 1800, and during his career as an agriculturist accumulated several thousand acres of land, which reached for miles and included the present Skinner farm. His home, a rock house, was in the rear of the Besuden farm house, 3 1/4 miles out of Winchester, and there he spent his life. The property which he presented to his son Isaac C., and which he had also improved, was one mile from a mill where he had his grinding done, but each was reached by a different road, owing to the topography of the section. Once, in strolling from the mill to the valley to his own property, the present Skinner farm, but failed to recognize it, having had no idea that the farm and mill were so close together. Of his children the sons with the exception of Isaac C. went to Missouri, while a daughter, Margaret M. Calmes, spent her life in Clark County, Ohio. Isaac C. was the only one to remain in Kentucky with the exception of a daughter who married a Mr. Groom and inherited the old homestead.

Isaac C. Skinner inherited a portion of his father's property, and added thereto until he had about 1,400 acres, but much of this has since been sold off and the Skinner farm now consists of about 430 acres. The old house built before his marriage is still standing, and in that he spent his life. They were about seventy-five years of age. Prior to the war between the states he operated his property with slave labor for some years. In addition to being a farmer he operated a flour, meal and saw mill, which he erected by himself and which depended upon steam power for its operation. The old stone buhrs, hewed from the native rock, are still to be found on the property, interesting mementos of his building activities. In 1846, Isaac C. married Mrs. Sarah Lauder; in 1857, Mrs. Skinner's widow survived him some thirty-five years and died in 1908, at the age of eighty-seven. They were the parents of the following children: Phineas L.; Isaac C., who resided in Kentucky until 1910, at which time he removed to the State of Washington, where he is now a farmer and merchant; Alice, who died as the wife of Thomas Summers Buhr, of Mount Sterling; Joseph H., educated at Danville, Kentucky, Princeton University, and in Germany, who became a Presbyterian minister and served as pastor at Paris, Texas, and Talladega, Alabama, at which latter place his death occurred when he was thirty-six years of age; Doctor Cornelius, who is engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery at Louisville; and Allen, a farmer, who spent some years in Texas but eventually returned to Kentucky, where he died at the age of thirty-six years.

Phineas L. Skinner passed his entire life on the present Skinner farm. He received an inheritance from his father, to which he added until he had accumulated 430 acres, all fine Blue Grass land. He devoted himself almost exclusively to general farming, with a line of good live stock, and his industry and good management combined to make his efforts successful. The present residence was erected by him in 1867. Mr. Skinner was never a politician, although he voted the democratic ticket, but was a substantial and constructive citizen who supported worthy movements in his locality. He was a faithful member and for some years elder of the Presbyterian Church at Union, in the vicinity of his home. A man of sound integrity and uprightness of character, he was a moral force in his community, and when he died, April 27, 1910, his locality lost one who was widely mourned.

At thirty-one years of age Mr. Skinner was united in marriage with Miss Louisa Fishback, of Pine Grove, Clark County, daughter of James and Mary (Femester) Fishback. Mrs. Skinner, who survives her husband, still resides on the old home place, which has always been one of the noted social centers of the community and is in a delightful location. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Skinner: James Lauder; Alice M., who died in early womanhood; and Matt L. The two sons are operating the property in partnership and have made a success of their activities in the charge of general farming. During the last four years James L. has been a director in the Clark County Bank, Matt L. is a prominent Mason and belongs to the Knights Templar and the Mystic Shrine. The brothers are members of the Presbyterian Church at Winchester. Neither are actively interested in politics, and both are single.

CONNELL R. MADDUX. Properly placed among the leading men of his calling at Bowling Green, Connell R. Maddux is carrying on a very extensive business in selling insurance and making loans, his natural abilities fully qualifying him for this field, in which there is so much competition. He was born at Nashville, Tennessee, December 1, 1885, a son of G. A. Maddux, and grandson of R. G. Maddux, who was born in Virginia, where the representatives of the family had settled upon coming to America from Ireland during the Colonial period. Leaving Virginia as a young man, R. G. Maddux became a pioneer of Putnam County, Kentucky, and after some years spent in farming in that region moved to Davidson County, Tennessee, where he continued to reside, becoming a very extensive farmer. With the outbreak of the war between the two sections of the country he enlisted in the Confederate Army, and was a member of the First Tennessee Infantry. Serving until the close of the war, he participated in the battles of Murfreesboro, Lookout Mountain, Chickamauga and other important engagements. At the close of hostilities he returned to Tennessee and, locating at Nashville, was a dealer in real estate for many years. In politics he is a democrat, and served as jailor of Davidson County. For the past thirty-five years, however, he has been special loan agent of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company, his territory covering Kentucky and Tennessee. The Baptist Church holds his membership, and he is a member of a very active Masonic lodge. As a Mason, he has been raised in his order, and he also belongs to the Odd Fellows, Elks and Red Men.

G. A. Maddux married Elizabeth C. Conwell, who was born in Robertson County, Tennessee, in 1847, and died at Nashville, Tennessee, in 1918. Their children were as follows: Gus W., who was a contractor for concrete construction work, building the bridge across the Cumberland River at Nashville, the Gallaway Memorial Hospital, the New Tennesse State Normal School at Murfreesboro, Tennessee, and other important buildings, died at Nashville when only thirty-four years old; Connell R., who was the second in order of birth; William R., who is a real-estate broker, lives at Nashville, Tennessee; Frank G., who is a real-estate broker of Nashville.

Col. R. A. Maddux attended the public schools of Nashville, and was graduated from the Montgomery Bell Academy of that city in 1900, following which he became a student of Vanderbilt University during 1904. He then entered the general insurance business at Nashville, and remained in it for two years. Going to Denver, Colorado, in 1906, he was a reporter on the Denver Post, the Rocky Mountain News and the Denver Times, spending two years in visiting western states, but only worked when he felt like doing so, as he was on a protracted wedding trip. Returning to Tennessee, he established himself at Memphis as an insurance broker, but left that city in May, 1910, and came to Bowling Green and opened his present insurance and loan business. Under Mr. Maddux are four general agents and eighty-six sub-agents, and his business has grown to be the leading one of its kind in Kentucky and the South. He covers the entire states of Kentucky and Tennessee and parts of Ohio and Indiana. He occupies a suite of six rooms in the Cook Building, giving employment to five people in his own office, and he maintains a branch office at Paducah, where three people are employed. Mr. Maddux is also extensively interested in the oil business in Warren and surrounding counties, and is president of the Company. He is also president of the Trutonia Medical Company of Louisville, president of the Kentucky Mortgage and Securities Company of Bowling Green, and is a stockholder and director in several other business concerns. In addition to owning his modern residence at 1225 State Street, which is one of the prettiest and most desirable ones in the city, Mr. Maddux also owns two farms in Warren County, one of 275 acres and the other of fifty-five acres of very desirable land, and a 1,027-acre farm in Barren County. He is also the owner of a considerable amount of real estate in Nashville. Politically he is a democrat, in religious belief he is a Baptist, and is a strong supporter of the church, while his fraternal affiliations are those he maintains with Bowling Green Lodge No. 330, B. P. O. E. He is also a member of the Lions Club of Bowling Green, the Bowling Green Country Club, the Audubon Country Club of Louisville, and the Louisville Automobile Club. During the late war he took an active part in several works, having raised money and supplies, and was a buyer of bonds and stamps and contributing to all of the war organizations to the full extent of his ability.

On July 17, 1906, Mr. Maddux married at Decatur, Alabama, Miss Ella Wicks, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Wicks, the latter of whom is deceased. Mr. Wicks is an extensive tobacco buyer of Hopkinsville, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Maddux have no children. Having made insurance his life study, Mr. Maddux is fully qualified to give expert advice with reference to it, and he is also recognized as a sagacious advisor in making investments and securing loans. In a business like his personality is a valuable asset, and those who go to Mr. Maddux feel convinced that the man back of all of the operations is one to be implicitly trusted and his advice taken and acted upon.

James Andrew Bybee. Though his life was largely devoted to his business as a farmer, land owner and trader, James Andrew Bybee will long be remembered as one of the constructive factors in the affairs of Clark County. He never held any public office, but was deeply interested in improvements, particularly of a physical nature, affecting the welfare and progress of his community. One conspicuous example of this was the Bybee Pike, one of the fine highways of Clark County and properly named for him, since he took the lead in having it built and as a large land owner did much to pay for the construction.

Mr. Bybee was one of a large and influential family of that name in Clark County. He was born December 6, 1813, and died December 20, 1883, on the farm which his son was born, but during the last six years he lived retired at Winchester, where he died at the age of eighty-three. His wife, Jenicey, was reared in Madison County, Kentucky, and died at the age of seventy-four at her country home where she had lived all her married life. They were the parents of three sons: William, who as a young man moved out to Oregon; Colly, who lived on Mount Ashland, and James A. The daughters were: Frank, who married Jeff Quisenberry and died in Clark County; Mary, who died young as the wife of Shelton Quisenberry; Minerva, who married Frank Emerson and spent her married life in Illinois; and Emma, who lives in Texas and is the only survivor, being the wife of Stephen Chinkombeard.

James Andrew Bybee at the age of twenty-five was married Rebecca Hodgkin, a member of the prominent Hodgkin family of Clark County and daughter of Phillip B. and Sally A. (Hampton) Hodgkin. Further reference to the Hodgkin family is made elsewhere in this publication. Rebecca Hodgkin was only sixteen years of age at the time of her marriage. She was born and reared on a farm five miles south of Winchester, on the Bybee Pike. That fine farm was the scene of her married life and is still owned by her daughter, Mrs. Allen. She grew up on that farm and her parents were both deceased when she married. She was one of five children. Mr. and Mrs. Bybee moved to the Hodgkin homestead at the time of their marriage. This farm contained 300 acres. Mrs. Bybee died December 16, 1919, having spent her last days with her daughter. The late Mr. Bybee was a man of great energy and ambition, and even to the last was active in farming and handling his business affairs with a view to carried on with efficiency between the North and the 300 acre Hodgkin homestead he also bought the lands formerly owned by his father and grandfather, and in time had about 900 acres, constituting almost a single tract. Besides the supervision and operation of the farms he was an extensive mule trader, and his operations covered an extensive territory in the South for many years. For a number of years he was in this business in association with his brother-in-law, Sam P. Hodgkin, whose home is on Colby Pike in Clark County. Mr. Bybee was not only public spirited in behalf of measures affecting the improvement of the locality in such matters as good roads, but was also liberal in practical charities, and did a great deal for the poor and unfortunate. He was always deeply interested in his employees, and has the faculty of retaining their services year in and year out. Only those who had the pleasure of his company could have had a proper idea of his worth and business capacity.

Mr. and Mrs. Bybee had two daughters. The daughter, Alice died at the age of twenty-nine at Milledgeville, Georgia. She was the wife of L. C. Hall, but left no children. The only survivor is Corn, Mrs. J. K. Allen. She still retains all the extensive farm lands above described, and these farms are operated by Mr. Allen and her only son, James Bybee Allen, now a capable young man of twenty-three. He was well educated in high school and business college. Mrs. Allen also has a daughter, Nancy Rebecca, a student in high school. J. K. Allen for about thirty years was an active hardware merchant at Winchester, but for the last six or seven years practically all his time and energies have been devoted to the management of the extensive Bybee estate.

Toy F. Hinton, county court clerk of Allen County, vice president and bank director, is one of the most substantial young men of Scottsville, and one who is justly popular all over the county. His family is one of the oldest in Allen County, having been founded here by his great-grandfather, a native of Virginia, who was a pioneer farmer of this region and a man of high repute. His son, Fletcher Hinton, the grandfather of T. F. Hinton, was born in Allen County, and died here prior to the birth of his grandson. He married a Miss Walker, who was born and died in Allen County, and became a prosperous farmer.

William F. Hinton, son of Fletcher Hinton and father of T. F. Hinton, was also born in Allen County, in 1845, and died in the same county, at the village of Petrolium, in 1919. With the exception of his period of military service in the Union Army as a member of the Fifty-second Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, which covered the last seven months of the war, he lived in the North and the South, his entire life was spent in Allen County, and his efforts were exerted along agricultural channels, he becoming one of the largest farmers of this neighborhood. A firm believer in the principles of the republican party, he gave them an unqualified support. He was extremely zealous in behalf of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which he was a member. William F. Hinton was a member of the Masonic Order, who was a member of Simpson County, Kentucky, in 1843, and died in Allen County in 1906. Their children were as follows: Effie, who married J. L. C. Mayhew, a farmer of Allen County; William Edgar, who is a farmer of Allen County; Emme-tt, W., who is a farmer of Allen County; Roy P., who is a merchant of Petrolium, Allen County; Betty B., who is not married and resides in Allen County; Toy F., who was born near Chapel Hill, Allen County, November 1, 1885; and Julius, who died at the age of six years.

Toy F. Hinton attended the rural schools of Allen County, the Allen County High School at Scottsville and the Western Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green, leaving this last named institution in 1911. In the fall of that year he was elected county court clerk to fill an unexpired term, and in November, 1915, was re-elected and re-elected the same office in November, 1917. His offices are in the Court House. Politically he is a republican. Fraternally he belongs to Graham Lodge No. 208, A. F. and A. M.; Scottsville Chapter No. 171, R. A. M.; Bowling Green Commandery No. 23, K. T.; Kossair Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. of Louisville; Half Way Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Half Way, Allen County; Chapel Hill Camp, M. W. A., of Chapel Hill, Allen County; and Half Way Lodge, K. of P. With the passage of years become associated with the Allen County National Bank, and is now serving it as vice president and member of its Board of Directors. He has also invested in the oil fields of Allen County, and is interested in their development, possessing great faith in their possibilities. As a stockholder and secretary of the Scottsville Hotel Company Mr. Hinton is connected with the commercial interests of the town in which he resides, and he owns the newly constructed business buildings of Scottsville. He has also invested in farming land, and owns 200 acres nine miles west of Scottsville and 400 acres four miles east of Scottsville. When Allen County took upon the work of raising money to carry on the war Mr. Hinton was found to be one of the enthusiastic helpers, and he not only exerted himself to secure subscriptions from others, but was one of the best of his own contributors, buying bonds and stamps to the full extent of his means, while his donations to all causes were exceedingly liberal. Mr. Hinton is not married.

Fred Keune, Sr. There are some remedies on the market which are so efficacious as to require no special advertising, as their merits speak for themselves. The Compound Vitelli Company, of Bowling Green, of which Fred Keune, Sr., is the manager, is manufacturing a compound for use in cases of tuberculosis.

Fred Keune, Sr., was born at Frankfort, Kentucky, June 3, 1850, a son of Fred Keune, who was born in Munster, Germany, in 1825, and died at Frankfort in 1870. He was reared and educated in Germany, but came to the United States when a young man and, locating at Frankfort, spent the remainder of his life in that city, becoming one of the leading bakers, grocers, confectioners. He was a democrat, and the Catholic Church had in him a zealous member. Before he immigrated he had served the obligatory military service time required in his native land. He married Frederika Brehme, who was born in Berlin, Germany, in 1830, and died at St. Louis, Missouri, in 1905. Their children were as follows: Fred, who was the eldest; Theodore, who was a grocer, died at Saint Louis, Missouri; Louise, who is not married, resides at Saint Louis; and Henry, who was a grocer, died in that city.

Fred Keune, Sr., attended the parochial and public schools of Frankfort, Kentucky, until he was thirteen years old, and then came to Bowling Green and for a year was employed in a bakery. For another year he worked in the woolen mills here. Leaving Bowling Green, he went to Frankfort and opened a restaurant and road shops and served an apprenticeship of six years as a machinist, following which he went to Marshall, Texas, and for two years worked as a machinist in the employ of the Texas & Pacific Railroad Company. In 1882 he returned to Bowling Green and embarked in a mercantile business, which he conducted until 1918 and then sold. Having acquired an interest in the Compund Vitelli Company, he became its manager and now devotes himself to its affairs. This remedy is regarded as the best in the world for tuberculosis.

The company is incorporated for $25,000 under the laws of Kentucky and its officials are Dr. James Massey, president; Roy Hogan, vice president; Fred Keune, Jr., manager and secretary; and W. H. Rabold, treasurer.

Mr. Keune is a democrat politically, a Catholic in religious faith and a fracternally he belongs to Bowling Green Council No. 1315, Knights of Columbus, in which he has been for thirty years. He is a member of the Catholic Knights. During the late war he responded generously and loyally and participated in all of the war activities, assisting in all of the drives, laying bonds and stamps and contributing to all of the organizations.

In 1893 Mr. Keune married at Bowling Green Miss Mary A. Burke, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Burke, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Burke was at one time the owner of a cafe. Mrs. Keune graduated from Lorette Academy of Madison County, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Keune have one son, Fred Keune, Jr., who is a merchant of Bowling Green.

Mr. Keune's maternal grandfather, a Mr. Brechwe, was born in Bern, Germany, and died in Bowling Green, Kentucky. He was the first farman the Commonwealth States in 1846, and for a number of years was a farmer of La Grange, Kentucky, but after he retired from his farm he spent some time at Frankfort, and then settled permanently at Bowling Green, where his last days were spent in plenty and comfort. On both sides of the family Mr. Keune comes of German stock, of the best kind. His people belonged to the class which gave to America Carl Schurz and some of the most reliable and hard-working citizens of their period. The descendants of these German settlers of the middle '40s and early '50s are today the best and most loyal people of the United States. Mr. Keune is a fine business man, has made a success in his several undertakings, and at the same time has firmly established himself in public esteem.

C. H. Sandusky. The exacting conditions of twentieth century pressure have resulted in specialization in every line of industrial and constructive activity. Men of marked ability have proved beyond question, by experiment and consecutive action, that the best results are reached by a restricted range and a heartfelt devotion to some particular line. The reason for this is palpably evident. With so many competitors it is impossible for a man to become an expert in all lines, and therefore those who aim for the heights take the logical methods of reaching their goal. C. H. Sandusky, of Columbia, long ago realized the truth of the statement that he who dissipates his energies in all directions reaches no definite destination, and since the outset of his career has devoted himself to the manufacture and handling of lumber.

Mr. Sandusky was born on a farm two miles south-west of Glens Fork in Adair County, Kentucky, January 19, 1875, a son of S. L. and Joanna (Wilkinson) Sandusky. His great-grandfather, Anthony Sandusky, was born in Virginia, and became a pioneer of Chilton County, Kentucky, where he went after his marriage and where the rest of his life was passed as a carpenter and builder. His son, Samuel Sandusky, the grandfather of C. H., was born October 1, 1812, in Chilton County, and early in life adopted the vocation of farming, which he followed in his native locality until 1870, in that year removing to Adair County, where he secured a farm near Glens Fork, on which he continued operations until his death, September 15, 1900. He was a man of industry who utilized good management in the handling of his property and the transaction of his business, and as a result accumulated a modest fortune and was considered one of the well-to-do men of his day and locality. He was not desirous of public life, but was contented to devote himself entirely to his farming interests. Mr. Sandusky married Polly Bates, who was born in 1809 in Wayne County, Kentucky, and died in March 1, 1900, and of the two children born to them the only one that lived to marriageable age was! C. H., was born, and there engaged in successful operations until his retirement in 1910. Like his father, he has been a man of industry and good judgment, has been able to make his labors pay him well, and who, in the transaction of business, has always used such honorable methods as to gain him the confidence and good will of those with whom he has been associated. Mr. Sandusky is a republican in his political views. He married Miss Joanna Wilkinson, who was born November 26, 1836, in Adair County, Kentucky, and to this union there were born the following children: C. H.; Victoria, the wife of Vernon Taylor, a painter and decorator near Greenwood, Indiana; John M., the owner and operator of a flour mill at Harrodsburg, Kentucky; and Oleander, now a residence of Glens Fork, Adair County, the widow of Joel Wilkinson, who was a farmer there; Thomas Franklin, of Harrodsburg, where he is a partner of his brothers, John M. and Joe, in the ownership of a flour mill; Nora, the wife of Will Powell, a farmer near Glens Fork, Kentucky; Annie, the wife of Nathan B. Kellogg, a farmer near Chilton County; Elizabeth, a partner of his brothers, John M. and Thomas Franklin, in the ownership of a flour mill; William H., who is engaged in the lumber business at Columbia; and Fannie, the wife of Ed Lawhorn.

C. H. Sandusky received his education in the rural schools in the vicinity of Glens Fork, and was reared on the home farm, on which he remained until reaching the age of thirteen years. He then took up a planing mill and furniture factory at Columbia, in the employ of which he remained for three years, his next position being with Hurt Brothers, the proprietors of a planing mill. After one year's experience in this latter connection, and in partnership with his three brothers, William, Thomas Franklin and Joe, he established a planing mill and furnished a building on the Campbellsville Pike, in addition to three other dwellings in Columbia. A republican in politics, he has taken a good citizen's interest in public affairs and at one time served as a member of the Board of Town Trustees of Columbia. His religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Fraternally Mr. Sandusky is affiliated with Columbia Lodge No. 66, F. and A. M., and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in both of which he has numerous friends, as he has also in business life.

On February 5, 1902, Mr. Sandusky was united in marriage in Adair County with Miss Maude Sutton, a daughter of Charles and Catherine (Chaney) Sutton, residents of Columbia. For a number of years Mr. Sutton was engaged in agricultural pursuits in Adair County, but at this time is living in retirement, enjoying the fruit of his early labors. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Sandusky: Sam, who died at the age of eighteen months; Henry, born August 3, 1906, and attending school; and Effie, born May 17, 1910, also a pupil at school.

ROBERT LAKE DUDLEY. With every movement constituting a factor in the progressive development of Fleming County since pioneer times, members of the Dudley family have been actively and public-spiritedly identified. Robert Lake Dudley, of this family, was associated with his father in the management and operation of the railroad that gave Fleming County outlet to markets and to the general railroad system of Kentucky, and for a number of years has been general manager of the road known as the Flemingsburg & Northern Railroad Company. Mr. Dudley is also president of the Peoples Bank of Flemingsburg.

He was born in Fleming County August 13, 1875. His father is Newton S. Dudley, who was born in Fleming County in 1826, son of James H. Dudley, who was born in Falmouth, Kentucky, and a native of New Jersey. His ancestors were early settlers of the mountains from Virginia to Kentucky. James H. Dudley spent all his life in Fleming County, where he was an extensive land owner. Newton S. Dudley was a Union soldier, a captain in the Sixteenth Kentucky Infantry, and for half a century has been one of the county's most prominent men. He was the builder of the railroad which at first was planned as a line connected with the Union Pacific Railroad and was one of the recognized short line railroads of the United States. Newton S. Dudley continued in charge of its operations until 1905, when the company's affairs were reorganized and he was succeeded by his son, Robert L., who has since taken his work with the railroad when a boy. This road now has eighteen employees, runs four round trips daily, and has been operated at a financial profit.

Newton S. Dudley married Belle Stockwell, of Fleming County, who died forty years later, in 1905.

Robert Lake Dudley was educated in local schools and graduated from Center College at Danville in 1896. In the meantime he had learned telegraphy at the age of twelve, and was a practical railroad man before he completed his college education.

Besides having the active management of the railroad, he is president of one of Fleming County's most prosperous banking institutions, the Peoples Bank, and is also president of the Flemingsburg Milling Company, a merchant milling concern. Mr. Dudley is a republican, but has never been in politics for the sake of office. He served in the City Council as one of the progressive leaders in the successful fight made against strenuous opposition to give Flemingsburg modern municipal improvements, including electric light, paving and sewerage.

Mr. Dudley married Katherine Monroe, daughter of Capt. W. W. Monroe, of Lexington. Her father was a captain in the Confederate army under General Morgan and was captured with Morgan's forces in Monroe and held in a Northern prison until the close of the war. Mrs. Dudley is a graduate of Sayre College of Lexington. They have two children, Winder Thomas and Katherine.

E. O. JACKSON is one of the partners in ownership and the active manager of Pine Park Place, one of Kentucky's great livestock breeding farms and has been so for more than thirty years. It is located in Shelby County, four miles southeast of Eminence and eight miles north of Shelbyville. W. H. Curtis was the founder of the industry that gave prominence to the farm, that of breeding Hereford stock. For years he was one of the largest breeders of Herefords in America, his herd of Old Dian stock which had a world reputation. He was the first man in Kentucky to pay $1,000 for a bull. The business continued under his active supervision until 1917, when he took his main herd to Shepard, Alberta, Canada. Out of his foundation stock were established several herds, and he supplied bulls by the carload for livestock men in all the western states.

Pine Park Place was purchased in 1917 to the firm of Speith, Phelps & Jackson, who continue it as a breeding center for Herefords and also have featured to some extent thoroughbred horses. The farm comprises 330 acres, and in 1918 was built a large, commodious home, standing well back from the pike on an elevation and one of the most attractive country places in the Blue Grass region. The present owners began their breeding with a herd of twelve cows, for which they paid $3,500 in 1917. Their herd now consists of sixty-nine head, and the head of the herd is Jack Woodford the 18th, who was a grand champion two-year-old in 1920. Their surplus stock is all sold to breeders at prices ranging from $250 to $7,000, and in one sale of twenty-four head the average price paid was $354.

The active responsibility of management devolves upon E. O. Jackson, who was born in Henry County May 9, 1885, son of B. F. and Sally (Corbin) Jackson. His father, still living on his farm in Henry County, was formerly widely known as a breeder of Jacks and owns a grand champion of his class. Mr. Jackson's mother, who died at Easter in 1921, achieved more than a local reputation as a chicken fancier, and her poultry won honors in many shows and expositions in and outside the state.

E. O. Jackson grew up on the home farm, acquired a good preparatory education. He is a member of the Elks Lodge. In 1913 he married Aph Pryor Phelps, daughter of Laban Phelps, of Louisville. Mrs. Jackson was reared in Louisville. She is a granddaughter of Judge William S. Pryor, the distinguished Kentucky lawyer and judge, whose home was at New Castle. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson have two children, Laban Phelps and Laura Pryor.

BAILEY P. WOOTTON. The law is known as a stern mistress, demanding of her devotees constant and unremitting attention, and leading her followers through many mazes and intricacies before she grants them success at her hands. This incessant devotion frequently precludes the idea of the busy and successful lawyer indulging in activities outside of the immediate path of his profession, especially if his vocational duties are of a large and important nature. But there are men who find the time and the inclination to devote to outside interests, and who by the very reason of their ability in the law are peculiarly and particularly fitted to perform capable service therein.

Bailey P. Wootton, of Hazard, president of the Hazard Bar Association, has for a long period been known as a close devotee of the law. A master of its perplexities and complexities, his activities have been directed incessantly to the demands of his calling. Yet he has found the leisure to discharge in a highly efficient manner the duties pertaining to the conduct of the Hazard Bank and Trust Company, of which he is president, the establishment of telephone companies and other refining in the field of organization, the conduct of a newspaper, and the performance of the responsibilities dictated by a high ideal of citizenship, and he is, therefore, probably known in other fields as well as he is as a thorough, profound and learned legist.

Mr. Wootton was born on a farm in Muhlenberg
County, Kentucky, May 20, 1870, a son of J. Eli and Sarah Jane (Taylor) Wootton. His grandfather was Joshua Wootton, a miller and distiller of Tennessee. J. Eli Wootton was born in what was then Trousdale (now Sumner) County, Tennessee, in 1836, and in 1854 accompanied the family to the Knobs farm in Muhlenberg County, Kentucky, whence two years later they moved to the farm on which Bailey P. Wootton was born. J. Eli Wootton was a farmer in ordinary circumstances, and was an outspoken democrat in his political views. When the issues between the South and the North resulted in the outbreak of the war between the states, he joined the Union and was active in the organization of a company in the Eleventh Regiment, Kentucky Voulunteer Infantry, in which he became sergeant, and which was recruited at Rochester. He served bravely and faithfully under Crittenden and Sherman, but during the latter part of the war became very ill, and after a long confinement in the hospital at Nashville was honorably discharged because of his physical disability. He then returned to his home farm and continued his agricultural operations until his death, which occurred in August, 1903, when he was sixty-seven years of age. Mr. Wootton married Sarah Jane Taylor, who was born in August, 1843, in Ohio County, Kentucky, a daughter of Harvey Taylor, and a member of a family which has been prominent in Kentucky. Eli Wootton, who is a devout member of the Christian Church, survives her husband as a resident of Central City, Muhlenberg County, near the old home place which is now the possession of her son, Bailey P. There were three sons in the family: Theodore A., the proprietor of a photographic studio at Martin, Tennessee; Finis A., a teacher who was preparing for the law, and who died at the age of twenty-three years; and Bailey P.

Bailey P. Wootton, realizing the value of an education, determined that he would secure this desirable asset in his youth, and as the family finances did not seem sufficient to enable him to attain his object he set about getting finances of his own. In various ways he was occupied. At one time he edited a small paper at Rochester, later was editor of a paper established at Paducah in the Panhandle of Texas to boost the new country there, and in his vacation periods taught those who were less learned than himself. In this way he managed to work his way through the public schools of Muhlenberg County, Rochester Seminary and Lehand College, Kentucky, which he graduated from in 1890, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts after a course in civil engineering. For three years thereafter he continued to teach in Muhlenberg County, and it was as a teacher that he came to Hazard in 1893. The nearest railroad at that time was forty miles distant, but Mr. Wootton, with the foresight that has ever characterized his activities, purchased a small team and wagon, and, using the wagon, cast his lot among those who would grow with the community and share in its prosperity. In 1894 he was made principal of the school, and through his efforts a second story was added to the one-story, one-room schoolhouse and numerous other improvements were made. He remained as principal for four years, or until his efforts had been rewarded by the growth of his school. Ever since then he has been one of the foremost promoters of education here, and through his efforts much has been accomplished in putting the cause of learning upon its present high pedestal. Many of the successful men of the valley today boast that Mr. Wootton was their instructor.

While acting as principal of the little schoolhouse Mr. Wootton found himself to be unsuited to the study of law, and in 1897 was admitted to the bar. Shortly thereafter he became convinced that he needed further instruction in his chosen calling, and in 1898 he graduated in law from Southern University at Huntington. Returning to Hazard, he began the practice of his calling, and soon had an extensive legal practice, which has grown to large proportions with the passing of the years. He was counsel for the old L. & E. Railroad from 1899 to 1911, and from 1911 to 1920 for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. He was one of the leading counsel of the leading coal companies, writing their charters and acting as counsel in court procedure, and his practice today is one of the largest and most important in Perry County. The esteem in which he is held by his fellow-practitioners is shown in the fact that he is president of the Hazard Bar Association.

In 1894 the Muhlenberg County Commissioners appointed the first financial institution at this point the Bank of Hazard, which in 1906 became the First National Bank, of which he was a director and president at one time. In 1917 he founded the Hazard Bank and Trust Company, a strong institution which has an excellent reputation in banking circles and the full confidence of the public, of which he is president. Mr. Wootton was likewise a pioneer in the telephone field in this region. In 1900 he was the organizer of the Jackson and Hazard Telephone Company, the first line of its kind here, and two years later organized the Big Leatherwood Telephone Company. He was instrumental also in building the first light and water plant, which later became the Kentucky and West Virginia Power Company. He is a charter member of the Order of the Hazard Herald, which was established in 1900.

A stalwart democrat in his political allegiance, Mr. Wootton was chairman of the County Democratic Committee for a period of twelve years, and is now State Democratic Executive Committeeman from the Tenth District. He was appointed a delegate from Kentucky to the Republican National Convention in 1896, and was elected as a delegate from Kentucky to the Southern Agricultural Congress; was commissioned a colonel upon the Governor's staff by Governor A. O. Stanley in 1916; and was delegate from the Tenth District of Kentucky to the Democratic Convention in Saint Louis in 1916 which nominated Woodrow Wilson. As a fraternal he belongs to Hazard Lodge, F. & A. M., of which he is a past master; Phoenix Chapter, R. & R., of Phoenix, Arizona, where he spent the winters of 1916-17; Winchester Commandery, K. T.; and the Mystic Shrine at Lexington. He also belongs to Hazard Lodge of the Knights of Pythias. With all his success Mr. Wootton is unassuming in character. He has ever been a loyal friend, and those with whom he struggled side by side in the business world always found him ready to give an assisting hand when it is needed.

Mr. Wootton married in 1902 Miss Rebecca Boggs, who was born October 17, 1886, in Knott County, Kentucky, daughter of J. C. Boggs, who is now a merchant at Chandler, Oklahoma. Mrs. Wootton died April 6, 1914, after having been the mother of three children, Thomas P., who graduated from the Kentucky Military Institute in 1921 and is now attending the University of New Mexico; Sarah, who died at the age of three years; and Anita, who was one year old at the time of her death. In November, 1916, Mr. Wootton was united in marriage with Miss Clara Collins, daughter of Albert Collins, of Bourbon County, Kentucky, and they have two children. Mr. Wootton is a member of the Christian Church and takes an active part in social affairs at Hazard.

Leck Martin. Some of the richest mineral land in Eastern Kentucky is in the Beaver Creek Valley. Long before the development of the mineral resources was thought of a member of the Martin family moved to this valley and acquired immense tracts of land up and down, part of which is still owned by his descendants, while much of it is devoted to the production of coal by various companies.

A grandson of the original settler here is Leck Mar-
Charles Lee Venable was born about three months after the death of his father, and was left with his widowed mother on a farm in Warren County, where he attended rural schools. He also attended a private school conducted by Prof. B. F. Rogers at Richmond, Kentucky. For two years he attended Central Normal College at Danville, Indiana, and began the study of medicine in the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, where he received his M. D. degree. He was there during 1885-86 and then entered the medical department of the University of Tennessee, at Memphis. He did post-graduate work, specializing in intern medicine, at Rush Medical College at Chicago in 1894. Doctor Venable began practicing in Simpson County in 1887, but a few months later moved to Kansas City, Missouri. In 1888 he returned to Warren County, practiced there two years, and in 1891 moved to Simpson County, and his professional work was done in this section of Kentucky until his death February 21, 1921, a period of thirty years. From 1910 his home and offices were in Franklin. Doctor Venable was a member of the Simpson County, West and American Medical associations, the Southern Medical Association and the Army and Navy Medical Society.

In May, 1917, he volunteered his services in the Medical Corps, attended the training camp for medical officers at Camp Greenleaf, Chattanooga, where he was commissioned a first lieutenant in June, 1917, and in November he was called to service at Camp Sevier, Greenville, South Carolina. In May, 1918, he joined the University of Virginia Hospital Unit No. 41 for overseas duty, and was in France from June, 1918, until February, 1919. Just before embarking for overseas he was commissioned captain and in France was promoted to the rank of major. He was in Paris during the bombardment of July, 1918, and was at the battle front during the St. Mihiel campaign from October until November of that year. He was then made commanding officer of the Red Cross Military Hospital No. 6 at Bellevue, France, this being a hospital exclusively for gassed patients. He was evacuated home in February, 1919, and soon afterward resumed his congenital associations at Franklin.

Doctor Venable was a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church, and affiliated with Harney Lodge No. 343, A. F. and A. M., at Woodburn and Pluto Lodge, Knights of Pythias, at Adairville. His family have an attractive home at 313 West Cedar Street.

Doctor Venable was a grandchild when he entered the army service, showing that age is no bar to active patriotism. He married in Warren County, Kentucky, in February, 1802, Miss Sibbie Jenkins, daughter of J. Wesley and Nancy (Simmons) Jenkins, both now deceased. His father was a Kentucky farmer. Mrs. Venable is a graduate of the Liberty Female College of Glassow, Kentucky. The two children are James J., and Mary Edith Venable, the latter at home. James J. Venable, a resident of Birmingham, Alabama, where he is connected with the Crane Iron Company, married Maybell Roberts, of that city, and their two children are James J., and Mary Ross.

GORDON RICE. That opportunity has not signified so much as the man is proven in the everyday life of any community. To one man openings may appear, all favorable, and yet because of his lack of efficiency or fitness he may not enter through the portals. His associates and intimate friends, with no more advantages in the way of capital or outside influence, on the other hand, are able to forge ahead and choose one of these, pass on to influence and prominence. It all depends upon the character of the man himself. This is especially true in the insurance field, where none but the efficient can hope to succeed. While the general public is being educated to the importance of insurance and the value of policies as a safe and dependable investment, there are so many engaged in this line of business, and all of the old line companies offer practically the same rates, that the insurance man has to possess perseverance, energy and resourcefulness in marked degree to earn a fair living from selling insurance. That many do possess just these qualities, the success achieved by such a large proportion conclusively proves. One of the men of Carlisle County who has made a name for himself as a general insurance man of Bardwell is Gordon Rice.

Gordon Rice was born in Fulton County, Kentucky, March 12, 1854, a son of T. M. Rice, and a grandson of William Rice, a native of Owen County, Kentucky. In manhood he went into Obion County, Tennessee, and became a farmer. He was married in 1881, and has spent the remainder of his life in that section of the state, and there passed away in 1881. The wife of William Rice bore the maiden name of Fannie Threlkeld, and she was born in Obion County, Tennessee, where she passed away.

T. M. Rice was born in Obion County, Tennessee, in 1809, where he was reared and educated, but after he reached his majority he moved to the state of Kentucky where he has spent the remainder of his life in Fulton County, where he has been engaged in farming with profit to himself and advantage to the agricultural development of his region. At present he is living near Jordan and is recognized as one of the farmers of the state. He is a Democrat and politics he is a democrat. T. M. Rice married Nannie Boyer, who was born near Hickman, Kentucky, in 1865. Their children are as follows: Gordon, who was the eldest; Lucy, who married J. W. Mayes, lives near Hickman, Kentucky, where he is engaged in farming; and Wilson B., who is assisting his father on the farm.

Gordon Rice attended the public schools of Fulton County and Hickman College, at Hickman, Kentucky, following which he became a student of the Georgia Robinson Christian College, a normal college at Henderson, Tennessee, and remained there for a year, leaving it in 1903. Having thus qualified himself for the profession of teaching, Mr. Rice entered the educational field in 1888 as principal of Tiptonville High School, for nine years in Fulton County, Kentucky. Then, in 1910, he began selling insurance in Fulton County, and remained there until the fall of 1913, when he moved to New Orleans, Louisiana, and remained in that city for eight months. Returning to Kentucky, he was at Hickman until February, 1915, when he came to Bardwell and established his present business, which is the leading insurance in one of the city. He is a general insurance underwriter of life, fire, liability, automobile and other kinds of insurance, and represents the leading insurance companies of the country. His offices are on Front Street. Mr. Rice supports the principles and candidates of the democratic party. He belongs to the Christian Church, to the Odd Fellows, to the Masonic order, and belongs to Bardwell Lodge No. 490, A. F. and A. M.; Antioch Chapter, R. A. M.; and Fulton Council, R. and S. M. He belongs to Bardwell Lodge, I. O. O. F., and Rosewood Camp No. 38, W. O. W. At present he is serving as junior warden of the Blue Lodge. In addition to his other interests he is a director of the Blue Cotton Oil Company, and he owns his residence on Elsey Avenue, where he maintains a comfortable home.

In 1911 Mr. Rice was united in marriage with Miss Ruby Ramer at Union City, Tennessee. She is a daughter of George and Bobbie (Lect) Ramer, farming people of Mosow, Kentucky. Mrs. Rice is a very accomplished lady, having graduated in music, and is skilled in both vocal and instrumental music. Mr. and Mrs. Rice have three children, namely: Paul Gordon, who was born September 15, 1912; George Thomas, who was born October 4, 1915; and Ruby Dorothy, who was born December 21, 1918.

Mr. Rice is an expert in insurance matters and is prepared at all times to give information relative to the subject. He believes it to be his duty to call attention to the necessity of properly protecting various interests through an adequate amount of insurance. There was a time when straight Life and Fire insurance were the only kinds to be written. Now risks are taken on almost everything and protection is afforded against all kinds of calamities. Mr. Rice is endeavoring to educate the public so as to make them realize that in buying insurance they are merely providing against contingencies, and, when the risks are written against, they are made to pay a pro rata part of the contingency. Mr. Rice affords better returns, everything considered, than any other. Since he has been waging his effective campaigns the insurance business has shown a marked improvement not only at Bardwell but in the surrounding territory, and many an afflicted family has had cause to be thankful to Mr. Rice when it was realized that because of his efforts and advice adequate provision has been made. As the years advance, rejoices that he need take no special thought for his old age because, acting under Mr. Rice's instructions, he has taken out enough insurance to give him an income when his productive period is over. As is but natural, a man who is occupied with work that in its nature is that of a missionary character must be a man of many years. Mr. Rice, a man of wealth, is fifty-four years of age. Mr. Rice continues to be interested and helpful with reference to the advancement of Bardwell, although all he does is in a private capacity, for he has no time or inclination for a public life.

John F. Kirksey, M. D. For two decades Doctor Kirksey has performed all the services required of a physician and surgeon in the community of Sedalia, has gained a name as a careful and skillful leader in his profession and has taken an equally public-spirited and influential part in various local affairs.

Doctor Kirksey was born in Calloway County, Kentucky, August 10, 1875, a son of T. O. Kirksey and grandson of Frank Kirksey, who was born in North Carolina in 1818 and came to Tennessee with his parents about 1826 and settled in Calloway County, Kentucky where he followed a career as a farmer and trader. He died in the county in 1898. He married after coming to Calloway County Priscilla Casey, who was born in this state in 1818 and died in Calloway County in 1900. T. O. Kirksey was born in Calloway County in 1825, spent most of his active life there as a farmer, and in 1860 removed to Mayfield and engaged in merchandising. Since 1870 he has been a resident of Sedalia, and has been chiefly interested as a farmer in the community. He is a democrat, an active worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. T. O. Kirksey married Emma Edwards, who was born in Calloway County in 1854, and during her lifetime bore two children. The older of the two children. The only daughter, A. L. D. O., married George Billington, a farmer, and both died soon after their marriage in Calloway County.

Doctor Kirksey attended the rural schools of Calloway County while a boy, also Murray Institute at Murray, Kentucky, and graduated with the M. D. degree from the medical department of the University of Louisville in 1897. He has since taken several postgraduate courses in the Chicago Polyclinic, and has neglected no opportunity to keep abreast of the wonderful advances in medical and surgical knowledge. He began practice at Lymville in 1897, and since January 1, 1899, his home has been at Sedalia, where he is the only representative of his profession in the present time. Doctor Kirksey owns a fine modern home, surrounded with extensive and well-kept grounds, and offices situated on the State Highway, just at the edge.
Charles F. Cato was educated in the public schools of Dawson Springs, and was graduated from his high school course at the age of eighteen years, following which he began working for William M. Lynch, a general merchant, with whom he remained from 1895 until 1900. In the latter year he went to Wyckliffe, Kentucky, and for a year remained in the employ of Matt Smith, a general merchant. Returning to Dawson Springs, he began working for Day Brothers in their general store, but in 1902 left them to go on his own account. For a number of years he was a merchant, and afterward became a resident of Kansas City, Missouri, with which he remained for three years, during which time he was engaged in the mercantile business of W. D. Laffoon, conducting it until February 16, 1916, when he sold his business. For a few months he took a well-earned rest, and in August of that same year became manager of the present company, which handles a general line of building goods, clothing and furnishing goods of all kinds, and is the leading store of the character in Hopkinsville. It is conveniently located at 114 South Main Street. Mr. Cato is a director of the First National Bank of Dawson Springs; owns a half interest in the Dawson Springs Brick Company; is secretary and treasurer of the K. & K. Oil Company of Kentucky and Kansas; and owns a comfortable seven-room residence which was built in 1902 and is supplied with all modern city conveniences, including city water and electric lights. It is surrounded by ample grounds two acres in extent, which are well kept, and in which are fine shade trees and 100 fruit trees. In addition he owns a 125-acre farm in Christian County on Sand Lick Creek, the one originally the property of his grandfather.

Mr. Cato is a democrat and served as a member of the City Council for four years. Reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he embraced its creed early in life, and is not only a zealous member but is a steward of the local congregation and secretary and treasurer of the Official Board. His donations toward the support of the church are so generous that he is recognized as its main financial support. He is a member of the national order of Knights of Columbus and of the Odd Fellows; Mason of the Dawson Lodge No. 628, A. F. and A. M., and is secretary of the lodge. During the late war Mr. Cato entered upon the local activities in behalf of the cause with the same ardor which characterizes him, and subscribed to the various drives and bought bonds and stamps in which he is a real American, descendant of the "American Fathers."

On October 5, 1911, Mr. Cato married at Nashville, Tennessee, Miss Rosalou Gleaves, a daughter of E. C. and Rosa (Lowe) Gleaves. Mrs. Gleaves is deceased, but Mr. Gleaves lives at Paducah, Kentucky, where he is working as a mechanic for the Illinois Central Railroad Company. Mr. and Mrs. Cato have five children.

W. W. Bornt, cashier of the Moscow State Bank, is one of the dependable men and financiers of Hickman County, and his present position is the outcome of his own industry, faithfulness and energy, for he has worked his way up from very small beginnings. Mr. Bond was born at New Liberty, Owen County, Kentucky, June 27, 1891, a son of Albert Bond, who was born at New Liberty in 1863, a son of Charles Bond.

Charles Bond was born at New Liberty, Kentucky, in 1845, a son of W. A. Bond, who was a native of Scott County, Kentucky. He became one of the pioneers of New Liberty, where he died in 1860, and there he was very successfully engaged in merchandising. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Willina Branham, was also born in Scott County, Kentucky; and she, too, died at New Liberty. The Bonds are of English origin, and the American ancestors having come from England to Virginia at a very early day. Charles Bond was reared at New Liberty, and there he was engaged in farming until his death in 1872, which was occasioned by his team of horses running away with him. His wife, Jennie Todd, was born at New Liberty in 1845, and she resides at her birthplace.

Albert Bond spent his entire life at New Liberty, where he died in 1901, having been active as a saw-mill proprietor and operator. In politics he was a democrat, but he never sought public office. The Christian Church held his membership, and he always took an active part in church work. For years he belonged to the Odd Fellows. - Albert Bond was united in marriage with Lide Coats, who was born at New Liberty in 1869, and they became the parents of the following children: W. W. Bond was the eldest born; and C. H., who is a leading merchant of Moscow.

W. W. Bond attended the public schools of New Liberty, but left school when he was sixteen years old to become self-supporting, entering the Fifth National Bank of Cincinnati, Ohio. He started at the bottom and worked his way up through individual merit to be bookkeeper, and held that position until 1910, when he was offered and accepted the position of clerk in the Kanawha Hotel at Charleston, West Virginia. In 1915 he returned to New Liberty, Kentucky, and for three years occupied himself with farming, but he is better fitted for a business life, and so turned toward the line of business he understands so well and in 1918 came to Moscow to accept the position he still holds, that of cashier of the Moscow State Bank. It was established in 1904 as a state institution, and its officers are as follows: J. T. Little, president, and W. H. Brown, vice president, Mr. Bond being the cashier. The capital stock is $15,000; the surplus and profits are $6,000 and the deposits are $80,000. Reared by a father of democratic convictions, Mr. Bond supports the principles of that party through inheritance. He is a Mason and belongs to Model Lodge No. 200, A. F. and A. M., and he also is a member of the State Bankers Association.

In 1915, Mr. Bond was united in marriage with Miss Mary Russell Connell at Louisville, Kentucky. Mrs. Bond is a daughter of Dr. J. W. Connell, now deceased, but formerly a physician and surgeon, and his wife Mrs. Mattie (Gaylor) Connell, who survives him and lives at Louisville. Mr. and Mrs. Bond have two children: William, who was born December 22, 1915; and Howard, who was born August 20, 1917.

J. D. Rollings, M. D. Some men possess so much energy and executive ability that no profession or business offers sufficient opportunity to induce them to confine their efforts to it. They see in other fields whatever they undertake, and are able to carry on entirely dissimilar undertakings at one and the same time. Such a man is Dr. J. D. Rollings of La Center, Kentucky, eminent physician and surgeon, noted breeder and raiser of Hereford cattle, vice president of the Bank of La Center, and an active figure in practically every interest of moment in his part of Ballard County.

Doctor Rollings was born in Ballard County, Kentucky, September 4, 1861, a son of C. N. B. Rollings, and grandson of John T. Rollings, a native of Halifax County, Virginia, who died about 1852, when he was fifty-six years of age. He first married a native of Virginia, and they had the following family born to them: C. N. B., who was the eldest; and John A., Nathan L, Margaret and James W., all of whom are deceased. After the death of his first wife John T. Rollings was again married, and he and his wife had three children, namely: Martin V., who is deceased; Frank M., who lives near Needmore, Ballard County, Kentucky, where he is engaged in farming; and Sarah, who married a Mr. Elliott, is also deceased.

C. N. B. Rollings was born in Christian County, Kentucky, October 8, 1828, and died in Ballard County, Kentucky, in 1911. He grew to manhood in Christian County, Kentucky, but in 1846 accompanied his parents to Ballard County, which continued to be his home during the remainder of his life. Mr. Rollings was one of the men who supported the prohibition cause long before there was any hope of its being successful and was uncompromising in his convictions and brave enough to support them in spite of public sentiment. It is a great regret to Doctor Rollings that his father was not spared long enough to participate in the rejoicing of his party over the passage and ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment. Both Mr. Rollings and a member of the Christian Church he lived up to the highest conceptions of a gentleman and good citizen, and was very active in church work. His material labors were performed as a farmer, and were rewarded with a gratifying measure of success. While he had but few educational advantages in his youth, he added to his store of knowledge and enriched his mental capacities through reading books which were of great value to him.

On December 31, 1856, C. N. B. Rollings married Miss Ann R. Bugg, a daughter of Richard and Prudence (Chapell) Bugg, of Ballard County, Kentucky. Mrs. Rollings was born in Christian County, Kentucky, in 1824, and died in Ballard County, Kentucky, in 1884. She and her husband had the following children; Lula, who married Branch Bailey, now deceased, a farmer, and they had two children, Charles and Bascom. After Mr. Bailey's demise she was married to Otho Owen, and they reside in Ballard County, Kentucky, where he is engaged in farming. They have one child, Andrew; Doctor Rollings was the second in order of birth: Charles R., who lives at La Center, is a farmer; James Wesley is a farmer and lives at La Center; Lizzie married W. E. Thomas, a retired farmer; and Lena, who married Hardy L. Nance, lives on the old home farm one mile east of Hinkleville, Kentucky.

Doctor Rollings attended the rural schools of Ballard County, and remained on his father's farm until he was nineteen years of age, at which time he left home and entered the Kentucky Medical College at Louisville, Kentucky, from which he graduated in 1882, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. That same year he began the practice of his profession in Ballard County, and for two years lived on the old farm, and then, in 1884, came to Hinkleville, where he has since been engaged in a general medical and surgical practice. His post office address, however, is La Center. He owns his fine modern residence and offices at Hinkleville, which he moved into in 1908, and farms in Ballard County comprising 400 acres in all, and has built up these farms until they are now very productive. Doctor Rollings is specializing, with extremely gratifying results in the breeding and raising of Hereford cattle. His herd is a fine one and he has built up a reputation for this strain of cattle which extends throughout Western Kentucky. His herd is headed by Beau Roseland, sired by Bonnie Lad the Twentieth. Beau Roseland is a three-quarters brother.
to Ardmore, which sold for $31,000. Doctor Rollings bought Beau Roseland out of the herd of Walter L. Yost of Kansas City, Missouri. Doctor Rollings is vice president of the Bank of La Center, and is president of the Ballard County Independent Telephone Company. In politics he is a democrat. For many years he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and has held lay offices in that church. Mr. Rollings is a member of Antioch Lodge No. 334, A. F. and A. M. He belongs to the Ballard County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, the American Medical Association, and the Southwestern Kentucky Medical Association.

In 1884 Doctor Rollings married at Cairo, Illinois, Miss Mattie L. Skinner, a daughter of W. L. and Martha (Neal) Skinner, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Skinner was for many years one of the prosperous farmers of Southern Illinois. Doctor and Mrs. Rollings became the parents of the following children: Marie, who married Dr. B. C. Overby, a physician and surgeon of La Center, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work; and Neal, who graduated from the Ballard High School at La Center, following which he took a year’s course at the Kentucky State University at Lexington, Kentucky, and afterward became an officer in the United States Army and Rowing Green, Kentucky. On September 18, 1918, he entered the United States service and was sent to Camp Buell, Lexington, Kentucky, and was made a sergeant of his company. The armistice was signed three days before the date set for the departure of his organization from camp to the assembly point to make ready for embarkation for France, and he was mustered out of the service December 14, 1918, and returned home. He is now engaged in superintending his father’s farm.

Mrs. Rollings is a very superior lady. She was educated under the instruction of private tutors, and has developed her naturally fine intellectual abilities. In the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she is a member, she has found plenty of opportunity to exercise her talents for organization and executive action, and she is also valued in the Woman’s Club of La Center. During the great war she was one of the most active members of the city’s locality, and devoted a great deal of her time to Red Cross work. She organized the Hinkleville Auxiliary of the La Center Chapter of the Red Cross, and served as its chairman. She is the historian of Ballard County, and compiled the records of the soldiers who went into the service from Ballard County. This record is recognized as so valuable that it has been decided to bind it that it may be preserved for perpetual reference and kept at the Courthouse at Wickliffe, the county seat of Ballard County.

Leslie Atkins Puryear. Without any doubt this country is on the threshold of its greatest period of prosperity. Within the next score of years every industry, each enterprise, all professions, are going to feel the result of the mighty impulse reacting from the service rendered by the young men of the Nation who when their Government was in danger responded to its call and risked their lives in its defense. It stands to reason that any right-minded young man who has fought to preserve his country is not going to remain indifferent to its future welfare. Broadened by their experiences, strengthened by the realization of a task well done, and developed by the training they received, the veterans of the great war are going to prove in their future connections with the business, professional and political affairs of their time that they are just as capable of doing what is required of them as the men of any other day.

In Kentucky and Indiana the various branches of the service the very flower of its young manhood, and some of these ardent young souls lie under the white crosses of the battle-fields of Flanders and France, but fortunately many of them have returned and are today rendering a fine account of themselves in their everyday occupations. One of them is Leslie Atkins Puryear, manager and owner of the Hardin Milling Company, one of the busiest mills in Marshall County.

Leslie Atkins Puryear was born at Paducah, Kentucky, January 31, 1890, a son of T. H. Puryear, and a member of one of the old-established families of Virginia, to which province members of it came from France at the time of the persecution of the Huguenots. T. H. Puryear was born near Boydton, Virginia, and died at Paducah, Kentucky, in 1898. He was reared at his birthplace, and came West to Clarksville, Tennessee, after he had reached his majority, was there married and for a time operated successfully as a tobacco dealer. In the later ’70s he moved to Kentucky, and was the pioneer tobacco dealer of that city, developing an extensive business and becoming one of the substantial men of that locality. In politics he was a stalwart democrat. During the war between the North and the South he served in the Army of Virginia under Gen. Robert E. Lee, to whom he, as all the other Confederate soldiers, was devotedly attached. T. H. Puryear married Ella Atkins, who was born at Clarksville, Tennessee, and was the parents of the following children: Henry, who died when young at Paducah, Kentucky; Lucy, who died in childhood; Sally, who also died in childhood; Annie, who married S. T. Hubbard, an extensive tobacconist of Paducah, Kentucky; Chara, who married Dr. Edwin Mims, head of the department of English in the Vanderbilt University of Nashville, Tennessee; Peter, who died at Paducah, Kentucky, when he was thirty-five years old, at that time being assistant cashier and accountant of the Citizens Savings Bank of that city; Wilson G., who resides at McKenzie, Tennessee, is associate principal of the McKenzie School; M. H., who is cashier for the Nashville, Chattanooga & Saint Louis Railroad Company at Paducah, Kentucky; and Leslie Atkins, who was the youngest.

Growing up at Paducah, Leslie Atkins Puryear attended its public schools, later becoming a student of the McKenzie School at McKenzie, Tennessee. He then took a course at Trinity College at Durham, North Carolina, leaving that institution when in his senior year, in the fall of 1911. For the subsequent year he was an accountant for the Nashville, Chattanooga & Saint Louis Railroad Company in the superintendent’s office, leaving that position to take a clerical position with the E. S. Sutherland Medical Company, where his talents were utilized with such proportion until he was made advertising manager; and he remained with this concern until the business was sold. In 1915 Mr. Puryear was made principal of the Peoples Tucker School of Springfield, Tennessee, and discharged its onerous duties very acceptably for two years.

In the meanwhile this country entered the great war, and Mr. Puryear, responding to his patriotism, which was strongly marked, went to Ger, September 1917, and was sent to Atlanta, Georgia, and placed in the Three Hundred and Twenty-first Field Artillery. After receiving his training he was sent overseas in April, 1918, and when he reached France was placed in the Saumur Artillery School, and was later transferred to the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Field Artillery, Thirty-fifth Division. The organization was sent to the Verdun front. Sommedieu sector, where he saw some hard service. In April, 1919, he was sent home, and was honorably discharged with the rank of second lieutenant in April, 1919.

Upon his return to Kentucky Mr. Puryear went into business for himself, and is now owner and manager of the Hardin Milling Company. The mill is located along the tracks of the Nashville, Chattanooga & Saint Louis Railroad, and has a capacity of twenty-five barrels of flour per day, and this capacity is taxed to the utmost all of the time.

Mr. Puryear is a democrat. The Methodist Episcopal Church holds his membership, and he is held in high esteem in the local congregation. He is a member of Hardin Lodge No. 73, L. O. O. F., the Kappa Sigma Greek letter college fraternity and the American Legion. He owns his modern residence on Watt Street, where he has a comfortable home, and he and Mrs. Puryear welcome their many friends with true Southern hospitality.

In September, 1911, Mr. Puryear married at Saint Louis, Missouri, Miss Oma Dorothy Dacus, a daughter of R. L. and Annie (Donahue) Dacus. Mrs. Puryear was born at Fulton, Kentucky, and was graduated from the Centenary College of Cleveland, Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Puryear have two children: Selwyn Else, who was born May 19, 1912; and L. A., Jr., who was born February 9, 1916. Mr. Puryear is making a remarkable success of his undertaking, and is planning a further expansion of his business, which is already justified by his trade. Although he has not resided for a long period at Hardin he has gained the confidence of his citizens and is accepted as a young man of sterling character and unusual business attainments.

W. H. JUSTICE was for many years prominent in Allen County, an educator, and at the time of his death was county clerk. He was a twin brother of Judge Robert B. Justice, whose career is sketched elsewhere in this publication.

W. H. Justice was born in Warren County, Kentucky, December 3, 1833. His grandfather, Jack Justice, was born in Tennessee in 1812, and as a young man removed to Allen County, Kentucky, where he became a prosperous farmer and planter. He died there in 1852. His wife, Miss Nanney, was also a native of Tennessee, and died in Warren County, Kentucky. The Justice family originated in Scotland, some of the members coming to America in Colonial times and locating in North Carolina. The late W. H. Justice was a son of J. A. Justice, who was born in Warren County, November 3, 1818, and died January 28, 1898. During his lifetime he developed a large farm, was a Republican in politics and very early in life united with the Baptist Church and was liberal in supporting it and a leader in church work. He had special gifts as an eloquent speaker. His first wife was Bettie Lightfoot, a native of Warren County, who died before leaving two children. He was also owner of a farm of J. A. Justice was Miss Moore, who likewise lived all her life in Warren County. The only son of this union died in infancy. The third wife of J. A. Justice was Lucinda Williams, who was born in Simpson County, Kentucky, in 1838, and died in Warren County February 27, 1920. She was the mother of the following children: a daughter, who died in infancy; Hettie Fannie, who died January 30, 1884, and lived in Allen County; W. H. and Robert B.; F. W., who died as a farmer in Allen County at the age of twenty-six; W. B., widow of Griver Poe, a farmer, and she now lives at Dallas, Texas; Isaac J., a resident of Dallas; Emma, wife of Dr. J. G. Poe, a physician at Dallas, Texas; and Wiley, who died at the age of eleven years.

W. H. Justice secured his early school education, attended the State Normal, and for seventeen years did effective work as a teacher and educator in Allen, Warren and Simpson counties. After this long service in the school room he was elected and was serving as county clerk of Allen County when he died at Scottsville, January 16, 1911. He was also owner of a farm in Allen County. In politics he was always a stanch Republican and was a life-long member and supporter of the Baptist Church.

At Scottsville in 1866 W. H. Justice married Miss Alva Mayhew, daughter of J. W. and Rebecca (Walker) Mayhew. Mr. and Mrs. Justice had two children, Willie Vertice and Ovaleta. Ovaleta, in January, 1906, was married on board a train between Bowling Green, Kentucky, and Nashville, Tennessee, to Dr. Lonie W. Johnson, one of Scottsville's prominent and respected young professional men. Doctor Johnson was born at Akersville, Kentucky, January 17, 1887, son of Yancey Lycurgus and Luttia (Patterson) Johnson. His father was a prominent farmer and storekeeper, and at about the time his home place in 1900, his widow, now fifty-three, still living on the homestead. Lonie W. Johnson attended grade school, graduated from high school at Akersville, and in 1908 entered the dental department of the University of Tennessee at Nashville. He received his degree in 1911 and at once established his office at Scottsville on Court House Square. He is one of the ablest representatives of the modern profession of dental surgery in the county, and is ably assisted in his work by his brother, L. O. Johnson. Doctor Johnson owns a fine modern residence on Bowling Green Road, also a farm in Allen County, and is a director in the First National Bank of Scottsville. He was a member of the City Council two terms, four years, and has been secretary of the Allen County Republican Committee. He is one of the deacons of the Baptist Church. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have one daughter, Marjorie. Mrs. Johnson is socially prominent in Scottsville and has broad intellectual interests. Besides graduating from the public schools of Scottsville, she finished her education at Russellville, in the Logan College for Young Women.

ROBERT BRIGGS JUSTICE, County Judge of Allen County is one of the best-known men in this part of Kentucky, and one who possesses popularity with all classes is founded upon his personal characteristics. His connections with the business life of Scottsville reflect credit upon his acumen and sagacity, and since he was placed on the bench through the vote of his fellow citizens, he has displayed his excellent judgment and sense of fair dealing so as to win universal approval.

Judge Justice was born in Warren County, Kentucky, December 3, 1863, a son of J. A. Justice, and grandson of Jack Justice, who was born in Tennessee in 1812, and died in Warren County, Kentucky, in 1852, having been a prosperous farmer in the latter state for a number of years. He married a Miss Nanney, who was born in Tennessee, and died in Warren County, Kentucky. The Justice family originated in Scotland, from whence its representatives came to the American Colonies and settled in North Carolina.

J. A. Justice was born in Warren County, Kentucky, April 3, 1832, and died in that county, January 28, 1898, having spent all of his life there, and having developed very valuable agricultural interests. He was a strong supporter of the Republican party. A consistent Christian, he early united with the Baptist Church and for the remainder of his life he was a constant attendant upon religious services; as a liberal, was a leader in all of the church work, and was an eloquent speaker. He married first Bettie Lightfoot, who was born in Warren County, and died there, having one child a girl who died in infancy, Later J. A. Justice was married to a Miss Moore, who was born and died in Warren County, and they had a son who died in infancy. After her demise Mr. Justice was married to Lucinda Williams, who was born in Simpson County, Kentucky, in 1838, and died in Warren County February 27, 1920. Their children were as follows: a daughter, who died an infant; Hettie Fannie, who married S. L. Holland, a farmer of Allen County; Judge Justice, who was the third in order of birth; W. H., who is the twin brother of Judge Justice, died June 30, 1911, at Scottsville, being County Clerk eight years at the time. of his demise, but he had been for seventeen years a school-teacher of Allen, Warren and Simpson counties; F. W., who was a farmer, died in Allen County at the age of twenty-six years; A. B., who is the widow of Grider Poe, a farmer, resides at Dallas, Texas; F. W., who was a farmer, died in Allen County; Isaac J., who is a general workman, lives at Dallas, Texas; Emma, who married Dr. J. G. Poe, a physician of Dallas, Texas; and Wiley, who died at the age of eleven years.

Judge Justice attended the rural schools of Allen County, and remained on his father's farm until he was twenty-four years old, although he had been teaching school for nine years during the winter months, in Allen and Warren counties, and he kept up this line of work for six years after he left home. In November, 1894, he was elected County Clerk of Allen County, and re-elected in 1897, and served one term of three years, and a second one of four years. In 1902, upon leaving office, he embarked in a mercantile business at Scottsville and conducted it for four years, but on account of ill health, sold his business and retired until 1912, when he was again named the county court judge pertaining to the office of County Judge, to which he had been elected in the preceding November. After four years he was re-elected for a term of four years more. His offices are in the courthouse. For a number of years he was a director of the Citizens National Bank, but severed this connection owing to pressure of other responsibilities. Judge Justice owns an elegant modern residence on Bowling Green Avenue, that is one of the very finest in the city, and it is surrounded by six acres of land. He also owns six dwellings in Scottsville, and a business building on the Square, as well as a farm of sixty-one acres one mile north of Scottsville. During the late war he took an active part in all of the war activities, assisting in all of the drives, buying bonds and saving stamps, and contributing to the various organizations to the full extent of his means, being one of the most liberal donors in the county.

In February, 1892, Judge Justice was married to Miss Annie Weaver, in Allen County. She is a daughter of the late W. T. and Amanda H. (Williams) Weaver. During his lifetime Mr. Weaver was a farmer, and during the war between the two sections of the country, he served in the Union Army. His widow survives and makes her home on her farm which is located eight miles north of Scottsville. Mrs. Justice was engaged in teaching school in Allen County for eight years prior to her marriage. Judge and Mrs. Justice became the parents of two children, namely: Robert Lee, who died at birth; and Dorothy Lee, who was born May 27, 1909.

Max H. Roder, one of the most prominent coal mining contractors in McCreary County and Southeastern Kentucky, went into the mines as a worker when a boy of eleven, and almost his entire range of experience covers this industry, so that he is familiar with coal mining in many of the largest bituminous districts of the Middle West.

Mr. Roder, whose home is two miles north of Stearns in McCreary County, was born in Hesse, Germany, September 6, 1873. His father, John Roder, now living retired with his son Max, was born in Saxony in 1844, was reared there, and performed his duty as a soldier both in the German-Austria war of 1865-66 and in the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71. He was a coal mine worker in Germany until he was forty years of age, and in 1886 brought his family to the United States and located on a farm at Beaver Creek, Kentucky. He farmed there eight years, and then for eighteen years lived on his farm at Greenwood in McCreary County, finally retiring to enjoy the competence earned by many years of active labor. He began voting as a democrat after acquiring American citizenship, but subsequently became a republican and is a member of the Lutheran Church. At Berlin, Germany, John Roder married Johanna Rose, who was born in that city in 1844, and died at Greenwood, Kentucky, in 1909. Of their five children Max is the youngest. Louisa, the oldest, is the wife of William Kopf, a button manufacturer in Germany; Helena is a Catholic nun in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil; Ida, who died at Louisville at the age of forty-five, was the wife of William Peter, a farmer who died in Michigan; and Mrs. Bertha Schneider is the wife of a farmer at Bolton, Michigan.

Max H. Roder had all his education in the schools of Germany before he was eleven years of age. He came to the United States in 1884 and immediately went to work in the coal mines of Beaver Creek, Kentucky. He learned coal mining there and later, as an experienced miner, went to Coalburg, Alabama, in the mines there four years, spent two years in the great mining district at McAlester, Oklahoma, one year at West Bay City, Michigan, then another year at Coalburg, Alabama, a year at McAlester, Oklahoma, and in 1900 located at Paris, Kentucky, where he remained three years. Another two years he was connected with the coal mining interests at Harrisburg, Illinois, and in 1905 engaged in his present business as a coal mining contractor, with headquarters at Stearns, Kentucky. For almost ten years he has been the leading contractor at Bartell, and has permanently located in that district. He owns his home, with six and a half acres of ground two miles north of Stearns and also has seventy-five acres at Greenwood and other real estate over the county.

Mr. Roder identified himself with all the local patriotic organizations during the World war, lending his influence to the cause of the Government in raising funds and giving of his own means in the same direction. Among other business interests he is a director in the Ridge Fork Oil Company. He is a republican, a Protestant in religion, and is affiliated with Ora S. Ware Lodge, F. and A. M., Cliff Spring Lodge No. 317, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is a past grand, and is a past chancellor of Standard Lodge No. 147, Knights of Pythias. In 1911, at Parkers Lake, Kentucky, he married Miss Alice Monaca Souleyret, daughter of J. C. and Monaca (Raboul) Souleyret. Her mother is deceased. Her father is a mine foreman and surveyor at Wiborg, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Roder became the parents of nine children: Violet, born in 1903, is a high school graduate and is the wife of Arthur Cheney, a restaurant proprietor at Pine Knot; Ida May, born in 1905; Helena, born in 1909; Arthur Charles, a high school student born in 1916; John, the fifth child, a daughter, died at the age of ten months; Edwald, born in 1913; Ernest, born in 1915; Earl, born in 1917, met his death by accident at the White City Railroad crossing May 27, 1921; and Maxine, born in 1920.

Michael O'Sullivan, publisher and editor of the Shelby Sentinel, has been a business man of that community forty years, and it was his thorough talents as a business man rather than previous training in journalism that contributed to the great success he has achieved in the management of the Shelby Sentinel, one of the oldest papers in this section of the state and under its present ownership one of the most influential.

The Shelby Sentinel, under the name of the Shelby News, was established in the year 1840, and quickly became a prominent organ of the wig party in this section of the state. With the disruption of the wigs and after the close of the Civil war the party policies of the paper were changed to democratic, and at the same time was found necessary to change the name of the paper and since then it has been the Shelby Sentinel.

Mr. O'Sullivan was born at Augusta, Georgia, September 30, 1859, son of Daniel and Nora (Hartnett) O'Sullivan. His parents were born in Ireland, were married in New York, and prior to the Civil war moved to Augusta, Georgia. Daniel O'Sullivan was a Confederate soldier, enlisting as a member of the Fifth Georgia Volunteer Infantry, but shortly afterward became a member of the famous T. J. (Stonewall) Jackson Brigade, and served in that command until the close of the war as a lieutenant and brevet captain. In 1865 he moved from Augusta, Georgia, to Shelbyville, Kentucky, and for many years was in business there as a merchant tailor.

Michael O'Sullivan was six years of age when he came to Shelbyville. His early education was acquired in Professor Wilson's private school there and in St. Joseph's College at Bardstown. Among his schoolmates were the late Maj. Gen. J. Franklin Bell, the late Thomas Grayston Jones, and the late Charles Grasty, formerly editor of the Baltimore Sun and now an official of the New York Times. Mr. O'Sullivan graduated at Bardstown in 1880, and for a number of years his active business relations were as a merchant tailor.

In 1904 he bought a somewhat depleted plant and other accessories of the Shelby Sentinel, and has since given his undivided attention to building it up into a local newspaper. Under his management the Sentinel has enjoyed its greatest prosperity, has a large circulation, and is one of the best equipped weekly newspaper plants in Kentucky.

Mr. O'Sullivan is a democrat of the old school. Only once has he sought political honors. In 1890 he was elected superintendent of schools from Shelby County to the Legislature, and the one term he was member of that body proved his fitness and thorough qualifications for public leadership, though he declined any further office. He has been active nevertheless in the councils of the party, serving as a committeeman.

Mr. O'Sullivan is a member of the Catholic Church and a member of the Knights of Columbus. In 1889 he married Miss Ella McGann, who survived him October 3, 1921, on the thirty-second anniversary of their marriage. Mr. O'Sullivan has two sons, Daniel M. J. and James M. O'Sullivan. The son Daniel, now associated with his father in the newspaper business, was a second lieutenant in the army, trench mortar battery, and saw overseas duty during the World war. The son James was in the United States Navy and is now a member of the firm of the Strand moving picture theater at Shelbyville.

Gayle Prather. Among the men of Kentucky who have worked their way to positions of importance through native talent, capacity for painstaking labor, natural equipment for their calling and thorough and constant study and training, one who has become popularly known is Gayle Prather, formerly superintendent of public schools of Clarkson and now connected with the Grayson County State Bank of Leitchfield. Many years of Mr. Prather's career were devoted to the calling of the educator, and his career has been one of steady and well-merited advancement. After locating at Clarkson he contributed greatly to the advancement and elevation of the school system and facilities, and at the same time gained and held the confidence, respect and esteem of teachers, parents and pupils.

Mr. Prather was born April 17, 1887, on a farm in Owen County, Kentucky, a son of Judge T. O. and Merzimac (Thornsherry) Prather. His grandfather, James Prather, was born in Virginia, and for many years followed the vocation of a distiller, and died in Owen County, Kentucky, when his son T. O. was still young. T. O. Prather has resided in Owen County all his life, and is now the owner of a flourishing lumber business at Owenton, as well as of important agricultural interests in Owen County. He has been prominent and influential in public affairs, having served formerly as a magistrate for twelve years and as county judge of Owen County four years, and is still a leader of the democratic party in his locality. An active supporter of the Baptist Church, he was moderator of the Owen Baptist Association for ten years. Judge Prather married Merrimac Thornsherry, who was born in Owen County in 1860, and they have had six children: Arthur, Carrie and Sebree, who all died young; Gayle; Bettie, residing with her parents, is the widow of Owen Simpson, who at the time of his death was connected with the Queen City Club, Cincinnati, Ohio; and W. E., a merchant and school teacher of Owen County.

Gayle Prather received his primary education in the rural schools of Owen County, and subsequently attended the Owenton High School until the senior year. Later he took a course at the Eastern State Normal School, Richmond, Kentucky, in which he was graduated in 1905. Since that time he has been a teacher, and at the present time possesses a teacher's life certificate. Mr. Prather's educational labors commenced when he was eighteen years of age. At that time he was given a school in the rural districts of Owen County, where he taught for three years, and his next position was that of principal of schools of South Portsmouth, Kentucky, where he remained one year. He first came to Clarkson in 1909, as principal of schools, continuing as such three years, and then went to Caneville, this state, in a like capacity and for a like period. Returning to Clarkson in 1915, he afterward occupied the position of superintendent of schools, both graded and high, and had six teachers and 300 pupils under his supervision, and continued to hold this position until he assumed the duties of his present capacity. He is still a popular and important factor in elevating the standards of education at Clarkson. He is a valued and interested member of the Kentucky Educational Association.

Mr. Prather resigned from his position as head of the Clarkson High School on January 1, 1922, to accept a position with the Grayson County State Bank, Leitchfield, Kentucky, which he now occupies. This honor came to him because of his popularity among the school people of the county. This bank is the oldest bank in Grayson County, the most popular institution of its kind in the state. Its resources are more than $500,000, with a capital stock of $25,000 and a surplus of $20,000. This bank has, besides Mr. Prather, an active president, two active vice presidents and two active directors.

Mr. Prather is a democrat and has taken an active part in local affairs, having been a member of the Town Council. He is a deacon in the Baptist Church, and as a fraternalist holds membership in Wilhelm Lodge No. 730, F. and A. M. His pleasant modern residence, which he owns, is located on North Patterson Street. Mr. Prather took an active part in all local war activities in Grayson County, helping in all the drives, buying war bonds, stamps, and contributing to the various organizations to the extent of his means. He was also chairman of the Red Cross, United War Relief and Liberty Loan campaigns, and devoted much time to the cause.

In 1900, in Grayson County, Mr. Prather was united in marriage with Miss Pansy Witten, daughter of H. E. and A. M. Witten, of Grayson County, and they owned a valuable property in the vicinity of Clarkson, where he makes his home. Mr. and Mrs. Prather are the parents of five children: Fay, born November 7, 1910; Ruth, born August 15, 1912; Mabel, born October 2, 1914; Gayle Jr., born December 17, 1917; and Gordon, born July 17, 1920.

Efdorl L. Walters. The youth compelled to make his own way in the world, without the aiding influence of family or other advantages, should receive encouragement from the career of Edford L. Walters, cashier of the First National Bank of Jenkins. Left an orphan in childhood, Mr. Walters was compelled to gain his own education to a large extent, and his boyhood and youth were filled with hard and continuous struggle.
His success has been entirely his own, and has been all the more gratifying and satisfactory because it has been self gained.

Mr. Walters was born on a farm near Paintsville, Johnson County, Kentucky, July 29, 1891, a son of John C. and Nancy Ann (Arrowood) Walters, and a member of a family which settled at an early day in the Flat Gap community. His grandfather was Shady Walters, who followed farming for many years in Johnson County, and this was also the vocation of John C. Walters, who died when thirty-eight years of age, in May, 1891, two months before the birth of his son Edford L. Mrs. Walters followed her husband to the grave seven years later.

The Walters family are represented by eight children, of whom four sons and a daughter are now living, Edford L. Walters, following the death of his mother, went to live on the farm of an elder brother, W. J. Much of his time was demanded on the farm in the hard work of producing crops, but the youth was determined to secure an education, and after attending the public school at Paintsville he pursued a course at Sandy Valley Seminary at that place, now known as the John C. C. Mayo College. He also attended Hazel Green Academy in Wolfe County, and likewise obtained a commercial training by attending a business college at Bowling Green. In the meantime he had been working faithfully on the farm of his brother, and also had experience working in the coal mines. With the preparation secured through attendance at business college he entered the bank, at Paintsville, and worked his way to officerhip and employment in the Paintsville National Bank, where for some time he acted in the capacity of bookkeeper. Five years later he became cashier in the McRoberts Bank at Fleming, Letcher County, and remained in that position until the fall of 1917, when he was called to Jenkins to become cashier of the First National Bank, a post which he has since retained. Mr. Walters is methodical in his habits and practical to his years, is a promoter of stable and conservative interests, and as a citizen and banker maintains standards in keeping with the best welfare of the community.

In 1916 Mr. Walters was united in marriage with Miss Eufah Fitzpatrick, daughter of John Fitzpatrick, of East Point, Johnson County, Kentucky, and to this union there has been born one daughter, Julia Mariato.

Mr. and Mrs. Walters are members of the Jenkins Baptist Church, of which he is treasurer. He belongs to the Blue Lodge and Chapter of Masonry at Paintsville, and to the Commandery and Shrine at Ashland. His political tendencies cause him to support the democratic party.

LEON B. STEPHAN. In his work as a teacher and school superintendent Leon B. Stephan has rendered a service which can not be over estimated. Children are naturally imitative, and when they have constantly before them an example of upright, honorable Christian manhood, it is but natural that they should strive to reproduce in their own lives the qualities they learn to admire. Being a born teacher, Mr. Stephan not only possesses the faculty of imparting knowledge, but of inspiring others and influencing them very favorably.

Mr. Stephan, who was formerly connected with the city school system of Louisville, and is now superintendent of the schools at Jenkins in Eastern Kentucky, was born at Huntington, Indiana, March 12, 1884, son of George and Mary (Bickel) Stephan, both of whom survive, he being sixty-five and she sixty-three. They make their home at Huntington, Indiana, where for eighteen years George Stephan was engaged in teaching in grade schools. For four years he served as county treasurer, and for the same length of time he was one of the township trustees. At present he is living retired. Both he and his wife belong to the Reformed Church. They had seven children born to them, six sons and one daughter, and all survived but one son.

After being graduated from the Huntington High School in 1903 Professor Stephan took the regular course in the Indiana State University at Bloomington, and was graduated therefrom in 1908 with the degrees of Bachelor of Arts and in 1913 as Master of Arts. At intervals during 1903 to 1908 he was engaged in teaching at Huntington. Following his graduation from the University he was professor of languages at the University of New Mexico, Albuquerque, for five years. For five years more he was engaged in teaching languages at a boys school at Louisville, Kentucky, and then was made assistant superintendent of Louisville schools, in 1910. He was later appointed superintendent by Mr. Huntington, and was thus enabled to carry out his life work.

Mr. Stephan's first marriage was in 1908 by the late Mrs. Julia Mariano, a daughter of Lewis Mariano, in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and they have seven children, six sons and one daughter, all of whom are living and are engaged in various lines of work. In 1914 Mr. Stephan was united in marriage with Mrs. Minnie E. Stephan, a daughter of Dr. George R. Mariano, in the First Christian Church of Huntington.

LEWIS E. HARVIE, a prominent lawyer at Whitesburg, has for the past seventeen or eighteen years represented in a legal capacity many of the large industrial corporations in Eastern Kentucky.

He comes of an old and honored Virginia family and was born at Danville, Virginia, January 29, 1878, son of Dr. Lewis E. and Martha (Rutherford) Harvie. Both parents were of Scotch ancestry. John Harvie came to America in 1772. He was King's Council and attorney for Lord Fairfax in Virginia. Both the Harvie and Rutherford families owned extensive tracts of land in the vicinity of Richmond, Virginia. Members of the Harvie family fought as soldiers for American independence. The mother of the Whitesburg attorney is still living at Danville, at the age of seventy-five. John Harvie, who died in 1817, at the age of seventy-five, acquired his early education in the Virginia Military Institute and in 1861 enlisted in Stonewall Jackson's Brigade. He was a lieutenant during the Virginia campaigns, and was wounded during the retreat from Gettysburg and taken prisoner. He spent one year on Johnson's Island before his exchange, and then after a furlough rejoined the army and for the last weeks of the war was engaged in scout duty for Gen. Joseph E. Johnston in the Carolinas. Following the war he took up the study of medicine at the Virginia Medical College at Richmond, and from 1870 enjoyed a high standing in the profession at Danville. For many years he was a member of the Virginia State Board of Health.

Lewis E. Harvie was one of a family of four sons and six daughters, all living. He spent three years in the Danville Military Institute and completed his law work in the Western Reserve University at Cleveland. He graduated in 1903, and in the same year came to Hazard, Kentucky, as representative of the Tennis Coal Company. He did much abstract of title work for coal lands for this company and other interests. In 1910 Mr. Harvie removed to Whitesburg, and for the past ten years has been associated in practice with Jesse Morgan. During the World war he was president of the Draft Board of Letcher County. Mr. Harvie is unmarried.

CHARLES H. BURTON. The industrial development of Eastern Kentucky has attracted here a number of men from other states and localities with established records of achievement and success in business and professional affairs. One of them is Charles H. Burton, civil engineer and attorney, who for the past ten years has been a resident of Whitesburg in Letcher County and has been an active spirit in the development of that locality.

Mr. Burton was born at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, November 12, 1865, son of Charles W. and Helen (Walker) Burton, natives of Chautauqua County, New York. His father was born in 1827 and died in Cedar Rapids at the age of seventy-seven. His mother died in 1910, aged seventy. He was educated in that city, but by his own efforts acquired a thoroughly liberal education, finishing in the Fredonia Academy of New York. He was a noted mathematician, and for several years taught at Fredonia and later went to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, as superintendent of schools. He was head of the school system of that progressive city for a number of years, and he also served on the City Council and as justice of the peace. He was a Universalist in religion and his wife was a Baptist. Fraternally he was master of the Masonic Lodge at Cedar Rapids and high priest of the Royal Arch Chapter, and was a republican in politics. Both the Burton and Walker families were of English descent.

Charles H. Burton was one of a family of three sons and two daughters. He graduated from the Cedar Rapids High School at the age of eighteen, and followed this with a civil engineering course at the University of Iowa, being granted his degree at the age of twenty-three. In his profession as an engineer he was for a time employed in railway construction work in Iowa, and subsequently went to Lake Charles, Louisiana, where he remained for a time in the employ of L. S. Burton, ed. of the City Council and as justice of the peace. He was a Universalist in religion and his wife was a Baptist. Fraternally he was master of the Masonic Lodge at Cedar Rapids and high priest of the Royal Arch Chapter, and was a republican in politics. Both the Burton and Walker families were of English descent.

Mr. Burton came to Whitesburg, Kentucky, in 1910 as legal representative of the Swift Coal & Timber Company, owners of 22,000 acres of land in this section. While his time has been quite fully taken up by the affairs of the corporation, he has been generous of his time and talents in behalf of local improvements. He has been a member of the school board during the building period and since, has served on the town council, and was city engineer.

Mr. Burton in 1900 married Miss Hannah Blowers, of Iowa City. They have two adopted daughters, Blanch and Ethel Reese. Mrs. Burton is a member of the Presbyterian Church. He is affiliated with the Delta Tau Delta and Phi Delta Phi college fraternities, the Masonic Lodge and Woodmen of the World, and is an independent republican.

George M. Roberts. Eight miles to the northwest of Mount Sterling, Montgomery County, is situated the excellent farm owned and occupied by this sterling citizen, whose progressive policies and well directed activities have brought to him substantial success, as is attested by his ownership of a well improved farm estate.

Mr. Roberts was born in Platte County, Missouri, December 30, 1859, but is a representative of staunch old Kentucky families, his parents, James Y. and Susan (Stofer) Roberts, having both been born in this state—the mother having been a native of Montgomery County. After their marriage the parents continued their residence in the old Blue Grass State until 1866, when they removed to Platte County, Missouri, where their father purchased a farm. James Y. Roberts there continued his activities as a farmer for several years, and he then sold his farm property and returned with his family to Kentucky. For two years the home was maintained in Bourbon County, and Mr. Roberts then purchased a farm in Montgomery County, this old homestead having continued his place of residence until his death, and his wife likewise having died there. Both were earnest members of the Christian Church, and Mr. Roberts held membership in the Masonic fraternity, both Asbury and Fraternal dental, and while a resident of Missouri he served as a member of the State Senate. Of the seven children only three are living, George M., of this review, Ann, who is the widow of S. S. Priest and who resides at Mount Sterling, and Emma, of Mount Sterling.

George M. Roberts was still an infant at the time when his parents returned from Missouri to Kentucky, and he was reared on the old home farm in Montgomery County, his educational advantages having been those of the rural schools of the locality and period. He early gained practical experience in all details of farm enterprise, and for a period of several years he owned and conducted the Sidewell general store. In December, 1875, he married Miss Emma G. (Walkers) Roberts, and shortly afterward they established their home on a farm which is an integral part of his present valuable landed estate of 480 acres, the greater part of this tract having been secured through the means of the financial success which Mr. Roberts has won for himself. He is aligned in the ranks of the democratic party, but has had no desire for public office. He and his wife are the parents of four children: Ethel, James, Mark and Paul. Ethel was one of the gallant young patriots who represented Kentucky in the nation's military service in the late World war, he having been a member of the Aviation Corps and having been in active service in France for some time prior to the close of the war.

Harry G. Hoffman, president of the Chamber of Commerce of Mount Sterling and Montgomery County, is vouchsafed this important official prerogative by reason of his secure standing as a progressive business man and public-spirited citizen of his native city and county. His birth was on the 2d of April, 1877. He is the son of Albert and Laura (Gill) Hoffman, and that the family name has long been identified with the history of Montgomery County is shown in that fact that the father likewise was born at Mount Sterling, on the 8th of March, 1847, the mother having been born at Olympia Springs, Bath County, on the 20th of April, 1848. Albert Hoffman was a son of William and Julia Ann Jordon (Wilkers) Hoffman, both of whom were born at Mount Sterling, where the respective families were founded in the early pioneer period of Montgomery County history. William Hoffman became one of the prominent and influential citizens of his native county, where he served as cashier for a number of years for the Chase Bank at Mount Sterling, besides which he here established in 1847 the pioneer insurance agency which was long conducted under his name and until his death, his son A. Hoffman having succeeded him in the business and continued its executive head until he too passed to the life eternal in 1919, when he bequeathed it to his sons, J. M. and Harry G. Albert Hoffman was one of the substantial business men and honored citizens of Mount Sterling at the time of his death, and in this city his widow still maintains her home.

In the public schools of Mount Sterling Harry G. Hoffman continued his studies until he had duly profited by the advantages of the high school, and thereafter he became actively associated with the insurance business conducted by his father and founded by his grandfather, as already noted in this context. He continued his active alliance with the original Hoffman Insurance Agency until 1906, when he proved himself well fortified for broader activity in the same field of enterprise by taking up a general agency work. Now he has the state agency in Kentucky for the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company of California, and he has developed the business of this corporation most effectively since assuming his present position. Mr. Hoffman maintains an independent attitude in politics, is affiliated with the local Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic fraternity, and he and his wife hold membership in the Christian Church. The home of Mr. Hoffman is one of the most attractive in Mount Sterling, the residence being situated on a tract of five acres on North Maysville Street.

On the 23rd of October, 1900, was recorded the marriage of Mr. Hoffman and Miss Virginia Grubbs, who likewise is a native of Montgomery County and who is a graduate of Washington College. Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman have two children: Thomas G., who was born July 9, 1906, is a member of the class of 1922 in the Mount Sterling High School; and Laura G., who was born January 7, 1908, likewise is a student in the public schools of the home city.

It may be noted that the maternal grandparents of Mr. Hoffman were Harrison and Georgia Ann (Landsdowne) Gill, and that the latter was a half-sister of Richard Menifee, a distinguished ague in Kentucky history.

Thomas J. Moberly is a representative of an old and honored Kentucky family and is one of the alert and successful farmers of the younger generation in Montgomery County, where he is engaged in progressive agricultural and live-stock enterprise on the old home farm which was the place of his birth and which is situated five and one-half miles northwest of Mount Sterling, the county seat. Here he was born on the 6th of September, 1885, a son of James G. and Anna (Whitsett) Moberly, the former of whom was born in Madison County, this state, in 1832, and the latter of whom was born in Montgomery County, in 1852. James Moberly, on whose farm thejong Mr. Moberly is descended, removed to Montgomery County, and he was reared on the farm now owned and occupied by J. C. Graves, of whom individual mention is made on other pages of this work. On this farm he continued to reside for the first three years after his marriage, and he then left the old dwelling and removed to the house which he erected on the Paris Turnpike, where he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives and where he long held precedence as one of the successful farmers of this section of the county. He was a democrat in politics, and both he and his wife held membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Of their six children five are living at the time of this writing, in 1921: Grace is the wife of W. E. Farriss; Miss Mary was the next in order of birth and still resides in the old home; she is Miss Mary C. Nell; is deceased. Thomas J. is the immediate subject of this review; Katie is the wife of Roy S. Green; and Mattie is the wife of E. R. Waid.

Thomas J. Moberly supplemented the discipline of the public schools by attending the Kentucky Wesleyan College at Winchester, and from his youth to the present time he has been actively associated with the varied operations of his old home farm, of which he owns 180 acres. He takes a deep interest not only in furthering the prestige of his native county as a center of agricultural and live-stock industry, but is also loyal and public-spirited as a citizen. He is a democrat in political allegiance, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

December 31, 1912, recorded the marriage of Mr. Moberly and Miss Belle Swetmann, who was born in Bath County, this state, July 20, 1891, a daughter of Neri and Mary (Elam) Swetmann. Mrs. Moberly received excellent educational advantages, including those of a private collegiate institute, in which she was graduated prior to her marriage; she had been a successful and popular teacher in the schools of Montgomery County. Mr. and Mrs. Moberly have three children: James, Jeanne and Evaline.

Stephen Combs, Jr. A young lawyer of exceptional ability, Judge Combs has already impressed himself as one of the representative younger members of the bar of this and the neighboring counties, and that he has his full share of popular confidence and esteem in the district where he is best known is shown by the fact that he is now serving as county treasurer of Letcher County, besides which he made an excellent, though brief, record on the bench of the County Court. He is one of the vital and popular citizens of Whitesburg, and aside from his official duties as county treasurer he has secure vantage-ground as a successful lawyer.

On the old family homestead of his paternal grandfather, a property now owned by his father, Stephen Combs was born on the 24th of January, 1891, this ancestral place being situated on Smoot Creek, Letcher County. He is a son of Wesley and Mary (Breeding) Combs, the former of whom was likewise born on the old homestead farm, in 1856, and the latter of whom was born on Breeding Creek, in Harlan County, Kentucky, she having been familiarly known as Polly and her death having occurred December 9, 1909, when she was fifty-five years of age. Wesley Combs, who owns and still resides on the old homestead farm which was the place of his birth, is a son of Wesley Combs, Sr., who was born in Perry County and who became one of the substantial farmers and highly esteemed citizens of the county. He is represented as a gallant soldier of the Union in the Civil war, and he and other men of the family having been staunchly arrayed in the ranks of the republican party.

Wesley and Mary (or Polly) Combs became the parents of thirteen children, of whom ten are living: Louisa, who became the wife of Solomon Frazier, died at the age of forty-five years; Dr. John W. is engaged in the successful practice of medicine at Brownell, Kansas; James is a progressive farmer of Letcher County and also conducts a general store at Dalna, a station on the line of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad; William is a merchant at Fleming, Letcher County; Minta is the wife of S. H. Frazier, a farmer near Dalna; Harlan remains with his father on the old home farm; Minnlee is the widow of H. C. Frazier and resides at Dalna; Malinda is the wife of H. Y. Brown, a popular teacher in the schools of Letcher County; Charles was a student in a dental college in the City of Louisville at the time of his death, when twenty-two years of age; Stephen, of this review, was the next in order of birth; Lorinda died at the age of twenty-three years; Bradley and Blaine are twins, the former being, in 1921, a student in the Kentucky Normal Institute at Kinter, Indiana; but the latter engaged the activities of the home farm of his father. Four of the sons were in the nation's service in connection with the great World War. Dr. John W. Combs entered the medical corps of the army and in the same gained commission as captain at Camp Ogletorpe, Georgia. Stephen, to whom this sketch is dedicated, attended the Second Officers' Training Camp at Fort Smith, Arkansas, and prior to entrance into the Indiana public schools though he was honorably discharged from the service on account of physical disability, he was assigned to special detached duty at Whitesburg, judicial center of his native county, where he was associated with the work of the local draft board, and later he was received at Camp Taylor, where he was stationed at the time of the signing of the armistice. Bradley, one of the twin brothers, was receiving training at Camp Pike at the time when he received his honorable discharge. Blaine, the other twin, was in service at Camp Taylor and at Hattiesburg, Mississippi, and later he was in one of the military camps in the State of New York, besides doing guard duty in shipyards in that state. He was at Camp Sheridan at the time when he received his discharge.

Judge Stephen Combs attended the school in his home district, later attended the public schools of Whitesburg, and thereafter he pursued higher studies in the Mountain Training School at Hindman, under the direction of Prof. E. W. Law. Upon preparation for his chosen profession he entered the Jefferson School of Law in the City of Louisville, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1912 and from which he received his degree of Bachelor of Laws, with virtually coincident admission to the bar of his native state. Prior to this he had tested his pedagogic powers by teaching in a stalwart, under the superintendence of Col. Peggie Camp, he took a seat in the legislature, and was appointed to the bench. In 1917 he was appointed to the bench, and in 1921, he was elected to the Senate of the State of Kentucky.

In his service on the bench continued about one year, and within his administration of this judicial office the voters of the county manifested in an electoral way their sanction of the issuing of road bonds by the county to the value of $300,000. This was initiated as an effective means of constructive work in the county, and was undertaken in conjunction with the construction of roads by the Kentucky State Roads Commission. The voter approved this work, and in 1921 the Supreme Court of the State of Kentucky, by a majority of three to two, held publican party, is serving in 1921 as senior warden of the Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons at Whitesburg, his Masonic affiliations including membership in the Commandery of Knights Templars at Winchester and the Order of the Mystic Shrine at Lexington, besides which he holds membership in the Knights of Pythias, the Order of Freeman, and the Order of Odd Fellows.

December 29, 1917, recorded the marriage of Judge Combs and Miss Charlotte Fields, who was born and reared in Letcher County, a daughter of M. C. Fields. Mrs. Combs and her infant daughter died on the 9th of December, 1918. She was a woman of culture and gracious personality, and prior to her marriage had been a popular teacher in the schools of her native county, she having attended school at Berea and also at the Eastern Kentucky Normal at Richmond.

Thomas D. Burgess, M. D., is a leading physician and surgeon of Lawrence County and controls a large and representative practice, with residence at Louisa, the county seat.

The Burgess family in America is of English origin. The Southern branch of the family was established by William Burgess, who first settled in Virginia, and on account of his religious belief he went to the South River Colony in Maryland in 1649. The official records of 1648 bear evidence that he was a Quaker, as in that year he declined to take the necessary oath to become justice. He represented the people in the House of Burgesses in 1659, and soon appears as high sheriff and justice of Anne Arundel County. Later he was commissioned as member of the council of the province, and when in 1684 Lord Baltimore sailed for England he appointed Hon. William Burgess as deputy-governor and lieutenant general of the province during his absence. He died in the year 1688, leaving a large family of children. Many of the Burgesses came back to Virginia from Maryland, whence their ancestor had fled because of being a Quaker. Many of his descendants have chosen the same faith of their ancestor and followed the persecuted Quakers to other states. During the Revolutionary war Burgesses lived in both Tidewater and Piedmont, Virginia, and took part in the war. They spread in settlement to different parts of the state, and one, John Meredith Burgess, came from Albemarle County as one of the early pioneers of the Kanawha Valley.

John Meredith Burgess married about 1812 Judy Cobb, daughter of Fleming Cobb, who was a young of thirteen years and a resident of the region near Upham, from near Richmond to the Kanawha Valley in 1781. Judy Cobb was the granddaughter of Leonard Morris, the first permanent white settler in the Kanawha Valley, and a builder and protector of forts in the valley against the ravages of the Shawnee Indians during the Revolutionary war.

Fleming Cobb Burgess was the youngest of the five children of John Meredith Burgess and Judy (Cobb) Burgess. He married in 1835 Adelaide Wood, of Kanawha County, who was a descendant of the old Wood family of Virginia. He was a land owner and a timberman, but more successful as a farmer. He reared a large family of children.

11. James Washington Burgess was the eldest child in the family of Fleming Cobb Burgess and Adelaide (Wood) Burgess. He was born in 1836. He went to the University of St. Louis, Missouri, in 1859, and at the conclusion of his degree of Doctor of Medicine. The year before, he had married Elizabeth Ann breathtakingly, to whom he was a great grandson of Judge Burgess. He was a descendant of a line of clergymen of the Baptist faith. The original Harmon family of the South came from England and lived for a time near the Moravian settlement in North Carolina, whence they came to the valley of Virginia. Elizabeth Ann (Harmon) Burgess traces her ancestry from the Episcopal Church of her native Virginia, and from her great-grandparents John Hoover and Peggie (O'Brien) Hoover, of Lee County, Virginia, the former of whom was born in Germany and the latter in Ireland. Mr. and Mrs. Burgess lived near St. Albans until 1887, when they removed to Huntington, West Virginia, and in 1894 and the latter in 1921. James W. Burgess and Elizabeth (Harmon) Burgess were members of the Ministerial and Baptist Church, Huntington, West Virginia, and in politics and was deeply interested in community affairs of the state, especially in the maintaining of high standards of education. They had the following children: Virginia Evelyn is the wife of Dr. G. A. Shumate, of Glenlyn, Virginia; Ada Margaret is a resident of Huntington, West Virginia; Frances C., with the title of Mrs. E. S. Sherman, of Chicago, is a resident of Marshall College at Huntington, West Virginia. Mrs. Burgess has been a teacher and has been a member of the Marshall College Board of Trustees. She was a teacher and has been a member of the Marshall College Board of Trustees. She was a teacher and has been a member of the Marshall College Board of Trustees.

Dr. Thomas Dickinson Burgess was born in Kanawha County, West Virginia, December 15, 1869, and gained his early education in the public schools of his native county and then continued his studies in Marshall College at Huntington, and attended the University of West Virginia, in 1890, and in 1900 he completed an effective post-graduate course in the Post-Graduate College in the City of New York. He has specialized in surgery during the greater part of his professional career, and since receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine at the University of West Virginia, he has been successively at Gilbert, Mingo County, West Virginia, for three years; at Matewan, Mingo County, that state, for fourteen years; and at Louisa, Kentucky, since that time. He has been for many years local surgeon for the Norfolk & Western Railroad, both while residing at Matewan, West Virginia, and since establishing his home at Louisa. During his fourteen years of residence at Matewan the doctor was retained as the official physician and surgeon for fourteen coal-mining companies in that section of West Virginia. Since coming to Louisa he has held the position of local surgeon for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad. At Matewan he conducted a private hospital. He was appointed surgeon by Governor Greame during his fourteen years' residence at Matewan, West Virginia, was the first surgeon in Mingo County to perform a successful operation for penetrating gunshot wound of the abdomen, also the first in Mingo and adjoining counties to perform the successful operation for the removal of large Ovarian Cysts and likewise the first surgeon in Wyoming County, West Virginia, to perform the operation. Of regions of pregnancy and of Cesarean Section in Pike County, Kentucky, the first of this series of major surgical operations having been performed by him in April, 1896. This pioneer surgeon of this vicinity was performed under extreme disadvantage in the private homes of individuals in the rural districts before any hospital had ever been established closer than 100 miles of this vicinity. His practice since his removal to Louisa has been extended to all parts of that county and to other sections of Eastern Kentucky, West Virginia and Virginia, especially in connection with surgery, in which he has gained reputation that far transcends mere local limitations. At Matewan he served for twelve years as a member of the city council and the board of health, and he has given four years of effective and loyal service as a member of the city council of Louisa, and as chair of its committee on municipal improvements he has been specially progressive and has been a strong advocate of the various measures that have been advanced for the general good of the community, especially in the excellent work that has been accomplished in the paving of city streets.

Doctor Burgess is actively identified with the Lawrence County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. His political allegiance is given to the republican party; he is affiliated with the Master Masons Blue Lodge at Louisa, Kentucky, Chapter of the Masonic Fraternity at Wayne, West Virginia, the Commandery of Knights Templars at Ashland, Boyd County, where he likewise maintains affiliation with the El Hala Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is a member also of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Doctor Burgess is one of the directors of the Louisa National Bank and an elder in the Mingo and the Old Testament Churches of Eastern Kentucky, as well as the owner of other valuable real estate in other sections of Kentucky and West Virginia.

In April, 1890, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Burgess and Miss Willie Jane Burgess, daughter of Thomas Jefferson Burgess and Onolda Z. (Garred) Burgess of Gallup, Lawrence County, Kentucky, the former a descendant of the Burgesses of Albemarle County, Virginia, and the latter an eminent land holder and farmer of the Big Sandy Valley, the latter tracing her ancestry through the Garred (also called Garrard, Garrett or Jarrett) family of French origin to James Garrard, fourth governor of Kentucky, and the Graham (or Greame) family, who are of Scotch-Irish descent, to the pioneer settlers of Augusta County, Virginia, one of whom, William Graham, son of Michael Graham, was the founder and for twenty years rector of Liberty Hall Academy, where also William Graham, the son of the Augusta Academic, and still later became Washington and Lee University. He was educated at Princeton College numbering among his classmates James Madison, afterward President of the United States, Aaron Burr and Henry Lee, father of Robert E. Lee, and was a personal friend of George Washington. William Graham's ancestry goes back to Scotland, to Richard Graham (or Greame), known as Viscount Preston, who was secretary of state of Scotland under King James, was leader of the House of Commons and Earl of Montrose about the year 1648; also to James Graham (Greame) of Claverhouse, Viscount of Dundee, who was leader of the Clans of the Highlands of Scotland and who was the general in command of King James' army at the battle of Killkrankie about the close of King James' reign when William Prince of Orange was crowned King; also to Malcolm Graham, the first Gordon, who was buried in the Six Chapel with a golden chain to Ellen Douglas his King James II, this Malcolm Greame being the same person referred to by Sir Walter Scott in his "Lady of the Lake." The Greame Coat of Arms being blazoned: quarterly: first and fourth or, on a chief sable three escallops of the field (for Greame). Second and third Argent, three roses gules, barbed and seeded proper (for Montrose) Crest: an Eagle, wings hovering, perched upon a heron, lying upon its back, the head and neck erect Motto: N'Oubliez—Do not forget. The Garred Coat Armor is complete with Shield, Crest, Motto and Supporters. It is blazoned: Argent, a saltire gules. Crest: A lion rampant, crowned, or motto: En Dieu Est mon Esperance. The supporters are lions rampant, crowned or, each holding a spear.

Of the four children of Doctor and Mrs. Burgess three were living: Elizabeth Ann, aged nineteen, Cornelius Jefferson, aged fifteen, and Jane, aged nine years. Thomas Dickinson, Jr., the second child, died in early childhood. Elizabeth Ann, who is a second year student at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, showed exceptional musical talent at the age of four years, when she began singing solos at church socials at Matewan, West Virginia, and at the age of fourteen was the soloist at several of the largest Red Cross meetings of the citizens of Lawrence County, Kentucky, during the engagement of the United States in the World War. The activities of the citizens to raise financial support for the United War Work Relief Fund, at which meetings, covering a brief period, nearly $6,000 were subscribed by the tear-dimmed-eyed patriotic citizens of a community not accustomed to such form of solicitation, but who stood, both young and old, so loyally by every interest of the Stars and Stripes. Doctor and Mrs. Burgess held membership in the Odd Fellows and Masonic Orders.

The attractive family home, covering a space of four acres in the City of Louisa, is a center of gracious and unostentatious hospitality.

John F. Mark is not only one of the representative farmers of the younger generation in Montgomery County but also has the interesting distinction of making the old homestead farm of the Mark family the stage of his progressive and enterprising life. The excellent farm is situated eight miles northwest of Mount Sterling, the county seat, on the Mount Sterling and Paris Turnpike, one of the best thoroughfares of the countryside of this section of the state. On this farm John Fisher Mark was born on the 13th of January, 1869, a son of Benjamin F. and Fannie (Roberts) Mark. The farm was likewise the old homestead farm of the following: John F. Mark is a son of John and Nancy (Combs) Mark, and the father's father, Robert Mark, was the founder of the family in Montgomery County, he having come to Kentucky from Virginia and having been one of the early settlers in Montgomery County, where he acquired a large tract of land and developed much of the same to productivity. Here he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives. John Mark became likewise one of the substantial farmers of this county, where he and his wife continued to reside until their deaths. Their children were twelve in number, namely: Fisher, Jason, William, Benjamin F. Rubie, James, Mary, Belle, Susan, Lizzie, Emma and Mug.

Benjamin F. Mark was reared on the old home farm, and had the advantages of the public schools of the locality. After his marriage he settled on the farm now
John M. Cook. The bar of Letcher County is notable for its high standard, and among its representative members of the younger generation is John M. Cook. Additional interest attaches to his career by reason of the fact that he is a native son of this county. His practice is largely in the civil department, and he maintains his home and professional headquarters at Whitesburg, the county seat.

Mr. Cook was born in the Rockhouse Creek district of Letcher County on the 28th of March, 1888, and is a son of Dr. Thomas A. and Elizabeth (Caudill) Cook, the former of whom was born in Scioto County, Ohio, in 1863, and the latter of whom was born in Letcher County, Kentucky, in the same year. Doctor Cook was a child at the time of his parents' removal to Kentucky, was reared to manhood in Letcher County, availed himself of the advantages of its schools and by his successful work as a teacher he provided the funds to defray the expenses of his course in the Louisville Medical College, since his graduation in which institution he has been successfully engaged in practice on Rockhouse Creek as one of the able and representative physicians and surgeons of Letcher County. He has been a member for many years of the board of examining surgeons of this county. Of the three children John M., of this sketch, is the eldest; Minerva is the wife of Rev. E. C. Watts, pastor of the Methodist Church at Lynch, Jackson County; and Alice died in childhood.

John M. Cook profited fully by the advantages of the schools of his native county, and after leaving his studies at the Whitesburg schools he entered Centre College at Danville, where he remained one year. Thereafter he was for a similar period a student in Transylvania University at Lexington, and his law course was taken in the law department of the University of Louisville. In the meanwhile he had given two years of effective service as a teacher in the public schools at Democrat, Letcher County, and in 1912 he was admitted to the bar. From that year until the early part of the year 1921 he was associated in practice with his brother, Joseph P. Lewis, in Whitesburg. Since severing this partnership alliance he has conducted an individual practice, with a clientele and business that indicate alike his ability and the popular estimate placed upon him in his old home county. In January, 1918, Mr. Cook became a private soldier in the United States Army and was sent to Camp Taylor for training for service in the trenches of the Western war. He was later transferred to Camp Beauregard, Louisiana, where he became a member of the one Hundred and Fifty-Fourth Infantry, which command he accompanied to France, his overseas service having been of eight months' duration. He was transferred to special duty in the payroll department of the American Expeditionary Forces, with which he was connected until his return to the United States, his honorable discharge having been granted in January, 1919, on Long Island, New York. He entered no plea for exemption when the nation became involved in the war, and has the satisfaction of knowing that he did his assigned part and was able to show his patriotism in the great struggle against despotism.

Mr. Cook is a vigorous advocate of the principles of the Republican party, is affiliated with the Blue Lodge and Chapter organizations of York Rite Masonry, and also with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and he and his wife are active members of the Presbyterian Church at Whitesburg.

In July, 1912, he solemnized the marriage of Mr. Cook and Miss Minnie Mullins, daughter of David C. Mullins, a well known citizen of Partridge, Letcher County, and the one child of this union is a daughter, Gertrude.

Garrett D. Sullivan has developed at Mount Sterling, Montgomery County, a substantial and prosperous business as a dealer in poultry and eggs, and the enterprise which he has thus established proves a valuable contribution to the commercial activities of this vigorous little city.

Mr. Sullivan was born in Mason County, Kentucky, April 23, 1860, and is a son of Garrett P. and Susan (Pierce) Sullivan, both likewise natives of that county, who both were born in the year 1838. The parents were reared and educated in their native county, the technical schooling having been limited, and there their marriage was solemnized. They continued their residence in Mason County until 1878, when they removed to Montgomery County, where the father purchased a farm near Grassy Lick. Mr. Sullivan was a man of energy and progressiveness, and was successful in his farm enterprise, in connection with which he had the distinction of being the first man to engage in the raising of tobacco in Montgomery County. He also became a successful buyer and shipper of tobacco, of which he was an authoritative judge, and he did much to advance the tobacco industry in this section of the state. It is interesting to note that his son Garrett D., immediately succeeded him in the business of buying both tobacco and hemp on the home farm, and thus the first in the county, the young man having risen at a specially early hour in the morning in order to assure himself of the honor of setting out these first plants. The father was one of the venerable and honored citizens of Montgomery County at the time of his death, in 1915, his wife having passed away in 1908. All of the six children still survive the parents, and the eldest of the number is Henry, who owns and resides upon the old homestead farm, which is one of the valuable places of Montgomery County; Joseph P. resides at Mount Sterling; Garrett D., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; William is a resident of Charleston, Illinois;
Mrs. Lillie Walden resides in the State of Tennessee; and Matie is the wife of Rev. Mr. Palmer, of Lincoln County, Kentucky.

Garrett D. Sullivan was reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm and was about eighteen years of age at the time of the family removal to Montgomery County. He attended school during the winter terms and aided in the work of the home farm until he had attained to his majority. He was engaged in farming in Clark County four years, and then returned to Montgomery County and engaged in the buying and selling of tobacco, with headquarters near Grassy Lick. He was thus engaged four years, and then resumed his active association with farm enterprise, in which he continued until 1888, when he established his residence in the town of Hardinsburg. He has since been successfully engaged in the poultry and egg business. He owns the well equipped building in which his business is conducted, and is the owner also of his pleasant home property at 24 North Sycamore Street. He is a staunch democrat in politics, but has had no desire for political activity or public office.

As a young man Mr. Sullivan wedded Miss Fannie King, and she died while they were residing in Clark County. This union has been without children. On the 3d of January, 1890, Mr. Sullivan was united in marriage with Miss Antha O'Rear, who was born in the State of Missouri, on the 10th of January, 1869, a daughter of Joseph and Mary D. O'Rear, both natives of Montgomery County, Kentucky, where the former was born in 1843 and the latter in 1847. The parents of Mrs. Sullivan, both natives of Kentucky, have since then returned to Montgomery County, Kentucky, where they have since maintained their home, both being members of the Presbyterian Church, as is also their daughter, Mrs. Sullivan. Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan have three children: Riggs, who was born May 16, 1894, was educated in the public schools and a business college, and is now married and a resident of Mount Sterling; Marjorie, who was born on April 10, 1902, is a graduate of the Mount Sterling High School and remains at the parental home, as does also Virginia, who was born February 15, 1907. Mr. Sullivan is one of the wide-awake and progressive business men of Mount Sterling; and in his home city he maintains affiliation with the Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Frank P. Boyd has been from his boyhood actively associated with the basic industries of agriculture and stockgrowing, and his early experience amply fortified him when he initiated independent operations in this connection. In addition to receiving the advantages of the public schools of his native county he attended and was graduated from the Kentucky Military Institute. He remained at the parental home until he had attained to his legal majority, and he has since been independently engaged in farm enterprise, in which his vigorous and well directed endeavors have brought him unequivocal success and a secure place as one of the representative exponents of this line of industry in Montgomery County.

Mr. Boyd is found closely aligned in the ranks of the democratic party, takes lively interest in community affairs and has served four years as magistrate of his precinct. At Mount Sterling he is affiliated with the Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and there he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In June, 1903, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Boyd and Miss Catherine Dickerson, who was born and reared in the neighborhood of Mount Sterling. They have one child, Carl B., who was born May 20, 1904, is, in 1921, a senior in the Augusta Academy at Augusta, Bracken County, Virginia.

Pascal Young Pursifull, M. D. Born and reared in Eastern Kentucky, Doctor Pursifull after graduating in medicine returned to the same section for his professional career and has gained enviable distinction in the field of surgery during his work at Whitesburg in Letcher County.

Doctor Pursifull was born near Pineville in Bell County, December 16, 1879, son of Mount and Orpha (Hurst) Pursifull. His grandfather was Matthew Pursifull. Mount Pursifull was a native of Bell County. His uncle, Henry Pursifull, was for twelve years county judge of Bell County. Mount Pursifull was associated with Judge Pursifull in the organization of the First National Bank of Pineville, a very strong financial institution. Mount Pursifull is also a civil engineer and surveyor by profession, and became a dealer in large tracts of land. It was his policy to buy up numerous small holdings, and concentrate them and dispose of the land in larger parcels. When only forty-seven when he died in 1898, through his business and other interests he had many important contributions to the substantial development of Bell County. For years as an incident to his other employment he filled the office of county surveyor. In young manhood he also taught school. His wife, Orpha Hurst, was the daughter of a Baptist minister whose home was in Claibourne County, Tennessee. She died a few months after her husband, being the mother of three sons and three daughters.

Doctor Pursifull was the oldest of the children. His early education was acquired at Rose Hill Academy in Virginia and he graduated from the Pineville High School. For one term he was a teacher. Not finding this occupation congenial, he began in 1901 the preparation for his present career in the Hospital Medical College at Louisville, where he graduated in 1904. He subsequently spent a year in special work in materia medica, surgery and general practice at the City Hospital at Louisville. The resident physician of that hospital was Dr. Ed Wilt, of Pineville, who had been Doctor Pursifull's schoolmate. They formed a partnership for practice at Pineville, remaining there one year, and came together to Whitesburg in 1906, where they were associated for another year. Since then Doctor Pursifull has been alone in his professional work, and has taken care of most of the surgical cases in this community. He served as county health officer and during the World war made the medical examina-
R. Monroe Fields. Character and ability have given to R. Monroe Fields a secure vantage-ground as one of the leading members of the bar of his native county, and this fact needs no further voucher than the statement that he served as commonwealth attorney for the district comprising Letcher and Pike counties, his home being at Whitesburg, judicial center of the county first named.

Mr. Fields was born in the King's Creek district of Letcher County, January 24, 1881, and is a representative of a family whose name has been long and worthily identified with the history of Eastern Kentucky. His grandfather, Rev. R. H. Fields, was a pioneer clergyman of the Baptist Church in this section of the state, and followed his work with consecrated devotion, his services as a minister having extended throughout many counties in this section of the state, and his labors having been arduous and self-sacrificing, in ministering in remote and isolated communities that were but little known and visited by the white man. He died in Pike County, Kentucky, in 1913. Rev. R. H. Fields served as a loyal soldier of the Union in the Civil War, was a stalwart republican in politics, served for a long period in the office of justice of the peace, and wielded wide and benignant influence. He was eighty-two years of age at the time of his death.

The inscription on the tombstone of the pioneer introduces this sketch as a son of Matthew C. and Rachel (Muslewhite) Fields, both of whom likewise were born and reared in Letcher County, where the father became a representative farmer and country merchant and where he served two terms as justice of the peace, both he and his wife being members of the Baptist Church. They now reside at Poor Fork, Harlan County, to which place they removed in 1919. Mr. Fields was born June 6, 1881, and his wife fifty-seven years at the time of this writing, in 1921. To them have been born eight sons and six daughters. One of the sons, Dr. D. M., is a physician at Poor Fork; Ira is a merchant at that place, and Benton there follows the trade of carpenter, while Hiram also resides at Poor Fork.

R. Monroe Fields is familiar with the advantages of the public schools of the neighborhood in which he was born, as is evident when it is stated that he gave four years of effective service as a teacher in the schools of his native county. He finally entered the law department of the University of Louisville, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1904, his admission to the bar of Southwestern Kentucky being practically coincident with his reception of the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He began practice at Whitesburg, and for four years here maintained a professional association with Felix G. Fields. In 1909 he was elected county attorney of his native county, serving one term of three years, and in this office he made so excellent a record as a prosecutor that he was a logical candidate for the position of commonwealth attorney of the district, comprising Letcher and Pike counties, to which he was elected in 1912 and reelected in 1915, filling this office until 1921. In this office Mr. Fields has given a most able administration and added greatly to his professional prestige, so that his name has been brought prominently into consideration in connection with candidacy for the bench of the Circuit Court. He is a republican, and has been prominent in the councils and campaign activities of the party in his section of the state. As a youth he became a member of the Baptist Church by his paternal grandfather on King's Creek, and he and his family have held membership in the Missionary Baptist Church of Whitesburg. In his home village Mr. Fields is affiliated with the Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic fraternity, and his chivalric affiliation is with the Commandery of Knights Templars at Winchester, besides which he is a member of the Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Lexington, and holds membership also in the Improved Order of Red Men and the Junior Order United American Mechanics.

The year 1905 recorded the marriage of Mr. Fields with Miss Florence Tyree, who was born and reared in Letcher County, a daughter of Samuel C. Tyree, who was formerly engaged in the practice of law in this county but who is now a clergyman of the Missionary Baptist Church and pastor of the church of this denomination at London, Laurel County. Mr. and Mrs. Fields have four children: Mabel, Glenn, Beulah and Hazel.

Bert C. Bach, M. D., who is established in the successful practice of his profession at Whitesburg, judicial center and metropolis of Letcher County, has gained place as one of the representative physicians and surgeons of the county and has developed a substantial practice. It is interesting to record that three of his brothers likewise are physicians and are achieving marked success in their profession, Dr. Arthur Bach being resident in the practice of his profession in Breathitt County, and Drs. Wilgus and Luther Bach being successful practitioners at Jackson, Breathitt County, where they also conducted a well equipped hospital. All of the brothers are graduates of the medical department of the University of Louisville.

Dr. Bert C. Bach was born near Jackson, Breathitt County, on the 1003 Farm, and is a son of Hiram and Mary (Bach) Bach, both of whom were born and reared in Breathitt County, where they still maintain their home on their farm, the father being sixty-two years of age and the mother sixty-five years at the time of this writing, in the summer of 1921, and both being representatives of sterling pioneer families of Kentucky. Hiram Bach is not only a successful farmer in his community, but is the owner of a prosperous general store at Stephenson. He is a republican in political allegiance, and both he and his wife hold membership in the Baptist Church. The original representatives of the Bach family in Kentucky came either from Virginia or North Carolina, and there is ample assurance that the family was founded in America in the early Colonial days. His maternal representatives who first came to Kentucky settled in Letcher County, whence removal was later made to Breathitt County, where the name has since been prominently identified with civic and material development and progress.

The early educational advantages of Dr. Bert C. Bach included those of Lee Institute in his native county, and he has ever since been active as a student in the rural schools of Breathitt County. From 1903 to 1905 he was in service as hospital steward in the United States Army in the Philippine Islands, and there he saw active service at the time of the insurrection on the part of certain of the native tribes. Incidentally he gained valuable experience in connection with medical and surgical work and thus fortified himself greatly for the profession which was later to become his vocation. He remained in the Philippines two years and seven months, and after his return to the United States he entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, where he continued his studies during the year 1909, and until his graduation in 1910, his work as an undergraduate having included also service in the City Hospital. Since obtaining his degree of Doctor of Medicine he has taken effective post-graduate courses in the Chicago Polyclinic and in the medical department of Tulane University in the City of New Orleans. Doctor Bach entered the medical corps of the United States Army at the time of the World war, and in the same he received his commission as captain on the 6th of November, 1918, five days before the signing of the historic armistice brought the war to a close. The Doctor initiated the practice of his profession at Quickseed, Breathitt County, and he rose to be a partner in the service of a large lumber corporation, and it was from that locality that he came to Letcher County and established himself in practice at Whitesburg, where splendid success has attended his able and earnest professional endeavors. He is secretary of the Letcher County Medical Society, and is a member also of the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. Doctor Bach is a man of commanding physique, being six feet and four inches in height and of weight that is proportionate, so that he is well fortified for the arduous duties of his professional work, which involves visitations to many remote parts of the county and the facing of storms as well as the traversing of roads that in many instances are not improved, some being little more than cowpaths. He is a staunch republican, his Masonic affiliations include membership in the Commandery of Knights Templars at Mount Sterling and the Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Lexington, and his religious faith is that of the Presbyterian Church, his wife being a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In the year 1911 Doctor Bach wedded Miss Edna Williams, daughter of Thomas Williams, of Hazel Green, Wolfe County, and they have a winsome little daughter, Lucille.

JOHN T. KUMBROUGH is distinctively one of the representative business men of Owingsville, judicial center of Bath County, where he owns and conducts a well equipped and appointed drug store and is also vice-president of the Farmers Bank, one of the substantial financial institutions of the county.

Mr. Kumbrough was born on a farm near Millersburg, Nicholas County, Kentucky, January 13, 1846, and is a representative of one of the well known and highly honored pioneer families of that county, his father, John G. Kumbrough, having been born and reared in Nicholas County, and the mother, whose maiden name was Margaret J. Smith, having been born in Harlan County, this state. John G. Kumbrough was reared and educated in his native county and represented Kentucky as a gallant soldier in the Mexican war, in which he sacrificed his life in 1848, dying in a hospital. His young wife was left to care for their two children, John T., of this review, who was then about two years old, and Mary Ruth, who became the wife of Dr. E. W. Richards and who became the mother of five sons and four daughters. In 1859 the widowed mother came with her two children to Owingsville, Bath County, and here she maintained her home until her death, in 1869.

John T. Kumbrough gained his youthful education in the village schools of Owingsville, and he was a mere lad when he initiated his independent career by taking a position as clerk in a local drug store, at a salary of $10 per month. He applied himself diligently to the study of the business, made substantial advancement in technical knowledge of pharmacy and within the period of his four years of clerical work in the drug store he so made his value realized that he was given an excellent salary, as gauged by the standards of the locality and period. At the expiration of the four years he purchased a drug store at Owingsville, with another young man, and for two years the enterprise was conducted under the firm name of Kumbrough & Bascom. He then sold his interest in the business, and for the ensuing eleven years was associated with G. W. Connor in the same line of business, under the firm title of Connor & Kumbrough. He then, in 1881, purchased his partner's interest, and he has since continued the business in an individual way. He now has prestige as one of the oldest merchants of Owingsville in point of continuous activity, and through honorable dealings and effective service he has achieved substantial success, together with an invaluable place in the confidence and high regard of the community in which he has lived from his childhood, and in which his advancement has been won through his own ability and well ordered endeavors. In addition to being owner of the drug store and vice-president of the Farmers Bank of Owingsville, Mr. Kumbrough is the owner of a well improved farm of 200 acres, and through the medium of the same has contributed his quota to the advancement of agricultural and lumber stock industry in Bath County. He has had no ambition for public office or political activity, but is unwavering in his allegiance to the democratic party. He is a past master of Bath Lodge No. 55, Free and Accepted Masons, and as a citizen he is loyal and public-spirited.

In January, 1873, Mr. Kumbrough wedded Miss Ella T. Thomas, who was born in the City of Louisville and who was graduated in Maysville Academy. Mrs. Kumbrough passed to the life eternal in the year 1891. Of the two children the elder is Lawrence O., who was born in October, 1872, and who is now a partner in his father's old established drug business; Nellie, who was born in 1877, became the wife of John K. Richards and is now deceased, she being survived by three children.

JOSEPH R. DAWSON. Though he now resides at Owingsville, the county seat, Mr. Dawson owns and has the general supervision of the fine old homestead farm on which he was born and reared and which is one of the valuable places of Bath County, this landed estate comprising 213 acres. He gives similar attention to farm properties owned by his two widowed sisters, and his superintendency thus covers a total of 475 acres of the productive land of Bath County.

On the old homestead farm which he now owns Joseph R. Dawson was born November 21, 1855, and he is a son of the third generation of the Dawson family in Bath County, his paternal grandfather, Joseph Dawson, having come from the State of Maryland and making the county his home. Joseph Dawson, who has been reared and educated in Bath County, where he reclaimed and improved a productive farm, besides which he was a skilled millwright who erected and equipped a grist mill that was long continued in operation and that was one of the landmarks of the county for many years, it having been known far and wide as the Dawson Mill. In this county, Joseph Dawson passed the remainder of his life, as did also his wife, whose maiden name was Nancy Batts. Their three children were three in number, William, John and Jefferson.

Jefferson Dawson, father of him whose name introduces this review, was born at the family homestead, one mile west of Owingsville in the year 1820, was reared under the conditions and influences of that pioneer period in the history of Bath County and received advantages of the common schools. He began to contribute his aid in the operation of his father's farm and mill, and during the course of a long and useful life he marked the passing years with vigorous and successful enterprise as a farmer, the while he owned and improved a large farm property, both he and his wife having continued to reside on the old homestead place until their death in advanced years. As a parent Jefferson Dawson wedded Miss Eliza Rice, who likewise was born and reared in Bath County, and of their twelve children only five are living at the time of this writing, in 1921; Mary is the widow of James Ficklow; Joseph R., of this sketch, is the next younger; Fannie is the wife of Lewis W. Young, of Bath County; Celia is the wife of Walter Harper, of this county; and Sallie is the widow of R. B. Brother. All of the surviving children continue their residence in Bath County, as representatives of one of the sterling pioneer families of this now favored section of Kentucky.
HISTORt OF KENTUCKY

Elmer H. Hicks continued to be the abiding place of Joseph R. Dawson until he had attained to his legal majority, and in the meanwhile he profited by the advantages afforded in the common schools. After leaving the parental home he was for nine years employed as superintendent of the Hamilton farms, representing one of the large landed estates if this district of Kentucky, and he then returned to the old homestead farm, which he made the nucleus of the stock and the supervision of which he has since continued to give his attention, though he has maintained his residence at Owingsville since the year 1899.

Mr. Dawson is a staunch supporter of the democratic party, and is a member of the Christian Church, as also his parents. He was loyal and fought for the cause in the locality when the war came. The old home of Mr. Hicks is a pioneer and where he passed the greater part of his life in agricultural pursuits. William Hicks, the grandfather of Elmer H. Hicks, was born in 1823, in Hardin County, but as a young man removed to Grayson County, where he followed farming for many years, his retirement coming a short time before his death in October, 1898. He was a man of worth and substantial qualities, and possessed in the fullest degree the esteem and respect of the people in the communities where his home was made.

Hendrix Hicks was born in 1851, near Big Clifty, Kentucky, and was reared and educated in that locality, where he spent all of his life in agricultural pursuits and died in 1904. His early education was limited but the mind is said to be of considerable mental ability. He belonged to the practical class of agriculturists and was energetic and progressive, while in his dealings with his fellow-men he was straightforward and above-board, winning their confidence and respect. He was a republican, but not a politician, and was not a seeker for public preferment at the hands of the people. He was a consistent and steadfast churchman of the Christian faith and supported his church liberally in all its movements. Mr. Hicks married Miss Sara Ada Carby, who was born in 1850, in Hardin County, and who survives him as a resident of Louisville. They became the parents of five children: Fannie, who died at the age of twenty-seven years, near Millerstown, Kentucky, as the wife of Frank Nunn, who is now an agriculturist in Kansas; Lucretia, who died unmarried at the age of twenty-two years; Dr. J. H., a successful practicing physician and surgeon of Louisville; Elmer H.; and C. C., a real estate agent at Leitchfield.

Elmer H. Hicks received his early education in the rural schools of Grayson County, where he was reared on the home farm. His inclinations, however, were not for the career of an agriculturist, but rather for a professional life, and he eventually decided upon the law as the medium through which to gain success. Entering as a student at the University of Louisville, he attended that institution during the junior year, and when he left, in 1910, took up the study of law. Subsequently he attended the University of Louisville, Kentucky, and the McKinley University, Chicago, from which he graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, and in 1913 was elected Circuit Court clerk of Grayson County. In the meantime, in November, 1913, Mr. Hicks had been elected Circuit Court clerk of Grayson County, and in January, 1916, entered upon the duties of that office, which he has filled to the present time, his offices being in the Court House at Leitchfield. He is capable, energetic and courteous, and has proven one of the most popular and efficient court attachés that Grayson County has had.

In political matters Mr. Hicks is a staunch republican, while his religious connection is with the Christian Church, in which he is an elder. Fraternally he is affiliated with Leitchfield Lodge No. 236, A. F. and A. M.; and Leitchfield Camp, M. W. A. He has evidenced his faith in the future prosperity of his locality through practical investments in real estate, by the building of a comfortable two-story home of modern design on Maple Street, a dwelling near the Public Square, a dwelling in the suburbs of Leitchfield and a farm of 100 acres north of the county seat one-eighth of a mile Always patriotic and public-spirited, during the World war he was a generous supporter and active worker in connection with the various war activities promoted in Grayson County.

In 1911, at Milwood, Grayson County, Mr. Hicks was united in marriage with Miss Myrtle Crawford, daughter of J. Wallace and Monie (White) Crawford, who reside near Louisville, Mr. Crawford being a highly respected farmer of that community. Mr. and Mrs. Hicks have reared five children: Edwin, born July 13, 1913; Edward, born July 13, 1913, who died February 9, 1920; Marguerite, born August 20, 1915; Dorothea, born January 10, 1918; and Crawford, born February 10, 1921.

William Mitchell Ewing, M. D. For three generations the name of Ewing has been held in high esteem in medical annals in Kentucky. Dr. William Mitchell Ewing, a prominent physician and surgeon of Cave City, Barren County, having followed in the professional footsteps of father and grandfather. This has long been a substantial and representative family in the state, a leading one in culture and good citizenship, and one that more than once, in some of its branches, has contributed to the country men of national importance.

William Mitchell Ewing was born February 9, 1882, at Cave City, Warren County, Kentucky, and is the son of Dr. George T. and Sallie (Porter) Ewing, a grandson of Dr. Thomas Webb and Martha (Saunders) Ewing, and a great-grandson of William Ewing, the original settler, a native of Ireland, who came early to Virginia, married, reared a family and died there.

Dr. Thomas Webb Ewing was born in 1816, at Buckingham County, Virginia, was reared on his father's plantation, was afforded superior educational advantages for the time and was a student of medicine in the old University of Virginia, from which he received his medical degree. He married Martha Saunders, who was born in 1826, in Prince George County, Virginia, and died at Smith's Grove, Kentucky, in 1902, to which place they came shortly after their marriage. Dr. Thomas Webb Ewing was one of the eminent medical men of his day in Kentucky. He died in his home at Smith's Grove in Warren County in 1892.

Dr. George T. Ewing was born at Smith's Grove, Kentucky, May 30, 1850, and has practically spent his life there. Following his graduation from the medical department of the University of Louisville he returned to his native place and entered upon the practice of his profession, which he has pursued with signal ability and success for many years, retiring in 1918 after a professional career of great usefulness. In politics he has always been identified with the democratic party, and he has been equally faithful as a member and cheerful supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity and also to the Order of Odd Fellows. He married Miss Sallie Porter, who was born near Scottsville in Allen County, Kentucky, in 1851, and died at Smith's Grove, Kentucky, in 1909. They became the parents of four children: Thomas D., who is in the railway mail service, lives at Smith's Grove; Porter Yandell, who is a farmer near Smith's Grove, for many years was proprietor of a drug store there; William Mitchell; and Frank S., who is a dental surgeon at Smith's Grove.

After having attended the public schools at Smith's Grove, then entered Smith's Grove College, which he left in his senior year to enter the State College at Lexington, Kentucky, and during his year there completed his classical course, which he had commenced in Smith's Grove College. He early had decided upon his choice of profession and completed a medical course in the medical department of the University of Louisville, from which he was graduated with his degree in 1894.

Aside from the usual professional experience of ordinary practice Doctor Ewing has a wide field of work and knowledge to draw upon. Following his graduation he became an intern in the United States Public Health and Marine Hospital at Evansville, Indiana, afterward, for eleven months, being assistant surgeon there, and then spent two years as Surgeon for the Tennessee Coal & Iron Company, stationed at their hospital just out of Birmingham, Alabama. In January, 1908, he came to Cave City, Kentucky, where he has built up a large and substantial practice both in medicine and surgery. He maintains well equipped, modern offices in the Post Office Building on Front Street. Keeping fully abreast with the discoveries of the medical science, he has subscribed for professional knowledge. In 1912 he attended clinics at Washington, D. C., for post-graduate work in anatomy. In March, 1918, he entered military service in the United States, and was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Medical Corps, with foreign service in prospect. On July 18, 1918, he left for Europe as a member of the 88th Division, 313th Sanitary Train, 340th Ambulance Company, safely reached his destination and for the next five months was stationed five kilometers from the Swiss border, just opposite the Hindenburg line. Of the strain of that experience Doctor Ewing, like the most of his hero comrades, says little, but there are many who recall him with gratitude. He returned to his own land as a casual and was honorably discharged in December, 1918, at Camp Mills, Long Branch, New York.

At Smith's Grove, Kentucky, in 1907, Doctor Ewing married Miss Maude Crump, who died, leaving no children, May 20, 1915, at Cave City. She was socially well known, a daughter of William and Lou (Hudson) Crump, both now deceased. Her father was a wealthy business man, farmer and mule dealer in Warren County.

Doctor Ewing has never taken any very active part in politics, the duties of his profession practically precluding it, but his political convictions made him a democrat, in which faith he was reared. During college days he took a great deal of interest in his Greek letter fraternity, the Phi Chi. He is now identified with such representative scientific organizations as the Barren County Medical and the Kentucky State Medical Societies, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association.

Henry J. Daily, M. D., has the personality and technical ability that make for unequivocal success in the exacting profession of his choice, and he holds a prominent place among the representaive physicians and surgeons in Bath County, where he is engaged in active general practice, with residence and professional headquarters at Owingsville, the county seat. The Doctor was born at Millersburg, Bourbon County, Kentucky, on the 20th of November, 1874, and is a son of Charles H. and Martha (Wilson) Daily, the former of whom was born in Bracken County, this state, Feb. 5, 1847, and the latter of whom was born in Bourbon County, February 3, 1852, their marriage having been solemnized on the 2d of July, 1871. The father received the advantages of the common schools, and that he made excellent use of these advantages is shown by the fact that he became a successful teacher in the Kentucky schools, his record in the pedagogic profession having included service of forty years, and his matesies as such have been principally in the schools of Bracken, Robertson, Harrison and Nicholas counties. He was also long and actively concerned with farm enterprise. Mr. Daily was a staunch and well fortified advocate of the principles of the democratic party, was affiliated with Bratlin Mills Lodge No. 475, Free and Accepted Masons, and both he and his wife were earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. South. The Doctor is a prosperous farmer in served both as superintendent of and a popular teacher in the Sunday School. Of the seven children all except one are living: Sabina is the wife of R. G. McDowell; Dr. Henry J. of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; James M. is a prosperous farmer in the State of Oklahoma; Nabel is the widow of W. H. Green and resides in Oklahoma City; Lucille is the wife of F. A. Tankersley; and Daisy died at the age of fourteen years.

Doctor Daily passed the period of his childhood and early youth principally at Millersburg, his native place, and in addition to attending a private school he was for some time a student in the Kentucky Military Institute at Millersburg, in which he was graduated. In the furtherance of his education along academic lines he then attended Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, and in this institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1899, and with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, the following year having recorded his reception of the degree of Master of Arts after an effective post-graduate course in the same university. In preparation for his chosen profession he then entered the celebrated Tufts Medical College in the City of Boston, Massachusetts, where he continued his studies one year. He then became a student in the medical department of the University of Louisville in the metropolis of his native state, and in this institution he was graduated in 1903, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. On the 21st of July of the same year Doctor Daily opened an office and engaged in the practice of his profession at Owingsville, where he has since continued his business with success, and after holding the rank of first assistant surgeon and where he now controls a large and representative general practice. He keeps in close touch with advances made in medical and surgical science, and thus brings to bear the most approved modern methods and agencies in the work of his profession. He is actively identified with the Bath County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, of which he is a member, and him serving as secretary of the Bath County Medical Society.

Doctor Daily is aligned in the ranks of the democratic party, and both he and his wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in their home village, he having charge of the laymen's organization of this church. The Doctor is prominently affiliated with the time-honored Masonic fraternity, in which he is a past master of Bath Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Owingsville; a past high Priest of Owingsville Lodge, Royal Arch Masons, which has been constituted recently; and at Carlisle, Nicholas County, he is affiliated with Nicholas Council, Royal and Select Masters, and with the Commandery of Knights Templars. He holds membership in the Owingsville Tent of the Knights of the Maccabees.

In the year 1903 was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Daily and Miss Cora May King, of Carlisle, Nicholas County, where she continued her studies in the public schools until her graduation in the high school. Dr. and Mrs. Daily have three children, whose names and respective dates of birth are here recorded: Charles F., August 26, 1905; Mary Bruce, September 21, 1908; and Henry J., Jr., March 2, 1911.

Stuart English Duncan. In looking around for men of vigorous and forceful character who have taken important and prominent part in the affairs of men the biographer is not expected to deal only with valiant heroes in the field of war, but with the world of science and arts, in the marts of trade, and in the professions and politics of the day there are found men of action, capable and earnest, whose talents, energies and enterprise command the respect of their fellow-men, and whose lives are worthy examples deserving emulation.

That the life of such a person should have its public record is proper because knowledge of men whose substantial reputations rest upon their attainments, character and success must necessarily exert a wholesome influence on the rising generation of the American people.

In this connection it is appropriate to review the career of Stuart English Duncan, first vice president of the Peaslee-Gaubert Company, a director of the Kentucky Wagon Manufacturing Company, B. F. Avery & Sons, the National Bank of Kentucky, and an officer in the Second Presbyterian Church, Louisville, and treasurer of the Synodical Presbyterian Orphanage, Anchorage, Kentucky. Mr. Duncan was born in Kentucky's metropolis July 30, 1866. His father, cut down on the threshold of what promised to be a brilliant career, was Joseph Duncan, the son of Elizabethtown, Kentucky and descendant of an old Virginia family. He was the son of Thomas H. and Lucretia Duncan, of Hardin County, Kentucky, whose antecedents were among the early settlers of Lincoln County, founded in 1761, before Kentucky was taken into the Union and was a part of the State of Virginia.

Thomas H. Duncan was a prosperous merchant of Elizabethtown. His wife was the daughter of John and Agnes (Fisher) Bigler and the latter was the daughter of Steven and Magdaline (Garr) Fisher. Steven Fisher, the great-great-grandfather of Stuart English Duncan, was the son of Louis and Barbara (Blandenkaker) Fisher, all of Virginia.

Joseph De Witt was a cavalry leader and early in life from old Centre College, Danville, one of the leading educational institutions of Kentucky. He had been out of college only a short while when the country became engulfed in civil war. Being descended from a long line of Virginians, he unhesitatingly cast his lot with the South in the four year struggle that ensued, enlisting in the command of Gen. John H. Morgan, that daring and martial hero who did as much to harass the enemies of the Southland as any one leader in the Confederate army. He remained with this valiant soldier throughout hostilities, seeing service under Basil W. Duke, later a major general but then a lieutenant in Morgan's command and Gen. John B. Castleman, then a colonel, both of Louisville. He took part in some of the hardest fought skirmishes of the war, always acquiring himself brilliantly. When the war was over, Joseph De Witt Duncan took up the practice of law, forming a law partnership with W. R. Kinney and Timothy Needham. The three had often rendered the services of J. W. H. and it was thought by Kinney, De Witt and himself, in a building on the southwest corner of Fifth and Jefferson streets, Louisville. It was only a few years later that Joseph De Witt Duncan decided to enter the ministry. He attended a Presbyterian seminary at Columbia, South Carolina, was graduated from there and then accepted the pastorate of the Third Presbyterian Church, he was in the first year of that pastorate in the name of the city, and was frequently in the hearts of his parishioners when called by death February 22, 1878.

The mother of Stuart E. Duncan, Eliza English, is still living. She like her husband was born in Elizabethtown and descended from early Virginia settlers. Her mother was the daughter of Luke and Eliza Munsell, the former a prominent surgeon. Her great-grandfather on her mother's side was Achilles Sneed, a prominent attorney of Frankfort, Kentucky and first clerk of the Kentucky Court of Appeals.

A man of unimpeachable integrity and the highest sense of honor, Stuart English Duncan stands at the top in the business, civic and social life of Louisville, and is generally recognized as one of the leading business executives of the South. He possesses a personality that has drawn to him friends from practically every walk in life, but he has never aspired to public office, the blare of trumpets and the fanfare of politics never appealing to him. His love of home is one of his chief characteristics.

For recreation Mr. Duncan delights in a game of golf now and then, and takes keen pleasure in hobnobbing with his intimates at the Pendennis, Louisville Country, Audubon and other clubs with which he has long been identified. It is in his own home in the role of host to an assembled company of his intimates that he is happiest, however.

Mr. Duncan was only twelve years old when his father, then pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church, Louisville, died at the age of thirty-four. As a result the son, the eldest of three children, two of whom are living, had to content himself with a common school education. When sixteen he sought his first employment, first going with the Louisville Presbyterian Assurance Company. He left that concern one year later, identifying himself with the Peaslee-Gaubert Company.

The present wife of Mr. Duncan is Annie Leathers, daughter of Maj. John H. Leathers, until recently president of the Louisville National Bank and now chairman of the Board of Directors of that institution. They were joined in wedlock November 11, 1902, and have a daughter, Anna Stuart Duncan.

Mr. Duncan's first wife was Mary Louise Grinstead, daughter of W. E. Grinstead, Louisville. They were married December 20, 1894. As a result of this union two children, Eliza English Duncan, deceased, and William Grinstead Duncan, were born.

Although he has never aspired to a political office Mr. Duncan has long taken a keen interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of the city, county, state and nation. He is independent in politics, being governed in his choices for public office largely by the issues involved and the principles for which the various aspirants stand.

He is a member of Louisville Lodge No. 4, F. & A. M.; King Solomon Chapter No. 5, R. A. M.; DeMolay Commandery No. 12, K. T.; and Kofa Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He has ever found pleasure in helping the deserving needy and has assisted a number of struggling young men desirous of bettering their conditions in life.

James Tolliver, sheriff of Letcher County, has set a high standard of efficiency in an office which is chiefly responsible for conditions of law and order in this section of the state. Mr. Tolliver is in every way fitted for such responsibilities, coming of a family of rugged men, has virility in physique as well as in mind, and without a show of strength impresses and causes men to respect him and accept his official acts and commands as final authority.

Mr. Tolliver was born in the Valley of the Kentucky River, near Fleming, March 10, 1876, son of Melvin and Arminda (Baker) Tolliver. His father was a native of North Carolina, and has spent his active life as a farmer. He now lives on his farm near Fleming. In the College of seven children there are eleven living sons. All of them have the characteristics of physical strength, and the father and eleven sons are a number sufficient to constitute a full jury.

Sheriff Tolliver was the fourth among the children. He attended the home schools and for a number of years followed the plow and labored at other phases of the agricultural vocation. In 1900 he accepted the post of deputy sheriff under Louis Cook, and served four years under Sheriff Cook and four years under Sheriff C. H. Beck. In 1917 he was himself chosen as high sheriff, and has made his term notable in many respects. During the three years he has been in office he has broken up 125 illicit stills in the county and captured over 300 men, and in that work has had the able cooperation of the county attorney. Sheriff Tolliver is six feet tall, is a man in every sense of the word.

In 1899 he married Miss Florence Quillen, daughter of Wiley Quillen. She was also born at the head of the valley. Their six children are: Jacob, Rebecca, William, Alex, Lola and Samantha. Mrs. Tolliver is a member of the Baptist Church, and in politics he is a republican.

Col. John A. Webb, a Whitesburg merchant, has exemplified many of the fine characteristics of this old and historic family in Eastern Kentucky. He has handled the practical side of business affairs with masterful results, has taught school, has done duty as a soldier and officer in the State Militia and with the Federal forces, and at all times has been one of the strong and responsible citizens who could be depended upon for the counsel of wisdom and efficiency of action when required.

Colonel Webb was born at what is now the coal village of Mayking, then known as the Big Bottom or Mouth of Big Bottom locality on Kentucky River, November 25, 1875. His parents were Wiley W. and Elizabeth (Polly) Webb. His grandfather was the historic character in Eastern Kentucky known as Ben Webb. Ben Webb, a cousin of Daniel Boone, came to the Kentucky Valley with a colony of seven families from North Carolina about 1796. Ben Webb was a son of James Webb, an Englishman, who settled in America and joined the colonists in their struggle for independence. While an aide to General Washington he was shot through the body at the battle of White Plains, left on the field for dead, but recovered.

He married Polly his wife. They had eight children. Polly Webb was born in 1850. His son Ben was born in 1771. He came to Kentucky after his son Ben, and spent the rest of his life on the Kentucky River. Ben Webb, who lived to the age of ninety-seven, was one of the early sheriffs of Eastern Kentucky and otherwise a man of prominence.

Wiley Webb was born at the mouth of Big Bottom October 29, 1838, and died December 29, 1915, at the age of seventy-seven. He was born in Kentucky and spent his life in his home locality. He acquired a good education through his own efforts and was a teacher, and in 1870 was elected sheriff of Letcher County. He was a stanch democrat and a member of the Baptist Church. His wife, Elizabeth Polly, died in 1890, at the age of fifty-three. She was born near the mouth of Colly Creek, daughter of David Polly, of a family that came to Kentucky about 1800, probably from North Carolina. Wiley Webb and she had the following sons and daughters: Hiney, wife of Doctor Blair, of Apache, Oklahoma; E. L., a farmer near Portland, Tennessee; Cornelia, wife of J. W. Adams; Mattie, wife of Lee Cruze, of Salem, Tennessee; John A.; B. M., who was in the hotel business at Norton, Virginia; Jane Ann, married to John A. Craft, who has been identified with the official affairs of Letcher County thirty years as Circuit and County clerk and county judge.

Col. John A. Webb received his education in the home schools, at Pineville, Kentucky, and at what is now Cumberland College at Williamsburg, Kentucky. At the College of sixteen years he was connected with educational affairs he was principal of the Whitesburg Academy. Colonel Webb has been more or less closely identified with merchandising for many years. In 1868 he established John A., Webb & Company, with his brother B. M. Webb as his partner. They opened a general store at Whitesburg, but sold out in 1904. In 1906 Colonel Webb resumed merchandising and it has been almost a regular practice with him to close out his merchandise stock about every two years and then resume business soon afterward.

He first took an active part in local military affairs during the operations of the Ku Klux in Eastern Kentucky in 1901. At that time he organized Company H of the Second Kentucky Militia, was elected captain of the Company, and during subsequent years served as major and lieutenant colonel. During the night rider troubles in 1908 he was with his command engaged in preserving peace and order at Mount Sterling for two months and in Bracken county, five months. In 1916 Colonel Webb was again called to service, this time as a member of the Federal forces for guarding the Mexican border. He spent eight months on duty at Fort Bliss Texas, remaining there until he resigned his commission in January 1917.

Colonel Webb has also given his capital and enterprise to the development of the mineral resources of Eastern Kentucky. He was associated with Judge David Hays and C. H. Back in the organization of the Smoote Creek Coal Company, which developed valuable property which they sold January 1, 1918. Colonel Webb served as a member of the State Board of Commissioners in 1910, under appointment from Governor Stanley. He is a democrat in politics and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

December 27, 1905, he married Cornelia Frazier, who was born on Kingdom Come Creek, daughter of B. N. Frazier. Colonel and Mrs. Webb have six children, named Dixie, Pansy, Gay, Frank, Mae and Maud.

Joseph B. Goodpaster, the venerable and honored president of the Farmers Bank of Owingsville, Bath county, is a man of marked mental and physical vigor, though he has passed the psalmist's span of three score years and ten, and he is essentially one of the representative and influential citizens of his native village and county, even as he is a popular scion of one of the honored pioneer families of this section of the old Bluegrass State.

Mr. Goodpaster was born at Owingsville, on the 30 of March, 1849, and is a son of Levi and Jane V. (Allen) Goodpaster. The father was born in 1820, on a pioneer farm near Owingsville, and was a son of Joseph Goodpaster, who came from Tennessee and became one of the pioneer settlers in Bath county, where he developed a productive farm and community for the home and education of his family. The mother was Jones, passed the remainder of their lives. Levi Goodpaster remained on the old home farm until he was a youth of fifteen years, and in the meanwhile he had profited by the advantage of the common schools of his native county. Upon removing to Owingsville at the age noted he became a clerk in a general store, and with the passing years he became one of the leading merchants of the village, and having long conducted a general store at Owingsville. To his enterprise also was due the establishing of the first bank in the village, this institution having been known as the bank of Levi Good-paster and he having conducted the same with ability and scrupulous integrity until the time of his death, which occurred on the 7th of July, 1876. He was a man who achieved success through his own well ordered activities, and in all the relations of life he occupied an eminently fair place in the confidence and good will of his fellow men. He did much to advance the civic and material interests of Bath County and its judicial center, and his name merits a place of honor in every work reviewing the history of Bath County. After his death the banking business was continued under the title of the Goodpaster Bank until 1893, when a new institution, the Farmers Bank of Owingsville, was corporated as the Farmers Bank of Owingsville, the son Joseph B. being made the first president under the reorganization and having continued the incumbent of this executive office to the present time. Levi Goodpaster was loyal and liberal as a citizen, was a staunch supporter of the cause of the democratic party, and both he and his wife were zealous members of the Christian Church at Owingsville, he having been its most influential member and having contributed to its support with a high sense of personal stewardship. His wife survived him by several years, and of their eleven children all but one attained to years of maturity. Of the number only four are living at the time of this writing, in the autumn of 1921, and Judge R. B. of this review, is the eldest of the four; Charles W. is a representative member of the bar of Bath County and is engaged in the practice of his profession at Owingsville; Benjamin M. is a prosperous farmer and miller in this county; and Espy H., who resides at Owingsville, is the owner of a valuable farm property in this county.

Levi Goodpaster has resided continuously at Owingsville from the time of his birth to the present, save for a period of one year, August, 1861, to August, 1865, during which time the family resided in Greenscote, Indiana, at the time when the Civil war was in progress. He profited by the advantages offered in the schools of his native village, and supplemented this discipline by attending the Kentucky State Agricultural College at Lexington, where he was engaged in a hardware business at Owingsville about one year, and he then assumed active charge of his father's banking business. He has shown marked executive ability in the development and upbuilding of the substantial business now controlled by the Farmers Bank of Owingsville, J. T. Kumbrough being its vice-president; E. L. Byron, its cashier; and J. R. Ammerman and C. S. Elliott, its assistant cashiers. In addition to the president, vice-president and cashier the directorate of the institution includes also A. G. V. Cook, R. H. Connor, C. W. Goodpaster, A. N. Crooks, A. H. Dawson and A. T. Byron. Mr. Goodpaster is a partner in a leading general store at Owingsville and is the owner of a valuable farm estate of 1,000 acres in Bath County. He is also the deacon and undoubted leader in the congregation of the Presbyterian Church in Owingsville. He is the elder in the Christian Church of his native village and his wife holds membership in the Presbyterian Church.

April 28, 1875, recorded the marriage of Mr. Goodpaster and Miss Alice McElroy, who was born in Marion County, this state, October 19, 1855. They have no children.

David Hays. Southeastern Kentucky claims Judge Hays as one of its leading lawyers and statesmen, and in the active practice of his profession he has been identified with much of the important litigation in the various courts in this section of the state, his practice having extended also into the higher courts of Kentucky and the Federal courts. He has specialized in the department of criminal law, and in the same has gained reputation that extends beyond local limitations. Judge Hays maintains his residence and professional headquarters at Whitesburg, judicial center of Letcher County.

The old family homestead in which Judge Hays was born is situated on Rockhouse Creek, in what is now Knott County, Kentucky, and the date of his nativity was January 6, 1872. He is a son of Captain Anderson Hays and Rachel (Sizemor) Hays. Captain Anderson Hays was born in Floyd County, this state, and was ninety-four years of age at the time of his death. That Judge Hays of this review is a scion of long-lived stock is evident when it is stated that all of his grandparents lived to be over 100 years of age except his paternal grandmother, who died at the age of ninety-eight. The Hays family came to Eastern Kentucky about the year 1790, and the name has been one of prominence in connection with the civic and maternal side of the upbuilding of this now favored section of the Blue Grass State. John Hays, father of Captain Anderson Hays, in company with eight brothers became founder of the family in Southeastern Kentucky, whither they came from Virginia and North Carolina. Capt. Anderson Hays was reared under the conditions and influences that marked the pioneer days in Floyd County, and there he continued to reside until his removal to the vicinity of McPherson Post Office, at the forks of Troublesome Creek, where he was residing at the time when Hindman, judicial center of the newly organized county of Knott, was there established. He gave the major part of his active life to farm industry, also the Christian Church. He entered Confederate service, in which he became captain of a company in the regiment commanded by Col. Benjamin Caudell. While with his regiment at the front he was finally captured by the enemy, and thereafter he was confined in the Federal prison on Johnson's Island in Lake Erie eighteen months, or until the close of the war. He took part in the first engagements and proved a gallant and efficient soldier and officer. His eldest son, James, was a member of the same regiment.

Judge David Hays, the youngest of the children, had seven brothers and two sisters living when he had attained to the age of forty years. His mother was of half Cherokee Indian blood and was a sister of Black-Hawk, the famed Cherokee chief.

In a school over which Professor George Clark presided at Hindman, Judge Hays received the latter part of his early education, and that he profited fully by the excellent advantages afforded him is shown in the fact that he has to his credit eleven terms of effective service as a teacher in public and select schools. He read law under the preceptorship of Professor Clark, mentioned above, and was admitted to the bar at Hindman in 1890. From that time until 1906 he worked in the timber districts of this section of the state, and had his full quota of arduous labor in the rolling of logs and rafting the same to market. In 1906 he engaged in the practice of law at Whitesburg, and here he has gained special prominence as a criminal lawyer of marked ability and resourcefulness, his practice having, as previously noted, extended to the Federal courts. He is well known in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio. When the judicial district comprising Pike and Letcher counties was created Judge Hays was made the first commonwealth attorney for this new district, and he has since given effective service also as police judge at Whitesburg, besides which, a loyal and public-spirited citizen, he gave a specially prominent and active section of the county of Whitegrass. He is a leader in the local councils of the democratic party, as a representative of which he had the distinction of being defeated by only one vote as democratic candidate for county attorney of Letcher County at a time when the normal republican majority was 1,900. He has served as chaplain of the lodge of Free and Accepted Masons at Whitesburg, is affiliated with the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons at Winchester, the Commandery of Knights Templars at Winchester, the Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Lexington, and holds membership also in the Order of the Eastern Star and that of the White Shrine.

The year 1896 recorded the marriage of Judge Hays with Miss M. Bell Halcomb, daughter of John Halcomb, a well known citizen of Letcher County, and of this union have been born five children: John L. was graduated in the Whitesburg High School, and when the town of Pikeville was involved in the War he attended the instruction school maintained for the training of officers until the close of the war; William is a graduate of the Whitesburg High School; Delena is the only daughter, and in her honor the Dalena station on the Louisville & Nashville Railroad was named; and the two youngest children of the happy home circle are Carl Bruce and Nasserita.

Jeff Isom. Everyone in Letcher County respects the integrity of Jeff Isom. There is good ground for this widespread admiration. He is gifted with great physical strength, he has been a hard worker all his life, has used his hands as well as his mind, has worked at a wide variety of odd jobs, has overcome much and has found the riches of esteem as well as those of material prosperity.

The Isom family is one of the oldest in this section of Kentucky and came from North Carolina and first settled on Linefork. Jeff Isom was born March 28, 1854. As a boy he attended the free schools, and grew up accustomed to farm labor. His rugged physique made him well qualified for the arduous toil of the timber, and it is said that he never met anyone that could hold him down in handling logs. For several years he floated timber down the Kentucky River, and is still interested in the saw mill business. Altogether he has operated eight saw mills, having managed the mills of the Mackin Kilburn Company for Floyd Day of Lexington. Since 1879 he has also been in the mercantile business. His first store, a very small one, was at the mouth of Rockhouse, and he hauled his goods from Prestonsburg and Pikeville on the Big Sand, also from London and Jackson, Kentucky, and Abingdon, Virginia. This method of getting goods from long distances by hauls over the mountains was continued until railroads penetrated this section of Kentucky.

While he has had many reverses, Jeff Isom has never despaired of his luck, and whenever he has owned a number of farms. Once when hard pressed for money he sold a farm for $1,200. Later the purchaser received $8,000 from the railroad for right of way across one little corner of the tract. While busy with his milling and merchandising operations Mr. Isom has also given his attention to farming. The Blackey Coal Company has its mines on his land. He is a member of the Masonic order, and has always been open to friends and strangers alike. Mr. Isom has helped in way of donations to every church and school for miles around. He donated the ground on which the Stuart Robinson College was built. He was once elected magistrate, although a democrat in politics, and was the only democratic official in the county at the time. He was chosen magistrate when J. T. Isom was comptroller of Blount County.

In 1873 Mr. Isom married Mary Stamper, who was born at Rockhouse March 12, 1857, daughter of Isaac D. Stamper. Mrs. Isom is a member of the Baptist Church. They are the parents of seven living children: Polly Ann, wife of Jonah Isom, a well to do farmer of Rockhouse, afflicted with blindness; Lucinda, wife of William Maggard, a Rockhouse farmer; Print, a merchant at Pershing; Millie, wife of James Stamper, associated with Mr. Isom in the mercantile business at Blackey; Manta, wife of County Judge Fess Whitaker, of Letcher County; Ada, wife of John Crane, a lumber and saw mill man; Ida, twin sister of Ada, who is married to Ralph Shenneman, a machinist in the shops at Blackey.

Col. N. M. Webb, of Whitesburg, veteran educator and newspaper man of Letcher County, is one of the citizens foremost in influence in that section of Kentucky, and his family is one of the oldest and one of the largest in that historic portion of the state. John Ison Webb, the father was an Englishman, who came to America before the Revolution. He was in the war for independence as an aide de camp to General Washington. At the battle of White Plains he was shot through the body and left on the field for dead. He recovered from this wound and subsequently followed his son Benjamin to Kentucky. James Webb married a sister of Daniel Boone’s mother. One of the characteristics of the Webb family is long life. James Webb died at the age of 106 years and it will be noted that others attained ages very close to the century mark.

Benjamin Webb, son of James, was born in 1771, probably on the east coast of Maryland. He possessed an adventurous spirit that led him into varied occupations. As a young man he was for a time in the service of the king. From Maryland he removed to Ashe or Buncombe County, North Carolina, and in a company composed of seven families who had heard of Kentucky and had the western fever started to follow the Boone trail through the Powell Valley and over the mountains to the head of the Kentucky River. They located on the river above the mouth of Boone’s Fork in 1795 or 1797. Later they moved to the present coal towns of May King, then known as Bottom Fork, where Benjamin Webb spent the rest of his life and died at the age of ninety-seven. He was the first sheriff of Perry County, which then comprised a large portion of Eastern Kentucky. It was his custom to walk to the State Capital each year to make settlement of his accounts. Benjamin Webb had twin sons, Nelson and Daniel, as his first born, and Nelson died of a strange disease, being taken to Baltimore for operation. He died at the age of twenty-one.

Jason L. Webb, father of Col. N. M. Webb, was born in 1820. His mother was Jennie Adams, who came with the Webbs from North Carolina when a young woman. Jason L. Webb cleared up a farm in the neighborhood of Thornton Creek, and spent his active life there. This land is still owned by his family. Jason Webb is said to have held the post of local magistrate, and at one time was county assessor. In election to that office he had a competitor, and the election was so close as to cause a dispute. They compromised by dividing their jurisdiction in half, Jason making assessments on one side of the river and his opponent on the other. Jason Webb, who died in 1894, at the age of eighty-four, married Elizabeth Craft, who died in 1880. His second wife was Lou Hubbard, a daughter of Robert Shanklin Hubbard, who came from North Carolina. She was born in Tazewell County, Virginia. Her mother was a Bolling, a descendant of Pochantos and of the same relationship as Mrs. Woodrow Wilson. Jason Webb by his first wife had five sons and three daughters, and nine children by his second marriage. All these nine children are still living.

William Isom Isom was born December 6, 1860, and attended school on Bottom Fork and in Whitesburg, and also Hiawassie College in Tennessee. His active work as an educator covered a period of twenty-one years. He did his first teaching in Virginia and later was connected with schools around Whitesburg.

The newspaper history of Letcher County is in effect a part of Colonel Webb’s individual experience and history. The first newspaper ever printed in the county was the Pound Gap Enterprise, started in December, 1880, with Tip Nickels and John Pearl, editors. The building in which it was printed stood in the middle of one of the principal streets of Whitesburg, and was torn down only a few years ago. The paper was published about fifteen months and was then removed to Pikeville.

In 1905 came the second venture in Letcher County journalism. The News Publishing Company, which was organized in March of that year, the Letcher County News was started. It was to be a weekly independent. N. M. Webb and E. P. Blair were chosen by the owners to run the paper and the business. It continued with fair promise of success up to the November election which nearly wrecked the business. Mr. Webb resigned, and the News "crawled along" for about two months, when the whole outfit was bought by Colonel Webb.

With this equipment Colonel Webb founded and began the publication of the Mountain Eagle, a newspaper that has been continued without variation or shadow of turning ever since. It is now a $10,000 corporation, and the paper is one of the best in the mountainous section of Kentucky.

Without any solicitation on his part Colonel Webb was appointed postmaster of Whitesburg in 1914, receiving his commission from Woodrow Wilson. He is a staunch Democrat. His church is the regular Baptist and he is affiliated with the Lodge and Encampment of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Improved Order of Red Men, and the Junior Order United American Mechanics.

June 15, 1893, Colonel Webb married Sarah Ellen Williams, daughter of Hiram Williams, of Whitesburg. Ten children were born to their marriage: Myrtle, wife of Louis Wiseheart, of Louisville; Pearl, who was killed in a runaway accident at the age of eight years; Ethel, at home; Willa, assistant professor of Mount Blue hills, West Virginia; Esteva, a high school graduate and carrying a large business responsibility in the Mountain Eagle office; Roseley, who died at the age of fourteen; Edda, who died when four years of age; Roberta, now ten years of age; Vernon Woodrow Wilson; and Ralph Waldo Emerson Webb.

THOMAS KENNEDY is one of the principals of the Kennedy-Jones Company, which has built up a large and prosperous wholesale grocery business at Mount Sterling, the county seat of Montgomery County, and he is essentially one of the representative business men and progressive and public-spirited citizens of this thriving little city.

Mr. Kennedy was born at Carlisle, Nicholas County, Kentucky, on the 13th of October, 1807, and is a son of Thomas and Frances (Pickrell) Kennedy, the former of whom was born at Headquarters, Nicholas County, in 1813, and the latter of who was born near Poplar Plains, Fleming County, in August, 1813. Thomas Kennedy, Sr., was graduated from DePauw University at Greencastle, Indiana, and he became one of the leading members of the bar of Nicholas County, Kentucky. After his marriage he established his home at Carlisle, the judicial center of that county, and there he continued in the successful practice of his profession until the time of his death. He was a staunch democrat, and was influential in political affairs and community life, with secure place in popular and wife and esteem. Both he and his wife were earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and in the same he gave effective service as superintendent of the Sunday school. Of the four children the eldest is Judge Harry Kennedy, who has proved an able successor of his father as one of the representative members of the county bar, where he is engaged in the practice of law at Carlisle, and who is also served on the bench of the County Court. He is a graduate of the Kentucky Wesleyan College. James also served on the bench of the County Court. He is a graduate of the Kentucky Wesleyan College, and is now engaged in progressive farm enterprise near Mount Sterling, Montgomery County. Thomas, Jr., of this review, was the next in order of birth and Frank, a graduate of Center College at Danville, Kentucky, is now a resident of the City of Los Angeles, California.

Thomas Kennedy, Jr., gained his preliminary education in the public schools of his native city and thereafter continued his studies in the Kentucky Wesleyan College at Millersburg, Bourbon County. As a young man he engaged in the retail drug business at Mount Sterling, and has been numbered among the substantial and successful business men of this city for more than a quarter of a century. He sold his drug store and the pharmaceutical business in 1884, and operated 3½ years, and on the 21st of March, 1921, he became associated with E. E. Jones in establishing the wholesale grocery house of the Kennedy-Jones Company, the success of which has been unqualified. The high standing of the principals and their progressive business policies, as coupled with effective service, have gained to their establishment a substantial trade throughout the territory normally tributary to Mount Sterling as a distributing center. Mr. Kennedy is a director of the Mount Sterling Exchange Bank, his political faith is that of the democratic party, and in the Masonic fraternity his affiliations are with the Lodge, Chapter and Commandery in his home city.

January 31, 1861, he married Miss Amanda Prewitt, who was graduated from Daughters College at Harrodsburg, this state, and is a prominent factor in the representative social activities of Mount Sterling. Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy have two children: Frances, was graduated from Randolph-Macon College at Lynchburg, Virginia, as a member of the class of 1921 and with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and Nelson has graduated from the Mount Sterling High School as a member of the class of 1909.

CAMBRIDGE M. MARTIN, B. A. To the public schools of Owingsville, Bath County, Professor Martin has brought a high standard of efficiency, and the best evidence of the popular estimate here placed upon his services is that afforded his having served continuously as superintendent of the village schools of the county seat since the year 1905.

Professor Martin was born at Carlisle, judicial center of Nicholas County, Kentucky, on the 14th of May, 1868, and is a son of George R. and Sarah (Nichols) Martin, the former of whom was born in Bath County, this state, in August, 1830, and the latter of whom was born in Letcher County, Kentucky. Professor Martin, grandfather of him whose name introduces this review, was born in Iowa, where his parents were pioneer settlers of the very early period in the history of that commonwealth, and as a young man he resided for a short time in Bath County, Kentucky. He then returned to Iowa, where he became a prosperous farmer, and where both he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives, both having been earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and one of their sons having become a clergyman of this church. Of the seven children George R. was the eldest, and he was reared on the home farm in Iowa, he having been a child at the time of his parents removal from Kentucky to this state. He was graduated in an Iowa academy, and as a young man he returned to Kentucky, his native state, where for fifteen years he was a successful and popular teacher in the public schools. He was also a surveyor of ability, and did much surveying of land in this state, besides which he became a successful buyer and shipper of live stock. He was a man of versatility and marked business ability, publishing the local news paper Nicholas County and adjoining counties. His death occurred in August, 1905, and his venerable widow maintains her home at Richmond, Virginia. Mr. Martin was a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as is also his widow, and he served as a member of its Official Board, as well as a teacher in its Sunday school. At Paris, Kentucky, he maintained affiliation with Daugherty Lodge No. 60, Free and Accepted Masons, and also with the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons. Mr. Martin was a staunch supporter of the principles of the democratic party, and in Nicholas County he served not only as county surveyor but also as a member of the Board of County Supervisors. Of the five children four are living: Willie, who was graduated in the Carlisle High School, is the wife of Hon. J. C. Gillespie, who was a prosperous farmer in Nicholas County, Kentucky, and who served as a member of the Senate, their home now being in the State of Virginia; Cambridge F., of this review, was the next in order of birth; Florence D., a graduate of the female college at Millersburg, Kentucky, is the wife of E. Gore, and they reside in the State of California; Miss Aletha is with her widowed mother at Richmond, Virginia.

In the public schools of Carlisle, Kentucky, Prof. Cambridge F. Martin continued his studies until his graduation in the high school, and thereafter he was for one year a student in what is now Valparaiso University, at Valparaiso, Indiana. Thereafter he was a student in the Kentucky Wesleyan College until his graduation from this institution with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and since that time he has made a record of splendid and unselfish service of the people. He taught for five years a teacher in the rural schools of Nicholas County, thereafter he was a teacher in the city schools at Carlisle for nine years, and his service in the public schools at Owingsville has now (1921) covered a period of sixteen years. As superintendent of the Owingsville schools he has brought to bear progressive policies and advanced methods, with the result that the schools are among the most progressive in the State. He is an active member of the Owingsville Academy, and is affiliated with the local Chapter of Royal Arch Masons. He retains the religious faith in which he was reared and is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his wife and daughter hold membership in the Christian Church.

On the 21st of November, 1857, was solemnized the marriage of Professor Martin and Miss Ragan Dalzelle, who was graduated in the academy at Ashersburg, Kentucky, and who was for one year a student in Valparaiso University, at Valparaiso, Indiana. Professor and Mrs. Martin have one daughter, Micha, who was born August 3, 1900, and who is a graduate of the Owingsville High School and of the Kentucky College of Women at Danville.

James L. McCoy, a man of fine intellectual and sterling character, left a definite impress upon the history of his native state, was in the most significant sense the architect of his own fortune, and marked the passing years with large and worthy achievement. As a citizen of prominence and influence and as a man who made his life count for good in its every relation it is no small matter to recall a typical representative of the history of Kentucky, a state which he honored by his character and his achievement. Mr. McCoy was editor of the Pike County News at Pikeville from August 1, 1920, until January 28, 1921, when ill health made it necessary for him to lay down his labors and seek the aid of specialists. His death occurred in the General Memorial Hospital in New York City on the 7th of April, 1921, and from an appreciative editorial that appeared in the Pike County News are taken the following extracts: "Only those who were closely associated with him knew the extremity of the suffering he endured during the last few months of his illness. Until the end he was deeply interested in state and national politics, and he was widely known, both within and without Kentucky. During more recent years he had been engaged in newspaper work. He knew many people and most of human nature, and his kindly disposition, his keen sense of humor and his great fund of general knowledge made him a most delightful friend and companion. For many years Mr. McCoy was a member of the Pikeville athletic club, and during his time of residence, he had a wide circle of friends here, and he was very much interested in and attached to Pikeville and the surrounding section, and proud of its enterprise and progress."

James Lawrence McCoy was born on a farm in Greenup County, Kentucky, July 25, 1856, and thus was sixty-four years of age at the time of his death. His early discipline was that of the farm, and while he availed himself of the advantages of the common schools of the locality and period, his broader education, and it was most liberal, was acquired through effective self-discipline and long years of association with men and affairs. As a young man he studied law and was admitted to the bar, but expediency led to his taking a position as manager of the Pikeville Railway. While a resident of Bell County he served two terms as county superintendent of schools. Later he became deputy revenue collector for the Eighth District of Kentucky, with headquarters at Jackson, Breathitt County.

He was for a number of years identified with the government Indian service on a reservation in the State of Minnesota. After retiring from the service he was for a time the corporation clerk in the office of the Kentucky secretary of state at Frankfort, and it was from this office he removed to Pikeville and became editor of the Pike County News. Prior to this he had been similarly identified with the publishing of the Cumberland Courier at Pineville, and the Jackson Times at Jackson. Colonel McCoy was active and influential in republican politics in Kentucky for forty years, and his activities touch all fields of state, national, and local politics in a large degree. He was campaign manager of his party for the State of Kentucky in the presidential election of 1908, and was long known and honored as one of the most influential citizens of Central and Eastern Kentucky. For some time after his marriage he resided in the City of Lexington, and his widow now maintains her home on a farm five miles south of Owingsville, Bath County. Colonel McCoy was a man of strong individuality and well fortified convictions. He was tolerant and kindly in his judgment of his fellow men, as he had appreciation of the well-springs of human thought and action, and his religious faith, shown in earnest personal stewardship, was that of the Christian Church, of which his widow likewise is a devoted member. He was long and actively affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. As a man who stood "four square to every wind that blows," his character was the positive expression of a noble nature, and he merited and received the unqualified respect and esteem of his fellow men in all walks of life.

On the 27th of January, 1885, was solemnized the marriage of Colonel McCoy and Miss Emma Lewis, daughter of Doctor and Melvina (Moore) Lewis, of Lick, Bath County. Doctor Lewis was a native of Kentucky, was graduated from a leading medical college in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, and was long one of the representative physicians and surgeons of Bath County, Kentucky, where both he and his wife died. Their four children were daughters, and three of the number survive the honored parents: Elizabeth is the wife of Dr. S. C. Alexander, who is engaged in the practice of medicine at Salt Lick; Emma the widow of the subject of this memoir; and Effie is the wife of M. L. Cassily.

Mrs. McCoy gained her early education in the public schools at Salt Lick, and later was graduated from North Middleton College with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. A woman of culture and gracious personality, she proved the true companion and helpmeet of her husband, and their home life was ever of ideal order. Of the three children the eldest is Lewis, who was born March 10, 1889, and who resides at Owingsville, Bath County. The maiden name of his wife was Cleora Bailey, and their one child is a son, James L. Malcolm. The second son, graduated from the University of Kentucky with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and was a captain in the National Army during the period of the Civil War, was Albert. Lawrence, the third son, who was born with his mother on the home farm near Owingsville and is still a bachelor. Nell C., the only daughter, is a graduate of Hamilton College, Kentucky, and also of Wellesley College, Boston, Massachusetts. She is the wife of Logan Shearer, of Lexington, Kentucky, and they have three children: Mary Lewis, Nell McCoy and Logan Jr.

LEWIS DEMPSEY, a former merchant of Inez, president of the Inez Deposit Bank, which he organized, one of the promoters of the Kermit-Warfield Bridge Company, the Warfield Coal Company and the Dempsey Coal Company, one of the organizers and a director in the Kermit State Bank, county chairman of the Big Sandy Division of the National Bankers Association, and now in the Roads Organization, is easily the leading man of Martin County, and one whose interests are of towering magnitude. His responsibilities are many and varied, but he is carrying them all with efficient capability, and rendering his people a service not often given by any one man.

Born at Warfield on Tug River August 26, 1852, Lewis Dempsey is the native son of Martin County, for the part of Lawrence County in which Warfield was located at the time of his birth is now a part of Martin County. His parents were Mark and Lucinda (Alley) Dempsey. Mark Dempsey was born in Botetourt County, Virginia. Although he had no educational advantages and was entirely self-taught, Mark Dempsey was a man of unusual ability, and after he was graduated from a teacher's college in the vicinity of Big Sandy, Virginia, he became a teacher, and traveled over many parts of the United States, in which he established and taught subscription schools. In 1848 or 1849, when still a young man, he went to the old city of Santa Fe, in what is now New Mexico, going over the old Santa Fe Trail with a trading party, and he conducted a store for a year among the Cherokees. After returning to Kentucky, he opened a store which he operated in connection with farming and timber dealing until the Civil War in 1861, when he operated a store at Louisa, Kentucky, returning home at the close of the war. Finally he devoted all of his time to his mercantile interests, continuing in active business until within a few years of his death, which occurred in 1881, when he was seventy years old. He was a man whose vision was so broad that he was far ahead of his times, and clearly foresaw the subsequent oil and coal development, in which he had unqualified faith, although many thought him impractical for holding such views. His son has lived to see the vision of the father materialized into a wonderful fact that has developed since this region of Eastern Kentucky. With the idea that because of the oil and coal held in reserve land in these regions would at one time be very valuable, Mark Dempsey invested heavily in land and owned vast tracts of it. He survived his wife for some years, she having passed away at the age of sixty-five years. Long a Mason, he was advanced to the Chapter, and belonged to the Bivins Chapter, R. A. M. Formerly a whig, he became a republican, but after the close of the war changed to the ranks of the democratic party. A man of great force of character, and with more education than the majority, he served as a magistrate for a number of years; was the first school commissioner of Martin County and deputy county clerk for Lawrence County before the formation of Martin County. One of the most self-reliant of men, he was able to see his path before him and then to walk in it without waver. He said of him that he was a successful school-teacher before he had ever seen a grammar, and later on in life he was able to lead men through his own flaming sincerity, and his son inherits many of his desirable qualities. The family is of Irish extraction, his father, William Dempsey, having come to America from the vicinity of Cork, Ireland. He married Miss Rachel Solomon, a Jewish lady, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Mark Dempsey and his wife became the parents of the following children: Josephine and Nancy Ann, who died unmarried; Mary, who is the wife of R. F. Cassidy, of Inez; Laura E., who is the wife of Dr. A. D. Speer, of Inez; Jane, who is the wife of Mr. Troy Wiles, of Warfield; Lewis, whose name heads this review; Alice, who was married at the age of eighteen years; John, who was a merchant of Warfield, died at the age of fifty-five years; Joseph E., who was in business with his brother Lewis, and the father of Albert, Fannie and L. A. and Joseph, the firm of Dempsey Brothers, leading merchants at Inez and Warfield, died at Inez. During the war between the North and the South Joseph Dempsey served in the Union Army.

Lewis Dempsey attended the schools of Warfield and its vicinity, and then took a three years' course at Masonic Academy at Louisa, and completed his education at Marshall College, Huntington, West Virginia. Subsequently he acquired a knowledge of the fundamentals of business, and at the age of twenty-four, he also taught in the subscription schools of this county. He conducted the first teachers' institute in Martin County, and had what was somewhat unusual for those days, a first-class teacher's certificate. So evident was his ability that he was urged to accept a position with a commercial agency at Cincinnati, but as he preferred to remain with his home, he was able to open a store at Inez, and for the subsequent thirty years continued to sell goods, and only retired from the mercantile field because of the magnitude of his other interests. In 1903 Mr. Dempsey and John C. C. Mayo organized the Deposit Bank of Inez, of which Mr. Dempsey has since continued the president.

When coal and oil development commenced Mr. Dempsey was one of the first to see their possibilities, and he has thrown himself into the various operations with a vigorous resourcefulness which has been felt all along the line. Among these giant corporations with which he has long been connected is the one which bears his name, and the Warfield Coal Company. He was one of the promoters of the Kermit-Warfield Bridge Company, which built the $300,000 bridge connecting Kermit and Warfield over Tug River, completed and opened May 21, 1921. This company was organized in 1919 by ten operators and owners of coal lands in the vicinity of Kermit and Warfield, with a capital of $125,000. These men recognized the fact that if this coal field was ever properly developed it would be necessary to build a steel double gauge railroad bridge so as to permit the running of the railroad into the field. The magnitude of the work and the difficulties of the undertaking discouraged some of the original stockholders, but the more resolute worked all the harder, and finally overcame all obstacles, not the least of which was the discovery of a bed of quicksand where they had expected to reach solid rock. Because of these and other difficulties it was found that the bridge would cost much more than was originally estimated, and $25,000 additional stock and $175,000 bonds were issued to meet the increase in expenditures. The Himpler Coal Company took over practically all of the stock, and the remaining stockholders absorbed the bond issue, which gives the Himpler Coal Company the controlling interest. The bridge, now completed, is the most expensive and the heaviest ever built across Tug River. The officials of the Kentucky-Warfield Bridge Company are as follows: D. E. Hewitt, president; Martin Himler, vice president; E. J. Lang, treasurer; and W. M. Hale, secretary.

The Himpler Coal Company, which has the most complete plant on Tug River, was first organized about 1917, with a capital of $40,000, and is a co-operative company, and first operated at Himler, West Virginia, along the old line of the Norfolk & Western Railroad. Delaware officials noted that the latter acquired a lease on 2,200 acres of the Warfield field from the Berger interests of Cincinnati and D. E. Hewitt, and here built a plant at a cost of at least $750,000, the best-equipped one in Kentucky or West Virginia. This company is planning to invest $1,500,000 in developing the natural resources of this region. This company plans building an ideal mining camp, with all of the halls, hotels, and services, and a sanitary sewerage system will be put in. This camp is to be located in Martin County, and it will greatly aid in the further development of this part of the state. This company proposes to stand ready to aid in the building up of the schools and roads. It will employ hundreds of men at good wages, over one-half of whom will be stockholders in the company. Its camps will furnish a market to Martin County farmers for all their products. This company has for its purposes, aside from the mining of coal:

First, it is a test of the idea of co-operation between capital and labor in the carrying on of the industries of the country, and,

Second, it is a plan for the Americanization of foreigners.

Because of the strained relations existing in some industries between capital and labor the people of the country are watching the outcome of the experiments of the Himpler Coal Company, and those in Martin County are particularly interested, for it is giving them the outlet that heretofore they have not been able to obtain for their various products, and will, they are sure, result in a wonderful expansion of all their enterprises.

It was fortunate for the people of Martin County that the destinies of two such forceful men as Lewis Dempsey and John C. C. Mayo ran in similar channels, for they, working together as they did until the death of the latter, made possible the promotion of many of the sturdiest enterprises now flourishing in this vicinity. It is interesting to note that while serving as school commissioner Mr. Dempsey examined Mr. Mayo and granted him a license to teach. Probably had he never entered the educational field Mr. Mayo might not have conceived the idea of establishing a school in which the students might be surrounded by the influences of true Christianity, now materialized in the John C. C. Mayo College of Paintsville.

In 1876 Mr. Dempsey married Miss Essie Golden, born at Ashland, Kentucky, a daughter of Rev. Fletcher Golden, a Presiding Elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church, Prestonsburg District. Mr. and Mrs. Dempsey became the parents of four children, namely: Hazel, who is the wife of Rev. Charles T. Barton, a Methodist minister of Steele, Missouri; Co-
S. L. Wooldridge for years has been a breeder of the Walker hounds. He has served as president of the National Fox Hunters Association and is still a director. His breeding kennel is featured by Big Stride 500, the leading sire of winners in 1920 both in the field and on the bench. The greatest contest race ever held between the Walker hounds and the July hounds of Georgia was held at Barry, Massachusetts, with ten entries representing each strain. Mr. Wooldridge was master of the Walker hounds, and Big Stride was the leading winner of the successful contestants. Out of four championships of 1920 three of the winners were bred in the Wooldridge kennels. Mr. Wooldridge has served as president of the Kentucky Fox Hunters Association, and as a director of the Bluegrass Association, and has been president of the Chase Publishing Company, publishers of The Chase at Lexington, a monthly journal widely read among all fanciers of the foxhound and also a journal of general interest to sportsmen.

His home is Arry Mount Farm, comprising 300 acres three miles south of Versailles. It was the old home of the ancestors of Willis Fields, and the residence of one of the landmarks of Central Kentucky, being over a hundred years old. Besides his dog kennels Mr. Wooldridge is a breeder of Poland China hogs and his son, S. L. Wooldridge third, is a breeder of game chickens.

Mr. Wooldridge married Russell Wassen, a native of Versailles and daughter of the late Ed Wassen, a diplomat of the City of Paris. Their son, S. L. Wooldridge third, aged thirteen, and Mary, Mr. Wooldridge has also had a notable success as a trainer of hunters' horses for hunting purposes, and many of the animals trained by him have commanded high prices in eastern markets. He takes an active part in democratic politics, is local chairman of the party and one of the three directors of the Senate and chairman of the drive during the World War. During the war period he responded fully to the demands made by the Government and planted and harvested a crop of 300 acres of wheat, the largest individual crop of that cereal in Woodford County. He used a tractor to plant and harvest the crop.

Rezin G. Owings, whose well improved homestead farm is situated four miles northeast of Mount Sterling, Montgomery County, is a representative of one of the old and influential families of this section of the Blue Grass State, his parents having been born in Bath County, and the town of Owingsville, that county, having been named in honor of the family of which the subject is a member.

R. G. Owings was born in Montgomery County on the 28th of August, 1877, and is a son of Joshua and Julia (Ewing) Owings, the former of whom was born in December, 1837, and the latter in 1841, her death having occurred February 14, 1916. Joshua Owings, who is now one of the venerable and honored citizens of Mount Sterling, was born and reared in Bath County and is a son of William Owings, one of the family of whom were likewise born in Bath County, where the respective families were founded in the early pioneer days. Joshua is one in a family of five children, the names of the other four being as here noted: Mary, Thomas, Crittenden and Edward. Joshua Owings availed himself of the advantages of the common schools of his native county and thereupon continued his studies in Center College at Danville. After his marriage he rented land near Ewington, Montgomery County, his wife having there inherited 360 acres of excellent farm land, and he likewise having received a goodly heritage of land. He became the owner of a valuable farm property of 1,200 acres and was long numbered among the most extensive and successful exponents of agricultural and live-stock enterprise in this section of the state. Upon his retirement from the farm he established his residence at Mount Sterling, where he has since maintained his home. He is a zealous member of the Presbyterian church, which was also his wife, and he served as an elder in the Springfield Church of this denomination. His political allegiance has ever been given to the democratic party, and while he has never sought public office he has been a figure of prominence and influence in connection with community affairs. Of the children the eldest is Miss Hilda, who resides with her father at Mount Sterling, Mary is the widow of J. L. White; Jack is a prosperous farmer in Bath County; Betty is wife of Clifford Prewitt; Rezin G., of this review, was the next in order of birth; and Joshua, Jr., resides at Mount Sterling.

Rezin G. Owings was reared on the old home farm in Montgomery County, and in addition to having received the advantages of the public schools of Mount Sterling he attended Central University at Richmond. After his school days he resumed his active association with the work and management of his father's large farm estate, and he is now the owner of a valuable farm property of 300 acres, lying partly in Montgomery and partly in Bath County. He is one of the successful representatives of agricultural and live-stock industry in this district, and is a loyal and public-spirited citizen whose circle of friends is coincident with that of his acquaintances. He is a democrat in his political proclivities, and both he and his wife are active members of the Christian Church.

On the 11th of July 1901 the marriage of Mr. Owings and Miss Clara Bascom, who was born and reared in Bath County and who there received the advantages of the public schools, Mr. and Mrs. Owings have no children.

Richard Pendell Stoll. For upwards of a century this name has been held in the highest honor and esteem in the City of Lexington, where members of that family have been the source of much initiative and enterprise in business and also prominent influences in the civic and political affairs of the community and state. A member of the family of special distinction was the late Richard P. Stoll, who was born at Lexington January 21, 1851, and died in his home city March 11, 1911.

His grandfather, Gallus Stoll, was a native of Wuertemberg, Germany, and in 1818 brought his family to America. Several years later he moved to Lexington, Kentucky, and remained a resident of that city the rest of his life. George Stoll, father of Richard P. Stoll, was born at Philadelphia in 1810, grew up at Lexington, and for a number of years was engaged in the furniture business and later as an insurance man. He married Mary J. Scrugham, who was born at Lexington April 12, 1824. Her father, Joseph Scrugham, was born in Transylvania County, Virginia, in 1777 and lived in Lexington from early manhood until his death. Joseph Scrugham married Mary Vallandingham, a daughter of George and Peggy (Frier) Vallandingham, of Madison County, Kentucky, who was born during the War of the Revolution. The name Frier is one of special prominence in Fayette County. Peggy Frier's parents, Robert and Jane Frier, came from Yorkshire, England, and after a residence of a few years in Virginia came as pioneers to Kentucky, where Robert Frier was identified with the organization of Fayette County and served as one of the first trustees and later as sheriff of the county and as a delegate to the first Kentucky Constitutional Convention.

Richard P. Stoll was educated in the public schools of Lexington, in the University of Kentucky, and spent several years in the internal revenue service, serving as collector for his district. He became a prominent distiller, and was president of the Commonwealth Distilling Company until its plant and property were sold to the Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Company.

After that he was head of the firm Stoll & Hamilton in the wholesale whiskey business and was head of the firm when he died. He was also president of the Lexington City National Bank and the Lexington Gas Company, was treasurer of the Lexington Railway Company, and his sincere interest in the welfare of his home city enabled him to accomplish an inestimable amount of good in the development of its institutions.

He was a man of wide interests and frequently served as a director of various companies, including remuneration. At the time of his death he was president of the Board of Trustees of the Eastern Kentucky Asylum for the Insane. He was also at one time president of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders Association, and the breeding of fine horses was perhaps his chief hobby. He enjoyed a long record of prominence in the republican party of the state and was a member of the Fayette County in the Legislature in 1875 and again in 1897. He was once a candidate on the republican ticket for state treasurer, and in 1900 a candidate of the Lexington District for Congress. He participated in the famous Republican National Convention of 1880, where he was one of the "Old Guard" of 360 delegates that voted until the end for renomination of General Grant. In 1901 the Richmond Register reported that Mr. Stoll married Elvina Stoll, a native of Louisville, daughter of John G. Stoll, who was a grandson of Gallas Stoll, the founder of the family in America, as above noted. Mr. and Mrs. Stoll had two sons, Richard C. and John G.

Richard C. Stoll, a son of the late Richard Pindell Stoll, is a lawyer by profession while his father was a prominent business man, but otherwise his career bears a striking resemblance to that of his father, particularly in his prominence in citizenship and as a leader in the republican party in Kentucky. He was born at Lexington March 21, 1876, and graduated with the A. B. degree from Kentucky State College in 1895. The State University in 1913 conferred upon him the honorary degree Doctor of Laws. He took his law course in Yale University, graduating LL. B. in 1897, and at once returned to Lexington and began the practice of his profession. As with his honored father, much of his time has been taken up with business affairs. He has served as general counsel of the Kentucky Traction and Terminal Company and the Lexington Utilities Company.

Mr. Stoll served with the rank of colonel on the staff of Gen. John M. Schofield from 1895 until the close of that administration. He was a delegate to the Republican National Conventions representing the Seventh District of Kentucky in 1912, 1916 and 1920, and in 1912 and 1916 was on the notification committees presenting the nomination of the party to Mr. Taft and Mr. Hughes, and in 1920 he was on the committee to notify Calvin Coolidge of his nomination. From 1912 to 1920 he served as chairman of the Fayette County Republican Committee and during 1914-15 was a member of the Kentucky State Board of Election Commissioners. He was especially active during the period of the war, serving as chairman of the Committee on Public Safety of the Kentucky Council of Defense from 1917 until the close of the war, and was state inspector and head of the Protective League for Kentucky during the war period. The organization was one of the most valuable of the volunteer bodies enlisted to assist the Government in the critical era of the war, and acted as an auxiliary in conjunction with the Bureau of Investigation of the Federal Department of Justice.

Mr. Stoll is chairman of the Executive Committee and vice chairman of the Board of Trustees of the University of Kentucky, is a director of the First and City National Bank, is vice president of the Kentucky Yale Club, a member of the Sons of the Revolution, and has served as president of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders Association. He is a member of the Pendennis Club and Country Club of Louisville, Queen City and University Clubs of Cincinnati, Young and Republican clubs of New York, and Lexington and Country clubs of Lexington. Fraternally he is affiliated with Lexington Lodge No. 1, F. and A. M., Lexington Chapter No. 1, R. A. M., Webb Commandery No. 2, K. T., Oleka Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is a Presbyterian. In 1919 Mr. Stoll married Anna Dorothy Chenston, daughter of George W. and Josephine (Satler) Chenston, of Danville, Kentucky. He has one son, Richard Pindell Stoll.

Arthur T. Byron is associated with his brother E. L. in the hardware business at Owingsville, county seat of Bath County, and is also a stockholder in the Farmers Bank of Owingsville, of which his brother E. L. is the cashier. He has gained a place of prominence in connection with business enterprise and civic affairs in his native county, and is a representative of one of the old and influential families of Bath County. He was born on his father's farm in this county November 24, 1871, and is a son of J. N. and Lucinda (Lacy) Byron, both likewise natives of Bath County, where the former was born in 1815 and the latter in 1819. After their father died the property was subdivided, and later the father became a manufacturer of boots and shoes at Owingsville, all work having been done by hand and the business having been developed to one of appreciable scope and profitable returns. The parents, now venerable in years, still reside in Owingsville, secure in the high regard of all who know them and having the distinction of being representatives of pioneer families which aided in the early development and upbuilding of the county along both civic and industrial lines. J. N. Byron is a staunch republican, and in former years he was influential in local politics. He served as a member of the Republican County Committee and he was for four years postmaster of Owingsville, under the administration of President McKinley. Both he and his wife are zealous members of the Christian Church. Of their eleven children, nine sons and two daughters, nine are living at the time of this writing, in 1921: Nannie is the wife of S. D. Thompson; E. L. is cashier of the Farmers Bank of Owingsville and also associated with his brother Arthur T. in the hardware business, as previously noted; Arthur T. was the next in order of birth; O. P. is engaged in the practice of law in the country seat of Kenton County; M. Byron is engaged in the retail grocery business at Owingsville and Ellis C. is similarly engaged at Dayton, Tennessee; C. C. is a hardware merchant at Catlettsburg, Kentucky; Jewell L. is clerk in the hardware store of his brothers at Owingsville; and Miss Ena remains at the parental home, though she is a student in the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music at Cincinnati, Ohio, at the time this sketch is in preparation.

The public schools of Owingsville afforded Arthur T. Byron his early education, which included the curriculum of the high school, and in 1889 he became a clerk in a local hardware store. He gained thorough knowledge of all details of the business and thus was well fortified when in 1890 he formed a partnership with his brother E. L. and engaged independently in them the line of business, the firm having a large and well equipped store and controlling a substantial and prosperous business in the handling of heavy and shelf hardware, stoves and ranges, agricultural implements, etc. Arthur T. Byron is not only a stockholder but also a director of the Farmers Bank. He is a prominent member of the Kentucky Retail Hardware Association, of which he was president in 1920, and of which he had previously served as treasurer and vice president. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party, and both he and his wife are zealous members of the Christian Church at Owingsville, he being a deacon in the same and chairman of its Board of Deacons. He is past master of Bath Lodge No. 55, Free and Accepted Masons; of which he is now secretary. He is a member of the Chapter of Royal Masons and the Commandery of Knights Templars at Mount Sterling, Montgomery County. He is scribe of the Owingsville Chapter of the Royal Arch Masons No. 62.

Mr. Byron married Miss Della McGinty, of Fallmont, this state, she having been graduated in the high school; and in 1893, he was married to Miss Adeline Thomas. Mr. and Mrs. Byron have three children: LaRue, who was graduated from the Owingsville High School, is now in the employ of the American Mutual Insurance Company of Indianapolis, Indiana; Lacy H., a graduate of the high school at Owingsville, is a traveling salesman for the Robinson Brothers Hardware Company; and Vergeline is a graduate of the Kentucky Central University, at Danville, she being now at the parental home and a popular factor in the social life of her native village.

Robert C. Catlett. One of the finest landed estates of Bath County is "Prospect Hill," which comprises 1,000 acres of land two miles south of Owingsville, that is marked by two remarkable features of property that mark it as a model farm estate. Of this property Robert E. Catlett is manager, and his also is the distinction of being a native son of Bath County. He was born at Owingsville on the 29th of April, 1867, and is a son of Dr. John T. and Elva (Ewing) Catlett, the former of whom was born in Virginia, in 1786, and the latter in Montgomery County, Indiana. In 1877, he was graduated from the Prospect Hill, the fine farm estate mentioned above. Mrs. Catlett is a daughter of the late Andrew J. Ewing, who was born and reared in Bath County, and who through his own ability and efforts accumulated a large landed estate in this county, he having developed the Prospect Hill homestead, which was his place of residence until his death. Mr. Ewing was one of the honored and influential of the early owners of the home of Prospect Hill, and the further its civic and industrial progress and commanded the high regard of the community in which his entire life was passed and in which, through his effective energies, he rose from obscurity to a place of prominence as an extensive landholder and successful farmer. He became the father of one son and seven daughters.

Miss Elva Ewing received excellent educational advantages, including those of a private school at North Middletown, Bourbon County, and those of Nazareth College, in which institution she was graduated. Dr. John T. Catlett was a man of fine intellectual attainments and was graduated from a leading medical school. He was a surgeon in the Confederate service in the Civil war, and after its close he became one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Bath County, Kentucky, where he maintained his residence at Owingsville until his death. Both he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church. Of the three children two are living, and the subject of this sketch is the younger. Agnes T., who attended the Mary Bethune Institute; and the Rev. Robert Pierce Winn, of Mount Sterling, Montgomery County.

Robert E. Catlett attended the public schools of Owingsville until he was thirteen years of age, and thereafter he continued his studies in the Kentucky Military Institute at Lyndon, Jefferson County, until his graduation at the age of twenty-one years. He has since given the major part of his time and attention to the management of his mother's extensive landed estate and to the general operations of the Prospect Hill farm. His mother is the owner of 1,635 acres of land, is a stockholder in the Farmers Bank of Owingsville and also in the Montgomery National Bank at Mount Sterling. Mr. Catlett is a democrat in political allegiance, is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias, and he and his wife hold membership in the Presbyterian Church at Owingsville.

In November, 1903, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Catlett and Miss Emily N. Brotherson, who was born and reared in Bath County and who is a daughter of J. R. Brotherson. She graduated from the high school at Owingsville. Mr. and Mrs. Catlett have one daughter, Lucile, who is, in 1921, a student in the college at Roanoake, Virginia.

John Nunnelley, known as one of the vigorous and progressive exponents of agricultural and live-stock industry in his native county, is liberal in his civic attitude and takes consistent interest in all things tending to advance the social and material prosperity of his native county and state.

Frank S. Allen, president of the Exchange Bank of Sharpsburg, represents a family that has been one of distinction in this section of Kentucky from earliest pioneer times to the present. Frank S. Allen is a brother of that eminent American soldier, Maj. Gen. Henry T. Allen.

The founder of the family in Kentucky was John Allen, who was born in James City County, Virginia, in 2790. He died in Wayne County, Indiana, in 1785; and shortly afterward came West and settled in that portion of old Virginia subsequently known as Kentucky. His home was on the Cane River in Bourbon County, and he was the first circuit judge of Bourbon County and one of the commissioners who established the state capital at Frankfort. He and his wife were the parents of fourteen children, seven of whom are still living, the youngest being over sixty years of age. Jennie is the widow of Chester Cracraft; Eliza is the widow of Rev. J. K. Nunnelley. J. W. Allen is a retired merchant; the fourth is Frank S.; S. C. Allen is cashier of the Exchange Bank of Sharpsburg; next to the youngest is Gen. Henry T. Allen, who was born at Sharpsburg, April 13, 1859, and graduated from West Point Military Academy in 1882. He was promoted to the rank of colonel of the regular army in 1903. Other distinctions he as an army officer did much exploration work in Alaska, represented the United States as a military attaché in Russia and Germany, was an officer in the Cuban campaign and in the Philippines, and was organizer and chief of the Philippine Constabulary. He served in the Mexican expedition of 1916 and during the World War was first commander of the 30th Division, then commander of the 90th Division, and finally commander of the 8th Army Corps and in July, 1915, was appointed commander of the American forces in Germany. The youngest of the children is Thomas J., born July 7, 1860, a merchant in Sharpsburg, Kentucky.

Frank S. Allen was born at Sharpsburg, February 16, 1867; and from his early days developed a love for education in common schools. In May, 1886, his father organized the Exchange Bank of Sharpsburg, and soon afterward Frank entered that institution and, in January, 1888, was made cashier. Since 1891 he has been president of the bank, which was incorporated during the seventies. It has a capital of $20,000 and surplus of $10,000. The officials of this old and substantial institution are: Frank S. Allen, president; S. C. Allen, cashier; while the other directors are T. J. Allen, W. S. Linsay, J. R. Crockett and Walter Shront.

Mr. Allen married Miss Imogene Stoner, who died in May, 1882, leaving one daughter, Imogene, now the wife of A. B. Ratliff. On March 14, 1893, Mr. Allen married Lucy B. Talbot. They have two children.
Frances, born January 2, 1894, is a graduate of the Woman's College at Danville and the wife of R. H. Upson, who has achieved many honors in aviation. The son, Frank T., is a graduate of Center College at Danville and is a farmer near Bloomfield in Nelson County. He married Miss Susie Clark. Mr. Allen has four grandchildren and one great-grandchild. Mrs. Allen is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Otto A. Rothert, an old-time pioneer, has among other interests he has 300 acres of farming land in Nelson County, and is interested in coal properties and coal development in Morgan County.

Otto A. Rothert. Intimately associated with the history of his state and city because of his labors in putting into permanent form the record of his times, and his long and arduous research work with reference to the achievements of former generations, Otto A. Rothert, of Louisville, is one of the really important men of Kentucky, and will be remembered with grateful appreciation long after his name has been written on the last page of his life history. He was born at Huntingburg, Indiana, June 21, 1874, a son of Herman and Franziska Weber Rothert. His father was born in Hanover, Germany, in 1828, and came to the United States in 1844, shortly thereafter settling at Huntingburg, Indiana, where his father, Gerhard Rothert, had located a few years previously. After conducting a general store for a number of years Herman Rothert devoted the greater portion of his time to the buying and handling of tobacco, which he exported to Europe. He remained in the tobacco business until 1880, when he retired and moved to Louisville, Kentucky, where he died in 1904, his widow surviving him until 1914. In 1854 he married Franziska Weber, who was born in Baden, Germany, in 1835, and came to America in 1852. They had the following children, named in the order of birth, all of whom were born at Huntingburg, Indiana: Franklin, who died in infancy, Sophia M. B., John H., Hugo C. and Otto A.

Before he completed the high-school course of his native town Otto A. Rothert went to the University of Notre Dame, where after one year of preparatory study and four years of college work he was graduated June 21, 1892, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science.

Following the completion of his collegiate training Mr. Rothert became his father's private secretary, and in the meanwhile did office work, first in the Falls City Tobacco Works and later in the Galt House until, in 1904, he began a twelve-month tour of the West, including Alaska, the Hawaiian Islands and Mexico in his itinerary. Mr. Rothert has visited practically all of the well-known places in North America, and many of those that are not well known. His travels aroused in him an interest in history. Since 1914 he has devoted the greater part of his time to research work, especially in reference to the history of Kentucky. In 1917 he was elected secretary of the Filson Club, which office he still holds.

Mr. Rothert has written a number of newspaper and magazine articles on history and travels. He published two large books: A History of Muhlenberg County, Kentucky, in 1913, and Story of 1907 Poet, Madison Cawein, in 1921, and two small ones: A History of Unity Baptist Church, in 1914, and Local History in Kentucky Literature, in 1915. He now has in preparation a volume on the history of the outlaws in the Ohio Valley in pioneer times.

The Louisville Courier-Journal, June 10, 1921, in an editorial says: "Mr. Rothert is spending his life and means in original historical and biographical work, with no hope of reward except the satisfaction which attends good work well done, much of which would never have been done except for him. He prosecutes this work with such intelligence, unselfishness and sympathy, with such patience, diligence and love, as to insure its permanent value to those who read as well as those who write history. His volume on Cawein is monumental, another result of his labors which already had placed Kentucky under lasting obligations to him and which make for his own name a place in the history of the state that he is collecting and recording."

While not either a club or lodge man, Mr. Rothert is, however, and long has been, an active member of the Louisville Lodge of Elks. Among the historical societies of which he is a member are: The Filson Club, the Kentucky State Historical Society, the Southwestern Indiana Historical Society, the State Historical Society of Wisconsin, the Tennessee Historical Society, the Mississippi Valley Historical Association and the American Historical Association. Mr. Rothert is unmarried.

Arch C. Adams. The responsibilities and honors of business and citizenship go to those who have proved themselves worthy of such either by natural ability or by training. One of the men of outstanding prominence in the Letcher County area of Kentucky is Arch C. Adams, whose career throughout his life has been well known to the people of that section. He has been an able teacher, has taken a share in the work of institutions and local government, and is also a very resourceful banker.

Mr. Adams, who is now cashier of the Blackey State Bank, was born near Whitesburg, February 20, 1874, son of Stephen and Martha (Jenkins) Adams. His grandfather, Isaac Adams, came to Kentucky either from Georgia or North Carolina, and spent his life as a farmer. Stephen Adams was born on Little Cowan Creek in Letcher County in 1850, and was likewise identified with agricultural pursuits. He died January 11, 1911. During the Civil war he was a member of the State Guard in the Union Army. In politics he always voted as a republican. Martha Jenkins was born near Whitesburg in 1859, and is still living at the old homestead on Little Cowan. She is a member of the Regular Baptist Church. Of their eleven children eight are still living. Polly, wife of J. R. Adams, a farmer near London; Arch C.; Susan, wife of J. A. Long, a farmer at Little Cowan; Minerva, wife of J. H. Gibson, living at the old Adams farm; John M., of Whitesburg, where he has been located many years, is associated with the old Union Bank; Mattie and Minnie, twins, the former the wife of Dr. D. M. Fields of Poorfork, while Minnie is the wife of Felix G. Fields, present county attorney; Luella, wife of John Vermillion, on Little Cowan. The children deceased are Jane, the oldest, who died at the age of eighteen; Henry D., who died in childhood; and Cornelia, who died at the age of thirty-eight, the wife of Lee B.

Arch C. Adams as a boy determined to secure a liberal education and made every effort to realize that object. While he attended country schools, he later received superior advantages at Fountain City, near Knoxville, Tennessee, and finished his education in Valparaiso University of Indiana. At the age of seventeen he taught his first term of school, and continued an educator for ten years. In 1901 he became county superintendent of schools of Letcher County.

In banking he had his first experience with the Union State Bank, later was cashier of the Bank of McRoberts for one year, and on leaving that institution took up the practical side of farming on Little Cowan. With the establishment of the Blackey State Bank he accepted the post of cashier.

During the war Mr. Adams was chairman of the Letcher County Draft Board and otherwise active in all patriotic movements in his locality. He and his wife are members of the Baptist Church in Whitesburg, to which town they have recently moved their home. Mr. Adams is clerk of the church and active in Sunday school. He is a republican voter. February 20,
HISTORY OF KENTUCKY

1918, he married Rachel Fields, daughter of Ira Fields. Mrs. Adams was a teacher before her marriage.

ANDREW JACKSON KIRK. An old and representative family of Eastern Kentucky bears the name of Kirk. A name that has long been identified with substantial development as well as being distinguished on both bench and bar. A prominent member of this honorable old family in Johnson County is Judge Andrew Jackson Kirk, who served for twelve years on the Circuit Bench of the Twenty-fourth Judicial District of the State of Kentucky. Since retiring from his judicial duties he has been engaged in the practice of law at Paintsville, and married Mildred Powell, of this city: Louisa, who conducts The Market House at Lexington, Kentucky, married Mollie McWharter, daughter of a prominent real estate dealer at Lexington; Ethel T., who is the wife of Charles York, a real estate dealer at Louisa, Kentucky, where he is also a farmer and is a son of Dr. L. H. York, who owns the River View Hospital at Louisa; Ada J. who is an electrician, carries on an electrical supply house at Paintsville, married Peggy Williams, an accomplished lady and a former teacher; and Chester A., Langley, Louise and Alice May, who reside with their parents.

Not only is Judge Kirk professionally prominent in Johnson County, but his public spirit and solidarity of character have been manifested so frequently and in other directions transmuted surgical practice during an example and leader by his fellow citizens. In political life he has always been of the republican faith, although no man could be called less prejudiced in considering the great questions of the day. He was brought up in a family where the Christian religion was much more than a name, and he has been a member of the Baptist Church, and although for many years he has been a member of the Masonic fraternity, Knight Templar and Shriner, and belongs also to the Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias, as well as to social benevolent organizations that have appealed to his intellectual tastes and his charitable impulses.

WINFIELD SCOTT GABHART, M. D. In the career of Dr. Winfield Scott Gabhart, of Harrodsburg, there is to be found much of a nature encouraging to the youth who without friends or financial assistance is seeking to gain a start on the road to success. Through determination, close application and tireless industry he has worked his way from the humble surroundings of a cabin home on a rough hill farm to the guardianship of a modern and progressive agriculturalist.

Doctor Gabhart was born in a humble home on the Chapman River in Mercer County, January 9, 1887, a son of Morgan and Margaret (Nicholson) Gabhart, natives of the same county, his father having been born on a farm. His home has always been in the same locality, the family, all of whom through their ambition and the influence of their early home training have risen beyond their early environment. C. T. Gabhart is one of the successful farmers of Washington County; William R. Gabhart is one of Mercer County's first farmers and has prospered greatly; and Ada Florence is now the wife of W. O. Trometer, of Cornishville, Mercer County, a modern and progressive agriculturist.

As a lad Winfield Scott Gabhart attended the country school at Cedar Grove until he was sixteen years of age. He had set his mind on a professional career, but finances were lacking at home for the working out of his ambitions, and he accordingly set about to earn the money necessary for his further education. Making his own way, he completed the literary department at Elkhorn Academy, Perryville, Kentucky, after which he taught school for four years, a term each at Cedar Grove, Hungate, Ebenezer and Nevada. With the money thus earned, and by strict economy and doing such honorable work as came to his hand outside of study hours, he attended the University of Kentucky, and graduated with the highest honors of his class, in 1910, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He not only finished with the highest honors of his class, but was vice president thereof, the class consisting of 202 members. These honors were greatly appreciated by Doctor Gabhart, who added practice to theory by serving an internship in the City Hospital, Louisville. On leaving that institution he went to Macksville, Washington County, where he formed a partnership with Dr. W. M. Bussie, and remained there from 1912 to 1914, during which period he took post-graduate courses in New York City, at the world-famous Mayo Brothers' institution at Rochester, Minnesota, and at Chicago. In July, 1918, fully prepared for his work, Doctor Gabhart located at Harrodsburg, where he has since specialized in surgery and in X-ray and radium work. His well-appointed offices and operating rooms are fully equipped with the latest appliances known to the profession, and during the comparatively short period that he has been engaged in his special line of endeavor he has progressed far toward the attainment of something more than local reputation. He is accredited with being possessed of splendid surgical skill, and his knowledge of the subjects upon which he has concentrated is thorough and comprehensive, practical as well as theoretical. He belongs to the teaching bodies, has a number of social and civic connections and is rapidly becoming an important factor in the life of the city.

In 1911 Doctor Gabhart was united in marriage with Miss Marie Jameson, a registered nurse of Louisville, who has been his chief nurse and proficient assistant. During the last two years at Macksville Doctor and Nurse Gabhart conducted a private hospital, on which Mrs. Gabhart was head nurse, and this institution, during its short tenure under the Gabhart management, proved a wonderful success. Two children have come to the Doctor and his wife: Lucille, born January 11, 1914; and Winfield Scott, Jr., born August 19, 1920.

ISAAC N. LEWIS, of Whitesburg, farmer, surveyor and former teacher, is a member of one of the oldest and most prominent families in Letcher County. He was born at the mouth of Colliers Creek on the Cumberland River in Letcher County, January 16, 1871, son of John J. and Clarinda (Kelly) Lewis. His grandfather was Wilson Lewis, a native of North Carolina. This branch of the Lewis family has been in Eastern Kentucky for considerably more than a century. One of its most distinguished members is Judge J. P. Lewis, former secretary of state and now state banking commissioner of Kentucky and also a legal resident of Whitesburg. John J. Lewis, father of Isaac N. Lewis, died in 1918, at the age of sixty-eight. His wife died in 1899, when about fifty-six years of age. She was a native of Wise County, Virginia. John J. Lewis was largely self educated, and at the age of eighteen began teaching, and taught school in a number of localities in Eastern Kentucky. He was also a surveyor and had a scientific and mathematical mind. He filled the office of county surveyor one term. An active business he pursued for a number of years was getting out timber and floating the logs down the Cumberland River. He acquired the ownership of a large tract of land, much of that land being underlaid by coal. He was a Republican and a staunch prohibitionist in sentiment. He and his wife were members of the Regular Baptist Church. Six of their ten children are still living: Jane, wife of D. C. Mullins, a merchant and saw mill operator at Partridge; Isaac N.; Rebecca, wife of Henry D. Raleigh, a farmer at Partridge; Samatha, wife of J. L. McKnight, a farmer at Conway in Rockcastle County; Olhe, wife of T. M. Miller, a farmer at Colliers Creek; and Stacy, wife of a farmer at Mount Vernon. Another son, W. F. Lewis, was a graduate of the Indiana Normal School at Valparaiso, and was a teacher and surveyor, living on Collier Creek, where he died at the age of about thirty-one.

Isaac N. Lewis acquired his early education in the local schools near home, attended Curry College in Lee County, Virginia, and did his active work as a teacher on Sandlick on the Big Cowan, and taught one term on the Poor Fork. In February, 1901, he moved to Sandlick, near Whitesburg, and has conducted his business there ever since. Of his time he has also been devoted to surveying, and he has much of the ability of the family in that line. He is a kindly, affable gentleman, and a citizen who has well earned the wealth of esteem he enjoys.

April 24, 1889, Mr. Lewis married Miss Lizzie Fairchild, who was born on Sandlick, a daughter of J. S. Fairchild. She died June 17, 1920, at the age of sixty-four, four of their children remain: Ruth M., at home; Maggie, wife of S. J. Cornett, of Mount Vernon, Rockcastle County; W. F., who lives at the old Lewis home at the mouth of Colliers Creek, where Isaac Lewis was born; Roy F., now at home, was a soldier in training at Camp Taylor, and his command was under orders to go overseas when the armistice was signed; Clarinda, wife of Roy Cornett, a civil engineer living at Colson; and John S., who died at the age of seventeen, while a student in Berea College.

Isaac N. Lewis is a Chapter Mason, has been master of Whitesburg Lodge and has attended Grand Lodge. He is a Republican in politics.

ROBERT DIXON, president of the Dixon & Moon Wholesale Grocery Company, one of the important and well organized stores of Whitesburg, Kentucky, holds precedence as one of the representative business men of this section of his native state.

Mr. Dixon was born on a farm on Paint Creek, near Paintsville, Johnson County, Kentucky, August 7, 1858. His father, Martin V. Dixon, was born in the State of Virginia in 1805, and was a child at the time of the family immigration to Kentucky, where his parents became pioneer settlers in what is now Johnson County. They having been among the first to establish a home at Paintsville. The father of Martin V. Dixon established a pioneer grist mill at the foot of a hill and below the grove known for many years by the name of its owner, John C. C. Mayo, who was one of the most prominent and influential citizens of Johnson County, where a college at Paintsville is named in his honor. This primitive mill was operated by horse power, and the pioneers came from far and near to avail themselves of its service, persons often coming from points so far distant that they found it necessary to remain over night while waiting their turn in the grinding of grists. Mr. Dixon extended the hospitality of his home in accord with the generous old Southern regime. He was also a minister of the Baptist Church, butduring the Civil war by reason of playing a violin during ministerial services in that community. He continued as one of the honored pioneer citizens of Johnson County until his death, which occurred prior to the Civil war.

Martin V. Dixon became skilled both as a millwright and blacksmith, and he conducted a shop on Paint Creek, near Paintsville. He had remarkable mechanical ability, and designed and constructed all the necessary apparatus to be manufactured with tools. He erected and equipped many grist mills in the Big Sandy Valley, among the number having been Borders Mill on Georges Creek. He owned the greater part of the land on which the town of Paintsville, the county seat, now stands, was a leader in community affairs, and both he and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Dixon, whose maiden name was Isabella Leake, was born in N. C. Porter, was a daughter of Samuel Porter, and she died in 1840, at the age of sixty-seven years. Mr. Dixon attained to the venerable age of eighty years and preceded his wife to the life eternal, his death having occurred in 1885. Of their ten children only three are now living—Robert, of this review; Arminta, the wife of John H. Abel, a contractor in the City of Youngstown, Ohio; and Sarah, the wife of Green George, who is a prosperous farmer near Portsmouth, Ohio. Of the deceased children it may be recorded that John became a farmer in the State of Illinois, where he died at the age of seventy years; Lee died at the age of thirty-five years in Johnson County, and his twin brother, Isaac B., who became a prosperous farmer, died at Louisa, Lawrence County, in 1819; James M. was engaged in the general merchandise business in the village of Cynthiana, Lawrence County, at the time of his death, when a young man.

In a rural school on Paint Creek Robert Dixon gained his early education, and among his teachers was W. E. Connelly, who figures as one of the editors of this history, and when he was twenty years of age Mr. Dixon, with a capital of $600, established a general store in the village of Charles, Lawrence County. The enterprise thrived from the beginning largely, he sold his store and business to his brothers and removed to Louisa, the county seat. In 1830 he was persuaded to accept nomination as the democratic candidate for the office of county clerk, and by successive re-elections he continued the incumbent of this office twelve consecutive years. Mr. Dixon has always maintained a high position in the Masonic Order, and among his fellow-masons is the forty-fifth regiment of infantry from Kentucky, and was in the battle of Cynthiana, one of the last engagements of the war. Returning home after the declaration of peace, he conducted a blacksmith shop at Paintsville for about forty years. His wife died in 1861, when fifty years of age. Lee married Inez, daughter of William Fairchild subsequently married Laura Spradlen. By his first marriage he had five children, as follows: Mary, who is the wife of Dr. F. M. Bayes, for many years a prominent physician of Paintsville; Minta, who is the wife of Dr. W. F. Fairchild, of Flora, Illinois; Alra, who is the wife of Randolph Salmons, of William, Kentucky; Robert, who is the wife of Price, of Paintsville; and Doctor Fairchild, who was second in order of birth.

His schooldays were spent at Paintsville and Flat Gap, and as soon as he could secure the necessary certificate he engaged in teaching school in Johnson County. He read medicine in the office of Dr. F. M. Price, which he entered in 1833. He afterwards removed to Louisa, and was a student at the University of Louisville, known as the University of Louisville, and was graduated therefrom in 1832, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Immediately thereafter he established himself in a general practice at Inez, now the county seat of Martin County. At the time he located at Inez he was a perfect stranger, but so popular did he become that two years later he was elected county clerk.

As may be inferred from a preceding statement, Mr. Dixon is a staunch supporter of the cause of the democratic party, and he has been an ardent worker on the labor of the fraternity and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in the local lodges of which he has passed official chairs, besides having represented the organizations in the respective Kentucky Grand Lodges. In Masonry his affiliations include membership in the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons at Louisa.

Lee married Miss Sadie Borders, who was born at the mouth of Georges Creek, which enters Big Sandy River in Lawrence County, and who is a daughter of the late Arthur Borders. Mr. and Mrs. Dixon have four children; Frederick is engaged in the jewelry business at Louisa, and at the time of this writing is assistant postmaster of the city, in 1921; Lawrence is associated with the wholesale grocery business of which he is the executive head; Roberta remains at the parental home as does also Robert, Jr., who holds a clerical position in the Post Office.

JOHN R. FAIRCILD, M. D. Embraced with a high sense of civic responsibility and the obligations of his profession, Dr. John R. Fairchild is one of the most representative men of Martin County, and one who holds the respect and confidence of his fellow citizens. His standing in his profession is unquestioned, and he has never failed to give to his home city and county more than a fair measure of service.

Doctor Fairchild is a native son of Kentucky, for he was born at Paintsville, Johnson County, October 7, 1835, a son of William and Alva (Estep) Fairchild. William Fairchild was born on Jennie's Creek in 1835, and he is now a resident of Paintsville, and although eighty-six years of age enjoys excellent health. His father, Enoch Fairchild, a blacksmith by trade, came to Johnson County from North Carolina and settled near Paintsville, where he continued his blacksmithing. The men of the Fairchild family have all been natural mechanics, and he found pleasure as well as profit in this business. During the war between the North and the South William Fairchild served as a soldier in the Army, and in the Forty-fifth regiment of infantry from Kentucky, and was in the battle of Cynthiana, one of the last engagements of the war. Returning home after the declaration of peace, he conducted a blacksmith shop at Paintsville for about forty years. His wife died in 1861, when fifty years of age. influence their parents to change their mode of life to a certain extent, if not altogether. Fraternally he is a Mason and Odd Fellow. In politics he is a republican, and has been one of the leaders in his party in Martin County for many years. As the above record shows, it would be difficult to find a man more representative of the best element in his part of the state, or one more deserving of public approval. His fame is greatest as a county judge, a position he won by the connection with the pension department of the Government brought him into contact with some of the leading men of the state and country, and by them he is held in the highest regard as a man of unflinching integrity and unusual ability. When his country was at war he was not found among the slackers, but in the front rank of the earnest and efficient workers. Per- sonally he has not suffered from the burdens of his office, and he labored to give to his locality the best that was in him. Doctor Fairchild wields a powerful influence, for he belongs to two of the most learned professions, and is enthusiastic with reference to both. Having made his Sunday School work his hobby for years, he is achieving some remarkable results through its medium, and the effects of his work will be known for years to come in a better, cleaner and more constructive element among the rising generation.

Herschel Clay Baker, of Columbia, has been a member of the Adair County bar for nearly six decades and is one of the few lawyers still living who tried cases during the Civil war period.

He was born in Cumberland County, Kentucky, December 16, 1845, the son of Joseph and Sarah M. (Alexander) Baker, while his grandparents were William Baker and Joseph Alexander. Judge Baker's forefathers were prominent in the Colonial history of Virginia and in the pioneer era of Kentucky. William Baker, his paternal grandfather, was born in Chesterfield County, Virginia, December 17, 1764, and moved to Cumberland County, Kentucky, in 1805. He had served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war during the latter part of the struggle, and received a pension for that service. The maternal grandfather, Joseph Alexander, was born January 30, 1789, son of John Alexander, who was born in December, 1741, and they removed from Henry County, Virginia, to Cumberland County, Kentucky, John in 1805 and was followed soon afterward by his son. John Alexander was also a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Joseph and his mother moved to Henry County, Virginia March 12, 1807, Nancy Bouldin, a daughter of Joseph Bouldin, who was son of Thomas Bouldin. Col. Thomas Bouldin went from Maryland to Lunenburg, now Charlotte County, Virginia, in 1744. He had married Nancy Clark in Pennsylvania in 1731. Col. Thomas Bouldin held a commission as magistrate, sheriff and lieutenant colonel of militia under the Colonial government of Virginia in the counties of Adair, Russell, Metcalfe, Casey, Cumberland and Monroe. Judge Baker was on the bench six years.

For two or three years he was engaged in editorial work as owner and editor of the Columbia Spectator. He also served for several years as a director and president of the Bank of Columbia. He was a presidential elector in 1866 on the sound money ticket headed by Palmer and Buckner, and since that campaign has supported the republican party. He is a Royal Arch Mason and an elder in the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.

At Lebanon, Kentucky, October 15, 1897, Judge Baker married Dolly Miller Lisle, daughter of Thomas Waller and Nancy Lisle of Green County. Her father was a prominent lawyer and business man of Greensburg, at one time was a presidential elector and was a member of the Kentucky Constitutional Convention of 1850. The children of Judge and Mrs. Baker are: W. Lisle Baker, cashier of the Bank of Monticello; Sallie, A. Baker, of Columbia; Mrs. W. R. Walker of Cleburne, Texas; Tyler A. Baker, of Cleburne; Mrs. W. D. Jones, of Knoxville, Tennessee; and Herschel T. Baker, of Columbia.

McClellan Calvin Kirk. There is much of an encouraging nature in the career of McClellan Calvin Kirk to be found by the ambitious youth who is forced to make his way without the assistance of financial aid or influential friends. He was trained as a lawyer and educated at the University of Kentucky. He was the son of a prominent Presbyterian minister and a Presbyterian mother and younger brothers and sisters by the death of his father when he was but a youth, he not only accepted and discharged his responsibilities in a capable manner, but also managed to secure an education that formed a substantial foundation upon which he has built a real structure of success. Today he is a leading citizen, a leader of the Johnson County bar, and one of the men actively helpful in the civic affairs of Paintsville.

Mr. Kirk was born November 8, 1868, on a farm located near the present site of Warfield, Martin County, Kentucky, upon which property were also born his father, James T. Kirk, and his grandfather, John Kirk. The latter and a brother, Thomas Kirk, were ministers of the Primitive Baptist faith and were prominent in the organization of several churches of that denomination in Eastern Kentucky, James T. Kirk died in 1883, at the age of fifty-seven years, while his widow, who bore the maiden name of Sarah C. Mash, now resides at Inez, Martin County, aged seventy-four years. She was born in North Carolina and came to Kentucky in the year 1867. Mr. Kirk was active in the development of mines at Warfield under the direction of Col. G. R. C. Floyd, and was manager of the salt works at that place. He served a term as jailer of Martin County and was active in politics, as have been other members of the family, who have likewise taken an active part in church work. He and his wife, Sarah C., were the parents of four children: McClellan Calvin; Nora, the wife of P. F. Ward, an attorney at St. Louis, Missouri; Lee, of Huntington, West Virginia; and Myrtle, the wife of H. B. Barcus, of Los Angeles, California.

The eldest of his parents' children, McClellan C. Kirk, was called upon to assist in the family's support when only a boy. With the advantages of only limited public school training in Martin County, he went to work in a coal mine belonging to the Peach Orchard Mining Company, and at the end of two years was its manager. Eventualy he was able to realize his cherished ambition of securing a legal training, and in 1894 was graduated from the Valparaiso (Indiana) Law School, following which he entered upon the practice of his profession at Inez, where he was associated in practice with Judge A. J. Kirk for six years. He was police judge of Inez from 1895 to 1899, and also served as the county coroner for six years. Following this he came to Paintsville, where he has since been engaged in practice. In addition to having a large private clientele, which covers the entire Big Sandy Valley, he is local counsel for the C. & O.
Railway Company in Johnson, Floyd, Pike and Lawrence Counties, and counsel for the Mrs. John C. Mayo Company, Mrs. S. P. Fetter, the Consolidation Coal Company, the North-East Coal Company and many others of the leading business enterprises of his section. He is a hard and industrious worker, and no lawyer in the valley is more painstaking and studious.

In 1890 Mr. Kirk was united in marriage with Miss Bessie Cassidy, daughter of Benjamin and Angelina Cassidy of Martin County, and they have two sons: K. Russell and W. H. Mr. Kirk is a man of domestic tastes and is devoted to his family. He, nevertheless, enjoys the society of his fellow citizens, and is a popular member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellers, the Knights of Pythias, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Inez Lodge, F. and A. M., of which he was master for five years, Louisa Chapter, R. A. M., Ashland Commandery, K. T., and Covington Consistory, R. and S. M., having become a Master Mason at the age of twenty-one years. He belongs also to the Shrine at Ashland. He is public-spirited and always ready to aid in the movements that elevate the intellectual and material advancement of the community. During the World war he was chairman of the Johnson County Draft Board, and took a leading part in the Y. M. C. A., Red Cross and Liberty Loan drives. A republican in politics, he has taken an active part in public affairs, and is a member of the national and State boards.

Inez Cardinal, a member of his family, is the natural daughter of the late Rev. James Turner, a noted Presbyterian minister of Bedford County, Virginia. Mary Turner's mother was Sallie Leftwich, a daughter of William Leftwich, who was a lieutenant colonel in the American forces during the War of the Revolution and also captain of militia during the Colonial wars. The father of Francis A. Hopkins was John Calvin Hopkins.

Francis Alexander Hopkins was a native of Old Kentucky, Virginia of prominent colonial ancestry, and was a transplanted citizen to Eastern Kentucky. He was born at Jeffersonville, now known as Tazewell in Tazewell County, Virginia, May 27, 1853. His grandfather John Hopkins was a Revolutionary soldier, and his father was Rev. James Turner, a noted Presbyterian minister of Bedford County, Virginia. Mary Turner's mother was Sallie Leftwich, a daughter of William Leftwich, who was a lieutenant colonel in the American forces during the War of the Revolution and also captain of militia during the Colonial wars. The father of Francis A. Hopkins was John Calvin Hopkins.

Francis Alexander Hopkins was educated in the Tazewell High School and in early life exhibited what was to develop into one of his predominating characteristics, namely, the championing of what he considered to be right. In January, 1874, he moved from Tazewell to Prestonsburg, Floyd County, Kentucky, where he was soon admitted to the bar and subsequently rose to the position of one of the leading attorneys of the county.

From the outset of his career he was before the public in one or another capacity, and in all the trusts imposed upon him he proved the staunch faithfulness of his character. In 1882 he was elected superintendent of schools of Floyd County, and during his term he succeeded in imparting a new quality and better standards to free school education. Later he was chosen a delegate to represent the counties of Floyd, Knott and Letcher in the convention which framed the present Constitution of Kentucky. In that body he was the moving spirit in having incorporated into the Constitution a section which forfeited all claims under the Old Virginia Land Grants for failure to list for taxation, thereby clearing away the cloud from the titles of the land owners of Eastern Kentucky which by the existence of these Old Virginia land grants impeded development of the natural resources of this section of the state. He was a member of the Board of Trustees of the State University of Kentucky for a number of years and was uniriting in his efforts to make the institution second to none in the country. In 1908 Mr. Hopkins was re-elected to the Fifty-ninth Congress and in 1910 was re-elected, serving in the Fifty-ninth Congress. During both terms he attracted attention by his work on both in committee and on the floor of the house. The chief subject of his study while in Washington was immigration. During his labors in connection with this important national question he was invited to address and did appear before numerous organizations in New England, and before retiring from Congress he introduced a bill to restrict immigration. However, his ideas on that subject were in advance of the times Mr. Hopkins was elected as a delegate at large from the State of Kentucky in 1916, sitting in the National Convention of that year. From the day he came to the state Congressmen Hopkins was a leader in clean politics. Outside of his efforts to put his party in power in the State of Kentucky for his efforts, particularly in his later years, to introduce a better grade of livestock into his portion of the state. He was always ready to labor with his people for better conditions generally. He was a Mason of very high standing.

In his death which occurred at Prestonsburg June 5, 1928 this city and state lost one of its leading citizens, to represent them on the largest and most important issues of the times. So far this sketch has considered chiefly the formal details of his life. Fortunately a better tribute to the real elements of his strength and nobility of character are at hand in a beautiful tribute that was paid him by Governor Augustus Owlesy Stanley of Kentucky. This tribute is given in full:

"It was my good fortune to know Frank Hopkins as few knew him. During many long and pleasant years of close and intimate acquaintance I was privileged to see and, in a measure, to understand him as a citizen, as a statesman and as a man; to sit by his hearthstone and to know something of that ideal home life which was the source of his deepest and most abiding joy. I knew him as husband and as father and as friend.

"Frank Hopkins was not a politician. He instinctively abhorred the art and artifices of politics. High official position came to him as a deserved tribute from an intelligent and appreciative constituency who understood his worth. It was not attained by the cunning or the devices of the professional office-seeker. He was inherently honest, instinctively sincere, unconsciously courteous, loyal to all friends for whom he approached every public question with an open mind, giving it careful, earnest and thorough investigation before reaching and expressing an opinion. When once convinced of the justice of a cause, he was adamant, and no fear of popular disfavor, no thought of personal aggrandizement, ever induced him to depart from the straight path of duty.

"He was big of heart as well as of brain. In Congress and out, and especially during the stress and peril of present conditions, his constant thought was of the people of the mountains and especially of Floyd County. Their success, their security and their happiness were an integral part of his noble life, and in his uniriting, disinterested devotion he labored without ceasing for the material development of his county and for the happiness of his people. He was essentially practical. Philanthropy with him was not an idle emotion—it was a sane, fixed and indomitable purpose.
Alice G. Hopkins.
"To increase the fertility of the soil and the diversity of the crops, to raise the standard and character of livestock, to improve domestic conditions, the home life of the poor, these were the things of which he thought more, infinitely more, than of his own personal property.

"His friends and his neighbors will know only when he is gone how much they owe this stalwart, gentle, modest man. Possessing an accurate and varied knowledge of public and private life, and an unassuming, uncomplaining spirit, it is only after he is gone that they whom he loved and for whom he labored will fully appreciate the inestimable value of his superb and tireless service to the new life of enterprise and progress just opening to the people of Eastern Kentucky."

"Few great men have ever stood the crucial test of intimate acquaintance as Frank Hopkins stood it. The nearer you awoke in Floyd County in October and better. He was immaculate in his domestic life, the most loyal and devoted of husbands, the fondest and gentlest of fathers. It was in the privacy and in the happiness of his home that I learned to love and to treasure this great and good man.

"He leaves to those who loved a noble and distinguished career, the memory of a life that is as inspiring and as beautiful as some old sweet song. A great and good people and a loving at heart erected monument to his memory, but more lasting than Corinthian brass or marble or granite are the noble deeds of the man himself."

Francis Alexander Hopkins married in November, 1876, Miss Alice Gray Davidson, daughter of Joseph Morgan and Mary Amanda (Hatcher) Davidson. By family position and by her individual qualifications Mrs. Hopkins was in every way fitted to share in the important destiny of Mr. Hopkins. She was born at Prestonsburg November 23, 1857. Her father Joseph Morgan Davidson, who was born in Floyd County June 25, 1837, was the first sheriff of that county after the war, represented it two terms in the Legislature, and at the time of his death on September 9, 1882, was candidate for Congress. He was a very successful business man, owning large tracts of land, and some of the best farms in Eastern Kentucky have been developed on lands once owned by him. Joseph M. Davidson stood considerably over six feet in height, and his physical stature was well matched by his native intellect and force of character. However, he was virtually self educated. His parents Samuel P. and Judith (Lackey) Davidson were natives of Old Virginia and pioneers of Eastern Kentucky. They were of Scotch ancestry. The mother of Mrs. Hopkins, Mary Amanda Hatcher, was born September 17, 1833, and she survived her husband, passing away May 11, 1890. She left four daughters: Mary Sallie, wife of H. H. Fitzpatrick now living at Prestonsburg; Mrs. Alice G. Hopkins; Josephine B.; and Anna Martha who died in 1885. Mrs. Hopkins acquired, partly through her own determined efforts, a liberal education. She attended public schools, for six months was a student at the Female Seminary at Steubenville, Ohio, and also attended a school at College Hill near Cincinnati and the Glendale Seminary. Once she rode seventy-five miles on horseback to attend school. Mrs. Hopkins is a faithful member of the Methodist Church.

Five children were born to Francis A. Hopkins and wife: Joseph Davidson Hopkins, born October 13, 1877, and died June 30, 1879; Elizabeth Anne; Mary Martha, born March 30, 1882, and died June 5, 1882; John Calvin; and Josephine Davidson Hopkins. Of the two surviving daughters, Elizabeth Anne was born May 17, 1879, was educated in the public schools of Prestonsburg, in the Glendale Female College of Glendale, Ohio, and on December 29, 1898, was married to William Henry Layne of Prestonsburg. She is a devout Presbyterian and to the untiring efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Layne are due the present existence and strength of the Presbyterian Church at Prestonsburg.

The younger surviving daughter Josephine Davidson Hopkins was born September 8, 1885. She was also educated in the public schools of Prestonsburg and finished in the Hamilton College and Campbell-Hagerman College of Lexington, Kentucky. On September 7, 1904, she was united in marriage with Thomas Edward Dimick of Prestonsburg, a son of G. H. Dimick, pioneer oil and gas man of Pennsylvania who came to Kentucky in the year 1889. Mrs. Dimick is also an active member of the Presbyterian Church.

Col. John C. Hopkins, worthy son of an illustrious father—the late Francis A. Hopkins, whose career has been reviewed—has enjoyed a successful place among the members of the legal profession of Floyd County, is a native of Prestonsburg, and is one of the thoroughly alert, progressive and public spirited citizens of that community.

He was born at Prestonsburg June 25, 1883, and in addition to his early training in the public schools he attended Hogsett Military Academy at Danville, Kentucky, the Randolph-Macon Academy at Bedford, Virginia, and finished his literary training in Center College at Danville, where he was graduated A. B. in 1902. Colonel Hopkins studied law at the University of Virginia as a member of the class of 1906. He was admitted to the bar in 1906 and at once began practice at Prestonsburg, where he rose to a high place in his profession. He had attracted a large, prominent and lucrative clientele when owing to ill health he was forced to discontinue his professional career and he now devotes his time to managing his personal and his mother's extensive interests.

The military title by which his many friends over Eastern Kentucky always identify him is the result of his appointment on December 28, 1915, as aide de camp on the governor's staff with the rank of colonel by Governor Augustus Owsey Stanley. Colonel Hopkins was sincerely devoted to the cause of the Government during the World war. He was appointed Government Appeal Agent for the local board of Floyd County pursuant to Act of Congress of May 7, 1917. He has thus honorably relieved of his duties as such March 31, 1919. He was also appointed and served as a member of the Legal Advisory Board of Floyd County pursuant to Act of Congress of May 18, 1917, and continued this work until honorably released March 31, 1919. Thus for over two years, from America's entrance into the war with the Central Powers, he had official responsibilities and outside of them he lent the full strength of his private aid and influence to a speedy and effective prosecution of the war.

Colonel Hopkins is associated with many of the companies engaged in the development of the mining industry in Floyd County and Eastern Kentucky. He also does an important work in carrying on the agricultural enterprise inaugurated by his father. While somewhat inclined to politics his work in that direction has never been actuated by any desire for personal preeminence. Colonel Hopkins became a Mason just after reaching his majority, and rapidly rose through the York Rite to the Commandery and through the Scottish Rite to the thirty-second degree. He is also a member of the Mystic Shrine.

On December 15, 1900, Colonel Hopkins was united in marriage with Miss Valentine Pieratt, of Mount Sterling, Kentucky, a granddaughter of Hon. John Wickliffe Kendall, of West Liberty, Morgan County, Kentucky, prominent in matters of State and Governmental affairs, having served in the Legislature of Kentucky for term after term, having been elected and served as commonwealth's attorney in his judicial district for years, and having been elected to and served in the Congress of the United States from the Tenth Congressional District of Kentucky, where he was stricken and died while prosecuting his duties. To the marriage of John Calvin Hopkins and Valentine Pieratt has been born one son, John Calvin, Jr., born July 22, 1918.

Oscar M. Johnson, the oldest Shorthorn cattle breeder in Kentucky, became interested in that industry as a boy when he purchased his first registered cow. That was long before the beginning of boys clubs and other popular means now used to stimulate and encourage youthful enterpriser. This enterpriser in stock breeding Mr. Johnson for many years has been prominent in Shorthorn circles in Kentucky, and is one of the men who have made their prosperity through purely bred livestock.

Mr. Johnson, whose home for the last fifteen years has been at Millersburg, was born in Nicholas County, and is of old Kentucky blood. He first saw the light of day August 17, 1858. That land has been in the possession of the Johnson family for at least a century. His father, Mason Johnson, was born there June 1, 1824. The grandfather, Jonathan Johnson, came to Nicholas County, Kentucky, from Virginia. He acquired 200 acres of land in that locality and immediately engaged in agriculture, living there until his death at the age of eighty-six. He married Rachel Dills at Cynthia, and she died at the old homestead in 1859. They were the parents of three sons and two daughters, named Mason, Hiram, John, Nancy, who became the wife of Elijah Summit, and Rachel, who was the wife of John Steere.

The son of the old farm homestead descended to Mason Johnson, who married Patsey Virginia. They were the parents of four sons: Bruce and Charles N., both deceased; Stewart, a merchant in Texas; and Oscar M.

Oscar M. Johnson attended the country schools near the old farm until he was about eighteen, and after that had a share of the farm labors until he was twenty-one, when he bought ninety acres of land near by, the terms being $500 due at once, together with a registered Shorthorn cow, known as Nannie G, for which he paid $150. He had developed a considerable herd of this fine stock by the time he was twenty-one. He inherited the 300 acres homestead from his father, and in that locality and on that land his active interests were centered until January 1, 1909, when he moved into the farming community with his family. In all, he has forty acres under cultivation, many of which are in clover. His farm is located directly on the Kentucky Central Railroad at Millersburg. The soil is all well-drained and the weather has been fairly average for the last ten years. The rainfall has been fairly liberal, the average from 20 to 25 inches. He has found the weather rather dry during the planting season, but on the whole the climate is favorable to the growth of tobacco. The crops of late have been high in yield and in quality.

Mr. Johnson has held an annual sale of Shorthorns. His herd is now headed by Premier, one of the champion bulls in the show ring. He paid for Premier $625.00. Mr. Johnson is one of the directors of the Kentucky Shorthorn Association, and is a director of the Farmers Bank of Millersburg. He is a democrat in politics and a member of the Christian Church.

December 18, 1889, at Paris, he married Miss Katie Myall. She was born in Bourbon County, Kentucky, July 21, 1860, and is a graduate of Hamilton College at Lexington. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have two children. The daughter, Ethel, is a graduate of the Millersburg Female College and the wife of Alexander Miller, of Millersburg. The son, Robert M., graduated from the Military Institute at Millersburg and is now in the life insurance business in Paris, Kentucky. He married Eldora Chambers, of Maysville.

Thomas S. Robertson, farmer, stock raiser and banker at Bethel, has achieved substantial prominence as a citizen and business man in this community that has known him all his life and in which his family has played a useful role since pioneer times.

Mr. Robertson was born near Bethel in Bath County January 31, 1893, son of A. G. and Margaret A. (Stone) Robertson and grandson of Richard and Philadelphia (Stone) Robertson. Richard Robertson came to Bath County at an early day with his maiden sister, Nancy Robertson. On Bald Eagle in Bath County he visited the family of Valentine Stone, whose daughter Philadelphia he married, and they then settled on part of the Valentine Stone estate. Richard Robertson and wife operated a farm and reared eight children, all deceased. Their son, Albert G. Robertson, was born February 7, 1825, and became a prosperous farmer. He was deeply interested in religious movements and was a deacon in the Bethel Christian Church. In politics he was a democrat. He and his wife had six children: Belle, wife of William McCray, a farmer near North Middletown; Lula, wife of C. Hazelrigg, a former sheriff of Bath County; Mary D., wife of M. T. Botts, of Mount Sterling; A. R., a land owner and loose leaf tobacco dealer; and Thomas S.

Robertson also raised sheep, and grew up on his father's farm, but in addition to the district schools attended high school and Transylvania College at Lexington. After completing his college course he engaged in the loose leaf tobacco business, and for some time represented the Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Company over this section of Kentucky. He owns a handsome country place, large farm, and is active as a member of the General Farming. His livestock specialty has been mules.

Mr. Robertson married Miss Stella H. Scott, who died in 1918, the mother of three children: Albert S., the eldest, attended Transylvania University three years and married Stella Crouch; Lila Ruth is a graduate of high school and of Hamilton College at Lexington with the class of 1918, and is a graduate of Randolph Macon Woman's College in Virginia. The youngest, Harold S., is a high-school graduate, Mr. Robertson married for his present wife, Miss Catherine Cochran, of Lexington, Kentucky. She graduated from the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music in 1890, and is one of the most talented musicians in Bath County. She studied abroad, and for a number of years was a teacher of music. Mr. and Mrs. Robertson are active members of the Christian Church and Sunday school workers. He is a democrat, and is affiliated with Newton Lodge No. 286, F and A. M.

Joe W. Kenton is one of three brothers who hold and farm together one of the largest estates in Nicholas County, Kentucky. They are the sons of Simon Kenton, who was a prominent citizen and farmer, and represented the accumulations of the late W. J. Kenton, their father. This farm is on the Maysville and Lexington Pike, nine miles south of Carlisle.

W. J. Kenton was born in Nicholas County, November 9, 1842, son of Simon Kenton and directly related to the famous family of Kentucky pioneers that included the great scout and companion of Daniel Boone, also named Simon Kenton. W. J. Kenton was reared and educated in Nicholas County, and on February 13, 1868, married Margaret McClanahan, who was born May 18, 1837. On the McClanahan farm at one time stood the county seat of Nicholas County. After their marriage W. J. Kenton and wife began housekeeping on Sugar Creek, and so limited was their family that they had no time for tables, and it was their custom to go out and fish or hunt for their meals. They lived on Sugar Creek from their marriage until October, 1804, and then moved to the farm where the widowed mother still resides. W. J. Kenton was a charter member, past master and secretary for many years of Blue Lodge No. 495, F, and A. M. He was a republican in politics. His brothers are Marcus, Charles and Joe W. Marcus married Isadorea Bradley, and Charles married Carrie Brasfield. These three brothers took their Masonic degrees and were made masters the same night in Blue Lodge. Joe and Charles are both past masters, while Marcus is present master of the lodge. They are all republican voters. Joe and Marcus are also members of Nicholas Chapter No. 18, R. A. M.
They own the old estate of 1,100 acres in common, and are easily among the most extensive farmers in this section of the state.

Joe W. Kenton was born in Nicholas County, February 8, 1824, on the farm where he was born, and is of the family of John Madison, who died in 1850, and Susie Rafferty, the latter a native of Nicholas County. She was born October 4, 1874, daughter of Daniel and Mary (Deland) Rafferty. Her parents were natives of Ireland and married at Carlisle, Kentucky, after which they located in the Maysville Pike, where they lived until her father was killed at the age of seventy-six. In the family were five children: Anna, Henry, Sally and Susie. Anna was the wife of James George, and left two children. Mrs. Joe Kenton is a member of the Catholic Church.

ARRIS WIGGINS is one of the largest land owners in Nicholas County, and has had a life-long connection with farming in Eastern Kentucky. His home is on the Lexington and Maysville Pike, 3½ miles northwest of Carlisle.

Mr. Wiggins was born in Mason County, Kentucky, November 18, 1856, son of Clayburn and Sarah (Buckler) Wiggins. His father was a native of Maryland, while his mother was born in Fleming County, Kentucky. Clayburn Wiggins came to Kentucky when a young man, and after his marriage settled on a farm in Mason County. He was one of the very prosperous farmers of his day, and built up a large estate in land and other property. He was a republican, and he and his wife were Methodists. Of their eight children seven are still living: Rachel, wife of James Meis; Effie, wife of Abe Shepherd, of Fleming County; Alice, wife of Jefferson Wheatley; Nancy, widow of Henry Saxon; M. T. Wiggins, a farmer in Mason County; Arris; and Wilson B., also in Mason County.

Arris Wiggins grew up on his father's farm and as a youth attended school, chiefly in the winter term, while the rest of the year was spent in the labors of the farm. As his share of his father's estate he received about three thousand dollars, and with this he bought land in Mason County and farmed there for several years. In 1890 he removed to Nicholas County and bought the Governor Metcalf farm of 255 acres. He continued to live there for nearly thirty years, but in 1921 he sold his farm to Mr. E. H. Lawyer for 150 acres, which is his present home. From this he gives his supervision to his extensive property comprising some twelve hundred acres in Nicholas County.

Mr. Wiggins is a republican in politics. February 9, 1910, he married Mary B. Taylor.

W. L. COLEMAN, of Russellville, entered the railroad service when he left college, has had successive promotions in responsibility, and is the present freight agent of the Louisville & Nashville at Russellville.

Mr. Coleman was born at McKenzie in Carroll County, Tennessee, July 14, 1867. His paternal ancestors came out of Ireland and were early settlers in North Carolina. His grandfather, William Albert Coleman, was born in North Carolina in 1824. Moving west into Carroll County, Tennessee, he became a farmer on a large scale and lived there until his death at McKenzie in 1910, at the age of eighty-six. He married Margaret Norman, who was born in North Carolina in 1829 and died at McKenzie in 1909. Their son, J. W. Coleman, was born in Carroll County in 1861. He grew up a farmer, was a merchant for six years, but then resumed farming, and still lives near McKenzie, where he owns a large amount of land and does a profitable business as a stock breeder. He has served as a magistrate in his home community, is a democrat, a member of the Presbyterian Church and is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World. J. W. Coleman married Anna Beadles, who was born in Carroll County, Tennessee, in 1863. W. L. Coleman is the oldest of their six children. Grady is a farmer in Carroll County. Lucille is at home, Guy is in the yard office of the Illinois Central Railroad at Cairo, Illinois, and Margaret and Louise are both at home.

Mr. Coleman spent his youthful years on his father's farm in Carroll County, attended rural schools, and up to the age of twenty was a student in Bellevue College of the Presbyterian Church at McKenzie. He received his early training in railroad at McKenzie, beginning as clerk for the joint station of the Louisville & Nashville and the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railroads. From that he was promoted to ticket clerk and in November, 1913, was assigned to duty at Russellville. He and his family reside at Louisville & Nashville, became chief clerk in June, 1916, and since December 6, 1918, has been freight agent.

His work as a railroad man was an essential service during the World war, but he also actively participated in the various local campaigns in Logan County in behalf of the various drives for funds and other purposes. Mr. Coleman is a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church at Russellville and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of the Maccabees. His home is at 206 East Second Street. July 18, 1908, at McKenzie, Tennessee, he married Miss Lillian Brooks, daughter of J. E. and Essie Brooks. Mrs. Brooks lives with Mr. and Mrs. Coleman. The father, who died at Stanley, Kentucky, March 18, 1917, was an officer in the army of the Louisville & Nashville, and the mother was daughter of the Louisville, Henderson & St. Louis Railroads. Mr. and Mrs. Coleman have three children: Thomas, born November 14, 1912; Joseph, born November 4, 1916; and Lillian Elizabeth, born July 10, 1919.

THOMAS PINCKNEY HILL was born at Springfield, Washington County, Kentucky, August 30, 1826, the descendant of that class of pioneers who wrested the wilderness from the Indian savages, and made it into a Commonweal th. His paternal ancestors came from Maryland into what is now Kentucky about the year 1782, Clement Hill being the first of the name to migrate here. His mother was Louisa Peyton whose grandfather, Valentine Peyton, a soldier of the Revolution, came from Virginia into Kentucky at the close of the War for Independence, and her maternal grandfather, Matthew Speed, was also a Revolutionary soldier. The latter belonged to the same family as James Speed, attorney general in Mr. Lincoln's cabinet. Colonel Hill's father was Thomas P. Hill, who practiced law for a short time at Springfield, Kentucky, and in New Orleans, dying at an early age. His father's brother, the late Hon. Clement Hill, of Lebanon, Kentucky, was a gifted lawyer, who attained high rank in his profession.

Thomas P. Hill received his literary education at St. Mary's College, of Marion County, Kentucky. He then took up the study of law, his preceptor being Hon. John Kinkade, himself a man of massive mind, and a renowned practitioner of the Kentucky bar. Upon obtaining a law license, Mr. Hill moved to Missouri, but in a short time he returned to his native state, locating at Monticello, in Wayne County, of which he was appointed county attorney in 1848. Afterwards he resided at Somerset, Kentucky, for a brief period, and in 1854 he came to Lincoln County, Kentucky, where he lived for the remainder of his life.

Soon after attaining his majority, Mr. Hill married Miss Maria Peyton, of Lincoln County, and of this marriage three children survive. Miss Hill died in 1867. In 1889 Mr. Hill married Miss Frances Powler, widow of Col. A. F. Powler of Little Rock, Arkansas. She died in 1901. Some time after her death, Colonel Hill married Miss Mary Peyton, of Standiford, Kentucky, who survived him.
To say that Colonel Hill was a splendid lawyer is but stating a truth that becomes self-evident when we examine his mental characteristics. He possessed an alert, penetrating mind that could quickly, almost intuitively, separate truth from error; a wonderful power of analysis that could penetrate the most involved propositions and cast them, with apparent ease, into their component elements; a process of thought so unerringly logical that it struck directly at the very heart of an adversary argument, no matter how spacious it might be. Hence, without a single fear of being overtaxed, he always grasped the issues, and, as they were presented, dismissed the rest, discharging him in case the pregnant facts, and to dismiss from his attention those that were but incidental.

To these natural qualifications he added a rich learning acquired through years of close application to the law. He was profoundly versed in the doctrines of the Common Law. His feeling toward it was akin to reverence. He appreciated, of course, its weaknesses; he knew its imperfections, but too, he saw the grandeur of it, saw in it the unconquerable spirits of the Anglo-Saxon race, its love of justice, its struggles for equality, and its aspirations for freedom. He delighted to search its principles and vindicate its rules by solving with them the problems that met him in the court room and in his private life. Insensible to its independence and to the modern practice of sustaining a proposition merely by citation of cases, always with him it was the voice of reason that must decide, not the echo of authority.

But his pre-eminent characteristics as a lawyer was his power in argument before the panel. With a remarkably rich vocabulary, and a fluency of speech that boded no hesitation, he united a voice of rich expression, a timbre that lay every emotion captive to its utterance and a grace of gesture that the finished actor might have envied. He understood human nature so thoroughly that he could play upon the sensibilities of his auditors as the musician his violin, Pathos-laughter-thet affections, he loosed and bound the feelings as he desired. When occasion required it, he brought to his aid a wealth of imagery and transported the jury by the flights of his eloquence, or, again, he would enforce his argument by homely illustrations common to the experiences of all, and thus win their intimate confidence. Indeed, of him, as of Rufus Choate, it might truly be said, "He was the Rider of the Twelve."

Though liberally endowed with qualities that would surely have won him recognition from the public had he sought it, Colonel Hill never cared for political preferment. But this does not mean that he took no concern in affairs of public moment. On the contrary, the natural bent of his mind, as well as the intimate study of the history of our republic, its peculiar institutions, and the development and the significance of our political parties, caused him to have a deep interest in public affairs. In truth, he was a student of the science of government. Therefore, he took delight in politics in its character as an interpreter and administrator of the true powers of government; but to that phase of it that has to do merely with the distribution of spoils, he was absolutely indifferent.

A staunch believer in the tenets of democracy as espoused by Jefferson, Jackson, and Cleveland, his powers as a public speaker caused him frequently to be summoned to the hustling in times of state and national campaigns. Before the people as the jury he was the master of the situation. He never failed to speak his very first utterance would rivet the attention of his audience. There was something about his voice that held one fascinated. It was so clear, so penetrating, and susceptible of such excellent modulation, that instinctively one felt that he was listening to a master of art, of vocal expression. His fluency and felicity of speech were as striking as his voice. Not only did he have a full vocabulary, but he could fit the word exactly to the idea. So characteristic of him as a speaker was this, that frequently by his phrases, by reason of their aptness, became current ever afterwards with those that heard him.

These, however, are but the graces of oratory, but are means to an end. The man who is worthy of the name of orator must have far more than these accomplishments, he must have a message to deliver. So it was with Colonel Hill. He spoke from a full comprehension of the issues of the day, and he spoke with power. His mind at once, constructive and analytical, and seasoned by deep reflection, grasped with mastery the issues before the people and unfolded them to his hearers so clearly and simply that the most stolid among them felt that thrill that comes to one when first stirred by awakened processes of thought. They left his presence charmed with the music of his voice, it is true, but, far better than that, they left his presence taught to think.

In 1801 Colonel Hill voluntarily retired from the practice of law. He had amassed a large estate, but, as he was in full possession of his faculties, in splendid health, devoted to his profession, and with a wide clientele, his retirement was an unusual act. His explanation of it was significant. He said he wished to step quietly out of the way and give to the younger members of the bar.

The temperament revealed a prominent trait of his character—his interest in the younger attorneys. He invited them to discuss with him their cases, and he was ever ready to help them untangle their knotty problems. He loved to be with them, to come in touch with their buoyancy, and to live over again his first days at the bar. They, in turn, welcomed him to their circles. They admired and respected him, but, more than that, they entertained a warm affection for him. Their relations with him were not marked by that aloofness so often found between age and youth; it was characterized by a beautiful spirit of close comradship. In his passing they lost both counselor and friend.

Not only in his profession, but also in the field of polite literature he was broadly cultivated. He had a comprehensive knowledge of history, ancient, mediæval, and modern, and his powerful imagination lent itself readily to the study of the poets; while he was unusually familiar with the Latin classics. The character of his mind was reflected in his favorite writers—Tacitus, Horace, Tasso and Milton. Socially, Colonel Hill was a delightful companion. He was so gifted as a conversationalist that, like Dr. Samuel Johnson, in a great gathering he was found being heard with pleasure while his hearers almost felt his presence.

His favorite topic was the law. He loved to dwell upon its majesty to show that it was indeed an exalted calling. His devotion to his profession was inspiring. "It partook," as one who knew him has truly said, "of the nature of chivalry." He imbued all who came under his influence with a sense of their high obigation as ministers of the court, and it is a tribute to him that the bar of which he was so long the Nestor, observed the amenities of the court room with scrupulous care and practiced the ideals of their profession with strict fidelity.

Colonel Hill died at his home in Stanford, Kentucky, on the 8th day of December, 1908. The span of his years was more than four score, but that Providence who had so generously endowed him for the journey of life, was tender to him till the last. To few of flesh is it given to come down to the grave ripe in years with such serenity and peace. The afflictions and sorrows so often attendant in the declining days were absent, and in their place was a dignity, a contentment of mind, and a power of acute reasoning that brought an un-wonted charm to old age, and one left his presence feeling that there is a glory in the evening skies unknown to the splendors of morning airs.

Gustavus Emert, owner and proprietor of a fine farm on the Maysville Pike, eight miles south of Carlisle, has spent nearly all his life in Kentucky, and his career has been one marked by struggles against adversity, but it is a constant and steady advance in his relations as a business man and citizen. Mr. Emert was born in Cobrentz, Germany, June 24, 1860, and his mother died in Germany when he was four years old. His father, Daniel T. Emert, married again, and in 1865 brought his family to the United States and located at Newport, Kentucky, where he lived until his death, August 14, 1870. Gustavus Emert was one of two children, his sister, Louise, being the wife of Andrew Black, now a county commissioner of Campbell County, Kentucky.

Gustavus Emert was ten years of age when his father died. He attended school at Newport about six years altogether, and early learned how to support himself. He worked on farms, for three years followed the trade of machinist, and later built a store on the Maysville Pike and did a prosperous business as a general merchant at Ellsville for twelve years. On retiring from merchandising he bought his present farm, consisting of 112 acres, and has since devoted his labors to its management and improvement.

On January 7, 1860, Mr. Emert married Fannie Taylor, of Robertson County, Kentucky, where she was born December 14, 1859. Mr. and Mrs. Emert are members of the Christian Church, and he is a democrat in politics.

John Henry Ewing, representing one of Kentucky's oldest families, is a successful general farmer in the Harrods Creek community of Jefferson County.

He was born at the old Rudy home, the place of his maternal ancestors at St. Matthews, Kentucky, May 27, 1876, son of Benjamin F. and Mary Adele (Rudy) Ewing. He is of Scotch ancestry, his first American ancestor being John Ewing, who came to the United States in 1729. In 1788 Thomas Ewing came from Virginia to Kentucky, and his son, James, born in 1791 was a soldier in the War of 1812. Benjamin F. Ewing was born in Washington County, Kentucky, in 1840, was liberally educated, and in 1886 established the creamery business at Louisville now known as D. H. Ewing & Son. His wife, Mary Adele Rudy, was born at St. Matthews in 1853 and died in 1917. Of their four children the youngest is Benjamin F. Ewing, a well-known Louisville lawyer.

John Henry Ewing was reared and educated in Jefferson County and was a youthful volunteer at the time of the Spanish-American war. He enlisted in the First Kentucky Regiment under Gen. John B. Castleman, and was with the army of occupation in Porto Rico. For over twenty years he has been engaged in farming, and since his marriage has lived on the old Barrickman place at Harrods Creek. He and his wife now own most of her father's old farm. Mr. Ewing is a democrat, has served as precinct committeeman, is a member of the Masonic order and the Methodist Episcopal Church at Middletown. He is a well-known sportsman, particularly as a fox hunter.

November 22, 1905, Mr. Ewing married Mary Wade Barrickman, daughter of William and Sarah Elizabeth (Barrickman) Barrickman, and granddaughter of Jonathan and Ann (Willhoit) Barrickman. Jonathan Barrickman was reared by a family named Nolan. His wife, Ann, was the daughter of Elizabeth Shirley. Ann was one of four sisters, all noted throughout the length and breadth of Culpeper County, Virginia, for their beauty. Ann's three daughter, Jane, Verinda and Sarah, were equally noted in Kentucky. These were sisters of William Barrickman. The old home of Jonathan Barrickman was in Oldham County, where he and his wife were buried. His sons all reared large families, and all lived long and useful lives though by nature they were quiet, good citizens, without public records, their chief interest away from home being their church. Among the sons were Elijah, Isaac, Lawrence, John and William.

The marriage of William Barrickman married in Bullitt County Sarah Elizabeth Carpenter, daughter of Wilhoit and Letitia Ann (Magruder) Carpenter. Wilhoit Carpenter was an attorney, served in both the House and Senate, and was one of the three commissioners at the building of the Eddyville Penitentiary. The woman of Wilhoit Carpenter was Rhoda Wilhoit, a member of the Shaker community at Harrodsburg, and her mother was Ann Shirley of Virginia, a cousin of the Elizabeth Shirley previously mentioned. Wilhoit Carpenter was accidentally shot and died at the age of eighty-one, while his widow survived him three years.

William Barrickman secured the present homestead at Harrods Creek about 1878, purchasing it from Westport Oldham. He also secured 200 acres of the old Allison farm. At one time the Allison family owned about ten thousand acres in this vicinity, the last representative of the family being James Allison. James erected the home now occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Ewing, some time before the Civil war. The old Allison family cemetery is on the farm. None of the Allisons own land here. William Barrickman died August 29, 1900, at the age of seventy-seven, leaving an estate of about eight hundred acres. His widow still survives. He was noted as a very successful farmer and business man, fed cattle for export, and arranged his activities so that there was business all the year around. He was a democrat who never sought office, a member of the old Booneville Christian Church, and a man of honorable character widely known and influential, though naturally retiring and preferring his home to other society. He enjoyed company in his own home and his wife was a social leader having grown up among public people. She was a graduate of the Louisville Female College and she still retains much of the vigor of her youthful years. William Barrickman and wife had five children: Wilhoit, an attorney at Dallas, Texas, and secretary of the Chamber of Commerce; Miss Lillian; Mrs. Mary Ewing; Miss Jane at home; and William, Jr., who is employed in the postoffice at Louisville.

Mr. and Mrs. Ewing are the parents of four children: James William, Elizabeth Ann, John Henry, Jr., and Dan Carpenter. Mrs. Ewing is a member of the Baptist Church at Glen View.

Marquis de Lafayette Greer. It would be difficult in a brief sketch to do credit to the career of Marquis de Lafayette Greer better known as M. D. L. Greer and his interesting family. Mr. Greer has been one of the leaders in the modern development of Eastern Kentucky. He began life poor, and his prosperity has come chiefly from his individual enterprise and leadership in making the great potential resources of Eastern Kentucky available.

Mr. Greer, who among other interests is a merchant at the month of Beech Hide, 'Myra Postoffice, was born at McArtz Mills in Ashe County, North Carolina, December 26, 1859, son of Levi and Almira Louise (Miller) Greer. His grandparents were Isaac and Nancy Greer, who also acquired interests in Eastern Kentucky, buying the land on Beech Hide, part of which was deeded to Levi Greer. Isaac Greer, who died at the age of seventy-six, is remembered for his skill as a woodcutter and hunter, and for his knowledge of the woods and nature. He was a very lovable and quaint character of his time. Levi Greer was born in Ashe County, North Carolina, June 13, 1833, and his wife was born in the same county but in that part that is now Watauga County. They paid their first visit to Pike County, Kentucky, in 1803 to locate a farm in North Carolina, but in 1859 made permanent settlement in Eastern Kentucky, locating on a farm 1½ miles above the mouth of Beech Hide. The land in this original settlement is now owned by their son Marquis de L. Levi Greer was a citizen whose life was above reproach. His business was that of a farmer. For seventeen years he was the pioneer of the county, and his peace, and it is noteworthy that none of his decisions were ever changed by higher courts. In early life he was a deacon in the Baptist Church and later an elder in the Christian Chrits Church. He died July 5, 1888. His first wife, Louisa Miller, died in 1859 at the age of forty-five, being the mother of five sons and two daughters. Levi Greer married secondly on July 21, 1860, and his daughter by that marriage.

In politics he was a republican and is remembered for his kindly hospitality, a trait that has been typical of the present generation of the Greers as well.

The oldest son of his father, Marquis de Lafayette Greer, has spent practically all his life in Eastern Kentucky. He attended school on the Beech Hide and also a law school at the construction of S. H. C. Johnson. He began for himself at the age of twenty as a farmer on a little place above the mouth of Beech Hide. In 1872 he invested a modest capital of $200 in a stock of goods which he displayed at his own home, and there laid the foundation of a successful career as a merchant. In 1877 he moved to his present location and enlarged the frame and since then in addition to his store has also been postmaster of Myra.

Many years ago Mr. Greer had an ambition to own an orchard of twenty acres. His interest in horticulture has never subsided and he has a great many acres in fruit and has done much to stimulate fruit growing in this section. His home is a comfortable structure with a well-proportioned frame and also in addition to his store has also been postmaster of Myra.

Everett C. Willhite, M. D. An accomplished young physician and surgeon Dr. Willhite is doing his professional work in his native City of Monticello, where the family has been one of prominent connections for many years.

Mr. Greer, whose father, Dr. Thomas Willhite, came to Monticello as a young man, having been born in Virginia in 1822. For many years he was the leading druggist at Monticello, and died in that city in 1893. He was of English descent, the Willhites having come to Virginia in colonial days. Theodore Willhite married Tehila Shephard, who was born in Wayne County, Kentucky, in 1829 and died at Monticello. They were the parents of four children: Marsh, born in 1853, a farmer at Monticello; Bill, who was a farmer and died at Jenkins, Georgia, at the age of sixty-three; Samuel M., born in 1863, former city comptroller of Louisville and now auditor for the Ford Manufacturing Company in that city; and John R.

John R. Willhite was born at Monticello in 1871 and has spent his life there, having been a traveling salesman until 1919 and since then has been assistant cashier of the Monticello Banking Company. He is treasurer and an active member of the Christian Church and votes as a democrat. John R. Willhite married Ethel Cook, who was born at Monticello in 1873 and died May 26, 1910. Doctor Willhite is their oldest child.

There are three Willhites at Monticello. Clara and Elizabeth are students in the Monticello High School.

Everett C. Willhite was born at Monticello, September 20, 1895, graduating from high school in 1915. He spent one year in the College of Science and Arts of the University of Louisville, and then took the full four-year course in the Medical Department, graduating June 3, 1920. He is a member of the Delta Tau Delta college fraternity. While in University Medical School he had two years of practical experience as an intern in the City Hospital of Louisville and for four months was an interne in the Jewish Hospital of Cincinnati. While doing his work as an interne at the City Hospital he was also enrolled in the Medical Reserve Corps, but was never called to active service.
Charles W. Burt

Doctor Wilhite took up his duties as a private physician and surgeon at Monticello in 1920. His offices are in the Kennedy Building and he owns a modern home on High Street. He is a member of the Wayne County and State Medical Associations, and for two years was city assessor of Monticello. He is a democrat, a member of the Christian Church and is affiliated with the Masons as a member of a lodge No. 431 Free and Accepted Masons and Monticello Camp Modern Woodmen of America.

December 23, 1920, Doctor Wilhite married Miss Helen Gertrude Webb. Her father was Rev. Mr. Webb, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Her mother, Emma Dale Webb, lives at Henryville, Indiana. Mrs. Wilhite is a graduate of the Girls High School at Louisville, is a trained nurse, and during World War did Red Cross work at Brooklyn, teaching first aid to recruited men.

EDWARD LESLIE WORTHINGTON of the Maysville law firm of Worthington, Browning & Reed, has been a member of the Mason County Bar over forty years. His life has been devoted to his profession and his varied responsibilities, only once answering the call of public office to the interests of a gentleman of rare intellectual culture and character.

He was born in Mason County, October 20, 1851, a descendant of Capt. John Worthington who came from Manchester, England, and settled in Maryland in 1670. His grandfather, Thomas Tolley Worthington, with his twin brother, James Tolley Worthington, was born in 1777 and came to Kentucky about 1795, Thomas settling in Mason County on a large estate, and serving as one of the pioneer magistrates and sheriffs of the county. His son, Madison Worthington, was born in 1821 and died in 1897. Madison Worthington was a worthy representative of a long line of brave, honorable and sagacious men from whom he was descended, and who have contributed to the material development and moral uplift of every community in which they have found. To those characteristics which distinguished his forefathers were added qualities which were peculiarly his own. He was a man of fine judgment, calm, philosophical and reflective temperament; cheerful, kindly and patient; such a man as friends and relatives instinctively turn to for advice and assistance.

The mother of E. L. Worthington was Elizabeth Margaret Bledsoe, and he was the only son of his father's two marriages. His mother was a daughter of Benjamin Bledsoe who came to Kentucky from Culpeper County, Virginia, and was a brother of Judge Jesse Bledsoe, a United States senator.

E. L. Worthington grew up on the old homestead farm in the beautiful uplands of Mason County near Germantown. He had a careful home training, attending the public schools of Kentucky; his university education was from the Cincinnati Law College in 1874. He established his home at Maysville March 1, 1880, and for forty years has been continuously involved in the heavy labors of a large and important private practice. For a number of years he was associated with W. D. Cochran, in the law firm of Worthington & Cochran, and since the death of Mr. Cochran in 1919 he has been a member of Worthington, Browning & Reed. He and his firm are general counselors in Kentucky for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, the Bank of Maysville and a number of other corporations. One of the many interesting cases in which Mr. Worthington has appeared was that of Hackett vs. Trustees of the Brooksville Graded School, which secured to the school children of Kentucky the right to have the Bible read in the public schools. The only office for which he was ever a candidate was for the State Senate, to which he was elected in 1885 and served four years.

August 3, 1897, he married Laura Katherine Hammond, daughter of Dr. William Franklin Hannan, a lineal descendant of the Madison, Taylor and Henry families of Virginia which contributed two of our presidents and our greatest orator. Her mother, Matilda Caroline Grayum, was of a family connected by many ties with the life and affairs of old Virginia, and the settlement of the West. Mr. and Mrs. Worthington have one child, Leslie Katherine Worthington.

Mr. Worthington is universally recognized by his contemporaries at the bar as a man of exceptional learning and ability in the practice of law. He has an analytical mind, is a deep thinker, and possesses to a rare degree ability to see things as they are and to enable others to do likewise. Penetration, depth, veracity in Carlyle's sense, lucidity and force are the distinguishing qualities of his mind, and as a lawyer he stands at the forefront, is the opinion expressed of him by one of the most learned jurists of our times. His attitude toward his colleagues at the bar is always marked by an unyielding courtesy, kindness and sincerity, which endears him to all who enjoy his intimate acquaintance.

Perfect in his integrity, yet simple and unpretending, Mr. Worthington has had the confidence and esteem of the entire community throughout his career. As a citizen his attitude has been essentially public-spirited and progressive.

"Mr. Worthington is not only a man learned in his profession, but is versed in science, literature, music and the fine arts. His favorite recreation is astronomy, of which he is a great student, owning a fine collection of works on that subject and a large Bardin telescope, and possessing a knowledge of it not found outside the larger universities."

CHARLES WELLINGTON BURT, during his comparatively limited residence in Kentucky, distinguished himself by his phenomenal energies as an industrial executive, handling with remarkable ability some extensive timber and saw milling operations. Son of a prominent Michigan lumber man and railway official, and although at an early age, was concerned with big plans and the execution thereof; and showed himself a master of every problem and a complete adequacy for increasing responsibilities.

He was born at Saginaw, Michigan, March 17, 1871. His father W. R. Burt of Saginaw was a pioneer lumber manufacturer and individually or in association with others had a controlling interest in some of the largest operations that marked the lumber industry of Northern Michigan. He also served as president of the Ann Arbor Railroad.

In 1897, in company with M. I. Brabb of Romeo, Michigan, W. R. Burt bought the old Cross saw mill at Ford, Kentucky, and in addition acquired a large acreage of timberland in the mountains of Eastern Kentucky.

In the meantime Charles Wellington Burt had grown to manhood and as a school boy had acquired considerable experience in railroading. He worked during the construction of the Ann Arbor Railroad and subsequently as a fireman and locomotive engineer. He was a graduate with honors from the law department of Cornell University but never practiced law to any extent.

He was entrusted with his father as manager of the Kentucky milling and lumbering operations and at once took charge of the mill. He made it a success from the beginning and developed one of the largest enterprises of the kind in the state. To handle a part of the business he established an office at London, England. This office he established during his wedding trip.

October 14, 1898, Mr. Burt married Miss Mary Belle Halley of Scott County, daughter of Henry Simpson Halley. Mr. Burt rapidly extended his milling interests to a number of saw mills, planing mills, and in the height of the business season employed between 400 and 500 men in the mills. These mills were operated both day and night. Charles W. Burt was a dynamo of energy and a constant worker, ready at any moment in the day to respond to the call of duty. For five years after his marriage he lived at Ford, giving direct supervision to the milling operations. Another five years his home was at Winchester. After ten years of successful operation he transferred his attention to timberland interests and dismantled the mills. Ford village was made up almost entirely of the employees of the Burt and Brabb Company. Mr. Brabb is now a resident of Detroit. W. R. Burt depended entirely upon his son Charles to operate the Kentucky interests, and visited Kentucky only occasionally. He died at Saginaw in March, 1919.

Carrying on his lumber interests in Kentucky, Charles W. Burt was for about a year manager of the cement plant at Bellevue, Michigan, and then came to Lexington where he was induced to purchase a home through Mrs. Burt's brother. The big interests and plans of his later years were centered in Alabama, where his father owned a large amount of land. He was developing this property, had fenced several sections, and was planning his stock ranch, the installation of saw mills, and the development of its coal and iron resources. Mr. Burt had started north for the purpose of consulting his father concerning some plans for further development of the Alabama property, when he died of heart trouble while driving from Cincinnati to Detroit. His death occurred July 31, 1917. He had built a residence in Alabama expecting to make his home there.

While in Winchester Mr. Burt took an active interest in several fraternities and civic organizations. The Lexington home where Mrs. Burt resides is two miles south of that city on the Nicholasville Pike. It is the old Pettit farm place. The residence was built before the Civil war. The land surrounding the residence is 126 acres, a portion of an original grant of about 3,000 acres, extending to the Kentucky River, a grant made by the State of Virginia to Edward Ward in 1784. Mrs. Burt's home is one of the most attractive Kentucky country residences. It stands on elevated ground at some distance from the Pike, is surrounded by native forest trees, and it possesses some of the most distinctive qualities of beauty found in any part of the rural landscape around Lexington.

Mrs. Burt was educated in the Miss Butler's private school and in the Old Vicksburg College of Lexington. She is an active member of the Presbyterian Church. She has three daughters: Alice Amine is the wife of Kendall McDowell of Lexington; Lydell Belle is Mrs. Clarence Lewis of Fayette County. The youngest is Marion Stone Burt, a student in Miss Choate's School at Brookline, Boston.

ELIJAH H. MAGGARD, M. D. A physician and surgeon in charge of the hospital at Fleming, Doctor Maggard has had a wide experience in the institutional side of his profession, is a very skilled surgeon, and a man of highest standing in the medical circles of the state.

Doctor Maggard was born in Elliott County, Kentucky, August 14, 1875, son of Silas and Sabra (Whitt) Maggard. His grandmother, David Maggard, was a minister of the Regular Baptist Church and one of six brothers who followed that calling at some time or other in Eastern Kentucky. Silas Maggard was born in Harlan County, Kentucky, in 1839 and as a young man moved to Carter County, later to Elliott County, and is now living in Carter County, retired from business. He was a farmer and for many years in the timber business, operating mills on the Little Sandy. He has been affiliated with the Masonic Order for thirty-five years. He married in Carter County, Kentucky, Miss Sarah Whitt, two years ago, daughter of the Edward Whitt who came from Russell County, Virginia. The Maggards are an old American family and on coming to this country first settled at Jamestown, Virginia.

Elijah H. Maggard was the third among seven children. He attended school at Grayson, the Holbrook Normal at New Plymouth, and taught six terms of school while getting ready for his major profession. He began the study of medicine in the Barnes Medical College at St. Louis, and in 1901 graduated at the University of Louisville. He took post graduate work in medicine in 1905 and also graduated in the Dental College at Louisville. He did further post graduate work in surgery in 1910. From the time of his graduation in 1910 he has been a member of the Medical Society of Kentucky and was a member of the History of Kentucky he took much interest in the success of his party, and was considered one of the strong and influential men in its ranks in his locality. At the time of his death, in 1914, when he was eighty-two years of age, he was probably the oldest member in Perry County of the Masonic fraternity, which he had joined at Whitesburg, many miles from his home, in young manhood, but at sixty-eight years of age was a member of Hazard Lodge No. 676. He and Mrs. Napier belonged to the Primitive Baptist Church. She was born in Perry County, where she died in May, 1919. Of their nine children, four are now living: Sallie, who is the wife of Charles Wootton, of Typo; Rebecca, who is the wife of John Campbell, a farmer near Yerkey; Eliza, the wife of Dr. G. W. Campbell, of Viper, Perry County; and Admira, who is the wife of Major C. A. Napier.

Mitchell C. Napier attended the rural schools of Perry County, following which he received instruction at the Hazard school under Bailey P. Wootton, now president of the Hazard Bar Association and of the Hazard Bank and Trust Company. Later Mr. Napier pursued a one-year course at Berea, following which he entered upon his career as a teacher in the rural schools of Perry County. For sixteen years he followed his vocation, finding in it everything to satisfy his ambitions and gratify his aims, and in 1917 was elected superintendent of the public schools of Perry Township, consisting of eighty-nine rural schools, a position to which he was re-elected in 1921. Mr. Napier has made an excellent official and the schools have prospered and flourished under his superintendency.

Samuel M. Ward. Because of certain existing local conditions, it is unusual for a county attorney of Perry County to hold the office for more than one term. Therefore the fact that Samuel M. Ward is a county attorney for the second time may prove sufficient to denote to the observer that he is a man of unusual qualifications. Mr. Ward was born at Salyersville, Magoffin County, Kentucky, December 18, 1885, and is a son of Isaac J. and Araminta (Prater) Ward. His grandfather, William Ward, was born in North Carolina, whence he removed as a young man to Wolfe County, Kentucky, where he died when his son, Isaac, was a small boy.

Isaac J. Ward was born in Wolfe County, Kentucky, in 1840, and as a youth learned the trade of carpenter. He was engaged in working at that vocation up to the outbreak of the war between the states, when he enlisted in the Fourteenth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, with which he served throughout the war, participating in numerous engagements and being with General Sherman’s forces in the March to the Sea. He was honorably discharged with the rank of sergeant at the close of the struggle, and, turning to his home in Magoffin County, where he counseled in the work of the county chairman of the committee and practically rebuilding the party. Previous to his advent the county offices had always been held by democrats, although as a rule the county would go republican in the national elections. His leadership brought about a change as to officeholders, as well as to the party in power. Mr. Ward was a past master of Hazard Lodge No. 676 of Masons and an active member of the church, in the faith of which he died February 4, 1908, at the age of sixty-eight years. Mr. Ward married Araminta Prater, who was born in Magoffin County, Kentucky, a member of a family which moved from the Blue Grass district to Magoffin County at an early day. She died October 5, 1920, at the age of seventy-one years, having been the mother of six children, of whom four she developed to the position as Thaddeus C., a county officer, Colorado Springs, Colorado; Walter S., living on a farm at Fairston, Larue County, Kentucky; William A., a civil engineer of Daisy, Perry County; and Samuel M. The two deceased were: James A., a civil engineer, who died at the age of thirty-seven years; and John D., an attorney of Hazard, who died in 1918 at the age of thirty-five years.

Mr. Ward attended the public school at Hazard, where he had as his teacher, Bailey P. Wootton, and during 1906 and 1907 pursued a course at the Jefferson School of Law, Louisville. Admitted to the bar in May, 1907, he became associated with W. H. Miller in the practice of his profession at Hazard, and this association continued until 1909, when Mr. Ward held a position in the office of the Secretary of State at Frankfort. He is a member of the Masonic Lodge, and for many years was the corresponding secretary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, and has won the confidence of the public and the respect of all who have had business with his office. Mr. Ward is a member of the Hazard Bar Association and the Loyal Order of Moose. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, while Mrs. Ward is a Baptist.

In August, 1908, Mr. Ward united in marriage with Miss Octa Maugans, of Williamsburg, Kentucky, and are the parents of six children: Bretha Belle, Frank Marcus, Donald Augustus, Ethel Marie, Henry Beecher and Hugh Adron. Mrs. Ward is a native of Delaware County, Ohio, and a woman of many graces and accomplishments.

Amelia M. Gross, M. D., is not only one of the skilled practitioners of Perry County, but is one of the owners of the Hazard Hospital, and is now serving as county judge, having the unusual distinction of being the successful candidate for that office on the democratic ticket in a republican stronghold. He was born on a farm near Buckhorn, where three generations of the Gross family have resided. The date of his birth was December 13, 1880, and he is a son of John and Ella (Riley) Gross. John Gross, the father, was a farmer as well as a farmer, and still makes it his home. His father, Peter Gross, was born in Breathitt County, Kentucky, and he was the son of Simon Gross, a native of North Carolina. The Gross family has long been connected with agricultural matters, and its members have been well-to-do citizens of the several communities in which they have lived. For many years they have been largely instrumental in securing the advancement of the community, and have always taken a special interest in the improvement of educational matters, the school of that locality through their efforts having become a notable institution. The older members were Baptists. Peter Gross had a from the beginning and developed one of the largest enterprises of the kind in the state. To handle a part of the product he established an office at London, England. This office he established during his wedding trip.

For five years after his marriage he lived at Ford, giving direct supervision to the milling operations. Another five years his home was at Winchester. After ten years of successful operations he closed out the remaining timber land interests and dismantled the mills. Ford village was made up almost entirely of the employees of the Burt and Brabb Company. Mr. Brabb is now a resident of Detroit. W. R. Burt depended entirely upon his son Charles to operate the Kentucky interests, and visited Kentucky only occasionally. He died at Saginaw in March, 1919.

After selling his lumber interests in Kentucky Charles W. Burt was for about a year manager of the cement plant at Belleview, Michigan, and then came to Lexington where he was induced to purchase a home through Mrs. Burt’s brother. She has three daughters: Alice Amine is the wife of Kendall McDowell of Lexington; Lydy Belle is Mrs. Clarence Lewis of Fayette County. Doctor Maggard was born in Elliott County, Kentucky, August 14, 1875, son of Silas and Sabra (Whit) Maggard. His grandfather, David Maggard, was a minister of the Regular Baptist Church and one of six brothers who followed that calling at some time or other in Eastern Kentucky. Silas Maggard was born on the Cumberland River in Letcher County in 1839 and as a young man moved to Carter County, later to Elliott County, and is now living in Carter County, which has been his home for many years, and was a farmer and for many years in the timber business, operating mills on the Little Sandy. He has been affiliated with the Masonic Order over thirty-five years and was a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge No. 1, established in the Carter County Court House, which was in operation Sunday, 1867, at the time of this address, daughter of the Edward Whitt who came from Russell County, Virginia. The Maggards are an old American family and on coming to this country first settled at Jamestown, Virginia.

Elijah H. Maggard was the third among seven children. He attended Lexington College where he took Normal at New Franklin, and taught six terms of school while getting ready for his major profession. He took post graduate work in medicine in 1905 and also graduated in the Dental College at Louisville. He did further post graduate work in surgery in 1910. From the time of his graduation until 1910 Doctor Maggard practiced in the country locality of Newfoundland in Elliott County. From 1910 to 1913 he was surgeon in charge of the State Penitentiary at Frankfort and for a short time was connected with the Kentucky Houses of Reform at Lexington. He left there to take charge of the mining and milling line of business in Floyd County. During the World war he was on duty with the Federal District Board at Lexington for the Eastern District of Kentucky for fourteen months. Doctor Maggard also practiced at Ashland, Kentucky, one year, then removed to Fleming to take charge of the hospital.

Doctor Maggard is a former member of the State Board of Health and is active in the Letcher County and State Medical societies. He is a democrat in politics and is affiliated with Hiram Lodge No. 4, Free and Accepted Masons at Frankfort and with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mrs. Maggard is a member of the Christian Church. He married April 12, 1900, Martha Frazier, daughter of James Frazier of Welseyville, Carter County. They have one daughter, Opal.

MITCHELL C. NAPIER, who is superintendent of the public schools of Perry County, has devoted his entire life since entering upon his independent career to educational effort. He has been particularly successful and as an educator has shown himself to his satisfaction in the four years that he has been under his direction. Intellectually and personally, Mr. Napier is a happy leader, and in his belief that knowledge is the key that unlocks life’s most valuable treasure boxes, has been able to impress this thought on the minds of the youths of the county, the result being shown in added ambition and increased intelligence.

Mr. Napier was born on a farm in Leslie County, Kentucky, September 16, 1880, a son of Macager and Elizabeth (Napier) Napier, and a grandson of Macager Napier the elder. Macager Napier the younger was born in Perry County in 1832, and as a young man engaged in farming, the Blue Jay Coal Mine being located on a property that was formerly owned by him, although in later years he became interested in mining. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the Fourteenth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and served through a large part of the war as a soldier of the Union, establishing a splendid record for bravery and faithful performance of duty. In later years he was county judge of Perry County; also served as postmaster of the community until New Hope Post Office was discontinued, and at all times was a steady, constructive and dependable citizen. A staunch republican,
he took much interest in the success of his party, and was considered one of the strong and influential men in its ranks in his locality. At the time of his death, in 1914, when he was eighty-two years of age, he was probably the oldest member in Perry County of the Masonic fraternity, which he had joined at Whitesburg, many miles from his home, in young manhood, but at the death of the ex-governor, a member of Hazard Lodge No. 676. He and Mrs. Napier belonged to the Primitive Baptist Church. She was born in Perry County, where she died in May, 1919. Of their nine children, four are now living: Sallie, who is the wife of Charles Wooton, of Typo; Rebecca, who is the wife of John Campbell, a farmer near Yerkey; Eliza, the wife of W. J. Campbell, of Viper, Perry County; and Mitchell C.

Mitchell C. Napier attended the rural schools of Perry County, following which he received instruction at the Hazard school under Bailey P. Wooton, now president of the Hazard Bar Association and of the Hazard Bank and Trust Company. Later Mr. Napier pursued a one-year course at Berea, following which he entered upon his career as a teacher in the rural school of Perry County. For thirteen years he followed his vocation, finding in it everything to satisfy his ambitions and gratify his aims, and in 1917 was elected superintendent of the public schools of Perry Township, consisting of eighty-nine rural schools, a position to which he was re-elected in 1921. Mr. Napier has made an excellent official and the schools have prospered under his superintendency.

In 1916 Mr. Napier was united in marriage with Miss Matilda Campbell, who was born near Yerkey, Perry County, daughter of Elhanan Campbell. To this union there have been born five children: Ora, Sherill, Opal, Mary Lena and Arlis Mitchell. Mr. and Mrs. Napier are consistent members of the Campbell's Bend Missionary Baptist Church, of which Mr. Napier was formerly deacon. He is a republican in his political allegiance. As a fraternalist, he is master of Yerkey Lodge of Masons, and has attended four sessions of the Grand Lodge; and councilor commander of the Knights of Pythias, having represented his order at the Grand Lodge on six occasions.

SAMUEL M. WARD. Because of certain existing local conditions, it is unusual for a county attorney of Perry County to hold the office of county attorney. Therefore the fact that Samuel M. Ward is acting in this capacity for the second time may prove sufficient to denote to the observer that he is a man of unusual qualifications. Mr. Ward was born at Salyersville, Magoffin County, Kentucky, December 18, 1885, and is a son of Isaac J. and Araminta (Prater) Ward. His grandfather, William Ward, was born in North Carolina, whence he removed as a young man to Wolfe County, Kentucky, where he died when his son, Isaac, was a small boy.

Isaac J. Ward was born in Wolfe County, Kentucky, in 1840, and as a youth learned the trade of carpenter. He was engaged in working at that vocation up to the outbreak of the war between the states, when he enlisted in the Fourteenth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, with which he served throughout the war, participating in numerous engagements and being with General Sherman's forces in the March to the Sea. He was honorably discharged with the rank of sergeant at the close of the struggle, and returned to his home in Magoffin County, where he resumed carpentry. Later he took up house building as a specialty and many of the structures still standing in that section of the county are the work of Mr. Ward. If the county of Perry stands as monuments to his skill and good workmanship. While residing in Magoffin County he served as a justice of the peace. He came to Hazard in 1891 and here became active in the republican party, filling the office of county chairman of the committee and practically rebuilding the party. Previous to his advent the county offices had always been held by democrats, although as a rule the county would go republican in the national elections. His leadership brought about a change as to officeholders, as well as to the party in power. Mr. Ward was a past master of Hazard Lodge No. 676 of Masons and is a 32° member of the York Rite, having been born on the 19th of February, 1908, at the age of sixty-eight years. Mr. Ward married Araminta Prater, who was born in Magoffin County, Kentucky, a member of a family which moved from the Blue Grass district to Magoffin County at an early day. She died October 5, 1920, at the age of seventy-one years, having been the mother of six children, of whom four are living: Thaddeus S., a contractor of Cold Springs, Colorado; Walter S., living on a farm at Pairston, Larue County, Kentucky; William A., a civil engineer of Daisy, Perry County; and Samuel M. The two deceased were: James A., a civil engineer, who died at the age of thirty-seven years; and John D., an attorney of Hazard, who died in 1918 at the age of thirty-five years.

Samuel M. Ward attended the public school at Hazard, where he had as his teacher, Bailey P. Wooton, and during 1906 and 1907 pursued a course at the Jefferson School of Law, Louisville. Admitted to the bar in May, 1907, he became associated with W. H. Miller in the practice of his profession at Hazard, and this association continued until 1920, when Mr. Ward held a position in the office of the Secretary of State at two votes. He has had an excellent record in office and has won the confidence of the public and the respect of all who have had business with his office. Mr. Ward is a member of the Hazard Bar Association and the Loyal Order of Moose. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, while Mrs. Ward is a Baptist.

In August, 1908, Mr. Ward was united in marriage with Oeta Magan, of Williamsburg, Kentucky, and they are the parents of six children: Bretta Belle, Frank Marcus, Donald Augustus, Ethel Marie, Henry Beecher and Hugh Adron. Mrs. Ward is a native of Delaware County, Ohio, and a woman of many graces and accomplishments.

AMERIDA M. GROSS, M. D., is not only one of the skilled practitioners of Perry County, but is one of the owners of the Hazard Hospital, and is now serving as county judge, having the unusual distinction of being the successful candidate for that office on the democratic ticket in a republican stronghold. He was born on a farm near Buckhorn, where three generations of the Gross family have resided. The date of his birth was December 13, 1880, and he is a son of John and Ella (Riley) Gross. John Gross was born on the same farm as his son, in 1858, and still makes it his home. His father, Peter Gross, was born in Breathitt County, Kentucky, and he was the son of Simon Gross, a native of North Carolina. The Gross family has long been connected with agricultural matters, and its members have been well-to-do citizens of the several communities in which they have lived. For many years they have been largely instrumental in securing the development of Buckhorn community, and have always taken a special interest in the improvement of educational matters, the school of that locality through their efforts having become a notable institution. The older members were Baptists. Peter Gross had a brother who served in the Confederate Army, and three brothers who were in the Union Army during the conflict of the '60s. While as a general rule the members of the Gross family have been Democrats, a few of them belong in the republican ranks. All of them have been and are very liberal in their support of schools and churches and are most estimable and desirable citizens. Doctor Gross is the eldest of his parents' nine children, the others being as follows: Malvery, who is the wife of James Higgin of Clay County; Hand, who is the wife of S. J. Burns; Amanda, who is the wife of Dewey Beach, a physician of Buckhorn; Floyd, who lives on the old homestead; John, who is in the employ of a coal company; and Lettie, who is at home, all of whom are living; and Martha, who died at the age of eleven years; and an unnamed infant, who is deceased. Floyd Gross, of the above family, served in the army during the late war.

Doctor Gross attended the Buckhorn public schools, and after completing his own education taught in the schools of Perry County for five years. He then matriculated at the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville, Kentucky, and was graduated therefrom in 1908, following which he began the practice of medicine in Hazard and has continued. For two years he was in partnership with Dr. Taylor at Prestonsburg. Later he formed his present connection with Dr. R. L. Collins. In 1917 they established the Hazard Hospital, which is an industrial one, and in April, 1920, acquired their present modern hospital building, which is well equipped for their work.

A member of the Gross family has ever sought office and Doctor Gross' father refused the nomination for sheriff of Perry County, although strongly urged to accept. In 1917 the friends of Doctor Gross persuaded him to permit the use of his name on the democratic ticket for the office of county judge of Perry County. This is one of the strongest republican districts in the state, but so universal is the confidence felt in Doctor Gross, and so great is his personal popularity that he ran way ahead of his party and was elected by a handsome majority.

In 1905 Doctor Gross was united in marriage with Emma Morgan, a daughter of Elijah Morgan of Hazard, and they have three children, namely: Fred, Paul, and Colburn. Mrs. Gross is a granddaughter of Zebulon Hazen, one of the early settlers, and a daughter of the American Revolution. Professionally, Doctor Gross belongs to the Perry County Medical Society, which he is now serving as president, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

J. Everett Jones. In the successful career of J. Everett Jones, of Hazard, may be found a lesson for the aspiring youths who feel that they are handicapped by lack of advantages. His early life was one of constant struggle, of unending endeavor to gain a foothold in order that he might start on the highway to commercial prosperity and position. The obstacles which he encountered were numerous, but his perseverance and ambition were great, and his unflagging industry and self-confidence eventually brought him to his desired goal. He is now at the head of several of the largest of Hazard's enterprises and is acknowledged one of the leading business citizens of his adopted city.

Mr. Jones was born near Williamsburg, Whitley County, Kentucky, December 18, 1884, a son of H. S. and Lillie S. (Siler) Jones. His father, a traveling salesman for Curry, Tunis & Norwood, wholesale grocers, died when he was a young man, and J. Everett Jones, the eldest of four sons, was called upon early to begin to be self-supporting. He attended Williamsburg Institute until he was fifteen years of age, at which time he secured employment in a retail store, where he remained three years at a salary of $15 per month. Following this, his employments were numerous and varied. He worked in the mines and on the railroads, and in fact disdained no honorable employment that promised to remunerate him in money and experience. Eventually, Mr. Jones became identified with the J. J. Dill, Ltd., Company, a wholesale concern, and remained with this concern until 1915, in which year he came to Hazard. Here he entered immediately into the life of the community and became an active and prominent factor in its business affairs. His first venture was the formation of the Hazard Grocery Company, which, a few months later, was merged with the Maxon Company, of which Mr. Jones is at present the active head. These firms deal in wholesale groceries, electrical and mine supplies, and is carrying on an extensive and remunerative business, with a branch house at Winchester, this state. Not long after his arrival at Hazard, Mr. Jones became one of the leaders in the establishment of the Paton Company, wholesale dry goods dealers, of which concern he is president, and which, also under his direction, has grown to important proportions. Mr. Jones is a member of the board of directors of the Hazard Board of Trade and has several civic connections and social associations. He has identified himself with a number of worthy movements in which his public spirit has been exemplified.

In 1923 Mr. Jones, in a marriage with Miss Lissie Skinner, of Whitley County, Kentucky, and their numerous friends are always welcomed at the pleasant Jones home.

Nody Starkey. The death of Nody Starkey on April 2, 1921, ended the career of one of the remarkable men of Eastern Kentucky. He possessed the energy and determination of several average men, and after he was once embarked upon an undertaking practically no obstacles could prevent him from achieving what he started out to achieve. He amassed a fortune, and Pike County and other sections of Eastern Kentucky remember him as the man who built and extended that indispensable system of communication, the telephone, so that communities formerly isolated are now in constant touch.

Nody Starkey was born in Switzerland, October 21, 1872. His father, Albert Starkey, brought the family to the United States about 1878, and for a number of years was a successful contractor. The Starkeys lived at Norfolk, Virginia, Chattanooga, Tennessee, and Somerset, Kentucky. Albert Starkey lost his life at Williamsburg, Kentucky, when his son, Nody, was a child. Mrs. Mollie Starkey, mother of Nody, is still living at the age of eighty-five.

Nody Starkey was six years of age when brought to America. Apart from his inheritance of a strong body and remarkably active mind he had few opportunities. What schooling he acquired was by virtue of his study and application while earning his living in other ways. He was the chief support of his widowed mother, being a newsboy and also having a laundry agency. A friend of that early period of his life was Edwin Morrow, now governor of Kentucky. Nody Starkey and a brother started a steam laundry at Somerset, and after selling his interest in that he and William Harkness were partners in the building of another laundry at Middleboro. After a number of years Mr. Starkey retired from the laundry business to enlist his capital and enterprise in a telephonic system, he built a new exchange at London, Kentucky, and after 14½ years he sold that plant for $10,000, a sum of money which in former times had been the limit of his expectations as the goal of fortune. He then bought the old telephone system at Pineville, built and extended it to all parts of Bell County, connecting it up to Middleboro, and after selling his interests there he spent three years in Little Rock, Arkansas, and, at other points in the West and Southwest.

In 1866 Mr. Starkey returned to Williamsburg, Kentucky, and soon afterward regarded Pike County as a new field of endeavor. On July 31, 1906, at Jellico, he married Miss Stella Watts Crutchfield, daughter of A. J. Crutchfield, and of an old family related to such distinguished persons as Sir John Hawkins and President Taylor. Mr. and Mrs. Starkey came together to Pikeville, and Mrs. Starkey for fifteen years was the active lieutenant and sharer in all her husband's undertakings. At that time there was a single long-distance telephone wire for all the telephone service of Pike County. By good team work Mr. and Mrs. Starkey extended the system to all portions of the county and connected it with other adjacent sections of Eastern Kentucky, and also across the Big Sandy into West Virginia and Virginia. While Mr. Starkey did the field work in construction Mrs. Starkey attended to the office details. For several years they also had charge of the Western Union business at Pikeville. The late Mr. Starkey was well known for a human dynamic of energy. He owned several other valuable properties. The First Baptist Church was organized in the Starkey home, and he was generous in his donations to other churches. He was a trustee of the Odd Fellows Building in Pikeville, and was also affiliated with the Masons, Eastern Star and Maccabees.

Rev. Asbel S. Petrey, president of the Hazard Baptist Institute, founder of the Three Forks Baptist Association, one of four to found the Hazard Wholesale and Retail Hardware Company, and one of the leaders in the Baptist denomination in this part of the state, is one of the men of his cloth who has known how to combine religious faith with practical Christianity in such a manner as to exert a lasting influence on his community and win the approval and high regard of all with whom he is associated. He was born on a farm at Boston, Whitley County, Kentucky, not far from Jellico, Tennessee, December 5, 1866, a son of Adam and Senta (Monroe) Petrey and grandson of Samuel and Elizabeth (Bryant) Petrey.

Samuel Petrey was a farmer and he also conducted a blacksmith shop for his own convenience as he was a man of mechanical tendencies. Asbel is the only son of his and his youth was noted for his skill in playing a violin. In later life he became a very devout member of the Baptist Church. All over his section he was known as an absolutely honest man and one whose word was accepted as another's bond. Adam Petrey was also a very religious man, and because of his activity in church and Sunday school work was called "Praying Ad." He owned and operated a farm in Whitley County, and lived to be sixty-two years old. For many years he held membership in Boston Lodge, A. F. and A. M., and he was active in public affairs as a reformer. After the death of his first wife, who passed away when fifty-one years old, he married the widow, Lawson, who survives him and lives at Hazard. The mother of Reverend Petrey was a daughter of Levi Monroe, at Jellico, Tennessee, and his father, Adam Monroe, was a stockholder and stockbuyer, who drove his stock to southern points and there sold it, and became well known in commercial circles. At one time Mr. Monroe served in the Kentucky Legislature as the first representative from Whitley County. During the war between the states he moved to Shaples Chapel, Tennessee, and there died. The members of the Monroe family were all democrats, but the regimentation of他妈umRepublican Party, except Adam Petrey, who in sympathy with his southern wife became a democrat. The following children were born to the parents of Reverend Petrey, namely: Rev. A. S., who is the eldest; James D., who is a truck-farmer at Corbin, Kentucky; Rev. Samuel, who is a minister of the Baptist denomination, is active in religious work, but makes his living as a blacksmith in the mines at Mountain Ash, Kentucky; L. A., who is a forerunner of railroad work for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad at High Cliff, Kentucky; Mattie, who was the wife of Dr. E. Kelley of Hazard; John W., who is a merchant at Harlan, Kentucky; Rev. Marshall A., hard coal operator and Baptist minister; and William C., who died when a child. By his second marriage Adam Petrey had three children, two daughters and a son, the latter being Charles E. Petrey, a merchant of Hazard.

Asbel S. Petrey attended the public schools of Saxton, Kentucky, and a subscription school of Boston, Kentucky. He was converted and united with the Baptist Church at the age of twenty-one. He attended Cumberland College, from which he was graduated in 1893 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and subsequently he was a student of the Theological Seminary at Louisville, Kentucky. In order to secure the necessary funds for further study of his own, Reverend Petrey began teaching school at an early age, in the rural districts, and subsequently was connected with Cumberland College, being instructor in its normal department in 1893. Still later he was an educator at Hazard Institute, from 1902 to 1908, being president of the institution. Since the latter date, however, he has devoted himself to executive work relative to the school, and to his ministerial duties.

After his ordination as a minister in 1890 Mr. Petrey has been very active in religious work, and among other things has built two churches at Hazard, the second one replacing the first, which was destroyed by fire. The first church was built when most of the building material for it had to be hauled from Jackson by teams, and in pushboats up the Kentucky River a distance of forty miles. He has also built churches at Dwarf, Dryhill and Calvary, near Corbin, the last named during the first years of his ministry. He is now pastor of the First Baptist Church of Whitesburg, and has had charges at Hindman, Hyden, Mount Olive, and in fact almost all of the churches in the Three Forks Association have had the benefit of his efforts, and he is a big man in every way, and one possessed of abounding enthusiasm for his work. A man of powerful physique, he has been favored with health during his useful life, a blessing he deeply appreciates. His energy found an outlet during the years at the beginning of his ministry in hard work in the timber woods to get out the necessary lumber for the churches he was building, so that it can be truthfully said that he constructed them through his own efforts. He was one of the organizers of the Three Forks Baptist Association, and of the Hazard Baptist Institute, establishing the latter in 1902 without funds, but with faith that they would be forthcoming, and this confidence has been justified, for today the institution is one of the important educational organizations of the state. Plans have just recently been perfected for a much greater expansion of the institution's scope of usefulness. With his cooperation the Hazard Hardware Company has been expanded and a number of very important improvements have been made in connection with the Three Forks Baptist Association, of which he was also the founder, it has grown to important proportions.

In May, 1895, Mr. Petrey was married to Sarah Effie Harmon, a daughter of Jacob and Lucinda Harmon, of Pine Knot, Kentucky. The Harmon family is an old one in Kentucky and members of it have served as county judges and in other high public positions. Mr. and Mrs. Petrey have the following children: Maude, who graduated at Cumberland College with the degree of A. B., taught three years in the Baptist Institute at Hazard; Ruth is a graduate of the Georgetown College with degree of A. B., and is teaching in the Baptist Institute; Gertrude graduated from the Cumberland College with A. B. degree; Marie, the wife of W. D.
Harris; and Paul, Sanetha, Dorothy, Kathleen and Helen now attend the Baptist Institute at Hazard, Kentucky. Mr. Pettit is erecting a new residence near the institute at Hazard. He is a Master Mason. Like the rest of his family he is a democrat, but his time has been so occupied with other duties that he has not taken an active part in politics aside from giving an earnest support to moral issues. He is a man whose influence is one of the strongest factors for good in Perry County, and so sincere a factvicing is that he carries his fellow citizens with him and secures their co-operation no matter what their religious creed may be. Through his energy and public spirit many movements for the betterment of the community and the maintenance of high moral standards have come into being, and he can always be depended upon to advise wisely in all matters pertaining to the proper conduct of affairs, for he is not only a spiritual man, but an intensely practical one as well, and his remarkable executive abilities are unquestioned.

William Engel, treasurer and manager of the Hazard Hardware Company, which conducts both wholesale and retail business and which stands as one of the important commercial concerns of the judicial center of Perry County, is one of the most vital and progressive business men of the county and has been a prominent figure in the upbuilding of the substantial business enterprise of which he is the general manager. The Hazard Hardware Company, which has been one of the leading firms of Perry County since it was organized in 1912, with capital of $5,000, and with the development of its remarkably large and far-reaching business, in both wholesale and retail departments, the corporation has found it expedient to increase the capital stock to its present figure, $50,000. The officers of the company, in addition to Mr. Engel, are as here designated: Mr. Harvey Brown, president, was killed in World War I in France while serving as first lieutenant; and Rev. A. S. Petrey, secretary. It is interesting to note that not only is the president of the company a clergyman of the Baptist Church but also all other officers of the company are zealous and prominent members of the same church and all are members of the board of trustees of the Baptist Institute at Hazard, with exception of J. L. Morrison.

William Engel was born at Dwarf, Knott County, Kentucky, on the 6th of June, 1888, and is a son of Henry and Polly Ann (Combs) Engel. His father was born in the State of Virginia and became one of the prosperous farmers of Knott County, Kentucky, the old homestead farm near Dwarf and Troublesome Creek, being still the residence of his widow. Henry Engel died in 1902, at the age of forty-seven years. He was a man of sterling character, was an honored and influential citizen of his community and was a leader in the Baptist Church, of which his widow likewise is a devoted member. Of their eight children, William was the eldest child; besides him, three of the children are deceased; Jason remains with his mother on the old home farm and has active management of the same; Harvey is a member of the class of 1922 in the Baptist Institute; Anderson enlisted in the United States Army and is now stationed at Camp Knox, he having been too young to serve in the late World war. The education of William Engel was obtained in the public school at Dwarf, on Troublesome Creek, and in the Baptist Institute at Hazard. He early began to aid in the activities of the home farm, and as a youth he clerked in various stores at Hazard and Dwarf. For a time he owned a partnership interest in a drug store at Hazard, where he was associated with Doctor Kelley, this partnership alliance continuing five years. Upon the expiration of this period Mr. Engel became one of the organizers of the Hazard Hardware Company, and his vigorous and progressive policies have contributed greatly to the splendid success that has attended this representative business concern of Perry County.

Mr. Engel is not only one of the representative business men of Hazard but is also one of its loyal and public-spirited citizens, as shown by his lively interest in all that concerns the communal well being. He is a practical democrat in political allegiance, and he and his wife are earnest members of the Missionary Baptist Church, in which he has served as a deacon since his young manhood. He is also, as previously intimated, a trustee of the Baptist Institute at Hazard. In the Masonic fraternity he is affiliated with the Blue Lodge at Hazard, the chapter of Royal Arch Masons at Whitesburg, and the Consistory at Winchester, Oleika Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Lexington, and with the Scottish Rite Consistory in the City of Louisville.

In 1913 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Engel to Miss Bertie Fannie Beavens, daughter of James Beavens, of Union County, and they have three children: Alien Bertie, Orland Rayford, and William, Jr.

George W. Nicholson, chairman of the board of trustees of the Hazard Institute, is one of the substantial and dependable men of Perry County, and has charge of the undertaking department of the Hazard Hardware Company, wholesalers and retailers, and is the business manager of the Baptist Church. He is one of the members of this large concern being members of the board of trustees, and all of them contributing generously toward its support.

The birth of George W. Nicholson occurred on a farm in Whitley County, Kentucky, March 7, 1868. He is a son of Riley and Emily (Skeen) Nicholson, grandson of Jacob Nicholson, who was the youngest of the older generation of the family and three descendants of his father Samuel Nicholson. Samuel Nicholson died in Virginia, from whence Jacob Nicholson came to Whitley County, Kentucky, settling at Lot, and there he was engaged in farming.

Riley Nicholson and his wife reared their family in a one-room log cabin, and George W. Nicholson, the youngest of the family, and his brothers, attended the school of the pine-knot fire. Brought up in a strictly religious atmosphere, when only a lad of eleven or twelve he joined the Baptist Church, being the third generation to do so on Cane Creek, and he has never wavered in his interest in this denomination. His father, who was born in 1822 lived until 1905, but his mother died in the youthful mind, was an extinguisher. She was a daughter of W. B. Skeen, a prominent man of his day. Riley Nicholson and his wife had four sons and four daughters, and George W. was the seventh in order of birth, and the youngest son.

During his boyhood in his locality, educational advantages were poor and George W. Nicholson walked two and one-quarter miles to Pleasant Hill College. He was a captain in the early days of the academy, and in order to secure the money to pay his tuition he sold butter and eggs. Always ambitious when he was seventeen years old he went to Williamsburg, with only 75 cents in his pocket, determined to attend the academy, and succeeded in doing so, working as a janitor and doing other jobs to defray his expenses. The Williamsburg Academy is now known as Cumberland College, and from it he was graduated in 1895 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Following this Mr. Nicholson entered the educational field and taught in twenty schools, having in all over 3,000 pupils under his charge at different times, and he was always active in Sunday school work, so his influence over the schools was an extensive one, and always exerted for high purposes. When he was only eighteen years of age he had begun his Lennox B. Turnbull, Jr. attended the graded schools in North Carolina, where his father was occupying a pulpit at Durham, after which he pursued a course at Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Virginia. His first business experience was secured with a hardware establishment at Bristol, Virginia, where he began at the bottom of the ladder and was employed in such work as unloading cars, etc. His industrious nature, together with his appetite in gaining a knowledge of the details of the business, soon won him promotion and before the end of his employment at Bristol he was engaged as a traveling salesman, his territory being portions of southwest Virginia to which railroads had not yet been built. He likewise included Harlan and Letcher counties, Kentucky, where he traveled over the transmontane country, and this necessitated his traveling on horseback, with his samples and change of clothing packed away in his saddle-bags. After severing his connection with the Bristol concern, Mr. Turnbull joined the traveling force of the Norton Hardware Company, of Norton, Virginia, and it was as a representative of this firm that he first came to Hazard, via horse-back. The journey, in its making, required thirty days, the greater part of it spent in the saddle, over bad roads and in all kinds of weather. The training, however, was an excellent one, and Mr. Turnbull was brought into touch with the people who were to become his later customers in a way that he would not have otherwise.

He came to Hazard in 1914 and organized the Sterling Hardware Company. Under his direction, the company has made rapid advancement and now controls a large and constantly growing trade all over this part of the state. The present establishment, a commodious brick structure, was erected in September, 1920. Mr. Turnbull is what is termed a live wire. He knows his country as well as he does his business, and through this knowledge has been able to assist it in the way of civic and other improvements. As president of the Board of Trade he has been active in the promulgating of movements under the stimulating influence of which Hazard has bettered its condition as to business status, and his civic efforts have always been on the side of constructiveness and progress. Mr. Turnbull has several social connections and is deservedly popular among his associates. He is unmarried.

Granby Carew Smith, cashier of the Bank of Hindman, is well-known to the people of Hindman and Knott counties, for he attained to distinction as an educator and was successful as a merchant before 1905 when he entered the banking business in connection with his present position. He is a man of sound judgment and thorough understanding of the finances of his locality, and during his many years' connection with his bank, has won appreciation for himself and prestige for his institution.

Mr. Smith was born at Jackson, Breathitt County, October 10, 1870, a son of Reuben Randolph and Virginia (Chapman) Smith, both natives of Virginia, as their first names would indicate. They went to Kentucky as young people, and were married at Jackson. He was born in 1824, and died in 1899, she born in 1839, died in 1916. By trade he was a carpenter, but was also connected with the selling force of one of the mercantile establishments at Jackson. During the war between the North and the South he served in the Confederate army. At one time he was jailer of Breathitt County. Both he and his wife were active church members and maintained membership in the Baptist Church. A strong believer in the doctrines of the prohibition party, he gave them an earnest and conscientious support. The following are the children born to him and his wife: Mary, who is deceased, was the wife of the late J. T.
HISTORY OF KENTUCKY

Davis; Monroe, who died at Jackson when thirty-six years old; Granby C., who was third in order of birth, married Mapha, who is the wife of Joseph Keyser of Columbus, Ohio.

Granby C. Smith attended the public schools of Jackson, and those at Hindman, and in the latter was under the instruction of Professor Clark, while at Jackson Professor Dickey was his preceptor. Early in life he entered the educational field and won distinction in it as a teacher of the able and popular educators. As Professor Clark's assistant at Hindman he became well known to the people of Knott County, and in 1894 was the successful candidate of his party for the office of county superintendent of schools of Knott County, and held it for four years. For several years following the termination of his term of office he was engaged in a mercantile business, and as bookkeeper of the successions he was very active in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. and Mrs. Smith became the parents of six sons and six daughters, and one of their sons, Barrett Travis Smith, volunteered for service during the World war, and was on the firing line in France. Mr. Smith is a zealous member of the Masonic fraternity, and has been actively and successfully engaged in its work.

COL. EDMUND HAYNES TAYLOR, Jr., of Thistleton, Frankfort, was born in the last year of the second decade of the nineteenth century and has already lived into the first year of the second decade of the twentieth and has carried much of the enthusiasm and vigor commonly associated with youth into his serene and dignified old age. Longevity alone is an interesting but not infrequent feature of human life; but with these achievements, many of them broadly and vitally related with the welfare of the state, that the career of Colonel Taylor merits all that can be said of him in these pages.

Colonel Taylor represents the seventh generation of this branch of the Taylor family in America. The line of the successive generations were: 1. James, who settled on 1,000 acres of land in Virginia in 1668; 2. James, who was a colonel of a regiment of Colonial militia and member of the Virginia House of Burgesses, 1702-1714; 3. George, a member of Virginia House of Burgesses, 1748-1758, colonel of Virginia colonial militia, father of ten sons, all of whom served as officers in the Revolution; 1775-1783 — a record not surpassed by any one family in the State. Sons, 4. Richard; 5. Richard, Jr.; 6. John Eastin; 7. Edmund Haynes Taylor, Jr. The first James Taylor came from Carlisle, England, in 1668. Among his descendants were President James Madison and President Zachary Taylor, also John Taylor, Edmund Pendleton, the noted jurist and a number of others distinguished in war, politics and business at Hindman he became well known to the people of Knott County, and in 1894 was the successful candidate of his party for the office of county superintendent of schools of Knott County, and held it for four years. For several years following the termination of his term of office he was engaged in a mercantile business, and as bookkeeper of the successions he was very active in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. and Mrs. Smith became the parents of six sons and six daughters, and one of their sons, Barrett Travis Smith, volunteered for service during the World war, and was on the firing line in France. Mr. Smith is a zealous member of the Masonic fraternity, and has been actively and successfully engaged in its work.

Richard Taylor (4) served with distinction as captain and commodore of the Virginia Continental Navy during the Revolutionary war and was twice wounded. All his brothers were officers in either the army or the navy. His son Richard Taylor, Jr., was government surveyor of Jackson's Purchase in Kentucky.

Col. Edmund Haynes Taylor, Jr., so named to distinguish him from his uncle, a prominent Kentucky banker, was born at Columbus, Kentuckly, February 12, 1839, a son of John Eastin and Rebecia (Edlington) Taylor. He was educated at some of the best schools of the day. He attended Boyer's French School at Conti Street in New Orleans. He has always recognized a great debt to the school and the personal discipline of B. B. Sayre, one of the most famous of Kentucky's earliest educators at Frankfort. In the Sayre School at Frankfort, some of his classmates were Henry Clay, Abraham Lincoln, and Henry Reed, afterwards Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court and S. M. major.

On December 21, 1852, Colonel Taylor married Miss Frances Miller Johnson. She was born September 10, 1832, and died October 11, 1898, in the forty-seventh year of their marriage. Eight children were born to their union. The first of these is Jacob Swigert Taylor, whose career is sketched following this. The second Mary Belle, born September 20, 1855, became the wife of Dr. J. Lampion Price; Rebecca, born September 2, 1857, was married to Richard W. Kline; Eugenia, died in infancy; Kenner, born at Frankfort, November 15, 1859, married John B. B. Crow, Superintendent of S. Johnson, of Henderson, and has two daughters, Elizabeth Rankin, born November 18, 1865, and Frances Johnson, born November 6, 1860; Margaret Johnson, born September 20, 1860, is the widow of Philip Fall Taylor; Edmund Watson, born at Frankfort, December 10, 1868, is unmarried; and Frances Allen, the youngest, born March 26, 1872, was first married to Preston Saffell, her second husband being James M. Saffell.

On leaving school Colonel Taylor entered the Branch Bank of Kentucky at Frankfort under his uncle Edmund H. Taylor, then cashier. At the age of twenty he opened the books of the Commercial Bank of Kentucky at Paducah and also the books of its branches at Nashville and Columbus, in the latter of which he served as superintendent. He founded the Versailles branch. Soon thereafter he founded the private banking house of Taylor, Turner & Company, which was later succeeded by Taylor, Shelby & Company, at Lexington.

The big work of his life, however, was accomplished as a distiller. In the early sixties he organized the firm of Gaimes, Berry & Co. and in 1868 organized the firm of W. A. Gaines & Company and built the Old Crow and the Hermitage distilleries at Frankfort. In 1874 he rebuilt and operated the Oscar Pepper Distillery, near Frankfort, in conjunction with his ward James E. Pepper, a son of Oscar Pepper. He had built in 1869 the O. F. C. Distillery near Frankfort and subsequently organized the E. H. Taylor Company and built the Carlisle Distillery.

While associated with these distillery enterprises Colonel Taylor made an ultra fine whiskey on the famous site of the famous old Taylor plant, and it was the product of this plant that brought the Taylor whiskey a world wide reputation. In 1888 Colonel Taylor disassociated himself from all his other distilling interests and confined his operations exclusively to the old Taylor plant. Experts have pronounced the old Taylor plant the finest distillery in the world.

Besides being president of the E. H. Taylor, Jr. & Sons, distillers of Old Taylor, at Frankfort, Colonel Taylor is the owner of the famous Heretford Farms in Woodford County, Kentucky. A number of years ago he established the nucleus of this Hereford herd and gradually built up the most celebrated Heretford herd in this country. It was noted for the celebrated $12,000 Woodford bull, and others of the great imported Hereford bulls in America. Besides the great stock farm, Colonel Taylor owns Thistleton Farms on which he resides near Frankfort.

Much has been written of Colonel Taylor's work with the Herefords. His Woodford County farm is described in Alvin H. Sanders’ “Story of the Hereford.” In a recent issue of the Breeders’ Gazette (September 15, 1921), appears an article entitled “Constructive Work with Herefords,” setting forth the distinctive elements in the success of Colonel Taylor as a breeder of pedigreed livestock. For its value as illustrating an example in Kentucky’s industrial life as well as the practical and constructive purposes for which this publication was prepared, the article in Breeder’s Gazette is here quoted:

“A man who by virtue of his achievements is entitled to be classed among the thinking, practical, successful, constructive breeders of his time is that distinguished Kentuckian, Colonel E. H. Taylor, Jr., the owner of Hereford Farms. His work in the Hereford world with his cattle, designated as ‘Woodfords’ justifies this characterization. All in life a student and one identified with the breeding of thoroughbreds and an extensive feeder of cattle for the shambles, it was not difficult for him to apply his experience and knowledge to good purpose in the selection and breeding of Herefords. As the history of Hereford breeding goes, Colonel Taylor is comparatively new in the ranks. His record of achievement is all the more remarkable because he had to move the herd while accomplishing in a comparatively short time.

To begin with, Colonel Taylor, while remarkably successful in the business world, was little known to the pedigreed cattle fraternity until about the time that he had successfully negotiated the purchase from W. H. Cartice of the promising bull Beau Perfection 24th for $12,400, the then high price for a bull of the breed. This bull was sired by one of the breed. The merit and quality of these females were inherited from a line of ancestry of proved worth, as recognized by every observer of the progress of the breed in this country and England. With the acquisition of females of this class, the real work—the work that earned for this man a place among the greatest breeders of his time, the work which is one of the most valuable contributions to history the making—the foundation of Herefords.

To that work this article is dedicated as a well earned tribute to a man who has liberally devoted his wealth and talents to the furtherance of a cause near to his heart and to the breeder and beginner, who appreciates that a study of the factors entering into a worthy success is time profitably spent, and a great aid to every one who is ambitious to achieve both success and distinction as a producer of good livestock.

Hereford Farms, near Frankfort, Kentucky, are ideal for stock breeding. A soil underlaid with limestone, the richest of bluegrass and pure, clear water are invaluable aids to the moulding of ideal animal form. Colonel Taylor enjoys these aids. He owns one of the largest and most beautiful tracts in the famous bluegrass region of his state. He is singularly aided by nature and by a class of breeding stock that possesses qualities inherited from ancestry of exceptional producing worth.

“Woodford was the type of bull that is essential if good results are to be expected. He was not a large bull; he was short of leg, smoothly and evenly balanced, displaying unusual masculinity in a head that was short, wide and impressive. He was of the medium-framed, early maturing kind, a sire with a few defects. A breeder, upon studying the bull, would readily contend that he should prove to be unusually potent, and that when mated to matrons of real merit should make a remarkable record as a sire. The did to a remarkable degree, and, notwithstanding that his career was cut short as a result of his death by fire, he lived long enough and sired a sufficient number to give him a certain permanent place among the greatest sires known to the Hereford breed. He was a show bull of distinction. His record as a sire reveals how accurately he passed on his showyard qualities to his offspring.

"It is not my intention to list here all the winnings of the get of Woodford, but a reference to a few of the most important will indicate the remarkable extent to which Hereford Farms’ production by this sire achieved distinction, and to what extent the bull bred on his sons and grandsons. One of his most distinguished sons was Woodford 9th, of practically the same type, sire of blood that produced both junior and grand champion at the Iowa, Illinois, Indiana and Missouri State fairs, the American Royal, the International Live Stock Exposition and the Panhandle State Fair in 1917, and was retired to the breeding herd at the end of that season. Woodford was the sire or grandsire of 18 per cent of the winners at the 1920 International and the sire of the grand champion females Belle Woodford 28th at the 1920 American Royal. He was the sire or grandsire of 21 per cent of the money winners at the 1920 International Live Stock Exposition; he was the grandsire of the grand champion female Donna Woodford 5th and the junior champion Lady Woodford at the same show in 1920. He had six sons whose get were winners of these national shows. He was the sire or grandsire of the young herd that won three first, two second, and one third in the principal Hereford prize winners. His prepotency is not matched by that of any other bull of the breed so far as showyard records tell the story.

"If these facts prove anything it is that Colonel Taylor secured in Woodford 500,000, a remarkable sire, and that he has in the line of blood represented in his pedigree an asset of great value. That bull’s heredity has ‘kicked’ most acceptably, with results in the production of females, in most instances, in the production of cattle, which when fitted for leading shows, easily find their ways to the tops of their classes.

"Many men of wealth have assembled collections of different breeds of live stock, but few have achieved the measure of success which has fallen to Colonel Taylor, for the simple reason that they failed to have the right conception of the business in which they invested their money and, not getting the right grasp of the business failed to devote to it the talents which in the case of Colonel Taylor won outstanding success. He had, first of all, that primary essential, the love of good livestock and his training and experience were applied to it in shaping its destiny and directing it to the goal which should and must be the ambition of every breeder who hopes to make a name which will endure. The breeder who has the dollar sign as his goal will not do it. He may realize his ambition in that respect, but in the absence of a love for his work, either inherited or acquired and a zeal to improve his productions as he goes along, he may, in all probability, have to make his mark as a constructive breeder, but in all probability, he will not have the career ended without having achieved real success.

"Colonel Taylor has shown the way to success. While many men may be prevented by their lack of capital, from doing as much as he has done in a brief space of time, yet many who have an inborn love for good stock may in a smaller way emulate his example and achieve in a measure the distinction that he has earned as a breed improver. Such men will not have lived in vain. Colonel Taylor is a public benefactor; he has done more than 'make two blades of grass grow where one grew before.' He has produced the kind of cattle that will make two pounds of beef grow where but one pound grew before, and, in addition, will pass his generations to follow a line of breeding which will make it easier for his followers who use it to succeed. He has, besides, left a record of achievement as a Hereford breeder that is more enduring than granite. Some one man's tribute to a grand old man in American Herefordism.

Many public honors and responsibilities have been accorded this noted Kentuckian. For seventeen years he served as mayor of Frankfort. On August 3, 1801, he was elected representative from Franklin County for a term of two years and resigned February, 1803, to become candidate for senator from the 20th District to which office he was elected February 21st to fill the unexpired term of Judge William Lindsay, who had been elected United States senator. He was again elected senator from the 20th District on November 3, 1901 and served for a term of four years.

On April 27, 1917, at his magnificent country home, Colonel Taylor entertained a representative body of the "American Association of Collegiate Registrars," and in return this body of fifty-eight college and university men inscribed with their signatures a "diploma" reading as follows:

"American Association of Collegiate Registrars.
Whereas we the President and Faculty of the American Association of Collegiate Registrars, in appreciation of the generous hospitality accorded us by Colonel Edmund H. Taylor, at his residence in Frankfort, and as such Hereford Farm, have found convincing demonstration of his proficiency as a Lavish Host, a Genial Leader and a Cordial Friend, and have thus received a signal experience of Southern hospitality at the hands of one of its most distinguished exponents; now, therefore, do we under the authority of a unanimous resolution of our Association, hereby confer upon him the degree of Master of Hospitality. In testimony whereof we have hereunto set our hands this 27th day of April, 1917, at Lexington in the State of Kentucky."

Some of Colonel Taylor's social and other interests are manifest in his having membership in the following clubs: Pendennis Club of Louisville; Filson Club of Louisville; Kentucky State Historical Society; The Lincoln Farm at Frankfort; The American Society Sons of the American Revolution; Society of Colonials; The Lexington Country Club; Lexington Club; Kentucky Thoroughbred Horse Breeders Association; American Hereford Cattle Breeders Association; life member of the International Livestock Exposition Association; life member of the Hereford Herd Book Society of Hereford, England; Chicago Athletic Association of Chicago; Saddle and Sirloin Club of Chicago; and Frankfort Lodge of the Elks No. 530.

JACOB SWIGERT TAYLOR, a son of Col. Edmund Haynes Taylor, Jr., is vice president of the E. H. Taylor, Jr. & Sons and for many years has been one of Frankfort's most substantial citizens.

He was born at Frankfort on December 20, 1853, and was educated in a private academy at West Chester, Pennsylvania, and also in the noted private school of B. B. Sayre at Frankfort. He left school at the age of sixteen to enter his father's business, and for many years has carried the chief executive responsibilities of the firm. E. H. Taylor, Jr. & Sons. His offices are on the fifth floor of the McClure Building in Frankfort. Mr. Taylor is, like his father, a democrat, a member of the Episcopal Church and is affiliated with Hiram Lodge No. 4, A. F. & A. M., Frankfort Chapter No. 3, R. A. M., and Frankfort Commandery No. 4, of the Knights Templar. He is also a member of Frankfort Lodge No. 530 of the Elks and a past exalted ruler. Among other extensive business interests he is a director in the Farmers Deposit Bank of Frankfort. He is a member of the Pendennis Club, Louisville, Filson Club, Louisville, vice president of the Kentucky Society Sons of the American Revolution, member of the executive committee of the Kentucky Historical Society and a member of the Society of Colonial Wars in the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

He resides at the beautiful old family homestead of Thistleton, one of the most distinctive homes at the Capital City, with 900 acres of park and farming lands adjoining.

On December 24, 1880, at Frankfort, J. Swigert Taylor married Miss Sadie Bacon Crittenden. She was born August 27, 1850, daughter of Major Eugene W. Crittenden, who was the youngest son of John J. Crittenden and on her mother's side was a granddaughter of Judge Harry Innis. Major Eugene W. Crittenden served as a colonel in the Union army during the Civil War, afterward held a major's commission in the regular army and died in Tucson, Arizona, and was buried at The Presidio in San Francisco. Major Crittenden married Laura Bacon, who was born at Frankfort in 1832 and died in her native city in 1868.

J. S. Taylor had the misfortune to lose his wife and the companion of forty years on June 29, 1920. She was the mother of a daughter, Mary Belle, and a son, Edmund Haynes, Jr. Mary Belle Taylor, who was born in Frankfort, September 2, 1879, was born on September 2, 1909, to Charles Walter Hay. Mr. Hay was born at Charlestown, Indiana, November 12, 1878, son of Charles Sherrod and Mary Charlotte (Runyan) Hay. Mr. Hay is now engaged in the insurance and oil business at Frankfort. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Walter Hay are: Edmund Haynes Taylor Hay, born on the 15th of October, 1899, and Charles Walter Hay, Jr., born on the 20th of October, 1914, and Jacob Swigert Taylor Hay, born on October 2, 1918.

Edmund Haynes Taylor, Jr. III, who represents the ninth generation of the Taylor family in America, was born at Frankfort November 30, 1885, is unmarried and served as a private in the Seventeenth Company of the United States army during the world war, being stationed at Fort McDowell, Angeles Island, California.

PEYTON RICHIE. When an individual has been the incumbent of an official position for nine years it would be an anomaly if the citizens of his community were not pretty generally in accord as to his character and abilities. Contrary opinions notwithstanding, the public is almost invariably shrewd in the estimate which it puts on the worth of men acting in positions of responsibility, and it therefore stands to reason that the high regard in which Peyton Richie is still held, after nine years of service as jailer of Knox County, is indicative of the efficiency and fidelity of his service.

Mr. Richie is a member of an old and highly respected family of Knox County, or the territory that is now included within its boundaries, and was born December 20, 1873, on Buckhorn Creek, Breathitt County, being a son of Zachary and Sylvania (Campbell) Richie. His grandfather was James Richie, a lifelong farmer of Breathitt County, and his grandfather Crockett Richie, who came to Kentucky from North Carolina among the pioneers, and took up his residence on Clear Creek. Zachary Richie, or "Zach" as he was more familiarly known to his neighbors, was a soldier of the Confederacy during the war, and his views were those of the South; aside from this, he died in the service of his country, and his entire career to farming in what is now Knox County, where he died March 3, 1920, when seven years of age. He was a stalwart farmer.
his political convictions, but took only a good citizen's interest in public affairs. Mrs. Richie's family, the Campbells, have taken a leading part in various affairs in Kentucky for many years. She had been married to Mr. Richie for more than fifty years and survived him only twenty-five days, passing away on April 19, 1920, when seventy-three years old, in the faith of the Baptist Church. They were the parents of five children: John, who is engaged in farming on Troublesome Creek; Peyton, of this notice; Joseph, who is a merchant and farmer on Riley Fork of Troublesome Creek, in Breathitt County; Greer, a coal operator of Birmingham, Knott County; and Elliott, a farmer of Lot's Creek.

After securing his education in the public school on Buckhorn Creek in his native locality, Peyton Richie gave all of his time and attention to farming until the year 1913, when he was elected jailer of Knott County. So well did he perform his duties and so satisfied were the people with his services, that in the election of 1917 he was elected by a handsome majority, carrying all but two precincts in the county. Mr. Richie is the only one of his family to ever seek office with the exception of a cousin, Jason Richie, who was at one time county attorney. He has displayed fidelity and a sense of responsibility in the conduct of his office, and has vindicated the faith and confidence placed in him by his fellow-citizens.

In 1904 Mr. Richie was elected Master Mason of his Lodge, a member of the Odd Fellows, and a member of the Odd Fellows, in both of which orders he is popular with his fellow-members.

In 1905 Mr. Richie was united in marriage with Miss Hannah Johnson, known as C. B. Richie, who was born in Knott County, daughter of Coley Johnson, an agriculturist of this county. To this union there have been born seven children, all of whom reside at home: Farris, Dora, Farlinia, Essie, Jacob E., Devert and Frances May.

In November, 1921, Mrs. Richie was elected jailer of Knott County, by a good majority, this is the first woman elected to this office in the state. She is known to her many friends of Knott County as C. B. Richie, but her given name is Hannah.

ADAM CAMPBELL. The awards that are attainable in character and influence through a life of industry and probity, guided and regulated by a sense of obligation, are illustrated in the career of Adam Campbell, superintendent of schools of Knott County. Possessed of more than ordinary faculty as an educator, as a youth he entered upon his life work and has never failed to carry out the obligations laid upon his willing shoulders and to follow up opportunities that have opened up before him with steadiness and industry, gaining step by step the rare fruits of well-directed enterprise until he finds himself the occupant of a position of responsibility and the object of the sincere regard of his fellow-citizens at Hindman.

Mr. Campbell was born August 28, 1875, at Vest, Kentucky, youngest son of John and Sally (Smith) Campbell. His grandfather was William Campbell, who lived on the Buckhorn, while his great-grandfather was Rev. Jackson Campbell, a pioneer minister of the Baptist Church, who made his home on Lot's Creek. Jasper Campbell, in early life a school teacher, has been for many years a merchant at Vest, where he still makes his home, aged seventy years, his worthy wife and two daughters being of this age. Mr. Campbell was famed in his younger days for his skill at mathematics and still retains this faculty. A democrat in politics, he was elected county surveyor of Knott County in 1892, and he and his wife are faithful members of the regular Baptist Church. Of their seven children who are now living, four are educators.

Adam Campbell went to school on Buckhorn Creek, and later received the advantage of instruction under Professor Clark, at Hindman. During the twelve years that he taught in the rural and mountain districts of his locality he became intimately known to the people and well informed as to the country, and in this line also was appointed by his constituents as county surveyor, an office in which he served from 1903 to 1911. He was elected superintendent of schools of Knott County in 1913, and has retained this office uninterruptedly to the present, during which time he has contributed materially to the advancement of the cause of education. He has labored incessantly for higher standards and has shown his confidence and good will of teachers, pupils and parents, with the result that his work has proved more effective and the general public has reaped the benefit. Mr. Campbell is a democrat in his political allegiance. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; was master of Hindman Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, from 1901 to 1914, during which he attended the Grand Lodge; and holds membership in Whitesburg Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, and the Commandery at Winchester.

In 1896 Mr. Campbell was united in marriage with Miss Josephine Dobson, daughter of William Dobson, of Vest, and to this union there have been born five children: Troy P., now a member of the general merchandise firm of Dunlap & Dobson, is a member of the Odd Fellows. John E. was a sergeant in the army during the World war, serving on the battle lines in France and also in the statistical department of Headquar ters of the Fifth Division; Dora, who is the wife of E. C. Holliday, of Hazard, Kentucky; and Cassie, Raleigh and Viola, who reside with their parents at Hindman. Mrs. Campbell is a member of the regular Baptist Church and has been active in its work.

CLYDE R. LEVI, of the Ashland bar, is not only an able man in the routine of his profession, but exceptionally talented as an orator and gifted public leader, whose name is already widely known throughout Kentucky.

Mr. Levi was born in Ashland, October 9, 1883, son of Henry and Hattie (Bruhaker) Levi. His parents were both born in Ohio, and his father for many years was a merchant at Ashland. Clyde R. Levi attended the common and parochial schools at Ashland, graduating in 1902, and took his professional training in the law school of Center College at Danville, where he graduated LL. B. in 1904. He at once opened an office and has since been engaged in the general practice of law at Ashland.

January 13, 1920, Governor Morrow appointed him one of the three members of the Kentucky State Workmen's Compensation Board, who have jurisdiction over all claims in personal injury cases. The duties of this office require his presence much of the time at Frankfort. Mr. Levi is unmarried. He is a Methodist, and has from youth been keenly interested in politics, being a Republican. He is a member of the county and State bar associations and is prominent in the Order of Elks, being past exalted ruler of Ashland Lodge, deputy grand exalted ruler of Eastern Kentucky, and is first vice president of the Order in Eastern Kentucky. He is an honorary member of the Central Labor Union of Boyd County. While in college Mr. Levi was one of the star football players of Center College, playing half back, and was also an all around athlete, being a member of the college track team. During the war he made speeches all over Eastern Kentucky, and he has the magnetism and personality that sway and convince an audience. His friends anticipate for him some of the highest honors in state politics.

FLOYD BREWER, cashier of the Hindle State Bank at Warfield, is one of the sound business men and astute financiers, and a man who is widely and favorably known throughout this part of Kentucky. He was born at Warfield, September 8, 1876, a son of Isaac and Alcie (Spaulding) Brewer. Isaac Brewer was born in what is now Mingo County, West Virginia, but at that time Logan County, in 1821, and he died in 1908 his widow surviving him until 1918, when she passed away at the age of sixty-seven years. Tom Cree married in Logan County, in 1849, and some time thereafter moved to Warfield, Martin County, which continued to be their home the remainder of their lives. Isaac Brewer had timber interests along the Tug River and operated upon an extensive scale. He opened up stores at various places, and in everything operated on a big scale. His lumber business was a large one. He bought and sold, and rafted his product to market down the Sandy River. Intensely energetic, he was able to make a success of everything he undertook. Having a faith in the future of this region, he invested in vast tracts of land underlaid with valuable coal deposits. In the Methodist Episcopal Church he was one of the foremost men living on the Tug River, but he did not confine his contributions to his own church, but was generous to other denominations desiring to build churches, for he believed in extending their scope, and he was also active in securing the erection of schools. A life-long republican, he gave that party an earnest support, but would not accept nominations. Isaac Brewer was a man ahead of his time, and had some insight into the future. He stated his belief in the future development of Eastern Kentucky they might have acquired at reasonable figure, land that now is almost priceless. Of the four children born to him and his wife, Floyd Brewer is the only survivor. Tanith, who died at the age of twenty-one years, was the wife of Lewis Dempsey, of Inez; Marion, who died in childhood; and Wallace died at the age of thirty.

Floyd Brewer attended the local schools and a private school at Inez, and then was associated with his father in his extensive business operations, beginning this connection when still a youth. He alternated between the timber and the stores, and also was on steamboats plying on the Tug River, but after his father's death he continued in the mercantile branch of the business, and then, early in the war period, turned his attention to the development of the coal fields, realizing the necessity of increasing the output of this country. He has continued his coal operations and is now vice president of the Warfield Coal Company and treasurer of the Dempsey Coal Company. Mr. Brewer has contributed a large part of his income in the form of deposits in the savings bank of Warfield and Martin County with the Norfolk & Western Railroad, one of the most progressive and constructive movements ever inaugurated and carried to a successful completion in this part of Kentucky. The bridge, which was opened in May, 1921, cost $300,000.

In 1900 Mr. Brewer was united in marriage with Jennie Parsley, a daughter of Jesse Parsley, one of the well-known men in former years of Martin County. Mrs. Brewer was born at Crum, Wayne County, West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Brewer have three children, namely: Walter, who was born February 5, 1903; Gladys, who was born April 16, 1905; and Paul, who was born March 12, 1911. Reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Mr. Brewer early united with the institution. He has contributed to the organization, and has maintained close relations with his sincere members ever since. He is a Mason, and belongs to the Blue Lodge at Warfield and the Chapter at Louisa. Like his father, he is a strong republican, but, also like him, he has had no desire for public advancement. The Brewer home is one of the most beautiful residences of Warfield, and here a delightful hospitality is shown by an ideal host and hostess upon many occasions.

James Blaine Clark, No lawyer at the Martin County bar is generally acknowledged to have a more ready and sound judgment in both broad and intricate matters of the law than James Blaine Clark, city attorney of Inez, and a man with a brilliant record both in his profession and in that of an educator. From the very outset of his career in the law, his thoroughness in the preparation in whatever litigation was entrusted to him, his inspiration of himself which has been infectious and an assurance of his method of work, his profession has absorbed much of his time and mental strength, Mr. Clark has found time to enter politics, for it is his firm conviction that it is the duty of every citizen to show an intelligent and effective interest in public matters, and has become one of the leaders of his party in this part of the state. Not only has he himself been successful in his party upon several occasions for the office of city attorney, but he was selected by it in 1921 for the important office of circuit judge, his abilities having long been recognized as of the caliber requisite for the bench. A man of firm convictions, settled purpose, practical in his aims, he has advanced steadily to a high position in the sub-circuit of which he is the circuit judge, and has also in the realization of those projects which are now being advocated by all good citizens of modern tendencies.

James Blaine Clark was born at Odds on Daniel's Creek in Johnson County, Kentucky, May 5, 1884, a son of Samuel and Sarah (Wells) Clark. Samuel Clark was born in the home of Daniel's Creek in September, 1846, and his wife was born the same year. The original home of the Clarks in Johnson County was on Grassy Creek, where Morgan Clark, grandfather of James Blaine Clark, located. Daniel Wells settled on the creek which bears his first name. Subsequently the Wells family moved to locations on Grassy Creek, and the Clarks, to Daniel's Creek, and the former descendants had children throughout the United States and parts of Canada, and all of them are substantial and law-abiding, as they have always been. Samuel Clark, now seventy-five years of age, is living in comfortable retirement at Odds.

Morgan Clark, father of Samuel Clark, was born on Little Mud Creek in Floyd County, Kentucky, and his mother, a daughter of John and Mary (Copeland) Clarks, who came to Kentucky about 1800, locating on Little Mud Creek at a time when all that region was still a wilderness. and it required considerable faith in the future of the state to brave the hardships of frontier life. Still there were compensations to such a life, for the early settlers were able to achieve a high degree of independence in their dealing part in public matters. The elder Samuel Clark was no exception to this rule and secured control of a large amount of land on both Big and Little Muddy creeks. His son, Morgan Clark, was also a farmer, operating upon an extensive scale. Samuel Clark, following in the footsteps of his forebears, became a farmer, and for some years lived on John's Creek, but after his marriage moved to Daniel's Creek. For many years he served as a magistrate in Johnson County, and has always been a man of prominence. Finding in the principles of the republican party the ideals he upheld in politics, he has always given to it his earnest and conscientious support. While he has never united with any religious organization, he is a supporter of church work and a contributor to the Methodist Church, of which his wife is a member. After moving to Odds he went into the mercantile business, and for a long period was one of the leading business men of his section, and still retained his farm. He and his wife became the parents of twelve children, of whom James Blaine Clark is the youngest. Ten of these children are still living. Mrs. Clark is a daughter of William Wells.

James Blaine Clark and his brother, Emsey Clark, attended the public schools of Odds, and the latter also became a lawyer. He then pursued his calling in the State of Oklahoma. James Blaine Clark decided to become a lawyer, but in order to earn the money to pay for his professional training, entered the educational field, and taught six schools in Johnson County prior to entering the law department of the University of Indiana, from which he was graduated in 1868. So marked was his success as an educator that even after he had obtained his degree he was induced to continue teaching, and accepted a position as principal of the Inez schools, and held it for four years. In the meanwhile, however, he began practicing law, and so impressed were his fellow townsman with his ability, his knowledge of the law and his sterling integrity that when he was made the candidate of the political forces of the city in April, 1900, they elected him by a large majority, and he served them in that capacity for four years. In 1917 he was again elected to that office, and is the present incumbent of it. After careful consideration of all of the possible candidates for circuit judge in 1921, he was chosen at the primaries to lead his party to victory.

In 1867 Mr. Clark was united in marriage with Miss Lutie De Long, a daughter of John P. De Long, of Martin County. Mr. and Mrs. Clark have three children, namely: Haskell, Sheldon and Jewel. Fraternally Mr. Clark maintains membership with the Masons and Odd Fellows.

Mr. Clark is fortunate in the choice of his profession. Its employments are congenial to him, and he has followed them with unfailing industry and zest. To him the work of the law is not drudgery, but a source of keen, intellectual pleasure, and its controversies afford him frequent opportunities to gratify his love of conflict. It is his rare good fortune to be a worker in love with his work, and to find in it adequate and satisfying occupation for all his faculties. He has pursued it with entire devotion, not as a trade but as a profession, and the pecuniary rewards, although they have come to him in satisfactory measure, have been the least of its attractions, and his labor in any given case is not proportioned to the amount, but to the questions involved therein. Nature has equipped him generously for the profession, and he has supplemented her gifts by the conduct of his life. Possessing as he does a broad, clear and vigorous mind, orderly and logical in its processes, with a singular capacity for recognizing and seizing upon the vital and essential, combined with his flawless integrity, there is little wonder that he should be acknowledged as possessing just those characteristics so necessary in the ones elevated to the bench, and all concede that he well merits the honor thus conferred upon him in his selection as a candidate of his party.

William Preston, lawyer, born near Louisville, Ky., October 16, 1805, died in Lexington, Ky., September 21, 1887; his education was under the direction of the Jesuits at Bardstown, Kentucky. He afterward studied at Yale, and then attended the law school at Harvard, where he was graduated in 1838. He then began the practice of law, also taking an active part in politics. He served in the Mexican war as lieutenant-colonel of the Fourth Kentucky Volunteers. In 1851 he was elected to the Kentucky House of Representatives as a Whig, and in the following year he was chosen to Congress to fill the vacancy caused by Gen. Humphrey Marshall's resignation, serving from December 6, 1852, until March 3, 1855. He was again a candidate in 1854, but was defeated by his predecessor, General Marshall, the Know-Nothing candidate, after a violent campaign. He then became a democrat, and was a delegate to the Chicago convention in 1856, in which he was nominated Buchannan and Breckinridge. He was appointed United States minister to Spain under the Buchanan administration, at the close of which he returned to Kentucky and warmly espoused the cause of the South. He joined Gen. Simon B. Buckner at Bowling Green in 1861 and was made colonel on the staff of his brother-in-law, Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston, whom that officer assumed command. He served through the Kentucky campaign was at the fall of Fort Donelson, the battle of Shiloh, where General Johnston died in his arms, and the siege of Corinth. He was also in many hard-fought battles, especially at Murfreesboro. At the close of the war he returned to his home in Lexington, Kentucky, in 1867 he was elected to the Legislature, and in 1870 he was a delegate to the convention that nominated General Hancock for the presidency.

George Robertson, jurist, born in Mercer County, Kentucky, November 18, 1790, died in Lexington, Kentucky, May 16, 1874. He received a classical education at Transylvania University, studied law, was admitted to the bar in 1809, and began practice at Lexington. In 1816 he was elected to Congress, and he served two terms, being long chairman of the law committee and a member of the judiciary committee. He was re-elected a second time, but resigned his seat in order to resume the practice of law. He drew up the bill for the establishment of a territorial government in Arkansas, in the discussion of which the House was equally divided on the question of prohibiting slavery, an amendment to that effect being carried, but afterward rescinded by the casting vote of Henry Clay as speaker. The system of selling public lands in small lots to actual settlers at a cash price of $1.25 per acre was projected by him. After his retirement from Congress he offered the attorney-generalship of Kentucky, but declined this and other appointments in order to devote himself to his profession; yet in 1822 he was elected against his desire to the Legislature, and remained in that body until the final passage of the currency question in 1827, being a leader of the minority that opposed the relief act that made the depreciated notes of the state banks legal tender for the payment of debts. He was speaker of the assembly from 1823 until 1827, except in 1824, when the inflationists, having gained a large majority in both houses, sought to abolish the Court of Appeals, which had decided against the relief bill, by creating a new court. He drew up a protest in 1824, that contributed greatly to the final triumph of the anti-relief or old court party, and wrote and spoke frequently on the exciting questions at issue. He was also the author of a manifesto that was signed by the majority of the Legislature in 1827. He was offered the governorship of Arkansas, the mission to Colombia in 1824, and in 1828 the Peru commission, but declined all these appointments.

For a time he filled provisionally the office of secretary of state in 1828. In the same year he was made a justice of the Court of Appeals, and in 1829 he became chief justice, which post he held until 1843, when he resigned and resumed active practice. From 1834 until 1857 he was professor of law in Transylvania University. The degree of LL. D. was conferred on him by Centre and Augusta colleges. His published works include "Introductory Lecture to the Law Class" (Lexington, 1830); "Biographical Sketch of John
B. E. Adams. In spite of the contention of a few that a division of property would result in great prosperity for all, experience teaches that only hard work, intelligent direction of effort and faithful performance can enable him permanently attained, not only for the individual, but for the country. The person who refuses to do his full share of the work's does not deserve support, and conversely, too much is demanded from him who has not neglected his duty, but strive to give a fair service for the money received. In the career of B. E. Adams of Louisa, manager of the Lobaco Company at Louisa, a branch of the famous Coca Cola Company, a manufacturer of ice and bakery goods, is exemplified in a marked degree. Mr. Adams has steadily advanced, but his promotion has not detracted from the work he has deserved, and not on account of undue influence.

B. E. Adams was born at Danielsville, Georgia, April 10, 1866, a son of Rev. T. J. and Eliza F. (Tucker) Adams, natives of Georgia, but of Virginian ancestry. Reverend Adams was a graduate of the Democrat College in Georgia; he is manager of the congregational church, whose life was devoted to missionary work all over the State of Georgia. At one time he also served as state commissioner of education, having been appointed to that office by the governor of Georgia. During the war between the states he served in the Confederate Army under Gen. John B. Gordon, enlisting at the early age of sixteen years. During other engagements he took part in the battle of Chickamauga. No doubt the experience went through when a mere lad led him to go into the ministry later on in his career. A zealous Mason, he participated in the organization of a number of lodges of his fraternity. A man of wide vision, as well as intellectual development, he recognized the fact that there was great need for better educational advantages, and did all he could to secure the best schools and teachers for the children of Georgia, not only as commissioner, but also in his capacity as a private citizen. His death occurred in 1867, when he was only fourteen years of age. His wife died in 1868, when she was forty-two years old. They had six children, all of whom were educated in the public schools and the Decatur school. Mr. Adams attended the Coca Cola plant at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; C. E., who is an attorney practicing in Ohio maintains his residence in Georgia; Rev. E. L., who is connected with Young-Harris College a Methodist institution; H. T., who has been connected with the John B. Stetson Hat Company at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, for years; B. E., whose name heads this review; and A. T., who is a stock farmer, residing at Danielsville, Georgia.

B. E. Adams attended Young-Harris College, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, with the intention of taking up the study of the law, but decided upon a commercial career, and his success in it proves the wisdom of his choice. While still a boy, he had entered the employ of the Coca Cola Company, and before he completed his collegiate training he returned to this concern, and for two years had charge of its plant at Chattanooga, Tennessee. At the end of that time, however, he went back to college and completed his course. The Coca Cola people, recognizing his business ability, induced him to return to them, and put him in charge of their Philadelphia plant, where he remained for two years. He was then transferred to the plant in New Orleans, Louisiana, and took charge of it until he was sent to the plant at Dayton, Ohio, where he was in charge of the business for five years. Mr. Adams was then made manager of the plant at Louisa. This is a very large plant, and the trade extends over a wide territory. The original plant was destroyed by fire after he took charge of it, and the present one was constructed under his supervision.

Mr. Adams is a member of the Congregational Church while his wife belongs to the United Brethren Church. Fraternally Mr. Adams maintains membership with the Odd Fellows, but his home has its first attention, and then his business, so he does not devote much time to outside matters.

Griffin Murphy has been one of the able and energetic citizens of Covington nearly twenty years, and is one of the proprietors of the Southern Paper Company, Incorporated, paper jobbers who do an extensive business all over the Ohio Valley.

Mr. Murphy was born in Kentucky, but was born during the temporary residence of his parents at Terre Haute, Indiana, February 4, 1885. His father, Thomas Murphy, was born in Ireland in 1833 and in 1840, at the age of sixteen, came to America and at Cincinnati finished his education, graduating from St. Xavier's College. For many years his father was engaged in the clothing business, one at Cincinnati and one at Carlisle, Kentucky. He was engaged in business until his death, which occurred at Cincinnati in 1890. Thomas Murphy was a democrat in politics and a devout member of the Catholic Church. His wife was Margaret Elizabeth McDonald, who was born at Cincinnati in 1854. Mrs. Murphy was engaged in the clothing business, one at Cincinnati and one at Carlisle, Kentucky. They were the parents of nine children, two of whom died in infancy, Griffin being the youngest survivor. The oldest, Margaret, died unmarried at Cincinnati at the age of twenty-seven. Nannetta Stewart is the wife of Harry B. Brennan, a resident of Shreveport, Louisiana, a successful attorney with offices both at Shreveport and New Orleans. Miss Emily died at Maysville, Kentucky, practically at the age of twenty-one. Eugenia is the wife of John W. Sullivan, a lumber mill operator with home at Colfax, Louisiana. Mary Agnes is the wife of John W. Williams, a Kentucky farm owner with home at Cincinnati. Lorena died at the age of fifteen. Griffin Murphy was about a month old when his parents removed to Covingtonville, Kentucky, and while the family home was there his father continued his clothing business at Cincinnati and Carlisle. Griffin Murphy was educated in the parochial schools at Maysville, graduated from high school in 1902, and in the same year came to Covington. For six years he was an employe of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway. In 1908 he became identified with the firm of Oren Parker Company, the oldest wholesale liquor house of Covington, and later as a member of the firm Mr. Murphy had a prominent part in its prosperous business. He continued therewith until January 1, 1920, when he and Max Davis organized the Southern Paper Company, Incorporated, with offices at 12-16 East Pike Street. As paper jobbers they do a large business throughout the states of Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Virginia and West Virginia.

Mr. Murphy is a democrat, a Catholic, is a fourth degree Knight of Columbus, and for a number of years was treasurer of Bishop Carroll Council No. 702. He is a member of the Industrial Club of Covington. He and his family live in one of the beautiful suburban homes around Covington, at 80 Woodlawn Avenue, Fort Mitchell. His residence is an attractive stucco and red tile roof house set in the midst of eight acres of ground. Mr. Murphy was a liberal bond buyer and gave much of his time to the support of the various organizations carrying the burden of war activities in Kenton County.

James W. Rankin, son of James and Tabitha (Sims) Rankin. His father was born in Nicholas County May 28, 1830, and his mother in Bourbon County in November, 1836. The father spent his life as an active farmer and died May 25, 1875. He was a democrat and a member of the Baptist Church. The mother is still living, in her one hundred and fourteenth year of age. According to instructions from the widow, she became the wife of L. J. Ham. By her first marriage she was the mother of nine children, seven of whom are living, Nicholas, James W., Robert, Anna, H. N., John T. and Lucy.

James W. Rankin was thirteen years of age when his father died and that practically ended his schooling and thereafter he employed his time and labor in contributing to the support of the family. He remained at home until he was twenty-two. He married Mary A. Masten, and they started with practically no capital, rented, and gradually accumulated means to purchase land of their own. Mr. Rankin now owns 160 acres in Nicholas County and also has improved real estate in Cynthiana and Paris. For the past twenty-one years his home has been on the Howes farm comprising 225 acres.

Mr. Rankin lost his wife by death October 25, 1910. There are four children. Nora is the wife of H. R. Hillock and they live on Mr. Rankin's farm. Elizabeth is the wife of Dr. H. C. Blount of Leesburg, Kentucky. Homer is a graduate of the Carlisle High School and the Lexington Business College, is a carpenter at Paris, and married Fairy Anderson. Edna, the oldest child, is a graduate of the Madam C. K. Masten Female College and the wife of S. M. De Myer of Woodstock, Tennessee. Mr. Rankin is a deacon in the Baptist Church, and is affiliated with Amy Lodge No. 40, F. and A. M., and the Knights of the Macbees.

Ed R. Prewitt. The agriculturalists of Montgomery County may be recognized by reason of their ever-brightening faces, through understanding of their calling, and the fine condition in which they keep their farms and equipment. Ed R. Prewitt is one of these modern farmers, whose valuable farm is located three and one-half miles south of Mount Sterling, and he was born on this farm April 30, 1871. His parents were W. H. and Bettie G. (Rogers) Prewitt, and the former was born in Montgomery County July 2, 1847, and his wife was born in Bourbon County, Kentucky, in 1847. They were married in Bourbon County, and lived in Fayette County, Kentucky, for a time, moving then to Montgomery County and settling on the farm now owned by him, and here they still reside. The paternal grandfather, Nelson Prewitt, had spent his entire life on this farm, so it has been in the family for many years. It was bought by Nelson Prewitt, a native of Culpeper County, Virginia, who, after his marriage with Mary Ann Coleman, of Caroline County, Virginia, came to Kentucky and settled on this farm, which became the homestead of their family.

Growing up on this farm, W. H. Prewitt attended the local schools and learned to be a farmer under his father's experienced training. After he had completed his course in the public schools his father sent him to the private school conducted by Professor Drake, a noted educator of Cincinnati, Ohio. Mr. Prewitt joined the Christian Church, and rose to be an elder in it. Prominent as a democrat, he served as a magistrate and justice of the peace. He was the father of three children, namely: Ed R., whose name heads this review; Harvey, who is engaged in farming on the homestead; and Anna, who is the wife of Thomas Kennedy, of Mount Sterling. Harvey Prewitt graduated from Bethany College at Bethany, West Virginia, and Anna graduated from Daughters College in Frankfort, Kentucky.

Ed R. Prewitt was also given excellent educational advantages, for after he had finished his studies in a private school he was sent to Bethany College for two years. Leaving college, he returned to the farm and took charge of it. He now owns 615 acres of land, and is recognized as one of the successful agriculturists of Montgomery County. Mr. Prewitt has other investments, and is also one of the directors of the Exchange Bank of Mount Sterling.

On February 27, 1900, Mr. Prewitt married Patsy Prewitt, who was born in Montgomery County. They became the parents of three children, namely: Edward, who was born June 17, 1901, was graduated from the Mount Sterling High School, and is now a junior at Center College; Elizabeth C., who was born July 9, 1903, graduated from the Mount Sterling High School in 1921, and is now a freshman at Randolph Macon Woman's College, Lynchburg, Virginia; and Anna K., who was born March 22, 1905, is a senior at the Mount Sterling High School. Mr. and Mrs. Prewitt belong to the Christian Church, in which he is a deacon. Like his father he is a democrat, but he has not gone into politics to any great extent. A practical man and good farmer, Mr. Prewitt is numbered among the responsible citizens of his home community, and is recognized as a worthy representative of his old and honored family.

Richard Godson. Among the citizens of Woodford County whose interests are broad as the community itself, one of the most notable is Richard Godson, Midway lawyer and a man whose long and devoted leadership in everything that promotes the highest interest and general welfare of that community.

Mr. Godson was born in Boston, Massachusetts. His father came from England and died at Midway, Kentucky, when his son Richard was only nine years old. The latter was given a home by Doctor Poynter and wife, and has lived with that excellent couple ever since, having never missed any of his growing success has rendered what return he could for the admirable care given him by this generous family.

As a youth he learned the printer's trade, and served as a typeo on various publications. He was prepared for college in the excellent private school of Prof. John R. Hammond, and then entered Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, where he graduated, after his admittance to the bar he began his law practice, and in that profession has won distinction recognition.

Mr. Godson has served as counsel in some important causes, including that of the old Deposit Bank at Midway, for the looting of which two officials were convicted and sent to the penitentiary. He was also counsel for one of the parties interested in the noted Frank Harper will case, and has rendered service in other important cases. Soon after his gradu-
HISTORY OF KENTUCKY

JAMES JOHNSON GIBSON, was born August 21, 1870, near Ewing, Lee County, Virginia. He was the son of George W. and Mollie R. Gibson. J. J. Gibson (he was generally known by this name only), was the youngest of a family of five, and was called Joe. He was a man of fine physique and striking personality, always kind and gentle to his patients, and very seldom refused to make a call. He took an active part in the cause of Temperance and in fact in everything that was for civic improvement of the community, was a kind father and idolizing husband and wedded to his profession.

Four Gibson brothers came over from Ireland in 1754 and homesteaded land in Powells Valley, Virginia, and a great amount of this land today still belongs to the Gibson family. This includes the present home of Doctor Gibson's father near Ewing, Virginia.

Doctor Gibson was placed in boarding school at the tender age of nine years. He finished high school in June, 1886, and immediately began reading medicine under the tutelage of the late Dr. James Morrison of Cumberland Gap, Virginia, who was a very noted and successful physician and surgeon of his day. He remained a student of Doctor Morrison for one year and until the Baltimore Medical College at Boston opened for the Fall term of 1887, he was a student at this college till the close of the year in 1888. In the fall of 1888 he entered the Hospital Medical College of Louisville, Kentucky, and on the 18th day of June, 1889, he was awarded two diplomas from this college—one in medicine and one in surgery. He also did post graduate work in this college and specialized in Obstetrics and diseases of women for which he received his third diploma. Doctor Gibson was the youngest of his graduating class of forty-seven M. D.'s. He was gifted with a natural talent for medicine. On commencement day, 18th day of June, 1889, Prof. William H. Bolling, President of the College had Doctor Gibson stand by him in the Masonic Hall and read the 19th Psalm for commencement. President Bolling referred to Doctor Gibson as the boy doctor of the class, all of whom were his seniors and some of them about twice his age, and exhibiting the two diplomas that had been given him by the college said that Doctor Gibson was gifted with one of the greatest natural talents for medicine that he had ever seen manifested by anyone. After finishing his course in Louisville, Doctor Gibson made a short visit to his parents at Ewing, Virginia.

The Days, at Jackson, Kentucky, were people of much influence and warm personal friends of the Gibsons, hence Doctor Gibson decided to locate for the practice of his profession in Jackson. All was well for almost a year. He was building a fine practice and had made many friends, when one dark rainy night when returning from a call in the country two men stepped out from the side of the road and Doctor Gibson at once threw up his hands asking them not to shoot and telling him who he was. He produced his pill pockets as evidence and they were convinced that he was not the man they were looking for so he was allowed to return to his boarding house. After this experience he made very few calls at night and when he did some one always accompanied him. He collected what outstanding bills he could in a very quiet way and in a very short time bid the little town a long good-bye. In the fall of 1891 he came back here and purchased the old D. C. Jackson home one mile south of Athens on the Cleveland road in Fayette County and gave the southern half of this farm to Doctor Gibson. He immediately moved to the farm. He made friends fast and soon built up a very lucrative practice not only in his own county but also in the adjoining counties of Clark, Bourbon and Madison.

June 9, 1897, Doctor Gibson was married to Miss M. E. Porter, and moved to his new home near W. and Mary S. Porter of Clark County, Kentucky. To this union was born a son, and only child, James Porter Gibson, January 31, 1900.

Doctor Gibson was a consistent member of the Christian Church and at the time of his death he was deacon, trustee and superintendent of the Sunday School. He gave liberally to the support of the church and was an excellent Sunday School superintendent. He enjoyed a success in his profession that was entirely due to his own skill and ability without the assistance of friends financially—too much so for his own success. At three different times in his life he endorsed notes for friends and it took all of his surplus cash each time to pay the notes. His word was regarded “good as gold.” He was a staunch democrat and always took an active part in the political campaigns. He was waited on by a committee from his party and asked to make the race for representative, but he very graciously declined. He was commissioner and receiver for Fayette County, a member in good standing in the American Medical Association, the Southern Medical Association, the Mississippi Valley Medical Association, The Kentucky State Medical Association, The Kentucky Midland Medical Association, The Fayette County Medical Society and The Tuberculosis Association. He took a very active part in the campaign to have the present Tuberculosis Sanitarium erected in his county. He was ex-State Councilor of the Jr. O. U. A. M. and, a Mason of good standing. In his practice he made a special study of syphilis and its treatment. He always attended the annual meeting of some one of the different medical societies of which he was a member. He was a regular subscriber to the best medical journals and always wrote up new diseases and the latest treatment with the new medicines. In his practice he had called many prominent physicians and surgeons in consultation and they invariably agreed with him in his diagnosis and treatment. On the day of his death, he was up early in the morning to see some patients who lived in Jessamine County, in order that he could get back to the church in time for services. He had just returned to his home on Sunday when he was stricken with apoplexy just as he started to enter the yard. Several physicians and surgeons were summoned immediately and all human aid that could be given was rendered to Doctor Gibson, but he never regained consciousness and was a corpse at 5 P. M., of the same afternoon. His sudden death was a great blow to his wife and son and to all who knew him. It was a very short time after the numerous physicians had been summoned to see Doctor Gibson, friends of the family began collecting at his home and many were present at the time of his death and a large number remained over night and until his funeral (May 30th—10 A. M.). It was just a continuous stream of friends coming for just a few minutes to view the remains at the home. The casket was not opened at the church. The funeral was one of the largest in the county, people from all walks of life were present, Doctor Gibson came from a long line of professional and business men. He was born and reared on his father’s farm one mile east of Ewing Station, Virginia, in Powells Valley. His father, G. W. Gibson, has amassed quite a fortune and still resides on this farm that has been handed down to the youngest son in the family for several generations. He inherited this farm from his father J. J. Gibson, who was an extensive landowner and owned a number of slaves. He had two houses in the back yard for the slaves—one for the men and one for the women. One has been torn away, but the other is still in good repair and is used for a granary with the original lock and key that reminds one of the key to our state reformatory. He was a much larger land owner than is his youngest son, G. W. Gibson. At the time of his death he left to each of his seven children several hundred acres of land besides many other properties. Doctor Gibson’s father has given this home place to his younger son, Doctor Gibson’s only brother, Thomas Shelby Gibson. Doctor Gibson’s sisters are Mrs. O. C. Harmon in Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Henry Clay Smith of Rose Hill, Virginia, and two sisters are deceased, Mrs. C. A. Bales and Mrs. G. W. Smith.

His uncle, the late J. J. Gibson of Pineville, Kentucky, was a prosperous lumberman, and Dr. Clyde Johnson and Dr. Edgar Johnson, cousins of Doctor Gibson are prominent physicians and surgeons of Seymour, Texas. Dr. Shultz Gibson, another cousin, is a dentist of Middleborough, Kentucky. The late Dr. James Morrison, Sr., of Cumberland Gap, Virginia, and Dr. James Morrison, Jr., also of Cumberland Gap, are cousins, and Dr. T. T. Gibson of Middleborough, Kentucky, who began the study of medicine under the late Dr. J. J. Gibson, and James V. Gibson, a prominent merchant of Big Stone Gap, Virginia, are also his cousins. John Gibson, an uncle living in Jonesville, Virginia, is a prosperous merchant; and James Gibson, a prominent attorney of St. Joseph, Missouria, is another cousin. Thomas Shelby Gibson, prominent farmer and business man near Lexington, Oklahoma; J. N. Gibson, prominent business man of Gibson Station, Virginia; Zack Gibson (deceased), who was a very successful farmer and business man near Gibson Station, Virginia; and late Dr. Hugh Gibson of Richmond, Kentucky, and Dr. Moss Gibson, and Dr. Burg Gibson, present owners and proprietors of the Gibson Sanatorium, are all his uncles. Henry Johnson Gibson, of Pineville, Kentucky, president of the Kenmont Oil and Gas Company, is a cousin; and also Thomas Franklin Gibson, a very successful business man of Pineville, Kentucky. Doctor Gibson’s maternal grandfather was the late Capt. Thomas Shelby Gibson, of Gibson Station, Virginia. He was a captain in the Confederate army and like his slaves and most of his personal property during the war, he had a good farm left and lived very comfortably in a fine home till his 88th year. In the Gibson family James and Thomas are favorite names for the sons, and Lucy and Elizabeth for the daughters.

James Porter Gibson, only son of the late Dr. J. J. Gibson, is a young man of sterling character and one of the few boys who returned home from foreign military service to continue his education. He received his early training in the county schools. He had two years’ training in the Athens High School and in the fall of 1916 he entered Millersburg Military Institute and remained till the close of the school year. In 1917 he entered Augusta Military Academy, near Staunton, Virginia, and in 1918 entered the Students Army Training Camp at Lincoln Memorial College in Tennessee. He was made first sergeant here and ordered to sail for Siberia. The Armistice was signed just two weeks before the date set for him to leave camp. After he was mustered out he entered the State University of Lexington, Kentucky, and was placed in a regular class. After commencement at the university he entered the Reserve Officers Training Camp at Camp Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky. He was made a second lieutenant at the close of the camp. He again entered the university the following fall. After commencement at State University in June, 1920, he entered the Reserve Officers Training Camp at Camp Custer, Battle Creek, Michigan. He was placed in this camp and won two medals, one in marksmanship and one in deportment. He again entered the university, was made captain of Company A. He was taking a pre-medical course with his degree. He was married on March 1, 1921, to Miss Mae Smith, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Noble Smith, prominent and influential citizens of Harlan County, Kentucky, where he now resides.

Doctor Gibson’s widow inherited many business tactics from her father, J. W. Porter, who was a very successful farmer and business man, now retired and living in Cincinnati, Ohio. Previous to her marriage to Doctor Gibson, she acted as her father’s secretary, conducted all of his correspondence and wrote practically all of his checks. She knew just how many men her father had employed, the kind of labor each was to do and the compensation each was to receive. Mrs. Gibson has always been an active church worker, was deeply interested in the cause of suffrage, and now manifests a very keen interest in all of the political campaigns. She is also an active member of the Woman’s Christian Temperance Union, of which she is a local officer and was a delegate to the International Convention in Washington, D. C., in September and October, 1920. Mrs. Gibson has always been very fond of out-of-door sports, especially horseback riding. She has a string of registered saddles on the farm, where she and her friends go out for the week-ends and enjoy the sport.

St. Clair Walker, after some early years devoted to teaching and the newspaper business, took up life insurance as his profession, and has earned a high rank in insurance circles. For a number of years he has been special agent for the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company of Louisville, Kentucky.

Mr. Walker was born in Muhlenberg County, Kentucky, May 17, 1862, and is member of a family of prominence that has been identified with Kentucky since the earliest period of settlement. This branch of the Walker family came originally from Virginia. The great-great-grandfather of St. Clair Walker was Dr. Thomas Walker, a Virginia who came to Kentucky in 1780, and was one of the early citizens of Adair County. Doctor Walker was the first man to lead an expedition into the wilds of what is now Kentucky, and he settled in Adair County. The great-grandfather of St. Clair Walker was Hugh Walker, a native of Virginia. He was a farmer, and lived successively in Fayette County, Adair County, Todd County and finally in Daviess County. He married Ann Fry, a native of Virginia, and granddaughter of Dr. Thomas Walker. Her husband was Henry Fry, and his father, was Gen. Joshua Fry, who earned distinction as a Colonial and Revolutionary soldier. The grandfather of St. Clair Walker was Iverson Walker, a native of Kentucky, and whose life was devoted to farming. He married Annie Waggoner, a native of Todd County, and of a well-known Kentucky family.

The parents of St. Clair Walker were William H. and Martha E. (Bradley) Walker. His father was born in Todd County, March 31, 1835, and died in January 1914. His mother was born in Smith County, Tennessee, in 1841 and died in 1885. Of their six children three are still living, St. Clair being the eldest. His father was reared and educated in Todd County, and as a youth learned the tailor's trade, a business which he followed for himself at South Carrollton, Kentucky. For a number of years he was in the tobacco business, and was a tobacco dealer until a few years before his death, when he retired and removed to Louisville. While at South Carrollton he served as police judge. He was a democrat and a member of the Baptist Church.

St. Clair Walker finished his education in the West Kentucky Normal College, and had an experience of about three years as a teacher. For four years he was business manager of the Owensboro Enquirer, and at the age of twenty-eight took up the life insurance business. For several years he has been one of the leading builders of business for the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company of Greensboro, North Carolina, and has his offices in the Stark Building at Louisville. Mr. Walker is a member of the Filson Club, the Baptist Church and is a democrat.

October 21, 1886, at Hartford, Kentucky, he married Fannie E. Allen. They have five children: Dr. Allen H., Edith C., Martha R., wife of Capt. Charles R. Lanahan, U. S. A., Moses S. and David K.

William Rosecrans McCoy, during a quarter of a century has been in active practice of the law at Inez, Martin County, Kentucky. His substantial qualifications have been fittingly recognized, and he now occupies a commanding position among the members of the legal profession of Eastern Kentucky. His record proves that he possesses a marked breadth and versatility of mind, his work has been largely done in cases where others have not been so fortunate. His activities, however, have not been entirely confined to legal matters, for he has always been ready to render services when it was required of him, and in every way has measured up to the highest conception of American manhood of the finest type.

William Rosecrans McCoy was born at Pleasant, Martin County, Kentucky, March 18, 1873, a son of Pleasant P. and Sarah Ann (McGlotton) McCoy. His father was born in Floyd County, Kentucky, a son of William McCoy, who was born in Pike County, Kentucky, a son of John McCoy. John McCoy was born near the site of the battle of Antietam, Maryland, and was a son of William McCoy, who moved with his family to the Star's Fork Valley of Virginia in the eighteenth century, and in 1885 moved to Pike County, Kentucky, where the grandfather of the subject of this sketch was born and reared. John McCoy was a large landowner and a lover of fine horses, and in order to indulge this fondness, maintained his own race course. The grandfather and great-grandfather of William Rosecrans McCoy were highly respected and had great confidence in the future of the timber and mineral lands of Eastern Kentucky, and acquired large acreages of it.

The father of William Rosecrans McCoy was born February 15, 1844, and his mother was born May 27, 1849. They were married February 11, 1872. To this union was born six children, all of whom are living: Hiram W., William H., Thomas, Floyd County, Kentucky; Cornacile McCoy, Buchanan County, Virginia; Rebecca A., wife of Geo. Henry Blackburn, of Cherokee, Lawrence County, Kentucky; Hayes McCoy, of Bartlesville, Oklahoma; and George W. McCoy, of Jenkins, Letcher County, Kentucky; and William R., whose name heads this review.

William P. McCoy acquired and owns large tracts of timber and mineral lands in Pike, Martin and Letcher counties, and now resides at Cherokee, Lawrence County, Kentucky. From his young manhood he has been a farmer and timberman, and it was the ambition of his life that he might have farms for each of his children, which he acquired, but only two of them have ever lived on farms.

The subject of this sketch attended the public schools of his native county, worked on the farm during his childhood and early manhood, and later attended the West Normal School and Eastern Kentucky Normal School at Prestonsburg. Later he taught in the public schools of his native county for seven years, and in this way he earned money to further pursue his education and to aid his brothers in acquiring an education. While teaching school he read law, passed his examination, was admitted to the bar in 1896, and opened an office and began the practice of law. He has been continually engaged in the practice of law since his admission to the bar, and has continued to practice in Prestonsburg. He has been a member of the Kentucky State Bar Association, has held all of the important positions of the association, and is one of the most respected counsel of eastern Kentucky.

Mr. McCoy is a lawyer of broad and practical ability, thorough, determined, alert, versatile and resourceful. His ability in handling business litigation recommends him to the consideration of some of the large corporations of this part of the state, and he is oftentimes called upon to represent them. Because he was forced to work for his education he, perhaps, prides his knowledge more than do some who acquired it through no special exertion of their own, and at any rate he makes splendid use of it, not only for his clients, but his community generally, and is always to be found in the front ranks of those who are eager to render to their fellow citizens the best that is in them.

Frank N. Burns. In support of the contention of his friends that Frank N. Burns is one of the strongest and most influential personalities in the public affairs of Western Kentucky there are some interesting proofs. The state elections of 1910 are still fresh in the minds of the people. Though the Republicans swept the state, they failed of complete victory in the office of state railroad commissioner, to which Mr. Burns was elected. Mr. Burns had established himself successfully in law practice at Paducah before he was drawn into politics, was elected and served as mayor of Paducah under circumstances that attracted much attention, and during the war was one of the foremost men in his section in upholding the American cause.

Mr. Burns was born at Paducah, Kentucky, December 11, 1879. His ancestors were of Scotch and English extraction. His father's branch was of the same aneasty as that of Robert Burns. On leaving Scotland they became Colonial settlers in Virginia. Frank N. is a name borne in all the generations, and it was the name of Mr. Burns' grandfather, who was born in Wayne County, Tennessee, and spent his life there, dying in 1883. He owned a large plantation of 1,000 acres and had a numerous retinue of slaves.

Frank N. Burns, father of the Paducah attorney, was born in Wayne County, Tennessee, in 1847, grew up and married there, and followed farming. In 1887 he established a law practice at Paducah, Kentucky, but the next year went to Texas, first ranching at Abilene and in 1889, in the Big Springs country of Western Texas. He returned to Franklin, Tennessee, in 1891, and spent the rest of his life as a farmer in that locality, though he died while on a visit at Harrison, Arkansas, in 1893. He was a staunch democrat, and a very active member of the Methodist Church. He was a Mason and was also affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Frank N. Burns married Sallie A. Harbour, who was born in Hardin County, Tennessee, in 1846, and died at Parkers in that state in 1892. She was the mother of five children: Frank N.; James, a merchant at Paducah; M. Grover, a merchant at Waterbury, Connecticut: Gladstone, a Paducah merchant; and Lish, who operates an alfalfa ranch and lives at Los Angeles, California.

Frank N. Burns, the Kentucky railroad commissioner, was educated in the public schools of his native county and those of Paducah, Kentucky, attended the Academy at Martin's Mills in Tennessee, graduating in 1894, was also a student of the Paducah High School, and for six years was enrolled in Valparaiso University at Valparaiso, Indiana. He received the Bachelor of Science degree from that institution in 1897, and in 1902 received the degrees A. B. and LL. B. To complete his law course he attended the University of Michigan, receiving the LL. B. degree from that institution in 1904. In the fall of that year he went to Chicago, and for 4½ years was connected with the law firm of Winston, Payne, Strawn & Shaw, one of the largest firms in that city. While in Chicago various members have achieved great distinction in their profession, including Judge Barton Payne, a member of President Wilson's Cabinet, and whose distinguished services to the Government during and since the war have brought him national distinction.

In 1908 Mr. Burns returned to Paducah, and for twelve years has been busy with a general civil and criminal practice. He is a member of the firm of Hendrick & Burns, with offices in the City National Bank Building.

Mr. Burns served as an alderman of Paducah from 1912 to 1914, and in 1915 was the first commissioner of public safety under Paducah's commission form of government. In the fall of 1915 he became a candidate for mayor or president of the commission, but was defeated by a blood oath organization of negroes. The election had many sinister aspects and received much attention from the public press of the country at that time, and for a time hearings before the Court of Appeals ousted all the members of the municipal government elected through the influence of this secret organization and ordered a new election. In that campaign in 1916 Mr. Burns was elected by a large majority. The election and the court procedure set a new law in election cases. So far as known it is the only case in American municipal government in which a blood oath organization figured. Mr. Burns held the office of mayor until elected a state railroad commissioner in the fall of 1919. As mayor he cooperated both officially and as a matter of personal patriotism with the Council of Defense and made many public addresses in behalf of the Red Cross, Loan and War Savings drives.

Before America entered the war he had been heard upon the subject of military preparation.

Mr. Burns is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and for several years held the office of steward. He is affiliated with Plain City Lodge No. 449, F. and A. M., Paducah Chapter No. 30, R. A. M. Paducah Commandery No. 11, K. T., Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Louisville, is a member of the Paducah Shrine Club, Lafayette Lodge No. 155, and Union Encampment No. 70 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Paducah Camp No. 11313, Modern Woodmen of America, Olive Camp No. 2, Woodmen of the World, Paducah Homestead No. 4153, Brotherhood of American Yeomen, the Tribe of Ben Hur, Paducah Lodge No. 217 of the Elks. He is a member of the Paducah Board of Trade, Paducah Country Club and the McCracken County and State Bar associations. Among other interests Mr. Burns is president of the Harbour Department Store Company at Paducah, and he owns considerable city real estate, including his home at 507 North Seventh Street.

June 26, 1907, at Ann Arbor, Michigan, he married Miss Natalie E. Fischer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Fischer the latter now deceased. Her father is an educator and for a number of years past has been a teacher in the public schools of Ann Arbor. Mr. Burns graduated in pipe organ and piano from the Conservatory of the University of Michigan, for four years was a teacher there after graduation, and many competent critics have called him the ablest pipe organist in the South. Mr. and Mrs. Burns have one child, Frank N., Jr., who was born March 17, 1915, and is the fifth successive Frank N. Burns in as many generations. He has inherited his mother's talent for music.

PROF. W. A. WARREN. The present efficient and highly popular superintendent of schools of Horse Cave, Kentucky, Prof. W. A. Warren, has been engaged in educational work throughout his career, which has been one of constant and consecutive advancement. Showing an inclination for this calling in his youth, he engaged therein when still in his teens, and while engaged in teaching continued to prepare himself still further for what he had chosen as his life work. In his case merit has been recognized and rewarded, and the years of close application which he devoted to study have demonstrated their worth in acquiring for Professor Warren a position of preferment and prestige.

W. A. Warren was born near Mayfield, Graves County, Kentucky, May 3, 1891, and is a son of Chris and Mary (Cook) Warren. His father also a native of Graves County, was born in 1849, and went home from the Civil war, a man of scarce thirty years of age, of his birth, where he still makes his home. For many years he was engaged in agricultural pursuits, but as an industrious, able and resourceful man was able to put by a competence for his declining years and is now living in comfortable retirement. His life has been one that has merited the respect and esteem in which he is universally held. In politics he is a democrat.

Mr. Warren graduated from Chariton College in Graves County in 1856, and they have had the following children: Henry C., who is engaged in farming in Weakley County, Tennessee; James B., who is farming in Graves County, Kentucky; Sallie, the wife of James Malone a Graves County farmer; Annie, the wife of R. E. Holmes, a miller of Sedalia, Graves County; Eddie P., engaged in farming in Graves County; Arthur F., a merchant of Russellville, Arkansas; and W. A.

The early education of W. A. Warren was acquired in the rural schools of Graves County, where his boyishness was passed on his father's farm. He graduated from the Wingo High School in that county in 1916, but in the meantime he had started teaching in the rural schools of Henry County, Tennessee, in 1916. After spending five years in that country he was placed for a time in the high schools of Pilot Oak, Kentucky, and spent one year in that capacity, following which he enrolled as a student at the Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and graduated therefrom after a three-year course in 1919. During the school years of 1919-1920 Professor Warren served as principal of the high school at Hazel, Calloway County, Kentucky, and the following year was elected superintendent of the graded and high school at Horse Cave, a position which he still occupies. Under his supervision in this office are nine teachers and 325 scholars, with all of whom Superintendent Warren is greatly popular. He has done much to advance the school system at this place, and his work has been greatly gratifying to the people of the community, whose children are being given the best of benefits in preparing themselves for the positions which they will be called upon to fill in life. The new modern brick school building was erected at Horse Cave in 1914, and is well equipped in every way, several new features having been added during the superintendency of Professor Warren. He continues as a close and constant student, keeping fully abreast of the forward movements being made in his profession, and is an interested member of the Kentucky Educational Association. His religious connection is with the Christian Church. While the duties of his calling have been of such an exacting character as to preclude the idea of his entering actively into politics or public life, he takes an interest in the religious and civic affairs of his city, and is an independent democrat in his political relations. During the World war, while attending the normal school at Bowling Green, he took an active part in all war movements. In this connection he was able to assist greatly through the production of entertainments for the raising of war funds.

In 1913, at Cottage Grove, Tennessee, Professor Warren was united in marriage with Miss Lennie McAllister, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. McAllister, the former of whom is deceased, the latter the resident of Milan, Gibson County, Tennessee, in the vicinity of which place Mr. McAllister was a well-known farmer for many years. Mrs. Warren attended the National Bible School at Nashville, Tennessee, for three years, and was subsequently graduated from the C. J. Shubert Conservatory of Music of Nashville. She is a skilled pianist, has written some music, and is a woman of marked intellectual attainments. Professor and Mrs. Warren have no children.

Dr. G. M. Cook. In Perry County one of the best remembered citizens was the late Dr. G. M. Cook, who died when about fifty-nine years of age, and to the last was diligent in the service to which talent and inclination had called him. He was born in Jackson County, but moved to Leslie County some thirty-four years before his death. He was not a graduate of any medical school, but seemed to have the faculty of knowing more of human ailments and how to relieve sufferers than many who come out of the great schools and colleges. At one time he was well known as a physician and moralist. Once a well-known preacher passing that way, observing a great number of people gathered by the roadside, inquired the cause, and was answered, "This is the day when everybody for miles around comes to get treatment from Dr. Cook." There are a large number of people living in this and adjoining counties who have special personal reasons to remember him with gratitude. He was survived by a wife and nine children.

Hon. William Worth Stephenson. No history of Kentucky would be complete without an extended mention of the life and work of Hon. William Worth Stephenson, brilliant attorney, astute statesman, accurate historian and accomplished gentleman. He held in high repute, not only in the State, but in the Federal government. His positions were held in recognition of affection by his fellow townsmen at Harrodsburg. Mr. Stephenson is a native of Kentucky, having been born in Madison County, this state, October 24, 1857, a son of Dr. Andrew Tribble Stephenson, grandson of Joseph H. Stephenson, and great-grandson of Thomas Stephenson, the latter being of English descent, and serving in the southern division of the Continental army during the American Revolution.

Joseph H. Stephenson was born in Orange County, Virginia, November 6, 1771. He was a third cousin to Hon. Andrew Stevenson, the speaker of Congress, and a cousin with one more remove, to Hon. John W. Stephenson, governor of Kentucky. The name was originally spelled with a "v," but Joseph H. Stephenson, becoming convinced that it was derived from Stephen and son of Stephen, through the argument with a schoolmaster, he changed the "v" to "ph" and he and his descendants thereafter so spelt it. Prior to 1800 Joseph H. Stephenson moved to Madison County, Kentucky, and purchased five small farms. On December 23, 1806, he was married to Mary Tribble, daughter of Andrew Tribble, one of the pioneer Baptist ministers of Kentucky and a man known far and wide because of his great piety and eloquence. She was the granddaughter of Thomas Burris, who received large land grants for service in the American Revolution. Her death occurred in 1872, in the eighty-fourth year of her age, she long outliving her husband who passed away in 1867. He was in the councils and campaigns against the Indians in Indiana. He always had a great aversion to political life. At the time of his death he owned 600 acres of land, and was a man of ample means.

Dr. Andrew T. Stephenson was educated in the public schools of Madison County, and in 1845 began his study of medicine. During 1846 and 1847 he attended his first course of lectures at Transylvania, Lexington, Kentucky, but was graduated from the Medical School of Ohio University in 1851. He was the first member of his family in 1858, attended the schools and hospitals of Philadelphia and New York to further perfect himself in his profession.

On April 22, 1852, Doctor Stephenson was married to Elizabeth Ann Smith, a daughter of Benjamin and Judith Smith of Madison County, who dowered her with a large and excellent farm. Their family numbered five children, namely: Martha, Mary A., William W., Julia and Elizabeth. In the fall of 1860 Dr. and Mrs. Stephenson moved to Washington County, Kentucky, settling on a large farm in the vicinity of Springfield, which remained their home until they came to Mercer County, and bought a farm of 454 acres which was held in the family until 1915.

William W. Stephenson was reared in an intellectual atmosphere and by watchful parents, who early saw that the lad possessed unusual faculties and determined to develop them, so they sent him to the best schools of Harrodsburg, and then, in 1876, he entered the College of Arts, University of Kentucky, at Lexington, Kentucky, now Transylvania College, and was a student of that body for two years, leaving it to enter Bethany College ofVirginia, where he graduated in 1879 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, as salutatorian, a distinction never before conferred upon a student who had been at the college only one year, and he later had the degree of Master of Arts accorded him as well.

Upon his return to Kentucky he studied law, and was admitted to the bar of his native state in 1881, and immediately entered upon the practice of his profession. In addition to his knowledge of the law, he was an expert stenographer and found this of great use to him in his practice. While carrying on his constantly augmented law practice, he also was interested in agricultural pursuits and all that pertains to the welfare of the great body of landowners. For many years his daughter, Mary, and her husband, Dr. Andrew Stephenson, lived on a farm which he had bought in Mercer County in 1864, from which the family moved in 1866, to Harrodsburg, and he continued to maintain his residence in that city the remainder of his life.

In politics Mr. Stephenson attained a prestige which placed him among the leading men of Kentucky. In August, 1889, he was elected by a handsome majority as representative from Mercer County to the State Assembly, and was honored by the speaker of the House by being placed on a number of important committees. In the session of 1889-90 he was made chairman of the committee on Codes of Practice, which was composed of a number of distinguished lawyers of the House; and was a member of the committee on General Statutes and that on Constitutional Conventions, and on two special committees. His logical manner of speaking and his close attention to every detail of public business, made him a power in behalf of any object he saw fit to champion, so that it was but natural that he was re-elected in 1891, and in the subsequent sessions served on the Judiciary and other important committees. In the session of 1892 he was the father of a number of very important bills, among them being the Stephenson Revenue Bill, which was passed in record time, and his effort for the organizing of the state and by it the state was saved thousands of dollars.

In the fall of 1893 Mr. Stephenson was elected to the State Senate from the Twentieth District, comprising Anderson, Franklin and Mercer counties, and received a majority of 1,600 over his Republican opponent, and when he took his seat, was one of the youngest members of the Senate. At once he began to take a prominent and compelling part in the legislative work of that body, and was elected, in the session of 1894, without opposition, chairman of the State Democratic Caucus and Joint Caucus, and also chairman of the Committee on Public Offices. He was also a member of the committee on General Statutes and Rules. From bills and joint resolutions introduced by him fourteen were necessary bills added to the statutes of Kentucky. One of these is an act on voluntary assignments which passed the Senate unanimously, and almost unanimously in the House. To him is due a large share of the credit of the "Husband and Wife" bill. In 1896 he was again elected chairman of the Senate Caucus and Joint Democratic Caucus; was chairman on the committee on Corporations, and after the death of Hon. Roxel Weissinger, was chairman of the committee on General Statutes. He was a member of the following committees: Rules, Constitutional Conventions; Books and Insurance; and Libraries and Public Offices.

In his political sentiments and principles Mr. Stephenson was always a democrat. He early took a strong stand in favor of sound money. In 1891 he was sent as a delegate to the commercial congress, held at Kansas City, Missouri, and being placed on the committee on Kentucky, strongly opposed, a free coinage resolution. He openly declared his opposition to the Chicago platform in a public interview the day following the nomination of William Jennings Bryan, in 1896, and was elected as district delegate to the convention of the national democrats, held at Indianapolis, Indiana, in 1896, and was secretary of the Kentucky delegation to that convention.

Well known in Masonry, Mr. Stephenson belonged to Harrodsburg Lodge No. 153, A. F. & A. M., and attained to the Knights Templar degree in the Commandery. He possessed a keen, rapid, logical mind, plus business sense and real capacity for hard work. Scholarly in his attainments, he had an excellent presence, an earnest, dignified manner, marked strength of character, and a thorough grasp of the law, and the ability to accurately to apply its principles. Always actively interested in public affairs, and participating earnestly in every effort made by his associates to stimulate a spirit of patriotism and loyalty to American institutions, he was easily one of the most constructive forces Kentucky has ever had.

Mr. Stephenson had many sides to his character. In addition to the manifold activities already given, there was another phase which must be dwelt upon for its inherent value to posterity, and that is the interest he took in the history of the state and particularly in the portions of it pertaining to Mercer and Boyle counties. His attention was probably first called to these events through the medium of his large abstract business which he built up in connection with his law practice. In order to properly equip his office for handling this business he gathered together an invaluable compilation of plats and abstracts and data from the earliest records in his section of the state, down to the time of his demise.

From 1901, he devoted his intervals of leisure from the demands of exacting business to historical research touching the annals of Kentucky and the two counties above mentioned, and was recognized as an authority on the history of these two counties. He was the local organizer of the Harrodsburg Historical Society, and its president from its beginning in the spring of 1900 until his death. He made many articles, and strove with arduous and loving zeal to awaken the people of Mercer County to a proper appreciation of and interest in their great historic past. Being a classical scholar, he read the best in ancient and modern literature, with special attention to Kentucky, and collected a large and well-selected library for his home, besides his splendid law library in his office. He broadened his knowledge and widened his vision by travels throughout America, and one trip to Europe.

Many organizations were proud to number him among their members, and for years he belonged to the Filson Club, the Bar Association of Kentucky, the Ohio Valley Historical Association and the American Historical Association. He was a director of the Kentucky State Historical Association, and vice president of the Louisville Chapter, Sons of the American Revolution. An appreciation of his services was shown in his appointment as trustee of the Kentucky School for the Deaf at Danville, Kentucky, by Governor Augustus Willson. For a number of years he was secretary of the Harrodsburg Commercial Club. A zealous worker in the Christian Church of Harrodsburg, he was one of its elders for thirteen consecutive years and in 1905, the last year he was superintendent of the Sunday school connected with this church. Mr. Stephenson knew the leading men of his times, and was an intimate friend of Colonel Durrett and J. Stoddard Johnston, the latter being his guest in 1908.

When Mr. Stephenson died he left a substantial estate, but he was not a wealthy man. Money did not appeal to him in itself, but only as the means for the gratification of his taste for books, travel, refined living, and for the fuller development of character. Probably no better tribute could be paid to his memory than the following, which appeared after his death:

"A gentleman. We hear the term How often misapplied, But in his case we know full well He bore it till he died.

"A gentleman! Forgive us, God, But wonder sways alone, The worthless ones—why leave us such, And take the blameless one?"

L. A. H.

Martha Stephenson. Of those who appreciate the forces and personalities that have been most effective in advancing Kentucky's standards of sound culture lasting recognition is due Miss Martha Stephenson of Harrodsburg on account of both the length and high quality of her service and disinterested devotion to the educational welfare of her home state.

She is a sister of the late W. W. Stephenson, whose biographical sketch contains the story of this historic family. Martha Stephenson was born in Madison County, March 4, 1853. Her parents moved to Washington County at the beginning of the war of the states and during the four years of warfare they employed governesses to teach their daughters Martha and Mary. They moved to Mercer County in the autumn of 1864, and Martha was graduated from historic Daughters School, in 1870, while that school was under the presidency of John Augustus Williams. She also pursued some post-graduate studies and taught a few classes in Daughters College during the semesters of 1870-71 and 1871-72. She was called to teach in Madison Female Institute at Richmond, Kentucky, in 1875, remaining there three years, and from 1880 to 1883 was teacher of English literature, history and art criticism at Hamilton College at Lexington. At that time she was known as Miss Mattie Stephenson, and it was the insistence of club women in the state that caused her to change her name to Martha. She was again at Hamilton College during 1885-86 and 1886-87.

Her best work has been done through many years of thought and studious effort in her home at Harrodsburg. She was a leader in the intellectual life of that community, and gradually from this historic old town her influence has become state wide. At Harrodsburg she has been identified with every movement for community culture, social, religious, educational, philanthropic, and in recent years equally political. She was a pioneer club woman of Kentucky, and was the first president of the College Street Club of Harrodsburg, which became conspicuous for its progressive ideals in the early years of the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs. A group of women among whom she was most active was responsible for the establishment of the Harrodsburg Public Library and one of the library directors until other duties compelled her to resign. University of Kentucky, as she has been an honorary director. She was a charter member of the Harrodsburg Historical Society and for several years has been its secretary-treasurer. She is a member of St. Asaph's Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution at Danville, and is a member of the Pilson Club of Louisville. During the World War she was active with pen and voice in keeping the home fires burning, and received a medal for special service in the Liberty Bond campaign. The League of Nations aroused in her something more than a partisan or sentimental sympathy, and in one of her many public articles she marshalled an interesting array of evidence showing that our Federal Constitution is opposed on many of the very grounds that have been alleged against the federation of nations.

Many of Miss Stephenson's articles have been published and reprinted in such papers as the Lexington Herald and the Louisville Courier Journal, and the Kentucky Historical Register preserves in more permanent form several of her addresses, particularly the one she delivered in May, 1903, before the Federation of Daughters of the American Revolution at Lexington. The circumstances leading to this address deserve some particular reference.

Miss Stephenson, who is now honorary vice president of the Kentucky Federation, was elected chairman of the Program Committee of the State Federation in 1895, a year after the Federation was organized. She had a prominent part in its affairs until a long illness lasting from 1897 to 1901. In the latter year she was made chairman of the Educational Committee recently provided for by the Federation and as chairman of this committee she appeared before the Convention of 1903 and had the courage to make a full report of the conditions revealed by the Federal census of 1900, in which Kentucky stood thirty-seventh among the states in the educational prosperity. Her searching analysis made the statistics tell truths that cold figures can not do, and her address and the subsequent discussion made the subject of illiteracy one that could not be avoided as a flagrant fact, however annoying it was to complacent state pride. This address was undoubtedly one of the most important chapters in arousing public opinion and official action to the modern program of general education. Her influence has been made in extending the facilities of the common schools so as to be accessible to practically every community in the state than was recorded in all the preceding years.

John Augustus Williams was one of Kentucky's greatest educators. From the quiet nobility of his character proceeded from him that vital force which is still alive during and molding the careers of men and women two or three generations removed from the period of his activity. A tribute to his work and character should be entered as a permanent record in this history of the state, and such a tribute has become available through the pen of one of his admirers and one of the state's gifted and well known Phi Beta Kappa of Harrodsburg. The following article by Miss Stephenson was written in 1918.

John Augustus Williams was born, September 21, 1824, in Bourbon County, Kentucky. His father was Dr. Charles E. Williams of Montgomery County, Kentucky, an eminent physician. The Williams family was of Welsh extraction and came from Virginia to this state in the early days of its settlement. President Williams' early school days were at Paris, Kentucky. At the age of fifteen years he entered Bacon College, then located at Georgetown, and graduated from it in 1843, at Harrodsburg, to which place the college had been removed. The degree of A. M. was conferred upon him by this institution and that of L. L. D. by the College of the City of Cincinnati. During the same time he studied law, but later chose teaching for his life work and began his career in 1848, first taking charge of a seminary in Mt. Sterling and later establishing a female college at North Middletown; but as early as 1851 he reached out for a wider field of activity. In that year he went to North Missouri and founded Christian College at Columbia. Then followed, in the gift as an educator was felt in the distinction he gave to each of these schools. In 1856, with his father, he purchased the celebrated Greenville Springs property at Harrodsburg and established Daughters College, so widely known in this and many other states. Its career of eminent usefulness and success was uninterrupted for many years. The calamitous Civil war for a while interfered with distant patronage, but the order of the college exercises was not broken for a single day during that dark period.

In 1865 President Williams was appointed to the chair of Moral and Mental Philosophy in Kentucky University and afterward to the presidency of the State College and to that of the College of Arts at Lexington. Again elected to later terms, he was, finally, the college was accepted and filled; and in 1868 he resigned his position in the university and returned to Harrodsburg and resumed his presidency of Daughters College. Again there came to him many pupils from distant states, to fill its halls and for many years it enjoyed prosperity, and acquired the reputation of sending out the best educated women of any institution in this section. Its graduates were sought as teachers not only in this, but in many other states, and they reflected glory upon their alma mater. President Williams' educational methods were in advance of his time. The curriculum was short as compared with the curriculum of the leading woman's colleges of the present day; but he did more than make the minds of his pupils storehouses of knowledge, he taught them to think independently and with confidence and power, and wherever they went their influence was felt. Education it has been said, ought to be the simple power to climb a height. This was the secret of President Williams' success; he had the art of giving this power, that is the command of their faculties to his pupils. He was extraordinary in his power of impressing his pupils with ideals and in the guidance of their development. This caused him to be remembered by his graduates through the years and they sent their daughters to the college, so that he became the educator of the second generation. Yes, his influence lives through the third and fourth generations.

President Williams wrote and spoke much in behalf of higher education. He was one of the original movers in the organization of the State Teachers’ Association and was a contributor to various literary and religious periodicals. He is author of the life of “Elder John Smith” and a work on “Christian Ethics.” He was a great lover of the beautiful in poetry, literature and art, and possessed refined and discriminating tastes.

ill health caused him to resign the presidency of the college in 1894, and he lived quietly in Harrodsburg until his death in November, 1902. He was buried in Spring Hill Cemetery.

REV. JESSE HEAD. A sketch by Rev. William E. Barton, D.D., LL. D. Author of “The Soul of Abraham Lincoln” and “The Paternity of Abraham Lincoln.”

Jesse Head, who married the parents of Abraham Lincoln, was born in Frederick County, Maryland, June 10, 1798. He married on January 9, 1789, Jane Ramsay, who was born April 19, 1788. About 1795 he migrated from Maryland to Kentucky and made his home on Road Run, now known as Lincoln Run, in Washington County, Kentucky. There he was neighbor to the Lincolns and Berrys. He owned fifty acres of land on Road Run and two town lots in Springfield, where he carried on the business of a cabinet maker. On May 25, 1798, his name was removed from the muster roll of men subject to militia duty in Washington County on account of his being a license to preach.

On October 2, 1805, a meeting of the Western Conference held in Scott County, Kentucky, and presided over by Bishop Asbury, recorded his name as an ordained deacon of the Methodist Episcopal Church. These are all the records that have been discovered to date of his ecclesiastical standing. He later became a justice of the peace, and some question has been raised as to whether his marriages were those of a justice or a minister; but his marriage returns are signed by him as a Deacon of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He became a trustee of the Town of Springfield, and his name appears on tax lists and in records of Washington County from 1797 to 1810.

In March, 1810, he bought a lot in Harrodsburg, and resided there during the remainder of his life. On October 11, 1811, he was elected to fill a vacancy on the Town Board, and continued to be a member of that body and the council of Harrodsburg, with one of his brief intervals, until 1827. He frequently presided at the board meetings, and often acted as clerk, many pages of the records being in his hand writing.

He preached in Harrodsburg, Lexington and other places, but was never pastor of the Harrodsburg church; nor is it known that he ever rode a regular circuit. He conducted many funeral services and married many couples. He had a carpenter shop opposite the courthouse in Harrodsburg and was generally known as the town and its vicinity. In 1830 he edited a democratic newspaper called “The American.” He died March 22, 1842, in his seventy-fourth year, and is buried in an unmarked grave.

When commissioners were appointed to make an inventory of his estate they found that all he possessed belonged to his son, who had bought it in years previously at a sheriff’s sale.

Jesse Head was a man of strong character and of great moral influence, and deserves to be remembered as one of the most illustrious citizens of Mercer and Washington counties. His special title to fame grows out of the fact that he has preserved for us the legible and indubitable record of the marriage of the parents of Abraham Lincoln, which he solemnized at Beech-land, in Washington County, June 12, 1806. The record of this marriage was long lost, but was found in 1878. It set at rest a long and cruel controversy and caused the name of Jesse Head to be remembered in an important relation with that of the great president, Abraham Lincoln.

For the patient research that has disclosed this information I am indebted to Hon. Joseph Polin of Springfield, Kentucky, Hon. L. S. Penix of Paducah, Kentucky, and Miss Mary A. Thompson of Harrodsburg, Kentucky.

HAROLD R. HUMMEL. Keen-witted, clear-headed and brainy, Harold R. Hummel, of Paducah, holds a position of prominence among the rising young business men of McCracken County, being associated with the firm of Hummel Brothers, one of the foremost insurance agencies in West Kentucky. He was born October 3, 1891, a son of W. P. Hummel, an active and highly esteemed resident of the city. His grandfather, Fred A. Hummel, Sr., a native of Isladen, Germany, became implicated in the Carl Schurz Revolution of 1848, a price was placed upon his head, and he was compelled to leave his native land. Coming to America, the land of hope and promise, he settled first in Pennsylvania, where he followed his trade of a gunsmith for a time, then traveled to Paducah in Kentucky, where he continued a resident until his death.

Born in Paducah in 1863, W. P. Hummel was educated in the public schools, and since arriving at man’s estate has ever performed the duties devolving upon him as a loyal and faithful citizen. For thirty-five years he has been actively engaged in the insurance business as a member of the enterprise firm of Hummel Brothers, being in partnership with his brother, F. A. Hummel, Jr., his offices being in the City National Bank Building, numbers 621-22-23. A stanch democrat in politics, he has served as city councilman, as a member of the Carnegie Public Library Board, and on the Tuberculosis Sanitary Hospital Board. He is a member of the Paducah Board of Trade; is secretary of the West Kentucky Mausoleum Company; and both he and his son Harold are correspondents for the Bradstreet Company. He is a prominent and influential member of the Evangelical Church. He occupies an improved residence at 1009 South Third Street, and owns valuable real estate in the city.

W. P. Hummel married, in 1890, Emily Krueer, who was born and educated in Kentucky. She passed to the life beyond in 1898, in Paducah, leaving three children, namely: Harold R., the special subject of this biographical sketch, and who with a graduate of the Paducah High School, lives at home; and Ruth, also a graduate of the Paducah High School, is a young woman of rare business ability and tact, and is now rendering efficient service as office manager for Hummel Brothers.

Having been graduated from the Paducah High School with the class of 1910, Harold R. Hummel entered the State University of Kentucky in Lexington, where he completed the studies of the junior year. Subsequently he attended the Colorado School of Mines at Golden, Colorado, specializing in mineralogy. The following three years Mr. Hummel was associated, at Bisbee, Arizona, and in Sonora, old Mexico, with the Copper Queen Mining Company, which has the largest annual output of copper in the world, having been a buyer of ore and bullion.

At the outbreak of the World war in 1914, Mr. Hummel returned to Paducah, and entered the firm of Hummel Brothers with offices in the City National Bank Building, and was engaged in the general insurance business until 1917. Enlisting then in the United States service, he was mustered into the First Officer’s Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, near Indi-apolis, Indiana, on May 15, 1917. Being subsequently transferred to the secret force, of Post G 34, Chemical Warfare Service, Mr. Hummel was engaged in manufacturing a Methyl or Lewisite poison gas until December 15, 1918, being the only Kentuckian to be employed in that special line of service. Being then mustered out of service, he returned to Paducah and resumed his former position with Hummel Brothers, continuing thus associated with his father and uncle in the extensive and remunerative insurance business the firm is so ably carrying on.

True to the religious faith in which he was reared, Mr. Hummel is a worthy member of the Evangelical Church. He is actively identified by his residence in Colored Church, and is a member of various fraternal, social, educational and industrial organizations. He is a member of Paducah Lodge No. 127, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Paducah Chapter No. 30, Royal Arch Masons; Paducah Council No. 32, Royal and Select Masters; Paducah Commandery No. 11, Knights Templars; Rizpah Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of the Paducah Shrine Club and secretary of the Paducah & Illinois Fishing Club; of the Theosophical Society, Adyar, Madras, India; of the National Geographic Society; of the Nogales Rifle Club, Nogales, Arizona; of the Adventurers Club, New York City; of the American Junior Institute of Mining Engineers, New York City; of the Paducah Board of Trade, and is a member of the St. George's Eastern Masonic Lodge, McClellan County Post, American Legion. Mr. Hummel, who is not married, resides with his father on South Third Street.

WILLIAM P. HAM. Maple Farm, of which William P. Ham is proprietor, is located 4½ miles southeast of Carlisle in Nicholas County. It is one of the farms that give high character to the county district and the home surroundings of the county. It comprises eighty acres and is the birthplace as well as the scene of the active labors of its present proprietor.

Mr. Ham was born there June 27, 1857, son of Preston and Elizabeth (Berry) Ham and a grandson of John and Margaret (Potts) Ham, also natives of Nicholas County, where they lived out their lives on a farm. Preston Ham was born in Nicholas County in 1826, and his wife was also a native of this state. After their marriage they settled on what is now Maple Farm, and both remained here the rest of their days. They were members of the Christian Church at East Union, and the father was a republican in politics.

William P. Ham was the only child of his parents. He grew up on the home farm, had a public school education, and for over forty years has been a busy agriculturist.

November 19, 1878, he married Jennie N. Watkins. Mrs. Ham was born in Illinois, daughter of Marion and Miriam (Willis) Watkins. Her father was a native of Illinois and was killed while a Union soldier in the Civil war. Her mother was born in Clarke County, Kentucky, and after her husband's death returned to Kentucky with her children, locating in Nicholas County.

Mr. and Mrs. Ham have five living children. Perlie is the wife of Will Stone. The son Clarence, who has a name for himself as a scholar and educator, is a graduate of the Carlisle High School, of Kentucky University and Cornell University, was for several years instructor in Kentucky University, and is now in the faculty of the Mechanical engineering department of the University of Illinois. He married Martha Dunn. The third child, Jesse, is a member of the United States army. Ida May is the wife of Clarence Buntin, of Nicholas County. Frank, unmarried and at home, is an ex-service man who was with the Expeditionary Forces in France. The family are members of the Christian Church, and the son Frank is affiliated with Daughters Lodge No. 65, F. & A. M. Mr. Ham has always been a republican in politics.

WALTER C. MACCREADY. While he is still numbered among the recent acquisitions of Paducah, Walter C. MacCready has already established himself firmly in public confidence through a display of acknowledged ability as an architect. In his special field of construction he is recognized as an expert, and the work with which he has been connected thus far has attracted favorable criticism and comment.

Mr. MacCready was born at St. Louis, Missouri, September 15, 1879, a son of Harry B. and Emma L. (Wolfe) MacCready. The family originated, as the name would indicate, in Scotland and was founded in Annapolis, Maryland, by John C. MacCready, the grandfather of Walter C. was born in 1824 in Ohio, where he was a college professor, and in middle life moved to St. Louis, Missouri, where he passed the rest of his career as a public lecturer, dying in 1889. He married Elizabeth L. Barkeley, also a native of Ohio, who died at St. Louis, a member of an old Colonial family which originated in England. A number of the Barcleys have won distinction, and among them are his cousins of Walter C. MacCready's father, ex-Supreme Court Judge Sheppard Barkeley, of Missouri, and Doctor Barkeley, a prominent physician and surgeon of St. Louis.

Harry B. MacCready was born at Puxatawney, Ohio, June 7, 1859, and was a young man when he went with his parents to St. Louis in 1862, and John C. MacCready, with the exception of the years 1900, 1907 and 1908, when he was engaged in the carriage and wagon making business at Paducah, he has followed that business at St. Louis. He is a republican and a Christian Scientist. Mr. MacCready married Miss Emma L. Wolfe, who was born March 15, 1861, near Cincinnati, Ohio, and two children were born to them, Walter C. and William R., representative at St. Louis of the Supreme Council of the railroad labor unions of the United States.

Walter C. MacCready received his education in the public schools of St. Louis, being graduated from high school in 1897. While he has never enjoyed a technical training in any of the accredited institutions devoted to his specialty, his education being confined virtually to the public schools of his native city, his professional career includes the designing of numerous notable structures in various large cities. When he left school he engaged in general draughting, and began specializing in architectural draughting in 1905. Coming to Paducah March 3, 1920, he established offices at 221-222 City National Bank Building, and here has made a specialty of factory construction. He has contracts on the McKee-Blevin Company factory on South Third Street. Mr. MacCready is a republican, but has found little time from his profession to devote to public matters, although he takes a good citizen's interest in politics. He fraternizes with the Masons. Mr. MacCready is unmarried and resides at the Craig Hotel.

JOHN W. HUGHES. Two miles southeast of Owingsville, judicial center of Bath County, is situated the homestead farm of Mr. Hughes, and the general appearance of the place at once marks him for consideration as one of the exponents of thrift and enterprise in connection with farm industry in this section of his native state, while further interest is involved in the fact that his birth occurred on the farm which is the stage of his present progressive activities, the date of his nativity having been January 16, 1862. He is a son of James B. and Lou (Branham) Hughes, the former of whom was born in Madison County, this state, in 1817, and the latter of whom was born in Bourbon County, in 1830. James B. Hughes was a child at the time of his parents' removal to Bath County, where he was reared on a pioneer farm and where he received the advantages of the common school of the period. After his marriage he settled on the farm now owned by his son John W., of this review, and here he passed the residue of his life, as one of the substantial farmers and highly respected citizens of the county, both he and his wife having attained to advanced ages and both having been consistent members of the Christian Church. He was a democrat in political adherence and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Of the four children the subject of this review is the youngest; Lizzie is the widow of J. W. Atkinson, Miss Ella remains with her only brother on the old homestead farm; and Nannie is the wife of Royce Allen, of Winchester, Clark County.

The early education of John W. Hughes was acquired in public and private schools in his native county, and in 1884-1885 took a course in the law department of the historic old University of Virginia, at Charlottesville. He did not, however, engage in the practice of his profession, but returned to the home farm, in the ownership and management of which he found ample scope for his successful achievement and for the utilization of his exceptional executive ability. He has brought to bear the most approved methods of scientific agriculture, has stood exponent of industrial and civic progressiveness in his native county, and has effectively upheld the prestige of a family name that has long been honored in this section of the Blue Grass State. His well fortified political convictions place him firmly in the Republican party, and he is affiliated with the Mount Sterling Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is eligible also for membership in the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, as his maternal great-grandfather, William Branham, was a patriot soldier in the great struggle for national independence.

The well improved farm estate of Mr. Hughes comprises 340 acres, and in addition to his activities as an agriculturist he gives special attention to the raising and feeding of excellent grades of cattle and hogs. Mr. Hughes still permits his name to be enrolled on the roster of eligible bachelors in his native county, and his maiden sister, Miss Ella, is the popular and gracious chatelaine of the pleasant old home.

JOHN H. CHANDLER has been a member of the Louisville bar for over twenty years, and on the score of personal ability has achieved many of the best honors of his profession.

He was born at Campbellsville in Taylor County, Kentucky, July 18, 1873, son of Joseph H. and Arabinta E. (Hiestan) Chandler, also native Kentuckians. His great-grandfather came from Virginia when a young man and established a home in Green County, when that county included the present county of Taylor. Joseph H. Chandler was born and reared in that locality, and practiced law for more than half a century there. He wielded great influence in the democratic party, and at one time was a member of the State Senate.

Youngest in a family of eight children, John H. Chandler grew up at Campbellsville, attended public school, and took his college course in old Central University at Richmond. He graduated A. B. in 1895, and for several years was a successful teacher in grammar and high schools of his native town, and for three years was principal of the preparatory department of Central University. During five summer vacations he was also a traveling representative of that institution. While teaching at the Academy he studied law and was graduated from the Law School of Central University in 1899. He did some practice at Richmond, but in September, 1899, moved to Louisville, and long since achieved recognition as one of the able lawyers of the city.

Mr. Chandler was a lawyer, then almost at the outset of his career, who successfully attacked the old Kentucky vagrancy law as a violation of the Federal Constitution, and after his contention had been sustained by the courts the law was repealed and a new one enacted.

Mr. Chandler has given his time and energies to the general practice of law, but has accepted some responsibilities of a public nature, and from 1901 to 1905 was a county commissioner of Jefferson County. He is a democrat, a member of the Kentucky and Louisville Bar Associations, Commercial Club, Y. M. C. A., is a Mason and Elk, and a member of the Sigma Alpha Episcope collegiate f.o.t. He is a member of the Highland Baptist Church.

In December, 1901, he married Miss Agnita Clara Fleming. She is a daughter of Judge William D. Fleming, long a prominent figure in the Louisville bar.

T. B. CALLIS. The men who are now engaged in the production of oil in the rich fields of Kentucky have been recruited from various other lines of industry, from agriculture, business, finance and the professions. The lure of the black product which has built up so many great fortunes in this country is one that is hard to withstand, and many have given up other lines of activity to risk their all on the chance of developing properties of rich productiveness. All have not been as successful as has T. B. Callis, an operator in Warren, Simpson and Logan counties, who formerly was engaged in farming and the drug business at Bowling Green and who still owns a homestead and a farm near that city.

Mr. Callis was born on a farm in Warren County, Kentucky, January 27, 1878, a son of A. W. and Mary (Feland) Callis. His grandfather, William Callis, was born in Virginia and became a pioneer into Webster County, where he passed the rest of his life as a farmer and miller, dying there before the birth of his grandson. William Callis was married and settled at Bowling Green, in 1803 and died in 1886, in Warren County, Kentucky. They were people who were greatly esteemed in their community and were known to be industrious, honorable and God-fearing.

A. W. Callis was born in 1847 in Webster County, Kentucky, where he was reared to manhood and received an ordinary education in the common schools of the rural districts. As a young man he came to Warren County, where he began farming on his own account, and through industry and good management he has become one of the substantial agriculturists of his locality, with a splendid farm situated at Alvaton, Warren County, a community in which he is held in high esteem because of his honorable business methods, other sterling traits of character and his public spirited citizenship. Mr. Callis is a democrat in politics and an active supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

He married Mary Feland, who was born in 1849 in Warren County, Kentucky, and they are the parents of the following children: W. A., a physician and surgeon of Louisville, who enlisted in the United States service, attained the rank of captain, served eighteen months in France during the World war, and later was with the Army of Occupation in Germany; J. E., residing at Bowling Green, who is associated with his brother T. B. in oil operations; Marion, who is married and makes her home with her parents; Frank, who resides with his parents and operates the home farm; T. B.; L. M., who is a shoe salesman and resides at Mayfield, Kentucky; and George W., of Glasgow, Kentucky, who is the proprietor of a flourishing grocery.

The rural schools of Warren County furnished T. B. Callis with his educational training, and his boyhood and youth were passed on his father's farm. At the time he was twenty years of age he decided to take up some other vocation than tilling the soil, and accordingly became apprenticed to the drug business at Bowling Green and followed it for seven years. Then, with his brother J. E., he established a pharmacy at Bowling Green, a business operated under the firm style of Callis Brothers, which they developed into one of the leading pharmacies between Louisville and Nashville, and which they operated with much success until June, 1920. At that time the brothers disposed of their interests in order to give all their time and attention to the development of their oil properties in Warren, Simpson and Letcher counties. C. Callis was the son of the famous B. Callis, the founder of Callis, where time is at or near Memphis Junction, although he also has producing properties in various other places. He still maintains his home in Warren County, having a pleasant suburban residence on Scottsville Pike, one-half mile out of Bowling Green.

In politics Mr. Callis supports the principles and candidates of the democratic party, but has had no desire for the honors of public office, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and of the Official Board thereof. During the war period he was an enthusiastic supporter of all movements for the sale of bonds and the acquisition of funds, contributing generously and buying to his limit. In civic affairs he has shown his public spirit by working in behalf of movements which have shown themselves worth while, the consideration of citizens of advanced tendencies, and in favor of improvements along educational, religious and moral lines.

In 1905, at Bowling Green, Mr. Callis was united in marriage with Miss Mary V. Parks, who was born in Warren County, a daughter of W. H. and Jane Virginia (Porter) Parks, natives of this state, who are now both deceased. Mr. Parks in his early years was an agricultural contractor, doing building and contracting, and numerous structures at Bowling Green stand as evidence of the skill and good workmanship of his thirty years of activity in this direction. Mr. and Mrs. Callis are the parents of one son, Andrew Parks, born September 27, 1906, who is a member of the graduating class of 1920 of the Bowling Green Grammar School, eighth grade.

James A. Wallace. As state treasurer of Kentucky Mr. Wallace is one of the prominent officials in the new capitol at Frankfort, but his home is Estill County, where for many years he has been a leading banker, public official, merchant and land owner, and a power in republican politics in that section of the state.

The Wallace family originally settled in Madison County, his great-grandfather having been the pioneer. His grandfather spent all his life as a farmer in that county. Andrew Wallace, father of the state treasurer, was born in Madison County in 1833, but grew up and spent most of his life at Irvine in Estill County, where he was a carpenter and contractor. He fought all through the Civil war as a Union soldier in the Fourteenth Kentucky Cavalry, was a stanch old-school republican in politics, and also a member of the Masonic fraternity. He served as county jailor a few years following the Civil war. He was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His death occurred at Irvine in 1903. Andrew Wallace married Clara Ellen Tracy, who was born at Stanton, Powell County, Kentucky, in 1843, and is still living at Irvine, where they were married. Their children comprised sixteen in number, three of whom died before reaching adult years. Among the others are: E. B. Wallace, a contractor and builder, married Olive J. Price of Richmond, Kentucky; H. G. Wallace, a carpenter and contractor, who died at Irvine, September 29, 1920; T. Q. Wallace, a merchant of Irvine; Katie, wife of Estill Payne, a merchant and farmer at Blackwell, Oklahoma; Dr. T. Wallace, a physician and surgeon at Irvine.

James A. Wallace was born at Irvine in Estill County on August 5, 1857, was educated in the local public schools and had four terms in the Kentucky State College at Lexington. Leaving college in 1888, he spent two years as manager of local mills and camps along the Kentucky River for the Asher Lumber Company. For another two years he was storekeeper and gauger for the United States internal revenue department, and was then elected Circuit Court clerk of Estill County, an office he filled two terms of six years each. Then after an interval of a year he engaged in banking at Irvine, where he organized and established the Farmers Bank of Estill County in 1905, and has since been cashier of that and that splendid was the office even through his present term as state treasurer. Mr. Wallace owns about 7,000 acres of land in Estill County, a large farm in Bourbon County and the Gibson ranch in Jackson County, Oklahoma, and does farming on a very extensive scale. Among important business interests he is president of the Oleum Refining Company of Proray, Kentucky, and for two years he has been a director and member of the Estill County Bank, at one time operating as many as five stores in the county. He was one of the men in this section of the state who contributed of their private resources for the benefit of the war "until it hurt," and as chairman of the Victory Loan he had the satisfaction of seeing his district subscribe far beyond the quota.

Mr. Wallace was chairman of the republican county committee of Estill County for sixteen years. He was alternate delegate for the state at large to the Republican National Convention at Philadelphia when McKinley was nominated for his second term in 1900. He was a delegate to the convention at Chicago when Taft was nominated in 1908, representing the Tenth Kentucky District, and has attended a number of other national conventions in a private capacity. In the notable triumph of the republicans at the state election of 1916 he was chosen state treasurer, and he began his official term of four years January 1, 1920.

In 1902, at Winchester, Kentucky, he married Mrs. Hattie B. (Clay) Hardwick, who died May 10, 1903. Her father was a former county judge of Powell County. On May 29, 1908, at Louisville, Mr. Wallace married Mrs. Olive (Price) Breeding, daughter of David and Lucy A. (Grinstead) Price, now deceased. Her father came to Kentucky from Wales and was a farmer in Estill County, where Mrs. Wallace was reared, finishing her education in a young ladies seminary. Mr. and Mrs. Wallace have two children: James A., Jr., born January 11, 1911, at 11 o'clock a.m., and Mary Elizabeth, born July 10, 1916.

Mr. Wallace has been a deacon in the Christian Church at Irvine for over twenty years. For two terms he was a worthy master of Irvine Lodge No. 137, A. F. and A. M., is affiliated with Richmond Chapter No. 25, R. A. M., and Richmond Commandery No. 19, K. T., is a member of Oleika Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Lexington, and is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and filled all the chairs in the Junior Order United American Mechanics.

Edgar Thompson Riley, M. D. The profession of medicine in Todd County has one of its ablest representatives in Dr. Edgar Thompson Riley, whose experience and accomplishments in the profession cover a period of a quarter of a century, and for about half of that time he has had his home at Trenton.

His people have been Americans for generations. The family originated in Ireland, where the name was spelled O'Riley. O'Riley's first islem was obtained by one or two of the generations after they settled in Colonial Virginia. Doctor Riley's great-grandfather was a native of Virginia, where he was reared and married, and in early pioneer times came West over the mountains and settled in Logan County, Kentucky, where he lived out his life. Jonathan Riley, grandfather of Doctor Riley, was born in Ireland, came to the United States, came to Kentucky; becoming a farmer near Olmstead in Logan County and lived there until his death in 1882.

On that old Logan County homestead N. B. Riley was born in 1849, and had just attained to manhood when the war broke out between the states. In 1861 he joined the Confederate Army and was all through the war for four years. He was in a regiment commanded by Col-
Ford, and a member of a family that originated in Ireland and immigrated to the colony of Virginia long before the outbreak of the war of the Revolution. Dr. William Ford, the grandfather of Wood H. was born in 1775 in Virginia, and became a pioneer in Edmonson County, Kentucky, where he practiced medicine and surgery for many years and where he was well and widely esteemed. He died in Edmonson County, on the Dixie Highway, in 1860. Dr. D. J. L. Ford, the father of Wood H., was born in 1814, at Munfordville, Hart County, Kentucky, but was reared, educated and married in Edmonson County, where he lived in the country and at Browns-ville and practiced medicine until 1870. He then made removal to Rocky Hill Station. Like his father he became greatly beloved. In his practice and in his devoted interest in the welfare of his community, he reached a distinguished place in his locality, and was a valued member of the Edmonson County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. His fraternal affiliation was with Bowling Green Lodge No. 51, I. O. O. F. He was a strong churchman and belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the faith and order. In politics he was a democrat. Doctor Ford married first a Miss Quishenbery, who died in Edmonson County, and they had six children, of whom all are deceased; William, Luther, Sal- lie, Mary, Silas and Catherine. Doctor Ford took for his second wife Miss Rebecca Vertresse, who was born in 1816, in Edmonson County, and died at Rocky Hill Station, in 1896, and they have five children: L. F., who was a railroad freighting conductor and met an accidental death at Florence, Alabama; Cora, who died at Rocky Hill Station as the wife of J. F. Walker, now a grocer of Bowling Green; Robert, who died in infancy; Wood H.; and Susie, who died at Glas- gow, Kentucky, as the wife of T. M. Shader, a stove and tin dealer of that place.

Wood H. Ford received his education in the rural schools of Edmonson County, leaving his studies at the age of fifteen years to enter the service of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company in the capacity of station agent at Rocky Hill Station. He acted in this capacity and as telegraph operator for a period of forty-four years, during which long and faithful service he became one of the best known and most popular agents of this company. On October 1, 1918, he retired. In politics a democrat, Mr. Ford has been a supporter in the political movements of the party of his locality. In 1912 he was appointed postmaster of Rocky Hill Station, and in 1916 was reappointed to this office, his present term expiring in June, 1921. During his incumbency he has brought about a number of innovations which have contributed to the betterment of the service, and his unfailing courtesy and efficacious and expeditious handling of the mails have served to place him high in the confidence and good will of his fellow citizens.

Mr. Ford is the owner of a farm of fifty acres at Rocky Hill Station, on which he carries on general farming, and also has a splendid brick residence, the finest in the city. Likewise he is the owner of a dwelling situated on eleven acres of ground here, and of a public garage and an oil and gasoline filling sta- tion on Main Street. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his fraternal affiliation is with McClure Lodge No. 539, A. F. and A. M., Rocky Hill Station. Mr. Ford took an active part in all local war activities in Edmonson County, helping in the drives for all worthy purposes, buying bonds and War Savings Stamps, and contributing to the different organizations to the extent of his abilities. He is a member of the Masonic Order, and is united in marriage with Miss Katie Morris, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mason Morris, pioneer farming people near this place, who are both deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Ford have one son, Q. B., formerly his father's assistant for eighteen years, and now station agent for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company at Rocky Hill Station. He married Miss Lura Spradling, who was born at Rocky Hill Station, and they are the parents of three children: Mary, Grace and Fred.

John W. Duke, M. D. Prominently identified with the medical profession of Kentucky, Dr. John W. Duke of Hindman is engaged in a general medical and surgical practice, but is also deeply interested in restaurant work. He received his education in the supervision of the medical men who does not believe in standing still no matter how much knowledge he possesses, but is ever pressing ahead. To such men as he the world-at-large owes a heavy debt because of what is accomplished through the patient, intelligent and painstaking research work they are constantly carrying on for the good of their fellow creatures.

Robert Haviland Conway has been usefully active in the business and financial life of Cynthiana for thirty years. He is secretary-cashier of the Cynthiana Building and Savings Association, and at different times has also been a leader and active adviser in a number of movements connected with the general welfare of the city and county.

Mr. Conway was born at Havilandville, in Harrison County, November 8, 1864, and is a member of one of the old and prominent families long identified with that section of Kentucky. His parents were Dudley Berry and Margaret (Haviland) Conway. His father was born in Lewis County, Kentucky, September 24, 1836, (B. B.) Conway. His grandparents were natives of Virginia, descended from Scott ancestry, who went to that colony during the eighteenth century. Miles Conway was an early Kentucky pioneer, going into the Western wilderness when this was still a part of Old Virginia. He owned land under title from Virginia in what is now Kentucky, and owned at the time of his death in 1819, 1,000 acres there in 1792 for $1,000. Shortly afterward he moved to Lewis County and owned and developed a large tract of land there. He lived in Lewis County until his death at the age of ninety-three. His son, Dudley Berry Conway, spent his early life in Lewis, Mason and Harrison counties, and in February, 1860, was married to H. Conway. He was a slave holder, and for a number of years he conducted a grist mill and carding mill at Havilandivile. In 1868 he moved to a farm on Beaver Creek, near Baptist, but left the farm in 1876 and conducted a store for a year. In the spring of 1878 he sold his farm and moved to Oddville, where he was in the general mercantile business until 1888, when he came to Cynthiana and settled here until his death in 1889. His wife died in January, 1901.
He was a republican, a member of the Masonic Order, and both were active church members. While he was a stanch Union man during the war, he could not regard the Confederate soldiers as anything but neighbors, and when Morgan's men invaded his section of the state he contributed food for this ragged regiment.
His children were: three in number: Robert H.; Miss Frances, of Cynthiana; and William E., of Lancaster, Ohio.

Robert H. Conway grew up in Harrison County and had a common school education. He lived at home until after his father's death, then did clerical duty, and in 1892 entered the Internal Revenue service, with which he was identified until 1901. He was storekeeper, grocer and depot agent for a number of years.

The Cynthiana Building and Loan Association was organized in 1888, and since 1902 Mr. Conway has been its secretary, and through his business ability and personal popularity has contributed a great deal to the successful work of the association. He is also in the fire insurance business.

Mr. Conway married Mary Van Hagen MacCollough, who was born in Cynthiana in July, 1878. They have four children: Robert M., a graduate of the Cynthiana High School; William S., a high school student; Martha and Dudley F., in grammar school. The family are members of the Christian Church. Fraternally Mr.
Conway is affiliated with St. Andrew Lodge No. 18,
F. and A. M., and is a charter member of Quinty Lodge
No. 58, Knights of Pythias, for thirty years keeper of records and seals of the lodge, is past chancellor, has been a member of the Grand Lodge and president of the Association of K. of R. & S. of Kentucky. He has had continuous control of the lodge nearly since 1901. He is also secretary-treasurer of the Harrison County Health and Welfare League.

Edward Stokes Smith, M. D. With few interruptions and vacations Doctor Smith has given his time and talents to his extensive private practice at Hodgenville and over LaRue County for nearly forty years and has contributed greatly to the advancement of the community by his devotion to his work and the high standard of citizenship he has exemplified.

Doctor Smith was born on a farm in Hart County, Kentucky, October 23, 1858. His paternal grandparents were Stokely and Margaret (Cobb) Smith, natives of Greenbrier County, Virginia, and early settlers of Taylor County, Kentucky. The maternal grandparents were David and Elizabeth (Brown) Highbaugh, who came from Culpeper County, Virginia, and were identified with the pioneer settlement of Hart County, Kentucky. Dr. Jerome Smith, father of the Hodgenville physician, was born in Taylor County, and his life work as a country physician was done in the Hammonville community of Hart County, where he practiced medicine half a century. His last years were spent in Hodgenville, where he died at the age of seventy-four. Dr. Jerome Smith married Catherine Highbaugh, a native of Hart County, who died in 1870, the mother of six children. The second wife of Dr. Jerome Smith was Martha Walters, and to that union were born two children.

Edward Stokes Smith grew up at Hammonville, acquired an academic education, and at the age of seventeen began the study of medicine. He was twenty years of age when in 1879 he received his medical diploma from the Louisville Medical College, and at once returned to Hammonville to enter practice. In 1883 he received a second diploma from the Bellevue Hospital Medical College of New York City, and again in the winter of 1896 went East to attend the New York Post Graduate School of Medicine. On graduating from Bellevue in 1883 he located at Hodgenville, and in that community he has found his work and the discharge of his responsibilities has fully earned the esteem associated with his name. He is a member of the LaRue County, the Muldraugh Hill Medical societies, the Kentucky State and American Medical associations, and is a member of the Kentucky Railway Surgeons Association, having been local surgeon for a number of years for the Central Railway Company. Doctor Smith is a democrat in politics. He owns several hundred acres of farm land.

In 1887 he married Miss Mary L. Stiles, a native of LaRue County and daughter of Kittel Stiles. The two sons of their marriage are Stokely and Sidney Smith, druggists by profession. Sidney Smith was a wireless operator for the Government during the World War.

John T. Hinton. The name Hinton has had a very large significance in the business and professional life of Paris, Kentucky, through several generations.

The founder of the family in that section of Kentucky was Richard E. Hinton, who was a native of Virginia, and as a young man moved to Bourbon County, Kentucky. He was a hard-hitting man and a leader in one occupation or another. He married in Paris Elizabeth Marston, a native of Maryland.

John T. Hinton was one of their ten children and was born at Paris January 29, 1837. He acquired a public school education and at the age of sixteen apprenticed himself to the trade of cabinet-making. After completing his apprenticeship of four years he remained two years longer under his employer, and in 1860 engaged in business as a furniture merchant and under-taker at Paris. For more than half a century that business has been continued by the family. John T. Hinton was also president of the Citizens Bank of Paris, and vice president of the Bourbon Bank of Paris and a director in the Agricultural Bank of Paris.

He possessed a remarkable facility in handling extensive affairs, doing many things well. He had a prominent part in the councils of the democratic party. He was for four years chairman of the Bourbon County Committee, became a member of the council when Paris was incorporated as a city, and for a number of terms was mayor. In 1895 he was elected to the Legislature and twice reelected without opposition. Governor Beckham appointed him for two terms as chairman of the Charitable Institutions Commission of the state. He was for many years president of the Paris Cemetery Company. He was also identified with the Bourbon County Agricultural Society, was an Odd Fellow, and for thirty years or more held the post of deacon in the Christian Church.

At Paris, April 10, 1860, he married Miss Elmerta Hamilton, daughter of Henry Hamilton and cousin of former Governor John Young Brown. She died in January, 1874, the mother of seven sons, four of whom reached mature years, William O., Edward T., Albert and John T., Jr. These sons were all interested in the business of their father. William O. Hinton is the father of O. P. Hinton, a prominent attorney of Paris. John T. Hinton married Miss Mary G. Brown February 2, 1875. She was the daughter of Elisha Brown and a cousin of Gov. John Young Brown.

J. D. Whiteaker, M. D., state senator from Morgan County, has been an active physician and surgeon at Cannel City for over a quarter of a century and has discharged an exceptionally broad range of duties, both professional and public.

Doctor Whiteaker was born at Caney Postoffice in Morgan County, October 1, 1871, son of Alexander and Zerilda (Brown) Whiteaker, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Kentucky. His paternal grandfather spent all his life in Virginia and was a Confederate soldier. The maternal grandfather was born in Kentucky, but the maternal grandmother came from Virginia. Alexander Whiteaker moved to Kentucky about 1866 and spent the rest of his life as a Morgan County farmer. He was active in public affairs and for twenty years held the office of magistrate.

Doctor Whiteaker attended the common schools of Morgan County, took a normal course at West Liberty, and for seven years was a teacher in his native community. He was elected school inspector and served with much satisfaction. For several years he taught several schools. During the Civil War he served in the Twelfth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and was captured by the rebels at Roanoke Island, where he spent four years of imprisonment. After the war he was the principal of the State Normal School at Danville for two terms.

In 1894 he was graduated from the Indiana University School of Medicine. Doctor Whiteaker was appointed to the office of county surgeon in 1906, after the death of Dr. Nelson P. Netscher, who was the first county surgeon of Morgan County.

In the same year he received a degree of Master of Science from the Indiana University College of Medicine. He was graduated from the University of Indiana School of Law in 1910, and was admitted to the bar the same year. He has practiced law as well as medicine ever since.

Doctor Whiteaker is a member of the local Masonic Lodge and Odd Fellows' Lodge, and a member of the Elks, the K. of K. and the Odd Fellows. For many years he was a member of the state executive committee of the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows. He is the author of several books on law and medicine. He is a member of the Morgan County and State Medical associations.

For a number of years along with growing professional prominence has come a decided influence in public affairs. He is county chairman of the democratic party, member of the State Executive Committee for his district, and was elected to the State Senate in 1907. He was the type of progressive citizen who is needed in the legislative halls of Kentucky. Doctor Whiteaker is a member of the lodges of the Masons and Odd Fellows and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

January 1, 1908, at Cannel City he married Miss Dora Lykins, whose people have been in Kentucky for several generations and have had much to do with public affairs.
WILLIAM ELLSBERRY EZZELL. Never before in the history of the country has there been such an insistent and healthy demand for insurance, and men in its various sections engaged in this line of business are finding ample opportunity for writing a large amount of excellent risks. For years all of the dependable companies have been carrying on an educational campaign as to the benefits of buying insurance, not only as a protection for the family in case of an untimely death, but as a sound investment and an adequate provision for old age. The results of these constructive campaigns are not restricted to the present. Paducah, who has been connected with this excellent work for some time is William Ellsberry Ezzell, general agent for the Commonwealth Life Insurance Company.

The Ezzell family originated in England, from which country the American ancestor came to the Colonies and located in North Carolina. From there members of the family migrated to other Southern colonies, and the grandfather of William E. Ezzell, Harry Ezzell, was born in Georgia. He became a pioneer of Carroll County, Tennessee, and was engaged in farming until his death, which occurred before the birth of his grandson. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Gilbert, was a native of Western Tennessee, and she, too, died in Carroll County, that state. They had four sons, of whom William E. Ezzell, his grandson, became a major in the service.

William E. Ezzell was born at McKenzie, Tennessee, on March 3, 1886, a son of R. G. Ezzell, who was born in Carroll County, Tennessee, in 1832, and he died at McKenzie in 1899, having spent his entire life in Carroll County. For many years he was a farmer in the vicinity of McKenzie, where he owned a large and productive farm and a substantial home. In politics he was a democrat and served as a magistrate for over thirty years. Both he and his wife were devout members of the Baptist Church. He was a Mason. R. G. Ezzell married Sarah Ellsberry, who was born in Carroll County, Tennessee, in 1853. She survives her husband and makes her home at McKenzie, Tennessee. She and her husband had the following children: Harry M., who is a traveling salesman for the Simmons Hardware Company, lives at McKenzie, Tennessee; Albert G., who is a farmer and merchant of McKenzie; William E., whose name heads this review; and Sarah B., who is unmarried, lives with her mother.

William E. Ezzell attended the public schools of McKenzie, Tennessee, and the Southern Normal University and State University at Nashville, and later attended and served as a member of the State University at Lexington, Kentucky. After his graduation he was admitted to practice at the bar of Kentucky, and in 1890 he was married to Margaret E., a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Childers, a daughter of George W. Childers of Hindman, and they became the parents of five children, namely: G. C., who is agricultural agent at Louisa, Kentucky; Harold K., who is a resident of Wheeling, West Virginia, who was in training at West Point, Kentucky, during the World war; and Grace, John M., and Harmon S., who are at home.

Mr. Ezzell is a man whose nature is both practical and ideal and founded upon a fine enthusiasm based upon common sense. He is occupied in giving his best efforts toward the establishment and maintenance of an honest administration of his office, and in the prompt and wise performance of his duties he is demonstrating that he is equal to the responsibilities of almost any elevation in his profession which may come to him.

GUERNY C. BAKER. There are times when even experienced and careful agriculturists are confronted with farm problems they have no means of solving. Certain crops fail entirely, fruits do not mature and mysterious ailments attack their stock. In years past Lawrence County, Kentucky, has suffered greatly, but in recent years the former incalculable loss has been reduced to a minimum through the diligent and skilful application of scientific methods employed by the present county agent, Guerny C. Baker, an agricultural expert, who supplements his technical knowledge with a conscientious spirit of industry that makes him one of the most useful citizens of Eastern Kentucky.

Mr. Baker was born at Hindman, Knott County, Kentucky, May 1, 1892, and is a son of J. M. and Nannie C. (Childers) Baker, both of whom were born in Kentucky. The father of Mr. Baker is serving his second term as county attorney of Knott County, and is the democratic candidate for circuit judge of the Thirty-second Judicial District, and has long been prominent in civic affairs at Hindman and in the courts of Knott County.

Following his graduation from the high school at Hindman, Mr. Baker served for a time as deputy clerk of the County Court of Knott County, then entered college at Berea, Kentucky, for a vocational course, and after two years of training in the agricultural department was awarded a diploma with degree to follow. Thus prepared for the work of county agent, Mr. Baker shortly after leaving college received from the Agricultural Department at Washington, D. C., appointment as county agent for Knott and Perry counties, Kentucky, in which area he served until January 1, 1918, when he was appointed by the same authority county agent for Lawrence County.

When Mr. Baker assumed charge in Lawrence County he found much to contend with, no small matter being the outbreak in that year of the black leg disease that was decimating the farmers' cattle and causing loss that was felt all over Eastern Kentucky. With the unhesitating use of the new county agent applied his remedies, and during the succeeding twelve months, working sometimes day and night, he vaccinated 5,416 cattle and practically stamped out the disease. He has endeavored also to impart such knowledge throughout the farming district as will be largely preventive in the future, a number of the most progressive cattle raisers purchasing the vaccine outfits that he has taught them to use. He has been equally successful in handling other farm problems and has by foresight and science cleared up many conditions that formerly operated against agricultural prosperity here. Personally Mr. Baker is very popular in the farming districts, for he is patient and understandable in his teaching, thoroughly in earnest in his efforts to be helpful, and public esteem and confidence is with him.

In 1912, at Hindman, Kentucky, Mr. Baker married Miss Clair Amburgey, who is a daughter of Judge R. H. and Lucinda (Adam) Amburgey. Her maternal grandfather was a soldier in the war between the states. In 1881, when Knott County was organized, Judge Amburgey was elected county clerk and clerk of the Circuit Court, serving in both offices for one full term, and in 1884 he was elected county judge for six terms, and then became county judge, and enjoys the record of having served in county offices for thirty-six consecutive years.

Mr. and Mrs. Baker have three children: Helen Rue, Eugene Lawrence and Dorothy June. The family belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In political life Mr. Baker has always been identified with the democratic party. During the World war he was very active in all the patriotic movements in his county, serving as chairman of the American Protective League, chairman of the Red Cross and as a Three-Minute Man, being one of the most effective speakers as well as most willing workers.

THE FILSON CLUB (By Otto A. Rothert). The Filson Club was organized May 15, 1884, in Louisville. From the standpoint of continuous existence it is the oldest historical association in Kentucky and one of the oldest in the Middle West. The only other statewide historical society in Kentucky is the Kentucky State Historical Society, at Frankfort, which was reorganized in 1896. The thirty books of Kentucky history written by members of the Club and printed as "Filson Club Publications" are well known among students of National and Kentucky history and can be found in many of the large libraries in the country. These publications, however, represent only one phase of work accomplished by the club. Other activities are shown by the papers written for the club and by sundry materials gathered by members and now preserved in its archives.

Ten citizens of Louisville met on May 15, 1884, at the residence of Col. Reuben Thomas Durrett, Brook and Chestnut streets, and organized an association for the purpose of collecting and preserving Kentucky historical materials. The organization was Reuben T. Durrett, Richard H. Collins, William Chenault, John Mason Brown, Basil W. Duke, George M. Davie, James S. Pirtle, Thomas W. Bullitt, Alexander P. Humphrey and Thomas Speed. Colonel Durrett, the chief instigator of this movement, was a journalist, lawyer, man of affairs, and a student of Kentucky history. He was elected president, with Thomas Speed, secretary and Edmund T. Halsey, treasurer.

The organization was named the Filson Club. It was so called in honor of John Filson who, one hundred years before, in 1784, published the first history of Kentucky—"The Discovery, Settlement and Present State of Kentucky." The first paper read before the club was by Colonel Durrett, and with equal appropriateness an enlargement of this paper was its first publication—"John Filson, the First Historian of Kentucky, and An Account of His Life and Writings."

Six meetings of the club were held in 1884, at varying intervals. In February, 1885, the time for regular meetings was agreed upon—the first Monday night of every month, except July, August and September, the summer vacation. Nine regular meetings have been held every year since then on the nine specified Monday nights, though special meetings have occasionally been called.

The club was incorporated on October 6, 1801. Its purpose is thus set forth in one of the articles of incorporation: "The principal place of business of this corporation is Louisville, Kentucky. The general nature of business to be transacted is the collection and preservation and publication of historic matter pertaining to the State of Kentucky and adjacent states; and the cultivation of a taste for historic inquiry and Durrett's library at his residence, the main feature being a prepared paper, a set lecture or an informal talk, followed by an open discussion of the subject and, frequently, by personal reminiscences. Then a closing recess, as it were, took place: all present became Colonel Durrett's personal guests. Cider was served and the gentlemen who smoked were supplied with "Filson Club" cigars made by a member of the club.
Colonel Durett's home was the depository and head-quarters for the club from its beginning and continued as such for twenty-eight years until his death in 1913. After his death the club's archives were transferred to the private library of R. C. Ballard Thruston, in the Columbia Building, where, at Mr. Thruston's expense, they were carefully preserved and made available to the public.

The meetings in Colonel Durett's library were, of course, open only to members, personally invited guests and representatives of the press. Since his death all meetings, except those in January have been in the Louisville Free Public Library and were open to the public. The annual meetings were held in 1914, when the club was the guest of Bennett H. Young in his residence on Ormsby Avenue. Since that year both members and their personally invited friends have been, on each first Monday in January, the guests of Vice President R. C. Ballard Thruston in his library where the club's portraits, papers, books and relics are housed. And these meetings the social nature, which in Colonel Durett's time was made so attractive, continues to add its charm and interest, and those attending are given an opportunity to look over the latest additions to the archives.

From the time of its origin down to 1913 the club was to a very great extent dependent on Colonel Durett. During those many years The Filson Club was, in a sense, his club. That dependence began to react after his death and to arouse the membership to a realization of the necessity of running a less private and more public association. In 1914 the club began to consider the framing of a new constitution and the adopting of new by-laws. Because of the World war and the business conditions throughout the country that followed, it was deemed best to attempt no radical changes for a while. The membership now 11022 feels that the time for such changes is rapidly approaching. Among other projects contemplated is the acquiring of a building.

Since 1913 many original papers have been read, four new Filson Club Publications have been published, and some material added to the archives. The dues of the club have averaged from $3 to $2 a year and the money used toward defraying the general expense of the club. Every publication represents a financial loss. In Colonel Durett's day this deficit was usually met by him, sometimes by the author. The publications issued since his death have been financed by the author of the book or by some other member.

Every officer contributes his work, and has done so since the beginning of the organization. Officers, past and present, are as follows:

Presidents: Reuben T. Durrett, 1884 to 1913; James S. Pirtle, 1913 to 1917; Alfred Pirtle, 1917 to date.

Vice Presidents: J. Stoddard Johnston, 1891 to 1913; James S. Pirtle, 1913 to 1917; R. C. Ballard Thruston, 1917 to date.

Secretaries: Thomas Speed, 1884 to 1905; Alfred Pirtle, 1905 to 1917; Otto A. Rotherhit, 1917 to date.

Treasurers: Edmund T. Halsey, 1884 to 1888; Attila Cox, 1888 to 1892; Kentucky Title Savings Bank & Trust Company, 1892 to date.

On April 24, 1921, the club made a pilgrimage to the sites of some of the old forts or stations on Beargrass Creek, and thus inaugurated visits to unmarked historic places for the purpose of arousing interest in them. Research work is being done along various lines of Kentucky history and the preparation of more papers and Publications continues.

Much Kentucky history which otherwise might have been lost forever is preserved in the club's thirty publications and its many papers. The following is a list of The Filson Club Publications:

John K. Hendrick, who a quarter of a century ago represented the First Kentucky District in Congress, has been engaged in the practice of law for forty-five years and has earned many of the marks of prominence in his profession in the western part of the state.

Mr. Hendrick, whose home has been at Paducah for many years was born in Caswell County, North Carolina, October 10, 1852. He was born after the death of his grandfather, John Hendrick, a native of Virginia, who settled in Caswell County, North Carolina, and followed the life of a planter. John Hendrick married Miss Ruth Murray, a native of Virginia, who also died in Caswell County. William H. Hendrick, their son, was born in Virginia in 1817, and went as a young man to Caswell County, North Carolina, where he operated plantations and later engaged in the brokerage business. He married Miss Mary D. Bennett, and spent the rest of his life as a farmer. He died in 1873. Politically he was an ardent democrat.

William H. Hendrick married Susan D. Bennett, who was born in Virginia in 1819 and died in Christian County, Kentucky, in 1856. She was the mother of four children: Fannie, who became the wife of Tire Gillum, a farmer, and both died at Mayfield, Kentucky; Mrs. Kate Johnson, who died in Christian County, and her husband is a retired farmer at Hopkinsville; John K. is the third of the family; and Ada died unmarried in Livingston County, Kentucky.

John K. Hendrick grew up on his father’s farm in Logan County, attended rural schools, Bethel College at Russellville, and studied law under his uncle, Judge Caswell Bennett, at Smithland. Judge Bennett, late of the City National Bank, died while on the bench as a judge of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky in 1894. John K. Hendrick was admitted to the bar in 1875, began practice at Smithland, and was soon engaged in an extensive professional work in all the surrounding counties. In 1898 he moved to Paducah, and for over twenty years has enjoyed a large business both in civil and criminal law. He also has offices between the McCracken County, State and American Bar associations.

His time has been closely devoted to the law, though his public record includes service of four years, 1889-91, as a member of the State Senate, while his election to Congress came in 1894, and he served one term beginning in 1895 and ending in 1897. Mr. Hendrick is a past grand master of Smithland Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

For a number of years he and his family lived in a comfortable, modern home at 609 Broadway. He married at Smithland, Kentucky, June 19, 1877, Miss Lula Grayot, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Grayot, both now deceased. Her father was a druggist at Smithland. Mrs. Hendrick graduated from a finishing school for young ladies at Cincinnati. To their marriage were born four children: Alfred A., a graduate of the Virginia Law School, is now paymaster for a large copper company at Bisbee, Arizona. W. R. is a real estate broker at Paducah, Harry B., now clerk in the Hotel Palmer at Paducah, enlisted at the first call, was sent to camp at Syracuse, New York, but was eventually rejected on account of physical disability. The youngest of the family, Nellie, is in Red Cross work at Washington, District of Columbia.

Warner Edwin Haynes, a prominent real estate man of Frankfort, was with the Eighty-first Division in France, was an American student in one of the great universities of that country after the armistice, and following his return to this country located in Kentucky and took up his present business.

Mr. Haynes was born at Bishopville, South Carolina, April 27, 1866. His paternal ancestors came originally from Ireland to North Carolina. His grandfather, Warner Haynes, spent all his life in Whiteville, North Carolina, where he died in 1898. Before the war he was a large planter and slave owner, fought as a Confederate soldier, and continued planting in his native vicinity the rest of his life. He married a Miss Powell likewise a lifelong resident of Whiteville. E. B. Haynes, his son, was born at Whiteville February 24, 1888, and early entered the ministry of the Methodist Church South. As a young man he went to Bishopville, South Carolina, where he was married and where he lived until his retirement. He is a democrat in politics. Rev. Mr. Haynes married Fannie Ruth Arrowsmith, who was born at Bishopville in 1867, and died there in 1905. Of their children Neil Kenneth is a merchant at Hartsville, South Carolina; Lula who died at Bethune, South Carolina, in 1919, wife of H. S. Lucas, a farmer; Claude is a banker at Columbia, South Carolina; Warner E. is in his fourth in age; Miss Laurine is a teacher in the Piedmont High School of South Carolina; and Miss Lena is a student in that high school.

Warner Edwin Haynes was educated in the public schools of Bishopville, graduated from the Piedmont High School at Londale, in North Carolina, in 1915, and on April 27, 1918, enlisted and had four months of training at Camp Jackson, South Carolina. He went overseas with the Eighty-first Division and was in active service until the signing of the armistice. He was then mustered out and was one of the American soldiers who accepted the invitation of the French government to study abroad and was in the law department of Tolouse University at Tolouse, France. After returning to this country he continued his law studies in Chattanooga College of Law at Chattanooga, Tennessee, graduating with the LL. B. degree in June, 1920.

September 1, 1920, Mr. Haynes came to Frankfort and established the Frankfort branch of the well known real estate brokerage firm of Ford, Wood & Haynes. He has the active management of this office on the third floor of the McClure Building. His associates are J. M. Ford and C. E. Wood, a well known real estate firm of Georgetown, Kentucky.

Mr. Haynes is a democrat, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and is one of Frankfort’s most popular young citizens and business men.

April 3, 1920, at Georgetown he married Miss Frances Wood, daughter of C. E. and Katherine (Shropshire) Wood of Georgetown. Her father has already been named as a member of the firm Ford, Wood & Haynes, real estate. Mrs. Haynes finished her education in Georgetown College.

Michler Brothers Company, Lexington knows the Michler Brothers Company as the title of a very extensive floriculture and landscape yard, landscape and planting business that was established by the father of the present proprietors something over twenty years ago. The founder, the late Carl Michler was a native of Wuertemberg, Germany. He was liberally educated and came to the United States about 1869 when a young man. He had been trained in the work of floriculture and landscape gardening, but for many years he earned his living as a teacher in Lutheran parochial schools at Cumberland, Maryland, and at one of the student interests in floriculture. In 1897 he moved to Lexington and for several years taught private classes in German.

It was in 1900 that he constructed his first small greenhouse, at first only an adjunct of his home. He had the real genius of a plant grower and his products came into immediate favor and there was a demand that made it difficult to keep his facilities expanding fast enough. Carl Michler died in 1912 at the age of sixty-nine, but before his death saw his business highly prosperous, and conducted in a modern plant. Since 1902 the home of the business has been at 417 East Maxwell Street. The company has 12,000 square feet under glass and makes a specialty of growing the choicest of flowers.

The active members of the business at present are Charles, L. A. Michler and their sister Miss Rose.

The late Carl Michler married in Maryland, Elizabeth Goodman who survived him. There are two other sons, William A., connected with the Klein Michler Company, clothing merchants at Lexington; and George J., a Lexington real estate man.

Charles Michler while a member of the firm Michler Brothers Company is widely known as a specialist in landscape gardening and while he keeps two forces of men active under his supervision he is constantly busy in his work all over the blue grass section. He has been employed for landscape work on many fine estates, also for public park and playgrounds, and is one of the leading men in his profession in Kentucky. He is deeply interested in the movement for the conservation of bird life as a member of the Audubon Society. He is a member of the Baptist Church and a member of the Optimist Club and the Board of Commerce. George Michler is a stockholder in the Phoenix Amusement Company and his brother L. A. Michler has been a director in that company from the time of its incorporation. He is a member of the Optimist Club and the Board of Commerce.

The brothers are active Masons, L. A. Michler being a Knight Templar, and their sister is a member of the Eastern Star.

John Lawrence Harmon, educator, business man and farmer, is now in his second term as county superintendent of schools of McCreary County, and in Southern Kentucky where he has lived all his life he is widely known for the activities and service that have provided him with a wide knowledge of the educational needs of his section and has given him more to promote the interests of the schools than those in which he has been immediately concerned.

The Harmon family are one of the oldest and best known families of old Whitley County, their home having been chiefly in that section which is now McCreary County. His great-grandfather established the family here in pioneer times, coming from North Carolina. His grandfather, Robert Harmon, was born in 1818 and lived until 1904, being a lifelong resident of Whitley County, though his home for many years was at Marsh Creek, in what is now McCreary County. He was a farmer. His wife was Martha Ross, who was born in 1817 and died in 1888, likewise a lifelong resident of Whitley County.

Joseph Harmon, father of Professor Harmon was born in Whitley County in 1845, learned merchandising as a clerk, and for many years was owner and proprietor of an extensive business at Pine Knot. He died at Pine Knot, February 19, 1919. He was a school trustee there, also owned and operated a farm, was a staunch republican in politics and one of the active supporters of the Baptist Church. His wife was Lucinda Wood, who was born in 1828, died in 1893, and is still living at Pine Knot. The oldest of her children is John Lawrence Harmon. Sarah, the second in age, is the wife of Rev. A. S. Petrey, a Baptist minister who has charge of the Baptist Institute at Hazard, in Perry County, and preaches in several churches of that vicinity. Martha Etta, the third child, died when six years of age. The fourth is Jeriah Edward, who is mentioned below, and the youngest, Winnie Ethel, died when six years old.

Jeriah Edward Harmon, a well known Whitley County physician, was born January 6, 1870. He spent three years in Cumberland College at Williamsburg, graduated M. D. from the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville in 1905, and since graduation has enjoyed extensive practice at Pine Knot and is also the only druggist in that town. He has served as health officer, a member of the school board eight years, is a member of all the medical societies, and also prominent in fraternal affairs. He is vice president of the Pine Knot Banking Company. Dr. Harmon married at Pine Knot in 1906, Miss Nola Morgan, daughter of S. B. and Nancy (Main) Whitley, county 1830, and was a merchant at Pine Knot. The children of Dr. and Mrs. Harmon are Winnie, born in 1902; Ernest, born in 1904; Maude, born in 1905; Kenneth, born in 1907; Clarence, born in 1909; Pauline, born in 1913, and Helen, born in 1920.

John Lawrence Harmon was born in Whitley County, February 11, 1874, and grew up at Pine Knot. His father being a prosperous merchant he was afforded good educational advantages, attending public schools, and in 1898 left his studies in Cumberland College at Williamsburg after completing the junior year. He had in the meantime taught school and continued teaching in Whitley and McCreary counties until January, 1918. Education has been his chief interest, though some important business responsibilities have also been assumed by him, and in 1917 he was elected county superintendent of schools in November, 1917, and began his first term in January, 1918. By re-election he entered upon the duties of his second term in January, 1922.

Mr. Harmon owns a modern home at Whitley City, and for many years has been a prosperous farmer. He owns an attractive county estate of forty-six acres at Pine Knot, and has directed the management of this farm since 1901. He also has 150 acres of wood lands near Marsh Creek. For ten years Mr. Harmon has also handled fire and life insurance.

During the World war he was chairman of a committee to secure laborers for the building of Camp Knox and Camp Taylor, and was a member of local committees for the relay and supply lines with the result that his district was outdistilled by others.

He has served one term as a member of the board of education in his county, and for four years he has served as its superintendent, and has made his office as county superintendent of schools an instrument of service in reaching out over the county and promoting the sale of war savings stamps. Mr. Harmon is a Republican. He is a member of the Kentucky Educational Association.

December 16, 1907, at Pine Knot, he married Miss Minnie Spencer, daughter of C. and Hettie (Smith) Spencer, residents of Pine Knot. Her father is a retired music teacher, and Mrs. Harmon is a musician widely known over this section of Kentucky, a well trained instrumentalist and vocalist and a teacher of music. During the World war she devoted a large part of her time to patriotic movements and spoke in behalf of the various drives throughout McCreary County. Mr. and Mrs. Harmon have seven children, a group of young people distinguished by their intellectual abilities. Lawrence, the oldest, born in 1902, is a graduate of the Whitley City High School and now a student in Cumberland College, at Williamsburg; Virgil, born in 1904, in the junior class of the Whitley City High School; Judson is said to be the brightest college graduate in the state, having completed his studies in the eighth grade when eleven years of age, graduating from the high school at Whitley City at the age of fifteen, and is now taking his freshman year in Cumberland College. The younger children are Mabel, in the junior class of high school; Maynard, in the fifth grade; Marie, born in 1915 and already in the second grade, and John, Jr., was born in 1918.

Monte J. Goble. Representing a well known family of Eastern Kentucky, Monte J. Goble has devoted over thirty years of his active life to banking, and for twenty years of that time has been connected in increasing responsibilities with the banking interests of the city of Cincinnati.

He was born at Louisa, Lawrence County, Kentucky, March 21, 1874, son of Montraville B. and Mary J. (Northup) Goble. The Goble family in America was established by some early French Huguenot settlers in New Jersey, who came to this country before the Revolutionary war. Greenville Goble, grandfather of the Cincinnati banker, was a prominent man of Eastern Kentucky, a lawyer by profession, and held a number of political offices including prosecuting attorney at a time when Lawrence County embraced the territory now divided among several counties. His wife was of an ancestry including the Wilson, Jones and the Greene families of Virginia and North Carolina.

Montraville B. Goble was also a native of Lawrence County, and took up the profession of law at the age of nineteen, but soon became interested in the coal, timberland and lumber industry, and devoted all his active lifetime to the affairs growing out of these connections. His wife, Mary J. Northup, was born in Washington County, New York, of an old family in that state, the original name Northup being changed by some branches to Northrop and Northup. On her mother's side, she was related to the Hicks of Granville, and Glenville Falls, New York, and to theRobles of the same section of New York and Vermont. Mary J. Northup after the Civil war moved to Lawrence County, Kentucky, with her brother, Col. Jay H. Northup, who became partner with Montraville B. Goble in the lumber and coal land business.

When Monte J. Goble was two years of age his parents removed to Catlettsburg at the mouth of the Big Sandy, and he was reared there, attending the grammar schools. He spent from 1888 to 1891 in Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, and on leaving College began his banking career in the Big Sandy National Bank at Catlettsburg. He was with that institution from 1891 to 1902, and in the latter year moved to Cincinnati. He began as assistant cashier in the First National Bank, later was promoted to cashier when the Fifth and the Third were merged in 1908 as the Fifth-Third National Bank. He is now vice president of this, one of Cincinnati's largest banking institutions. Mr. Goble has devoted his time to banking, and is rated as an authority on financial and economic conditions in this section of the Ohio Valley.

He was reared and educated in the South, acquired the view point of a Southerner, but in his business career has been associated with the interests and the men of the North, and out of this experience he has acquired an independent attitude and view as to politics, regarding the man and the issues of more importance than the party and believing that an independent element is always needed as a balance wheel between the two great parties.

His loyalty to the South has been shown on many occasions to the satisfaction of a great many southern banks in their enterprises, and this probably was most strongly brought out in the great number of bankers who called in Lexington, Ky., early in January, 1922, when the bankers of Ohio and Indiana were desirous of cooperating with the bankers of Kentucky, in helping out in the financing of the growers in the Light Burley districts of the three states.

The Burley Tobacco Growers Co-operative Association, which was endeavoring to raise funds to handle the pool tobacco, was just getting ready to call for subscriptions when a thousand or two hundred bankers assembled in the Phoenix Hotel, when Mr. Goble asked the chairman if he could respond for his bank before the general call for subscriptions was made. This was agreed to, and his institution through him made the offer to lend the association $500,000, as well as to re-discount the association's paper which might be given by the other bankers. This offer to re-discount the paper was accepted by the association by other bankers in the district carried no qualifications as to the banks being correspondents of the Fifth-Third National Bank of Cincinnati. This offer was made at a very opportune time, and practically every banker in the room subscribed his full quota, for about $5,000,000 was raised before the meeting adjourned.

Mr. Goble at college was a member of the Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity, and has since taken both the Scottish and York Rite degrees in Masonry. He is a member of the Maketewah Country Club, the Business Men's Club and the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati.

February 23, 1909, he married Bessie Bradley, daughter of Frank A. and Susan Foster Bradley of Cincinnati. Her parents were reared in Cincinnati and her parents in turn were representatives of some of the earliest settlers in the city. Mr. and Mrs. Goble have two children: Monte J., Jr., born in 1910; and Mary Northup, born in 1911.

JOSEPH M. EMMART. Coming to Louisville in 1902, Mr. Emmart has since figured conspicuously in the meat packing and provision industry, and is the chief executive officer of the Louisville Provision Company, one of the largest concerns of its kind in the Ohio Valley.

Mr. Emmart comes of a family that has long been identified with the food packing and provision business. He was born near the City of Baltimore, Maryland, March 11, 1882, a son of William M. and Lizzie J. (Gregg) Emmart, also natives of Baltimore County. His grandfather, Girard Emmart, had a farm in Baltimore County and was one of the pioneer members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the first Sunday School of that denomination in that part of Maryland having been held in his home while his son, William M., was a boy, and later a church was built on the farm. William M. Emmart, who was born in 1850 and died in 1921, devoted his early years to farming and later engaged in the canning industry as president of the Emmart Packing Company of Baltimore. He was a leading member of the Methodist Church. He is survived by his widow and two sons and two daughters of a family of four daughters and two sons.

Among these children, Joseph M. Emmart attended school at Baltimore, but as a boy went to Chicago and when only twelve years of age was office boy for the great Chicago merchant, Marshall Field. He acquired a thorough training for his present business with Swift & Company in the car routing department, and in 1905 came to Louisville and for some five years was associated with the Louisville Packing Company. In 1910 he was one of the organizers of the Louisville Provision Company, and has since been secretary, treasurer and manager of this extensive local industry.

Mr. Emmart's company during the World war supplied millions of pounds of meat to the Government at Camp Taylor. He put forth extra exertions in handling his business for patriotic motives, and associated himself with other war movements. He is a member of the Y. M. C. A., of the Optimist Club, of the Andubon Club, of the Board of Trade, of which he is a director and is also a director in the Louisville Automobile Club. He is affiliated with Preston Lodge No. 281, F. and A. M., Eureka Chapter No. 101, R. A. M., DeMolay Commandery No. 12, K. T., with the Grand Consistory of Scottish Rite and Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is a member of the Christian Church, Mr. Emmart married Miss Anne May Webb on February 10, 1910. She is a native of Boyle County, Kentucky. They have one son, Bartlett Milward Emmart.

JOHN W. CALDWELL, soldier, born in Prince Edward County, Virginia, died in Frankfort, Kentucky, November 9, 1864. He removed to Kentucky in 1781, served in the conflicts with the Indians and became a major-general of the Kentucky and Tennessee state conventions of 1787 and 1788, and of the state senate in 1792 and 1793. At the time of his death he was lieutenant governor.

JOHN MARSHALL HARLAN, born in Boyle County, Kentucky, June 1, 1833, was graduated at Centre College in 1830, and at the law department of Transylvania University in 1833. In 1851 he was adjutant general of Kentucky, and in 1858 he became judge of Franklin County, Kentucky. He was an unsuccessful write candidate for congress and at the beginning of the Civil War entered the Union Army as colonel of the Tenth Kentucky Infantry. He was attorney general of Kentucky in 1864-7, and was the unsuccessful republican candidate for governor of the state in 1871 and 1873. He was a member of the Louisiana commission that was appointed by President Hayes, and on November 20, 1877, became associate justice of the United States Supreme Court, successor of David Davis; served until his death in 1914.

Benjamin Hardin, statesman, born in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, in 1784, died in Bardstown, Kentucky, September 24, 1832. He removed to Kentucky in childhood, received a primary education, studied law, was admitted to the bar in 1806, and began to practice at Bardstown. He served in the state house of representatives in 1810-11 and 1824-5, and in 1815 took his seat in Congress, having been elected as a whig, and served till 1817 and again from 1833 till 1837. In 1844 he was appointed secretary of state of Kentucky, and held office till his resignation in 1847, and was a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1849. He was distinguished as a debater, and his style was pungent and sarcastic. John Randolph of Roanoke described him as a "kitchen-knife, rough and homely, but keen and trenchant."

Benjamin Helm Brustow, statesman born in Elkhorn, Todd County, Kentucky, June 20, 1832. He was graduated at Jefferson College, Pennsylvania, in 1854, studied law, and was admitted to the bar of Kentucky in 1853. He began practice at Elkhorn, whence he removed to Hopkinsville in 1858. At the beginning of the Civil War, at a time when the state was wavering between loyalty and secession, he entered the Union Army as lieutenant-colonel of the Twenty-fifth Kentucky Infantry, and was engaged at the capture of Port Donelson and at the battle of Shiloh, where he was wounded. He afterward became colonel of the Eighth Kentucky Cavalry, and served throughout the war with distinction. While still in the field he was elected to the state senate for four years, but resigned at the end of two years serving only from 1863 until 1865. He was United States District Attorney for the Louisville district from 1865 until 1870. The ability with which he filled these offices led to his appointment as solicitor-general of the United States on the organization of the department of justice in October, 1870. In 1872 he resigned to become attorney for the Texas Pacific railroad, but soon returned to the practice of law at Louisville. He was nominated attorney-general of the United States in December, 1873, but not confirmed. President Grant appointed him secretary of the treasury on June 3, 1874, and this office he filled acceptably until the end of June, 1876, when he resigned, owing to the necessity of his absence in the north in connection with the republican national convention of that year, held in Cincinnati, Ohio, he was a leading candidate for the presidential nomination, receiving 113 votes on the first ballot.

James Lusk Alcorn, statesman, born near Golconda, Illinois, November 4, 1816. He early removed to Kentucky, and was educated at Cumberland College. For five years he was deputy sheriff of Livingston County, Kentucky; and in 1843 was elected to the Legislature. In 1844 he removed to Mississippi and began the practice of law. From 1846 to 1856 he served in one branch or the other of the Legislature. In 1852 he was chosen elector-at-large on the Scott ticket, and in 1857 was nominated as governor by the whigs. This he declined and was a candidate for Congress in that year, but was defeated by L. Q. C. Lamar. He was the founder of the levee system in his state, and in 1858 he became president of the levee board of the Mississippi-Yazoo Delta. In 1861 he was elected brigadier-general by the state convention, of which he was a member, but his commission was refused by Jefferson Davis on account of old political differences. He was elected to the United States Senate in 1865, but was not allowed to take his seat. He was elected governor in 1869 on the republican ticket, from which office he resigned on being elected to the United States Senate, where he served for six years, from 1871 to 1877. In 1873 he was defeated as an independent candidate for governor of his state.

Hon. Joshua F. Bell was a lineal descendant of Dr. Thomas Walker, the first recorded explorer of Kentucky, and of Joshua Fry, the distinguished pioneer teacher of historic mention. He was born in Danville November 26, 1810, where he graduated at college in 1828, and died August 17, 1870. Qualified for the profession of law, in 1843, he was elected to Congress, and in 1850, became secretary of state under Governor Crittenden. In 1861, he was one of the six commissioners to the peace conference at Washington City, and a delegate to the Border State Convention. He died the day before his governor in 1863, of the Union Democratic State Convention, in accordance with an overwhelming majority. Kentucky has produced but a few men superior in literary attainments, in legal ability, and in statesmanship, to Mr. Bell. As an orator, he ranked among the first men of Kentucky. He was a close logical and powerful speaker, and the smoothness and beauty of his eloquence gained for him the appellation of "Bell of the Silver Tongue."

Richard Henry Stanton, born in Alexandria, Virginia, September 9, 1812. He received an academic education, studied law, was admitted to the bar, and practiced at Maysville, Kentucky. Elected to Congress as a democrat, he served from December 3, 1849, till March 3, 1855; was presidential elector on the Buchanan ticket in 1856; state attorney for his judicial district in 1858; a delegate to the National Democratic Convention in 1860; and district judge in 1868-74. He edited the "Maysville Monitor" and "Maysville Express," and published a "Code of Practice" in civil and criminal cases in Kentucky, "Practical Treatises for Justices of the Peace, etc., of Kentucky," and a "Practical Manual for Executors, etc., in Kentucky."

Thomas Marshall, son of John Marshall, of Westmoreland County, and Elizabeth Markham, his wife, was born in Washington parish, Westmoreland County, April 2, 1730; was a lieutenant in the French and Indian war; burgess for Faquier County in the assemblies of 1761-1765, 1766-1769, 1769-1771, 1772-1774, 1775, and a member of the conventions of 1774, 1775, 1776; colonel of the Third Virginia Regiment in the Continental army; in 1780 surveyor-general of the lands in Kentucky appropriated to the officers and soldiers of the Virginia Continental line; removed to Kentucky and died there June 22, 1802. He married Mary Randolph Keith, and was father of Chief Justice John Marshall.

Alexander Galt Barret was born in Louisville, Kentucky, October 4, 1870, the son of Henry W. and Emma (Tyler) Barret. He graduated from Harvard College in 1899, receiving the degree of A. B. and from Harvard Law School in 1903, with the degree of LL. B. Immediately upon his graduation in 1893 he entered into the practice of his chosen profession in Louisville. He was engaged in a number of prominent cases in which he was on the winning side. He was one of the counsel for the Fusion party in their successful JAMES STRESLEY JACKSON, soldier, born in Fayette County, Kentucky, September 27, 1823; died in Perryville, Kentucky, October 8, 1868. He was graduated at Jefferson College, Pennsylvania, and in law at Wofford College, South Carolina, in 1845, and began practice. At the beginning of the Mexican war he raised a regiment of volunteers, and served for a time as lieutenant. While in Mexico he had a difficulty with Col. Thomas F. Marshall, which resulted in a duel, and he resigned to avoid trial by court-martial. He then resumed practice, first at Greensburg and afterward at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, and in 1860 was elected to Congress as a Unionist, but resigned his seat in autumn, 1861, and organized for the National Government the Third Kentucky Cavalry, of which he became colonel. He took an active part in the battles of Shiloh, Corinth, Iuka and Athens, and on July 16, 1862, was commissioned brigadier-general of volunteers. He commanded a division of McCook's corps, of the army of the Ohio, at the battle of Perryville, where he was killed. General Jackson possessed great personal attractions, and his impetuosity led him into several duels in addition to the one above mentioned.

BALLARD BLAND was born at Fredericksburg, Virginia, October 16, 1761. When he was eighteen years old he emigrated to Kentucky, and became one of its earliest settlers. He joined a volunteer force which, under Colonel Bowman, which was attempting to free the district of savages, and served in the expedition into Ohio. A year later he took part in George Rogers Clark's raid against the Piqua towns, and in 1794 he was with General Wayne at the battle of the Fallen Timbers. He was a man of great bravery, and became one of the most renowned of Indian fighters. In 1789 he was deployed by George Rogers Clark to explore the banks of the Ohio from the Falls, at what is now Louisville, to the mouth of the present town of West Point. Ballard's most harrowing experience was while witnessing the slaughter of his father mother and two sisters by a party of fifteen Indians. A younger sister escaped after being scalped and left for dead. Ballard was too late to save their lives, but from his place of concealment killed nearly half of the Indians. After peace had been restored, Ballard was sent several times as a representative to the State Legislature. The County of Ballard, Kentucky, and its capital, Blandville, were named in his honor. He died September 5, 1853.

C. F. BURNAM. Hon. Curtis Field Burnam was born in Richmond, Kentucky, on May 24, 1820, the descendant of English ancestors. The first authentic knowledge of his paternal ancestry coming from Cecil County, Maryland, where they located in the early part of the Eighteenth century. There his grandfather, John Burnam, was born in 1761, and was taken by his parents to Virginia. He joined the Revolutionary army on July 31, 1776, in the Third South Carolina Regiment, and participated in the battles of Cowpens and Guilford Court House and closed his military service at Yorktown. After the war he went south and settled near Raleigh, North Carolina, living there for a number of years and on December 4, 1787, married Ann Fort, the daughter of Capt. Frederick Fort, a Revolutionary soldier. Here Thompson Burnam, the father of the subject of our sketch was born in 1789, and in 1790, becoming imbued with the spirit of the pioneer, John Burnam crossed the mountains and brought his family by way of the Wilderness Road to Kentucky. After living at various places he finally settled in this Green River country and died near Bowling Green, Kentucky, in 1831, honored and respected by all who knew him. His wife, who was a woman of strong character and intellect, also died near Bowling Green, where they are both buried.

Thompson Burnam, the father of our subject, received only a limited education and entered the store of a merchant at Richmond at an early age and by his industry and ability, became a successful merchant in his own name. He was a man who wielded a great influence in the community and helped to give it a remarkable standing for integrity and solvency with the merchants on the eastern states. He married Lucinda Field in 1815, in Bourbon County, Kentucky. She was born in Culpeper County, Virginia, April 8, 1792, and was the daughter of John and Davis Field, the granddaughter of Col. John Field, killed at Point Pleasant in 1774 in the battle with the Indians, led by the celebrated Chief Cornstalk. This battle is considered by many historians as the beginning of the Revolutionary struggle. The wife of Col. John Field was Ann Rogers Clark, thought to be, as the name would indicate, a near relative of Gen. George Rogers Clark. Both of Curtis F. Burnam's parents lived to an honored old age and died in Richmond, Kentucky, where they were buried. They left numerous descendants and a most priceless heritage of a name without stain or blemish.

Mr. Burnam received his preliminary education at the Mission Male Seminary at Richmond, Kentucky, which was a preparation for college, and in January, 1837, when he was seventeen years of age, he left his home to enter upon his career at Yale College, New Haven. He traveled to Philadelphia in stage coaches, where he first saw a steam car, and took his first ride from Philadelphia to New York, and from there to New Haven by boat. He passed examination for the Sophomore class, but on account of his youth was advised to enter the Freshman class, which he did. He did not return home during his college career, but remained at New Haven continuously until May, 1840. He always loved books and to the end of his life they were his companions. He won many college honors, alike for literary productions, oratory and scholarships, but in the Senior year being elected class orator, delivering the farewell address. He was chosen a member of the Skull and Bones Club and of the Phi Beta Kappa Society, and in fact had more college honors than usually fall to the lot of one boy.

During his college life he acquired the habits of systematic study and reading which continued throughout his whole life. His vacations had been spent largely in the college library reading books of every character. By reason of this summer work he acquired a familiarity with English literature, both prose and poetry, which was of great service to him and of pleasure to his friends. He possessed a wonderful memory and the unusual ability to make apt quotations and to tell exactly from whence they came.

Mr. Burnam began the study of law soon after reaching home, commencing his studies in the office of Judge Daniel Breck, a distinguished jurist. He continued his studies in the law department of Transylvania University, from which he graduated in 1842. For a time he was the partner of William C. Goodloe, who shortly afterward became circuit judge and continued as such for many years. Mr. Burnam practiced with great success and in a few years he was engaged on one side or the other in practically all the important cases in Madison and the adjacent counties. During this period and that of his beginning of the war, there was a great deal of litigation relating to slaves, and although Mr. Burnam and his people were slave owners, his sympathies were in accord with Mr. Clay's for the gradual emancipation of the negroes. Mr. Burnam's success as a lawyer through his whole career was attributable not only to his knowledge of the law, but to his unswerving loyalty to his clients, his great ability as a pleader and his conscientious preparation of his cases.

His pleadings, always written by himself, were models of brevity, clearness and elegant English. He was a great jury advocate during a period when the reputation of the Kentucky bar for eloquence was at its height. He had the charm both of voice and language and many of his arguments in celebrated cases have become traditional among the great speeches of the Madison County bar. Mr. Burnam's speech-making was not confined to his profession or political questions, as he was from early manhood to old age being constantly asked to deliver addresses by literary institutions and on public occasions of all kinds, many of his addresses having been printed in pamphlet form for preservation.

Mr. Burnam's political career began early in life, the law, government and politics having been closely associated, especially in the South. He was commonwealth attorney for awhile and presidential elector more than once. In 1831 he first represented his county in the State Legislature. During the years from 1850 to 1860 Mr. Burnam was twice a candidate for Congress, losing the nomination in each instance by a narrow margin, which reverses he afterward considered fortunate, because they sent him back to the practice of the law, which was much more remunerative than holding office. Mr. Burnam became a warm personal friend of Mr. Lincoln and supported all measures tending to strengthen his administration of the government, and in 1864 was active in his advocacy of the re-election of the great abolitionist. At the outbreak of the Civil war, although Kentucky was a slave state, Mr. Burnam did not at once take the secessionist side. He afterward characterized him and by the anti-slavery principles inherited from his father, gave himself up to work of the preservation of the Union.

Mr. Burnam was a member of the Legislature from 1860 to 1864, and being chairman of the Committee on Federal Relations, did everything in his power to keep Kentucky in the Union. The services were of great value after the issuing of the Emancipation Proclamation in the endeavor to mediate between the parties so hotly in conflict at that time.

In 1863 he was captured in Lexington by a detachment of Morgan's cavalry and held as a prisoner of war because of his prominence as a leader of the Union party of the state. He was exchanged for a younger brother of General Morgan's, who was also a prisoner of war.

In 1875 Mr. Burnam was, without solicitation, offered the position of assistant secretary of the United States Treasury by General Grant. From his constant services to the office until General Bristow's resignation, the following fifteen years of Mr. Burnam's life were devoted almost exclusively to his profession, although he took the greatest interest in the progress and welfare of his county, state and nation, and was actively interested in everything pertaining to the progress of his community, banks, schools and public improvements of all kinds. He was a member of nearly all the state conventions of his party, also a delegate to a number of national conventions. In 1883 he took a vacation and spent several months in Europe, and during this absence was unanimously elected president of the Kentucky State Bar Association. He was instrumental in the organization of a constitutional convention and in 1889 was elected a delegate to this constitutional convention by the legislature of Kentucky and more especially enjoyed the work of the convention very much and often said that he expected this to be his last public service, but he was mistaken, for during the strenuous times of 1890 Mr. Burnam was called upon to make the race for state senator in his district, although he was in his eightieth year, and not present at the convention. He remained in Frankfort during the whole of the legislative session, endearing himself in every way to uphold and maintain the majesty of the law. Mr. Burnam was re-elected to the state senate in 1903, and during that period introduced and had passed the law establishing the Confederate Home, thereby showing his liberal views on such questions. He made a great speech on the Berea College bill during his term and all this service was given after Mr. Burnam had passed his eighty-fifth year, with the adjournment of this session of the Legislature, March, 1906, his public career closed.

The closing years of his life were beautiful. Mr. Burnam enjoyed them, he loved his home, his family and his friends; he loved nature, birds, trees and books and from the latter he derived more recreation than from anything else. He read and re-read fiction, poetry, history. His memory was wonderful and in no wise impaired and his knowledge of Latin was remarkable. One of his great pleasures was in reading, in the original, of the poems of Horace, Virgil and others, and in the evening he frequently played whist with the members of his family and with friends.

Mr. Burnam was married in May, 1843, to Miss Sarah Helen Rollins, of Boone County, Missouri. She was a daughter of Dr. Anthony W. Rollins, and a sister of Hon. James Rollins, both of whose names are connected with the early history of Missouri, especially with the establishment and growth of the University at Columbia. The married life of Mr. and Mrs. Burnam was blessed in every way, with children, health and many years. Mrs. Burnam was a woman of the old type, handsome, gracious, frugal and industrious. She was a daughter of the oldest and truest of home, instead of the modern women's clubs, charitable, a true friend and her first care the happiness of her husband and children. After more than fifty-nine years of wedded life they were parted by her death on May 13, 1904. They were the parents of eight children, all of whom grew to maturity and six of whom have survived their parents.

Mr. Burnam was a member of the Masonic fraternity and was held in great esteem by the brotherhood. A most beautiful incident of his life was the occasion of his eighty-seventh birthday, when a banquet was tendered him by the Masons of his native town and county, a tribute of the esteem in which he was held among them. In religion he was an "Old Baptist," this being the church of his fathers.

Mr. Burnam died March 19, 1900, at his home, Burnamwood, after a short illness. He was buried from the Baptist Church with full Templar honors, in the cemetery at Richmond, which more than fifty years before he had helped to dedicate and of whose business organization he was long president. His force of character, his gentleness of disposition and his fixed purpose always to do the right impressed all who met him. He never willingly gave offense or wounded the feelings of those whom he opposed, but rather seemed to win their confidence and respect by his courtesy and ability, and his most glorious epiphany is that he is loved and remembered in the hearts of his family and friends.

The Richmond bar, many corporations, college presidents, prominent ecclesiastics, the governor and many others sent resolutions and letters of condolence to the family and in all ways demonstrated the personal and public loss the community sustained when Curtis Field Burnam died.

Basil W. Duke was born in Scott County, Kentucky, May 28, 1838. He was the only child of Nathaniel W. Duke and Mary Ann Pickett (Currie) Duke. At the early age of sixteen, the father entered the navy as a midshipman and was stationed at the U.S. Navy Yard as a midshipman and on his return was commissioned a captain. He died among friends at Paris, Kentucky, in July, 1850. General Duke's mother was born in Richmond, Virginia, December 17, 1813; was married October 4, 1833, and died in Lexington, Kentucky, February 24, 1847.

General Duke's early education was begun in the private schools of Scott County, but he had the great advantage of afterward attending the fine private school of Rev. Lyman W. Scott, Marrietta, La., and later attended at Georgetown College and the famous Centre College at Danville. He was a nervous impetuous youth not altogether inclined to the strict discipline of the schools, but his was a quick, impressive mind, taking hold of a subject with a readiness that probably gave him a better education than he ever imagined he had. On leaving college he began the study of law under the valued training of Chief Justice George Robertson, than whom no better lawyer has sat upon the bench of Kentucky's highest court. Taking his degree from the law department of Transylvania University before his twenty-first anniversary, General Duke went to Missouri, stopping first in Saline County, but going soon afterwards to St. Louis, where he was admitted to the bar and began the practice of his profession.

His military spirit first developed here and he became the captain of a company of "Minute Men" who were sympathizers with the South. He was also appointed by the governor, police commissioner of St. Louis, a position of far more importance than then now. The storm clouds of war were gathering, and young Duke's sympathies were all with the South. He urged upon the governor the importance of seizing the arsenal at St. Louis and the securing of the munitions of war there stored. The governor hesitated and the arsenal was left. General Lyon got there first and the Confederates lost the much-needed military stores. A force was sent against the "Minute Men" but Duke burned the bridges over the Gasconade and Osage rivers, thus saving himself and his men from capture. For this bit of military enterprise, he was subsequently indicted for arson and also for treason, though never tried for either alleged offense. The Federal authorities in Missouri were anxious to capture Duke, and knowing this he left the state to its own devices. Coming back to Kentucky, he joined his brother-in-law, John H. Morgan, who led to the South three companies that were later to become parts of the division known to all as "Morgan's Men." Morgan was captain of Company A, and Duke was his first lieutenant and acting adjutant of the command. This little command began at once to make history and never left off until there was no more a Confederacy. The first great battle in which the command participated was at Shiloh when it was in the fiercest of the fighting and it was here that Duke received the first of the three wounds from which he was to suffer during the war. Owing to his activity in this and many other battles, President Roosevelt appointed General Duke a member of the Shiloh Commission, in 1911.

Returning home from the war General Duke engaged in the practice of law; was a member of the Legislature and state's attorney for six years. He was the author of the "History of Morgan's Command" and of a volume of "Reminiscences" and a graceful contributor to the press.

General Duke was married July 8, 1861, to Miss Henrietta Hunt Morgan of Lexington, Kentucky, the sister of Gen. John H. Morgan.

John Boyle, jurist, born in Botetourt County, Virginia, October 28, 1774, died in Kentucky January 28, 1834. His parents removed to Kentucky when he was five years old. He received a good education, studied law and began to practice his profession in Lancaster in 1797. Elected to Congress in 1803, he served three successive terms until 1807. He was appointed governor of Illinois, then a territory after leaving Congress, but declined to serve, preferring the bench of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Of this court he became chief justice in April, 1819, and retained the place until November 8, 1820, when he was appointed United States District Judge for Kentucky, an office which he held during the remainder of his life.

John Breathitt, governor of Kentucky, born near New London, Virginia, September 9, 1776, died in Frankfort, Kentucky, February 21, 1834. He removed with his father to Kentucky in 1800, was a surveyor and teacher, studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1810. He was an earnest Jacksonian democrat, and for several years was a member of the Legislature. He was lieutenant-governor of Kentucky in 1828-32, and governor in 1832-4.

Henry Biddleman Bascom, Methodist Episcopal bishop, born in Hancock, Delaware County, New York, May 27, 1796, died in Louisville, Kentucky, September 8, 1850. He was descended from a Huguenot family. He had but little education, but before the age of eighteen he was licensed to preach, and admitted to the Ohio conference, where he did hard work on the frontier, preaching in one year 400 times, and receiving a salary of $12.10. His style being too florid to suit the taste of those to whom he preached, he was transferred, in 1816, to Tennessee; but after filling appointments there and in Kentucky, he returned to Ohio in 1822, and in 1823 Henry Clay obtained for him the appointment of chaplain to Congress. At the close of the session of that body he visited Baltimore, where his fervid oratory made a great sensation. He was first president of Madison College, Uniontown, Pa., in 1824, and from 1824 till 1831 was agent of the colonization society. From that time until 1841 he was professor of moral science and belles-lettres at Augusta College, Kentucky. He became president of Transylvania University, Kentucky, in 1842, having previously declined the presidency of two other colleges. Doctor Bascom was a member of the general conference in 1844, which suspended Bishop Scott because he refused to manumit his slaves, and the protest of the southern members against the action of the majority was drawn up by him. In 1845 he was a member of the Louisville convention, which organized the Methodist Church, South, and was the author of its report; and he was chairman of the commission appointed to settle the differences between the two branches of the church. In 1846 he became editor of the “Southern Methodist Quarterly Review,” and in 1849 he was chosen bishop, being ordained in May, 1850, only a few months before his death. Doctor Bascom was a powerful speaker, but was fond of strong expressions. He was also the author of “Sermons from the Pulpit,” “Lectures on Infidelity,” “Methodism and Slavery.” A posthumous edition of his works was edited by Rev. T. N. Ralston (Nashville, Tenn., 1850 and 1856). See “Life of Bishop Bascom,” by Rev. Dr. M. M. Henkle (Nashville, 1854).

Robert Anderson, soldier, born at “Soldier’s Rest,” near Louisville, Kentucky, June 14, 1805, died in Nice, France, October 27, 1871. He graduated at West Point in 1825, and was appointed second lieutenant in the Third Artillery. He served in the Black Hawk war of 1832 as colonel of the Illinois Volunteers. In 1835-37 he was instructor of artillery at West Point, and in 1837-38 he served in the Florida war. He was attached to the staff of General Scott as assistant adjutant general, and was promoted to captain in 1841. He served in the Mexican war, and was severely wounded at Molino del Rey. In 1857 he was appointed major of the First Artillery, and on November 20, 1860, he assumed command of the troops in Charleston harbor, with the rank of captain. He was present at the battle of his home city. On falling to threatened assaults, he withdrew his command on the night of December 29th to Fort Sumter, where he was soon closely invested by the Confederate forces. On April 13, 1861, he evacuated the fort, after a bombardment of nearly thirty-six hours from batteries to which he replied as long as his guns could be worked. He marched out, with his seventy men, with the honor guard, with his flag as it was hauled down, and sailed for New York on the following day. In recognition of his service he was appointed brigadier-general in the United States Army by President Lincoln, and was assigned to the command of the Department of Kentucky, and subsequently to that of the Cumberland. In consequence of failing health, he was relieved from duty in October, 1861. He was retired from active service on January 27, 1862, and on February 3, 1865, he was brevetted major-general. He sailed for Europe in 1869 for his health, but died there. He translated and adapted from the French “Inструкции для Artillery, Horse and Foot” (1840), and “Evolution of Field Batteries” (1860), both of which have been used by the war department. It was largely owing to his personal efforts that the initial steps were taken organizing the Soldiers’ Home in Washington.

Charles A. Wickliffe, politician, born in Bardstown, Kentucky, June 8, 1888, died in Howard County, Maryland, October 31, 1890. He was educated at the Bardstown grammar school, studied law, was admitted to the bar in 1859, and began practice in Bardstown. He soon acquired a wide celebrity. He died while serving as major in the First Kentucky Volunteers. Samuel Caldwell at the battle of the Thames, October 5, 1813, was a member of the state house of Representatives in 1814-15, and sat in Congress from Kentucky in 1823-33, having been chosen as a Henry Clay democrat. He was then elected again to the state Legislature, and was its speaker in 1834. In 1836 he was elected lieutenant-governor of his native state, and in 1839 he became acting governor. In 1841 he was appointed postmaster-general by President Tyler, holding the post till March, 1845, and in the latter year he was sent by President Polk on a secret mission to Texas in the interests of annexation. He was a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1845, a member of the Peace Congress in February, 1861, served again in Congress in 1861-3, having been chosen as a Union Whig, and was a delegate to the Chicago National Democratic Convention in 1846. Mr. Wickliffe was wealthy, and his aristocratic bearing and contempt for the poorer classes won him the name of “the Duke.”

John Clarke Young, educator, born in Green castle, Pennsylvania, August 12, 1803, died in Danville, Kentucky, June 23, 1857. He was the son of an eminent clergyman of the Associate Reformed Church, studied at Columbia for three years, then went to Dickinson College where he was graduated in 1823, spent two years at Princeton Seminary and, while acting as a tutor in Princeton College during the next two years, was licensed to preach by the New York Presbytery on March 7, 1827. He was installed as pastor of a Presbyterian church in Louisville, Kentucky, in 1828, and two years later was chosen president of Centre College, which office he filled until his death, officiating also after 1834 as pastor of a Presbyterian church in Danville. In a controversy with Rev. Samuel Crothers and William Steele he upheld the views of the Kentucky emancipationists and deprecated the aims of the Abolitionists. He received the degree of D. D. from Princeton in 1839, and in 1853 was moderator of the General Assembly. His first wife was a niece of the Rev. Robert J. Ereckinridge, and his second a daughter of John J. Crittenden. His publications include a “Speech Before the Kentucky Colonization Society” (1832), and an “Address to the Presbyterians of Kentucky, Proposing a Plan for the Instruction and Emancipation of Their Slaves,” which he prepared in 1834 for the committee of the Kentucky synod that had passed resolutions in favor of gradual emancipation. Of the address 100,000 copies were circulated. It elicited the strictures of the Ohio Abolitionists to whom Doctor Young replied in a letter entitled “The Doctrine of Immediate Emancipation Unsound,” which first appeared in the newspapers in 1835.

Lunsford Pitts Yandell, physician, born in Dixon Springs, Tennessee, July 4, 1805, died in Louisville, Kentucky, February 4, 1878. He was graduated at the medical department of the University of Maryland in 1825, and in 1826 settled in Murfreesboro, Tennessee. In 1831 he removed to Nashville, Tennessee, where he practiced medicine, and became a leader in the anti-slavery movement. He was professor of chemistry in Transylvania University in 1831, and in 1837 to the same chair in the medical department of the University of Louisville. In 1839 he was transferred to the chair of physiology and pathological anatomy, and in 1859 became professor of the theory and practice of medicine in Memphis Medical College. He held the presidency of the Louisville, Lexington and Kentucky Medical societies, and of the Louisville College of Physicians and Surgeons. For six years he edited the “Transylvania Journal of Medicine” and in 1840-56 the “Western Journal of Medicine and Surgery.” He was the author of a prize essay on “Fever”; a report on “The Medical Sciences” (1849); one on “American Medical Literature” (1873); also one on the same subject before the International Medical Congress held in Philadelphia in 1876, and other medical papers and addresses.

James Morrison, army contractor, born in Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, in 1753, died in Washington, District of Columbia, April 23, 1823. He was the son of an Irish emigrant, and was for six years in the Revolutionary army, doing good service as one of Daniel Morgan’s corps of riflemen. After the war he engaged in business in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and became sheriff. In 1792 he removed to Lexington, Kentucky. There he became successively land-commissioner, representative in the Legislature supervisor of the revenue, navy agent, contractor, for the northwestern army during the War of 1812, quartermaster-general, president of the Lexington branch of the board of trustees of Transylvania University. He acquired great wealth, which he expended in refined hospitality, the judicious patronage of deserving young men, and the encouragement of literature. He was a man of great natural ability and much decision of character, and had made good early deficiencies by extensive reading. He died while he was prosecuting a large claim against the Government in Washington.

RICHARD H. COLLINS was born in Maysville, Kentucky, in 1824. He was a lawyer by profession and successfully practiced at the Cincinnati bar for eleven years, but after that time devoted most of his time to literary and historic pursuits. He was editor of the Maysville Eagle for about ten years and the establisher and publisher of the Danville Review in 1861. His contributions to the newspapers and periodicals of his day have been many, and while yet in the prime of life, he died in 1880 at the home of a daughter in Missouri, with whom he was visiting. He was the author of "Collins' Historical Sketches of Kentucky," published in 1874.

WILLIAM B. ALLEN, author of "A History of Kentucky," published in 1872, was a native Kentuckian, born near Lexington in 1838. He was a lawyer by profession and at one time a member of the Legislature. In 1859, he published the "Kentucky Officers' Guide."

LEWIS COLLINS was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, in 1797, and died at Lexington in 1870. He was editor and proprietor of the Maysville Eagle from 1820 to the publication of his "Historical Sketches of Kentucky," in 1847, a period of nearly thirty years, during which time there appeared in his columns many valuable historic articles. Not the least important of these were reprints of the "Notes on Kentucky," which John Bradford contributed to the Kentucky Gazette. In 1854, he was made judge of the Mason County Court, and held this office until 1854.

JOHN BRADFORD was born in Virginia in 1790, and came to Kentucky in 1799. In 1807 he established the Kentucky Gazette at Lexington, and issued the first number August 11th, on a half sheet of coarse printing paper, 10½ by 17 inches. He died while sheriff of Fayette County, the last of March, 1830.

HORATIO W. BRUCE. An exalted figure in connection with public affairs and the legal profession in the State of Kentucky was that of the late Judge Horatio Washington Bruce, who was born near Vanceburg, Lewis County, Kentucky, on February 22, 1830, and who died in the City of Louisville on the 22nd of January, 1903. His character was moulded on a noble scale; his intellectual attainments were of exceptionally high order; he was a long leading member of the Kentucky bar; he served in public offices of distinguished trust; and his life and labors constitute a lasting and valuable contribution to the state. It is fitting, therefore, that a tribute to his memory be entered in this publication.

Horatio Washington Bruce was a son of Alexander and Amanda (Bragg) Bruce. He received his academic education at private schools in Lewis County, Kentucky, and in Manchester, Ohio. Without the advantages of a college or university course he, nevertheless, mastered not only the elementary English branches, but mathematics, pure and applied, and the French language, chiefly by his unaided efforts—being blessed with strong natural powers of mind and that great zest for learning which made him a student from early boyhood. Such were his legal and other requirements, among them a sufficient knowledge of French to enable him to read it well, that in 1872 he was elected to a professorship in the law department of the University of Louisville, which position he filled creditably for some seven or eight years.

In his sixteenth year Judge Bruce became a salesman in a general store, and he was thus engaged up to 1849. During this period of time he was in charge of the Vanceburg postoffice. During the years 1849-50 he taught school and studied law. He began the practice of law when twenty-one, and, continuing the habit already formed of close and systematic study of principles and practice, he rose to prominence in his profession, becoming one of the foremost lawyers of Kentucky.

Judge Bruce began his professional career in Fleming County, which he represented in the Legislature in 1855-56, and in the latter year he was elected commonwealth attorney for the Tenth Judicial District, but before the expiration of his term of office he resigned and removed to Louisville, in December, 1858. He was reared a Whig, and with that party took part in the presidential election of 1852, by making speeches in favor of Scott and Graham. He acted thereafter with that party until its organization was broken up and most of its members had become identified with the American or Know-Nothing party; then he was with the latter party until after the presidential election of 1860, during which campaign he was a pillar for the Pennsylvania and Everett tickets. In 1861, he became the State Right's candidate for Congress in the Louisville district, but was unsuccessful of election. He was a member of the southern conference at Russellville, Kentucky, October 29-31, 1861. This convention represented the southern sentiment of Kentucky, passed an ordinance of secession, adopted a constitution, and organized a provisional government, under which the state was admitted to the Confederacy. Of the council of ten, having legislative functions, Mr. Bruce was made the member for the Louisville District. At the election held January 22, 1862, he was elected to represent Kentucky in the Confederate Congress, and was re-elected, January 10, 1864. He was prominently identified with the Kentucky representatives of the Confederacy from the first to the last.

At the close of the conflict between the North and the South, Judge Bruce returned to Louisville and resumed the practice of law. In August, 1868, he was elected circuit judge of the Ninth Judicial District. In January, 1873, he was appointed chancellor of the Louisville Chancery Court, to fill a vacancy pending the special election in February following, when he was elected for the unexpired term. In August, 1874, he was re-elected for a full term, but a short time before the expiration of the term (March, 1880), he resigned to accept the attorneyship of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, in which position he continued until his death in 1903, rounding out his notable professional career. He was a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the Kentucky Society of the Sons of the American Revolution.

THOMAS H. HINES was born in Butler County, October 9, 1838. Availing himself of the best schools of the country, he improved his education by private study. Taught in 1859, in Masonic College, Lagrange. Resigned, and entered the Confederate service, September, 1861, as a lieutenant in a company raised at Bowling Green. After Shiloh, he joined Morgan's Cavalry and organized a company, of which he was chosen captain. Such were his qualities that he was sometimes commended, even of a blockade. His daring and skillful adventures in Kentucky, his planning and effecting escape, with Morgan and others, from the Columbus (Ohio) penitentiary, his recapture and escape, are told. After the war he studied law with Gen. John C. Breckinridge, in Canada, completing his studies at Memphis, Tennessee, while editing the Daily Appeal. In 1867 he removed to Bowling Green, and practiced his profession successfully. In 1878, he was elected judge of the Appellate Court from his district. He was delegate from Franklin County in the Constitutional Convention.

Madison C. Johnson was born September 21, 1806. He passed his boyhood in diligent study in the country school and in reading and meditation, three miles from Lexington, on the Harrodsburg Road. He early acquired the faculty of continued and consecutive thought, and of patiently mastering his subject. With this discipline, and a mind of comprehensive, and analytic power, the methods which appeared laborious and slow at first, in time easily placed him in the lead in all studies. At the age of sixteen, he entered Transylvania University, and graduated under Doctor Holly, at the head of a class of thirty-three. He chose the profession of law, and pursued its study under Martin D. Hardin and Robert Wickliffe. He was admitted to the bar in 1825, in the midst of the confusion and an Old and New Court controversy. For sixty years, until his death, December 7, 1886, he may justly be styled the Nestor of the Bar, in a state distinguished for its able attorneys.

Green Clay, born in Powhatan County, Virginia, August 14, 1757, was of an ambitious and enterprising nature. Before he had attained the age of twenty years, he had realized that better opportunities were to be found elsewhere than in his native region, and he removed to Kentucky, where he became a man of great wealth and prominence, having realized the value of land and followed the avocation of surveying. He represented Kentucky interests in the Virginia Legislature; was a delegate in the Kentucky Constitutional Convention of 1799; and was a member of the convention which ratified the Federal Constitution. For many years he was a member of either one or the other branches of the Legislature, and served for a time as speaker of the Senate. When General Harrison was besieged by the British in Fort Meigs in 1813, he went to the assistance with 3,000 volunteers and completely routed the enemy. Having been left in command at this fort, he defended it with ability against the combined attacks of the British under General Proctor, and the Indians under Tecumseh. He retired to his plantation at the conclusion of this war, and devoted his time and attention to its cultivation, passing away to his last rest, October 31, 1825. The famous Henry Clay was a cousin.

George Rogers Clark was born near Monticello, Albemarle County, Virginia, November 19, 1752; son of John and Ann (Rogers) Clark; and grandson of Jonathan and Elizabeth (Wilson) Clark. He practiced surveying and in 1771 or 1772 made a long tour through the upper Ohio Valley and cleared and improved land, in Grave Creek Township, twenty-five miles below Wheeling. In Dunmore's war, Clark was either on Dunmore's staff or in command of a company, and rendered such efficient service that he was offered a position in the British Army, which he declined. In 1775 he was deputy surveyor under Capt. Hancock Lee to lay out lands on the Kentucky River for the Ohio Company, and under the advice of Patrick Henry a letter to the executive Council. He was chosen a member of the Virginia Legislature and after a journey to Williamsburg found that body adjourned. It was necessary for the settlers in Kentucky to be supplied with gunpowder, and Clark obtained from Governor Henry a letter to the Executive Council. They refused to comply with Clark's request unless Clark would be responsible for the value of the powder if the Legislature failed to legalize the transaction. Clark declined to assume any risk, on the ground that if Virginia claimed Kentucky she should protect it. The ammunition was granted and Kentucky was recognized as a part of Virginia. On the assembling of the Legislature Clark was present and succeeded in gaining formal recognition of the Kentucky Country and its organization as a county with the same name and boundaries it now has as a state. In January, 1777, gunpowder was delivered in Kentucky. Clark stopped at Leestown and McClelland's and set about to organize aggressive warfare against the Indians, who had been making serious depredations. He then made a trip through the Ohio Country, and was instructed by Governor Henry to enlist seven companies of soldiers, of fifty men each. With this force he was to attack the British post at Kaskaskia. Early in May, 1778, he departed from Red Stone with only one-third of the troops expected. He stopped at the mouth of the Kentucky River and finally to the falls of the Ohio, and selected Corn Island for his camping ground. His men numbered about 170, and on June 24, 1778, they started for Kaskaskia, arriving there on the evening of July 4. Before daylight they had disarmed the town. Clark sent a part of his force to take possession of the French villages up the Mississippi, Capt. Joseph Bowman succeeding in capturing Prairie du Rocher, Cahokia, and other villages. Meanwhile Clark secured the allegiance of the Indians and their recognition as an important post on the river. At Cahokia he met representatives from several tribes, and secured treaties of peace. On February 5, 1779, the little army left Kaskaskia for Vincennes. For ten days they marched through the waters then overflowing the Wabash River and all its tributaries; Fort Sackville and Vincennes were captured after an arduous and obstinate contest. Clark received a commission from Governor Henry, dated December 14, 1778, promoting him colonel. He contemplated attacking Detroit, but decided it to be impracticable, owing to his scanty force. On June 12, 1779, Virginia presented Colonel Clark with a costly sword in recognition of his service. He returned to the falls of Ohio later in 1779 and found that the garrison had been removed. He accordingly pushed on and constructed a fort in what is now Louisville, Kentucky. Early in 1780 he proceeded to the mouth of the Ohio River and built Fort Jefferson, but owing to sickness and Indian attacks, the fort was abandoned in 1781. In that year he was commissioned brigadier-general and began to recruit troops for an attack on Detroit. This expedition, though a failure, proved an invaluable military movement, for it was not until after Clark's departure, was unsuccessful, and the defeat embittered Clark's after life. On Clark's return to the West he set about organizing the militia. Fort Nelson, on the site of Louisville, was constructed, and early in November, 1782, at the head of 1,000 men, he marched against the Indians on the Miami River and subdued them. In January, 1783, the treaty of peace with Great Britain was ratified by Congress and attention was turned to the vast territory of land acquired through the efforts of General Clark, but Virginia, exhausted by the war, failed sufficiently to provide for his troops, and on June 2, 1783, he was relieved of his command. His financial condition rendered impossible the purchase of food and clothing, and not being able to pay his men, he was compelled to dissolve his army. An appeal was unheeded, and even the half pay allotted to all Continental officers was denied him, as he had been a member of the Virginia Militia and not of the Continental Army. He lived in obscurity until 1785, when he was appointed a commissioner to treat with Indian tribes. In 1786 he again acted as United States commissioner, negotiating a treaty with the Shawnees. Later in the year he commanded a campaign against the Indian tribes on the Wabash, but it proved a failure, and he was unjustly censured by Virginia and Congress. Mortified by his treatment and neglect General Clark accepted a commission from the French government of "major-general in the armies of France and commander-in-chief of the French revolutionary legion on the Mississippi River." He was to lead a force of 2,000 men against New Orleans and the Spanish possession on the lower Mississippi with a view to revolutionizing the Spanish control and government of that region. This plan was never carried out. In 1781 General Clark was granted 8,040 acres of land in Indiana for his services in reducing the British posts.
He resided in Clarksville many years, living alone in a log house, stricken with paralysis, ill, helpless and poor. The General Assembly of Virginia, in a letter written by James Barbour, dated Richmond, October 20, 1798, conveyed to him the intelligence that no body had voted him an annuity of $400, tendered him their earnest sympathy and notified him of the act of the Assembly in causing to be made a sword with appropriate devices, emblematic of his actions, which with the annuity would be duly forwarded to him. On receiving the letter he said: "I am too old and infirm to ever use a sword again, but I am glad that my old mother state has not entirely forgotten me, and I think her for the honor." He died a few years later at the home of his sister, Mrs. Lucy Croghan. In 1869 his remains were removed to Cave Hill Cemetery, Louisville, Kentucky, and his grave marked with a handsome monument. On February 25, 1892, the anniversary of the capture of Fort Sackville, a movement was inaugurated in Indianapolis, Indiana, to raise a suitable statue to his memory, and on February 25, 1895, it was placed on its pedestal in Monument Place, Indianapolis.

John Floyd, born in Jefferson County, April 24, 1783, son of Col. John Floyd, and a descendant of an early Virginia immigrant. He attended Dickinson (Pennsylvania) College, studied medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, was graduated in 1806, and settled in Montgomery County, Virginia. He was appointed a justice of the peace in 1807; major of militia in 1812; surgeon in the Virginia line, 1812, and same year was elected to the House of Delegates; was brigadier-general of militia. In 1817 he was elected to Congress, and as a leader in the House wielded a potent influence.
He opposed the administration of John Quincy Adams, and aided largely in the election of Jackson. He introduced the first bill for the occupation and settlement of Oregon. He became governor, March 4, 1830, and re-elected in 1834. During his governorship he severely condemned President Jackson for his proclamation against South Carolina, and took ground against military coercion, but he did not believe in the discipline of nullification. South Carolina gave him her vote for the presidency in 1832. While he was serving as governor, occurred Nat Turner's slave insurrection in Southampton County, and the trial and execution of the leader, Nat Turner. He was in poor health for some time previous to the expiration of his term, and he died from paralysis, August 15, 1837, at Sweet Springs, Montgomery County.

Benjamin Winslow Dudley was born in Spotsylvania County, Virginia, April 12, 1785, son of Rev.
Ambrose Dudley. His father removed to Lexington, Kentucky, in 1783, and the son obtained his early education here. He studied medicine with Dr. Frederick Ridgely, of Lexington, and afterward attended lectures at the University of Pennsylvania, graduating in 1806. He opened an office in Lexington, but had little practice. Desiring to better qualify himself for his work, but lacking the means, he purchased a flatboat, which he loaded with produce and floated to New Orleans, where he invested the proceeds in flour. This was to give him a practical and some experience of it at a large advance. From Spain he went to Paris, and there studied under Paul A. Dubois. After three years there he went to London and studied surgery under Abernethy and Sir Astley Cooper. He returned home in 1814, and found Lexington in the midst of an epidemic of typhoid pneumonia, which was followed by bilious fever. Abcesses formed among the muscles and in many cases amputation was needed.
Doctor Dudley applied bandages and his success in these cases led him to urge the general use of the bandage until this treatment was widely adopted. In 1817 a medical school was added to the Transylvania University, and he was elected to the chairs of anatomy and surgery. Doctor Dudley condemned bloodletting, taking advanced ground in the matter. His skill with the knife was so soon renowned that nation-wide repuation and his success in lithotomy was so great that in England he was declared to be the "lithotomist of the nineteenth century." He operated for stone in the bladder 225 times and lost only six patients. Believing that Asian cholera was a water-borne disease, during the first great epidemic in this country (1832) he and his family drank cistern instead of well water, and were the only ones in Lexington to escape the disease. He contributed valuable essays to the "Transylvania Journal of Medicine." He was married, in 1821, to a daughter of Maj. Peyton Short. He died in Lexington, Kentucky, June 20, 1870.

Richard Henderson, born in Hanover County, Virginia, in 1734. His parents were poor and unable to give him an education, and he could neither read nor write; but he studied the law, and was admitted to the bar in 1759. In 1770 public feeling ran high on account of the excessive taxation enforced under Governor Tryon and a mob assailed him in the court room and forced him from the bench. After the Revolutionary war, and when order was restored, Henderson was re-elected judge, but would not qualify, having formed the Transylvania Lumber Company, for the purpose of acquiring large tracts of the public domain.
In effecting this purpose he negotiated "the Watoga Treaty" with the chiefs of the Cherokee Indians, by which the company came into possession of all the lands lying between the Cumberland River, the Cumberland Mountains and the Kentucky River—a territory larger than the present state of Kentucky—and was named Transylvania, with Boonesborough as its capital. Among the members of the company were Daniel Boone, Richard Calloway, John Floyd, James Harrod and Thomas Slaughter, and they formed a most comprehensive and equitable system of government.
However, Henderson's purchase was subsequently annulled by Virginia, as an infringement of her charted rights;
but, to compensate the settlers, the Legislature granted to them a tract of twelve miles square on the Ohio River, below the mouth of Greene River. In 1779 Judge Henderson and four others were appointed commissioners to run the boundary line between Virginia and North Carolina, into Powell's Valley. He now removed to Tennessee, and engaged in law practice in Nashville.
In 1780 he returned to North Carolina, and settled down upon his farm near Watoga. In 1785 he was removed to the new county of Davidson, January 30, 1785. A son, Archibald, became a distinguished lawyer in North Carolina, and a member of Congress from that state; another son, Leonard, became chief justice of North Carolina.

George Nicholas, born in Hanover, Virginia, about 1725, son of Robert Carter Nicholas, lawyer, jurist and statesman, and grandson of Dr. George Nicholas, who immigrated to Virginia in 1660, and graduated from William and Mary College. He was a major of the Second Virginia Regiment in 1777, later colonel, promoted for meritorious service. He was a member of the Virginia convention that ratified the Federal Constitution, was active in the convention, and as a member of the Virginia House of Assembly was influential in shaping legislation. In 1790 he moved to Kentucky, and was a member of the convention that met in Danville in 1792, to frame a state constitution. The constitution as adopted was largely his work. He was the first attorney-general elected under its provisions. He died in Kentucky in 1799.

James Harrod, born in Virginia in 1745; reared and educated in his native state, immigrated to Kentucky in 1774, and built the first log cabin on the present site of Harrodsburg; he was a successful agriculturist, an expert with the rifle, and a brave and intrepid soldier ranking as one of the leaders in military affairs, distinguishing himself at the battle of Point Pleasant in 1774; subsequently he represented Harrodsburg (which was named in his honor) in the Transylvania legislature. He was in the habit of making solitary excursions into the forest, and from one of these trips, which was undertaken about the year 1825, when he was about eighty years of age, he never returned, nor was any trace of him ever discovered.

Daniel Doup was born in Hagerstown, Maryland, December 25, 1796. He served under Jackson in the War of 1812. His reminiscences of that war were the delight of our childhood. The description of the fortifications of cotton bales at New Orleans, the unique order not to fire until they could see the eyes of the British, the account of the overwhelming victory, thrilled us beyond expression.

Daniel Doup came to Kentucky about 1817, and was married in 1818 to Lydia Doup, daughter of Col. George Doup. George Doup was the uncle of Daniel Doup, and had gone from Maryland to Kentucky some years previously, settling at Brunnerstown (near Jeffersontown). In the early years of his married life Daniel Doup lived near New Albany, Indiana, on a farm, but about 1820, or perhaps a little later, returned to Kentucky, purchased the tract now known as Strathmore, and lived there until the close of life, in 1872. He was a man of sterling integrity, unflagging energy and keen intellect. He was recognized as authority in matters of business, politics or finance. His system of gardening produced the very best results. His crops of Irish and sweet potatoes were always carried off as the prizes by the northern buyers.

Daniel Doup owned quite a number of slaves who yielded him both respect and confidence. A little incident which happened about three years after the close of the Civil war will give an idea of the relations between this master and his enslaved slaves. It was the annual "hog killing" season on the Doup Farm. Long rows of fat hams, shoulders, spare ribs, back-hones and sausage lay in salt under the shed. Uncle Charles and a companion seeing a chance for some "easy money" each took a sackful of the juicy meat, and under cover of darkness walked to "town." When offering their goods for sale they were arrested and locked up. Charles got a message to go early in the morning for Mars. Daniel, who came immediately, paid the fine and took the culprits, who had stolen his meat, home and told them to go to work and behave themselves. He never sold a slave and never separated families. Some of the faithful ones were set free years before the general emancipation and given a tract of land with cabin thereon.

He had an accident in middle life which caused him near being fatal. He had sent a man down into a well to clean it out. When the man called up the gas was quite strong. Daniel Doup told him to come up immediately, and that he himself would go down, feeling that he could overcome the gas and expose another. On the way down he fell, overcame by the gas, and was drawn out in an insensible condition, with badly injured spine. He recovered sufficiently to walk again short distances, but had to be driven over the farm and neighborhood, and the tall commanding figure was sadly bent and enfeebled.

He was a warm personal friend of Abraham Lincoln and corresponded for years with him.

Daniel and Lydia Doup had two children; Eleanor, who died in childhood; and Emmeline, who married John Edward Douch, of Jefferson County, Kentucky.

Daniel Doup was also reputed to be the wealthiest man in Jefferson County.

James Lewis. While his Woodford County farm two miles south of Versailles has been the residence of Mr. James Lewis and the scene of his prosperous activities for only a few years, he represents one of the families of the county who long have been leaders in the community. His entire life has been spent there, and he occupies the old Lewis homestead of 211 acres. James Lewis grew up on that farm and lived there for a year after his marriage. At twenty-one he married Sally Bond, daughter of John and Phoebe (Utterback) Bond, now living on their farm in Anderson County. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis have four children: Linza, Verna May, James Bond and J. Hunter.

The farm Mr. Lewis bought, he acquired in 1830, and was the old Robert McConnell farm. It comprises 360 acres, and he had lived on it and operated it for five years before the purchase. He handles it as a stock and grain proposition, and is one of the live leaders in the agricultural affairs of Woodford County. In 1921 he became democratic candidate for sheriff. Mr. Lewis is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias.

Jesse T. Bryant. Among other interests of large importance that make Hart County a notable section of the State of Kentucky agriculture occupies a leading position, and its scientific farmers and stockraisers are among the most intelligent and substantial of its citizens. A prominent and representative farmer of Hart County, a public spirited and patriotic citizen as well, is found in Jesse T. Bryant, cashier of the Hardyville Deposit Bank, of Hardyville, Kentucky.

Jesse T. Bryant was born at Hardyville, Hart County, Kentucky, May 11, 1874. His parents were Langston P. and Virginia (Harrison) Bryant, both natives of Kentucky and now deceased. Langston P. Bryant was born in Cumberland County, in 1824, and died at Hardyville in Hart County in 1902. His father, Jesse Bryant, was born in Virginia, and from there as a pioneer to Cumberland County, Kentucky, where he spent the remainder of his life. He married Miss Pace, a member of an old and representative family of Cumberland County.

Langston P. Bryant was reared on his father's farm in Cumberland County. In 1801, when war between the states was precipitated, he enlisted in the Union Army and served two years as a member of the Twenty-First Kentucky Volunteer Infantry during that time, taking part in the battle of Murfreesboro, Tennessee, and in other engagements. After the war was over he came to Hart County, and was an extensive and successful farmer near Hardyville up to the time of his death. He was a man of standing in the community, a member of the Masonic fraternity, and an ardent republican, and he died in Monroe County, Kentucky, Virginia Harrison, who was born there in 1831, died at Hardyville in 1907. She was a lady of many accomplishments and educational acquirements, and prior to her marriage had taught school in Monroe County. Among her schoolmates in girlhood was Preston H. Leslie, who later became governor of Kentucky, and subsequently among her own pupils were A. L. Peterman, the distinguished educator and author, and likewise Benton McMillan, for many years a notable member of the United States Congress from Tennessee.

Five children were born to Langston P. Bryant and his wife, Jesse T., being the fourth in order of birth. The others being: James B., who is connected with the Louisville Herald, lives at Nashville, Tennessee, at present, but is an inveterate traveler and has seen a large part of the habitable globe; Ethel, who is the wife of A. G. Compton, station agent at Kansas City, Missouri, who was married first to Will Edwards, who at the time of his death was clerk of the Chancery Court at Louisville; John M., who is a farmer, lives at Hopkinsville, Kentucky; and Evie, who is a trained nurse.

Jesse T. Bryant was reared on the home farm and had excellent school privileges at Hardyville. He assisted his father until the latter's death in 1902, when he took over the operation of the farm, which he now owns. Bryant had a magnificent property situated on the Jackson Highway, half a mile south of Hardyville, and comprises 210 acres. Mr. Bryant engages in general farming and raises thoroughbred cattle and Duroc hogs, his farm industries being carried on according to modern methods and with the assistance of the best improved machinery. He resides on this farm in a handsome modern residence, and has spared neither trouble nor expense in making the surroundings appropriate and comfortable. He owns a second farm, situated about three and one-half miles north by west from Hardyville, on all his land being improved with substantial buildings.

In addition to his agricultural, Mr. Bryant has other important interests. In 1902, when the Hardyville Deposit Bank was established, he entered the institution as assistant cashier, and in 1903 was elected cashier, in which office he has continued. The officers of the bank are as follows: Ernest Burks, president; Robert Dunagin, vice-president; Jesse T. Bryant, cashier; C. S. Rhea and Miss Minnie Carter, assistant cashiers. This financial institution is a state bank capitalized at $150,000; surplus and profits, $11,000; deposits, $150,000.

During the World War Mr. Bryant took a very active part in all local activities and devoted much time and effort to selling Liberty Bonds and promoting Red Cross work. He was lavish in his purchases of bonds and Savings Stamps, and contributed to all the patriotic movements to the extent of his means. He was never alone in this patriotic work, for others over this broad and loyal land were doing the same, but it may be questioned if any other individual more definitely or patriotically proved the genuineness of his public spirit in this connection after the war was over. At its close Mr. Bryant, with the largest measure of generosity, contributed all his bonds and War Savings Stamps toward paying for the erection of a $50,000 new school building, to be a memorial to the Hart County soldiers in the great war. It is a splendid building, one of the finest in the state, of modern brick construction and situated half way between Hardyville and Cammer, Kentucky, easily available to both places. In furthering this enterprise Mr. Bryant not only demonstrated the sincerity of his patriotism but exhibited the practical qualities which have made him an admirable business man and useful citizen.

In December, 1899, at Bowling Green, Kentucky, Mr. Bryant married Miss Maggie Gallavon, whose parents were Patrick and Julia (Locke) Gallavon, both of whom are deceased. For an extended period Mr. Gallavon was watchman for the Green River Railroad between Murfreesboro, Kentucky, and Hardyville, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Bryant have the following children: Gilliam Ann, born April 13, 1902, is a student in the State University, Lexington, Kentucky; Harry G., born June 24, 1903, is a student in the Western State Normal School at Bowling Green; James Maxey, born June 23, 1905, is a student in the Memorial Consolidated School, mentioned above; and Richard B., born in 1907; Jesse T., Jr., born in 1909; Langston Patrick, born in 1913, all three attending the Memorial Consolidated School at Hardyville; and Charles H., born in 1917.

In political affiliation Mr. Bryant is a republican, retaining for himself, however, the privilege of voting independently when his own excellent judgment so directs. For a long time he has been a somewhat important factor in official life in Hart County, having served for twenty-four consecutive years as deputy county clerk. For a number of years he has been a member of the School Board at Hardyville, and for almost a quarter of a century has been a notary public. As indicative of his sterling character it may be mentioned that he was but twenty-one years old when he was made a Mason and has held an office in the lodge every year since. He belongs to Rio Verde Lodge No. 598, F. and A. M., at Hardyville, of which he is a past master, and for the past ten years has been treasurer. Hart County can name few citizens who are held as more trustworthy or have a wider circle of personal as well as business friends.

Bernard Gratzer was a particularly lovable and big-hearted Kentucky gentleman of the finest of social and family connections, and while he never married and died more than thirty years ago any tribute that might be paid his memory would be read with appreciation by the many friends who recall his life and deeds. The old homestead where he lived most of his life is known as "Canewood" located on the Frankfort Pike fifteen miles west of Lexington in Woodford County. It is now the home of his nephew, Benjamin Gratzer Crosby. This estate has been in the Gratzer family since 1840. The house itself is a rambling structure, made up of a series of large rooms and dates back for fully a century.

Benjamin Gratzer, father of Bernard Gratzer was born at Philadelphia, September 4, 1792. He graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1811, enlisted in 1813 and until the close of the War of 1812 was in active service with the rank of second lieutenant. He was admitted to the bar in 1817 and soon afterward came west to prosecute the claims for the Illinois & Wabash Land Company. The winter of 1818 he spent at Vincennes, Indiana, and the following year he came to Lexington. At Lexington he married Maria Gist, of the historic Gist family. Her brother, Revolutionary character Col. Nathaniel Gist, who at the time of the marriage of his daughter was living in that portion of old Bourbon County which subsequently became Clark County. After the death of his first wife he married Anna Boswell Shelby of Lexington. Benjamin Gratzer became a partner with Col. James Morrison in hemp manufacture at Lexington, and after the death of Colonel Morrison in 1825 continued the business with John Bruce, who died in 1836, and his personal enterprise was responsible for continuing the business on a large scale for twenty-five years more. He practically retired from business in 1861, though his influence in the affairs of his section of the state continued for many years thereafter.

He was a stanch Union man. He was a whig opposed to secession and afterwards a conservative democrat. He was the oldest trustee of Transylvania University, and was one of the committee to raise funds to move Kentucky University from Harrodsburg to Lexington. He also helped establish the Lexington Library, was first president of the Agricultural & Mechanical Association, and in 1829 was instrumental in securing the construction of a stone road from Lexington to the Ohio River, the first modern highway in the state. In 1830 he was one of the incorporators of the Lexington & Ohio Railroad, and its second president. He was a member of the first city council of Lexington in 1832, and in 1834 became one of the first directors of the Bank of Kentucky, and also a director of the Northern Bank of Kentucky at its founding in 1835. He was on the committee of arrangement for the funeral of Henry Clay in 1852, and joined the Clay Monument Association in 1857. He became one of the first members of the Fayette Historical Society in 1870. During 1866-69 he was a United States revenue inspector. His sight failed him in 1876, but even after that he retained the use of the Lexington United States Bank.

The full Christian name of the late Bernard Gratz was Michael Bernard Gratz, who was born in 1822 and died in 1889, spending most of his life at "Cane-wood." Originally this farm comprised 180 acres, being part of the old Alexander estate, but Bernard Gratz had increased the acreage to over 1000 when he died. He became a noted thoroughbred horseman as well as a general farmer, and his success in business enabled him to express in practical manner the warm-hearted interest and consideration he always felt for the welfare of others. He had friends both among the rich and poor and there were none too poor or destitute to escape his care and thoughtfulness.

The foundation and start of his career as a thoroughbred horseman was given him by his aunt, formerly Miss Gust, the wife of Frank Blair, a Washington editor. She gave him a fine mare, but in later years his stables produced many great horses. He was breeder of Virgil, a noted stallion, the sire of Hindoo; of Checkmate, a famous racer; Phil Lee; Prodigal, which entered the Futurity as a two-year old; and Silent Friend. He owned his racing stables, but his horses were raced under another name. He was best known as a breeder, and some of his choicest stock was sold as yearlings.

Bernard Gratz was interested in everything affecting the community, yet was a man of retiring disposition. He also had a military record, being an officer on General Buell's staff in the Union army. He rode, starting at sun-up and arriving before dark, the 110 miles form Big Hill to Louisville on his thoroughbred. Old Mike to notify the Federals of the advance of the Confederates in their effort to capture Louisville, and succeeded in rallying sufficient support to repel that invasion. He was once asked to go into Woodford County and requisition horses from Confederate sympathizers. His reply was characteristic: "I'll take the horses of Bernard Gratz but will not take those of my old friends, even if they are Confederate sympathizers.

Benjamin G. Crosby, a nephew of Bernard Gratz, and his family now live in his uncle's old home. Mr. Crosby married Eliza Pitman of Kirkwood, Missouri. Her father's family had moved from Virginia to Kentucky, and early in the nineteenth century went to Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Crosby have two sons: John Peirce and Benjamin Gratz Crosby, Jr.

James R. Sidle. Worshipful Master of Craycraft Lodge No. 652, F. & A. M., and one of the leading farmers of Nicholas County, is living on his farm in Nicholas County, which is located twelve miles west of Carlisle, Kentucky. He was born in Nicholas County, October 15, 1866, a son of George W. and Elizabeth (Smith) Sidle. George W. Sidle was born in Nicholas County, but his wife was born in Harrison County. After their marriage they located in Nicholas County, where they spent the remainder of their useful and upright lives. He was a zealous Mason, a fine man and strong republican. There were five children born to the marriage of George W. Sidle and his wife, namely: James R., who was the eldest; Luticia, who is the wife of Milton Smith; Cora, who is deceased; an unnamed infant; and John H., who is a farmer of Nicholas County.

Growing up on the homestead James R. Sidle learned farming under his father's instruction and attended the common schools of his home district. After his marriage he bought the home farm of sixty-six acres to which he has since added until he now has 187 acres of very valuable land, and on it he is carrying on farming with satisfactory results.

On December 20, 1867, Mr. Sidle was married to Serrella Friman, who was born in Nicholas County, Kentucky, and was a daughter of Henry Friman. They have three children: Lizzie G., who is the wife of Frazier Platt, lives in Nicholas County; and Edgar C. and Howard, both of whom are at home. Both Mr. and Mrs. Sidle belong to the Christian Church. Well known in Masonry Mr. Sidle belongs to Craycraft Lodge No. 652, F. & A. M., and Nicholas Chapter Number 41, R. A. M. He is the present Worshipful Master of the Blue Lodge. While he votes the republican ticket, he has never gone into politics very actively, but he is deeply interested in the success of his party and the development of his home county, and ready and anxious to do everything to bring about any improvement of existing conditions. A first class farmer and citizen, Mr. Sidle measures up to high standards and is one of the most highly respected men in this part of the state.

Edward L. Gambill, doctor of dental surgery, enjoys an extensive professional practice in the community in which he was born and reared, Jackson, Breathitt County, Kentucky. He was born on a farm near Jackson, and is a son of William E. and Katherine (Little) Gambill. Both the Gambill and Little families have been identified with Eastern counties for generations. His paternal grandfather was William Gambill who married Elizabeth Alexander of North Carolina, his native state. They left there when quite young, and settled in Eastern Kentucky when this section was largely an unsettled wilderness.

His maternal grandparents were John and Jennie (Strong) Little, who were born and reared in Breathitt County. His father William E. Gambill was a Union soldier in the Civil war, and was a member of the Fourteenth Kentucky State Guards, better known as the "Three Forks Battalion." His life has been spent as a farmer near Jackson where he and his wife now live, he being seventy-six years of age and she being seventy-three. He is a member of the Masonic Order at Jackson, Kentucky, and is a republican, always having taken a leading part in the politics of Breathitt County.

The youngest of six living children, Edward L. Gambill, while a boy attended the public schools, later Lee's Collegiate Institute at Jackson, Berea College, at Berea, and the Eastern Kentucky State Normal School at Richmond. He taught in the public school three years. In 1910 he passed a civil service examination at Lexington, Kentucky, and was appointed to a position in the Department of Commerce, Washington, District of Columbia. Later he held a position in the Bureau of Rolls and Library State Department. After leaving the Government service he graduated from the Dental department of Georgetown University, Washington, District of Columbia, in June, 1914. He passed the District of Columbia Board of Dental Examiners and was licensed to practice dentistry in the District of Columbia and also passed the Kentucky State Board examinations the same year and soon began his professional work at Jackson where he has built up the largest dental practices in Eastern Kentucky. He is a member of the Kentucky State Dental Association and keeps in touch with the latest progress in dental technique and science.

On July 15, 1918, he entered the United States Military service and was located at Camp Meade, Maryland, where he served till the armistice was signed. While there he contracted influenza and spent several weeks in the hospital. He was discharged from the army December 21, 1918. He is for years holding an appointment in the United States Veterans Bureau as dental examiner in this locality, rendering treatment to ex-service men who are beneficiaries of war risk insurance.

He is a member of the local Order of Knights of Pythias, being chancellor commander, and the Psi Omega Dental Fraternity, Junior Order United American Mechanics, and the Masonic Lodge. He is one of the directors of the Hargis Commercial Bank and Trust Company and a member of the Brethren Church.

Drew Burchett Adams. To bear so old and honorable an American name as that of Adams confers distinction, and to be able to trace the ancestral line back to 1634, when the hardy pioneer of the family reached these shores, and to find in that ancestral line not only worthy forefathers in the quieter walks of life, but two great presidents of the United States, many statesmen and great diplomats whose achievements have gone far to make this beloved country what it is today, justifies a large measure of family pride. Obviously, however, in the case of Drew Burchett Adams, for four years past the able county clerk of Lawrence County, no such background is needed although true, for Mr. Adams is his own person is recognized as a young man of sterling character who is entirely deserving of the respect and confidence with which he is regarded.

Drew Burchett Adams was born on his father's farm near Cherokee, in Lawrence County, Kentucky, May 20, 1889, and is a son of Felix and America (Young) Adams, both of whom were born in Kentucky, of parents born in Virginia, who settled early near Cherokee in Lawrence County. The maternal grandfather of Mr. Adams survived until 1901. His father has been a substantial farmer and stock raiser. Mr. Adams attended the public schools at Cherokee and Blaine, and also a private school, after which he became a student in the Kentucky Normal School at Louisa, where he completed an academic course in preparation for teaching and afterward, for ten years, taught country schools in Lawrence County. In 1915 he completed a commercial course and after that taught school one more year.

In this profession Mr. Adams was very successful and, coming into contact with a large number of his fellow citizens, became exceedingly well known and universally popular, and to such an extent that in November, 1917, they elected him county clerk for a term of four years. In accepting the office Mr. Adams assured his political friends that he would not serve more than one term, thereby preventing them from re-electing him according to their wishes, as he has the honor and the duty of keeping and efficiently that the tax payers regret changing clerks. On retiring from public office, Mr. Adams proposes to become a merchant, being part owner of one of the leading business houses at Louisa, which is conducted under the firm name of Adams & Berry, and in this relation will continue to be one of the substantial and dependable men of Lawrence County.

In 1918 Mr. Adams was married to Miss Earlie Thompson, a daughter of Lindsay and Lucy Jane (Adams) Thompson, farming people and natives of Kentucky. They have one daughter, Margery Elizabeth. Mrs. Adams is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, while Mr. Adams was brought up in the Baptist faith, but irrespective of creeds, he sincerely believes in the beneficial influence of all religious bodies and is generous in his support. Politically he is a Republican and takes an active interest in public affairs. Fraternally he is a member of the Order of Red Men and the Order of Odd Fellows, and belongs also to the auxiliary, the Order of Rebekah.

Harry Taylor Gilbert is a progressive young business leader at Hazard, member of the firm A. B. Gilbert & Company, general insurance, and has been favorably identified with the citizenship of Perry County since 1918.

Mr. Gilbert is a native Kentuckian and represents one of the state's old and prominent families. His father, grandfather, and great-grandfather were all Baptist ministers, though following other occupations as well. The great-grandfather was a native of Virginia and one of the early settlers of Clay County, Kentucky. The grandfather was a surveyor and acquired extensive land holdings in Clay and Leslie counties, and surveyed many of the permanent lines through Eastern Kentucky. He died when well past the century mark.

Rev. Taylor Joseph Gilbert, father of the Hazard business man, was a native of Clay County, and did his first work as a minister of the Baptist Church in that county and subsequently carried the Gospel to many remote sections of Eastern Kentucky. In January, 1902, he moved to Oklahoma, and died there in March of the same year. He married Polly Maggard, who is now living at Mangum, Greer County, Oklahoma. More of the family history will be found in articles elsewhere in this publication. The children were: James M., a leading attorney and banker at Pineville, Bell County; Mitte, deceased wife of E. M. Caudill; A. B. Gilbert, senior member of A. B. Gilbert & Company, with headquarters at Pineville; Lettie, wife of George Stone of Mangum, Oklahoma; Harry T.; Thomas Joseph, a coal operator at Knoxville, Tennessee; and Mary, of Mangum, Oklahoma, widow of Ben Parker.

Harry Taylor Gilbert was born at Benge, Clay County, March 16, 1889, and attended the district schools there until he went with his parents to Oklahoma in 1902. He continued his education in that territory and also did some farming there. He returned to Kentucky, for four years was on the road as a traveling salesman, and then became associated with his brother in the insurance business. In 1918 he established the Hazard office of A. B. Gilbert & Company, and has since developed this as the leading general insurance agency of Perry County, representing some of the old-line companies and offering a service in all branches of insurance.

Mr. Gilbert married Miss Nola Maude Gattiff, daughter of John Gattiff of Williamsburg, Clay County. They have two children, Florence Pauline and Marjorie. Mr. Gilbert is affiliated with Hazard Lodge No. 676, Free and Accepted Masons, Richmond Chapter No. 16, Royal Arch Masons, Webb Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar, and O'elka Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Lexington. He is a member of the Elks at Middleburg, is a Baptist and democrat, and Mrs. Gilbert is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

William Pryor Thorne. One of the oldest members of the Kentucky bar is William Pryor Thorne of Eminence, who was admitted to the bar about the time the Civil war closed, and whose home and professional interests have always been central at Eminence, though his fame as a lawyer is at least state wide. He has enjoyed many notable honors and responsibilities in the public affairs of his home state.
He was born March 5, 1845, at a farm in the northern part of Shelby County midway between Shelbyville and Eminence. His grandparents were John and Elizabeth (Kimberlan) Thorne, people of Scotch-Irish ancestry who lived at Thornleigh between Manchester and London, England. Leaving there they came to America and settled in Virginia and considerably more than a century ago came to Kentucky and located in Shelby County. The first deed for land in Kentucky was signed by Patrick Henry of Virginia. John Thorne assisted building the pioneer log cabin which is known as Lynch's Station and his old farm was near Bullskin Creek. That old home with so many associations for the family was subsequently acquired and carefully preserved by William P. Thorne. Three of John Thorne's nephews and three nieces were killed by the Indians in the vicinity of Clear Creek. Not far away on the same creek is the place known as Thorne's Hole, used as the baptismal place of the Burkes Branch of the Baptist Church for several generations. In the same vicinity is the old Colonel Todd home. John Thorne was buried on his farm and the burial place was subsequently preserved at the sale of the property by the grandson William P. Thorne. John Thorne the pioneer had two sons, William Kimberlan and Andrew Jackson. The latter was born in Franklin County. There were five daughters, the only one remaining in Kentucky being Nancy who became the wife of Wallace Morrison, brother of "Horizontal Bill" Morrison, a distinguished Illinois congressman.

William Kimberlan Thorne was born in Shelby County but spent his active years on his farm a mile west of Eminence in Henry County. He died in 1880 at the age of seventy-one. He married Mary Moody, who was born in Henry County and survived her husband six years, reaching the same age. They were the parents of three sons. The oldest A. J. Thorne was for four years a Confederate soldier, an officer in Morgan's command and died soon after the war. Another son, Shelby Todd remained at the old homestead and occupied the residence built by William K. Thorne during the 1830s.

William Pryor Thorne was raised on a farm as his early environment, but at an early age determined to follow the profession of the law. He was sixteen when the war broke out and he came to manhood and prepared for his profession while the country was involved in the great civil strife. He attended Eminence College under President W. S. Gilmer and studied law with two distinguished lawyers, Judge Pryor and Judge George C. Drane. He was not yet twenty-one when he was admitted to the bar and he opened his first office at Eminence and has been satisfied to allow his ripe achievements as a lawyer to be credited to that town of Henry County. His home is known as Thornleigh in honor of the ancestral home of his grandparents in England. Judge Thorne has practiced in all the courts and has lawyers in the state have had a more varied and important clientele during the past half century. He enjoys the distinction of earning and collecting the largest cash fee of over $50,000 in one case of any lawyer in Henry County. His knowledge as a lawyer, his ability as a pleader and speaker, and his long habit of thoughtful study of current issues in politics have enabled him to discharge many responsibilities of a public nature though he was never perhaps very actively a candidate for office.

He is a democrat, and was prosecuting attorney of his county for four years, democratic elector of his state, delegate to the national convention and four times he has represented his county in the Lower House of the Legislature. While in the Legislature he was a author of the Thorne Tobacco Bill, the Thorne Whiskey Bill and a law compelling railroads to fence their right-of-way. In 1903 he was elected lieutenant governor leading the democratic ticket and served the four years with Governor Beckham. He presided over the Senate through two regular and two special sessions, and had the unique honor of not a single appeal being taken from one of his parliamentary decisions. He was state delegate to notify William J. Bryan of his nomination. Mr. Thorne has also been interested in banking at Eminence, and has been affiliated with the Masonic Order and the Elks.

March 27, 1866, he married Miss Anna Dickerson who was born in Kenton County, Kentucky, daughter of R. A. Dickerson and sister of former Congressman W. W. Dickerson and R. T. Dickerson, president, Bank of Williamstown, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Thorne became the parents of three children. Agnes P. became the wife of Lindsay T. Crabbs of Louisville. Bernice is the wife of James E. Waugh of Christian County, Kentucky. The only son, William Pryor Thorne, Jr., was educated as a lawyer but most of his life has been taken up with business affairs and politics. He was at one time connected with the American Tobacco Company, and later with a coal and lumber company in California. He was sergeant at arms of Kentucky House of Representatives and clerk of the State Board Equalization, was appointed by President Woodrow Wilson postmaster of San Luis Obispo, California, holding this for four years, and is now in an important position with the Southern Pacific Railroad in California.

James Rice Bond, the leading general merchant at Nonesuch, has been actively identified and well known in this locality of Woodford County for a quarter of a century or more. He came to Woodford from Anderson County, where he was born March 25, 1869, son of Judge P. R. Bond, and Mary Frances (Rice) Bond. His grandfather, James Bond, was also a resident of Anderson County, of Virginia stock. David W. Bond was born in 1828 and died in 1895. His life was chiefly spent as a farmer, but during the war between the states he was in Company G of the Sixth Kentucky Infantry, the Orphans Brigade, and gave four years of his early manhood to fighting the cause of the Confederacy. The wife of David W. Bond, Mary Frances Rice, was born in 1833 and died in 1892. She was born in Shelby County, her grandfather having moved from Boyle to Shelby County while her own father, James Rice, moved from Shelby to Anderson County when she was twelve years old.

James Rice Bond lived in Anderson County until he was nineteen, and while there attended common schools and took the courses taught at Mount Edwards and for seven terms taught in the Nonesuch School. His connection with educational affairs at Nonesuch continued until 1896, though in 1894 he had bought out H. D. Wilson, the business partner of his cousin Bolivar Bond. He continued to be associated with Bolivar Bond in business until 1908 when their stock of goods was closed out at auction. In the meantime, from 1897 to 1908, Mr. Bond had an interesting experience in the Canadian Northwest as a topographer with the Canadian Pacific Railroad during the laying out and construction of new lines. While he was in the Northwest his partner had charge of the store. In 1908 Mr. Bond opened a new store at Nonesuch, and for the past thirteen years has been busily engaged in merchandising and farming. In 1921 he became county judge for sheriff of Woodford County. He is a democrat, a Knight Templar Mason and a member of the Presbyterian Church. In 1900 he married Miss Josephine Redman. They have one son, Lewis C., born in 1901, and now a student in Center College at Danville.

Hon. John C. Eversoles, circuit judge of the district composed of Leslie, Owosley and Perry counties, is a worthy representative of the dignity and greatness of the state in the domain of the law, which he has honored for thirty years. He is a native Kentuckian, has ing been born on the Kentucky River, just opposite the present location of the town of Chavies, in Perry County, January 27, 1865, a son of Maj. John C. and Nancy Ann (Duff) Eversole.

Judge Eversole belongs to an old and honored family, the first members of which in America, Christopher Ebersole (as then spelled) and his wife, were probably from Holland. They came, however, from near Berlin, Germany, in about 1755 to America and settled in Pennsylvania. A son, Jacob Ebersole, married Mary Kesley and went to North Carolina, where he had brothers and sisters, and where the old records show that the members of the colony made cloth out of cotton and flax. The Ebersoles returned to Pennsylvania, whence some of them migrated to Ohio, but Jacob, who was a Baptist preacher and not well-to-do in this world's goods, came to Kentucky and settled on land on the Kentucky River, near Grapevine Creek, in the following year. Henry C., formerly in the possession of the Eversole family, Jacob, who could not speak English plainly, lost his congregation, but the family later organized the old Grapevine Baptist Church, where Jacob preached for many years. He and his wife had five sons: John, Abraham, Peter, Worley and Joseph, all farmers on the Kentucky River, Abraham also being a preacher of the Baptist faith.

Worley Eversole, the grandfather of Judge Eversole, from his father he had learned to speak the German language, and as he also had a German teacher he became proficient in reading and writing in German. Maj. John C. Eversole, the father of Judge Eversole, with his brother Joseph as a partner, was engaged in merchandising and stock trading and in dealing in numerous commodities, their store being at the present site of Chavies in Perry County. Later he assisted in recruiting the Fourteenth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, which Col. H. C. Lilley commanded, and was made major. While on a furlough and a visit to his home May 2, 1864, he met his death at the hands of guerrillas, he being then only thirty-six years of age, and his youngest son, John C. of this notice, not yet born. His wife, who was born January 26, 1828, died July 17, 1900, when seventy-two years of age. They were the parents of the following: Mrs. John C. Eversole, who is a circuit judge, and now a resident of Annville, Jackson County; George W., a resident of Krypton, Perry County; Clarke, engaged in farming at Berea, Madison County; Judge John C.; Mary, of Hazard, the widow of Justice Bowling; Polly, the widow of George W. Fields; Sarah, who died at the age of fourteen years; Elizabeth, who died at the age of twenty-three years, and the wife of H. C. Napier; Jane, who died when twenty-three years of age, the wife of Stephen Napier; and Joseph, a former merchant, attorney and prepayt collector, who died at Hazard.

John C. Eversole attended the public schools and Union College at Barbourville, and began teaching school when he was twenty years of age. While thus engaged he commenced the study of law, reading Blackstone in his leisure moments and later applying himself and studies from the law books. The other, Henry C. After his marriage, in 1891, at Hazard, he was admitted to the bar and at once commenced the practice of his profession here, although his home for years had been located in the lower part of the county and at Booneville in Owsley County. For two terms he served as county attorney in Owsley County, and in 1915 was elected judge of the Circuit Court on a distinctly "dry" ticket. He has continued to hold this office to the present time, and has a splendid record for upholding the law, having made a strenuous fight against the illegal liquor traffic and being sustained in the great majority of his decisions by the higher courts. Judge Eversole maintains membership in the Hazard Bar Association, the Kentucky Bar Association and the Circuit Judges Association of Kentucky. In his political relations he is a republican.

Judge Eversole was united in marriage with Miss Alice Hogg, daughter of Stephen P. Hogg, of Owsley County. Mrs. Eversole, a woman of remarkable attainments and very talented, has been of great assistance to her husband, and to her he generously gives credit for a large share of his success. Their only daughter, Pauline, is the wife of Thomas F. Harig, of Yakima, Washington. Judge and Mrs. Eversole are consistent members of the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Master Masons at Booneville, and the Odd Fellows at Hazard.

Ira J. Francis, D. D. S., is established in the successful practice of his profession at Whitesburg, Letcher County, with an office that is equipped with modern appliances and facilities for the execution of dental work of the highest grade. The Doctor is a native son of Kentucky. His parents were pioneers in the eastern part of the county, and the family moved to Letcher County, on the 30th of May, 1899. He is a son of Samuel and Lettie (Muills) Francis. The father was born on the Carr's Fork farm on which he now resides in Letcher County, where he is, in 1921, seventy-seven years of age and wife, sixty-seven. Both are representatives of old and highly respected families of that district. Samuel Francis was a loyal soldier of the Confederate Army, and the active career of his family and his active career has been one of close association with farm industry. Success attended his well ordered activities in this important field of enterprise, he has been active and influential in community affairs, and his liberality and paternal loyalty were shown in giving to his children the best possible educational advantages. His wife was born on Carr's Fork, at Dirk, Knott County, Kentucky, and she is a member of families that came from North Carolina and settled in South-eastern Kentucky in the pioneer days. Samuel Francis has been an active member of the Baptist Church fully forty years, and his wife likewise is an earnest member. Of their six sons and six daughters all are living except one daughter, Dr. Ira J., of this review, being the youngest of the number.

The district school on Carr's Creek near his home was the medium through which the preliminary education of Doctor Francis was gained, and after leaving the same he pursued a higher course of study at Berea College, with further academic studies in the University of Louisville. In 1906 the family removed to Davenport, Lincoln County, Oklahoma, where the home was continued for three years, during which Doctor Francis attended school during the winter terms. After the return of the family to Kentucky he finally entered the dental department of the University of Louisville, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1913, and with the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery. He then entered into the practice of his profession at Hindman, Knott County, later removed to Hazard, Perry County, and in the latter place he continued his practice until 1918, since which year he has been numbered among the successful and popular dental practitioners at Whitesburg, judicial center of Letcher County. Doctor Francis maintains lively interest in all that touches the welfare of his home town and county; his political allegiance is given to the democratic party, and he is a Royal Arch Mason.

In July, 1914, Doctor Francis wedded Miss Ennis Pigmon, daughter of Wilburn and Mary Pigmon, of Knott County, and the four children of this union are Hazel Mary, Ira J., Jr., Mary Lois and Samuel Wilson.

W. M. Pursifull. In his professional activities as a civil engineer, this well-known citizen of Hazard, Perry County, has been closely associated with the development of many important mining enterprises in Eastern Kentucky, among the number being those of the Hazard Coal Company, the Blue Grass Coal Company, the Daniel Boone Mining Company, the Crawford Coal Company, the Four Seam Collieries Company, the Ashlers Coal Company, and the Hazard, Jr., Mine on First Creek. He is retained as engineer for the Kentucky & West Virginia Power Company, a corporation of important development and industrial functions.

Mr. Pursifull was born in Bell County, Kentucky, December 30, 1883, and is a son of M. J. and Orpha (Hurst) Pursifull. M. J. Pursifull was born and reared in Bell County and became a prominent and successful civil engineer, besides which he developed an extensive business in the handling of real estate and the furtherance of promotive enterprises. He died in 1909, the prominence of his life was in the electrical field where he played an influential part in the civic and material development and progress of Bell and other counties in this section of his native state. His widow still resides in Bell County. Their children are six in number—three sons and three daughters.

At the age of eighteen years W. M. Pursifull was graduated from the high school at Pineville, Bell County, Kentucky. He began a professional and practical work in surveying and civil engineering under the effective preceptorship of his father. In fact, his experience along this line was initiated when he was a mere boy, and he was able to do effective surveying work when he was but fourteen years of age. At Pineville he became associated with the engineering firm of Johnston & Johnston, and he remained at that place until 1905, when he formed a professional and practical alliance with the representative engineering firm of Fox & Peck at Big Stone Gap, Virginia, where in 1908 he was admitted to partnership and the name of the firm was changed to Fox, Peck & Pursifull. It was as a representative of this firm that he came to Hazard and entered upon his successful work in connection with the development of coal-mining enterprise in that section of the state. He was for some time president of the Woodburn Coal Company in Letcher County, and was president also of the Hazard, Jr., Coal Company. Mr. Pursifull is at the present time president of the Hazard Exchange Bank, besides which he holds the office of city engineer, in which connection he has personal supervision of extensive street-paving work that is being carried to completion. He is one of the most vital and public-spirited young men of the fine little city in which he maintains his home and of which he served as mayor during the period of the World war, his personal and administrative activities having been used effectively in furthering the success of the varied governmental agencies in support of war activities. Mr. Pursifull is a democrat, is affiliated with the DeLavoylent and Protective Order of Elks, and his name remains enrolled on the roster of eligible bachelors in Perry County.

Tilford A. Braswell is one of the prominent county officers of Lyon County, serving as County Court clerk. He is a member of one of the oldest and most substantial families of this section of Kentucky, and his own active career for many years was identified with railroad ing and subsequently as a merchant until he entered upon his present official duties.

The Braswells are of Irish stock. They were very early settlers in Tennessee. One of the men who contributed most to the early business enterprise and development of Eddyville was Nicholas T. Braswell, grandfather of Tilford A. He was born in Tennessee and subsequently acquired extensive tracts of land in Lyon County, Kentucky, owning a portion of the ground on which the modern City of Eddyville stands. While his interests were long identified with farming, he also built up a large business as a merchant at Eddyville, and owned much land in the city. He was one of the community's foremost citizens. He died in 1893 at Eddyville. He was very closely identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of the town, and in politics was a democrat. Charles Braswell, a son of the pioneer merchant, was born in Lyon County in 1834, reared in his native vicinity but spent the greater part of his active career as a steamboat engineer, running boats on the Kentucky River and St. Louis River. He died in a steamer accident on the Ohio River in 1889 at New Orleans. He was one of thirteen children and is now living at Kuttawa, Kentucky. Tilford A., is the elder of two children. His sister, Madaline, born in 1871, is the wife of John Scott, a farmer at Kuttawa.

Tilford A. Braswell was born on his father's farm two miles south of Eddyville March 10, 1869, but attended his school at Eddyville. He graduated from the Eddyville High School in 1889, and during the next twelve years was actively associated with his grandfather's general store, the pioneer mercantile enterprise of Eddyville. He then entered railroad service as a locomotive fireman with the N. M. and M. V. Railway, which subsequently became a part of the Illinois Central. He was in the service of the Illinois Central until 1913, when he left the road to engage in the real estate business at Kuttawa. In the fall of 1917 he was elected by a comfortable margin to the office of County Court clerk, and began his four year term in January, 1918.

Mr. Braswell in his official capacity and also as an individual gave generously of his means and his influence to all local war activities, helping sell bonds and raise other funds and keep up the patriotic record of the community. He is a member of the American Legion and of Locomotive Firemen, is affiliated with Cumberland Camp No. 138, Woodmen of the World, at Eddyville and is a democrat. He owns one of the very attractive residences of Eddyville, located on Water Street, a home with electric lights, city water, baths and other conveniences, surrounded with well kept grounds and some fine old shade trees.

At Metropolis, Illinois, in 1890, Mr. Braswell married Miss Lillian Long, a daughter of William H. and Mollie Long, now deceased. Her father was at one time a merchant at Eddyville, and Mrs. Braswell is a graduate of the Eddyville High School. They have two children. The son, Clifford, made a notable record as a soldier. He was born July 15, 1893, graduated from the Eddyville High School, and in 1915 joined the Regular Army for two years he was at a post in the Philippine Islands, was raised to the rank of second lieutenant while there, going up from the ranks, and early in the World war was with that contingent of American forces sent to Russia. While there he was promoted to first lieutenant. He was still abroad when his term of enlistment of three years and six months expired, and he then accepted service with the Red Cross with the rank of captain, and remained on duty in Russia, Japan, China and Siberia until August 14, 1920, when, after an absence of practically five years, he returned home and rejoined old friends and family at Eddyville. The daughter, Maurine Braswell, is the wife of R. A. Squires, who is manager of the Fairbanks Morse Company's business at Evansville, Indiana.
CLEMENT WILLIAM HUGGINS, Louisville lawyer, has been in practice in that city for the past twelve years and at the same time has enjoyed a distinctive leadership in the democratic party in his section of the state.

Mr. Huggins was born in Barren County, Kentucky, September 10, 1873, son of James Pendleton and Carolyn (DeNeale) Huggins. His father, who for many years conducted a successful nursery business in Barren County, was born there June 4, 1842, and died October 30, 1898. He was a democrat and a member of the Baptist Church. His wife was born in Nelson County, Kentucky, September 29, 1847, and is still living. Of the two children the older is Elizabeth, wife of John A. Macmillan of Dayton, Ohio.

Clement W. Huggins acquired a public school education in his native county, and in 1902 graduated from the law department of Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee. Before going to the university he had been employed as a bookkeeper and began the study of law under Judge Sterling B. Toney. He also received a law degree from the University of Louisville in 1909, in which year he began his active practice in that city.

For nine years Mr. Huggins was attorney for the Sinking Fund Commissioners of Louisville. In 1908 he was chosen a member of the Democratic Electoral College, and for five years was clerk of the Democratic State Executive Committee. He is a member of the State and Louisville Bar Associations, and is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and Knights of Pythias.

GEORGE L. EVERLY, M. D. Twenty-five years of continuous work in his profession as a physician and surgeon in Ohio County has brought Doctor Everly a position of prominence and influence. In his chosen vocation he followed in the footsteps of his honored father, whose life was one of genuine service and high attainments in the field of medicine and surgery, and father and son have been factors in the medical history of Ohio County for considerably more than half a century.

George L. Everly was born in Ohio County November 10, 1862. His grandfather was a life long resident and farmer of McLean County, son of a pioneer settler from Virginia. Dr. J. M. Everly was born in McLean County in 1837, was reared and acquired his early education in that locality, and was a graduate of the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati. He was still a young man when he located in Ohio County, and he continued his work as a physician at Ceralvo practically until the close of his life. He died in August, 1911. He had the qualities of mind and character that made him an exemplar of the finer type of manhood and a splendid representative of the state to which he devoted himself. He was an accurate observer, a man of reticence, a great lover of his country and was revered and honored by all with whom he came in contact. He was an active member of the Democratic party and in his long lifetime was a zealous worker for the advancement of good government and the cause of education, in which latter field he was the president of Ohio County near twenty years, and was active during a larger period.

He was married to Mary Kimberly, who was born in Ohio County in 1842 and died at Ceralvo in 1920. Of her large family of children Dr. George Everly is the oldest and the only one to take up his father’s profession. Lizzie, the second in age, died at Ceralvo, in 1898, of J. W. Garrett, now a merchant in Nelson in uhlenberg County; Charles B. is a merchant in Ceralvo; Minnie L. is the wife of L. P. Fulkerston, a farmer of Ceralvo; Emma B. of Ceralvo, is the widow of C. E. McMinn, a merchant; Jesse was a boat captain and died at Evansville, Indiana, at the age of forty-five; Marvin is a coal miner at the Williams Mine in Ohio County; W. N. Everly is a miner living at Rockport; and Eddie G. is the wife of W. S. Hill, residents of Ceralvo, though Mr. Hill is a teacher of the schools of Rockport.

George L. Everly spent his early life at Ceralvo, attended public school there and under the inspiration and guidance of his father determined at an early date to become a physician. In 1895 he graduated from his father’s school, the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati, and in the same year took up active practice at Ceralvo. He remained in that community until 1911, when he removed to Rockport, where he has followed general medical and surgical practice. He is a member of the Ohio County Medical Society, and had the honor of being elected president of the State Eclectic Medical Society in 1917. He owns a modern home and offices in Rockport, also four dwelling houses there. He offered his services to the Medical Reserve Corps in 1918, but was never called for active duty, though he shared with others the hardships incident to the war and contributed his share of the benefits of promoting the success of various war campaigns.

Doctor Everly is a democrat, is a past junior warden of Ceralvo Lodge No. 253, A. F. and A. M., member of Rockport Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Rockport Tribe of the Improved Order of Red Men.

In 1896, in Ohio County, he married Miss Clemmie Park, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Park, both of whom are now deceased. Her father was a farmer in Ohio County and she was born in the county, in 1869, and is the wife of Homer Boyd, of Rockport, a securities salesman of the Trustees System Service Corporation; Jesse Levy, born in 1906, and Addis, born in 1903, both students in the Rockport High School.

JAMES H. MARTIN has done well his part in upholding the prestige of Nicholas County in the field of agricultural and live-stock industry, and is the owner of one of the well improved farms of the county, while previously he was the owner of one of the largest farm estates in the county. He continues to give a general supervision to his model farm of 500 acres, but resides in the village of Millersburg, where he is the owner of one of the most modern and attractive home properties of the place.

Mr. Martin was born in Harrison County, Kentucky, March 29, 1866, and is a son of J. W. and Nancy (Bradley) Martin, the former of whom was born in Harrison County, in 1827, a representative of a sterling pioneer family of that section of the state, while his wife was born in Robertson County, in 1844, and is the daughter of Dr. Martin. Mr. Martin served four years as postmaster at Rockport while he was proprietor of the post office. He was subsequently a farmer and a merchant, and was the first postmaster at Rockport.

He married Miss Susan McLean, daughter of L. L. McLean, a retired banker and a man of high standing in the community, and a daughter of James McLean, an early pioneer in the county. From this union were born the following children: Mary McLean, a teacher in the school system; Minnie, Mrs. Margaret Martin, a teacher and librarian; William, who married Miss Addie Martin, and who is a farmer and merchant; W. J. Martin, a merchant and manufacturer; and J. W., a merchant. Mr. Martin is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Masonic Order; and is a Methodist in religion.

After his marriage J. W. Martin settled in Robertson County, and later he returned to Harrison County, where he continued his activities as a farmer. He was a war veteran, and served as a private in Company C, 18th Indiana. After the war, he removed to Nicholas County and rented a farm "It was not until after his son J. W. Martin, who was born in 1884, that this review, was twenty-one years of age that J. W. Martin here purchased a farm of 135 acres, and with the passing years he gradually added to this nucleus until he was the owner of a valuable farm property. He was one of the venerable and honored citizens of this county at the time of his death. James H. Martin is indebted to the schools of Harrison County for his early education, and there he learned at first hand the intricacies and details of farm work, the while he waxed strong in mental and physical powers. He accompanied his parents on their removal to Nicholas County, and after he had attained to his legal majority he here purchased a farm of 135 acres, to which, with increasing prosperity, he continued to add until he had a valuable property of 900 acres. This property he eventually sold to advantage, and thereafter he owned a valuable tract of 1000 acres, virtually in one body, of which he retains 673 acres, besides being the owner of a farm of thirty-eight acres in Bourbon County. His increasing prosperity in the passing years has not been the result of accident but rather has been the normal reward of well directed effort, effective management of affairs, circumspection and good judgment in investment. Resolute purpose, integrity and fairness in all things, and a realization of the true values in human thought and action have characterized the course of Mr. Martin, and at all times has he maintained secure place in the confidence and good will of his fellow men. He takes loyal interest in all that touches the communal welfare, but has had no desire for the honors or emoluments of public office of any kind. His political allegiance has been with the democratic party, and he and his wife are active members of the Christian Church in their home village.

October 31, 1894, recorded the marriage of Mr. Martin and Miss Maud M. Robbins, daughter of Dr. John L. Robbins, long a representative physician and surgeon in Bourbon County. Mr. and Mrs. Martin have four children: Lucille is the wife of Mr. Norton; J. L. is the way of Mr. Edmund; Lovel is married and lives at the parental home, served in the United States Navy in the period of the World war, as a member of the Hospital Corps; and Jimmie is the youngest member of the parental home circle.

Mr. Martin gave loyal support to the various patriotic causes in the period of national participation in the World war, and subscribed his quota to the various war bonds issued by the Government, besides supporting Red Cross service and other agencies tending to advance the war policies of the Government. Though the most of his landed estate lies in Nicholas County, the home village of Mr. Martin is in Bourbon County, not far distant from his farm property.

Grover Cleveland Allen. A lawyer whose attainments have placed him in the front rank of the Eastern Kentucky bar, and also a successful business man, Grover Cleveland Allen is the present Commonwealth's Attorney for the judicial district of which West Liberty is the center. He is a resident of that city.

Mr. Allen was born at what is now Lee City in Wolfe County, Kentucky, December 7, 1884, being named in honor of the democratic president elected only a few weeks before his birth. His father was Caleb B. Allen, and his grandfather George Allen, his great-grandfather Richard Allen, while the next ancestor was a native of Wales, coming to America at an early date and settling in North Carolina. Richard Allen was born in North Carolina, and before 1800 came to what is now Magoffin County, Kentucky, and took up a large tract of land. For a short time he lived at Caney, and then removed to Whitesburg, Kentucky, where he died. In what was then Morgan but now Magoffin County. Richard Allen was a pioneer, endured all the hardships and trials of redeeming a portion of the wilderness to cultivation, and was a highly respected and influential resident of the community where he died at the age of sixty-nine. He married Edith Williams a daughter of Daniel Williams. They were the parents of Daniel, Elijah, Polley Ann, Viola Dorcas, Joseph, Nancy Smiley, George and Rachel.

George Allen was born in Magoffin County, devoted his active years to farming, but died at the age of forty-five. His children were C. B.; Hughy, who died young; Eli, who died in 1912; Margaret who married James Saltley, and Sarah, who married D. B. Elam.

Caleb B. Allen was born in Magoffin County, November 11, 1859, and was only seven years of age when his father died and he was left largely to make his own way through the world. At the age of eighteen he moved to Wolfe County locating at Red River on the present site of Lee City. He was a farmer there, also engaged in the livery business, and opened one of the first stores of goods at Lee City and is still one of the busy merchants of that community. He is an active member of the Baptist Church, and several times was honored with the office of master of Picrat Lodge No. 725, F. and A. M. Caleb B. Allen married Rhoda Elam, daughter of Joel Elam who came from Wise County, Virginia and settled in Morgan County, where his daughter Rhoda was born. The children of C. B. Allen and wife were: Sophronia; Cela, who died at the age of twelve; Grover Cleveland; Leeburn, now County Attorney of Wolfe County; Seebren; Freeland T.; Mae, wife of T. C. Boothe a farmer at Bethel, Ohio; William, a merchant at Quicksand, Kentucky; Mrs. Mildred McIntosh of VanLear, Kentucky.

Grover Cleveland Allen spent his early life in the vicinity of Lee City, attended district schools, and completed a liberal education in the Hazel Green Academy, the Wesleyan Academy and finally took his law course in the University of Louisville, where he graduated with the class of 1900. While attending college and in order to earn money to defray his expenses in law school, he taught in Wolfe and Breathitt counties and during his graduating from law school he was principal of the Campton High School one term. Since then he has devoted his time to his legal and business interests. For a few years he was associated in practice with S. Monroe Nickell at Compton and later continued his practice alone. Mr. Allen served as County Attorney of Wolfe County and as master commissioner. During the period 1917-19 Mr. Allen had some extensive interests in the oil and gas industry in Wolfe, Magoffin and Morgan counties, and is now a member of the Collier Oil-Gas Company of West Liberty.

Mr. Allen was called to the duties of Commonwealth's Attorney on November 8, 1921, when he was elected by the imposing majority of 3,288 votes, leading his ticket by a large number. His district comprises Wolfe, Magoffin and Morgan counties.

Mr. Allen is a member of the Christian Church and of Picrat Lodge No. 725, F. and A. M., and the Royal Arch Chapter at Jackson. He is a democrat. His first wife was Irene Garringer of White Haven, Pennsylvania. She died in 1918 leaving three children, Malcolm, Frank and Harold E. After her death Mr. Allen married Miss Mary Whitemack of Clermont County, Ohio. They have a son William Hager.

Douglas I. Day, junior member of the representative law firm of Field & Day, of Whitesburg, Letcher County, Kentucky, was born at Linefork, this county, September 10, 1874, and is a son of Judge Henry T. and Mary (Corney) Day. Judge Day was born on the Cumberland River in Letcher County in 1850, and is a representative of an old Colonial family of Virginia, representatives of which came by way of the old Daniel Boone trail and numbered themselves among the pioneer settlers in Southeastern Kentucky. Judge Henry T. Day was for many years a successful teacher in the schools of this section of Kentucky, and he continued his residence on the Cumberland River in Letcher County until about twenty years ago, when he established his home one mile east of Whitesburg, where he and his wife still reside. He served as county judge of Letcher County from 1913 to 1917, made an excellent record on the bench, and has been otherwise an honored and influential citizen of his native county. He is a stalwart republican, is affiliated with the Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic fraternity, served several terms as master of the Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons at Whitesburg, besides having frequently represented the same in the grand lodge of the state. Mrs. Day likewise is a native of Letcher County, where she was born in the year 1858, and both she and her husband are representatives of old and honored pioneer families of this county. Of their four children three are living, Douglas L., of this review, being the eldest of the number; N. K., resides upon a farm near that of his father, and in addition to being one of the successful exponents of agricultural industry in his native county he is actively associated with the productive operations of the Mayking Coal Company; James M. is assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Whitesburg; John B. died at the age of twenty years.

The public schools of Letcher County gave to Douglas Irvine Day his early educational advantages, and he later completed a course, including commercial law, in the Bryant & Stratton Business College. For twelve years he was numbered among the successful teachers in Letcher County, and with this part of the state, and he read law under the preceptorship of Judge David D. Fields, of whom specific mention is made on other pages of this work, Judge Fields at that time having been legal representative of a number of large and important land and coal companies. Mr. Day was admitted to the bar in 1916, and at once entered into partnership with his honored preceptor, Judge Fields, with whom he has continued to be associated in the control of a large and important law business which touches both the civil and criminal departments of practice. Mr. Day has gained high reputation as a trial lawyer, and among his recent experiences was the defending of a son charged with the murder of his father, while previously he had been retained for the defense of a father charged with the killing of a son. Prior to engaging in the active practice of his profession Mr. Day had given effective service as official court stenographer for the judicial district comprising Letcher, Perry, Leslie and Owsley counties.

Mr. Day is a staunch and loyal advocate of the principles of the republican party, is affiliated with the Whitesburg Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic fraternity, and has twice served as worshipful master of the former, besides twice representing the same in the Grand Lodge of Kentucky. He holds membership also in the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Improved Order of Redmen, the latter of which he has represented in the Grand Lodge of the state. In a professional way he holds membership in the Commercial Law League of America.

In 1894 Mr. Day wedded Miss Maggie Wells, who likewise was born and reared in Letcher County and who is a daughter of Joseph Wells. Of the three children of Mr. and Mrs. Day two are living, Lawrence M., a student in the College of Medicine at Memphis, and who has been president of the Rockport Deposit Bank from its establishment, and Daisy Anderson, a student in the Baptist Church and is a popular factor in the social life of her home community.

BENSON D. PARK, M. D. While one of the busiest physicians at Rockport, where he began practice after graduating in medicine twenty years ago, Doctor Park is perhaps even better known for his active leadership in business affairs. He has been president of the Rockport Deposit Bank from its establishment, and has several other active business interests, and at the same time he has been deeply concerned with movements representing the civic enterprise of his locality.

Doctor Park was born at Olaton in Ohio County, Kentucky, January 31, 1853. The Park family is of Scotch ancestry. From Scotland they first moved to Nova Scotia, but established a home in Pennsylvania in the biennial period of history. Doctor Park's grandfather was born near Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and spent most of his life there on a farm. He lived for a few years at Dayton, Ohio, and late in life came to Ohio County, Kentucky, and died near Olaton in 1861. He married a Miss Fitzgerald, a native of Maryland, who also died in Ohio County, Kentucky.

Jesse B. Park, father of Doctor Park, was born at Dayton, Ohio, in 1826, and was about fourteen years of age when the father moved to Ohio County, Kentucky, in 1830. He became a farmer near Olaton, and when the Civil War came on he espoused the Union cause and enlisted in Company B of the Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry. He was in service about a year, participating in the battle of Shiloh. He always voted as a republican and was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Jesse B. Park who died near Olaton in 1879, married Mrs. (Iler) Daniel, who was born near Roseine in Ohio County in 1832 and died at Hartford, this state, in 1911. They were the parents of five children: Joseph, a farmer near Horse Branch, Ohio County; James F., a rural mail carrier living at Hartford; Janie, wife of Lee Mason, a merchant at Rockport; Fannie, who died at Olaton in 1894, wife of Henry Felix, now a farmer at Olaton; and Anderson D. Anderson D. Park was born at Olaton the year his father died, but he grew up in the country district of Ohio County and had his first advantages in the rural schools there. In intervals of other employment he acquired a liberal education both in general subjects and medicine. He attended Hartford College at Hartford, Kentucky, and in 1867 received the Bachelor of Science degree from the West Kentucky College at South Carrollton. For seven years he was a student in the Hospital College of Medicine at Memphis, and completed his course with one year in the Hospital College of Louisville, where he graduated in 1901. Doctor Park at once began practice at Rockport, and his work has identified him with this community continuously except for six months during 1905-06, when he had his office in Hartford. His professional offices are in the Rockport Deposit Bank Building.

The Rockport Deposit Bank was opened to business in January, 1904. It is a state bank, has capital of $15,600, surplus and profits of $7,500, and deposits of $75,000. The officers are A. D. Park, president; Ernie Curtis, vice president, and C. H. Fraim, cashier. Doctor Park has been president and active head of this institution from the time of its organization. He is also a stockholder and manager, secretary and treasurer of the Rockport Lumber Company, Inc. This is a business operating saw mills on the bank of the Green River along the Illinois Central track, and manufacturing rough lumber, beams, and other hardwood products.

Doctor Park represented Ohio County in the State Legislature during the Sessions of 1904, and for four years served as town trustee of Rockport. He is a republican and was prominently associated with the various war activities in Ohio County.

In 1904, at Hartford, he married Miss Ida Smith, daughter of Joseph H. and Diana (Platt) Smith, both now deceased. Her father was a stationary engineer in the coal mines at Echols, Kentucky. Doctor and Mrs. Park have four children: Helen, born August 3, 1906, a student in the Rockport High School; Woodrow, born October 21, 1910; Edmund, born February 21, 1915; and Dorothy, born December 24, 1918.

EDMUND B. PERRY. Himself one of the best known citizens of Morgan County, the career of Edmund B. Perry involves the story of one of the old and prominent families of Eastern Kentucky. In all the generations the Perry's have been marked by rugged strength and fine character, with high convictions of right and duty, they have borne their share in the development and improvement of the land, and have also faced danger in times of war. Edmund Perry has an abundance of the pioneer virtues, and though in his eightieth year he believed the Government might have used him to advantage in the World war, and would have gone as eagerly to the front as any young recruit. He was born August 15, 1839. He bears the same name as his first American ancestor, Edmund Perry, a native of Wales, who came to America in 1650, settling in Rhode Island where he bought land from the Indians. He lived there until his death. His son Daniel Perry a native of Rhode Island as a young man went out to the real frontier, Greenbrier County, Virginia, now West Virginia, and became one of the last land owners in that section. He died after extended wars. His son John M. Perry, grandfather of Edmund B. Perry, was born in Greenbrier County, and married Elizabeth Nicholas, for whose family a portion of old Greenbrier County was named Nicholas County. John M. Perry and his wife brought their children to Kentucky in 1798, making their first settlement on the site of Mount Sterling in Montgomery County where he took up 160 acres. From there he removed to Morgan County, taught school here and followed farming as his main vocation. He and his wife both attained the venerable age of ninety-two and they were buried in the Harrison-McClure grave yard three miles northwest of Liberty. Their family consisted of five sons and ten daughters, and all of them are now deceased, though they reached at least one hundred years of age.

Thomas D. Perry, father of Edmund B., was born in Greenbrier County, Virginia, August 5, 1796. He was about two years of age when his parents went through the wilderness into Kentucky following a "hog path" to Montgomery County. He grew up here, and learned all the arts of woodcraft and was a noted hunter, killing many deer, bear and panther in this section of Kentucky. He possessed a magnificent physique and was equally at home in the saddle or in the harness. All of the hardships that pioneers had to endure. His great industry and his business ability made him highly successful as a farmer and at one time he owned 12,000 acres in Morgan County. Like other members of the family he was long lived and was ninety-three when he passed away at his home three miles north of West Liberty on Elk Fork. He married Matha B. Wells, daughter of Edmund and Saley (Casy) Wells, and she outlived him by ten years. They were the parents of seven sons and seven daughters named: Sarah, Rachel, Frances, Elizabeth, Jane, Mary, Margaret, Cyrus, Thomas N., Benjamin F., John M., Edmund B., James W., and Daniel D., who died in infancy.

It is an honor to represent such a rugged family line as this. Edmund B. Perry has manifested the best character of his forefathers. He was reared in a time when there were few advantages to be supplied by schools, and his education was the result of attending a subscription school conducted about three months each year on Elk Fork three miles west of West Liberty. Later for a time he attended a high school in Bath County. He remained with his father until he was twenty-one. When the Civil War came on he joined the Confederacy, for four months was employed in secret service at Knoxville. He died in battle at the battle of Guntersville. In the war he was first major, then major, and finally captain of Morgan in Col. Richard Ganough's Regiment. In October, 1862, he was captured at Gravson, Kentucky, but was paroled the next day and in March, 1863, was exchanged. He then rejoined his command, and was in the service until the time of surrender at Mount Sterling, Kentucky.

Mr. Perry had a romantic engagement with Miss Evelina Parker of North Carolina, which continued eleven years before they were happily married on April 10, 1867. She was the companion of his life and fortunes for a little more than forty years and passed away October 30, 1907. After his marriage Mr. Perry engaged in the lumber business and farming, and he was one of the first to develop the coal measures under his land in this section of Eastern Kentucky. He is credited with having made the first shipment of coal on log rafts down the Licking River. Mr. Perry still owns 300 acres of valuable farm and coal lands. The coal under his land is the canal coal, of which there is a large quantity and there is another vein of soft coal. His farm is about two and a half miles north of West Liberty on Elk Fork. This land was at one time a portion of his father's estate.

By his first marriage Mr. Perry had the following children: a daughter that died in infancy; John M., Jr., Henry Gardner, Ollie Parker of Quicksand, Kentucky, Samuel South, Benjamin Franklin, deceased, and Mr. and Mrs. Elizabeth wife of B. F. Eden.

The second wife of Mr. Perry was Cordia Allen Lewis, daughter of A. W. Lewis, and of a family that came from Pennsylvania and New York state. Mr. Perry is a member of the Christian Church, and is a democrat in politics.

David Wark Griffith. While David Wark Griffith did not invent motion photography nor the photo-play, he has made it a greater invention by lifting it from a commercial level into the realm of art, and every day sees an advance toward a higher plane of achievement. In 1908 Mr. Griffith entered the employ of the Biograph Company, incorporated in 1904, and with his advent real stories in pictures began to be told. He then had a year's experience as a reporter, actor and scenario writer, but in July, 1908, he directed his first picture, "The Adventures of Dollie." That picture "caught" the public and during the decade and a half which has since elapsed, that public has learned that the name Griffith guarantees something that is an advance over anything that has ever been shown them on the silver screen. His "ideas" have startled, even shocked, the industry, but the public has welcomed them so heartily that Griffith is the best known name in the moving picture industry. His great pictures, beginning with the "Birth of a Nation," are so well known that to name them is to repeat a well-known story, but "Hearts of the World" had a mission and no war-time propaganda was so effective. What is not so well known, even to the "movie fan," is the fact that to Mr. Griffith's genius is due many of the most important features of the mechanical construction of the films he produces, the "close-up," the "cut-back," the "long shot," all of which he introduced, also the "fade out," and "nitphotography." He has perfected several inventions and he has the credit of making the first two reel picture, the first four reel, five reel, seven reel and first twelve reel picture. His energy is tremendous and he works under high pressure, yet despite his hours of hard work at the studio he is a patron of the theater and opera, reads widely, is a student of art, a musician and whether the subject under discussion is music or musicians, art or artists, history or historians, the drama or dramatists, philosophy, logic or religions of the world, Mr. Griffith takes an understanding part and shows his great knowledge with those subjects under. He is a young man and great as has been his achievement it will surely fade away before the accomplishment of the future. He says:

"The future, that is almost a forbidden topic because we know nothing whatever about it. We hope to achieve bigger and better things in the future, however. We want to make better pictures; go forward. We shall try to make each picture better than the last. We desire most sincerely to add something new to each picture. This will be our effort. We are — working together for one common cause: to make the best pictures we know how to make."

Mr. Griffith is a native son of Kentucky, his family originally Virginians, his mother of the Oglesby, Carter-Shirley families of Georgia. His father, J. B. Wark Griffith, was born in Virginia, came to Kentucky, in 1887. Was twice elected to the House of Representatives from his district. At the outbreak of war between the states he enlisted in the Confederate service and organized a company of cavalry which was sworn in as a unit of the First Kentucky Cavalry, Confederate States army, October 15, 1862. Jacob Wark Griffith, captain. The regiment was stationed at Bowling Green, Kentucky, in October, 1861, and in February, 1862, covered the retreat of Johnson's army toward Nashville, and later was on duty at Decatur, Alabama, guarding the bridges of the Memphis & Charleston railroad. The First Kentucky fought at Shiloh, April 6, 1862; joined General Forrest in his advance into Kentucky; was captured from him and there assumed personal command of General "Joe" Wheeler, September 14, 1862. In January, 1863, the regiment was assigned to the command of Gen. A. Buford, and was returned again to General Wheeler later in the same year.

The train of which Colonel Griffith was then captain left Lone Jack, Missouri, in the spring of 1863, beginning with some thirty-five or forty mule teams and over a hundred men, a few women and children. They were almost perfectly alone, save for a mail party on guard besides the mule trains 300 head of cattle. Proceeding west over the Santa Fe trail as far as Utah, they rested. The Lone Jack unit went the northern route by Donners Lake and Fort Sutter; the balance of the train finished the journey over the Santa Fe trail with an outlook constantly to warn against forays. They were attacked on several occasions. At one time in Colorado they assisted in rescuing a small party of women and children, survivors of a train that had been attacked and destroyed by the Indians.

Captain Griffith was with his regiment in all the foregoing service, leading his company gallantly until March 1, 1863, when he was commissioned lieutenant-colonel of the First Regiment, Kentucky Cavalry, a rank he held until the close of the war. After the return of the regiment to General Wheeler's army in 1863, Colonel Griffith continued on active duty, and in many of the engagements hereafter noted he commanded the regiment, owing to illness or absence of the colonel. The First Kentucky was engaged at Hewey's Gap, Chattanooga, McMinnville, Hills Gap, and Missionary Ridge, covering the Confederate retreat from that point, and on December 28, 1863, suffered severe losses at Charleston, Tennessee.

Colonel Griffith was wounded at Hewey's Gap, Tennessee, and was captured at the Saltville Valley. He had not recovered sufficiently to mount his horse when the battle of Charleston, Tennessee, was fought, December 28, 1863, but was present. At a critical point in the battle the First Kentucky was ordered to charge and not be able to lead his men on horseback and eager to be with them, he commandeered a horse and buggy standing near, was helped in and led the regiment in a charge on the Union lines. Incidentally it must be said that this particular charge of the First Kentucky was victorious, probably, however, cavalry never having been led in that manner during a charge.

In January, 1864, the regiment was engaged at Ringold Gap, and constantly opposed Sherman's advance on Atlanta, fighting at Dalton, Dry Gap, New Hope Church, Noonday Creek, Kenesaw Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, and Entrenchment Creek. The First Kentucky pursued and captured a large detachment of Sherman's raiders in Georgia, and then were ordered to Saltville, Virginia, thence to Asheville, where General Wheeler's army was rejoined. After Appomattox, the First Kentucky Cavalry was selected by Secretary of War Breckinridge, as a personal escort to President Davis, but after his capture by the Union forces the regiment surrendered, and on May 16, 1865, was paroled at Washington, District of Columbia.

At the close of the war General "Joe" Wheeler said of the regiment:

"I am always glad to think and write about the gallant old First Kentucky Cavalry; it was as brave a body of men as any officer had the good fortune to command them into action other than I should have done, it was because I knew they would be equal to any heroic duty which might be imposed upon them."

Lieut.-Col. Jacob Wark Griffith married Mary Perkins Carter Oglesby, of ancient family long seated in the state of Georgia, and they were the parents of eight children: William W.; Albert L.; Annie; Robert W. (2); Virginia; David W., the principal character of this review, and Ruth.

David Wark Griffith, the youngest son of Lieut.-Col. Jacob Wark and Mary Perkins (Carter) Oglesby Griffith, was born at LaGrange, Kentucky, January 16, 1880, and there was educated in the public schools and under the instruction of his eldest sister, Mattie. After school days were over he finally left LaGrange and obtained a place on the repertorial staff of the Louisville Courier Journal, writing "theatrical notes," "death and funerals," "police news" and covered the "morgue," his duties multitudinous, his pay infinitesimal. From the Courier Journal he went to the Louisville Stock Company and the next season was with the "Strolling Players," then with Ada Gray's company, playing the clergyman in "Trilby," Francis Lewstol's "East Lynne" and other parts. Later he was with Walker Whiteside, playing Iowa towns; was one season with Helen Ware and another season with Nance O'Neil in Shakespeare and Ibsen in Boston, playing as his star part Sir Francis Drake in "Elizabeth." He was also with James O'Neil in the Neil Alhambra Stock Company in Chicago, and played the President in "Abraham Lincoln with great success. His salary had been raised during these experiences from $8 to $18 weekly.

After leaving the stage he was employed in the iron works at Tonawanda, New York, going thence to New York City. There he wrote verses and a story or two, selling one of his poems, "The Wild Duck," to Leslie's Weekly for $5. He wrote a play, "A Fool and a Girl," which James K. Hackett produced. Soon after this he went to Colorado and the Chicago Studio of Art, and there produced his first picture show, coming away deeply impressed by what he saw. He wrote a picture story and with it returned to New York, offering his story to the Edison studio. Not hearing anything, he wrote another and better story which he submitted to the Biograph Company, 11 East Fourteenth Street, who paid him $15 for it and asked for more. That settled the question of his future and he resolved that he would both write, direct and make motion pictures. He secured a position with the Biograph Company as a writer of scenarios at a daily salary of $5. He kept right up with the duties of his position, but kept continually requesting those in charge to let him make a picture, and finally he was allowed to do so. The result was "The Adventures of Dollie," her marvelous experiences at the hands of gypsies, a picture which was 85 feet in length, that was neither the "long shot," the "cut-back," and the "mist photography." Compelled the lengthening of pictures from one to four reels and gave to the world many new players, Mary Pickford, being discovered and trained by Mr. Griffith, as were Lillian and Dorothy Gish and a score of others. In all, he made about one hundred pictures for "Biograph," producing among the last of these "Judith of Bethulia," a picture in four reels with Blanche Sweet as Judith. He had fought the Biograph owners on the two reel story and won, but a four reel picture was too much, and in October, 1913, Mr. Griffith resigned from the Biograph staff and formed an association with the Reliance-Majestic companies, making pictures under the same roof and releasing them under the name of Mutual Films.

In his new connection Mr. Griffith was given a free rein and continued with Reliance-Majestic four months, producing The Battle of the Sexes. Mr. Griffith left this film before its completion, and on February 14 following, arrived in Los Angeles to produce "The Clansman" which was finally produced as "The Birth of a Nation" at Clune's Auditorium February 8, 1915, a picture which dwarfed anything ever before attempted on the silver sheet. During that time he had also given the final touches to "The Escape" and made "The Avenging Conscience" and "Home Sweet Home."

Early in March, 1915, having seen "The Birth of a Nation" successfully presented, returned to California, began building the world's biggest picture "Intolerance," which was first shown at the Liberty Theatre, New York City, September 6, 1916, a story with one theme, as explained on the program, but told in four parts running side by side. Mr. Griffith, by command, gave a showing of "Intolerance" for the Royal Family. The picture has been shown all over the civilized world.

When the United States entered the World war, Mr. Griffith was in England, and when the English literary men decided that a great war picture would greatly improve the morale of the people, a meeting was arranged between the Lord George, and the man whom it was decided was the "big" man for the big picture, David Wark Griffith. Said Lloyd George in addressing Mr. Griffith:

"You will do this to aid humanity. The idea back of your splendid story is a message to civilization that its fight will not be in vain. Let me be the first to predict that when you have completed your labors you will have produced a masterpiece which will carry, a message around the world—a story which will inspire every heart with patriotism, with love of country, with the great cause for which the civilized nations of the world are now fighting in France. This, Mr. Griffith, is the greatest and most wonderful task you ever have attempted. God speed you in your great work and grant that you may accomplish your desires."

Thus was born "Hearts of the World." From the United States by cable Mr. Griffith summoned "Billy" Bitzer, his cameraman, Lilian and Dorothy Gish, "Bobby" Harron and a dozen other players of merit, and upon their arrival they proceeded to France as guests of the British government and with credentials that would pass them to all fronts. The players were taken under fire and the machinery of the world's greatest war was bent to his purpose, to take this greatest of war pictures under actual war conditions and at the same time to tell on the screen "the sweetest love story ever told." The picture was finished in Los Angeles and was officially shown in Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, March 12, 1918, and in the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, April 4th following, a premiere on the following night being given to special guests of diplomats, government officials, army and navy officers of highest rank and representatives of the British and Canadian governments and army and navy officers.

"Hearts of the World," a love story with the war as background, Mr. Griffith said:

"The tale concerns the people to whom war came, rather than the war itself. The story our poor little heroes and heroines tell is the story of truth, unfolded in a land where nothing was impossible; where all the world was a Gethsemane and the earth a forest of crosses on which hung the atoms of broken humanity. In the night, outside every man's door, anguished voices cry out. Whatever the darkness holds, we must take out lantern and go out into the world.

The mass effects in the picture exceeded anything ever before seen and there was a reality about it that was "gripping." French infantry marching, battle lines, trench attacks, German troops, refugees grouped in a ruined church, a most extraordinary scene. For two and a half hours Mr. Griffith played upon every human emotion, swimming a popular intellect that was most won-derful in its approbation, no audience ever having been so stirred. This was Mr. Griffith's contribution to the Allied forces and as a single item was unsurpassed.

His next picture was "The Great Love," followed by "The Greatest Thing in Life," a war picture that proved the greatest thing in life was selflessness. "A Romance of Happy Valley" was next in order; then came "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" with Clarence Seymour as the star; "True Heart Suzie" with Lillian Gish, the Gish sisters, Lilian and Dorothy always his principal stars.

Then came "Broken Blossoms," which sets a new standard. In the spring of 1919, Mr. Griffith signed a contract in conjunction with Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks, ("The Boyfriend") with the United Artists Corporation. Other great pictures Mr. Griffith has recently produced are: "Way Down East" and "Orphans of the Storm." These pictures are wonderful in the themes, in their photography and heart interest. They have so won the public that a "Griffith" production is now an event to be watched and fought over not alone by audiences but by producers and artists. Wherever "The Nineteenth Year of the Storm" was shown in Louisville, Kentucky, Governor Edwin P. Morrow wrote Mr. Griffith, "On behalf of the commonwealth of Kentucky, I urge you to be present in the old Kentucky home when your great picture of the French Revolution is produced in your native state. You are a part of the commonwealth and we are proud of you and feel that we have the right to ask your presence and to give you a reception as a son in whom Kentucky is well pleased." Mr. Griffith accepted the invitation and was personally intro-duced by the governor to a large audience in the Shu-bert Theatre.

SAMUEL G. TATE has practiced law at Louisville fifteen years. He has earned the position of one of the able lawyers of Kentucky's metropolis, and his career recalls also that of his honored father, Rev. John C. Tate.

Rev. John C. Tate is now the oldest active member of the Southern Presbyterian Church. He is in his ninetieth year, having been born in Missouri January 19, 1829, and has discharged the duties of his ministry for more than half a century. Rev. John C. Tate was educated in Center College of Kentucky and Yale Uni-versity. He married Minna Callis, who was born at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, and is still living.

Second among their four children, Samuel G. Tate was born at Hopkinsville August 21, 1879, and partly from his talented father and partly through his own exertions enjoyed a liberal professional training. He was for four years a teacher, and he finished his educa-tion at the Presbyterian University at Clarksville, Tennessee. Mr. Tate was admitted to the bar by examination in 1899, and since that year has practiced at Louisville. He is a member of the Louisville and Kentucky Bar Associations, and has to his credit one term in the City Council. He is a democrat in politics.

December 23, 1920, he married Emmade (Boyd) McCullers.
CALLOWAY NAPIER, one of the leading attorneys of this part of the state served Perry County as county attorney for four years, is Commonwealth's attorney for the 33rd Judicial District; is vice president of the Hazard Bar Association and is accepted as one of the city's most dependable citizens as well as a distinguished member of his profession. He comes of a notable family, the history of which is as follows:

The Naper family descends from the Earl of Lennox. A second son, Donald, performed valiant service for the King of Scotland in 1296. The King, after the battle of which service was rendered, called the soldiers together and said: "Ye have all done valiantly but there is one amongst ye who hath Na-peer (no equal)," and, calling Donald into his presence, commended him in regard to his worthy service, and in commemoration of this he changed his name from Lennox to Naper. The King gave him the lands of Gosford and lands in Fife and made him his servant. Since then many generations of the name rendered service to the Kings of Scotland, and later to those of England.

Some who gained added distinction were John Naper, who lived from 1550 to 1615, was the inventor of logarithms; and Sir Charles Naper, who was an author and historian. The family has been in many ways, members of it serving as lords of England, generals of armies and naval officers.

Sir William Francis Patrick Naper was born near Dublin, Ireland, in 1795, and in his youth came to the United States, first living in Virginia, but later migrated to what is now Perry County, Kentucky, where he died in 1866. From the time of his arrival in Perry County the Napers have been connected with much of importance in the history of Kentucky, and all that they have done reflects credit upon the name.

John Naper, the son of William Naper, had a son, Stephen William, who was the grandfather of Calloway Naper. A brother of his, McCager Naper, served as the county judge of Perry County. Many of the family were soldiers in the Union Army during the war between the states, and among them was McCager Naper, father of Calloway Naper. The father served in the Forty-seventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, in which he enlisted when only sixteen years old. He was wounded at the battles of Cynthiana and Bowling Green, Kentucky, and early in the war had the misfortune to be captured by the Confederates, but was later exchanged and rejoined his regiment.

The wife of McCager Naper, and mother of Calloway Naper, bore the maiden name of Anna Engle, and she was born in Virginia, seventy-four years ago. She now resides with her son, the father having passed away April 10, 1910, aged sixty-four years. She is a devout member of the Primitive Baptist Church. In politics the father was a republican.

Calloway Naper was born February 26, 1881, on Balls Fork of Troublesome Creek, on his father's farm of 532 acres of valuable coal and timber land, and here the other three sons and four daughters of his parents were also born. Concerning the surviving children: William who lives on the old homestead, is a farmer and is engaged in the timber business on the river adjacent to his property; Polly, who is the wife of William Wooldridge of the community; Hiram, who also lives on the old homestead; P. C., who is part owner of the Hazard Hardware Company, wholesalers and retailers; Lida, who is the wife of Beecher Davidson, an electrician of Breathitt County, who is working in the mines on Lotts Creek. Those who are deceased are: Allie, who was the wife of Pearson Dobson, died at Vest, Knott County, Kentucky, in 1914, when she was thirty-four years of age; and Lunah, who was the wife of Kearney McNew, of Lakeville, Magoffin County, Kentucky, died in October, 1920, when she was thirty years of age.

Calloway Naper spent his early schooldays in attendance at a school held in a log house on Balls Fork, and sat on a log pole, so primitive were the furnishings. Still he learned rapidly and when ready was sent to the Hazard schools. Later he attended the East Kentucky Normal School at Prestonsburg, Floyd County. In order to reach this school he walked a long distance across the mountains. A youth of towering ambitions, he resolved upon a professional career and in order to prepare himself for it took the Scientific Course, and read law at the Southern Normal School, Bowling Green, Kentucky, from which he was graduated in 1905. In order to earn the necessary funds to pay for his training, Mr. Naper worked different times in Perry County. Following his graduation he established himself in a general legal practice at Salyersville, and remained there for two years, and then, in 1907, located permanently at Hazard. In 1908 he was elected county attorney of Perry County, and served as such for four years, and made an enviable record in that office. In August, 1921, he received the republican nomination for a seat in the House of Representatives, and was elected on November 8, 1921, by a majority of more than 4,000 votes. He has now declared his candidacy for United States Congress.

On January 26, 1909, Mr. Naper married Adaline Combs, a daughter of Spencer Combs, and a member of a notable family in the history of Kentucky. Mrs. Naper was born at Smithboro, Knott County, Kentucky. Their children are: Myron, who is engaged in the real estate business in Hazard; John, who is engaged in the real estate business in Hazard; and Charles, who is attending the University of Kentucky. Mr. Naper is a trustee of the Hazard Baptist Institute.

Curtis B. Johnson, M. D. From Louisville, his native city and the home of his family for many years. Doctor Johnson was born at Louisville March 22, 1879. He is of English ancestry, and the Johnsons for several generations lived in Virginia. His grandfather, Absalom Y. Johnson, was born in Virginia in 1830, but spent most of his life in Louisville, Kentucky, where he died in 1872. For many years he was a manufacturer of buggies and wagons, and subsequently was a storekeeper and gauger for the United States Government. Frank H. Johnson, father of Doctor Johnson was born at Louisville in 1852 and that city has been his home practically all his life. Until 1893 he was assistant cashier of the Merchants National Bank, then for three years practiced as an expert accountant, and in 1896 became assistant cashier and in 1905 cashier of the First National Bank, holding that position five years. For another three years he was traveling auditor for the American Distillery and Warehouse Company, and since then has been occupied with his duties as treasurer of the Bray, Robinson Woolen Mills of Louisville. His home is at 942 South First Street in Louisville. He is an alderman in the Louisville City Government, is a republican in politics, and is prominent as a member of the Christ Church Cathedral of the Episcopal Church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity. Frank H. Johnson married Margaret Drysdale, who was born in Louisville in 1855.
Their first two children were Frank, Jr., and Drysdale, each of whom died at the age of eighteen months. Dr. Curtis B. Johnson is the third in age. Roger L. is a traveling constructing engineer for the Westinghouse Manufacturing Company, with headquarters at Atlanta, Georgia. Alexander E. is the agent for the Continental Casualty Company at Louisville. Frank H., Jr., is connected with the Louisville Health Department.

Curtis B. Johnson attended the public schools of his native city, graduated from the DuPont Manual Training High School at Frankfort, and following four years was devoted to his studies in the medical department of the University of Louisville. He graduated in 1900, and the next thirteen months, before coming to Earlington, served as an interne in the Good Samaritan Hospital at Lexington. Doctor Johnson began practice at Earlington in 1901, and has become known in that community not only as a very able physician but as a citizen of many interests and of great public spirit. He is a member of the County, State and American Medical Associations and the Southern Medical Association. He was village treasurer at Earlington for eight months, until he resigned on account of other duties, in August, 1920. He has served as a member of the Hopkins County Republican Executive Committee, and was appointed a presidential elector on the Republican ticket. Mr. Johnson lives in modern home on Farren Avenue he owns six other dwelling houses in the town. Doctor Johnson is a vestryman of St. Mary's Mission Episcopal Church at Madisonville and fraternally is affiliated with E. W. Turner Lodge No. 548, A. F. and A. M., Earlington Chapter No. 141, R. A. M., St. Bernard Commandery No. 129, K. T., all at Earlington, with Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Madisonville, Earlington Chapter of the Eastern Star, Earlington Lodge of Odd Fellows, Victoria Lodge No. 84, Knights of Pythias, at Earlington, Earlington Lodge of the Loyal Order of Moose, and is a member of Madisonville Lodge No. 738 of the Elks and the United Order of the Golden Cross.

In April, 1908, at Hopkinsville, Doctor Johnson married Miss Mabel M. Martin. Her parents, Mr. T. and Nettie (Isor) Martin, are now deceased. Her father for many years was a contractor and builder at Earlington.

Robert Perry Pepper. A complete history of the Kentucky thoroughbred would give frequent credit to the great horses and influence of the stables maintained for so many years by Robert Pepper, a horseman of national distinction and one of the well remembered citizens of Woodford County.

He was born at "Sweet Home" near Grassy Springs Church, Woodford County, in 1830, son of Samuel and Mahala Pepper. In the, early part of his married life he owned a distillery near Frankfort until the plant burned, and thereafter his interests were concentrated in Woodford and Scott counties, where he owned several farms, the most noted of these being the well known South Elkhorn Stock Farm in Scott County. He also maintained a home at Frankfort. He continued active in the breeding of trotting horses until his death in 1895. He is buried in the Frankfort Cemetery.

The head of his stables was the great Onward, said to have held the world's record as the sire of the largest number of horses in the 2:30 class. Of the noted sires owned by him were Norval, Madrid and Acolyte. Many of his horses were sold at Tattersalls in New York.

The breeding stables were sold at the death of his only son, Robert Pepper, Jr., about a year after the death of Robert Pepper himself. His farms were likewise sold, and the horse Onward, then retired, was purchased by Mrs. Stokes.

A pen picture of Colonel Pepper shows a very handsome man, six feet two inches tall, with broad shoulders, ruddy complexion, blue eyes, perfect teeth and noted everywhere for his distinguished address and bearing. He was given the title of Colonel by courtesy. Colonel Pepper was twice married. His first wife was Miss Annie Kirkead, of Versailles, Kentucky. By her he had one daughter, Pauline, now Mrs. Clay Hatchett, of Frankfort. The second wife of Colonel Pepper was Miss Elizabeth Starling, daughter of Colonel Lyne and Maria (Hensley) Starling. She was reared and lived in New York until as a young woman she came to Frankfort, where she was married, and she still maintains the old home at Frankfort, to which she came and bride nearly fifty-eight years ago. To this union were born seven children. The oldest, Robert P. Pepper, Jr., is deceased. The second, Miss Laura Starling Pepper, resides in Frankfort. The third is Mrs. Charles D. Clay, wife of Col. Charles D. Clay, U. S. A., at Lexington. The next daughter is Miss Elizabeth Pepper. Mrs. Frederick Goedecke, was the wife of Lieutenant Colonel Frederick Goedecke, U. S. A. Louise M. Pepper is deceased. The youngest is Mrs. Thomas Lee Smith, wife of a colonel in the United States Army.

Miss Elizabeth Pepper was born and reared in Frankfort, and is a graduate of Ogontz School of Pennsylvania. Her love for the country life led her to participate in practical agriculture, and for the past seven years she has owned and lived on the old Edwards and Pepper farm, a homestead three miles west of Versailles. This farm comprises 125 acres, and Miss Pepper has been successful in the handling and operation of a choice dairy of Jersey cows. The home, an old brick residence built by the original owner, Edwards, stands back on a fine elevation a quarter of a mile from the Pike, and is located in one of the charming spots of Woodford County.

Warren Peyton, superintendent of schools at Beaver Dam, taught his first country school twenty-five years ago, and except for the intervals while he was acquiring and finishing his own education has had an almost continuous association with educational work and is consequently well known over the state and has filled some very responsible positions in the schools of different towns and communities.

Mr. Peyton was born on a farm near Leitchfield in Grayson County November 28, 1877, and is a descendant of Daniel Peyton, a Virginian who fought as an American soldier in the Revolutionary war and for his services received a grant of land from Virginia in Kentucky, which was then part of the Old Dominion. He came with his wife and family to the Pike region in 1814, and thus became one of the pioneer farmers of Grayson County. His son, Elijah Peyton, grandfather of Warren Peyton, was born in Grayson County in 1832, and spent nearly all his life there as a farmer. Late in life he moved to the vicinity of Rockport in Ohio County, where he died in 1917. He married Mary Jane Pierce, who was born in Ohio County in February, 1833, and is still living, at the age of eighty-seven, near Rockport.

Allen Peyton, father of Professor Peyton, is still living on his farm in the western part of Grayson County, and was born on a farm adjoining his present homestead in 1854. His well directed energies over a period of more than forty years brought him substantial success in his home community. He is a republican and a member of the Baptist Church. Allen Peyton married Nancy Heady, who was born near Owensboro in Daviess County in 1854. Warren is the older of their two children. Their daughter, Mary, is the wife of James F. Cooksey, a farmer on a place adjoining her father's farm.

Warren Peyton during his youth lived on his father's farm, attended the rural school of Grayson County, and after he began his career as a teacher he graduated in 1900 from Hartford College in Hartford, Kentucky, and in 1904 received his A. B. degree from the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio. In 1915 for further work he was granted the degree Bachelor of Science by Peabody College at Nashville. His first school was in a country district of Grayson County, where he taught nine months. He then went to Kentucky College, where he worked six years, and in 1902 became assistant principal of the grade and high schools at Leitchfield. From 1906 to 1910 Mr. Peyton was county superintendent of schools of Grayson County. From 1911 to 1918 he was principal of the high school at Utica in Daviess County, and then for two years was principal of the high school at Fordsville in Ohio County. He took up his duties as superintendent of the Schools at Septimouth, and in 1918 he was transferred to Barbourville. The schools of Beaver Dam have a scholarship enrollment of 250, and he has a staff of eight teachers under him.

In January, 1920, Mr. Peyton began a term of four years as a member of the State Board of Teachers Examiners. For ten years he has been active in the meetings and committee work of the Kentucky Education Association and has taken an active part in its work in Grayson County during the war, assisting in the sale of Government securities and the raising of funds for various auxiliary purposes through the schools and among all classes of citizens. Mr. Peyton was made a Mason at Leitchfield in 1906, and is now affiliated with Beaver Dam Lodge No. 420, F. and A. M., and is a member of J. O. Davis Chapter No. 32, R. A. M., at Owensboro. On January 7, 1907, at Louisville, he married Miss Beatrice McCabe, daughter of Barney and Margaret (Ryan) McCabe. Her mother lives at Leitchfield, where her father, a retired farmer, died. Mrs. Peyton is a graduate of the Bowling Green Business University. They have one child, Tommy, born January 4, 1908.

Oscar R. Rankin. The enterprise of Oscar R. Rankin as a farmer and stockman is easily distinguished in Bourbon County, since he is proprietor of the Ash Woodland Stock Farm, a splendid and widely extended estate comprising 1,300 acres, situated on the Cynthiana and Millersburg Pike, two and a half miles north of Millersburg.

Mr. Rankin also owns the old Rankin homestead, which has been in the possession of the family for 130 years. He was born in Nicholas County, Kentucky, February 8, 1852, son of N. A. and Elizabeth (Frymen) Rankin, the former a native of Nicholas and the latter of Harrison County. The grandparents were John and Elizabeth (Becket) Rankin. John Rankin married in Harrison County, and then settled ten miles northwest of Carlisle, on the land just mentioned as the old homestead now owned by Oscar R.

John Rankin had four children by his first marriage and five by his second. Nicholas A. was one of the five, grew up on the home farm, succeeded to its ownership, and operated it until his death. He was a staunch democrat and a member of the Baptist Church. Of his eight children five are still living: James M., a Harrison County farmer; Oscar R.; Samuel, a retired farmer at Cynthiana; Robert W., of Harrison County; and Alice, wife of Dr. William Phillips, of Harrison County.

Oscar R. Rankin grew up on the home farm, made good use of his advantages in the local schools and also attended the Kentucky Wesleyan College and a teachers training school at Catlettsburg. For four years he was a teacher in country schools.

November 3, 1874, he married Jane Alice Layson, daughter of William and Elizabeth A. (Patten) Layson. Her father was born December 22, 1809, son of Isaac and Polly (Moore) Layson, who with their family came down the Ohio River in boats to Louisville, passed Lexington when it was a town of log cabins and settled in Bourbon County, a mile north of Paris, where Isaac Layson developed a farm from the wilderness and lived until his death. All his four sons and two daughters died. Isaac Layson grew up on the old farm north of Paris, and his son, William E., and his wife, Elizabeth Patten had two children, Jane Alice and America. The latter is deceased. William Layson became a very successful farmer and business man, was a democrat and a member of the Presbyterian Church.

After his marriage Oscar R. Rankin moved to the home he now occupies, but with a comparatively small farm and compared with the Ash Woodland Stock Farm of his day. He has made the property what it is by successful management through a period of nearly half a century. He and Mrs. Rankin have three daughters: Annie, who is a graduate of the Millersburg Female College and the wife of John R. Grimes, living near Millersburg; Margaret, who is a graduate in music and the wife of Dr. N. H. McKinney; and Kate, who is married and lives near Millersburg.

Mr. Rankin is one of the deacons in the Baptist Church, while Mrs. Rankin belongs to the Presbyterian denomination. He is a past master of Amity Lodge No. 40, F. and A. M., a member of Cynthia Chapter No. 18, R. A. M., and is a past eminent commander and the only surviving charter member of Coeur de Leon Commandery No. 26, K. T. He is also a member of Sawnhan Chapter of the Eastern Star. Mr. Rankin takes an active part in the affairs of the city and county. He is the present president of one of the organizers of the Exchange Bank of Millersburg. The other officers are: John Leer, president, and John McDanials, cashier.

William R. Thompson, M. D., has proved in effective service the legitimacy of his choice of vocation and has gained success and prestige as one of the representative physicians and surgeons of Montgomery County, at whose judicial center, the City of Mount Sterling, he is established in the general practice of his profession.

Doctor Thompson was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, on the 21st of April, 1871, and is a son of Malcolm and Bethie (Royster) Thompson, the former of whom was born in the City of Lexington, this state, on the 21st of September, 1822, and the latter of whom was born in the County of Fayette, 1829, his grandfather, Dr. Charles Thompson, M. D. His paternal grandparents are of Scotch descent. His mother, Miss Preston, is a native of the Potomac River in Virginia in the early Colonial period of our national history. Charles R. Thompson became a citizen of distinguished influence in Colonial affairs, was a member of the Continental Congress, of which he paid his share of the expenses of the daily papers of transcribing the Declaration of Independence as dictated by Thomas Jefferson. The fine old estate originally developed by the Thompson family on the Potomac River is still in possession of descendants. Charles R. Thompson, grandfather of Doctor Thompson of this review, came to Kentucky in an early day and established his home at Lexington, where he engaged in the manufacture of hemp burling. He continued his residence at Lexington until 1862, and thereafter he was actively and extensively engaged in farm enterprise until the time of his death. His marriage to Miss Julia Drake was solemnized in 1829, and concerning their children the following data are available: Nannie became the wife of N. B. Carpenter; Malcolm, father of the subject of this sketch, was the next younger of the children; Mary H. became the wife of Albert Dickham; and Clara became the wife of Gabriel Gaines.

Malcolm Thompson was reared and educated at Lexington, and at the age of twenty-one years he became a progressive exponent of farm industry in Fayette County, where his marriage occurred and where he long held status as one of the substantial farmers and representative citizens of his native state. Upon leaving the farm he returned to Lexington, and there he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives, secure in the high regard of all who knew them. Of the four sons, three attained to years of maturity and of the number Doctor Thompson of this review is the eldest; Charles R. is owner and operator of the stock yards in the city of Lexington; and Clifton L. is president and manager of a leading wholesale grocery company in that city.

The early years of Doctor Thompson were passed on the old home farm in Fayette County, and in addition to receiving the advantages of the public schools he attended also the excellent private school conducted by John L. Patterson, who is now president of the University of Louisville. After having well advanced his education along academic lines Doctor Thompson followed the course of his ambition and entered the University of Louisville, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1892. After thus receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he established his residence at Mount Sterling, which has continued the center of his able and successful professional service during the long intervening period of thirty years. He controls a substantial and representative practice, does not permit himself to lapse in practical knowledge of the advances made in medical and surgical science, is serving as a member of the surgical staff of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, and is actively identified with the Montgomery County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is especially interesting to record that the professional office of Doctor Thompson has been consecutively used by physicians for three generations. It was formerly the office of Dr. Benjamin P. Drake, who was graduated from Transylvania University at Lexington in 1825, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and who received from the same institution in 1827 the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He came to Mount Sterling in 1822, and here continued in the practice of his profession until his death in 1874. His office was thereafter adopted as the professional headquarters of Dr. Roger Q. Drake, who occupied the same and maintained high professional standing in this community until his death in 1905, since which time Doctor Thompson has occupied the office and continued the earnest and efficient service for which he has been celebrated.

Doctor Thompson is distinctly loyal and public-spirited as a citizen, has served as a member of the City Council of Mount Sterling, and is a staunch advocate of the principles of the democratic party. He is affiliated with Mount Sterling Lodge No. 23, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is a past master, and he holds membership also in the local Chapter of Royal Arch Masons; in the Knights of Pythias, where he is a member of the Grand Chapter, and in the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In politics he is a Democrat.

In 1895 was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Thompson and Miss Fannie E. Reed, who was born and reared at Mount Sterling and was here graduated in the high school. Doctor and Mrs. Thompson have three children: Cynthia, a graduate of the Mount Sterling High School, is the wife of Robert Covington; Malcolm was graduated from the local high school and is, in 1921, a student in the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania; and William R., Jr., is a student in the Mount Sterling High School.

Francis Marion Moore. In agricultural and business circles of the community of Greeneville, as well as at Lexington, there is no name that is better or more favorably known as standing for enterprise, energy and accomplishment than that of Moore, which is borne by the five Moore brothers, Francis M., Edward, Earl, Wellington, Jr., and Roger, agriculturists of ability and modern tendencies, and merchants who have built up a large and flourishing business in the meat line.

A worthy representative of the name and of the talents possessed by the family is Francis Marion Moore, who was born in Franklin County, Kentucky, March 14, 1880, a son of Wellington and Rebecca (Griggs) Moore. Wellington Moore was born in Fayette County, four miles north of Lexington, on the Georgetown Pike, May 7, 1849, a son of Francis Marion Moore. The latter years of his life were passed at the home of his son, Francis Marion, with whom she had lived for some years. He, like his brother Marquis Lafayette, had been born at the time of the visit of the young French hero, General Lafayette, to Lexington in 1826. Marquis L. Moore died at the age of seventy years in Pulaski County, where his sons still reside.
Francis Marion Moore, the elder, was married in 1843 to Susan A. Eales, of Bourbon County, Kentucky. The greater part of his life was passed in Fayette County, and in 1863 he bought the land in on the Greendale Road, four and one-half miles north of Lexington, which is now owned by his son Wellington. He was a carpenter and a very public-spirited man, but never cared for public office. With his family he belonged to the Cave Run Baptist Church.

Mr. Moore died in his eighty-sixth year, his wife having passed away eight years before. They were the parents of the following children: John B., a farmer of Fayette County, who died at the age of sixty-eight years; Wellington, the father of Francis M. of this notice; Susan A., who died as the wife of Robert Kegler, of Owen County, Kentucky, at the age of thirty-five years; Frank L., who is engaged in farming on the Leestown Pike in Fayette County; Benjamin Lafayette, a farmer of Fayette County, who died at the age of fifty-four years; Cleveland, a resident of Lexington; and George Washington, a farmer of Fayette, who died at the age of fifty years.

Wellington Moore was about twenty-two years of age when he married, April 11, 1871, Miss Rebecca Griggs, a neighborhood friend, daughter of Rice and Martha (Wright) Griggs. They became the parents of six sons and one daughter: William Rice, of Lexington; Dorothy S., the wife of Walter S. Welch, a job printer of that city; and Francis Marion, Edward, Earl, Wellington, Jr., and Roger, the latter four of whom reside with their parents, the five brothers, as already noted, being members of the firm of Moore Brothers. Each brother served twelve months in the United States Naval Reserve and for a few months saw service on the U. S. Mine Sweeper "Missouri" during the World War.

Francis Marion Moore attended the public schools of his home community. The family fortunes or lack of fortune caused him to enter upon his independent career when he was still a lad. A series of misfortunes had attended his father's career, and much of the elder man's time was spent at the hospital in what proved to be a vain attempt at recovery. Wellington Moore has now been blind for eight years, but still retains his other faculties and has been of much assistance to his sons in the building up and development of their business. Francis M. Moore was only twelve years old when with his brothers Edward he took up the butcher business, supplying both the retail and wholesale trade from their Understanding Lodge in Lexington. The latter branch of the business is the one which has been continued by the firm of Moore Brothers, to which firm the younger brothers were admitted in turn as they reached the proper age. Naturally, the business was started on a very small scale, all of the original capital being necessary to swing the first deal. Thus left without any resources the brothers were for a time in troubled straits, but, without his family not helping them personally, he had established a reputation during his active career of being a man of the highest integrity, whose word was as good as his deed, and this splendid credit reflected with due advantage on his sons, who were able to tide themselves over the first four or five years, until they could find a solid foot-hold. In the meantime, with their family, aided materially by the moral support and active assistance of the state and the national government, they attended to the wholesale business their elder brother, William R. Moore, handled the retail end as an employee, although later he became disassociated from the business.

Eventually the brothers found themselves upon a secure substantial financial basis and began to increase the scope and importance of their operations. At this time their farming operations covered 1,200 acres of land, all of which they own, included in three farms, one being on the edge of Woodford County and the others in Fayette County. They have paid all the way from $105 to $400 per acre for their land, on which each year they are adding improvements in the way of buildings, machinery, equipment, etc. Tenants are on the farms, which are operated for the growing of stock and the products of the soil, both for their own use and for the sale of the latter product. The brothers buy cattle, hogs, sheep, etc., breed Duroc swine, principally for their own use, deal in mules, which they buy up and feed for the Southern trade, handling sometimes as many as 200 or more animals and buy, fatten, ship and sell hogs the year round in addition to supplying the local market. The firm belongs to the stockholders of the Bank of Commerce of which Francis M. Moore was an original stockholder and is presently a director. They are democrats, but while very public-spirited have never cared for public office. They are members of the First Baptist Church, while their father is a member of the Christian Church and their mother is a Presbyterian. Four of the brothers are still single and make their home with their parents.

Francis Marion Moore married at the age of thirty years Miss Ruth S. Oglethorpe, of Scott County, Kentucky. They have no children. Mr. and Mrs. Moore reside in their neat home near Greendale Station, in which community they have numerous warm friends and well-wishers.

J. CLAUDE SANDLIN, D. D. S. The dental profession, the work of which involves both a science and a mechanical art, has an able representative at Hazard, Perry County, in the person of Doctor Sandlin, who has here built up a substantial practice and established himself firmly in popular confidence and esteem, both as a practitioner and as a citizen. The Doctor was born at Manchester, Clay County, Kentucky, April 17, 1866, and is a son of Dr. H. G. and Margaret (Hayes) Sandlin. Dr. H. G. Sandlin was born in Jackson County, this state, in 1866, and through his effective service as a teacher in the Kentucky schools he earned the funds that enabled him to defray the expenses of his course in a leading medical college in the City of Louisville. Later he took effective post-graduate courses in the City of New York. He was engaged in practice at Manchester, Clay County, until 1900, when he removed to Richmond, Madison County, where he has since continued in successful general practice. He is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and he and his wife hold membership in the Baptist Church, in which he has served as deacon. Dr. and Mrs. H. G. Sandlin have four sons and one daughter.

After due preliminary discipline Dr. J. Claude Sandlin entered Millersburg Military Institute at Louisville, and there he remained as a student four years. At the Kentucky metropolis also he gained his initial training in the line of dentistry, and in 1918 he was graduated from the University of Louisville. At the close of his course he accepted an appointment as instructor of dental practice at the Western Reserve College of Dental Surgery, University of Chicago. In the same year he entered service in connection with the nation's preparations for participation in the World War. He received his military training at Camp Oglethorpe, Georgia, and there was commissioned a second lieutenant. The signing of the armistice made it unnecessary to call his command to service abroad, and he received his honorable discharge in December, 1919, as the result of the performance of his duty as instructor of dental practice at the University of Chicago. He returned to Richmond, Madison County, until the spring of 1920, when he established his residence at Hazard, where he has developed a successful and representative practice and where he has gained secure place in popular esteem. The Doctor has his office equipped with the best of modern appliances and facilities, and he keeps in thorough touch with all advances made in the work of his profession. He still maintains affiliation with the Richmond Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.
HISTORICAL OF KENTUCKY

HON. WALTER L. PRINCE. One of the youngest and most efficient members of the bench in the State of Kentucky, Walter L. Prince comes naturally by his family's ability and sturdiness of character, and when he was elected judge of the Court of Marshall County in 1918 the substantial qualities of one of the younger members of the legal fraternity were fittingly recognized. Likewise he attained the distinction of being the only man ever elected to public office in Marshall County on the republican ticket.

Mr. Prince was born at Birmingham, Marshall County, Kentucky, January 30, 1886, a son of John F. Prince. The Prince family had its origin in England, whence the great-grandfather of Judge Prince, John Prince, immigrated to North Carolina. In that state was born James Prince, the grandfather of Judge Prince, in 1828. As a young man he moved to Tippah County, Mississippi, and there became a highly successful planter, owning about 1,000 acres of land, in the cultivation of which he employed himself until the outbreak of the war between the states. His sympathies being with the Union, he made his way North and enlisted in 1861, fighting with the Federal forces until his capture by the Confederates in 1863. He was confined in a South Carolina prison by the Confederate authorities for the same year and was released in 1866. He married Miss Adelia Dyson, who was born in Georgia in 1835 and died December 28, 1910, at Higginson, Arkansas.

John F. Prince, father of Walter L., was born in 1854, in Tippah County, Mississippi, and was about nine years of age at the time of his father's death. At that time, with his two brothers, he was brought up by his mother to Smithland, Kentucky, but afterwards moved to Paducah, and in 1866 settled in Marshall County. Here Mr. Prince was reared, educated and married, and here his entire life has been passed as an agriculturist, his present home being at Maple Springs. An industrious and intelligent man, his career has been crowned with success, and at the present time he is president of a large farm at Paducah, Kentucky, and a member of the legislature. He is a staunch republican and a devout member and active supporter of the Presbyterian Church. He married Miss Rosie S. Bryant, who was born in 1862, at Birmingham, Marshall County, Kentucky, and to this union there have been born eight children: Carl L., a prosperous agriculturist at Bylithville, Arkansas; R. A., who is carrying on agricultural operations in Marshall County; two sons, Marshall and Sam; two daughters, Misses Harriet and Misses Annie; and one son, Walter L., who is president of the agricultural and mechanical college, at Frankfort, Kentucky. This son, Walter L., was born in 1886, and was educated at the public schools of his native State, and attended the Western Normal School at Bowling Green, where he was a student for three years. Following this he enrolled as a pupil at Cumberland University, Lebanon, Tennessee, and after a brilliant college course was graduated in 1912 with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Prior to this, while still in his junior year, he had been admitted to the bar, in 1911, and during the vacation of that year began practice in Marshall County. He began a general civil and criminal practice immediately after his graduation, and in 1913 established an office at Benton, where he has been located to the present time, and where his reputation has grown by leaps and bounds. It was not long after his arrival that he began to gain the respect of the bar, and his hold upon it grew stronger daily, until in November, 1917, he was elected county judge of Marshall County on the republican ticket, in a veritable stronghold of the democratic party, Marshall County having never before or since chosen a republican for county office. He began his term of four years in January, 1918, and the manner in which he discharged the responsibilities of his honored position furnishes another proof that the confidence reposed in him by his fellow-citizens was not misplaced. He maintains offices in the County Court House.

Judge Prince from young manhood has been one of the bulwarks of the republican party in Marshall County, and when that organization is decisively in the minority. He is a member of the executive committee of his party in the First Congressional District, and as a fraternalist belongs to the Benton Lodge No. 701, A. F. and A. M., Elms Camp No. 117, Modern Woodmen of America, and Benton Camp No. 1238, Woodmen of the World. He is also a supporter of the Civilian's Relief War Work and being the county chairman for the drive for the War Chest Fund.

In 1909, at Paris, Tennessee, Judge Prince was united in marriage with Miss Mayne Cross, daughter of Squire E. F. and Harriet (Dotson) Cross, residents of Benton. Squire Cross, who is a farmer owner and was formerly engaged in active agricultural operations, has served as county road engineer and is widely and favorably known in this vicinity. Judge and Mrs. Prince have no children. They own a modern residence with twelve acres of land adjoining Benton on the west.

JUDGE CHARLES KERR. The publishers exercise a grateful privilege in presenting a brief biography of the editor of this History of Kentucky. Judge Charles Kerr, of Lexington, Kentucky, has the unique distinction of being so well known that any record of his life would hardly be required by the present generation of Kentuckians.

Judge Kerr has been a member of the Lexington bar over thirty-five years. A busy lawyer and judge, not always enjoying the best of health, his friends have frequently expressed surprise at the great volume of work which he has accomplished. Chief among all these demands upon his time and energy, he has indulged for years the pursuit of a remarkably broad range of intellectual interests, such as are usually open only to men of comparative leisure. Judge Kerr has never asserted any claims to the role of historian, yet some of his studies and sketches of great Kentuckians, of special interest in the life of the state, and the early Kentucky bar, reveal the thorough study and thought he has put into the subjects and a rare insight and judgment in selecting the details that illuminate the character and conditions of the time.

Since his youth was spent on a farm, without special school advantages, his personal acquaintance with men and things has been gained from hands-on experience and from the study of books and the practice of the law in Lexington. But it is doubtful if any Kentuckian of this day knows better the influences and forces that have molded and entered into the history of Kentucky than Judge Kerr. Taking the field of Kentucky history as a whole, he may rightly be acknowledged as a critical authority on the relative importance and value of different groups of such a matter that must be considered in a history of the state.

These statements, representing the opinion of his historical friends and associates, may be permitted as an introduction to the formal outline of the facts of his life that follow.

Charles Kerr is a native of eastern Kentucky and was born at Maysville, December 27, 1863. His great-grandfather, with four brothers, came from Scotland to Pennsylvania in Colonial times. His grandfather, Samuel Kerr, was a native of Pennsylvania and in 1800 bought land in Mason County, Kentucky, and was a farmer during his active life. Jesse J. Kerr, father of Judge Kerr, was born in Mason County and followed farming and stock-raising there until 1880, when he bought a farm in Fayette County. He married Elizabeth Lyon Alexander, daughter of William and Mary (Terhune) Alexander, natives of Virginia.

Charles Kerr spent the first years of his life on his father's farm in Mason County. He attended public school, but he was never graduated from high school and was a carpenter in the school of necessity. He was twenty-one when he left the hard routine of his father's farm in Fayette County and began the study of law at Lexington, in the office of Col. W. C. P. Breckinridge and John T. Shelby. He was admitted to the bar in 1885, and was in the law office of Beck & Thornton until the death of Senator James B. Beck in 1899, when Col. R. A. Thornton purchased him into partnership. They were associated in the practice for eighteen years. Judge Kerr for several years was a lecturer on the subject of corporations and contracts in the Law College of Kentucky State University and Transylvania University. In former years Judge Kerr was associated with several business enterprises in Lexington, but the only one he now is that of director in the Fayette Home Telephone Company.

In politics he was reared a democrat and was active with that party until 1896, in which year he supported the sound money wing of the party, and since that campaign has been a republican. He worked in the interest of the party in several campaigns and after the close of the great war he wrote for leading periodicals of the country opposing the League of Nations, and delivered many speeches in opposition to that institution. As a busy and successful lawyer, Judge Kerr was not looking for the honors and responsibilities of public office. He went on the bench as judge of the Fayette Circuit Court by special appointment from Governor Wilson, to fill a vacancy caused by the recall of Judge Watts Parker. He was appointed March 17, 1911, and was reelected without opposition. Judge Kerr served five years and was elected by the largest majority ever given any Circuit judge in that district. He continued his service with this court until June, 1921, when he was appointed by President Harding as United States District judge for the District of the Canal Zone. Judge Kerr has been, and is, a model of the judicial virtues.

About the time Judge Kerr left for Panama, Charles N. Manning, president of the Security Trust Company, wrote what he called a layman's appreciation—a tribute that any man might regard as worth a lifetime of effort to deserve. Just a part of this may be incorporated in the present article:

"His unselfish, patriotic services during the great World war in Red Cross drives, Liberty Loan campaigns, and all other lines of community effort will not soon be forgotten. It is well known that he frequently contributed editorials to the Lexington Herald—editorials which for elegance of style, for purity of diction, for breadth of view, for historical knowledge, and for the comprehensiveness of his conception of the subject matter there is none excelled by those of any journal in the land.

And when the United States entered the war—a consummation which he earnestly desired and strove to bring about—he labored unceasingly with voice and with pen to elevate and strengthen the morale of our people, both soldiers and civilians, and to aid in the marshalling and mobilization of all the resources of the nation for the attainment of speedy and complete victory. "

The variety and extent and accuracy of his historical knowledge are marvelous. One can but wonder how in such a busy life he has contrived to find time to accumulate such a mass of material not specially related to his profession. It will be a great misfortune if he does not at some time put in permanent form, for the benefit of posterity, his knowledge of Kentucky history, if not of the world.

One observer Judge Kerr is fluent, witty, logical, eloquent and forceful. The immense stores of knowledge which he possesses on so many different subjects are so well classified and arranged in his mind as to be instantly available to him on any occasion. I well remember, and recall with great appreciation, the eloquent oration delivered by him at the services held at the Lexington Opera House, following the death of President Taft, that seemed to go right to the heart of the matter. There was not, among all the wealth of eloquence which the death of that illustrious leader and great American inspired, any more worthy, more comprehensive, more beautiful, or more eloquent appreciation of his life and character than the oration spoken by Judge Kerr on that occasion. It alone would give him high rank among the orators of the day.

"These are but some of the things, briefly and imperfectly sketched, which render Judge Kerr famous. These things make us proud to call him our friend; there are other qualities of which I will not now speak which bind him to us as with hoops of steel. We are glad that broader fields of usefulness have been opened to him. We know that for years he has rendered services to our country to which he is entitled, and will receive the reward in the consciousness of duty well done, in the performance of services supremely needed and divinely blessed, and not in 'money current with the merchant.' And so we rejoice that a position of great dignity and honor, affording equal opportunities for service and of greater emolument, has been offered to him. We rejoice that, though republicans may be unpopular, their principles are not abandoned, and that the services of our friend may be more adequately rewarded in the future than in the past. We have heard that this new position carries with it something of royal power and prerogative, and if we concede the maxim that of all possible governments that of the wise and benevolent despot is best, we know that Panama will realize this great government under his wise leadership and charge of the duties of his high office with honor to himself and credit to his country; and we trust that it will prove merely a trial-ground or entry-way to that goal of the great lawyer's ambition—a seat on the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States, for which his talents, his learning, his ability and his character so eminently fit him.

Judge Kerr is a Knight Templar Mason and a Baptist, while Mrs. Kerr is a member of the Episcopal Church. At Lexington, October 27, 1866, he married Miss Linda Payne, daughter of John B. and Ellen (Woolley) Payne. Mrs. Kerr is connected with some of the most distinguished families of Kentucky on both her father's and mother's side. Her grandfather was Judge A. K. Woolley, a distinguished Kentucky jurist, and through her grandmother she is a great-granddaughter of Robert Wickliffe, another eminent lawyer of Kentucky. She is also a descendant of Gen. John Howard of the Revolutionary war. Through her father's and mother's families she is nearly related to the Breckinridge, Preston, Wickliffe, Woolley, Howard and Payne families of Kentucky and Virginia. At the time of her removal to Panama she was president of the Woman's Club of Central Kentucky.

Judge and Mrs. Kerr have two children: Charles Kerr, born in 1899, a graduate of the University of Virginia and the Massachusetts School of Technology; and Margaret Howard Kerr, born in 1908.
