BIOGRAPHICAL
CAPT. WILLIAM HENRY LANIUS, soldier, banker, and for many years president of various corporate institutions of York, was born at Flushing, Long Island, Nov. 26, 1843. He is the son of Henry and Angeline (Miller) Lanius. His father's ancestors were prominent in the history of the Moravian Church and were among the earliest German settlers west of the Susquehanna. For several generations they were active and influential in the affairs of the city and county of York, of which Captain Lanius has been one of the foremost citizens for nearly a third of a century. During the rapid growth and development of York in recent years he has lent his varied accomplishments and best energies to advancing every cause and enterprise intended to promote the public good, and develop the resources and the possibilities of the city of York. His mother's ancestors were of English and French Huguenot descent, and first settled in the State of New York, residing on Long Island.

Captain Lanius grew to manhood in the borough of York. He obtained his early education in the private schools of York and then entered the York County Academy, where he excelled as a student, acquiring a comprehensive knowledge of the English branches of an education, and also pursued the study of the classics. He spent several years in this institution, during which time he took an active part in debating societies then existing in the academy and the town of York. At the age of seventeen he entered the office of his father, a prominent lumber merchant at York and Wrightsville.

He was seventeen years old when the Civil war opened. The enlistment of soldiers and the movement of troops to the front during the early months of the war aroused his military ardor, and he then resolved to offer his services to his country, to aid in defending it when it was threatened with disunion. Different companies were being recruited in the town and throughout the county. Drums were beating in the streets, recruiting offices were opened at various places in the town, and on Aug. 25, 1861, William H. Lanius became a private in Company A (commanded by Capt. James A. Stahle), of the 87th Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, organized at York under command of Col. George Hay, with John W. Schall as lieutenant-colonel. Soon after his enlistment Private Lanius was promoted to orderly sergeant of Company I, which had been largely recruited at New Oxford and vicinity, in Adams county. Sergeant Lanius served with his company and regiment on the marches over the mountains and through the valleys of West Virginia with the purpose of driving the Confederates from that region. After the close of the winter encampment at Winchester, Va., he was promoted to second lieutenant of his company, being then the youngest commissioned officer of the regiment. Up to this period the 87th had had a romantic career, but had not taken part in any engagements. Their real experience as soldiers began on June 12, 1863, in a lively affair at Newtown, near Winchester, where the regiment distinguished itself for courage in a sharp conflict with the enemy. The 87th at this time was in Milroy's command. The defeat of the Union army at Chancellorsville induced General Lee to march northward on the eventful Gettysburg campaign. In the attack upon Milroy's forces at Carter's Woods, a few miles east of Winchester, Lieutenant Lanius led his men in line of battle almost to the enemy's guns. Being overpowered by the large number of the opposing forces, Milroy's Division was driven back, and Lieutenant Lanius marched with that part of the regiment under Colonel Schall that reached Harper's Ferry. While stationed at this post, he acted as adjutant of the regiment, which after the battle of Gettysburg was placed in the 3d Brigade, 3d Division, 3d Army Corps. During the summer and fall of 1863, Lieutenant Lanius participated with his command in the engagements at Manassas Gap, July 23d; Bealton Station, Oct. 26th; Kelly’s Ford, Nov. 7th; and Brandy Station, Nov. 8th. During the absence of Captain Pfeiffer on division staff, Lieutenant Lanius commanded Company I in the engagement at Locust Grove, on Nov. 27th. He was also in command of his company when the 3d Division was to lead the assault on the Confederate works at Mine Run, Nov. 30th, but owing to the impregnable position of the enemy the assault was not made. On Dec. 7th, while in winter quarters at Brandy Station, Va., he was promoted to first lieutenant, succeeding Anthony M. Martin, who had been made adjutant. When General Morris was wounded, on May 9, 1864, at Spotsylvania, and Colonel Schall succeeded to the command of the 1st Brigade, 3d Division, 6th Army Corps, in which the 87th was then serving, Lieutenant Lanius was placed on the brigade staff as an aide. When Colonel Truex, the senior officer, assumed command of the 1st Brigade, he was continued on the latter’s staff, and was with the regiment and brigade in all the engagements of Grant’s campaign of 1864, in the movement of the army from the Rapidan to Petersburg, including the battles of the Wilderness, Spotsylvania, Laurel Hill, Po River, North Anna, Tolopotomy, Cold Harbor and Weldon Railroad. He carried the orders along the line for the movement of the 1st Brigade, at the opening charge on the enemy’s works at Cold Harbor, June 1st. When Captain Pfeiffer was killed at Cold Harbor he was commissioned captain of Company I, on June 25th, still retaining his position as an aide on brigade staff.

During the summer of 1864, when Grant was laying siege to Petersburg and was threatening Richmond, the capital of the Confederacy, Ricketts’s Division of the 6th Army Corps, in which the 1st Brigade served, was detached from the main army under Grant and sent to Frederick, Md., to meet a Confederate army of nearly twenty-three thousand men, under General Early, who was then threatening Washington City. While leading the charge at Cold Harbor Colonel Schall had been wounded. The regiment was then placed in command of Lieut.-Col. James A. Stahle. At the battle of Monocacy, near Frederick, on July 9th, this regiment fought with heroic valor. Captain Lanius, in this battle, was serving on the staff of Colonel Truex, commanding the 1st Brigade, and was entrusted with the duty of carrying dispatches for the movement of the troops into the fight. It was a hard-fought battle, in which Captain Lanius displayed both courage and daring.

“In the afternoon of that day,” says Colonel Stahle in a description of the battle, “when the Confederates were reforming their line in a woods in our front, with the intention of turning our left, Captain Lanius came riding gallantly along our lines, bringing an order from Gen. Lew Wallace for the 87th Pennsylvania and the 14th New Jersey to charge across a field, and take position by the Thomas House.” This charge was successfully executed, but soon afterward Captain Lanius, while passing through a shower of balls, was wounded in the arm, which disabled him for about two months, when he returned to the regiment, then under Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley, and took command of Company I, participating with it in the battles of Opequon and Fisher’s Hill.

The three years’ term of service for which he enlisted had now expired. He then returned with the regiment and was mustered out of service, at York, Oct. 13, 1864. After Captain Lanius had received his discharge from the army he was appointed an agent for a special bureau of the United States Treasury Department to receive and dispose of captured, abandoned and confiscated property. On Nov. 1st he began the performance of his duties by collecting rents on abandoned properties at Harper’s Ferry, W. Va. After remaining there a short time he opened an office at Winchester, where all persons living within the Union lines who desired to purchase supplies at government trade stores were required to get permits. After the permits had been granted individuals receiving them procured the supplies at the trade stores and obtained duplicate bills on which, when approved by the post provost marshal, the purchaser paid three per cent. of the face of the bill at the government office of Captain Lanius. He performed these responsible duties at Winchester until March, 1865, when he was appointed to a position in the Baltimore custom house, where he remained about one month, when he resigned and returned to his home in York.

Captain Lanius now entered upon his prosperous business career, engaging in the lumber trade at York, which he continued for a period of seven years. From 1871 to 1878 he carried on the same business at Wrightsville, and from 1880 to 1886 he conducted a large wholesale lumber business at Williamsport. In 1884 he organized the West End Improvement Company, a land company that opened up and developed the western part of York. In December, 1888, he was chosen president of the Baltimore and Harrisburg Railway (Eastern Extension), a line built from York to Porters and later controlled by the Western Maryland. This railroad when opened for traffic in 1893 gave an important impetus to the growth and development of York. It was a competing line to Baltimore. The time of its completion dates a new era in the business and manufacturing interests of the city. A large number of industrial plants were at once established in York, and the financial institutions and the business interests began to grow rapidly. Captain Lanius remained as the president of the railroad from 1888 until 1906. Feeling the necessity for rapid transit in York about the time it was to be incorporated into a city, Captain Lanius organized the York Street Railway Company, of which he served as president and the active head until the various lines were constructed through the leading streets of the city. This project met with so much encouragement that in 1900 the York County Traction Company was organized, which extended trolley lines to various centers of population in York county. He remained as the active promoter and head of this enterprise company until 1906, when its interests were disposed of to other parties.

Captain Lanius has been president of the York Trust Company since it was organized through his efforts in 1890. This institution has done a large and prosperous business. He was the first president of the York Board of Trade, in 1886, and is a trustee of the York County Academy. He was one of the charter members of the York County Historical Society and has always lent his best efforts in promoting the welfare of that institution, of which he is vice-president, a trustee and a life member. In 1867 he was one of the charter members, and became the first commander, of Sedgwick Post, No. 37, G. A. R., at York, and was its representative a number of times at State and National encampments. He is a member of the Loyal Legion and of the Masonic Fraternity. In 1866, when he was twenty-two years old, Captain Lanius organized the Boys in Blue at York. He represented this organization at the State Convention held in Pittsburg the same year. In that year also Gen. John W. Geary was nominated by the Republican party for governor of Pennsylvania. The State campaign opened at York by a parade of the Boys in Blue from Harrisburg, Carlisle, Lancaster, Reading and York. After the parade a public meeting was held in Baumgardner’s woods, a short distance southeast of the city. This meeting was presided over by Captain Lanius and addressed by General Geary, Governor Curtin and other distinguished men. Four thousand persons were fed at a table in the form of a hollow square. It was the largest political meeting ever held in York county. For eight years Captain Lanius served in the borough and city councils of York. In 1884 he was a delegate to the Republican National Convention which nominated James G. Blaine for President of the United States.

Captain Lanius is a descendant of a sturdy and honorable German stock. His first American ancestor came to this country and settled in eastern Pennsylvania about the year 1731. This ancestor was Jacob Lanius, who was born at Meckenheim, in the Palatinate, Germany, May 12, 1708. He married June 13, 1730, Julianna Kreamer, who was born in Eisenheim Jan. 2, 1712, and in 1731 came to Philadelphia by way of Rotterdam, in the ship “Pennsylvania Merchant.” Afterward he removed to Kreutz Creek, where his name is found among the taxables of Hellam township as possessed of 150 acres of land. In 1763 he removed to York, although, together with his wife, he had been, from 1752, connected with the Moravian Church, and his name appears in the lengthy document in Latin deposited in the cornerstone of the first church built in York in 1755. He died in York, March 1, 1778. Henry, his fifth child, continued to live in Hellam township, where he died Sept. 15, 1808. He also was connected with the Moravian Church in York. His brother, William, came to York with his father and formed part of the guard that escorted the Continental Congress on its return to Philadelphia, June 27, 1778. Christian, the first child of Henry by his second wife, Elizabeth Kuenzly, of Mt. Joy, was born at Kreutz Creek Sept. 16, 1773, and baptized in the Moravian Church. He was a wagonmaker by trade and resided in York, where by industry and thrift, combined with good business judgment, he accumulated considerable property and was highly respected as a public-spirited citizen. He was prominent in the movement in 1815 to introduce water into the borough and was one of the first board of nine managers that met March 18, 1816, for that purpose. In 1837 he was one of the organizers of the movement for the founding of the York County Savings Institution, now the York County National Bank, and was elected its first president, but declined to serve in that position. He was married Sept. 17, 1797, to Anna, daughter of Jacob and Barbara Von Updegraff, born in York March 16, 1774. They had eight children who reached mature age: Elizabeth, wife of Michael Smyser; Susan A.; wife of Jacob Weiser; Benjamin; Amelia, wife of John Fahnestock; Sarah, wife of Henry Kauffman; Henry; Magdalen, wife of William D. Himes; and Eleanor, wife of E. C. Parkhurst.

Henry Lanius, father of Captain Lanius, was born Sept. 20, 1809, at York, and died June 26, 1879. For many years he was a prominent lumber merchant at York and Wrightsville, which business he continued until 1871, when he retired. Early in life he belonged to the Whig party and in 1856 became one of the original Republicans in York county. He took an active part in the public affairs of the borough and served as chief burgess of York in 1860 and 1861, during the stirring times at the beginning of the Civil war. When the Columbia bridge was burned, June 28, 1863, by the Union forces, to prevent the Confederates from crossing the river, the entire lumberyard of Henry Lanius at Wrightsville was destroyed. It was a heavy loss, from which he never recovered anything from the United States government. Mr. Lanius served several years as a member of the school board of York. He was a consistent member of the Moravian Church and possessed many excellent qualities of mind and heart. He married Angeline Miller, by whom he had ten children, eight of whom grew to maturity: Marcus C., deceased; Anna L., deceased, widow of Thomas Myers; Captain William Henry; Ellen A.; Rev. Charles C., deceased, late principal of the Moravian school at Nazareth, Pa.; Sarah F.; Paul, a resident of Denver, Colo.; and Susan H., deceased.

ARTHUR B. FARQUHAR, LL. D., president of the A. B. Farquhar Company, of York, is not only prominent as the head of an important manufacturing concern, but also as a writer of distinctive ability on economic questions. He is a citizen of whom Pennsylvania has every reason to be proud. It is unusual for the characteristics found in Mr. Farquhar to be combined in one personality. The man of mechanical taste and practical experience often rises to a position of eminence in the manufacturing world. The man of theories, not blinded by the fear of risking the success of his own enterprises, may conceive far-minded plans for the wise administration of business affairs; but the man who has the mechanical and business ability to make a success in a commercial way, and the habits of study which lead him into the questions of public economy involved, is rare indeed. As in Mr. Farquhar’s case, his opinions are not listened to indulgently, or accepted grudgingly. They are looked upon as authoritative, and as such are influential in guiding the actions of those into whose hands the reins of public administration have fallen. Mr. Farquhar has been characterized in a recent interview of his career as “a man of distinctive and forceful individuality; of broad mentality and most mature judgment, who has left and is leaving his impress upon the industrial world, while his study of economic questions and matters of public polity has been so close, practical, and comprehensive that his judgment is relied upon, and his utterances have weight in those circles where the material progress of the Union is centered, as well as among those who guide the destinies of the nation.”

The following sketch of Mr. Farquhar has been for the most part compiled from an article in “Illustrated American Biography”:

Arthur B. Farquhar is of Scotch, English and German ancestry, whose history has been long and prominently identified with the history of the section of America in which its members are found. On the paternal side his first American ancestor was William F. Farquhar, his great-great-great-grandfather, who emigrated hither from Scotland about the year 1700, being accompanied by a number of religious refugees who sought in the New World freedom of thought and an opportunity to better their condition in life. The little band of emigrants settled in Frederick county, Md. The Farquhar family had been prominent in Scotland, song and story telling of the deeds of the noble chiefs of the Clan Farquhar.

In the maternal line Mr. Farquhar traces his ancestry back to Robert Brook, of the house of Warwick, who was born in the year 1602, and married Mary Baker, daughter of Roger Mainwaring, Dean of Worcester. In 1650 Robert Brook emigrated to America, accompanied by his wife and their ten children and by a retinue of twenty-eight servants. He took up his abode in Charles county, Md., and that he was a man of prominence and influence in the Colony is manifest from the fact that he was made commandant of Maryland, and eventually president of the Council of Maryland. His children and grandchildren settled in what is now known as Montgomery county, that State, whence their descendants have become scattered throughout the various States of the Union.

Amos Farquhar, grandfather of Arthur B., removed in 1812 to York county, Pa., where he erected a cotton factory, conducting the enterprise with a due measure of success until after the close of the war with England, when its prosperity abruptly declined, and he thereafter turned his attention to farming and school teaching.

William Henry Farquhar, father of Arthur B., was born at York, Pa., June 14, 1813. He was a learned man, a student from childhood, being a thorough and well advanced Latin and Greek scholar at the age of thirteen years. Though he was a man of fine literary attainments, his intellectual did not confine itself to the classics and allied lines, for he became a mathematician of high reputation. At an early age he accompanied his father to Montgomery county, Md., where they established a seminary for young women, the institution gaining marked prestige in the educational field of the State.

Arthur B. Farquhar was born in Montgomery county, Md., Sept. 28, 1838, and his early educational training was received in Benjamin Haillowell’s select school for boys, at Alexandria, Va. His father had become connected with agricultural pursuits, and after leaving school Arthur B. acted as manager of the paternal farmstead for the period of one year. However, he had early manifested a predilection for mechanics, in which his father wisely encouraged him, affording him every possible advantage for improving his practical mechanical education. The young man was alert and self-reliant, and he has consistently maintained the highest respect and regard for the dignity of honest toil and for those who devote themselves to it. His practical mind showed him that success depends upon the thorough mastering of even the simplest details of any business or mechanical art, and that “here is the master key: skilled hands and industry.” Thus he was content to begin at the bottom round, and in 1856 he came to York, Pa., to learn the machinist’s trade. Here he has remained ever since, and the record of his brilliant achievements makes a worthy page in the history of the city of his adoption.

At the expiration of two years he secured a partnership interest in the establishment in which he had labored so effectively and with such marked enthusiasm. The concern prospered until the dark cloud of civil war obscured the national horizon, depressing all lines of commercial activity, at which critical period the business of the firm flagged appreciably, and a further loss, by a disastrous fire, practically completed the overthrow of the enterprise. The assets were barely sufficient to render possible the payment of twenty-five cents on the dollar in liquidating the indebtedness, and to one of Mr. Farquhar’s principles such a settlement was more a matter of personal grief than the loss of his own accumulations. His first ambition was to seek some means of retrieving his stranded fortunes and re-establishing his capital. To this end he conferred with his creditors and persuaded them to effect a radically different settlement, by which he could resume his business operations, and by careful management and well-directed efforts he was enabled, at the expiration of three years, to liquidate his obligations in full.

From this period the record of the growth and expansion of the business, until it developed into the present magnificent industry of the A. B. Farquhar Company, is one of progress. The successful management of an enterprise of such magnitude is indubitable evidence of Mr. Farquhar’s capacity for affairs of breadth, and his own standing testifies to his unswerving honor as a man among men. The enterprise had its inception in a modest establishment, a small frame shop, in which employment was afforded to a few workmen. In 1889 the A. B. Farquhar Company, Limited, was organized and duly incorporated, with a capital stock of $500,000, all of which stock is owned by the Farquhar family. Of this company, whose constantly increasing business has now reached an annual aggregate of more than one million dollars, Arthur B. Farquhar is president, and to him is due in a large measure the wonderful success of the business. The products of the establishment not only find sale in the most diverse sections of the Union, but are also exported to the Argentine Confederation, Brazil, Chili and South Africa, and to Mexico and Russia, where the concern has a large trade—practically to all parts of the civilized world.

Mr. Farquhar has shown the value of actual familiarity with every detail of manufacturing and has displayed especial wisdom in furthering the success of the enterprise by his careful discrimination in the selection of foremen for the various departments of the establishment, all being men who are masters of the various mechanical operations conducted under their superintendency. The characteristic motto of the concern is: “Perfection attained, success assured.” This has been adhered to in the smallest details, and its promises of cause and effect fully realized.

From the time of Mr. Farquhar’s removal to York his name has always been synonymous with progress, and the present conspicuous position the hold as a manufacturing center is in no small degree owing to his efforts in the line of general progress, to which he may be said to have devoted as much time as he has to the furthering of his personal interests. For though a thorough business man, Mr. Farquhar is best known throughout the nation and among the statesmen of foreign lands as a student of and authority upon questions of political economy, with special reference to finance and tariff legislation. Perhaps this has been the result of intimate association with business affairs upon a man of his tendencies. At any rate, with a mind thoroughly practical and well disciplined, and evidencing highest intellectuality, he has brought his forces to bear upon the great economic questions of the day, and as a cogent and forceful writer upon such topics has gained the attention of thinking minds throughout the world. He has established his points by well-taken tenets, enforced by wide and discriminating observations, careful study of minute details and cognizance of statistical values. His essays along these lines have been published in the New York and Philadelphia papers, Boston papers and magazines, and have commanded pronounced recognition for their wisdom and freedom from partisan bias, while his pamphlets on finance—notably the silver question—have been circulated by the thousands. On Feb. 14, 1890, in response to a request from the Reform Club of New York City, Mr. Farquhar delivered an address upon the great economic question of the day, and subsequently this was embodied in a publication of nearly five hundred pages, bearing the title of “Economic and Industrial Delusions,” the same being a discussion of the case for protection. The titles of the several chapters give an idea of the scope of the work: The Case for Protection Examined, Abuse of Party Allegiance, Balance of Trade and Currency Supply, Paternal Governments and Industrial Progress, Foreign Countries as Commercial Rivals, Prices versus Wages, the Home Market, the Ideal Revenue with Incidental Protection, Protection and Agriculture, Special Discussions, the Silver Question. In the compilation of this most meritorious work, Mr. Farquhar had as an able collaborator his brother, Henry Farquhar, and the book is considered in the light of an authority upon the various topics touched, bearing the unmistakable mark of patient study, careful research and wide knowledge, and showing the spirit of utmost fairness, while voicing honest convictionsably guarded against attack. In this publication Mr. Farquhar clearly elucidates the ills that would arise from the free coinage of silver and from a high protective tariff, demonstrating that the first would unsettle the financial stability of the country, and that the latter stands as a barrier to the exchange of the manufactured goods of our workshops.

Mr. Farquhar’s distinctive individuality is nowhere more apparent than in the matter of his political proclivities, since he exercises his franchise not according to the regulation party lines, but as his judgment dictates. He was a strong supporter of President Cleveland, whose administration he considered an honest one, tending to conserve the best interests of the nation. At previous elections he had supported Lincoln, Blaine and Garfield.

In 1892 Mr. Farquhar was nominated, by Hon. Robert E. Pattison, then governor of the State of Pennsylvania, as one of the State commissioners to represent the old Keystone Commonwealth at the World's Columbian Exposition held in Chicago in 1893. At the meeting of the State commissioners he was elected executive commissioner, and later was still further honored in being chosen president of the National Association of Executive Commissioners, representing all the States. He visited Europe about this time, acting under a commission from the government, and there rendered valuable service in the interests of the World's Fair.

In January, 1897, Mr. Farquhar was appointed by Gov. Hastings as delegate from Pennsylvania to the Coast Defence Convention called by the governor of Florida to meet at Tampa, that State, and over which Gen. J. M. Schofield presided. On that occasion Mr. Farquhar delivered a very able address, whose lofty sentiment and broad humanitarian principles impressed his audience deeply. Mr. Farquhar is a member of the American Peace Congress and of the World's Peace Congress, and in this connection has made addresses which have attracted world-wide attention, notably at the great Peace gatherings held at Washington, D. C., Boston and Mohonk Lake. He belongs to almost every Reform Society in America, being an active member of at least twenty such bodies. He is also a member of the world-famous Cobden Club of England. No man in York county is more widely known or more highly esteemed at home and abroad.

From the foregoing it will be seen that Mr. Farquhar is not limited by his business interests—they, if anything, widened his outlook and strengthened his position on other subjects. He ranks deservedly among the distinguished and successful men of the nation, yet he never loses sight of matters pertaining to the welfare of the city of his residence, and has done much to further its progress and material prosperity. He is a member of the Board of Trade; a director in the York Trust, Real Estate & Deposit Company; and was until recently proprietor of the York Gazette. He is a director of the Philadelphia Museum and president of the York Hospital; vice-president and member of the Executive Committee of the National Association of Manufacturers; and a member of the Cosmos Club of Washington, D. C. He is also president of the Park Commission, and it was through his efforts that York secured her attractive park system. At the time of the war of the Rebellion, when York was invaded by Confederate forces, Mr. Farquhar arranged with the commanding officer of the enemy for the protection of the town, by payment of a comparatively small sum, and not a dollar's worth of property was taken. For this timely service he received the personal thanks of President Lincoln and the Secretary of War, Mr. Stanton.

In person Mr. Farquhar has a physique that is typical of strength and vitality, and he devotes the major portion of his time and attention to the great industrial concern at whose head he stands. In speech he is quick and decisive, impressing his hearers with the evidence of his sound judgment and his power of instantly comprehending and summing up the true values of things, there being no vacillation or hesitation in his manner of address. He is easily approachable, cordial, and signal free from ostentation. Generous and quick in his sympathies, he is honored by and holds the affectionate regard of his employees, while he wins friends wherever he goes. Those in his employ realize that he has cognizance of true manhood and that he feels a deep interest in their welfare, ever standing ready to reward their faithful service.

Mr. Farquhar was married, in 1860, to Miss Elizabeth Jessop, daughter of Edward Jessop, who was a leading hardware merchant of Baltimore, and president of the Short Mountain and the Tunnelton Coal Companies, his country seat having been in Spring Garden township, York county. To Mr. and Mrs. Farquhar three sons have been born, William E., Percival and Francis.

JERE CARL, president of the York Water Company, and a prominent capitalist of York, has been variously identified with this city for considerably over a quarter of a century, and has done much for its material development and prosperity. Mr. Carl is the only surviving child of Martin and Mary (Dear-doff) Carl, and his birth occurred in Franklin township, York county, July 21, 1829.

Martin Carl was born Oct. 17, 1782, and was reared and educated in York county, where for a number of years he was engaged in mercantile pursuits. He was a Democrat in politics, and usually took an active part in the mangagement of local affairs, holding at different times nearly all of the offices in Franklin township. He served one term as director of the poor for York county. His death occurred June 29, 1855, his remains being interred in Prospect Hill cemetery. He had been the father of eleven children, all of whom are deceased except Jere: Henry; Martin D.; Lewis; Jere; Sarah, who married Christian Bender, of York; Mary A., who married Peter Wolford; Lydia, who married Joshua Green; Elizabeth; Andrew; and two who died in infancy.

Jere Carl was educated in the common schools, and was reared to habits of economy and thrift. At an early age he became an apprentice in the office of the York Democratic Press, where he learned the trade of printer, which, however, he never followed. At the close of his apprenticeship Mr. Carl was made a clerk in the store of his brother Lewis, at York, and remained with him for seven years.
On Jan. 1, 1853, he secured a clerkship in the old York Bank, which he held up to Jan. 1, 1867. In the latter year he formed a partnership with Charles Weiser and Charles S.
Weiser, under the firm name of Weiser, Son & Carl, bankers. This firm continued to do a private banking business until Jan. 1, 1889, when their bank was consolidated with the York County National Bank, with which institution Mr. Carl has remained as an officer and director.

Mr. Carl has also turned his attention to other business concerns and projects. He has been a leading spirit in the advocacy of good roads, and to his efforts is largely due the present meritorious condition of a number of the dest roads in York county. He is president of the York and Gettysburg Turnpike Company, treasurer of the York and Chanceford Turnpike Company, and has for some years been secretary of the Wrightsville Turnpike Company. He is also president of the York Water Company, which erected the splendid new system of water works, which is unexcelled by anything in the State in utility, effectiveness and completeness, and which has a capital stock of nearly a million dollars. The water works were built with an immense capacity, not only providing for present needs, but future contingencies and increased population.

Mr. Carl was married Jan. 10, 1861, to Miss Adeline Weiser, daughter of Charles Weisr, of York, and to this union three children were born: a son, who died in infancy; Charles, who died Feb. 27, 1882; and Bella, who mar-rried, Nov. 5, 1896, William A. Keyworth, treasurer of the Martin Carriage Works. Mrs.
Carl died Feb. 23, 1897.

Jere Carl has been uniformly active in religious matters, and in various philanthropic and charitable movements. He is a member of St. Paul’s Lutheran Church, has been the lay representative to the General Synod to that church on several occasions, is a member of the board of Church Extension and of the church council. Mr. Carl is a member of the various Masonic bodies, and in his earlier years was one of the chief spirits in the organization of the various branches. In politics he is a Democrat, and was elected chief burgess of the borough of York in 1874, 1876 and 1878, but has carefully eschewed partisan politics as an office seeker or promoter.

Mr. Carl is, perhaps, prouder of no connection in his busy and successful career than the part he has taken as a member of the Volunteer Fire Department of York. He joined the Vigilant Fire Co., Oct. 8, 1848, and retired as an officer Jan. 1, 1904, having been an officer of that noted organization for a continuous period of fifty years. Mr. Carl is a traveled and cultivated gentleman, having visited all of the prominent countries of Europe, and his intelligent observations while abroad form the theme of most interesting conversation, Mr. Carl’s conversational powers being

HON. W. F. BAY STEWART, for ten years Judge of the Courts of York county, and prominently connected with several mammoth enterprises whose scope and influence are as far-reaching as the confines of the country, has been the architect of his own fortune. Professionally he has attained a high position through his sterling integrity and sound judgment, as well as his erudition; while in the in-BIographies

Industrial and financial world his projects have, by their uniform success, shown the master mind that conceived and executed them.

Judge Stewart is of Scotch-Irish extraction in both paternal and maternal lines. He was born in Chanceford township, York county, Feb. 25, 1849, son of Thomas Roland Stewart. His mother was a daughter of Thomas Bay, of Coopstown, Harford Co., Md., who for many years was Judge of the Orphans' Court of Harford county, and who commanded an artillery company at the battle of North Point.

Judge Stewart secured a good English education, both classical and scientific, and has always been a close student, particularly in the realm of abstruse thought and speculative philosophy. He attended the public schools until seventeen years of age, and later was a student of Pleasant Grove Academy, in Lower Chanceford, and afterward in the historic York County Academy, at York. He received the honorary degree of A. M. from Ursinus College. After leaving school he taught in the public schools two years and then in the York County Academy—the same institution in which Thaddeus Stevens once taught. Early in his career he determined upon a professional life, and when he gave up teaching it was to enter upon the study of law with Col. Levi Maish, who was afterward a member of Congress from the York-Adams and Cumberland district. He was admitted to the Bar Nov. 3, 1873, and two years later he formed a partnership with John Blackford, then district attorney of the county, and a leading lawyer of the York Bar. This partnership continued uninterruptedly until Mr. Blackford's death, in 1884. On Oct. 1, 1884, Judge Stewart entered into a partnership with Henry C. Niles and George E. Neff, and this was terminated only with the elevation of Judge Stewart to the Bench in 1895. It was but a short time after he began practice that he found himself in the front rank of the legal practitioners. Lawyers grown old in experience looked with favor on this young man, whom learning and natural ability had made "a foe man worthy of their steel." Quick to grasp details, prompt in execution, gifted with keen insight into legal principles, he was bound to win prominent place in whatever career he chose. In 1895 came to him, unsolicited, the nomination of the party for the judgeship, and although he declined to make a personal canvass to secure the election he won by a large majority over his competitor, who was just completing a ten years' term on the Bench.

Judge Stewart has always been a busy man. While giving much care and study to the profession he adorns, he has shown great activity in other lines. He has always taken a deep interest in economics and finance and at the time he was elected Judge he was president of the Security Title & Trust Company, which he assisted in organizing, and which is now one of the leading financial institutions of the city. At the same time he was interested in many corporations, in nearly all of which he was a chief promoter, and all of which have been exceptionally prosperous. From 1883 to April 1, 1894, Judge Stewart had been engaged in the foundry, machine and tanning business as a partner of the firm of Baughner, Kurtz & Stewart, composed of William H. Kurtz, a local capitalist and himself. Mr. Kurtz had no practical knowledge of the business, and at the time the enterprise was started Judge Stewart had still less, but the latter applied himself closely to learn the details, and by his business sagacity soon made it one of the largest and most successful industries of the city, employing large numbers of men. At a time when there was a disagreement among the officers of the York Card & Paper Company, manufacturers of wall paper, he took hold of the business, became its president, and has made it one of the largest plants of its kind in the world.

In addition to the industrial concerns already referred to above, Judge Stewart was instrumental in the establishing, in 1889, of the York Knitting Mills Company, of which he is president. In 1900 he also established and organized the Norway Iron & Steel Company, and is its president. Judge Stewart was one of the two organizers of the York Haven Water & Power Company, being vice-president of the same, with Henry L. Carter as president—these two being the principal owners. The placing of all the bonds of this great project by Judge Stewart at a time when work had not been begun was regarded in the financial world as evidence of unusual ability in this line, and established his reputation as a financier of high order. Among other interests of the Judge may be mentioned the York Haven Paper Company; and the York County Traction Company—he and Grier Hersh, together with Capt. W. H. Lanius, having brought about the consolidation of the two electric light companies, the steam heating company and a dozen or more electric railway companies, in all of which Judge Stewart was a director. His interest in the Security Title & Trust Company did not begin and end with his official position, but he was the president of the company at the time of building the elegant structure which that company owns and occupies.

The enterprises named have all been confined to York county, but beyond the borders of his home Judge Stewart has set on foot several companies that will play a prominent part in the development of Alaska. He was one of the chief organizers and is president of the Valdez-Yukon Railway Company, now building a railroad from Valdez, in Alaska, through the Copper river country to the Yukon river, a distance of 412 miles. It certainly would require a large volume to tell intelligently of all the industrial and financial concerns in which he is interested. The mind that can conceive and execute so many great and varied enterprises is beyond the conception of the average man, however much may be appreciated the upright character that has accomplished so much, and even in the fierce limelight beating on the holder of exalted station he can show an unblemished honor and untarnished reputation.

Judge Stewart was married to Laura E. Danner, daughter of the late Edward Danner, one of York's wealthiest and best known citizens. She died Oct. 10, 1900, and her only daughter has since presided over the comfortable home on West Market street, York.

Judge Stewart retired voluntarily from the Bench on Jan. 1, 1906, after a service of ten years thereon. Asserting that it was beneath the dignity of his judicial office to enter into an active canvass to secure a renomination or election, he refused to be an active candidate to succeed himself. He left unsotted the judicial ermine which he assumed ten years ago, and his declination was received by the people generally with sincere and manifest regret.

MICHAEL B. SPAHR, a retired merchant and business man of York, Pa., has had connection with the commercial interests of the city for half a century. During that period his operations at times have been extensive, especially during the time of the Civil war, and he has been at all times a prominent factor in business circles. In 1901 he retired from active work, but still retains an interest in some of the financial concerns of the city, and takes a lively interest in its growing prosperity.

Born in 1830, in East Berlin, Adams Co., Pa., as a boy his first business experience was in a country store, where he was employed for three or four years. In 1848 he changed his residence to York, Pa., to become a student in the York County Academy for a short time, and there he again accepted a situation as clerk in a store where he was employed until 1855. At this time he engaged in the wholesale and retail notion business, for himself, in a small way at first, but as trade increased he kept adding a greater variety of stock, from time to time, in 1858 adding a line of boots and shoes. This had never before been attempted in York—the carrying of a large stock of boots and shoes to supply retail stores, and Mr. Spahr may justly claim to have been the pioneer wholesale boot and shoe merchant of York. This line eventually grew to become his principal business. In 1877 he discontinued the retail business entirely. From 1884 the business was confined to a single line, the jobbing of boots and shoes. In that year the firm of M. B. Spahr & Sons was founded—Mr. Spahr admitting into the firm his three sons, George Walter, Philip B. and Franklin—which was continued until 1901. During the forty years there were many traveling salesmen employed, soliciting orders from samples, the larger part of sales being made in this way. The business was located on Centre Square, York. In 1870 Mr. Spahr purchased the northeast corner of Center Square, which was considered the most valuable business location in the town, and after demolishing the old building he erected the most attractive business house in the town at that time, known as the Spahr building. It is three stories high, with a handsome mansard roof, and for architectural beauty it has not been surpassed in the city to this day, although it was built thirty-five years ago. It stands as a monument to the ability, courage and intelligent foresight of the builder, anticipating his wants for the future, and he still owns the property, which is not likely to change hands during his lifetime. He now occupies an office in the Rupp building, on Center Square, where he attends to his private business.

long and important has been Mr. Spahr's connection with the interests of the city: He was a charter member of the Farmers National Bank of York, and served as director of same continuously for thirty years; is one of the two oldest living members of the board of trustees of the York County Academy (the oldest educational institution in York), having served thirty-seven years in that capacity; an ex-president of the York County Historical Society; and the oldest living member of the Board of Church Extension of the General Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in the United States, on which he has served twenty-five years, being its present vice-president.

JACOB HAY, M. D., was for over forty years engaged in medical practice in the borough of York and surrounding country. He had an extensive patronage, practically succeeding his father in the confidence and popular esteem of the community. For the long period of over three-quarters of a century father and son attended faithfully to the arduous duties of the most exacting of professions, and with such success that they counted several generations of many families among their friends and patrons. Both represented that class in the profession generally known as "family physicians," the doctors on whom patients rely so implicitly that their mere presence is a comfort in times of sickness or distress.

The family of Hay is of Scottish origin, being descended from Thomas Hay, a husbandman of Scotland who, with his two sons, was working in a field near the battlefield of Loncartie, during an invasion of Scotland by the Danes in the year 980. Seeing the enemy's steady advance he and his two sons rushed to the head of the Scottish troops, and with no weapons but their ox-yokes succeeded in rallying the frightened soldiers and at length drove the Danes to their ships. As a reward for his bravery he was called before the King, Kenneth II, who knighted him, and loosing a falcon, said he would give Hay all the land over which the bird should fly, "from sunrise till sunset," which comprised a considerable estate in the County of Perth. Since that time many of the descendants of Thomas Hay have held high office in Scotland, notably Gilbert, who was a partisan of Robert Bruce, and was constituted by him Lord High Constable of the Kingdom in 1315, for life, "with remainder of his heirs forever." The present head of the house is Charles Gore Hay, LL. D., Earl of Errol, Baron Kilmarnock, of Slains Castle, Cruxden, Aberdeenshire, Scotland.

The family has been long represented in York county, the first member to settle here having been Jacob Hay, who emigrated from Scotland in Colonial days and made his home in what was then the Province of Pennsylvania, at York. He became a prominent merchant, and served as a justice of the peace.

Dr. Jacob Hay, Sr., son of the emigrant, was born in York, and received his early education there. He completed his literary training with a course at Princeton College, graduating from that institution, and then became a student of medicine with the famous Dr. John Spangler, in his day so well known all over York county. He graduated in medicine at the University of Maryland, and afterward located in the city of York for general practice, in which he continued actively for fifty five years. His standing in his profession was unsurpassed by any physician of his day in the city or county, and he was equally prominent as an enlightened and public-spirited citizen of the municipality, ever ready to give of his time and means to the furtherance of any good project. Perhaps his intimate association with the lives of the people, and his extensive riding into different localities in the pursuit of his professional work, gave him an insight into the needs of the community that few had the opportunity to gain, and the affectionate esteem which so many had for him made his influence a power to be reckoned with. He took an interest in everything that pertained to the local welfare, served as a trustee of the York County Academy and was for a number of years president of the York Bank.

Dr. Hay married Sarah Beard, whose family also settled early in York county, her father, George Beard, being one of the first emigrants to make a settlement in what is now Spring Garden township. The Indians were still on his land when he took up his home there, and he gave them a pick and shovel to gain their friendship and strengthen his title to the property. He followed farming and also kept hotel. Dr. Hay and his wife both passed away in the year 1875, he in April and she in July. They were members of the Lutheran Church. Eight children were born to them, namely: (1) John, who became a successful physician, died at the age of forty-two. (2) Mary E., now deceased, was the widow of Dr. J. A. Brown, president of the Lutheran Theological Seminary, at Gettysburg. (3) Caroline is deceased. (4) Lucy, now deceased, was the widow of W. H. Davis. (5) Jacob is mentioned below. (6) William graduated from Pennsylvania College, and was a highly successful lawyer and a prominent member of the York Bar until his death, which occurred at the comparatively early age of forty-seven. He was a man of brilliant intellectual gifts and equally high character, and had an honored place in the community. He was a Republican Presidential elector from his district in 1876. (7) Henry and (8) Sarah are deceased.

Dr. Jacob Hay, Jr., was born in York in 1833. He received his early education in the York County Academy and began reading medicine in his father's office, subsequently entering the Medical Department of the University of Maryland. He graduated in the spring of 1854, and from that time until his death, in 1897, was in continuous practice in his native place. Dr. Hay will live in the memories of many who looked upon him as a friend in the truest sense of the word. His skill as a physician enabled him to sustain successfully the reputation established by his honored father, but his worth as a man counted for just as much in his relations with his fellow citizens. He took a deep interest in the question of public education, and served a number of years as a member of the board of school control in York, for several years acting as president of that body. He was a prominent member of the York County Medical Society, of which he served as president, and also held membership in the State Medical Society and the National Medical Association. Fraternally he was a Knight Templar Mason, belonging to the York Commandery. His death, which occurred Oct. 18, 1897, was widely mourned in many circles, and he was laid to rest in Prospect Hill cemetery with many marks of loving regard.

In 1865 Dr. Hay was united in marriage with Miss Catherine L. E. Smyser, daughter of Joseph Smyser, of York. Five children came to this union: Sarah (Nellie), who is the wife of Francis A. Stevens and lives at Overbrook, near Philadelphia; Lucy Kate, wife of Charles A. Weeks, residing in Philadelphia; Dr. Joseph S., a graduate of Harvard, now practicing in Boston, Mass.; Katie S., who is at home; and Jacob, who has not yet completed his education. Mrs. Hay still resides at the family home, No. 141 West Market street, York. She and her family belong to the Lutheran Church, of which the Doctor was also a member.

SMYSER. The Smyser family, to which Mrs. Hay belongs, is one of the oldest and most prominent in York county. The name was originally Schmeisser, which translated means "one who throws," and the laurel branch was the emblem of the family. The first of whom we have record is Martin Schmeisser, a farmer, who became second commanding officer under Frederick V, and was mortally wounded at the battle near Wurtemberg. His last words were, "Though all the world is lost, I stand firm in my faith." [Menzel's "History of German Warriors."] He was a member of the Lutheran Church in the parish of Lustenan. Later his wife, Anna Barbara, aged fifty years, emigrated to America in the vessel "Brittania." Michael Franklin, master, being accompanied by her daughter, Margaret, aged twenty years, and her two sons, Mathias, aged sixteen, and George, aged nine. They sailed from Rotterdam Sept. 1, 1731.

Mathias Schmeisser (1), son of Martin and Anna Barbara, was born Feb. 17, 1715, in the village of Rugelbach, belonging to the parish of Lustenan, about six miles west of Dinkelsbuhl, Germany. Dinkelsbuhl is a considerable town within a few miles of the boundary of the Kingdom of Bavaria. Rugelbach is situated within a few miles of the boundary which divides that Kingdom from that of Bavaria. Dinkelsbuhl is nearly in a straight line between Stuttgart and Nuremberg, about seventy-five miles from the former and sixty miles west-southwest from the latter. Mathias Schmeisser made his first settlement in the neighborhood of Kreutz Creek, York county, where he followed the weaving business, soon afterward taking up a large body of land in the vicinity of what is now called Spring Forge, in the same county. It is said that, anxious to get neighbors, Mathias made presents of several farms from his own tract to such as agreed to improve and live on them. Whether his brother George was one of those who received a plantation from him on the same terms mentioned is not certainly known, but it is known that the two brothers were neighbors at the above named place, and it is said that Mathias, after some years’ residence there, finding that he had parted with the best portion of his land, sold out and purchased a tract of about 400 or 500 acres from a Mr. Henthorn, about three miles west of York, to which he removed May 3, 1745. On this farm he continued to reside until his death, in 1778.

George Schmeisser, Mathias’ brother, purchased a farm somewhere between York and York Haven, where he resided several years, and then, not being pleased with the quality of his land, he sold it and removed to the backwoods, as the west and southwest country was then called, probably to some part of Virginia, and nothing from the time of his removal is definitely known of him. There are, however, Smysers residing in the neighborhood of Louisville, Ky., and it is thought that they are descendants of George Smyser, the brother of Mathias.

Mathias Schmeisser (1) married Anna Wolfgang Copenhaver, who was born June 5, 1717, and who died Feb. 13, 1763. Her funeral was very large, and the following hymns were sung: “Lo now I wish you goodnight,” and “Oh, Jesus Christ, The Light of my Life.” The text of the funeral sermon was from Luke X, 41-42. Rev. L. Rous was the minister in charge. Mrs. Schmeisser left to survive her a husband, three sons and six daughters, out of a family of eleven children: Col. John Michael; Mathias Jacob; Mathias Maria Dorotha; Sabina; Rosanna; Elizabeth; Anna Maria; and Susan. Those deceased were John George; and Daniel, who died young. Mathias Schmeisser (1) died April 12, 1778.

(1) Col. John Michael Schmeisser, the eldest, was born in 1740, and died in 1810. He was long and widely known as a respectable farmer and tavern-keeper, the owner of a well-cultivated farm of about 200 acres, which was cut from a portion of his father’s farm, and, although not favored with a liberal education, was known as a man of discriminating mind and sound judgment. He was early associated with the leading Revolutionary patriots of the country, and marched to the battlefield as captain of a company in Col. M. Swope’s regiment, and was one of those who were taken prisoner at Fort Washington, on the Hudson, near New York, on Nov. 16, 1776. He became colonel of his regiment, and the sword carried by him in the War of Independence may now be seen in the York County Historical Society’s rooms. In 1778 he was elected one of the members of the House of Representatives in the State Legislature for York county, and from that time until 1790 he was seven times chosen to serve in that capacity. In 1790 and 1794 he was elected to the State Senate, serving until 1798. He left three sons and four daughters: Peter, Elizabeth, Sarah, Jacob, Mary, Michael and Susan.

(2) Mathias Jacob Schmeisser, son of Mathias, was born in 1742, and died in 1794. He was also a respectable farmer, and for some years a justice of the peace. In 1789 he was elected to the House of Representatives, and a few years afterward died at the age of fifty-one years. He left children: Henry, Jacob, Martin, John, Catherine, Daniel, Peter and Adam.

(3) Mathias Schmeisser (2) (or Smyser), the youngest of the three surviving sons, born Feb. 1, 1744, resided at the mansion home of his father, where he quietly pursued the useful occupation of an agriculturist, laboring with his own hands for many years, and maintaining in the course of a long life the well earned reputation of an honest man of the strictest integrity. In the Revolutionary war he was also in the service for some time, not as a soldier, but as a teamster, conducting a baggage wagon, and was throughout a zealous advocate of the Whig cause. He lived to be over eighty-four years old, a greater age, by several years, than any of his brothers or sisters attained.

(4) Maria Dorotha, the eldest daughter, who married Peter Hoke, left eight children: Michael, Clarissa, Catherine, Peter, Jacob, Sarah, Polly and George.

(5) Sabina married Jacob Swope, and resided in Lancaster county, where she left five sons, Jacob, George, Matthias, Imanuel, Frederick and two daughters.

(6) Rosanna married George Moul and resided for some years in the town of York, and afterward removed to Virginia, with her husband, locating between Noland’s Ferry on the Potomac and Leesburg in Loudoun county, where she died about 1796 or 1797, leaving four daughters and one son, Susan, Catherine, Polly, Peggy and Philip. Elizabeth, George and Daniel, each having lived to the age of twenty years, and Peggy and Philip having died since 1806.

(7) Elizabeth married Leonard Eichelberger, and at the time of her death was residing near Dillsburg, York county. She left four sons, Jacob, Frederick, George and John, and four daughters whose names are not known.

(8) Anna Maria, born in 1757, died in 1833. She married Martin Ebert, and left George, Martin, Daniel, Adam, Michael, Susan, Helena and Anna Mary.

(9) Susan, the youngest daughter, born in 1769, died in 1840. She married Philip Ebert, and left one son and four daughters to survive her: Henry, Elizabeth, Catherine, Lydia, and Sarah; her youngest son, Michael, died about a year before his mother. He had resided in St. Louis, Mo., where he had engaged as a merchant. Her second daughter, the wife of Henry Small, also died about two years previous to her mother’s death.

Thus we have sixty-four grandsons and daughters of Mathias Schmeisser the elder, nearly all of whom are now living and have or have had families.

In April, 1839, Mathias Smyser (3), grandson of Mathias (1), set out to make a tour through a part of Europe. He was then fifty-six years old and had spent his past life as a farmer in York county. The main object of his trip to Europe was to visit the birthplace of his grandfather. There was nothing in this country by which the place of his nativity could be traced except the inscription on his tombstone in the burying ground of the Lutheran Church, in the borough of York. Mr. Smyser sailed from New York for Havre, France, where he arrived in safety. From Havre he traveled through the interior of France to Geneva; from Geneva his main route was to Lausanne, Berne, Basel, Freiburg, Strassburg, Baden, Karlsruhe, Stuttgart, Kraslheim and then to Dinkelsbuhl, where he inquired for Rugelbach, and found that he was within six miles of his destination. This is a small village inhabited by farmers, and in itself is nothing interesting to a stranger, but to him who sought it as being the birthplace of his ancestor, it was a spot of intense interest. When the house was pointed out to him, in which his grandfather had been born 124 years previous, still known by the name of Schmeisser’s house, though its present occupants were of another name, when he beheld this time-worn, humble mansion, when he entered it and felt a consciousness of being within the same walls, probably treading upon the same floor which more than a century ago had been trodden by his grandfather, his gratification can hardly be imagined by us who have not experienced it. Mr. Smyser called upon the then pastor of the parish, the Reverend Sieskind, and made known to him his desire to see his grandfather’s name on the baptismal register. The reverend gentleman opened the ancient book, but through age and accident it had become much mutilated, and it took hours of patient search before the following interesting entry was found: “Mathias Schmeisser, born 17th day of February, 1715, son of Martin Schmeisser and his wife. Anna Barbara, was baptized,” etc. This record agrees precisely with that on his tombstone in America. The minister next led Mr. Smyser to the church of the parish and pointed out to him the taufsteine, assuring him that, according to the unvarying custom, before that stone, and on that spot, his grandfather had been baptized. In the register mentioned above and also in that of a village called Dreiber, some miles distant, the name of Schmeisser was very often found. Mathias Smyser met with a man named Andrew Schmeisser at or near Mosbach, who was sixty-seven years of age, with whom he was greatly pleased, seeing in him a strong resemblance to his own father, especially when the latter was about the same age. They may have been second cousins, although Andrew Schmeisser had no recollection of hearing that a Mathias Schmeisser had emigrated to America.

Mathias Schmeisser (1), and his brother George, were among the original members of Christ Lutheran Church, of York, the first Lutheran congregation organized in York and its vicinity, soon after his arrival in America. Their names are found on the record of the members of that congregation, which commenced the erection of a church, a wooden structure, in 1752. In the graveyard connected with this church, in 1778, his body was interred, the evidence of which is found on his tombstone.

The Smyser family were all warm and active supporters of the American cause during the Revolutionary struggle, Col. Michael Smyser being a useful man in the councils of that time, as well as in the field. When the war commenced in 1775, and the port of Boston was closed, for the purpose of starving the people of that important point into submission, a committee of twelve persons of York county was formed for the purpose of affording relief to their distressed brethren of Boston. A sum of nearly 250 pounds specie, a large sum at that time, was raised and remitted to John Hancock, afterward president of Congress, with a spirited letter of encouragement and promises of further assistance. These facts are recorded for the honor of our country in the American Archives at Washington with the names of the committee. Michael Smyser was an active and leading member of that committee and remitted as a part of the above sum, from Manchester township, six pounds, twelve shillings and one pence. If the American cause had failed, every member of that committee, as well as their illustrious correspondent, on whose head a price was set, would have forfeited their lives on the scaffold.

To return to the record of the earlier generations in direct line to Mrs. Hay:

Mathias Schmeisser (2), born Feb. 1, 1744, died Feb. 21, 1827. On March 5, 1771, he married Louisa Slagle, who was born May 3, 1744, and died Aug. 26, 1820. They had children as follows: Maria Catharine, who married S. Eichelberger; George, who married Catharine Gardner; Jacob, who married Elizabeth Emig; Anna Maria, who married John Emig; Mathias (3), who married Elizabeth Eyster; Philip, who married Susan Hoyrer; Elizabeth, who died young; and Henry, who married Catharine Spangler.

Mathias Schmeisser (3), born Dec. 29, 1782, died April 7, 1843. In 1804 he married Elizabeth Eyster, who was born in 1776, and who died in 1849. They had two sons and two daughters: Joseph married Sarah Weaver; Samuel married Rebecca Lewis; Sarah married Jacob King; Elizabeth married George Laucks.

Mathias (1), Mathias (2), and Mathias (3) and their wives were all buried in the churchyard of Christ Lutheran Church, in York, but later they were removed to the lot of Joseph and Samuel Smyser, in Prospect Hill cemetery, at York.

Joseph Smyser, son of Mathias (3), was born Feb. 1, 1811, on the old homestead in West Manchester township. He was engaged in farming throughout his active years, but during his closing years lived retired in York, where he died, Jan. 31, 1903. In 1835 he was married to Sarah Weaver, of Adams county, Pa., and they had children as follows: Catherine L. E., the widow of Dr. Jacob Hay, and the historian of the family; Ellen Sarah, widow of Clay Lewis; and Alice M., widow of Dr. J. G. Cannon, residing in York. Mr. Smyser was a charter member of the Union Evangelical Lutheran Church, and always took an active part in its work. He was a Republican in political faith. A man of high character, he stood well among his associates in every walk of life.

HENRY NES, M. D., president of the York National Bank, director of the York Gas Company, is of the fourth generation in York county of a family noted for the versatility and solid attainments of its representatives. Moreover, his grandfather, his father and himself, native sons of York county, have all identified themselves with professional, industrial, financial and legislative history there, and they have woven themselves not only into sectional but national affairs.

In the York Recorder of July 22, 1828, appeared the following obituary notice:

"Died on Saturday evening, the 19th instant, William Nes, Esq., of an extremely painful and lingering disease, aged about sixty-eight years. Mr. Nes was treasurer of York county the usual time the office is held by one individual, and was afterward a representative in the House of Representatives of the General Assembly. For many years he was one of the most enterprising and successful merchants of York, and in all his vocations, whether public or private, he sustained the character of an honest man. He was of an obliging and friendly disposition. To his friends he was devoted, and in his friendships he was ardent and sincere."

This William Nes was the great-grandfather of Dr. Henry Nes. He was born July 13, 1761, was one of York's leading merchants, and took an active part in the affairs of the town. He began business with a general store located at the southwest corner of Market and Water streets, afterward purchasing the property in Center Square now known as Jordan's Corner, which he occupied as a residence and place of business until his death, in 1828. From 1817 to 1820 he held the office of treasurer of York county, and was a member of the Pennsylvania Assembly during the years of 1820 and 1821. William Nes was one of a number of leading citizens of York who organized the York Bank, now the York National Bank, becoming one of its first board of directors. He was married to Elizabeth, a daughter of Rudolph Spengler, the latter one of York's early settlers and a captain in the Revolutionary war. Both William Nes and his wife are buried in Christ Lutheran churchyard.

Hon. Henry Nes, M. D. (son of William Nes), the grandfather of the living representative of that name, colleague of Hon. Thaddeus Stevens in Congress, and a distinguished physician and surgeon, was born in York, May 20, 1802, and died Sept. 10, 1850. On Aug. 25, 1825, he married Elizabeth, daughter of Benjamin Weiser, and five children were born to them: Dr. Charles M.; Arabella, Mrs. E. A. King; Frederick F., who was for many years connected with the United States Coast Survey; Margaret, Mrs. G. W. Doty, of Clintonville, Wis.; and Ada E., wife of Dr. B. F. Spangler, of York. Dr. Henry Nes and his son, Dr. Charles M. Nes, are more fully mentioned in the first volume of this work.

Charles M. Nes, M. D., was born in York, June 26, 1827, and died June 11, 1896. In 1846 he married Caroline, daughter of Jacob King, and the surviving children of this union are: Dr. Henry Nes, Charles M. Nes, E. Gulick Nes, and Elizabeth (Mrs. Eli Forney).

Henry Nes, M. D., the eldest of the four children of the late Dr. Charles M. Nes and Caroline (King) Nes, is descended on his mother's side from the Smysers, who were among the opulent landowners of this section of Pennsylvania. He was born in York, in 1854, and received his education at the York County Academy and the Eastman Business College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Like his father and grandfather his attraction to the medical profession was too strong to be overcome, and he abandoned a position in a York bank to assume professional studies. After graduating from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and assisting his father for a time, he returned to a business career by establishing the York Tack and Nail Works. As active head of that concern for twenty years, he developed it into one of the most prosperous manufactories of the city, retiring from his responsibilities in October, 1905.

Ten years ago Dr. Nes became a director of the York National Bank, and from the first has actively participated in its management. He served for six years as its vice-president, and in January, 1906, was elevated to the presidency, succeeding Grier Hersh, who resigned to become the head of the Maryland Trust Company, of Baltimore. Dr. Nes thus takes rank as one of the leading financiers of this section of the State, and as he brings long and successful experience, the sound physique of middle age, and broad and vigorous mental qualities to bear upon his new duties, both the institution and its president are destined for a future career of even greater usefulness and importance than their past.

GRIER HERSH, the recently elected president of the Maryland Trust Company, of Baltimore, is now taking the position in relation to the leading financial interests of the country that he formerly bore to those of the State of Pennsylvania. His conspicuous ability in the handling of large interests, particularly as regards the management of their finances, has made him one of the prominent figures in banking circles in the East, and made him available for his present position when the Trust Company, on resuming its normal place in the business world, was looking for a capable head. Mr. Hersh severed many associations of long standing in York, his home from birth, in accepting his new responsibilities. No man in the city was more energetic in the promotion of its public utilities or more devoted to its general welfare in the most practical way.

Mr. Hersh was born in York, Jan. 29, 1863, and until the past few months had all his interests centered there. He graduated from the Pennsylvania Military College, at Chester, Pa., in 1880, and in 1884 graduated from Princeton. His ancestors have been identified with professional and business interests in York for several generations, and certain social and public duties were his by inheritance. A disposition to discharge these conscientiously has characterized him throughout his career, and thus he has been prominent in business and public life from early manhood. That he has taken an important part in the upbuilding of the city along the most approved modern lines is indicated from his interest in various large concerns. He is president of the York Gas Company, the York & Maryland Line Turnpike Company, the York & Liverpool Turnpike Company, a director of the York Water Company and the York County Traction Company. In 1895 he was elected president of the York National Bank, one of the largest financial institutions in southern Pennsylvania, and continued in that incumbency until he retired, at the close of the year 1905, to turn his attention to the affairs of the Maryland Trust Company, of Baltimore. Mr. Hersh formally assumed the duties of the incumbency Jan. 2, 1906. The Maryland Trust Company has been one of the most prominent trust companies in the city of Baltimore, but through unfortunate investments was placed in the hands of a receiver about three years ago. However, by careful management, the depositors were all paid in full, and on Dec. 14, 1905, the receivership was removed so that the company could resume regular business. This was accomplished mainly through the efforts of Speyer & Co., of New York, who have a large interest in the Maryland Trust Company, and upon whose recommendation Mr. Hersh was solicited to become the head of the reorganized concern. It bids fair to gain prestige among the most influential banking houses of the country, being financed by some of the strongest concerns in the East, its board of directors including representatives of such firms as Speyer & Co., the Guaranty Trust Company, the North American Trust Company, Lazard Freres, and the Chase National Bank, all of New York; the Girard Trust Company, of Philadelphia; and the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company, of Baltimore. It was a high compliment to Mr. Hersh and an unlooked-for expression of confidence from men familiar with the best talent in banking circles that the offer of such an important connection came to him entirely unsolicited.

As vice-president and later president of the Pennsylvania Bankers Association, Mr. Hersh has long been one of the best known bankers of the State, and he is at the present time a member of the executive council of the American Bankers Association, in which relation, as well as in his present incumbency, he has the privilege of association and co-operation with the leading financiers of America. It is typical of the spirit of the day that so young a man should have been selected for so high an office. In addition to the extensive interests already mentioned, it is likely that the Maryland Trust Company will have charge of the Pennsylvania Railroad interests in and around Baltimore.

Some account of Mr. Hersh's family and social connections will be of interest. He is of typical Pennsylvania ancestry, among his forebears being representatives of three races which have had distinctive bearing on the civilization and prosperity of the State—the German, the Scotch-Irish and the Friends. In the direct maternal line he is the great-grandson of a Revolutionary soldier, Col. David Grier, after whom Mr. Hersh was named, and who was colonel of the 7th Pennsylvania Regiment in the Revolution, and was "mortal wounded at the Massacre of Paoli." Ensign Barnitz, who lost a leg at the battle of Long Island, was also one of his ancestors. Through his mother, Margaret Lewis, Mr. Hersh is also a great-grandson of Major Lewis, who also bore arms in the Revolution, for which he was dismissed from meeting. In this line his earliest ancestor was Nathaniel Newlin, who was a member of the council in 1685, when Penn was governor. The Lewis family were related to Roland Ellis, who established the Merion tract near Philadelphia. Mr. Hersh's Scotch-Irish connections are found among the Griers, McPhersons, McClellans, McLains, and other families whose names are inseparably associated with the history of Pennsylvania. Col. McPherson was in the Revolution and long before was captain of a company which marched with Forbes against Fort Duquesne in 1756; he was also a member of the Provincial Assembly which met in Carpenter's Hall. Of the McLains, Archibald McLain was the chief assistant of Mason and Dixon when they ran the famous line.

Thus Mr. Hersh's Revolutionary ancestry is well authenticated, and by virtue of same he has membership in a number of Revolutionary and Colonial societies. He has likewise been prominent in other social organizations, having been the principal factor in the formation of the Lafayette Club, of which he was the first president, and which includes in its membership the leading business and professional men of York. He was so zealous in the organization and success of the York Country Club, of which he became president, that he built the clubhouse and leased it, with the grounds, to the club. He introduced golf into York, and is himself an enthusiastic player, having golf links on his home grounds, which are admirably adapted for the purpose, comprising three hundred acres. The homestead, built by his great-grandfather nearly a century ago, is in the southern part of the city of York, and has long been the pride of the locality as well as of the family, being in fact one of the finest old places in the State. Indeed, one of the chief regrets Mr. Hersh’s fellow-citizens feel in his acceptance of the presidency of the Maryland Trust Company is his separation from their social life, in which he has had such an active and agreeable part. Mr. Hersh will retain his property and personal interests in York, though his residence be in Baltimore. He was married in 1887 to Miss Julia L. Mayer, daughter of the late John L. Mayer, of York, who in his day was one of the eminent and most eloquent attorneys at the York county Bar.

Mr. Hersh has a well rounded character, particularly well balanced, perhaps, because of the different elements which have entered into its composition. He is a business man of the highest standing without being a slave to money-making; a man of the highest social attainments, finding refreshment and recreation in his social duties and pleasures; a scholar without being a pedant, owning the finest private library in York. He is known as a man of deep information, is popular as a public speaker, and as a writer is well known as the author of valuable articles on finance, as well as of a history of the Scotch-Irish in Pennsylvania. Mr. Hersh gave cordial assistance in raising funds for the families of soldiers of the Spanish-American war, having the spirit of his ancestors in regard to supporting his country in time of need.

DR. GEORGE L. SHEARER was born in 1801 near Littlestown, Pa. His ancestors, Philip Eichelberger and Valentine Shearer, emigrated to Pennsylvania from Germany previous to 1750 and his ancestry on both sides includes Revolutionary soldiers. He attended school in Dillsburg, Pa., 1811, and was graduated in medicine from the University of Maryland in 1825. He began the practice of medicine the same year in Dillsburg and continued it in the same locality from 1825 to 1878. He enjoyed a very large practice, covering an area of 140 square miles. He was a member of the York County Medical and Pennsylvania Medical Societies and the American Medical Association. To his efforts were due, in a great measure, the maintenance of good roads, the incorporation of Dillsburg into a borough, the building of the Dillsburg and Mechanicsburg railroad, of which he was a director, and the acceptance by York county of the free school system. [See report of Pennsylvania Superintendent of Public Instruction, 1887.] He was an earnest supporter of schools and education, as is shown by the fact that his five sons and two daughters were graduated from reputable colleges and universities, and those living are occupying honorable positions in the communities in which they reside.

On March 8, 1827, Dr. Shearer married Eliza Eichelberger, daughter of Jacob Eichelberger, of York, Pa. She was a granddaughter of Peter Dinkle, who was a son of Johan Daniel and Maria Ursula Dinkle, who were distinguished residents of Strasburg, Germany. Many of the leading families of York are their lineal descendants. The copper plate of Johan Daniel Dinkel executed by a noted artist in Germany, 1723, and the prayer book of Maria Ursula, printed in Strasburg, Germany, 1733, are in the possession of the Shearer family. Mrs. Shearer was a highly cultivated and intellectual woman and contributed in no small degree to make their home the hospitable abode of teachers and ministers of every denomination. Dr. Shearer was a member of the Reformed and Mrs. Shearer of the Lutheran Church, but they were liberal supporters of the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches, which were the only denominations having buildings in Dillsburg. On March 8, 1877, Dr. and Mrs. Shearer celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. Among the many guests present were two who were present at their marriage in 1827.

The death of Dr. Shearer occurred June 4, 1878. His funeral was largely attended, and he was widely mourned as “The Beloved Physician”, as he was often called. Four years after his death Mrs. Shearer removed to York, the place of her nativity, where she resided until her death, in 1895.

JAMES MITCHELL SHEARER, their eldest son, who grew to manhood, was born Dec. 25, 1833. He received the degrees of A. B. 1853 and A. M. 1856 from Dickinson College, and M. D. from the University of Pennsylvania, 1857. He began the practice of medicine the same year in Dillsburg. At the breaking out of the Civil war he was appointed examining surgeon for York county, which position he relinquished to enter the service as acting assistant surgeon at the U. S. A. General Hospital, York, Pa. Later he was appointed surgeon to one of the regiments of Pennsylvania Reserves. He was afterward made surgeon in charge of the Soldiers Rest, Washington, D. C., which position he held until the close of the war, when he resumed the practice of medicine in Dillsburg. He was a member of the York County and Pennsylvania State Medical Societies, the American Medical Association and the American Academy of Medicine, of which he was a charter member. In 1857 he was married to Miss Georgia Cowen, of Elmira, N. Y., who died in 1902. Dr. J. M. Shearer died in Dillsburg in 1881, in the forty-eighth year of his age.

George Lewis Shearer was born Oct. 16, 1835. He received from Lafayette College the degree of A. B. 1857, A. M. 1860, and D. D. 1883; was graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1864; was licensed to preach in April, 1864, and ordained in October, 1865, by the Second Philadelphia Presbytery. He was connected with the United States Christian Commission and rendered service on many battlefields in Virginia. He organized schools for the contrabands in Washington, D. C.; entered the service of the American Tract Society in 1862, occupying in it many offices of trust until in 1872 he was made general secretary of the Society in New York City, which position he is filling at present. He was one of the founders of the Presbyterian Union of New York, a trustee of Lafayette College and vice-president of the Evangelical Alliance. On Dec. 27, 1865, he was married to Miss Mary L. W. Ketcham, of Clyde, New York.

Frederick Eichelberger Shearer was born March 27, 1838. He was graduated from Princeton University in 1864, received the degrees of A. B. and A. M. from that institution, and was graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1866. He received the degree of D. D. from Highland University, Kansas, in 1886; was licensed by the Presbytery of Huntingdon at Clearfield, Pa., 1865, and ordained by the Presbytery of Long Island, 1866. He was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Southampton, N. Y., 1867 to 1870. During the Civil war he was superintendent of the operations of the United States Christian Commission, with headquarters at Washington, D. C., and special agencies on battlefields, including that of Gettysburg. At present he is stated clerk of the New York Presbytery, with offices at No. 156 Fifth Avenue, New York. He was married in 1866 to Katharine Baker Russel, of Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

Maria Henrietta Shearer was born April 5, 1840. She was graduated from Cottage Hill College with high honors in 1858. In 1865 she was married to Ensign Logan Dyson, U. S. Navy, who died in 1866. Later she married E. S. Wagoner, of Mechanicsburg, Pa., and died in 1882.

Niles Harrison Shearer was born March 29, 1842. He received the degrees of A. B. and M. D. from the University of Maryland, 1864, and A. M. 1867 from Dickinson College 1866. He was connected with the Medical Department of the United States Army from 1864 to 1866. In 1866 he took charge of one of the oldest drug stores in York, Pa., in which position he continues at the present, being associated in the business with his brother, E. Y. Shearer. He is a member of the York County and Pennsylvania Medical Societies and the American Academy of Medicine. He is the secretary of the York County Bible Society, of which his grandfather, Jacob Eichelberger, was the first secretary. He has been a director and secretary of the First National Bank of York, Pa., for over thirty years.

Juliet Gambrill Shearer was born Jan. 7, 1844. She was graduated from Cottage Hill College, York, Pa., in 1860, and received the degree of M. D. from Howard University, Washington, D. C., 1881. She holds a responsible position in the United States Treasury.

Edgar Young Shearer was born May 19, 1848, and was graduated from Dickinson College, 1870. He received the degree of A. M. 1873, from the same institution and Ph. G. from the New College of Pharmacy, 1873. He was in the drug business in New York City from 1870 to 1896, since which time he has been associated with his brother N. H. Shearer. in business in York, Pa. He has traveled extensively.

The family of Dr. G. L. Shearer had more to do with the history of Dillsburg in the century past than any other family in that locality.

JEGERMIAH SULLIVAN BLACK, lawyer, son of Chauncey F. and Mary (Dawson) Black, was born Oct. 20, 1869, at the home of his maternal grandfather, John L. Dawson, Friendship Hill, Fayette Co., Pa. He spent his boyhood at Willow Bridges, the home of his parents in Spring Garden township, a short distance southwest of York. He obtained his preliminary education at the York Collegiate Institute and at St. Paul's School, at Concord, N. H. In 1887 he entered Princeton University and was graduated from that institution as one of the leaders of his class in 1891. Soon after leaving the University he decided to enter the legal profession, in which his ancestors had won fame and distinction. He pursued his studies in the office of A. N. Green, member of the York county Bar, and was admitted to the practice of law at York in 1894.

Having inherited strong intellectual endowments, and possessing a mind capable of grasping the intricacies of the law, Mr. Black soon rose to prominence in his chosen profession. His ability and attainments became recognized after a few years of practice before the local courts and brought him a large clientele. Early in his professional career his counsel and his services were employed in some of the most important causes tried before the York county courts, as well as the Supreme courts of Pennsylvania and the Federal courts. Mr. Black has been a close and diligent student of the law ever since he entered the Bar. His analysis of legal questions and his earnest and forceful manner of presenting points of law to court or jury have marked him as a natural leader in his profession. During the past few years he has won distinction for his legal acumen, his thorough comprehension of the law and his success at the Bar. In 1906, while representing York county as a delegate to the Democratic State Convention at Harrisburg, he received the unanimous vote of the convention for the office of lieutenant-governor of Pennsylvania. He at first declined the proffered honor, but was persuaded to allow his name to be placed on the ticket. He was one of the ablest speakers of that eventful campaign. Although he was not elected, his ability was universally recognized throughout the State, in nearly every city and town of which he spoke to large audiences.

Mr. Black was married in 1891 to Isabel, daughter of Frederick Edwin Church, of New York. They have four children: Mary, Isabel, Louise and Jeremiah S. Mrs. Black's father was a noted artist. At an early age he painted the Falls of Niagara on the Canada Side. This painting formerly belonged to the John Taylor Johnston collection, and was later sold to the Corcoran Art Gallery at Washington for $12,500. Among the other famous paintings executed by Mr. Church are Andes of Ecuador, Icebergs, Chimborazo, Damascus, The Parthenon, and Evening on the Sea. Soon after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Black took up their residence at Willow Bridges, the former home of his parents. In 1903 they erected a handsome residence near the summit of Webb's Hill, and called it Rural Felicity, at which delightful home they have since resided.

The first American ancestor of Mr. Black came to the Marsh creek region near Gettysburg with the early Scotch-Irish emigration, to what was then part of York county. Shortly after the Revolution they migrated to Somerset county, Pa., where his great-grandfather, Henry Black, was a prominent lawyer and was elected a member of Congress as a Whig in 1841. His grandfather, Jeremiah S. Black, became chief justice of the Supreme court of Pennsylvania, and was an associate in the same court with his lifelong friend, the distinguished jurist, John Bannister Gibson. Judge Black served as attorney general and later as Secretary of State in the cabinet of President Buchanan. After retiring from this position he took up his residence at York, and for a period of twenty-five years was one of the leaders of the American Bar, engaging entirely in the practice of law before the State Supreme courts and the Supreme court of the United States, until his death, in 1884. Chauncey F. Black, father of the subject of this biography, was a distinguished journalist and served as lieutenant-governor of Pennsylvania from 1882 to 1886. He was well known throughout the country as an ardent supporter of the political policies and principles promulgated by Thomas Jefferson, and for a period of ten years was president of an association of Democratic clubs in the United States. Mr. Black's maternal grandfather, John L. Dawson, was a representative in Congress from Fayette and other western counties in Pennsylvania for a period of eight years. He was United States attorney for the Western District of Pennsylvania, and was governor of the Territory of Kansas under Pierce's administration.

GEORGE R. PROWELL, author, educator and journalist, was born in Fairview township, York Co., Pa., Dec. 12, 1849. He obtained his education in the public schools, in the State Normal School at Millersville, Pa., and the University of Wooster, Ohio. After teaching a private academy, for a short time, at Goldsboro, he was elected assistant principal of the York High School, and later served as principal of the High School at Wooster, Ohio, instructor at the York County Academy and superintendent of public schools at Hanover. These positions gave him a varied experience in educational work. While residing at Wooster, Ohio, he studied law with Hon. Martin Welker, who during that time was appointed United States Judge for the Northern District of Ohio. He acted as private secretary for Judge Welker, at Cleveland, and during his residence there was engaged as a newspaper correspondent. His attention then was diverted from the law to literary pursuits, which he continued while filling positions as a teacher and a superintendent of schools. His interest in newspaper work secured for him a position on the staff of the Philadelphia Press and other journals. He spent six years at Washington, D. C., and four years at Philadelphia, engaged in the preparation of a cyclopedia and as a correspondent for different metropolitan journals.

In 1884-85 Mr. Prowell was associated with Hon. John Gibson in the preparation of a comprehensive "History of York County." After the completion of this work he was the literary editor of several local histories in Pennsylvania, published by L. H. Everts & Company, of Philadelphia. In 1887 he wrote and published the "History of Camden County, New Jersey," a large octavo volume which included the history of what was originally known as the Province of West Jersey. Many of the chapters of this volume contain original research relating to the early history of the State of New Jersey. In 1888 he wrote the "History of Wilmington," and the chapters relating to the early settlements found in the "History of Delaware," published by L. H. Everts in 1889. During the years 1890-94 he was an associate editor, engaged in the preparation of the "National Cyclopedia of American Biography," published in twelve volumes, and now found in all the large public libraries. It fell to his duty to prepare, for this work, the biographies of several of the presidents and their cabinet officers, all the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the members of the United States Senate, from the foundation of the Republic to 1894. He also wrote the lives of all the governors of half a dozen of the leading States of the Union, including Pennsylvania, and the history of the University of Pennsylvania in the lives of its presidents and faculty. He then returned the second time to educational work and served three years as superintendent of public schools at Hanover. In 1898-99, while engaged as a contributor to "Lamb's Dictionary of American Biography," he spent eight months in New England and the Southern States in preparing the history, growth and development of the cotton manufacturing industry in the United States. During the next two years he prepared and published the "History of the 87th Pennsylvania Volunteers," a regiment largely composed of York county troops which served for a period of three years in the Civil war, and the "71st Pennsylvania," known in the annals of the Civil war as the "California Regiment." In 1902, at the solicitation of the Historical Society of York County, he began to collect and build up a museum, library and various collections of historic views and portraits for that organization, which occupies a large room on the third floor of the new court house at York. His literary studies have covered the whole range of American history and biography, but he has devoted special attention to local history, which led to the preparation of the first volume of this work, entitled "History of York County." He has been a contributor to literary magazines and has prepared numerous historical papers and various publications. He is curator and librarian of the Historical Society of York County, member of the National Geographic Society and the American Historical Association. Since 1904 he has been principal and owner of the York School of Business.

Mr. Prowell was married, at Stamford, Conn., in October, 1878, to Virginia, daughter of Col. John and Sarah (Tillman) Dean. They have three children, Nellie B., Edna D. and

Mr. Prowell is of Welsh descent. His first American ancestor, James Prowell, came to Pennsylvania with the early Welsh immigrants and settled in Chester county, near Philadelphia. Thomas Prowell, his youngest son, was married in October, 1752, to Rachel Griffith, in Old Swede's Church, Philadelphia, soon after that church was transferred to the Episcopalians. He died in 1765, leaving two sons, Joseph and William, both of whom were officers in the American Revolution. Their biographies appear in the first volume of this work. William Prowell, who served as a captain in the Revolution, settled in Warrington township soon after the war had ended and later moved to Fairview township, where he died in 1811. By his first marriage, with Mary Nelson, he had three children, Joseph, Samuel and Jane. Joseph Prowell married Mary Nichols, daughter of John Nichols, and granddaughter of William Nichols, who served as an ensign in Colonel Irvine's Regiment, Captain Grier's Company, in the first Canadian expedition, in 1775. In 1777-78 he was a captain in Colonel Hartley's Regiment. He died in Fairview township in 1812. Joseph Prowell died in 1833, leaving five children: Samuel N., James, Hiram, Elizabeth and Mary. Samuel N. Prowell, the eldest son and father of George R. Prowell, married Sarah, daughter of William Reeser, founder of the borough of Manchester.

HORACE BONHAM (deceased), whose contributions to the world of art brought him well-deserved fame, was descended from an ancestry that has left an indelible impress on the history of the country. Among the passengers of the "Mayflower" was Edward Fuller, and his granddaughter, Hannah Fuller, was married in Barnstable, Mass., to Nicholas Bonham.

Nicholas Bonham with his wife and several children moved to New Brunswick, N. J., where he built a home and had a farm. Other settlers located near him, and the town of Bonhamton was formed and named.

Hezekiah Bonham, only surviving son of Nicholas, was one of the founders of the Baptist Church in New Jersey. He was a very religious man, and in Hunterdon county, N. J., founded the large Seventh Day Baptist Congregations. The Bonhams owned the greater part of the land between Bonhamton and Elizabethtown. Hezekiah Bonham was twice married. His first wife was Mary Dunn. Children were born of both marriages, and one son, Rev. Malachi Bonham, died in New Jersey.

Maj. Absalom Bonham, grandfather of the late Horace Bonham, moved from New Jersey to Maryland, locating near Frederick. He was accompanied by his wife, and probably by children. When the storm cloud of the Revolution lowered in 1776, he went back to New Jersey and enlisted, as did also his sons, Malachi and James. Malachi enlisted with an uncle Malachi in a Maryland regiment, while James (whose mother had died, and who resented his father's subsequent marriage to Miss Rebecca Morris, of New Jersey) ran away from home, and enlisted under General Greene, serving until the close of the war. When peace had again settled over the land Maj. Absalom Bonham moved to Lincolnton, N. C., where he died in about 1794. He was buried in full regiments. His second wife survived him many years and died at an advanced age. By his first wife Maj. Bonham had three children, Malachi, James and a daughter; by his second wife: Samuel Cox; and Sarah, who married a Mr. Ross, of Georgia.

Samuel Cox Bonham was born in Lincolnton, N. C., and was but three years of age when his father died. Prior to 1820 he came to Pennsylvania, first settling in Washington, Lancaster county. He afterward removed to York county, and settled on the homestead in West Manchester township, where he carried on farming until his death, in May, 1856. He was a public-spirited citizen, a Democrat in politics, and an intimate friend of President Buchanan. In 1820 he became a member of the I. O. O. F. in Washington, Lancaster county. Samuel C. Bonham was married twice. His first wife was Mary, daughter of Gen. Jacob Dritt, an officer in the Revolutionary army. It is supposed she died in Lancaster county. To this marriage were born two sons: De Witt Clinton, who went to Mississippi to live, and when the Civil war broke out, entered the Confederate service, and died at Camp Beauregard after three months' illness with fever; and Jacob, who went West and died in young manhood. For his second wife Samuel C. Bonham married Mrs. Elizabeth (Stayman) Strickler, who died in November, 1867, in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church. Five children were born to this union: Rebecca, who married T. Addison Denny, of Maryland, and who, about 1874, went to Rome, Ga., seeking, in the mountain air, relief for asthma, and there died ten years later; Sarah, who died unmarried in June, 1891; Horace and John Milton, twins, of whom the latter married Elizabeth Nimick of Pittsburg, who died in April, 1886, and he died at Atlantic City, June 17, 1897; and Emily, who died in August, 1868, at the age of twenty-five.

Horace Bonham was born in West Manchester township, York county, on his father's farm, Nov. 26, 1835, twin, as above stated, to John Milton. He began his education in a private school, conducted by a Quakeress, Ann Love, and under her guidance he remained until he entered York County Academy, where he studied until he was fourteen. Horace was sent to Williamsport, Pa., where his brother-in-law, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was stationed, when fourteen, and there entered Dickinson Seminary. He remained there a short time, and then he and his twin brother entered Wesleyan Institute, Middletown, N. Y., to prepare for Yale. After a few months at Yale, Mr. Bonham suffered an attack of typhoid fever, followed by erysipelas, and after a long illness entered Lafayette College, graduating with the class of 1856. His father died just prior to the son's graduation, and the latter returned home. As it had been the father's wish he should study law, the young man, much against his own inclination, read law in York, under Thomas Cochran, and was admitted to the Bar. All his life he had given evidence of artistic talent, and he desired to give his whole time and attention to painting. He gave up law, but did not immediately take up art. He purchased the York Republican, and edited it for a few years as a weekly. In 1861 he started a small daily, called the York Recorder, but after about three months discontinued it because of lack of support. During the first administration of President Lincoln he tried for the United States assessorship of this Congressional District, and secured it, and was reappointed for a second term, but when Lincoln was assassinated, and President Johnson succeeded to the office, another assessor was appointed in the face of a strong petition gotten up by the citizens of the district for the retention of Mr. Bonham. In February, 1869, he went abroad to study painting, finally locating in Munich. In the fall of 1869 he returned to York, and for the remainder of his life devoted himself to his chosen calling. His pictures were exhibited chiefly in Boston and Philadelphia, invariably winning high commendation from connoisseurs from all parts of the world. His picture "Nearing the Issue," showing a group of men witnessing a cockfight, in the expression on the eager faces, shows marvelous ability in the portrayal of emotions. This famous painting hangs in the Cochran Art Gallery, at Washington, D. C.

Mr. Bonham was a singularly modest man, and found his greatest happiness in his home. He was a man of fine literary distinction and was very fond of reading. Many fugitive gems of poetry came from his pen. In his youth he was confirmed in the Episcopal Church, under the Rev. Mr. Thompson, and for many years was a regular attendant upon church services, but in his later years he became very liberal in religious views. While a member of the York Club, he could not in any way be regarded as a club man.

On Jan. 27, 1870, Mr. Bonham was married to Miss Rebekah Lewis, who was born in Baltimore, daughter of Eli and Rebecca (Forey) Lewis, of Hanover, York county, and granddaughter of Eli Lewis, who, although a Quaker, was major of a battalion in the Revolution, and fought at Germantown and Brandywine. The progenitor of the Lewises was in the service of the State from Chester, Pa. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Bonham, namely: Mary L., who died in infancy in May, 1872; and Elizabeth S., Amy L., and Eleanor M., at home. Mr. Bonham entered into rest March 7, 1902, sincerely mourned by a wide circle of friends.

RICHARD E. COCHRAN, senior member of the law firm of Cochran & Williams, was born Jan. 6, 1857, son of Thomas E. and Anna M. (Barnitz) Cochran, of York, Pennsylvania.

Richard E. Cochran was liberally educated, completing the course at the York high school, the York County Academy, and the York Collegiate Institute, graduating from the latter institution in June, 1876. He read law with his father, and was admitted to the Bar Sept. 15, 1879, since when he has taken a leading position in the courts of York county. He was subsequently appointed deputy secretary of the Commonwealth by Governor Hastings, and assumed the duties of office Oct. 20, 1897, resigning the same March 1, 1899. His father was long known as a man of eminence in his profession, and his mantle has, in great measure, fallen on his son.

On Nov. 10, 1886, Mr. Cochran was married to Miss Mary E. Dickey, of Lancaster, Pa., who died Aug. 30, 1887. Mr. Cochran was married (second) Dec. 14, 1898, to Miss Agnes M. Wainwright, of Middlebury, Vermont.

On Oct. 20, 1897, Governor Hastings appointed Mr. Cochran Deputy Secretary of the Commonwealth, which official position he filled until March 2, 1899. Mr. Cochran is a member of the Lafayette Club, of York. He also belongs to York Lodge, A. F. & A. M., Howell Chapter, and York Commandery, Knights Templar, and is a past master, at present holding the office of district deputy grand master of District No. 42, in which York is located. He is a member and one of the vestrymen of St. John's Episcopal Church.

HON. NEVIN M. WANNER. The history of a county, as well as that of a State, is chiefly the chronicle of the lives and deeds of those who have conferred honor and dignity on society. The public generally judges the character of a community by that of its representative citizens, and yields its tribute of respect and esteem for the genius, learning or virtues of those whose deeds constitute the record of the county's prosperity and pride. York county's records contain the names of many citizens who, through long service, the gift of genius, or by their faithful performance of duty, have reflected credit upon their county, but none are written in better form than that of the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this review.

Hon. Nevin M. Wanner, now one of the judges of the courts of York county, Pa., was, before his elevation to the Bench, one of the most prominent lawyers of southern Pennsylvania, and had acquired a legal reputation that extended beyond the boundaries of his State. He is the son of Rev. A. Wanner, D. D., a former well-known minister of the Reformed Church, whose death occurred at York, Pa., at the age of seventy-five years, in 1894. His mother, whose maiden name was Rebecca Miller, died at York, Pa., Nov. 8, 1905. She was a daughter of Solomon Miller, Esq., who was the head of one of the oldest and best-known families of Franklin county, Pa. Of the family of Judge Wanner's father there are now surviving three sons and two daughters, viz.: Nevin M. Wanner, the Judge; Atreus Wanner, city superintendent of public schools of York, Pa.; W. S. Wanner, wholesale dealer in leaf tobacco, of York, Pa.; Alice, widow of William H. Leighty, deceased, of German-town, Ohio; and Myra, wife of Samuel Barnitz, merchant, of Mifflinburg, Pennsylvania.

Nevin M. Wanner, the subject of this sketch, was born May 14, 1850, at Washingtonville, Columbiana Co., Ohio, where his education began in a typical log schoolhouse of the olden time. He finished his public school life by graduating from the high school at German-town, Ohio, in 1866, and in the same year entered Heidelberg College, at Tiffin, Ohio, at the early age of sixteen years, where he remained for two years. He then entered Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, Pa., where he graduated in 1870, carrying off one of the leading honors of his class, viz.: the "Franklin Oration." After graduating there he took a two years' course of law lectures, in the Law Department of the University of Pennsylvania, during the sessions of 1870-71 and 1871-72. His legal preceptor in Philadelphia was Gen. B. F. Fisher, with whom he acquired the office experience so necessary to successful practice. His preceptor at York, Pa., was Erastus H. Weiser, Esq. On Aug. 28, 1872, Mr. Wanner was admitted to the Bar of York county, and later on was admitted to practice in the Supreme and Superior courts of his State, and to various county courts in the commonwealth.

In the last twenty-five years of his practice, Mr. Wanner is said to have attended, for the argument of his cases, at every meeting of the Supreme court of Pennsylvania, held for York county cases. Before going on the Bench Mr. Wanner had acquired such an exceptional reputation as a trial lawyer that but few important cases were tried in the local courts in which he was not retained. During his practice of thirty-three years he probably tried more cases than any other member of the local Bar had ever done. As a lawyer he held numerous positions of trust and honor, not the least of these being that of solicitor for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, the Northern Central Railway Company, and the lines controlled by them in York, Adams, Cumberland and Perry counties.

In politics Mr. Wanner is a Democrat and has always supported the principles of conservative Democracy. In 1887 he was elected District Attorney of York county, Pa., and on Nov. 7, 1905, he was elevated to the Bench. His election to this honored position was not merely the usual result of a party nomination. His party in the county of York had suffered a disastrous defeat at the polls at the preceding general election. But Mr. Wanner's long experience at the Bar, his acknowledged ability, and intimate personal acquaintance with all classes of the people, gave him such a general support, independent of party lines, that he was triumphantly elected.

Beginning his career with a complete classical education Mr. Wanner continued to be a close student of the law, and has devoted himself to his practice alone, to the practical exclusion of all other business enterprises. In religion he is a member of the Reformed Church, though in latter years he has attended the Episcopal Church.

On Nov. 1, 1882, Mr. Wanner was united in marriage to Miss Amelia Doudel Croll, a daughter of the late well-known and prominent merchant, John S. Croll, of York, Pa. Mrs. Wanner comes from one of the oldest families in the city. Her ancestors since Revolutionary days have been prominent in society and local history.

The Wanner family is of German extraction on both sides. Peter Miller, the maternal great-grandfather of Judge Wanner, was born in Frankfort, Germany, March 7, 1743, and died in Franklin county, Pa., April 10, 1829. His paternal great-grandfather came to America late in the eighteenth century. His grandfather, Jacob Wanner, settled near The Trappe, Montgomery Co., Pa., where the Judge's father was born, and where he lived until he went into the ministry.

ATREUS WANNER, City Superintendent of the York Public Schools, son of Rev. Aaron and Rebecca (Miller) Wanner, was born in Washingtonville, Ohio, Sept. 26, 1852. Both parents and grandparents were natives of Pennsylvania. He was graduated at Franklin and Marshall College, of Lancaster, Pa., in 1873. After filling positions in different schools in Pennsylvania he accepted the assistant principalship of the York High School, in the spring of 1876. Mr. Wanner served the public schools of York as assistant principal of the High School from 1876 to 1880, and as principal from 1880 to 1890, when he accepted the duties of the superintendency. During his administration as city superintendent York has nearly doubled in population. This required the erection of a large number of school buildings and the establishment of many schools. The educational interests of York have been rapidly advanced under his care and direction.

Mr. Wanner is a vestryman of St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church, treasurer of the York County Historical Society and president of the York Public Library Board. He has devoted his leisure to scientific pursuits and is a contributor on local archaeology and geology to the government reports and to scientific papers. He discovered fossil reptile tracks in the red sandstone of York county. A descriptive paper first presented to the American Association for the Advancement of Science was subsequently published with illustrations in the Pennsylvania State Geological Reports. He has also discovered a number of new species in the York county geological formations, thus adding to both the flora of the Trias and the fauna of the Cambrian. The following estimate of Mr. Wanner's work in the Trias, by Lester F. Ward, is from a recent government report ("Older Mesozoic Floras of United States," page 430) :

"Mr. Wanner's excellent work in Pennsylvania has tended to bring the deposits of York County, Pennsylvania, into substantial harmony with those farther south." An excellent paper read by Mr. Wanner before the Historical Society of York County relating to local Indian tribes appears in the first volume of this work. He is a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and member of the American Anthropological Association.

Mr. Wanner was married, June 21, 1882, to Miss Clara J. Eckert, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth C. Eckert, of Gordonville, Lancaster county. An only child, H. Eckert Wanner, is a member of the class of 1907 of the University of Pennsylvania. Mr. Wanner's brother, Hon. N. M. Wanner, is one of the judges of the courts of York county.
HON. JOHN W. BITTENGER, President Judge of York county, is a descendant of old Pennsylvania ancestry, and was born at York Springs, Adams county, Nov. 10, 1834, son of Henry and Julia A. (Sheffer) Bittenger.

Capt. Nicholas Bittenger, great-grandfather of the Hon. John W., was a native and resident of Adams county, then a part of York county, of which he was a worthy pioneer. He was one of the patriot soldiers in the war of the Revolution. His son, Joseph, was the paternal grandfather of Judge Bittenger.

Henry Sheffer, maternal great-grandfather of the Hon. John W. Bittenger, was also a Revolutionary patriot. Daniel Sheffer, son of Henry, was a native of York county, and early in life practiced medicine, becoming subsequently Associate Judge of Adams county, and in 1836 he was elected to represent Adams and Franklin counties in the United States Congress. He attained great distinction as a political leader and lay jurist, and was one of the prominent figures in the political and public circles of his day.

Henry Bittenger, son of Joseph, was united in marriage with Julia A. Sheffer, daughter of Daniel Sheffer, and they became the parents of three children, viz.: Mrs. George C. Barnitz, of Middletown, Ohio; Mrs. Reuben Young, of Hanover; and John W., President Judge of York county.

John W. Bittenger acquired his elementary education in the public schools, at the academy at Strasburg, Pa., and in Rockville, Md., which was supplemented by a partial course at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg. While studying at Pennsylvania College, he registered with the Hon. Moses McLean, of Gettysburg, as a student-at-law. He subsequently went to Rockville, Md., where he finished his legal studies in the office of W. Viers Bouic, subsequently Judge of the Circuit Court of that county, and was admitted to the Bar of Montgomery county, Md., in 1856. In the same year Mr. Bittenger entered Harvard Law School, at Cambridge, Mass., and was graduated in the year 1857, with the degree of LL.B. He then went to Lexington, Ky., and entered upon the practice of his profession, remaining in that State three years.

In 1860 Mr. Bittenger removed to York, Pa., with whose Bar and judiciary he has since been identified. In politics Judge Bittenger has always been a Democrat, and has taken a prominent and influential part in the party councils, having been a leader and campaign orator in the Democratic contests in York county. In 1862 he began his official career with the nomination for and election to the district attorneyship of the county. Through re-election he served for six years. Upon retiring from that office he entered upon his practice at the Bar, and at the time of accepting the judgeship had worked up a large and lucrative practice, and become a leading member of the Bar. In 1888 Judge Bittenger represented his party in the National Convention at St. Louis. In November, 1890, he was appointed by Governor Beaver to fill the vacancy occasioned on the Bench of the Nineteenth Judicial District, York county, by the death of the Hon. John Gibson. The same year the Judge became the nominee of his party for the judgeship, and was elected at the November election, and in 1900 he was re-elected by a handsome majority, the Republican party having endorsed him in convention, and made no nomination against him. Since 1895 he has served as President Judge of the York County Courts, and his rulings have attracted attention all over the State on account of their clearness and fairness.

Judge Bittenger married Miss Anna Brennan, of York county, and they have the following children, all at home: Ida, Julia, Daniel S., Charles E. and Louisa Augusta. All are attendants and members of Trinity Reformed Church of York.

REV. GEORGE W. ENDERS, A. M., D. D., is a son of Jacob Enders, who came to America in 1854.

Dr. Enders was born in Germany Oct. 26, 1841, and commenced his education in the schools of Germany, which he attended until his thirteenth year. He was born in the same old stone house in Germany in which his father, grandfather and great-grandfather had been born, this house having been built before the Reformation. On his wedding tour, in 1870, Dr. Enders revisited this old home, and preached in the church in which he had been confirmed. This historic old home was in Norway, near Bingen-on-the-Rhine. The Doctor's father, grandfather and great-grandfather conducted freighting and passenger traffic in the old country, and managed large landed

Dr. Enders's first charge was at Bridge ton, N. J., where he was pastor of St. John's Lutheran Church for four years and while there he took a post-graduate course in the Mt. Airy Lutheran Seminary, in Philadelphia, and also a course of lectures in Pennsylvania University. On May 1, 1873, he became pastor of St. James Lutheran Church, at Gettysburg, remaining there two years. His health breaking down at this time, Dr. Enders tendered his resignation and traveled for two years, when, having recovered his health, he accepted a call on June 1, 1876, to St. Paul's Lutheran Church at Richmond, Ind., remaining there six years, at the end of which time he was called to the pastorate of Christ Lutheran Church, York. This mother church of Lutheranism in York was founded Sept. 23, 1733, and the large congregation of Christ Church is now worshiping in the third edifice that has been erected. Dr. Enders located in York July 1, 1882, and from the beginning of his labors here to the present his efforts have been marked with success. He has paid the church debt, erected a $30,000 building, built a parsonage which is paid for, and spent $8,000 additional in otherwise improving the church property. Among other notable things that the church possesses is a $2,500 organ, presented to the church by Frederick Greinman, in memory of an eight-year-old grandchild, who was the daughter of J. A. Dempwolf, the architect. The child's name was Margaret Wilhelmina Dempwolf. Mr. Dempwolf has been for many years superintendent of Christ Sunday-school.

Over a century ago one Barbara Schmidt left a small property to Christ Lutheran Church. This property was converted into money, and a pipe organ was purchased and installed in the old stone church, where it remained until 1814, when it was stored away until the church was completed. It was in constant use until July, 1905, when it was transferred to the chapel. After it was rebuilt in the chapel this organ was re-dedicated in November, 1905, and is known as the Barbara Schmidt Memorial Organ.

Dr. Enders married Phoebe A. Miller, daughter of David T. Miller, a farmer of Deerfield, Cumberland Co., N. J., his bride having been organist and choir leader of Emmanuel Lutheran Church, at Friesburg, N. J., of which church Dr. Lake, brother-in-law of Dr. Enders, was pastor. Six children were born of this union, of whom one died in infancy, and John Lake, another child, died Aug. 6, 1885, in Deerfield, N. J., while visiting his grandfather. The survivors are: Rev. George W., Jr., born at Bridge ton, N. J., Aug. 10, 1871, is now the pastor of the Lutheran Church at Clearfield, Pa.; he has a son, George W. (III). Caroline R. married July 7, 1903, Rev. George Bayard Young, B. D., who after touring Europe, became pastor of St. Matthew's Lutheran Church, at Brooklyn, N. Y. Rev. Martin Luther Enders, B. D., born Feb. 11, 1868, at Richmond, Ind., is now pastor of Salem Lutheran Church, Catonsville, a suburb of Baltimore, Md., where, in a pastorate of one and a half years, he built a $3,500 church; he was married Oct. 7, 1902, to Grace Hubner, daughter of John Hubner, president of the State Senate of Maryland for three terms. Paul Melanchton, born April 15, 1887, after attending York Collegiate Institute became a student in the Susquehanna University at Selinsgrove, and later entered Hartwick Seminary in Otsego county, N. Y., where he is a member of the class of 1909.

Dr. Enders is vice-president of the Home Mission board of the General Synod of the Lutheran Church, of which he has been for seventeen years a member. He was a director. of the Theological Seminary of Gettysburg for fifteen years; a number of years director of Wittenberg College, at Springfield, Ohio, and was president of the Susquehanna University, Selinsgrove, Pa., for three years. Dr. Enders takes an active interest in the Luther League, being a great friend of the young people. His church work is of the broadest and most liberal type, and he has raised hundreds of thousands of dollars for church work at home and abroad. In 1877 the degree of A. M. was conferred upon him by Wittenberg College, and in 1889 the same college conferred upon him the degree of D. D.

The old stone home in which Dr. Enders and many of his ancestors were born, in Germany, was a place of refuge for Lutherans in the days of the Reformation. Distinguished men from all over Europe visited his ancestors in this historic place, and the castle of Ebernburg (sign of the “Boar”), belonged to his ancestors. The latter contained secret chambers, and it, too, was a place of refuge. Indeed the incidents associated with this castle and the old stone house in which Dr. Enders was born would, in themselves, if fully and faithfully narrated, fill this volume.

HENRY CARPENTER NILES is a descendant in the eighth generation from Capt. John Niles, the progenitor of this branch of the Niles family in America, who crossed the ocean from Wales with the early Pilgrims in 1630, and settled in Braintree, Mass. The different members of the family continued to reside in New England for many generations, taking a leading part in the “building of the Republic.”

William Niles, grandfather of Henry C. Niles, was for many years a merchant and citizen of Spencertown, N. Y. His son, Henry E. Niles, father of Henry C., was an eminent divine of the Presbyterian Church, for thirty-five years serving the First Church of York. His death, May 14, 1900, caused profound sorrow and regret. His career will be more fully noted elsewhere.

On the maternal side Henry C. Niles also comes from Pilgrim stock. His grandfather, Sumner Marsh, was a manufacturer of Lowell, Mass. He held office in the Boston Custom House by appointment of President Lincoln, and returned to his birthplace at Southbridge, Mass., where he lived in retirement until his death at the age of eighty-seven. His wife was a direct descendant of Capt. John Mason, the celebrated Indian fighter, who achieved distinction in the Pequot war. Capt. Mason was of English birth and came to America in 1630.

Henry Carpenter Niles was born in Angelica, Allegany Co., N. Y., June 17, 1858. His education was received in the schools of York, Pa. After finishing the courses in the York County Academy and the York Collegiate Institute, he engaged as a clerk in the First National Bank of York. He attended the Columbia University Law School, where he graduated in 1880, also read law under the Hon. Robert J. Fisher, at York, and became familiar with legal practice in New York City in the offices of James Brooks Dill and Miller & Peckham. Admitted to practice the same year he graduated, and later, in 1882, to the Supreme Court, he soon became recognized as a leader in trial practice. Mr. Niles is much esteemed among his fellow practitioners, and his colleagues in the Pennsylvania Bar Association honored him in 1904 by election to the presidency of that body. He has been prominently urged for the Common Pleas and Supreme Court Judgeship, being more than ordinarily qualified for a seat on the Bench, the acceptance of which, however, would involve no little pecuniary sacrifice for one enjoying the practice he has won. He has achieved a reputation State-wide in its extent as an astute and successful practitioner of the law, the business of his firm, Niles & Neff, carrying him into all the prominent courts of the State. His foremost position at the Bar of York county is universally recognized. Mr. Niles has also made a reputation for himself as a legal and literary writer and speaker. As president of the Pennsylvania Bar Association he won merited distinction, and his address made before that body at Bedford Springs, Pa., June 27, 1905, in which he boldly denounced the State Legislature for violating its oaths and the Constitution, brought forth high commendation from the thinking members of his profession, and from good citizens everywhere.

Mr. Niles was married in 1886 to Miss Lillie Schall, a daughter of Michael Schall, of York. To this marriage was born one son, Michael Schall Niles.

Mr. Niles has never aspired to a political career. He is a man of varied interests, and holds many positions of trust. Though he is still in middle life, he has achieved distinction in his profession, being senior member of the law firm of Niles & Neff, counsel and director of the Maryland & Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and president of the Keystone Farm Machine Company.

Mr. Niles is a life member of the York County Historical Society, his influence always being used to promote its best interests. Fraternally he is a member of the Freemasons, and has attained the Knight Templar degree. Politically he is a Republican of the independent type. In religious faith a Presbyterian, he has for many years been a supporter of the First Presbyterian Church and a member of the Board of Trustees.

GEOFFREY P. YOST, of the well known firm of William Smith & Co., extensive druggists of York, was born in Dover, York Co., Pa., on March 6, 1837. He is the grandson of John Yost, one of the pioneer settlers of Dover, and the son of Henry Yost, a native of the same place. Henry Yost married Miss Sarah Lenhart, a daughter of Peter Lenhart, a farmer of Dover township, York county. To this marriage only two children were born: Oliver J. (a former merchant of Dover, now deceased) and Geoffrey P.

Geoffrey P. Yost received his education in the schools of Dover and at the York County Academy. After teaching a short time he entered the book and drug store kept by Rev. Solomon Oswald, mastering the business there. In March, 1859, he entered the service of C. A. Morris & Co., druggists, which merged into the firm of William Smith & Co., the business having been founded in 1823. By close attention to business Mr. Yost made his services so valuable that in 1872 he was taken into the firm as a member. On the death of Mr. Smith the firm name remained unchanged. The company now consists of the William Smith Estate, Geoffrey P. Yost, and Horace Smith, a son of the deceased.

Mr. Yost married Miss Virginia E. Frey, daughter of Dr. Levi Frey, who at the time of his death was a practicing physician of York. To this marriage were born five children, four sons and one daughter: (1) Edmund Geoffrey, died at two and one-half years of age. (2) Donald Henry, attorney-at-law, was born Sept. 16, 1879, attended the York Collegiate Institute, graduating in 1898, and in the fall of the same year entered the University of Pennsylvania. After taking one year in the collegiate department he entered the law department of the university, graduating in the year 1902 with the degree of LL. B. In December, 1902, he was admitted to practice in the courts of York county and later to the Supreme court of the State. (3) Frederick Randolph, pursued a course of two years at the University of Pennsylvania, and later studied at the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, class of 1906. (4) Richard Frey is attending the York County Academy. (5) Marion Louise is a graduate of the York Collegiate Institute, and afterward became a student at Wells College, New York.

Besides his interest in the drug store Mr. Yost has been identified with many other matters which have added to the progress of the city. He is one of the organizers of the Edison Electric Light Company, of York, and was its president for fifteen years (1884-99), until it passed into the hands of a syndicate. He is vice-president of the City Bank. Except that he is identified with the fraternal organization known as the Artisans, he is not a member of any lodge. Mr. Yost belongs to St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church of York, Pa., and is active in all the interests with which he is identified, being an untiring as well as successful worker.

HORACE SMITH, member of the firm of William Smith & Co., one of the oldest and most prominent drug concerns of York, was born in that city Oct. 3, 1857, son of William and Mary Elizabeth (Boyer) Smith.

William Smith was born in Strasburg, Lancaster Co., Pa., and removed to York when only twelve years of age, finding employment with C. A. Morris, druggist, and afterward becoming the owner of the business. In this he continued until his death, April 27, 1888, being then in his sixty-fifth year and having spent half a century in the drug business. He was a devout member of St. Paul's Lutheran Church, having been a member of the church council for many years, and no man in the city was more highly esteemed or more widely beloved. He married Mary Elizabeth Boyer, a member of a prominent Baltimore family, and she became the mother of eight children, as follows: Annie S., who married Dr. J. D. Heiges, dentist, of York, whose full sketch will be found elsewhere; Ida S., the wife of Professor Bauger (deceased), of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania; Mary E., who married W. H. McClellan, merchant, of York; Cassandra, at home; Horace; two children who died in infancy; and Charles M., who died in 1879, aged twenty-seven years.

Horace Smith received his education in the York high school, the York County Academy and the York Collegiate Institute. He entered his father's drug store at the age of fifteen years and became a member of the firm in 1879. Mr. Smith is a partner in the business and represents his father's estate as well, his partner being Geoffrey P. Yost.

Horace Smith was married to Margaret M. Schall, daughter of the late Jacob D. Schall, president of the First National Bank of York, and connected with one of the most prominent families in the city. Two children have come to this union: Jacob S., Nov. 10, 1882, a graduate of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, class of 1903, and Catherine Dorothy, born June 17, 1887, who graduated from the York Collegiate Institute in 1903. Mr. Smith is a member of St. Paul's Lutheran Church of York, where he was a deacon for many years, and is as popular in church affairs as he is in business and social circles.

JOSEPH E. ROSENMILLER, who died in 1894, was the son of Lewis and Elizabeth (Eichelberger) Rosenmiller. He was married May 31, 1855, to Amanda C. Bril-linger, and the young couple moved to York where Mr. Rosenmiller engaged in the hardware business, which was his occupation up to the last five years of his life. His death occurred in 1894, and he was interred in Prospect Hill cemetery. Nine children were born to the union of Joseph E. Rosenmiller and Amanda C. Bril-linger, namely: Mary, who died young; John, who lived only three years and six months; Henrietta, Laura E., A. Jane and Florence, all at home; Anna, who died in 1896, aged twenty-eight; William Frederick, who married Anna Smyser, and is employed in the York County Bank, and Joseph F., who died young. The family are members of St. John's Episcopal Church of York. In political belief Mr. Rosenmiller was a stanch Democrat, but never aspired to office.

Mrs. Amanda C. Rosenmiller, who has been a resident of York for many years, was born in York county in 1835, daughter of John and Leah (Smyser) Bril-linger. Her father, born in Manchester township, was the son of John, a native of Germany, who emigrated to the United States. The other children in the grandfather's family, all of whom were born in Manchester township and died there, were: Jacob, who married Miss Elizabeth Ebert, and died in 1895; Polly; Elizabeth; Susan; and Catherine.

John Bril-linger was sent first to the common school of the township, and then to the York Academy, for several years, but at the age of eighteen he inherited his father's farm, upon which was also a sawmill, and this property was under his active management until 1875. From that time until his death, in 1880, he lived retired. He was buried, as were his brother and sisters, in Prospect Hill cemetery. John Bril-linger's wife, whose maiden name was Leah Smyser, was born in Manchester township, the daughter of Peter and Barbara (Wolf) Smyser. She died in 1875, and her remains were laid in the same cemetery where her husband is buried.

JOSIAH FREDERICK ROSENMILLER, A. M., lawyer and merchant, son of Lewis and Elizabeth (Eichelberger) Rosenmiller, is a native of York, and a descendant of a family prominent in the affairs of York and Adams counties. Lewis Rosenmiller, his grandfather, came to this country from Germany with the early settlers and purchased land in the present area of Adams county, Pa., where he married a Miss Bittinger, daughter of Capt. Nicholas Bit-tinger, a soldier of the Revolution. Lewis Rosenmiller, the father of Josiah, was born in Adams county in 1805, grew to manhood there, and in 1825 moved to York, where he engaged in the hardware business.

Josiah Frederick Rosenmiller obtained his preliminary education in the public schools of York and was prepared for college at the York County Academy. As a student he excelled in the study of mathematics and the foreign languages. Entering the College of New Jersey, now Princeton University, one of the largest and most influential educational institutions in America, he completed a thorough classical course there, and was graduated with honors in the class of 1848. Immediately after receiving his degree he returned to York and began the study of law under Hon. Robert J. Fisher, who later served for a period of thirty years as president judge of the courts of York county. He was admitted to the Bar at York in 1850 and practiced law for several years. Soon after the death of his father Mr. Rosenmiller retired from the practice of his profession and engaged in the hardware business on the north side of West Market street, near Centre Square. At this place he formed a co-partnership with his brother, Joseph E. Rosenmiller, under the firm name of Rosenmiller & Co. This firm conducted a very large and prosperous business for a period of forty years, until the death of his brother, in 1894. Since that time Mr. Rosenmiller has partially retired from the hardware trade, but has kept his store open for the accommodation of his friends and former customers, and still devotes his time to his mercantile business in the room where he achieved so much success as a merchant in former years, for the Rosenmiller store has been one of the best known establishments in York for half a century. Early in life Mr. Rosenmiller joined the Masonic fraternity, becoming a member of Zere-datha Lodge, No. 451, F. & A. M.; he is also a member of Howell Chapter, No. 199, Royal Arch Masons, a position of honor in the Masonic fraternity, and is one of two living charter members of the York Club, a social organization which has held prominence in York for many years. He is a member of St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church of York. During his professional and business career Mr. Rosenmiller has devoted his leisure time to the study of well selected books. He is a gentleman of intellectual culture, possessing a vast fund of interesting and useful information.

REV. ROBERT FISHER GIBSON, son of Hon. John Gibson, president judge of the York county courts, was born at York April 7, 1866. He obtained his preparatory education in the York County Academy, York Collegiate Institute and Shortlidge's Academy, at Media, Pa., and then entered Sheffield Scientific School, one of the departments of Yale University, from which institution he was graduated in 1887. He attended Columbia Law School, New York, read law in the office of Vincent K. Keesey, and was admitted to the York county Bar in 1890. He was elected city solicitor in 1892, and was re-elected in 1894, serving in all four years. Mr. Gibson then devoted his attention to journalism and for a number of years was editor of the York Gazette and one year on the Evening World, New York, in various capacities. In May, 1900, he was elected mayor of York by the city councils, to succeed Capt. Frank Geise, who died while in office. In February of the next year he was chosen mayor at the general election, to complete the unexpired term of his predecessor.

Mr. Gibson began his theological studies with Rev. Charles J. Wood, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, at York, attended Virginia Theological Seminary, and was ordained deacon June 11, 1893, in St. John's Church at York. He was ordained priest Nov. 25, 1903, in St. Luke's Church, Altoona, Pa., and shortly afterward accepted the rectorship of Trinity Parish, Williamsport. Since 1905 he has been editor of the Harrisburg Churchman, the organ of the Diocese of Harrisburg. He was married Oct. 3, 1900, to Miss Harriet McKenney, daughter of the late Gen. William McKenney, of Centerville, Maryland.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON NES (deceased). The city of York lost, by the death of Alexander Hamilton Nes, which occurred in 1879, one of its most energetic and honored citizens. He was for many years closely identified with the business interests of that city, and it was his great prudence, judgment and foresight that made his career so successful.

Mr. Nes was born in York, in January, 1827, son of William and Catherine Eva (Eichelberger) Nes, and was reared in this city, where he spent his life. He was educated in the schools of this city, and, when a young man, in company with W. H. Kurtz, took charge of his uncle's brewery, which he conducted a few years. He then engaged in the malt business, which occupation he followed until his death. Mr. Nes started in life a poor boy, and through his own efforts won his way to wealth and influence. His friends were all who knew him. He took considerable interest in the workings of the Democratic party, but although often urged, would never accept political office. He was a director in various institutions, viz.—banks, turnpike companies, etc., and was a man of great influence in financial circles.

Mr. Nes was married in 1856 to Miss Eliza Brillinger, daughter of John and Leah (Smyser) Brillinger. Mrs. Nes was born in Manchester township, where her father owned and operated farms and mills, and where she spent his life, as his father, John Brillinger, likewise a farmer and miller, had also done. Mrs. Nes was the eldest of eight children: Amanda C., the wife of Joseph Rosenmiller, of West York; John, a resident of California; Horace, deceased; Jacob, a resident of York; Edwin, deceased; Henry, deceased; George, an insurance man of York; and Eliza, Mrs. Nes.

Mr. and Mrs. Nes were the parents of two children: William, born in 1857, educated in York and at Princeton College, read law with Mr. Chapin, an attorney, and after his admission to the bar, give his entire attention to the legal profession; he died in 1902, leaving a widow and one son,—William; Leah Kate, who married W. C. Warner, of Titusville, Pa.; has a family of five children, Mary, Alexander, William, Frederick and Edith. Mrs. Nes resides at the old homestead, No. 119 West Market street, where she is honored and respected.

HON. DANIEL F. LAFEAN, member of Congress, manufacturer and banker, was born in York, Feb. 7, 1861. His father, Charles F. Lafean, a prominent coal merchant, was of French descent, and his mother, Charlotte, daughter of Fredrick Kottcamp, of York, was of German descent. Both of his parents represented families actively interested in the growth and development of the borough of York during the last century. They were well and favorably known for their industry, integrity and such other qualities as develop sturdy manhood and womanhood.

Mr. Lafean obtained his education in the public schools of his native city and early in life began his successful business career as a clerk in a store. Being attentive to duty, active and alert, he soon displayed qualities which marked him for promotion. After spending a short time in a notion store he was chosen a clerk in a large confectionery, owned and conducted by Peter C. Wiest, of York. In his early manhood he took advantage of all opportunities afforded, and his employer soon found that his capabilities fitted him for a higher position of responsibility and trust. He carefully studied the business in which he was engaged and was ever ready to suggest improvements. He suggested many improvements and by hard study mastered the details of the candy business, and in 1878 accepted an offer from his employer to become a partner in the business. In 1883 he obtained a third interest therein. The products of the P. C. Wiest Company found ready sale and it soon developed to be one of the largest establishments of its kind in the country. In 1892 Mr. Wiest retired from the business and in 1895 a stock company was formed and incorporated under the name of the P. C. Wiest Company, Mr. Lafean being elected its first president and treasurer. This responsible position gave him opportunity to display his remarkable business qualities and as a result thereof new buildings were erected and improved machinery added to enlarge the facilities for manufacturing candy.

Owing to the rapid increase of the business, and the inability of the company to secure sufficient help in the city of York to meet the demands for their product, it became necessary for them to locate at some other point. Various locations throughout Pennsylvania were carefully gone over, and on March 1, 1898, the business and property of the Breisch-Hine Company of Philadelphia was purchased and a corporation under the name of the American Caramel Company was incorporated, with Mr. Lafean as its first president. The newly acquired property not only gave them the business of the old firm, but still largely increased the facilities for taking on new trade. The York and Philadelphia plants, however, in a few years also became too small to supply the increasing sales, and in 1900 the company acquired the business and property of the Lancaster Caramel Company. This last acquisition not only increased the volume of business, but gave to the company a very large foreign trade, which is being increased every year. Mr. Lafean is still the president of the American Caramel Company, whose plants are located at York, Lancaster and Philadelphia. Mr. Lafean is one of the pioneers in the confectionery trade, having been connected with the various plants for a period of twenty-eight years. He enjoys the confidence of his competitors, in so far that his advice is very often asked on points in which he is not a direct competitor.

Mr. Lafean is connected with various other manufacturing concerns of his home town, among which is the York Silk Manufacturing Company, of which company he is also the president. This company has two plants at York and one each at Carlisle, Fleetwood and Kutztown, Pa. This company a few years ago started with one hundred looms and to-day has upward of one thousand looms, with an output of nearly two and a half million yards of black silk fabric per annum. This company, as well as the one above referred to, has been forging ahead in leaps and bounds until to-day it is absolutely necessary to locate in other sections to secure a sufficient amount of skilled labor to properly fill the demands made upon the company for its product.

Notwithstanding his extreme business activity, Mr. Lafean finds sufficient time to be devoted to the welfare of the residents of the 20th Congressional district of Pennsylvania, which he represents in Congress. In August, 1902, he was offered the Republican nomination for Congress from this district, and notwithstanding his declination was unanimously nominated upon the Republican ticket to represent the counties of York and Adams in the national halls of Congress. He defeated Judge William McClean of Gettysburg by a majority of 591. Owing to Mr. Lafean being a very busy man, and engaged in numerous manufacturing enterprises, it was thought that he was only seeking the honor of the office and that he would not shoulder its responsibilities. In this, however, he agreeably surprised all, even his political opponents, by taking hold of the duties of the office and adopting business methods therein. It was not long until he gained the confidence of his constituents, and in 1904 was again unanimously nominated, and re-elected by a handsome majority of 4,306 over his opponent, William McSherry, Esq., of Gettysburg, leading President Roosevelt's vote by 2,117. The promptness with which he attended to all matters pertaining to the office was a surprise to all, especially when it is known that his daily mail figures up into the hundreds. No constituent of his is turned away when asking a question or seeking information. No letters remain unanswered, but on the contrary are promptly attended to. In his political office, as in his business career, Mr. Lafean has made a decided success.

During his three years of service in Congress he has been of great benefit to the old soldier, his widow and orphans, having in that brief period assisted in having granted them over six hundred pensions. In the first session of the LIXth Congress Mr. Lafean was very successful in obtaining appropriations for his constituents in both Adams and York counties, among them being an appropriation of $15,000 for the construction of good roads in Cumberland township, Adams county, and $6,000 for the erection of a new lodge for the superintendent of the National Cemetery at Gettysburg. The appropriation of $75,000 for a site for a new Federal Building in the city of York almost crowns his laurels. This building, the plans and drawings for which have been completed by the Supervising Architect of the United States Treasury Department, will give his home town one of the finest and most expensive Federal Buildings in the State of Pennsylvania, with the possible exception of Pittsburg and Philadelphia. While his attention has been given in this direction he has not overlooked his rural constituency. During his term he has secured complete county Rural Free Delivery service for the counties of York and Adams, every public road in both these counties being practically traversed by a Rural Free Delivery carrier. He has not only been of service to his rural constituency in the matter of increased mail facilities, but also to his city constituency, always being ready to co-operate with the postmaster in the city of York and various boroughs throughout the district for the purpose of obtaining the best possible service for them.

The earnest and effective work accomplished by Mr. Lafean during his short Congressional career endeared him in the hearts of his constituents to such an extent that he was renominated for Congress for a third time by the Republican party. Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Lafean's party was torn asunder by factional feeling on State issues, he, after the hardest fight known in the history of this Congressional district, defeated Horace Keesey, Esq., one of the most prominent Democrats and member of the York county Bar, by a plurality of 449.

In 1882 Mr. Lafean was married to Miss Emma Krone, of the city of York, and has three children: Stuart B., treasurer of the American Caramel Company and manager of the plant of this company at York; LeRoy, student at the University of Pennsylvania; and Robert, in attendance at the public schools of York.
ALBERT HENRY LAFEAN, druggist, was born at York, Pa., April 4, 1859, son of Charles F. Lafean, a prominent citizen of York. He obtained his education in the public schools of his native city, and in 1878 entered the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy. After spending three years at that institution he was graduated, in the year 1881. In September, 1881, Mr. Lafean opened a drug store on the south side of West Market street, in a building formerly owned by Gen. Jacob Spangler, three doors west of his present store. By diligence and careful attention to business he soon built up a large trade. In 1885 he moved his store to No. 11 West Market street. Here he continued to prosper in his business. In April, 1886, he took in, as a partner, his brother, Edward Charles Lafean, who had recently graduated from the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy. It was at this time that the firm of A. H. Lafean & Brother was established. In order to have increased facilities to enlarge their business the firm purchased in November, 1886, the building at Nos. 6 and 8 West Market street, formerly the private residence of Hon. Henry Welsh, a leading citizen of York. After this valuable property was remodeled and changed from a private residence to a business house, the firm of A. H. Lafean & Brother, with improved opportunities, fitted up a drug store, and continued to do an extensive business. In 1904 they extended their room to a depth of 110 feet, and when completed and refurnished it became one of the most commodious and best equipped drug stores in southern Pennsylvania. They have a large trade with the physicians of the city and county of York, as well as a successful general business. They also manufacture a number of specialties which have had a large sale.

Albert Henry Lafean was married to Ella A. Neiman, who died in 1890. She was the daughter of John Neiman, of York. Mr. Lafean’s second wife was Elsie E. Berg, daughter of Rev. Andrew Berg, a Lutheran clergyman, who died at Leacock, Lancaster county. One son was born to Mr. Lafean by his first wife, Wilbur Leroy, a graduate of the York high school in 1901, of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy in 1904, and now the representative of the American Silk Company at Chicago.

Mr. Lafean is prominent in Masonic circles. He is a past master in Zeredatha Lodge, No. 451, served as high priest in Howell Chapter, No. 199, and also held the responsible position of eminent commander of York Commandery, No. 21. He belongs to the Royal Arcanum, the Artisans and the Bachelors Club. He is a member of St. Paul’s Lutheran Church. In politics Mr. Lafean is an ardent Republican. He was elected to the common council for a term of two years from the Fourth ward of York, and he enjoys the distinction of having been elected on the Republican ticket in a Democratic ward—the first occurrence of the kind in the history of that ward.

ELLIS SMYSER LEWIS, treasurer of the York Trust Company, is descended from two of the oldest families in York county, Pa. He was born in York, Pa., Feb. 11, 1870, eldest son of Clay Eli and Ellen Sarah (Smyser) Lewis.

The Lewis family is of ancient lineage, and of Welsh origin. The founder of that branch of the Lewis family from whom the subject of this sketch traces his descent was Ellis ap Lewis, or Ellis Lewis [the fifth in descent from John ap Griffith, the second son of Griffith ap Howell (living 1542), Lord of Nanau in Wales], who was born in Merionethshire, Wales, about 1680, his father dying while he was quite young. He embraced the Quaker faith, which invited persecution, and about 1698 the family prepared to emigrate to America but were prevented by illness, their household goods, however, going on. Later they went to Ireland, and thence to Pennsylvania, Ellis Lewis’ certificate of removal being dated at Mt. Mellick, Ireland, the 25th day of the 5th month, 1708.

Upon his arrival in Pennsylvania, Ellis Lewis went first to Havertford, subsequently settling in Kennett township, Chester county, where he was highly esteemed, being a “man of good understanding,” and long an Elder of Friends. He was twice married, (first) at Concord Meeting, Chester county, Pa., on the 13th day of the second month, 1713, to Elizabeth Newlin; (second) at Falls Meeting, Bucks county, Pa., on the 11th day of the first month, 1723, to Mary Baldwin, a widow, who survived him. He died at Wilmington, Del., on the 31st day of the sixth month, 1750, and was buried at Kennett, Pennsylvania.

The first wife of Ellis Lewis, Elizabeth, was born on the 3d day of the first month, 1687 or 1688, daughter of Nathaniel Newlin, the owner and settler of Newlin township in Chester county. Mr. Newlin was a member of the Provincial Assembly in 1698, et seq.; in 1700 one of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws and Government of Pennsylvania, subsequently a Justice of the County Courts (1703 et seq.), and one of the Proprietary's Commissioners of Property; from 1722 until his death in 1729, one of the Trustees of the General Loan Office of the Province. Mr. Newlin's first wife, mother of Elizabeth, was Mary Mendenhall, or Mildenhall, of Mildenhall, County Wilts, England, whom he married April 17, 1685. His father, Nicholas Newlin, an Englishman by birth, came from Mt. Mellick, Queen's county, Ireland, to Pennsylvania, in 1683, settling in Concord township, Chester county. In 1684 he was commissioned, by Governor Penn, one of the Justices of the Courts of the county, while in the following year he was called to the Council of the Governor and Proprietary, William Penn, the founder of Pennsylvania. Nicholas Newlin died in May, 1699.
BIOGRAPHICAL

Ellis Lewis had by his wife, Elizabeth Newlin, four children, namely: Robert, born 1714; Mary, born 1716; Nathaniel, born 1717; and Ellis, born the 22d day of the third month, 1719.

Ellis Lewis, son of Ellis the emigrant, was married on the 25th day of the second month, 1744, at Birmingham Meeting, Chester Co., Pa., to Ruth, daughter of John, an emigrant from Scotland to Chester county, and Ruth (Hind) Wilson, and died near Lewisberry, York county, Pa., in January, 1795, his wife surviving him. He, with John Rankin and Joseph Bennett, was among the first settlers in the northern part of York county, in what was known as Red Land Valley, near Lewisberry. He had two children: Ellis; and Eli, born Jan. 31, 1750.

Eli Lewis, son of Ellis Lewis, the founder of Lewisberry, was commissioned Major of the First Battalion, York County Militia, Oct. 1, 1777. He took part in the battles of the Brandywine and Germantown, being captured either during the latter battle or shortly afterward, and imprisoned in the Old Sugar House in New York, which was used by the British during their occupancy of Philadelphia as a prison pen. He was a man of very fair literary ability, and in 1792 wrote a poem of considerable merit, entitled "St. Clair's Defeat."

"Inspired by grief, to tender friendship due, The trembling hand unfolds the tale to view.— A tale which strongly claims the pitying tear, And ev'ry feeling heart must bleed to hear."

In August, 1790, he started the Harrisburg Monitor and Weekly Advertiser, the first newspaper published in the Capital City. In 1798 he laid out the town of Lewisberry. He was connected with many public enterprises. Eli Lewis was married at Londondgove Monthly Meeting, Chester county, Pa., Nov. 10, 1779, to Pamela Webster, who was born Nov. 19, 1759, daughter of John and Jane (Brinton) Webster. Mrs. Lewis died Feb. 20, 1803, and her husband died Feb. 1, 1807. They had children as follows: Webster, born Oct. 18, 1780; Eliza, born 1782; Phoebe, born 1784; Pamela, born 1787; Eli, born 1789, president of the First National Bank, York, Pa.; Juliet, born 1792; Juliet, born 1794; James, born 1796, attorney-at-law, York, Pa.; and president of York Bank; and Ellis, born 1798, Chief Justice of Pennsylvania 1854-1857.

Webster Lewis, eldest son of Eli, was born near what is now the town of Lewisberry, Pa., and died at New Cumberland, Cumberland Co., Pa., May 28, 1832. He was a physician, and practiced his profession in the country surrounding Lewisberry. He led in the innovation of growing the poppy and making the opium used in his practice. He was also skilled in the knowledge and practice of law in the courts of York county, to which he was admitted in 1820. He married July 25, 1798, Mary Nebinger, born March 10, 1779, died Nov. 16, 1830, daughter of Dr. George and Ann (Rankin) Nebinger. Ann Rankin was a descendant of John Rankin and Joseph Bennett, referred to earlier in this sketch. They had children as follows: Robert Nebinger, born July 30, 1799; Ann, born 1801; George W., born 1803; Rankin, born 1804; Rebecca M., born 1808; Eli, born 1811; Andrew, born 1813; and James W., born 1815.

Robert Nebinger Lewis, eldest son of Webster and Mary (Nebinger) Lewis, was born at or near Lewisberry, Pa., and died near Weigelstown, York county, March 16, 1846. He was a physician of great ability and practiced for a time with his father at Lewisberry, but later located at Dover, York county, at which place he lived at the time of his death. He, with his father, was an active agent of the so-called "Underground Railroad," by which method numerous slaves were aided on their way to Canada from Maryland and the South. Several attempts were made on his life by the slave hunters when they found themselves balked in their efforts to recover their escaping slaves. On March 28, 1822, Robert Nebinger Lewis married Mary Moore, born Feb. 28, 1801, died Dec. 17, 1867, daughter of John and Sarah (Pugh) Moore. Mary Moore was a descendant of Andrew Moore, who settled in Red Land Valley, York county, about 1745 or earlier. They had children as follows: Josephine S., born 1823, married Dr. Samuel Meisner; Rebecca M., born 1825, married Samuel Smyser; Rush Webster, born 1827; Orfila L., born 1830; Mary A. H., born 1833, married D. F. Wilt; Melchinger R., born 1838; and Clay Eli, born April 5, 1844.

Clay Eli Lewis, youngest son of Robert Nebinger and Mary (Moore) Lewis, was born in Dover, Pa., and at the time of his death in York, Dec. 10, 1897, was cashier of the Western National Bank of York, and connected in an official capacity with several other local corporations. He married April 26, 1869, in York, Ellen Sarah Smyser, second daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Weaver) Smyser, and had the following children: Ellis Smyser, born Feb. 11, 1870; Joseph Smyser, druggist; Mabel R., who was married to Morton C. Wilt; Sadie M., married to Ralph D. Smyser; Clay E., attorney-at-law; Ellen K.; Margaret Violet; and Mathias Smyser, attending school at Bordentown, N. J., Military Institute. Joseph Smyser, born Feb. 1, 1811, died Jan. 31, 1903, father of Mrs. Lewis, was the fourth in descent from Matthias Smyser, who was born Feb. 17, 1715, at Reigelbach, Parish Lustenau, Germany, from which place he emigrated in 1731, first settling in York county near Kreutz Creek, subsequently settling about three miles west of York on the farm now belonging to the Orphans' Home of York. This property was bequeathed to that institution by the late Samuel Smyser, a brother of the Joseph referred to above.

Ellis Smyser Lewis was born in York, Pa., and was educated in the public schools of his native city, and the York County Academy. In 1885 he entered the Western National Bank of York as clerk, and in a few years became its teller. In 1891 he resigned to accept the position of cashier of the private bank of Smyser, Bott & Co., and upon its consolidation with the York Trust Company in November, 1894, became teller of the latter institution. In October, 1899, he was elected treasurer of the York Trust Company, which position he now holds. He is also connected with a number of local corporations, being treasurer of the following concerns: The York & Dover Electric Railway Co.; York & Dallastown Electric Railway Co.; Wrightsville & York Street Railway Co.; Red Lion & Windsor Street Railway Co.; York Haven Street Railway Co.; York & Hanover Street Railway Co.; Wellsville Street Railway Co.; York & Maryland Line Street Railway Co.; York Steam Heating Co.; Edison Electric Light Co.; Westinghouse Electric Light, Heat & Power Co.; York Light, Heat & Power Co.; York Improvement Co.; York Suburban Land Co.; Hanover & McSherrystown Street Railway Co.; and Hanover Light, Heat & Power Co.

He is a member of the following societies: York Lodge, No. 266, F. & A. M. (of which lodge he is a past master); Howell Chapter, No. 159, Royal Arch Masons; York Commandery, No. 21, Knights Templar; Harrisburg Consistory, 32d degree, A. A. S. R.; Pennsylvania Society of Sons of the Revolution; The Colonial Society of Pennsylvania; Vigilant Steam Fire & Chemical Engine Co., No. 1, of York, Pa.; Royal Fire Company, No. 6, of York, Pa.; and York County Historical Society. Mr. Lewis is a Lutheran, a member of St. Paul's English Evangelical Lutheran Church, and was a member of its church council from 1894 to 1899, during which time he was its secretary.

In politics Mr. Lewis is a Republican, but until recently has taken no active part in political affairs. In 1904 he was elected a member. of the Select Council from the Eleventh ward of York, for a period of four years, and in April, 1905, he was elected president of the Select Council for the ensuing year. In April, 1906, he was again elected to the same position.

On June 14, 1894, Mr. Lewis married, in Greencastle, Pa., Emma Wilson, daughter of Captain and Rev. Frederick and Anna E. (Wilson) Klinefelter, and their children are: Anna Wilson and Ellis. Mrs. Lewis is a member of the Yorktown Chapter of the Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, her father's grandfather having served as a soldier of that war.

Frederick Klinefelter, father of Mrs. Lewis, was a descendant of Melchoir Klinefelter, who emigrated from Germany to Pennsylvania in 1750, and settled near Shrewsbury. He was born in York, Sept. 26, 1836, youngest son of Adam and Sarah (Doudel) Klinefelter, and died in that city July 28, 1903. He enlisted twice in the Union army during the Civil war. He left Gettysburg College, where he was a student, on Lincoln's call for three months' men, and enlisted April 25, 1861, in Company H, 16th Pa. V. I., served under Gen. Patterson in Maryland and Virginia, and was discharged at the expiration of his term of enlistment, July 31, 1861. On June 17, 1863, he was commissioned by Governor A. G. Curtin Captain of Company A, 26th Pennsylvania Militia, a company composed of students of the Theological Seminary and College at Gettysburg, and mustered out in August, 1863. On Aug. 7, 1863, he was drafted for United States service, but was relieved Aug. 25th of the same year by paying $300 commutation.

Frederick Klinefelter graduated from Pennsylvania College in 1862; he was a member of the Phi Gamma Delta. He graduated from the Theological Seminary at Gettysburg Pa., in 1864, and was ordained to the ministry at Hanover, Pa., Sept. 5th, of that year. He married (first) Sept. 4, 1866, Anna Elizabeth, who was born July 16, 1832, and died June 14, 1884, daughter of David G. and Emma (Moore) Wilson, of Philadelphia. David G. Wilson was a son of John and Ann (Wood) Wilson; his wife, Emma, was a daughter of Enoch and Elizabeth (Alderman) Moore. Mr. Klinefelter married (second) April 2, 1891, Clara A. Wunderlich, of Chambersburg, who died suddenly Aug. 3, 1904, at Moore's, Delaware Co., Pennsylvania.

Adam Klinefelter, father of Frederick, was born near Shrewsbury, Pa., April 9, 1796, and died in York, May 1, 1871. He was a son of Michael Klinefelter. Sarah (Doudel) Klinefelter, mother of Frederick, was born in York, Oct. 18, 1794, and died in that city Nov. 30, 1867. Her parents were Jacob and Catherine (Dinkel) Doudel.

Jacob Doudel, who was born June 28, 1760, and died Sept. 21, 1837, enlisted in 1776, as a drummer boy in Capt. Michael Doudel's Company, of York, under Col. Swope. He enlisted again in November, 1782, under Capt. Ford, Major Bailey commanding.

GEORGE E. NEFF, member of the law firm of Niles & Neff, of York, was born Aug. 12, 1860, at Wenona, Marshall Co., Ill., son of George W. and Mary Ann (Lehr) Neff. Mr. Neff attended the public schools of York, Pa., graduating from the high school in the class of 1877, after which he took up the reading of law. He received his preparation for the profession under William H. Kain, Esq., now deceased, and was admitted to the Bar July 15, 1882. In October, 1884, Mr. Neff formed a partnership with W. F. Bay Stewart and Henry C. Niles, the firm taking the name of Stewart, Niles & Neff, and continuing as such until Mr. Stewart was elected Judge. Since January 1, 1896, it has been Niles & Neff. Mr. Neff was in the public service as member of the common council of York in 1885. He is a member of St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church of York.

GEORGE W. HEIGES (deceased). Seldom has any man in public life won for himself so warm a place in the esteem and affection of all who were brought in contact with him as did George W. Heiges during the thirty odd years he spent in York. The city of York lost a favored son in his death, but she did not sorrow alone. The county of York mourned a distinguished public servant, and the State of Pennsylvania was deprived of the services of an eminent practitioner of law. His death occurred Dec. 3, 1900.

George W. Heiges was born in Dillsburg, York county, May 18, 1842, son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Mumper) Heiges, and he was reared at Dillsburg, where he attended the public schools, also going to the Normal school and Newville Academy. At the age of seventeen years Mr. Heiges began teaching in the vicinity of his home, and in 1861 located in York, to accept a position under his brother, Samuel B. Heiges, superintendent of the York schools. In the fall of 1862 Mr. Heiges took charge of the Cottage Hill college, which he conducted until 1865, when it was closed, and he took up the study of law under D. J. Williams. After being admitted to the Bar he located in York, opening an office alone, and from that time until his death practiced law extensively. Mr. Heiges served in the State Legislature in 1873 and 1874, and filled the office of Burgess of York Borough, being the last to fill that office. Mr. Heiges was ever ready to aid his city or county in any way, and his influence in the Democratic ranks, of which he was a staunch member, was such that he was many times appointed to stumps the State, when the occasion warranted. When his services were in demand, Mr. Heiges was ever ready, and the effect of his work was felt throughout the county.

Mr. Heiges was a member of the F. & A. M., charter member of Zeretada Lodge of York, No. 451, P. M.; Howell Chapter No. 199, Past High Priest; York Commandery, No. 21, P. C.; member of the I. O. O. F.; was a member of the State Bar Association and of the Pennsylvania German Society. He was a communicant of St. John’s Episcopal Church, and was a member of the choir for many years, being the first leader of the boy choir, and was also active in Sabbath school work.

George W. Heiges married in York, Mary E. Gallagher, daughter of John and Frances A. (Days) Gallagher; she died Dec. 7, 1905. Mr. and Mrs. Heiges had two children: Helen D., who died in 1896, at the age of twenty years; and Stuart S., at home. The latter is organist at the First M. E. Church, and leader of the City Band of York, of which he has been conductor since he was nineteen years of age, being one of the youngest band leaders in the State, and he is also an instructor on the clarinet, and gives private lessons on the piano.

The parents of Mrs. Heiges are both deceased. The father came from County Donegal, town of Ramelton, Ireland, with his parents at the age of twelve years, locating in Westmoreland county. His father was Thomas Gallagher, whose father was a cousin of Elizabeth Patterson, who became the wife of Bonaparte. Thomas Gallagher married a Miss McElhinny, a native of London, and after locating in Westmoreland county, settled upon a large farm upon which he lived until his death. He was one of the prosperous citizens of that section of Pennsylvania, and was vestryman of the Episcopal Church at Greensburg. He reared a large family, whom he gave the advantages of a good education.

John Gallagher, Mrs. Heiges’ father, was born in 1802, and died in 1865, in York, in the home where Mrs. Heiges resided. He was educated at Dickinson College, Carlisle, and when a young man went to Baltimore, Md., and associated himself with Thomas and James Harwood, commission merchants, in 1830 coming to York where he engaged in a mercantile business, which he followed until his death. He was vestryman of St. John’s Episcopal Church, and V. P. of St. Patrick’s Beneficial Society. He married Miss Frances A. Day, of Frederick, Md., who was of German ancestry. She died in 1847, at the age of thirty-three years, the mother of two children: Isabella, the widow of I. A. Coombs, a soldier of the Civil war; and Mary G., who married George W. Heiges.

EDMUND W. MEISENHELDEN, M. D.
For a long period of years, commencing as early as 1683, and continuing, practically with a steadily increasing flow, to the very dawn of the American Revolution, a great tide of German immigrants, mostly from the Palatinate, swept across the Atlantic to the shores of this Western world. The wanton destruction of towns and cities; the unnecessary and widespread devastation of landed estates; the industrial depression which affected all the walks of life; the political and religious ostracism and oppression everywhere prevalent, as attendant and dependent upon the great continental wars, left an aftermath of poverty and want, of distress and of suffering, so bitter, and of conditions, political and religious, so chaotic and so trying, as to impel thousands of all classes and conditions to look elsewhere for some ray of hope to pierce the almost impenetrable gloom of a situation no longer endurable.

To these anxious seekers for a brighter day, for a land of promise, wherein there should be absolute freedom of conscience, and where each, without onerous restrictions, could reap the fruit of his labors, none appealed with such force and favor as the land of Penn. Doubtless the glamour of this far-distant country, picture of fact and fancy, so different from their own miserable surroundings, added enchantment to the view, and in these sylvan shades they sought that release from care and anxiety elsewhere denied. To this great Commonwealth, rich in material resources, with boundless treasure hidden in the bowels of the earth, with its wooded hills and valleys, and soil of unsurpassed fertility, that great infusion of German blood, inspired by an ardent love for liberty, tempered by a safe conservatism, and by profound religious convictions, was a Godsend—a blessing of untold magnitude—reaching through all the years that now lie buried in the past, yet finding undiminished force in the living present. Of the history of this great State they have illumined every page; theirs is no ignoble place; not less than others they have blazed their way to name and fame. Never, on field or forum, have they played a minor part; in battle their blood has flowed as freely, and in the council chamber their wisdom has shone as brilliantly, as that of those born under other skies.

At the port of Philadelphia, from the ship
"Neptune," John Mason, captain, Sept. 24, 1751, landed a German immigrant, by name
David Meisenhelder—erroneously given as David Maisheller. As to his birth and ancesterds the lapse of time has left no trace. He wended his way westward to Lancaster county, Pa., and undoubtedly settled in that locality.
The records of Trinity Lutheran Church, Lancaster city, show that to him and his wife Margaretha, née Fischer, was born a son, Aug. 14, 1752; a second son was born Nov. 3, 1753, and a third, April 8, 1756. The second son, baptized Johann David Meisenhelder, was the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch.
During the war of the Revolution he lived in Mount Joy township, Lancaster county, and, in the year 1776 was enrolled therein as a freeman, and taxed fifteen shillings. In the latter part of the eighteenth century he moved to York county, and settled in Dover township, building a log dwelling-house, one and one-half stories high, and a stone barn, on the north side of Fox run, and about one-fourth of a mile west of the Bull road. Here he lived and pros-ered, and his increasing landed possessions required the erection of additional buildings.

A stone dwelling-house, a large stone barn, and a stone chopping-mill were built in 1818, on the low ground nearer the creek. He died in 1819, and the ancestral acres, at one time said to have been four hundred, passed into the hands of his sons John and Samuel. He left a large family—not an unusual thing in those early days. One son, Jacob, was the paternal grandfather, and Anna Maria Neumann, daughter of George Neumann, was the paternal grandmother, of Dr. Edmund W. Meisenheld.

Edmund Washington Meisenhelder was born Feb. 22, 1843, in the village of Dover, York Co., Pa., in a log dwelling of the earlier days, which he can still distinctly recall. His father was Dr. Samuel Meisenhelder, a son of Jacob Meisenhelder, a lineal descendant of the immigrant of 1751. For many years Dr. Samuel Meisenhelder was a practitioner of medicine in East Berlin, Adams Co., Pa. He died in 1883, respected and honored by all who knew him.

The mother of the subject of this sketch was Josephine Sarah Meisenhelder, née Lewis, the daughter and oldest child of Dr. Robert Lewis and Mary (Moore) Lewis. Dr. Robert
Lewis was a lineal descendant of that Ellis
Lewis who came over to America in 1708, from the North of Ireland. The stock was of Quaker faith, primarily Welsh, but the family migrated to Ireland at the close of the Seventeenth century. Dr. Robert Lewis was an emiinent and successful physician; a man of profound convictions; an unswerving advocate of human rights, and an active agent in the management of that "Underground Railroad," which, in the days of intense slavery agitation, long before the Civil war—through the darkness of the night and through agencies unknown—speeded the fleeing slave from bondage to freedom. Because of his activity, and practical sympathy for the slave, a reward was offered for his apprehension and conviction.

From the earliest days Edmund W. Meisen-helder manifested an intense love of learning.
He distinctly recalls how, as a mere child, prone upon the floor, in front of the fire upon the hearth, by its flickering glare, he pored over his juvenile books. As the years rolled on his devotion to books increased, and the longing for the acquisition of knowledge was intensi-ﬁed. Through the common schools of the State, from grade to grade, he passed. until in the summer of 1859 he entered the preparatory department of Pennsylvania College, at Gettysburg; was admitted to the Freshman class, in the fall of 1860, and divided the Freshman prize, for highest scholarship, with two of his classmates. In the Junior year he took the Hassler gold medal for proficiency in Latin language, literature, and composition, and in the ensuing (Senior) year was graduated at the head of his class.

In the summer of 1863, during that invasion of Pennsylvania which culminated in the battle of Gettysburg, he enlisted in Company A, 26th Pennsylvania Volunteer Militia. This company was largely made up of students from the college and seminary, and was the first to respond to Governor Curtin’s “Emergency call.” In the summer of 1864, after his graduation, he enlisted in Company D, 210th Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was sent to the front with his regiment. As regimental quartermaster sergeant, and later on as second lieutenant of Company D, he took part in Grant’s final campaign in front of Petersburg, and was present at the surrender of Lee’s worn and wasted battalions. With the close of the war he was honorably discharged, and, once more a simple citizen, took up the study of that profession the practice of which has been his life-work. After a full course, supplemented by two summer courses, he was graduated from Jefferson Medical College in the spring of 1868.

Since that time he has been actively engaged in the practice of his profession, until the spring of 1871 with his father, and since, in York, Pa. In all the years which have elapsed since he entered upon his professional career he has been active, energetic, and unselfish in the discharge of its varied duties. This conscientious devotion to his work has characterized his entire life, and has brought to him large responsibilities, leaving little time indeed for rest, and the cultivation of other fields of effort which he loves, and for which he has a natural aptitude. Into his life-work he has steadily endeavored to infuse all the good that can come from the close association of the thoughtful mind, the feeling heart, and the helping hand. In the broadest, noblest sense, in the medical profession, what men do for others, for humanity, not for self, erects a monument more beautiful than chiseled marble, more enduring than brass or granite shaft—a monument wreathed with the sweetest flowers of love and gratitude.

On Dec. 22, 1870, Dr. Edmund W. Meisenheller was united in marriage to Miss Maria Elizabeth Baughman, daughter of Jacob B. Baughman and Lydia (Swartz) Baughman, of Baughamsville, York Co., Pa. To this marriage have been born four children: Robert L., a Lutheran minister in charge of a mission church at Harrisburg, Pa.; Edmund W., a graduate of Johns Hopkins Medical School, now associated with him in practice; Samuel B., a law student at Harvard, and Mary E., a student at Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts.

In faith, like his paternal ancestry, Dr. Meisenheller is a Lutheran, but absolutely devoid of sectarian bias, and inclined to the widest liberality of thought consistent with the cardinal principles of the Christian religion. In politics he is a Republican of the most independent type, believing that the good citizen—law-abiding, public-spirited, patriotic, and conscientious—is, far and away, the superior of the servile partisan. As becomes a soldier of the war for the preservation of the Union, as befits one who has coursing through his veins the blood of a Revolutionary ancestry, he scorns to own a boss, or to be a boss in turn—to thus besmirch and belittle the glorious heritage “bequeathed from bleeding sire to son.” Mellowed by the observation and experience of years, he has gathered wisdom from their lessons, and recognizes, in all its cogency, the broad fact that the country is far above party, and that no one party enjoys a monopoly of patriotism, or political righteousness or of political corruption. With the courage of his convictions, and fearless in the advocacy of the Right, he is a firm and unflinching friend of every progressive agency, and of every reform which is intended for the betterment of the race. It is a far greater honor—a far nobler ambition—to serve under the spotless banner of the Right, than to lead the forces of expediency, or Wrong.

For Right is Right, as God is God,
And Right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin.

HOWARD E. YOUNG, president of the J. S. Young Company, Baltimore, Md., and of J. S. Young & Co., Limited, Hanover and Shrewsbury, Pa., is one of the leading manufacturers of the day in York county and the city of Baltimore. He was born at Hanover, York Co., Pa., April 20, 1856, and is a son of the late John S. Young, who during a prosperous business career was successful also in building up the interests of Hanover, and became prominent and influential both in his native town and in Baltimore.

Mr. Young obtained his preparatory education in a private school at Hanover and a private school at Ithaca, N. Y. In order to fit himself thoroughly for the active duties of life, he then took a business course in the city of Philadelphia, and upon leaving school entered into business with his father, in 1873 becoming a member of the firm of J. S. Young & Co. In 1876, upon the incorporation of the J. S. Young Company, he was made secretary of the company. At this time the J. S. Young Company owned a large establishment for the manufacture of bark extracts and flavine at Hanover, and a similar establishment at Shrewsbury Station, York Co., Pa. In 1883 they founded an extensive business at Boston and Elliott streets, Baltimore, in the manufacture of licorice and sumac extracts, erecting a mill, which is one of the largest in the country. The product of the various mills is distributed all over the United States, England and Germany. They are manufacturers of Greek and Spanish licorice paste. The licorice root used in the mills of the company is obtained in Russia and Turkey in Europe, and brought to Baltimore in ship loads. The business is conducted on an extensive scale, a branch office being maintained at Nos. 130-132 Pearl street, New York.

From the very beginning of his association with the J. S. Young Company Mr. Howard E. Young was active and influential in the transaction of all their affairs. At his father's death, in 1899, he became president of the J. S. Young Company, of Baltimore, and of J. S. Young & Co., of Hanover, and has since directed their steadily increasing business.

Like his father, Mr. Young has always been deeply solicitous for the material growth and development of his native town of Hanover apart from his merely personal interest in projects affecting his business. He was one of the prime movers in the organization of the Hanover Cordage Company, in 1890, and the president of that concern until it was sold to the National Cordage Company. He was president of the Hanover Telephone Company, which he and others organized in 1894, and which developed into a growing and prosperous corporation. When the Consumers' Water Company of Hanover was organized in 1895, for the purpose of increasing the water supply of the town, he became treasurer; this company later bought out the original company, acquiring its charter, franchises and plant, which were consolidated with their own.

Mr. Young was a director of the Baltimore & Harrisburg branch of the Western Maryland railroad from 1891 to 1906, was its president from 1901 to 1906, and is now a director of the Maryland & Pennsylvania railroad. He is also a director of the Mercantile Trust & Deposit Company, of Baltimore, Maryland.

In political faith Mr. Young is a Republican, but he takes no very active part in such matters, and has never held office with the exception of that of member of the school board, to which position he was elected in 1885; he served two terms as president of that board.

Mr. Young was married in 1878 to Martha, daughter of Edward H. Etzler, a prominent grain merchant of Hanover and Baltimore. To them have been born three children, Edward E., John S. and Mary C.

Edward E. Young, the eldest son of Howard E. Young, was educated at a private school at Ithaca, N. Y., and at the age of nineteen became associated with the business of the J. S. Young Company at Hanover and Baltimore, succeeding his father as secretary and treasurer. His interest in and remarkable capacity for business became evident at once, and he was untiring in his efforts in everything he attempted to do, displaying traits which qualified him for high responsibilities. He was personally popular with all his associates, and was highly esteemed by everyone who knew him. After a prosperous career of only four years, he died at Baltimore, Md., Feb. 17, 1902. John S. Young, the second son of Howard E. Young, obtained his education in the public schools of Hanover, and a private school at Ithaca, N. Y. At the death of his brother, Edward, he took his position in the business of the J. S. Young Company, of which he has been both secretary and treasurer since 1902. Mary C. Young, the only daughter, was educated in the public schools and at The Castle, an educational institution for young ladies at Tarrytown, New York.

The family residence, one of the handsomest houses in Hanover, is on Carlisle street, being located on the same piece of ground bought by Mr. Young's great-grandfather, William Young, March 30, 1795, and which was his place of residence until his death, in 1850. This property has continued in the family until the present time.

JOHN M. YOUNG, attorney-at-law and director and treasurer of the Williamsport Iron & Nail Company, was born at Middletown, Ohio, Aug. 30, 1845, son of William and Eliza (Mumm) Young. His father, William Young, a grandson of Charles Young, who settled in the vicinity of Hanover in 1746, was born at Hanover Jan. 11, 1803. Early in life William Young moved to Middletown, Ohio, where he carried on an extensive business, which he continued for a period of forty years. He was one of the representative men of the town and county with which he was so long identified. His wife died at Middletown Feb. 4, 1848. In 1863 William Young retired from business and returned to his native town of Hanover, where he died Aug. 30, 1889, at the advanced age of eighty-six years. He had a vivid recollection of many events and incidents relating to the early history of Hanover, and recalled them with eager interest and greatest accuracy. William and Eliza (Mumm) Young had five children, three of whom died in infancy. Mary R., their daughter, married William A. Schreyer, of Milton, Pa., Dec. 12, 1861. She died June 22, 1876, and her husband died Dec. 15, 1903. They had six children, of whom two died in infancy; Maria E. married W. R. Kramer, now living in Williamsport, Pa.; Rebecca Y. is living in Milton; John Y. married Carrie H. Smith, of Washington, D. C., has two children, and lives in Milton; Harry H. married Bertha Datesman, of West Milton, has two children, and lives in Milton.

John M. Young obtained his preparatory education in the schools of his native town and at Hanover. He then entered Pennsylvania College, at Gettysburg, and was graduated from that institution in 1865. He read law in the office of Judge David Wills, of Gettysburg, and completed his legal studies at Harvard Law School. He was admitted to the Bar at Gettysburg in 1868, and began the practice of law in Kansas, and continued to follow that profession at Middletown, Ohio, and in York, Pa., until 1883. Becoming interested in the manufacturing business, he moved to Williamsport, Pa., where he resides. Since 1884 he has been treasurer and director of the Williamsport Iron & Nail Company, and is prominently identified with the public affairs of that enterprising city. He is a member of the Board of Trade, Brandon Park Commission, and director of the First National Bank of Williamsport. Mr. Young showed his patriotism during the Civil War by enlisting three times in the Union army, in 1862, 1863 and 1864. He received an honorable discharge each time, and is a member of Reno Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Williamsport.

Mr. Young was married at Gettysburg in 1868 to Carrie Van Patten, who was born in Washington in 1848. She is a descendant on her father's side from Charles Frederic Van Patten, one of the founders of Schenectady, N. Y., and of Charles Hansen Toll, a member from New York to the Continental Congress, in which he served for thirteen years. On her mother's side she is a direct descendant of John Harper, who in 1681 came from England with William Penn (in the ship "Welcome"), and settled in Frankfort, now a part of Philadelphia. John M. and Carrie (Van Patten) Young have eight children: William, born in Topeka, Kans., now practicing law in New York City, and a member of the New York Legislature; Edwin P., born in Middletown, Ohio, now a practicing lawyer in Pittsburg; John Paul, born in Middletown, Ohio, now general manager of the Youngstown (Ohio) Car Works, and married to Margaret K. Oliver, of Pittsburg; Charles Van Patten, born in Middletown, now professor at Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., and married to Eleanor Mahaffey, of Williamsport, Pa.; George H., born in York, now superintendent and assistant treasurer of the Williamsport Iron & Nail Company, married to Alice D. Holland, of New York City; Mary, born in Middletown, and Carrie Van Patten and Ruth Van Patten, born in York. All the sons and the daughter Carrie graduated at Cornell University. Mary was graduated at Wellesley, Mass., and in Germany. Ruth graduated at the Williamsport high school, finished at Wellesley, and is married to Carl G. Allen, of Williamsport, Pennsylvania.

HENRY C. SMYSER. The successful commercial career of Henry C. Smyser illustrates the advantages that are afforded in the aggressive State of Pennsylvania for men of integrity and courage, who have a capacity for business and are willing to strike hard blows.
Mr. Smyser was born July 12, 1844, in York, where he has made his home ever since.

In looking over the records of the Smyser family we find that Mathias Smyser was born in the village of Rugelbach, belonging to the Parish Lusenian, about six miles west of Dunkelsbuhl, in Germany, Feb. 17, 1715. Dunkelsbuhl is a considerable town within a few miles of the boundary of the kingdom of Bavaria. Rugelbach is situated within a few miles of the boundary which divides that kingdom from that of Bavaria. Dunkelsbuhl is nearly in a straight line between Stuttgart and Nuremberg, about seventy-five miles from the former and about sixty miles W. S. W. from the latter.

The parents of Mathias Smyser were Martin and Anna Barbara Smyser. Of the early history of Mathias or his father, Martin, little is known at this day, further than that Martin was a respectable farmer and member of the Lutheran Church, within the above named parish, and that his son Mathias, with his brother, George, and sister, Margareta, emigrated to America about 1732, or probably at an earlier period. Mathias, it seems, first settled in the neighborhood of Kreutz Creek, York county, where he followed the weaving business, soon afterward taking up a large body of land in the neighborhood of what is now called Spring Forge, in the same county. It is said that, anxious to get neighbors, Mathias made presents of several farms from his own tract to such as agreed to improve and live on them. Whether his brother, George, was one of those who received a plantation from him on the same terms mentioned is not certainly known, but it is known that the two brothers were neighbors at the above named place, and it is said that Mathias, after some years' residence there, finding that he had parted with the best portion of his land, sold out and purchased a tract of about four hundred or five hundred acres from a Mr. Henthorn, about three miles west of York, to which he removed May 3, 1745. On this farm he continued to reside until his death, in 1778.

George Smyser, brother of Mathias, purchased a farm somewhere between York and York Haven, where he resided several years, and then, not being pleased with the quality of his land, he sold it and removed to the backwoods, as the west and southwest country was then called, probably to some part of Virginia, and nothing from the time of his removal is definitely known of him. There are, however, Smyers residing in the neighborhood of Louisville, Ky., and it is thought that they are descendants of George Smyser, the brother of Mathias.

Mathias Smyser left to survive him three sons and six daughters: Michael, Jacob and Mathias; Dorothy, Sabina, Rosanna, Elizabeth, Anna Maria and Susanna. Michael Smyser, the eldest, was born in 1740 and died in 1810; Jacob was born in 1742 and died in 1794; Mathias, born in 1744, died in 1829; Anna Maria, the next to the youngest daughter, was born in 1757 and died in 1833; Susanna, the youngest, born in 1760, died in 1840; and the ages of the other daughters are not at present known.

Michael Smyser, eldest son of Mathias, was long and extensively known as a respectable farmer and tavern-keeper, the owner of a well-cultivated farm of about two hundred acres, which was cut from a portion of his father's farm, and, although not favored with a liberal education, was known as a man of discriminating mind and sound judgment. He was early associated with the leading Revolutionary patriots of the country, and marched to the battlefield as captain of a company in Col. M. Swope's regiment, and was one of those who were taken prisoner at Fort Washington, on the Hudson, near New York, on Nov. 16, 1776. He became colonel of his regiment, and the sword carried by him in the War of Independence may now be seen in the York County Historical Society rooms. In 1778 he was elected one of the members of the House of Representatives in the State Legislature for York County, and from that time until 1790 he was seven times chosen to serve in that capacity. In 1790 and 1794 he was elected to the State Senate, serving until 1798.

Jacob Smyser, the second son of Mathias, was also a respectable farmer and for some years a justice of the peace. In 1789 he was elected to the House of Representatives, and a few years afterward died at the age of fifty-one years.

Mathias Smyser, the youngest of the three sons, resided at the mansion home of his father, where he quietly pursued the useful occupation of an agriculturist, laboring with his own hands for many years, and maintaining in the course of a long life the well-earned reputation of an honest man, of the strictest integrity. In the Revolutionary war he was also in the service for some time, not as a soldier, but as a teamster, conducting a baggage wagon, and was throughout a zealous advocate of the Whig cause. He lived to be over eighty-four years old, a greater age, by several years, than any of his brothers or sisters attained.

The descendants of Mathias Smyser, the eldest, have become very numerous. His oldest son, Michael, left three sons and four daughters: Peter, Elizabeth, Sarah, Jacob, Mary, Michael and Susan. Jacob, his second son, left children: Henry, Jacob, Martin, John, Catherine, Daniel, Peter and Adam. Mathias, the third son, had seven children, viz.: Catherine, Polly, George, Jacob, Mathias, Philip and Henry. His eldest daughter, Dorothy, who married Peter Hoke, left eight children: Michael, Corlissa, Catherine, Peter, Jacob, Sarah, Polly and George. Sabina married Jacob Swope and resided in Lancaster county, where she left five sons, Jacob, George, Mathias, Emanuel and Frederick, and two daughters. Rosanna married George Maul and resided for some years in the town of York, and afterward removed to Virginia, with her husband, locating between Noland's Ferry on the Potomac and Leesburg in Loudoun county, where she died about 1796 or 1797, leaving four daughters and one son: Susan, Catherine, Polly, Peggy and Philip, Elizabeth, George and Daniel each having lived to the age of twenty years, and Peggy and Philip having died since 1826. Elizabeth married Leonard Eichelberger, and at the time of her death was residing near Dillsburg, York county. She left four sons, Jacob, Frederick, George and John, and four daughters whose names are not known. Anna Maria, married Martin Ebers, and left: George, Martin, Daniel, Adam, Michael, Susan, Helena and Anna Mary. Susan, the youngest daughter, married Philip Ebert, and left one son and four daughters to survive her: Henry, Elizabeth, Catherine, Lydia and Sarah. Her youngest son, Michael, who died about a year before his mother, had resided in St. Louis, Mo., where he had engaged as a merchant. Her second daughter, the wife of Henry Small, also died about two years previous to her death. Thus we have sixty-four grandsons and daughters of Mathias Smyser the elder, nearly all of whom are now living and have or have had families.

In April, 1839, Mathias Smyser, the grandson of Mathias, set out to make a tour through a part of Europe. He was then fifty-six years old and had spent his past life as a farmer in York county. The main object of his trip to Europe was to visit the birthplace of his grandfather. There was nothing in this country by which the place of his nativity could be traced except the inscription on his tombstone in the burying-ground of the Lutheran Church in the borough of York. Mr. Smyser sailed from New York for Havre, France, where he arrived in safety. From Havre he traveled through the interior of France to Geneva; from Geneva his main route was to Lausanne, Berne, Basel, Freybergin, the Dukedom of Baden, Strasburg, Baden, Karlsruhe, Stuttgart, Kreisheim and then to Dunkelsbuhl, where he inquired for Rugelbach, and found that he was within six miles of his destination. This is a small village inhabited by farmers, and in itself is not interesting to a stranger, but to him who sought it as being the birthplace of his ancestor it was a spot of intense interest. When the house was pointed out to him in which his grandfather had been born 124 years previous, still known by the name of Schmeisser's house, though its present occupants were of another name, when he beheld this time-worn, humble mansion, when he entered it and felt a consciousness of being within the same walls, probably treading upon the same floor which, more than a century before, had been trodden by his grandfather, his gratification can hardly be imagined by us, who have not experienced it. Mr. Smyser called upon the pastor of the parish, the Reverend Sieskind, and made known to him his desire to see his grandfather's name on the baptismal register. The reverend gentleman opened the ancient book, but through age and accident it had become much mutilated, and it took hours of patient search before the following interesting entry was found: "Mathias Schmeisser, born 17th day of February, 1715, son of Martin Schmeisser and his wife, Anna Barbara, was baptized," &c. This record agrees precisely with that on his tombstone in America. The minister next led Mr. Smyser to the church of the parish and pointed out to him the taufstein, assuring him that, according to the unravelling custom, before that stone, and on that spot, his grandfather had been baptized. In the register mentioned above and also in that of a village called Dreiber, some miles distant, the name of Schmeisser was very often found. Mathias Smyser met with a man named Andrew Schmeisser, at or near Mossbach, who was sixty-seven years of age, with whom he was greatly pleased, seeing in him a strong resemblance to his own father, especially when the latter was about the same age. They may have been second cousins, although Andrew Schmeisser had no recollection of hearing that a Mathias Schmeisser had emigrated to America.

Mathias Smyser the elder must have joined the first Lutheran congregation organized in York and its vicinity soon after his arrival in America, for his name, together with that of George Smyser, is found among the names of the members of that congregation, which commenced the erection of a church, a wooden structure, in 1752. In the graveyard connected with this church, in 1778, his body was interred, the evidence of which is found on his tombstone. The Smyser family were all warm and active supporters of the American cause during the Revolutionary struggle. Col. Michael Smyser being a useful man in the councils of that time, as well as in the field. When the war commenced in 1775, and the port of Boston was closed, for the purpose of starving the people of that important point into submission, a committee of twelve persons of York county was formed for the purpose of affording relief to their distressed brethren of Boston. A sum of nearly two hundred and fifty pounds specie, a large sum at that time, was raised and remitted to John Hancock, afterward president of Congress, with a spirited letter of encouragement and promises of further assistance. These facts are recorded for the honor of our country in the American Archives at Washington with the names of the committee. Michael Smyser was an active and leading member of that committee and remitted, as a part of the above sum, from Manchester township, six pounds, twelve shillings, one penny. If the American cause had failed all the members of that committee, as well as their illustrious correspondent, on whose head a price was set, would have forfeited their lives on the scaffold.

Col. Michael Smyser's son, Jacob Smyser, was the grandfather of our subject, and was born in West Manchester township, where he was reared on a farm. He then came to York and engaged in the tanning business, which he carried on extensively and made his life occupation. He was active in Christ Lutheran Church of York and lived to an advanced age. He married Margaretha Tessler, who bore him the following children: Israel, Michael and Henry. Henry went to Pittsburg, Pa., from where he traveled to Ohio, some of his descendants still residing there. Michael was associated with his brother, Israel, in his business, that of tanning, and each owned a lumber yard in connection, operating extensively, the lumber business, however, being secondary to their tanning industry.

Israel Smyser, the father of our subject, was born in 1800, in York, where he died in 1848, being buried in the Prospect Hill cemetery. He married Miss Matilda Ebert, daughter of Daniel and Susan (Ernst) Ebert. Daniel Ebert was one of the well-to-do farmers of York and his death, or supposed death, has always remained a mystery, as he disappeared after going to Baltimore, where he drew a large sum of money. Mrs. Smyser, our subject's mother, died Dec. 18, 1873, at the age of sixty-six years. She had the following children: Margaretha, who was the wife of David Gartman, and both are deceased; Celinda, the wife of John F. Stein, of Philadelphia; Charles E., a farmer of Dover township; Rebecca E., who died single; Daniel E., deceased; George M., deceased; and Henry C., the subject of this sketch.

Henry C. Smyser was the youngest child of his parents. He received his education in the public schools of his native town, and when not at school assisted his brother at the lumber yard. At the age of nineteen years he entered the book store of Hiram Young, as a clerk, remaining with him for fifteen years, and in 1878, with John M. Brown, under the firm name of Brown & Smyser, engaged in the lumber business, which he carried on continuously for twenty-six years. In 1904 Mr. Smyser retired from active life, giving up all business cares, and since that time has lived a quiet, peaceful life in his fine residence at No. 214 South George street, York.

Henry C. Smyser was married Jan. 1, 1865, to Miss Isabella C. Vandersloot, daughter of Rev. F. W. and Mary (Whitman) Vander doot, and they are the parents of one child, Mary M., who is at home. The family are members of St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church, in which Mr. Smyser has been one of the board of officers for fifteen years.

ADAM F. GEESEY. One hundred and sixty-two years of intimate connection with the affairs of York county should entitle the Geesey family to respectful and full consideration in a work devoted to biographical records of the most prominent families of the county.
The facts herein presented were furnished by the gentleman whose name heads this review, and who, himself, at the age of sixty-four years, looks back on a most active and honorable business career passed within the bounds of the county. Many of the material improvements completed in York owe their initiation to Adam F. Geesey, the most marked of these being possibly the attractive residence suburb of the city known as "Cottage Place," of which he was the originator.

The first authentic record of this family places them in Canton Berne, Switzerland, from which country they were driven by religious persecution over into Holland, where they continued to reside until 1738, in which year they landed at Philadelphia from the long ocean voyage in the good ship "Molley," from Rotterdam. In the records of the old St. John's Union Reformed and Lutheran Church it appears that Martin Geesey settled in York county, seven miles from what is now the city of York, in the year 1742. He was a farmer and wood worker. Martin Geesey became the father of John Jacob Geesey, born in 1748, and in turn became the parent of Jacob Geesey, born March 28, 1770. This gentleman, who was the grandfather of Adam F. Geesey, was a man of influence in the county, having held commissions as captain of militia from Governors Mifflin and McLean.

Jonathan Geesey, the father of Adam F., was born near the old homestead April 7, 1811.
He followed the occupation of his father and in turn became a man of position and influence, aquiring a reputation throughout the county as a counselor in matters of business. He mar-rried into a family which was also an old and honorable one, his wife's maiden name having been Sarah Flinchbaugh. She was the daughter of Adam, whose father, also named Adam, was the original emigrant of that family, coming to York county from Germany in 1752. Jonathan Geesey was the father of seven sons, one of whom died in infancy, and another at the age of sixty-three. Five still survive, the eldest being now seventy-three years of age. The father of this family lived to the age of sixty-six, dying in April, 1877;
the mother, surviving him some twenty years, died in March, 1897, at the age of eighty-eight years.

The birth of Adam F. Geesey occurred on the old homestead Nov. 21, 1841. He was reared to farm life and secured his education in the schools of his home district, applying himself to such purpose as to fit himself to become a teacher. This occupation he followed for several years, until the time arrived when he felt it his duty to give his support in the fight then waging for the maintenance of the Union. He enlisted in Company K, 200th P.
V. I., but his service with that command was not of long duration, owing to sickness. After recuperating he again enlisted, in 1865, this time as a member of Company G, 103d P. V.
I., in which organization he served until the close of the war.

Upon returning from the field Mr. Geesey launched a mercantile enterprise at Dallas-town, York county, which he continued with success through a period of seventeen years.
He then removed to York, where he again engaged in the mercantile business. This was terminated by his election, in 1878, on the Democratic ticket, as treasurer of York county, his popularity in that county being evidenced by the handsome majority of 2,900 which he received over his opponent. He served his own term of three years, and was then given power of attorney to conduct the office by his successor, John L. Landis, who was unable to attend to the duties of the position. In the six years which he gave to the management of the county's finances Mr. Geesey made a record which will continue for all time to furnish incentive to his successors. Upon assuming control he found a debt of $365,000 hanging over the county. His efforts were given to the reduction of same, and with it came a consequent reduction of the tax rate. Upon turning the office over to his successor, the debt had been entirely wiped out, and he was able to hand over a surplus of some $28,000. The tax rate had sunk to three mills.

The success of Mr. Geesey in the treasurer's office soon caused his selection (in July, BI Graphical

1885) by Collector of Internal Revenue John T. MacGonigal, of Lancaster, to take charge of the collector's office in York county. Here he served acceptably the following five years. This ended the public service of Mr. Geesey, which was entirely honorable and marked with efficiency and integrity to the close.

Mr. Geesey, now deciding to try the journalistic field, had, in 1887, purchased the York Gazette, and until 1893 devoted the greater part of his time to the upbuilding of that newspaper property. This he disposed of in 1893, and again took up the business of his younger manhood, merchandising, in which he engaged until 1899, when he sold out. He has not since been identified with the commercial life of the city.

Mr. Geesey's later activities have been in the development of trolley line systems, he having since 1900 been instrumental in the building of the Manchester, York & Dallastown and the York & Wrightsville lines. He is also a director in the Security Title & Trust Company of York, and has large real estate interests in the city.

The story of the development of "Cottage Place," York's aristocratic suburb, has been closely connected with the life of Mr. Geesey during the past two decades. After his election to the office of county treasurer Mr. Geesey, in selecting a place to build a home, purchased two blocks of ground and put up the handsome residence which he has since occupied. Being unable to secure gas except at an exorbitant cost, he interested himself in the organization of the Edison Electric Light Company of York, and after establishing the service began systematically to develop his scheme for a suburb which would attract builders of a high class, and it has resulted in the finest residence portion of the city. The Edison Electric Light Company was organized in 1883, and two years later was in operation. The lots which Mr. Geesey parted with off the original purchase were sold with the proviso that each building should be set back fifty feet off the street. Mr. Geesey retained his interest in the electric light company until 1900, when he sold to the company now in charge. It is a matter of record—and fairly a part of the history of the city—that the Edison Light Company of York owed its birth and present success to Mr. Geesey, who clung to it through all the years of its early struggles, never for a moment doubting the ultimate success which came to it. It is proper also to state in this connection that the York Steam Heating Company was founded by our subject in 1898, and he is still a director and superintendent; it was an adjunct of the electric light company.

The domestic life of Mr. Geesey has been most felicitous. It began in 1866 with his marriage to Miss B. Helen Hovis, daughter of Jacob, a farmer of York county, and of a very old family in the county. To this marriage came seven children, three of the sons dying in infancy, and two daughters in early childhood. The two survivors are Arthur H., born Dec. 8, 1888, and now at school; and Clarence A., the latter being the eldest.

Clarence A. Geesey was born at Dallastown, Oct. 1, 1870, and has for a number of years been an important factor in the business interests of York. After finishing the course at York Collegiate Institute he matriculated at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg, and finished his education there. In 1893 he became associated with his father in the mercantile business in York, continuing until the disposal of the business as stated. During his association with the mercantile interests of the city Mr. Geesey became influential in the merchants' organization known as the Merchants' Association of York, and of which he became secretary in 1898. In the same year he became a director and member of the Executive Committee of the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania, and in 1903 a director and second vice-president of the Retailers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company, of Pennsylvania.

Among other activities in which Mr. Clarence A. Geesey is interested is the York Steam Heating Company, his connection with this important enterprise commencing in 1899, and he has for some time been District steam engineer; he is also president of the Manoline Company, who are compounders of pharmaceutical preparations, this firm doing a national and international business. The Geesey Motor Car Company, of which he is the head and which has offices in the Geesey Building, is located at No. 26 South George street, the lot being the site where the Confederate cavalry leader, Gen. Jubal Early, met the burgess of York for negotiations concerning the sum to be paid for his saving the city.

Clarence A. Geesey resides in an elegant home at "Cottage Place," with his wife and one child, Adam F., Jr. Their other child, Charlotte Louise, died July 26, 1905, aged about one year. His wife comes of one of the prominent families, her maiden name having been Hattie Lafean, and she is a daughter of Charles Lafean, deceased, and sister of Congressman Lafean. She is a lady of much refinement of character and presides over her home with dignity and grace, which make her and husband most popular in York society. Mr. Geesey is a worthy member of York Masonic Lodge, No. 266, having been a Mason since 1867, is also prominent in the councils of the Royal Arcanum, and still retains his membership in his college fraternity, the Phi Kappa Psi.

The foregoing will serve imperfectly to note the salient facts concerning one of York's most prominent families. It is a record pregnant with suggestions of integrity and industry. The head of the family, Mr. Adam F. Geesey, is a broad-gauge man of intense activity and energy. He carries his enthusiasm into social and religious fields, as well as business, and is a tower of strength in the moral life of the community by reason thereof. In matters of philanthropic effort he is active, though he cleaves to the Bible injunction, for the most part, so that the recipients of his beneficence are unaware of the source of their relief. Taken all in all, he is a man whom to know is an inspiration and whose career ought to be a benison to the hundreds of youth who have come under its influence.

GEORGE P. SMYSER. York is particularly noted for having among her citizens prominent factors of the business world, men whose names are as familiar in the great centers of industry as many who are rated as kings of commerce and finance. The biographer is privileged to present here one of these gentlemen, a man whose operations extend into some thirty or more different corporations, many of them of high capitalization and extensive business. He is more familiarly known as the president of the E. G. Smyser Sons' Company, one of the most important iron concerns in the State.

Generations ago the name of Smyser was a familiar one in York county, as references to the first volume of this work will disclose. This generation of the family comprises the three sons who compose the E. G. Smyser Sons' Company: George P., born in York May 20, 1843, Henry M., born Nov. 10, 1844, and James A., born Feb. 4, 1849. George P. and Henry, who is unmarried, reside in York, while James, who married Mary, daughter of Lemuel Townsend, has resided in Baltimore since 1877, and is prominent in the business world there, being president of the Builders' Exchange Company, a director of the First National Bank, and having business connections with many prominent corporations.

George P. Smyser's residence life has been passed in York. After securing a good education in the York County Academy he entered the iron works of his father, who required all his sons to acquire an actual knowledge of the business by actual service. Here he spent four years in the machine department and three in the foundry. He then continued in various higher positions in the business part of the concern, and in 1875, in company with his brother Henry M., was made a member of the firm of which he is now president, preceding the entrance of James by three years. The growth of the business has been phenomenal, the structural and ornamental iron which is manufactured being sold in every State in the Union and in many foreign countries. It is worthy of note as a testimonial to the high character of the firm and the product that they constructed the New York end of the Brooklyn bridge, a piece of mechanical engineering unsurpassed in any country.

To record the different activities of Mr. Smyser would take pages of this volume. Several of the more important are the York Traction Company and its lines, the Central Market Company, of which he is president, and the York Trust Company, of which he is a director.

In the religious, educational and social world our subject takes a prominent part, being connected, officially and otherwise, with many different institutions which have for their object the uplifting of humanity. In fact, there is not a man in York to whom the word "brother" has a broader significance. As a lifelong member of the Lutheran Church he has been a powerful factor in the spread of its beneficent doctrines. He has been an elder in the old Zion Church in York for the past seventeen years, and has for many years been a member of the Board of Lutheran Church Extension of the United States. In the educational field he is equally active, serving one term on the board of school control, until he removed from that district, as trustee of the York County Academy since 1887, and as trustee of the York Orphans' Home.

Socially Mr. Smyser is a Knight Templar and a Mystic Shriner, while in politics he is active in the councils of the Democratic party. Mr. Smyser has always been uncompromising in his opposition to the financial vagaries of the western wing of the party and in 1896 was delegate to the National Convention of the Gold Democrats in Indianapolis. He is now proud to know that the efforts of himself and his compatriots have at last borne fruit in the return of the party to its old-time position on the money question.

The home which Mr. Smyser maintains in York is a model one, both in point of architectural excellence and comfort and in its happy domesticity. Our subject and his wife were married in York Nov. 22, 1855, her maiden name having been Jane V. Fulton. Mrs. Smyser was the daughter of Thomas H. Fulton, a cotton manufacturer, and her death occurred Dec. 26, 1895, at the age of fifty-eight years. Of the children born to this union, Mary S., the eldest daughter, is the wife of William Kinzer, of Lancaster; S. Jane D. married George H. Jeffers, son of Dr. Jeffers, president of the York Collegiate Institute; and Annie G. is now Mrs. W. F. O. Rosenmiller, her husband being connected with the York County Bank.

Life with our subject has never been a burden, but rather a joyous possibility. He drives his business, never giving it the reins, thus avoiding the mistake that wears out men prematurely. He takes care to relax the mind with change of thought and scene, and, though busy at all times, thus secures the rest which comes from the change of occupation. In pursuance of this idea he has traveled extensively, first becoming thoroughly acquainted with our own glorious heritage, and then crossing the ocean to the continent of Europe. In the five trips he has made to the Old World and the Holy Land Mr. Smyser has become thoroughly familiar with the Orient, its people and customs, and is thus a most entertaining and instructive companion.

In closing this review of the career of one of York's most esteemed citizens, the author feels that he voices the sentiment of all her people in giving him the highest meed of praise for the manly, helpful character which he has developed among them. His life has been an inspiration to many struggling youths, and an example of patient thrift and industry to all.

JOHN C. SCHMIDT, president of the Standard Chain Company, York, was born on March 16, 1859, at Carlisle, Pa., and received his education in the schools of St. Paul, Minn., the York Collegiate Institute and at Stuttgart, Germany. In 1876, after completing his education, Mr. Schmidt became connected with P. A. & S. Small's store, with which he remained until the fall of 1881, when he engaged in the manufacture of chains in York. He was alone in the business, which expanded with great rapidity, and he next bought the Keystone Chain Works, operating both plants for several years. These manufactories were subsequently consolidated, and a factory was built in a new location, the business culminating in the birth of the Standard Chain Company. This concern controls fifteen chain factories, and Mr. Schmidt has been president of the firm since March 14, 1900. The main office is located in Pittsburg, while branches are to be found at York and Carlisle, Pa., Columbus and St. Marys, Ohio, and Marion, Ind. Mr. Schmidt has other large business interests, being a director of the York National Bank, an office he has held for over twenty years; a director of the York Gas Company and a director in the York Water Company, and prominently connected with the Western Maryland Railroad and other corporations.

John C. Schmidt was married April 17, 1890, to Miss Anna M. Small, daughter of the late W. Latimer Small, and three children have been born to this union, namely: Katherine Riley, who is attending a private school which is maintained by a few families of York, of which Mrs. Schmidt was an organizer and promotor; Henry Duncan, who attends the York County Academy; and Mary Dalrymple, a pupil at a private school.

Mr. Schmidt belongs to the Lafayette and Country Clubs, in which he is very popular. In religious views he is an Episcopalian, attending St. John's Episcopal Church, in which he has been secretary of the vestry for more than twenty years. Politically he is a Republican; but in politics, as in all the affairs of life, he is broad-minded and liberal. Mr.
Schmidt is also president of the Schmidt & Ault Paper Company, operating the Codorus Paper Mills, with an output of 5,000 tons per annum. Their specialties are rosin-sized sheathing, carpet linings and butcher's wrapping paper, which find a market from New England to California. The business was started in 1897 with an annual output of 1,000 tons, its growth, like that of the Standard Chain Company, having been phenomenal under Mr. Schmidt's personal direction.

CAPT. JOHN FAHS, president of the Western National Bank of York, has long occupied a position of prominence in that city and county, as a leader in successful business enterprises and progressive public undertakings. In the intelligent direction of his own affairs he has had the opportunity to observe the needs of the community, and has given his time and attention to promoting the general welfare as unreservedly as he does to his personal interests. The Captain comes of a family which is among the oldest in York, and his record as a citizen and soldier does credit to the sturdy stock from which he springs.

John Fahs, his grandfather, was born at Emaus, Lehigh Co., Pa., and in his youth learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed until long past middle life. This was in the days prior to railroads, and all his work was from his own forgeries. The work was hard and confining, but he was industrious and prospered, investing his savings in land, owning many acres in and around Bottstown (now part of the city of York), York county, the greater part of which is now owned by his grandson, Capt. John Fahs. He died Sept. 5, 1834, aged sixty-nine years. He was known as a very kind-hearted and liberal man, and it was known that there were those in life whose start was due to the kind assistance, without other reward than gratitude, given by John Fahs. In after life, when he became possessed of much means, he could often be found in the old shop, chatting familiarly with his successors, and in many ways indicating his love for his old calling and old friends. In politics he was a Democrat, as were and are all of his progeny. He married Eva Feiser, a native of Dover township, York county, and their children were: John, mentioned below; Daniel, who married Miss Markey; Samuel, who married Mrs. Alterdise (born Wier); Elizabeth, who married Daniel Dinkle. All are deceased.

John Fahs, Sr., son of John, learned the blacksmith's trade with his father at Bottstown, which he followed with profit until his removal to a farm one mile northwest of Bottstown, locating on a tract at that time owned by his father. To this he added, in time having 166 acres, all but forty acres of which is now owned by Capt. John Fahs. His home was in West Manchester township, York county, until his retirement in the spring of 1853, when he returned to Bottstown, where he temporarily resided until the fall of 1854, when he purchased and moved to the Judge Bonham property at York borough, now No. 437 West Market street, where he spent the remainder of his days.

John Fahs, Sr., married Susan Ilgenfritz, daughter of Samuel Ilgenfritz, a wagoner, of York, and she died in 1871, in her seventy-seventh year, at the home in York. Mr. Fahs lived to an advanced age, passing away in 1880, in his eighty-ninth year. Mr. and Mrs. Fahs had a family of seven children, three of whom are deceased: William Henry, who died at the age of forty-seven; Dr. Charles F., of the United States Navy; and Mary M., who was the wife of Martin L. Weigel, of York. The survivors are: Sarah A., who is unmarried and lives with her brother John, at the old home in York previously mentioned; Susan E., widow of Gibson Smith, a coal and grain merchant of York; Emma R., widow of Rev. S. Morgan Smith, founder of the S. Morgan Smith Company; and John, whose name introduces this article. In his religion John Fahs, Sr., was an ardent believer in the Moravian faith. He was highly respected but always avoided conspicuous position, although he did serve as a director of the poor. He was also a director of the York County National Bank.

Capt. John Fahs was born Aug. 5, 1835, on the old homestead in West Manchester township, and was reared to farming pursuits, which he followed at home until his enlistment for service in the Union army. His education was procured in the district schools of the locality, known as Louck's schoolhouse, and at the York County Academy under Prof. G. W. Ruby, an instructor widely and favorably known, and at the time of his death a director of the bank of which Capt. Fahs is now president.
Prior to the declaration of war with the feeling of patriotism running high, a company was created known as "Ellsworth's Zouaves," (all York county volunteers), under the leadership of James A. Stable, who was made captain, and after enlistment for service in the war this company became Company A, of the 87th P. V. I. Capt. Fahs was one of the organizers and members of this company, and was second corporal of the organization, from which position his promotion was rapid. On Dec. 7, 1861, he was made first lieutenant of his company, and captain on Jan. 1, 1863, holding the latter rank to the close of his services. He was captured June 23, 1864, and kept a prisoner for eight months, with which exception he was in active participation in all the engagements of his command. The 87th bore the reputation of being one of the best drilled and most faithful in the service, and Capt. Fahs did his full share in winning praise and glory for the regiment. He deserves the highest praise for his military record, for he was one of those who did their duty unquestioningly, considering no sacrifice too great that would insure the stability of the Union. His experience as a prisoner included all the suffering and horror characteristic of Rebel prison life in those dark days, and their record would fill a volume. Capt. Fahs was honorably discharged March 12, 1865.

After the war Capt. Fahs entered into partnership with his brother-in-law, Gibson Smith, in the coal business, which was expanded in 1867, until they closed out in 1895, selling their property to the Western Maryland Railroad Company. Since then, Capt. Fahs, who is the owner of valuable real estate adjoining the city limits, has given much attention to real estate, in which he deals extensively. One of his properties, the Hill farm, located opposite the York County Fair Grounds, has been continued in that incumbency to the present time, by successive re-elections annually, at present serving his fourth term. He is also president of the Farmers' Market Company, was for many years a director of the York Street Railway Company, and is a director of the York Trust Company. His responsible connection with such organizations speaks more than words for his business ability and standing, and the confidence which his fellow citizens repose in his judgment and correct business methods.

Capt. Fahs is a Democrat in political faith, and has proved a popular candidate of that party. He served a number of terms as a member of the council from the Fifth ward, when York had but five wards, and then a borough, and as the ward was normally a Republican one, one of his contests was very close, his victory being won by a majority of but one or two votes. The Captain is no office seeker, but with the true instinct of the soldier he enjoys the contests and excitement of election as much as his ultimate success. For seven or eight years he was a member of the board of school control, his election to which, on the Democratic ticket, changed the majority in the board from Republican to Democratic. This same condition applies to the council. Capt. Fahs has always aimed, in every position in which he has been placed, to serve the best interests of his constituents and fellowmen generally, whether as a business man, as the defender of his country's flag, as a public official, or as a promoter of educational interests, and that he has succeeded to the satisfaction of all who know him is very evident by the high position he holds in the esteem of those who have been associated with him. His religious connection is with the Moravian Church. The Captain is unmarried, and, with his sister Sarah A. and niece Ella E. Fahs, resides in the old home on Market street to which his parents removed from the farm.

GEORGE SMALL SCHMIDT, one of the prominent citizens and well-known professional men of York, Pa., a leading member of the York County Bar, was born Feb. 5, 1861, son of Henry Dannerman and Mary Louise (Carson) Schmidt.

John Schmidt, the paternal grandfather, came from Hamburg, Germany, to York, in 1815. Later he became associated with the York Bank, which he served as cashier and later as president, a position he held at the time of his death in 1835. On the maternal side, the ancestors were of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and they came to America in the early part of the 18th century. They occupied positions of trust under the Government, fought in the Indian wars and took part in the American Revolution. The maternal grandfather of our subject, Charles Carson, of Harrisburg, Pa., was a veteran of the war of 1812.

George S. Schmidt attended the public schools at St. Paul, Minn., the York Collegiate Institute and the Institute Ranscher in Stuttgart, Germany, and at Princeton. He graduated at the York Collegiate Institute in the class of 1879 and was valedictorian of the class, after which he entered the junior class at Princeton, where he graduated with the degree of A. B., in 1881, and later received the degree of A. M. from the same institution. Mr. Schmidt prepared for the Bar in the office of United States Attorney Benjamin Harris Brewster, subsequently taking a course of two years at the University of Pennsylvania, and was graduated in 1884 with the degree of LL. B. He was admitted to practice in the Orphans' Court and the Court of Common Pleas, in Philadelphia, after which he returned to York, was admitted to the local Bar and soon thereafter to the Bar of the Supreme Court. His activity has been constant ever since in his profession. On Jan. 1, 1896, he was associated with the late Hon. James W. Latimer, formerly presiding judge of the courts of York County, the partnership being conducted under the firm name of Latimer & Schmidt. He has been connected with the greater part of the important litigation which has come before these courts in the past few years and his position is one of unusual prominence before the Bar.

Mr. Schmidt has been prominently identified also with many successful business enterprises and public-spirited interests. In 1887 he was one of the incorporators of the York City Street Railway Company, and has been an official of that corporation ever since. He is a member of the board of trustees of York Collegiate Institute and was for many years one of the directors of the York County Bank, and is counsel for the same. He has also been prominent in political life. From 1885 to 1890 he was chairman of the Republican county committee, and frequently has served as a delegate to important conventions. In 1888 he represented the 15th Congressional District in the National Republican convention, which nominated Benjamin Harrison. While at college he was a member of the American Whig society, a college organization. He is a member of the York and Lafayette clubs of this city.

On June 16, 1891, Mr. Schmidt was married to Mary Richardson Small, and they have three children, Mary Richardson, George Small and Samuel Small.

Israel Laucks. In the city of York are to be found a number of industrial enterprises of wide scope and importance, and among the most noteworthy of these is that represented by the York Safe & Lock Company, of which Israel Laucks is president. Mr. Laucks is one of the most prominent figures in the commercial circles of the city and county, and is a scion of one of the old and honored families of the county, where he is a representative of the fourth generation. Caspar Laucks, grandfather of Israel, was a native of York county, and passed a great portion of his life in West Manchester township, where he followed the vocation of farming.

George Laucks, son of Caspar, was a citizen of prominence and influence, and ever commanded unqualified esteem in the county which was his home during the entire course of his long and useful life. His occupation was that of a farmer. He died at the home of his son Israel, No. 413 West Market street, York, in 1878, at the venerable age of eighty years. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Smyser, was a daughter of Matthias Smyser, a prominent farmer of York county, and a member of another sterling pioneer family. Though Matthias Smyser died at an early age the family was on the whole notable for longevity, his son Joseph attaining the patriarchal age of ninety-two years. Mrs. Elizabeth (Smyser) Laucks died in 1839, at the age of twenty-four years. Of her three children, Sarah died at the age of twenty years; Samuel at the age of twenty-one; and Israel is the only survivor.

Israel Laucks was born on the old homestead farm, in West Manchester township, York county, Sept. 6, 1827, and in the common schools of the locality and period he laid the foundation for that extensive fund of information which he has since gained through years of active and intimate association with business and civic affairs. He then, in 1850, located in the city of York, where he attended for a time a private school conducted by Rev. William A. Good. After leaving school Mr. Laucks initiated his independent career by engaging in the general merchandise business, opening a store on Market street, east of the Square, and continued to be identified with the enterprise for a period of twelve years. Before the expiration of that time he became a stockholder in the York Safe & Lock Company, of which he was one of the organizers in 1882. The original capital stock represented was but twenty-five thousand dollars, but this was soon increased to fifty thousand, while later the capitalistic investment was placed at one hundred thousand dollars. The growth of the enterprise was phenomenally rapid and substantial, and the administrative control was from the start largely in the hands of Mr. Laucks, who was made president of the company, with his son, S. Forry Laucks, as general manager, and another son, George W., as sales agent. The executive corps of the company remains today as above noted, and the well-equipped plant represents an investment of about six hundred thousand dollars.

Aside from his association with the important industry mentioned, Mr. Laucks also has other interests of noteworthy order. He is a member of the board of directors of the Western National Bank of York, and the Farmers' Market Company, of the same city, while he is a member of the board of trustees of the famous old York County Academy, and of that of the Reformed Theological Seminary at Lancaster. He has long been a zealous and valued member of the First Reformed Church of York, in which he long served as deacon, and later as elder for many years, and at the time of this writing is the honored president of the board of trustees of the church, having previously been treasurer of the board. He has found a stanch supporter of Democratic principles, but he has never identified himself with political affairs in an active sense, though he is public-spirited and progressive in his attitude, and has ever held deeply at heart the interests of his home city and county, and to him has been accorded the confidence and esteem ever begotten of integrity, probity and honesty of purpose. Mr. Laucks is charitable and tolerant in judgment, genial and kindly in his intercourse with his fellow men, and he shows himself to be animated by a broad humanitarian principle and a high sense of his stewardship. No citizen of York is better known, nor more worthy of consideration as one of the representative men of the county.

On May 4, 1854, Mr. Laucks married Miss Imilda A. Wilt, who was born and reared in York, being a daughter of W. A. Wilt and a sister of Phileus F. Wilt, whose term as city treasurer of York expired in April, 1905—a term that won praise from men of both parties for its excellence. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Laucks are as follows: Irene E. is at home; Amanda L. is the wife of Rev. William H. Xanders, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and located at Brokenbow, Neb.; Grace Virginia is the wife of W. A. Buckingham, a wholesale tobacconist of Baltimore, Md.; Sadie N. is the wife of Robert L. Motter, a well-known manufacturer of York; and S. Forry and George W. are associated in the management of the York Safe & Lock Company, as has already been noted, both of them being recognized everywhere as able assistants to their father in conducting this successful and notable industry.

S. FORRY LAUCKS, son of Israel Laucks, president of the York Safe & Lock Company, is vice-president, treasurer and general manager of that organization. He was born in York, Aug. 12, 1870, and was educated in the private schools of that city and in the Collegiate Institute. His first connection with the York Safe & Lock Company was in 1887, when he became a clerk, and, so intelligent and faithful were his services, in 1891 he was made general manager of the concern, later being honored with the important offices of vice-president and treasurer, in addition to that of general manager.

Mr. Laucks spends much of his time in New York City and other large business centers, looking after the vast interests of the works, in the success of which he has been so important a factor. The plant now covers seven acres of ground, and the company employs four hundred skilled laborers—a remarkable increase since 1891, when Mr. Laucks became general manager, the works then covering only two acres and the company employing forty men. The products of the mills find a market not only in almost every section of the United States, but enjoy a large export trade, many of their safes being sent annually to various sections of Europe. The output of the York Safe & Lock Company for 1904 was largely in excess of any previous year, with prospects for 1905 still more flattering. Much of this success unquestionably has been due to the excellent management of S. Forry Laucks, who is justly regarded as one of the prominent figures in the manufacturing world of York.

On Oct. 20, 1896, Mr. Laucks was married to Miss Blanche S. Elliott, daughter of the late Isaac A. Elliott, who was cashier of the York County National Bank, and was very prominent in the financial circles of York. One son was born of this union, Elliott Forry.

Notwithstanding his active and responsible duties in connection with the York Safe & Lock Company Mr. Laucks finds time for other business associations, as well as for attention to the demands of the social side of life. He is president of the York Foundry & Machine Company, and a director in the York County National Bank. Socially he belongs to the Lafayette, Country and Out Door Clubs, while in religion he is a member of Trinity Reformed Church. He is also deeply interested in historical matters, being a member of the York County Historical Society, and chairman for York County of the Pennsylvania Society—an organization devoted to social intercourse and the collection of historical matter.

GEORGE W. LAUCKS, general sales agent of the York Safe and Lock Company, is a son of Israel Laucks, the president of that successful industrial concern.

George W. Laucks was born in York, June 25, 1856, and was graduated from school in 1877. From 1879 to 1889 Mr. Laucks was bookkeeper for his father, who was then engaged at store keeping, and two years later, in 1891, he became general sales agent for the York Safe and Lock Co., a position for which he has developed great proficiency.

Mr. Laucks was married May 2, 1900, to Emma Jane Strack, daughter of Charles A. Strack, one of the most prominent furniture dealers and undertakers of York, whose sketch will be found elsewhere. One child has blessed this union, Charles Israel. Mr. Laucks is a Mason, of the Knights Templar degree, and also belongs to the Odd Fellows, and the B. P. O. Elks. He is a consistent member of Trinity Reformed Church, of which he has been a member for a number of years. In politics Mr. Laucks is a Democrat, and was honored with an election to the office of city treasurer of York, which he held for three years, and to which he was chosen by an exceedingly complimentary vote, for he is popular alike with Republicans and Democrats.

JOSEPH ROSS STRAWBRIDGE. Among the men who have made a success at Bar or York county in the line of criminal and commercial law, and one who has earned an enviable record as district attorney of York county, is Joseph R. Strawbridge. Mr. Strawbridge is "in the house of his friends," so to speak, as he was reared in the county and comes of York county stock back to the third generation. His paternal ancestors came from Yorkshire, England, and it was perfectly natural that he should locate in the county of the same name in the new country. He commenced farming on his settlement here, as did also his descendants, among whom was John Strawbridge, father of Joseph R., both passing their lives as thrifty and industrious farmers in Fawn township, the father's death occurring in 1878, at the age of seventy-two years. He was an influential figure in his home community, and an uncompromising Jacksonian Democrat. During the administration of Martin Van Bu ren he was appointed postmaster, and in compliment to him the office was named Strawbridge. His incumbency covered a period of thirty-nine years to President Grant's administration. He married Grizella, daughter of Acquilla McDonald, a farmer of Hopewell township, York county, and of an old and honorable Virginia family. Her grandmother, Mary Ross, came to York county after the Revolutionary war, in the approved style of travel at that time, carrying Joseph R. Strawbridge's maternal grandfather, as a baby, before her on horseback. For four generations the land on which the Mc Donalds settled has been cultivated by members of the family, and it is still in their possession. Mr. Strawbridge's mother died in 1877, aged sixty-six years. She was the mother of nine children, five sons and four daughters. Of these the eldest is John C., a farmer in Hopewell township, owning a part of the old McDonald homestead; Acquilla M., living on the Strawbridge farm; Richard A., who went West, and is now a farmer in Nod-away county, Mo.; Mary E., of Baltimore; Rachel A., wife of Richard McDonald, of Harford county, Md.; Sallie J., who died June 6, 1905; Franklin P., living on the old homestead with Acquilla M.; Louisa M., wife of John C. Wiley, a farmer of Fawn township; and Joseph R., the lawyer.

Joseph Ross Strawbridge was born in Fawn township, July 25, 1858. He lived the life of a country schoolboy on the farm, laying the foundation of both mental and physical health, the one in the district school, the other in active work on the farm. As he passed into young manhood he attended Fawn Grove Academy, Stewartstown English and Classical Institute, and later the York Collegiate Institute. At the latter school he graduated in 1880, having been honored as valedictorian of his class. He then took a higher course at Lafayette College, Easton, Pa., finishing in 1882.

Mr. Strawbridge was then twenty-four years of age, and splendidly equipped for the battle of life. His first venture was as a school teacher, that stepping-stone used by so many of our best men as they started on their upward career. His first experience as a teacher was in the State of Illinois, and lasted one school year, 1877-78. Mr. Strawbridge then returned to York county and completed his studies at the York Collegiate Institute and at Lafayette College. He did not give up active work in the schoolroom, however, having been principal of Fawn Grove Academy during 1882-83. He studied law with the late Frank Geise, Esq., and was admitted to the Bar Sept. 1, 1884, and immediately located in York for the practice of his profession. During his practice he has twice served in public office, for five years as solicitor to the county commissioners, and as district attorney of York county, having been elected in 1895 for a term of three years. In later years he has made a specialty of commercial law, and is counsel for a large number of corporations. His services are also often sought in important criminal trials. A just estimate of the regard for and confidence in Mr. Strawbridge by the people of the community in which he lives is found in the fact that he has been prominently named for a seat on the bench of the York county courts.

Mr. Strawbridge began his domestic life Nov. 9, 1887, when he married Miss Lizzie Smyser, daughter of Lewis E. Smyser, a coal and lumber merchant, and great-great-granddaughter of Michael Smyser, the first State senator from York county, and a colonel in the Revolutionary war, for whose capture, dead or alive, tradition says, the British offered a reward. To this union have been born three children: Mary S., Elizabeth McDonald and Edwin S., all at school. Mary S. is in the class of 1907, in the York Collegiate Institute, and when graduated will have the distinction of being the first graduate whose parents were also graduates of this justly popular institution.

Mr. Strawbridge has entered actively into the social and civic life of York, and is a man of engaging personality. In politics he is a stanch Democrat, and in religious faith a Presbyterian. Both he and his family are socially prominent, and move in the best circles of the community where they have so long resided.

JOHN JACOB FRICK, cashier of the York National Bank, by virtue of that connection alone is widely known in commercial and financial circles in York, and, indeed, throughout that section of Pennsylvania. But the high personal regard in which he is held everywhere, the universal good-will which meets him on all sides, is an expression of feeling apart from the recognition of unusual business ability and unassailable integrity. It is because neither the exactions nor the exigencies of business have ever been able to affect his kindly disposition, which has remained congenial and sympathetic through many years of active participation in important affairs.

Mr. Frick was born Feb. 24, 1843, at Menges Mills, York Co., Pa., son of John P. and Hannah (Hershey) Frick, whose names indicate that he comes of good Pennsylvania stock. He received his education in the public schools and in York County Academy, York, the latter a well known institution. The particular line of business in which he has made noteworthy success he began in December, 1867, when he became a clerk in the First National Bank of York. He rose to various positions of responsibility in that institution and in 1889 was made cashier of same, continuing to fill that incumbency until December, 1896, when he resigned it to accept the cashiership of the York National Bank, also located in the city of York. To say that he has been the leading spirit in the prosperity of the latter concern throughout the period of his connection therewith is but justice to him and the efforts he has put forth in its interests. Mr. Frick's administration of the duties of cashier has been characterized by a policy at once progressive and conservative. He is enterprising and ever alive to the best interests of the establishment in which he holds so important a place, but he is honorable and honest to the last degree. Moreover, he believes in consideration and courtesy to all with whom he comes in contact, a fact which has won him a personal popularity which is an appreciable factor in many transactions. Mr. Frick is not only a thorough business man; he goes deeper into the causes and effects of the interests he has espoused than most men would deem necessary, and as a result he is an authority on all matters relating to banking, either theoretical or practical. He has never been active in public life and has never held public office, but he is interested in the general welfare and public utilities, and is serving as treasurer of both the York Gas Company and the York Water Company.

During the Civil war Mr. Frick gave two terms of service to the Union cause, first becoming a member of Company A, 16th regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, a three months' regiment. He entered the army the second time as lieutenant of Company K, 130th Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, with which he participated in the battles of Antietam, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville. He is an honored member of the Grand Army of the Republic and the Military Order of the Loyal Legion, and is connected with the Lafayette Club and the Country Club of York. Mr. Frick is fond of out-door sports, and is frequently seen at the golf links.

Mr. Frick was married Sept. 7, 1869, to Mary L. Myers, daughter of Rev. Thomas and Sarah Ann (Norris) Myers, and three children have been born to them, namely: Norris Hershey, Alice Myers and John Arthur.

REV. ELIAKIM TUPPER JEFFERS, D. D., LL. D., President of the Faculty of the York Collegiate Institute, is descended from Thomas Tupper, of Sandwich, England, who came to America in 1628 and settled in Sandwich, Mass. There on extensive allowances of land he engaged in agricultural pursuits, and was deputy from Sandwich to the Plymouth Council during most of his life.

The father of Dr. Jeffers, James Dickey Jeffers, was a farmer in Nova Scotia, but moved to Massachusetts in 1850, and in 1858 came to Pennsylvania. He died in San Jose, Cal., in 1892, aged eighty-two years. Dr. Jeffers' mother was Mary Tupper, daughter of Eliakim Tupper, a jeweler and farmer, and she died in 1856, aged fifty years. Seven sons and one daughter were born to the parents of our subject, of whom John was killed July 14, 1862, while serving in Company D, 10th Pennsylvania Reserves, in the Battle of the Wilderness; William A. lives in Leavenworth, Kansas, where he is engaged in the stove manufacturing business; and Charles A. is an expert accountant in Los Angeles, California.

Eliakim Tupper Jeffers was born in Nova Scotia April 6, 1841, and was educated in Jefferson College, Canonsburg, Pa., graduating in 1862. He was graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1865. Dr. Jeffers became pastor of the United Presbyterian Church of Oxford, Pa., July 1, 1865, and served there until 1872, when he became president of Westminster College, New Wilmington, Pa., remaining there until 1883. He was then made Professor of Theology at Lincoln University, and there remained until 1890. He next became pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Oil City, Pa., remaining until 1893, at which time he was called to the Presidency of the Faculty of York Collegiate Institute, a position he has since filled with marked efficiency.

On May 14, 1867, Dr. Jeffers married Esther Graham Hodgens, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Graham) Hodgens. Mr. Hodgens was a farmer and tanner of Canonsburg, building the first large tannery west of the mountains. He died in 1857, his wife surviving until 1902, when she passed away at the remarkable age of nearly one hundred years. To the union of Dr. Jeffers and Esther G. Hodgens came five children: Mary; Harriet, the wife of Rev. E. E. Curtis, of Chestnut Level, Lancaster county; George H., in the hardware business; Roland H., head chemist of the Worth Steel Plant, Coatesville; and Evetta Tupper, at home. Mary and Evetta are graduates of the college at Bryn Mawr, Miss Mary being engaged in teaching Latin and Greek in a preparatory school at the same place. Mrs. Jeffers died March 30, 1905.

Dr. Jeffers received the degree of A. B. at Jefferson College, in 1862, and those of D. D. (in 1872) and LL. D. (in 1902) from Washington and Jefferson College.

It is not flattery to say that no man has left his impress for good upon the minds of more young people of Pennsylvania than has Dr. Jeffers, for many people whose lives are portrayed in this volume have received not only their scholastic training, but also their moral and religious education, from him.

CHARLES A. HAWKINS, attorney-at-law and member of the York County Bar, was born at Fawn Grove, York county, Jan. 7, 1859. He obtained his preparatory education at the public schools of his native township, the York County Academy, and Bethel Academy, in Harford county, Md. He then entered Swarthmore College, near Philadelphia, and was graduated from that institution in 1878. During the succeeding five years Mr. Hawkins was connected with the National Publishing Company, Philadelphia, of which his uncle, Joshua R. Jones, a native of Fawn township, is the proprietor, and later with Jones Brothers & Company, publishers, of Cincinnati. While with the latter firm he established branch houses for them at Kansas City and St. Louis, being located personally at the two places about a year. He had previously started for them a general agency at Melbourne, Australia. In 1883-84 he was principal of the Fawn Grove Academy. While teaching he read Blackstone, and subsequently pursued the study of law successively in the offices of Judge Robert J. Fisher and Hon. Levi Maish, at York. He was admitted to the Bar in 1885. In 1887, when York was incorporated into a city, he was appointed the first city solicitor, and served in that office until 1892, a period of five years. In 1895 he was elected a member of the Lower House of the State Legislature, and while filling that position served on the Judiciary, Local and other committees.

Since his retirement from the Legislature he has devoted his entire attention to the practice of law. In 1902 he became associated in the practice of his profession with Jere S. Black, one of the leaders of the York County Bar, when the firm of Black & Hawkins was formed. This firm has been engaged as counsel in the trial of many of the most important causes before the courts of York county in recent years. Mr. Hawkins served as secretary of the Historical Society of York County, and was one of the foremost of its members to make that society an active and useful organization. It was largely through his personal efforts that the society started the plan to build up a museum and library, which is found in a large room on the third floor of the court house. His efforts in endeavoring to advance the interests of the institution have met the entire approbation of the board of trustees and members.

Mr. Hawkins was married Oct. 4, 1887, to Lizzie V. Birmingham, of California. They have one son, Eldred B., a graduate of the York Collegiate Institute, and now a student at Swarthmore College.

The ancestors of Mr. Hawkins on his father's side were English and included the Chalk and Thompson families of Maryland, the Chalk family locating in the early Colonial times on Winter's Run, about sixteen miles from the Pennsylvania line, and exercising considerable local influence in their day. Nicholas Hawkins, the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, settled at Elk Ridge Landing, Md., shortly before the Revolution. His son John became a prominent citizen of Harford county, which he represented in the Legislature of Maryland. Dr. John A. Hawkins, son of John and father of Charles A. Hawkins, was born in Harford county, June 30, 1831, and after graduating from the medical department of the University of Maryland, in 1852, spent one year as a physician in Baltimore county. In 1854 he moved to Fawn Grove, where he was successfully engaged in the practice of his profession until he retired, about twelve years ago. Dr. Hawkins is one of the representative men in the lower end of York county, and has been prominently identified with the material growth and development of Fawn township. He was married in 1855 to Hannah A. Jones, daughter of Asa Jones, of Fawn township, and granddaughter of Isaac Jones, one of the earliest settlers in the vicinity of Fawn Grove, and a member of the Society of Friends. Dr. Vallie Hawkins, of Fawn Grove, a graduate of Baltimore Medical College, is an only brother of Charles A., and enjoys an extended practice in his chosen profession, besides being much interested in farming according to the more modern methods.

HON. ROBERT J. LEWIS, ex-member of Congress and a leading attorney and business man of York, is maintaining the traditions of his family in a successful public and professional career. The Lewises have ranked among the old and influential residents of this section of the State for many years, and many of the family have become eminent as jurists, and made their mark in the business world.

Melchinger Robert Lewis, father of Robert J., was perhaps best known as a manufacturer of agricultural implements, although he was also interested in a shoe factory and had other business interests. He was born at Dover, York county, and lived there until 1871, in that year removing to York, where he died April 29, 1888, before he was fifty years old. He was active in the affairs of his day, and while York was still a borough he was nominated for the position of chief burgess. Being a strong Republican he was defeated, but only by a small vote, though the town was overwhelmingly Democratic. Mr. Lewis was the last sealer of weights and measures for York county under the old law.

Melchinger R. Lewis married Justina Maul, daughter of Jacob Maul, a farmer of Jackson township, York county, whose ancestors came from the Palatinate. Mrs. Lewis, who survives her husband, was born Jan. 19, 1842. Eight children were born to them, five of whom survive, the deceased being Elmer Clay and Rebecca Mary, who died in infancy, and Rush Webster, who died Dec. 24, 1893, in his seventeenth year. Of the living: Samuel S. is an attorney at law and postmaster of the city of York; Melchinger O., is assistant superintendent of the York Manufacturing Company; Laura J. is at home; Anna J. is a graduate of the York high school and of the State Normal School at Millersville, and is now engaged in teaching; and Robert J. is the subject of this sketch.

Robert J. Lewis was born Dec. 30, 1864, in Dover, and received his early education in the public schools there and in the York high school. His legal training was gained in the Yale Law School, from which he was graduated in 1891, being first admitted to practice in the courts of Connecticut. He was admitted to practice in the York county courts Aug. 3, 1891, and later to the Supreme court, and until December, 1900, he maintained an office with the late A. N. Green. He has always been interested in local affairs, as well as in the broader matters affecting the general welfare, and in 1893 was elected a member of the board of school control from the Ninth ward of York; he was re-elected in 1897 and again in 1903, and at present is serving as chairman of the teachers' committee. From 1895 to 1897 he served as city solicitor of York. In 1896 he was the Republican candidate for mayor of the City of York, and was finally declared defeated by a vote of 17, although unprejudiced people were free to assert that he had been elected. Two and a half years later, in the fall of 1898, he was partially vindicated, the city (although then Democratic) giving him a majority of 896 against Hon. E. D. Ziegler, by whom, however, he was defeated in the district, for Congress, Mr. Lewis having been put on the Republican ticket only six weeks before the election. In 1900, with H. N. Gitt as an opponent, Mr. Lewis was elected representative in Congress of what was then the Nineteenth Congressional District, composed of Adams, Cumberland and York counties, by a majority of 986, though President McKinley lost the district by 1,495 votes. In this campaign the city of York, which between 1898 and 1900 had added to it the Twelfth and Thirteenth wards having Democratic majorities aggregating about 250, gave Mr. Lewis a majority of 1,257, and a full vindication.

In addition to meeting the demands of a large legal practice, Mr. Lewis is interested in a number of business enterprises. He is prominent in the fraternal orders, belonging to York Lodge, No. 266, F. & A. M.; he also belongs to Codorus Council, Jr. O. U. A. M.; the B. P. O. E.; Knights of Malta; Knights of the Mystic Circle; Knights of Pythias; Heptasophs; M. W. A.; P. O. S. of A.; and other organizations.

Mr. Lewis was married May 17, 1893, to Miss Anna C. Beeler, daughter of George D. Beeler, a farmer of West Manchester township, who now lives retired in York. Mr. Beeler married Elizabeth Saltzbaeh, daughter of Frederick Saltzbaeh, an ex-member of the Legislature. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lewis: Elizabeth, Aug. 29, 1897; George Robert, Aug. 31, 1900; Marian Justina, March 5, 1902. Mrs. Lewis is an active member of St. Paul's Lutheran Church.

MELCHINGER O. LEWIS, consulting Sanitary Engineer, is also engaged in the plumbing, steam heating and tinning business at No. 255 West York street, York, Pa. He is a native of this county, born in Dover, July 14, 1868, son of Melchinger R. and Justina (Maul) Lewis.

Mr. Lewis received his education in the public schools of York city, and upon leaving school he apprenticed himself to Hantz & Jessop to learn the trade of plumbing, steam fitting etc. He completed his apprenticeship and remained with that firm until 1890, when he engaged in business in the same line for himself in partnership with H. H. Haker, the firm doing business under the name of Haker & Lewis. This partnership lasted for two years when Mr. Haker withdrew, and Mr. Lewis continued alone until 1898, when he closed out to accept a position as foreman of the sheet metal department of the York Manufacturing Company — a position he held but one year when he was promoted to the position of assistant superintendent, thus continuing until April 28, 1906, when he resigned. He had determined to engage once more in business for himself, and his many years of valuable experience have thoroughly equipped him for first class work in his chosen line. He employs seven experienced workmen, and his place of business is a model up-to-date plant, where all work entrusted to him receives careful attention. He is energetic and progressive, and a most successful future is a safe prediction for him.

On Jan. 1, 1891, Mr. Lewis was united in marriage with Sarah J. Ammon, daughter of William and Mary (Hawkins) Ammon. Two children have blessed this union: Melchinger J., born June 2, 1892, and Mary R., born Dec. 8, 1893. Mr. Lewis was made a Mason in 1891, and is past master of Zeredatha Lodge, No. 451, F. & A. M.; is a member of Howell Chapter, No. 199, R. A. M.; a charter member of Gethsemane Commandery, No. 75, K. T.; member of Harrisburg Consistory; and of Zembo Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. On Dec. 18, 1890, he was made a member of Humane Lodge, I. O. O. F.; and he is a charter member of Linden Camp No. 5375, M. W. A. He has been active as a member of Vigilant Fire Company No. 1, York, and is in every movement for the good and well-being of his city. Mrs. Lewis is an active worker in Union Lutheran Church, and is one of the popular teachers in the Sunday-school.

SAMUEL S. LEWIS, attorney at law and postmaster of the city of York, was born in York, Feb. 17, 1874, son of Melchinger R. and Justina (Maul) Lewis. He received his education in the public schools of his native city, graduating from the York high school in the class of 1893. Immediately upon his graduation he secured a civil service position in the York (Pa.) postoffice, which position he held until Oct. 1, 1898, serving under Hiram Young and D. A. Minnich. He was then transferred to the Money Order division of the Washington (D. C.) postoffice, and within a short time was promoted to one of the most responsible positions in the division. Meantime he entered the Law Department of the Columbian University, in 1898, and graduated from that school after a three years' course in June, 1901, on September 4th of the same year being admitted as a member of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia; in the following January (1902) he was admitted to practice before the several courts of York county.

Mr. Lewis acted in the capacity of private secretary to his brother, Hon. R. J. Lewis, when he represented the 19th Pennsylvania District in the LVIIth Congress and in a like capacity to Hon. D. F. Lafean, who represented the 20th Pennsylvania District in the LVIIIth and LXIXth Congresses.

If Mr. Lafean has a hobby it is the improvement of the postal service in his district, and as his secretary Mr. Lewis acquired such intimate knowledge of the conditions at the York postoffice, that his selection for the postmastership was almost inevitable when the time for a change came. He was not a candidate for the position, but his practical experience in the work, together with his thorough understanding of the needs of the office gained in his several years' association with Mr. Lafean in Washington, made his appointment, on Feb. 7, 1906, particularly appropriate. The York Dispatch of Feb. 7th had the following to say, regarding his appointment: "It was Mr. Lewis who aided Congressman Lafean in giving the people of York and Adams counties such excellent mail facilities in the rural districts as they enjoy to-day, and next to Congressman Lafean Mr. Lewis is regarded by the rural mail carriers and the patrons of each route as having done more for them than any other one man in the Twentieth Congressional District."

Mr. Lewis is the youngest postmaster York has ever had, he having been only thirty-one years old when he was appointed, and the young Republicans of the county and district were much gratified over the choice. Moreover his many friends among the old soldiers were also well pleased, for in his capacity of private secretary he met many of Mr. Lafean's constituents, whose universal good-will he obtained by his unfailling courtesy and sincere work in their behalf. He entered upon the duties of the office feeling that he had the respect and good wishes of a large following.

EDWARD W. SP AngLER, a leading lawyer and journalist of York, was born in Paradise (now Jackson) township, York county, Pa., Feb. 23, 1846. While a lad in the country he performed boy's work on his widowed mother's farm, and during four months in the winter attended the free school of the district. Never relishing agricultural labors, he abandoned them at the first opportunity, and at the age of thirteen became a student in the York County Academy, of which the Great Commoner, Thaddeus Stevens, was once the principal. After a year's study he entered as a clerk one of the leading dry-goods houses of York. In August, 1862, at the age of sixteen, he responded with others to the call of President Lincoln for nine months' volunteers, and enlisted, becominA private in Co. K, 130th P. V. I. After six weeks service in the Army of the Potomac, he received his first baptism of fire at the battle of Antietam, in which his company lost in killed and wounded one-third of the number engaged. Mr. Spangler fired the eighty rounds with which he was equipped, and finding use for more, took ten rounds from the cartridge box of a dead comrade, eight of which he discharged before his regiment was relieved. During the engagement the stock of his rifle was shattered by a Confederate bullet.

At the battle of Fredericksburg his division, the Third of the Second Corps, made the initial and sanguinary charge on Marye's Heights, where his colonel was killed at the first fire. At Chancellorsville his Division was thrown into the breach to arrest the victorious Confederates in their headlong pursuit of the routed Eleventh Corps. During that terrible Saturday night, May 2, 1863, his company was' fighting in the front line on the plank road on which Stonewall Jackson, the same night, was mortally wounded. The following morning General Berry, of Maine, who commanded a Division of the 3d Corps, was killed in his Company, and General Hays, the commander of Mr. Spangler's brigade, was taken prisoner. Although in the forefront of every battle, Mr. Spangler was unharmed in each. The term of enlistment having expired, the regiment returned home and was disbanded.

Upon his return to civil life he was appointed Deputy United States Marshal of York county. He held this office but a few weeks, when his leg was broken by the kick of an abandoned Confederate horse, and being incapacitated for active duty he resigned. Upon convalescence he resumed his studies at the York County Academy, and also registered as a student of law. After attending a course of lectures in the law department of the University of Pennsylvania at PhiladelphiA, he was admitted to the York Bar, March 4, 1867. He soon acquired a very lucrative practice, which he has since retained. He has practiced in the neighboring county courts, in the United States District Court, and in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, and is an active practitioner in the State Supreme Court during the week appointed for the argument of York County cases. He has studiously eschewed politics, save his filling the office of president of the York Republican Club in 1881, to which he was elected without his knowledge, and which position he subsequently resigned, having joined the independent wing of his party. In 1881 he was one of the principal promoters in the building of York's beautiful Opera House, and superintended its first year's management. He has been active in furthering local progress and developing home industries. He has also taken an active part in the suburban development of York, and laid out his real estate with streets extending from North George street to Cottage Hill, which section is known as Fairmount, and is now made accessible by two handsome iron bridges spanning Codorus Creek.

In January, 1882, Mr. Spangler purchased the York Daily and York Weekly and the extensive job-printing establishment connected therewith. With the assistance of his two able publishing partners, he at once introduced new features and methods into the conduct of the business and infused new life into the publications, resulting in a very large increase in their circulation, carrying them to the front of successful inland journals. He is president of the publishing company and owns a controlling interest.
In January, 1886, he organized the Spangler Manufacturing Company, of which he is president, a corporation organized under the laws of this State. The company manufactures a general line of agricultural implements, which on account of their superior excellence are sold generally throughout the United States.

In September, 1873, he married Mary Frances Miller, and the union has been blessed with two sons and two daughters. He possesses great energy and executive ability, is a sound and able counselor, and a witty, pungent and forcible writer. [The above from the Biographical Album of prominent Pennsylvanians, 1889.]

Mr. Spangler was principally instrumental in procuring, after a bitter contest with a trio of graft conspirators, the adoption of the beautiful and classic design of the stately shaft erected in Penn Park to the memory of the Soldiers and Sailors of York County engaged in the great Civil war. He is attorney for the First National Bank, York, ex-director of the Farmers’ National Bank, York, a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, of the York County Historical Society, of the York Society of the Alumni of the Pennsylvania University, of the Pennsylvania German Society, of the Pennsylvania Society of the Sons of the Revolution, vice-president of the York Athletic Association and president of the York Automobile Club. His children are: Louise M., wife of Charles C. Frick, vice-president of the Security Title & Trust Company, York; Juliet S. Spangler; Edward W. Spangler, Jr., dealer in builders’ supplies and materials; and Robert S. Spangler, attorney at law.

In addition to the above sketch, it is fitting to pay a deserved tribute to Edward W. Spangler as a lawyer, journalist, author, soldier and private citizen.

Besides the “Spangler Annals,” with local historical sketches (pp. 700), of which he is the author and publisher, and which is everywhere acknowledged to have been the most valuable local historical publication ever issued in York county, Mr. Spangler is the author of a well-printed, profusely illustrated and exceedingly interesting book entitled “My Little War Experience, with Historical Sketches and Memorabilia.” The book not only gives a modest recital of the experiences of Mr. Spangler, who enlisted when only sixteen years of age and weighing ninety-two pounds, as a private in Company K, 130th P. V. I., but gives glimpses of Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorville, and analyzes the causes of the Civil war, and gives the genesis of the war. All that appears in the 270 pages of this very interesting volume appeared in serial stories which were published in the York Daily, and so generous was the reception of these articles that Mr. Spangler felt impelled to publish them in book form. It is a book that ought to find a place in every home in York county.

After a journalistic career of twenty-two years, during all of which, however, he was primarily devoted to the practice of his honored legal profession—he is a hale, hardy man, endowed with a fine physique and strong mentality, devoting himself to his profession and to his business affairs, of which he has many. While he will be long remembered as lawyer and journalist, the tokens by which he will be known for the longest time will be his two books—“The Spangler Annals,” and “My Little War Experience,” both of which have elicited highly complimentary notices and reviews from the press of the Eastern States.

JOHN S. HIESTAND, a prominent farmer and fruit grower, and leading citizen of Springettsbury township, was born at the Hiestand homestead, three miles east of York, May 8, 1837. He obtained his education in the private schools near his home and at the York County Academy. He spent the early years of his life on his father’s farm and at the “Hiestand Hotel,” one of the most popular hostelries in southern Pennsylvania. In 1870 Mr. Hiestand moved to the large brick mansion built by his grandfather, Abraham Hiestand, in the year 1828. He has since devoted most of his time to the cultivation of his fertile and productive farm. This valuable land has been owned by himself and ancestors for nearly a century. It is situated in the heart of the great York valley, known far and wide for its rich alluvial soil and the growth of abundant crops. About twenty years ago Mr. Hiestand began to devote his attention to fruit culture. On his farm he has one of the finest and most productive orchards in the county of York. He owns a large apple orchard containing several hundred trees, which yearly bear abundant crops of the famous York Imperial and other varieties of apples. He has raised as many as 3,000 bushels of apples in one year, growing the largest crop—of 3,200 bushels—in the year 1899.

Soon after he attained his majority Mr. Hiestand became active in Democratic politics. From 1857 to 1900 he was a prominent figure in the county Democratic conventions, which on numerous occasions he served as the presiding officer. He has several times been a delegate for his party to the State conventions. In the fall of 1877 he was the nominee on the Democratic ticket for the office of register of wills, and owing to his personal popularity he received the highest vote on the ticket. He served in this office with ability and credit from January, 1878, to January, 1881. Mr. Hiestand held a position in the United States Revenue service at York for a period of five years. Since his retirement from this position he has devoted his entire attention to agricultural pursuits, enjoying the companionship of a large circle of friends in his delightful rural retreat. He has always been interested in public education and served for nineteen years as a school director in the township where he resides.

On Nov. 17, 1857, Mr. Hiestand was married to Annie M. Oldweiler, daughter of Philip and Mary (Gish) Oldweiler. They have two children: T. B. G. Hiestand, a prominent citizen of York, and Katie, married to Elmer E. Frey, coal merchant of York. T. B. G. Hiestand and his wife have two children, namely: John Fallon and Frances Mary. Elmer E. Frey and wife have also two children, namely: S. Hiestand Frey and Helen L.

Jacob Hiestand, the first American ancestor of John S. Hiestand, came to this country with his brother, Johannes Hiestand, in October, 1727. They originally lived in Switzerland, belonging to the Swiss Mennonites. William Penn had made a visit to this region and invited the Mennonites to settle in his province. This invitation brought to Pennsylvania Jacob and Johannes Hiestand, the ancestors of the Hiestand family in America. Jacob Hiestand took up a large tract of land near the present site of Salunga, between Lancaster and Mount Joy. One of his sons, Abraham, married Barbara Landing, April 10, 1764. Their children were: Johannes, born Nov. 27, 1766; Annie, Nov. 29, 1768, and Abraham, Nov. 16, 1771. Abraham Hiestand was a farmer by occupation and died at the age of thirty-three, one year after his son Abraham was born.

Abraham Hiestand, grandfather of John S. Hiestand, grew to manhood at the Hiestand homestead near Salunga, and in 1792, at the age of twenty-one, moved to York county, and settled in Heidelberg township, near Menges Mills. In 1793 he was married to Ann Fitz, of Hellam township, near the site of Wrightsville. He followed the occupation of distilling and farming from the time he was married until 1813, when he purchased the Beard property in Spring Garden township, along the Wrightsville turnpike, afterward known as the “Hiestand Hotel.” In 1816 he enlarged the building to its present dimensions, 50x80 feet, then the largest stone house in York county. He continued the business of farming and distilling and also owned and conducted the “Hiestand Hotel,” which was a prominent stopping place for wagoners before railroads were built. He owned teams and conveyed his whiskey to Baltimore, and returned with merchandise. Mr. Hiestand traveled extensively, and on one occasion went on horseback from his home to visit Niagara Falls. He was a man of spirit and enterprise, honest and industrious, a thrifty agriculturist, and by adding commercial enterprise and industry to the cultivation of his large farms he in a few years accumulated what at that day was considered a handsome fortune. By his first marriage with Ann Fitz, he had the following children: John, Abraham F., William F., Baltzer, Elizabeth, Nancy, Susan and Sarah. Abraham F. was a farmer in Springettsbury township and married Leah Longenecker; their children were: John, Catherine, Sarah, Christian, Susan, Amanda, Alice, Abraham, Jacob and William. William F. married Rebecca Doll, and had the following children: Herbert, Annie, Mary, Frank, Maggie and Burd. Baltzer died unmarried, at the age of twenty. Elizabeth married Dr. Francis Koch; she died young, leaving one child, who became the wife of Vincent K. Keesey. Nancy became the second wife of Dr. Francis Koch, and had the following children: Dr. Francis A. H., late of Hanover; William, jeweler; Edward, jeweler, and major of the 5th Maryland Regiment in the Civil war; Catherine, married to William Schley, of Baltimore; Mary, married to Thomas H. Belt, of York; and Henrietta, who died unmarried. Susan married Dr. Jacob Glatz, of Marietta, and had four children: Keesey, who died in California; Margaret, wife of D. Wagner Barnitz, and later wife of Colonel Matthews, of Baltimore; A. Hiestand, member of State Senate and adjutant-general of the Pennsylvania militia; and Thomas Burd, who died young. Sarah married John Wilson, of Hellam township.

Abraham Hiestand’s first wife died in the year 1824. In 1826 he married Mrs. Susan Myers, of Hanover, who after the death of her husband resided at the Hiestand home, in Springettsbury township, until her death, June 23, 1865, at the age of eighty-five years.

John Hiestand, the eldest son of Abraham Hiestand and his wife Ann Fitz, was born in April, 1797, in Heidelberg township, and grew to manhood on his father’s farm. In 1822 he married Elizabeth Sultzbach, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Bowers) Sultzbach, of Hellam township. After his father moved to Spring Garden township John Hiestand continued the business of farming and distilling at the home owned by his father in Heidelberg township, until the year 1830. He then moved to Spring Garden and took charge of the “Hiestand Hotel,” which he conducted for nearly forty years. Besides conducting the hotel business with success, John Hiestand was a prominent farmer and distiller at his home in Spring Garden township. He was active in Democratic politics and in 1836, when Van Buren was candidate for President of the United States, he purchased a large silk banner, which he carried at the head of the Spring Garden delegation in political parades in Lancaster and elsewhere, during the campaign. In 1906 this historic banner was presented by his son, John S. Hiestand, to the Historical Society of York County.

Mrs. Hiestand was born Aug. 2, 1805, and died Feb. 15, 1897, aged ninety-one years. For a period of seventy-five years she was a member of the Reformed Congregation at Kreutz Creek. The children of John and Elizabeth Hiestand were: Abraham S., Henry A., Annie and John S. Abraham S. was born Dec. 1, 1824, married Annie Detweiler, of Wrightsville, and died Oct. 10, 1882; they had four children: Sarah, Lillie, Mary and Joseph D. Henry A. was born May 29, 1826, married Susan Loucks, of Spring Garden, and had four children: Elizabeth, Harry B., Emma and Alfred. Annie was born Dec. 11, 1828, and died July 17, 1882; she was married to Alfred C. N. Matthews, of Baltimore, and they had nine children, six of whom are living: John W., Annie E., Francine, Tillie, Frank and Nowland.

GEORGE JACOB LAFEAN, member of the firm of Lafean Brothers, manufacturers of candy and confectionery, was born at York, Jan. 25, 1869, son of Charles F. and Charlotte (Kottcamp) Lafean. He obtained his education in the public schools and then entered the office of his father, a prominent coal dealer and active in the business affairs of York. After remaining in this position one year he was assigned to duty as a clerk in the wholesale confectionery store of Peter C. Wiest. Here Mr. Lafean at once made himself useful because he was attentive and alert, and after serving two years as an employee he purchased, in company with his brother, Charles F. Lafean, the entire wholesale interests of P. C. Wiest, then conducting business at No. 25 North George Street. John R. Lafean became a part of the firm of Lafean Brothers in 1889, when they enlarged their business and began the manufacture of candies on College avenue, along the Northern Central railroad. Later they moved their factory to a building in Clark alley, to the rear of their wholesale establishment. During the past sixteen years the Lafean Brothers have done an extensive manufacturing and wholesale business throughout Pennsylvania and adjoining States. The members of the firm being energetic and intelligent young men, the business has grown and developed until the Lafean Brothers are widely known to the trade throughout the country. Within recent years the candy business has been continually on the increase and the Lafean Brothers have taken advantage of every opportunity afforded to the trade in this country. They are enterprising and progressive in all their methods, and thus have become prominent and influential in the manufacturing interests of York.

In 1901 G. Jacob Lafean, with his brother, Charles F. Lafean, established the Lafean Paper Company. In 1903 this company was incorporated, with Charles F. Lafean, president, George Jacob Lafean, secretary and treasurer, and John R. Lafean, director. The capital stock was $50,000. They engaged in the manufacture of roofing and building paper, and the annual product has been increased to 2,500 tons, sold throughout the United States, Canada and South America. In 1906 G. Jacob Lafean disposed of his interests in the Lafean Paper Company for the purpose of devoting his entire time and attention to the wholesale department of the extensive business of Lafean Brothers, manufacturers and wholesale dealers in candies and confectionery.

Mr. Lafean is an ardent supporter of the policy and principles of the Republican party, has been active in politics, and has frequently represented the Fourth ward in city and county conventions. He is a member of Christ Lutheran Church, and of the beneficial organization of the Knights of Malta. He resides in the Fourth ward with his mother and sister, on South Beaver street.

M. D. MARTIN, president of the Martin Carriage Works, and also president of the Guardian Trust Company, of York, is a conspicuous figure in the manufacturing and financial life of the place, and his life is a happy illustration of what energy, industry, courage and honorable business methods may accomplish.

Mr. Martin's ancestors came from Germany in the latter part of the seventeenth century. His grandfather, Jacob Martin, lived in Lower Windsor township, York county, and his father, Hiram Martin, a retired farmer, is living in York township.

M. D. Martin was born in York county, Nov. 23, 1859, was educated in the public schools, and worked on his father's farm until he was twenty-one years old. Soon afterward, in 1882, he established himself in the carriage business, originally as a member of the firm of H. Martin & Son. In 1888 the Martin Carriage Works was established, and in 1896 was begun the erection of the present commodious works, which are among the finest in the United States. In 1900 a stock company was organized, capitalized at $300,000, and to-day this concern employs from 350 to 375 skilled workmen, and does a business of from $500,000 to $600,000 annually. Mr. Martin, the originator and promoter of the business, served as president of the company.

We have already traced the steps of Mr. Martin's progress from the time he began carriage building, in 1882, as a member of the firm of H. Martin & Son; through the organization of the Martin Carriage Works in 1888; and the organization of the present company June 1, 1900. The record of nearly unbroken success may be credited almost entirely to Mr. Martin's superior management and judgment, and he deserves the many tributes of confidence and complimentary evidences of respect which he receives from his business associates and fellow citizens generally. The present immense establishment, completed in 1897, was built by him single-handed and alone. The works cover six acres, and the output includes pleasure carriages, buggies, spring and delivery wagons, in fact all manner of vehicles known to modern carriage builders. Shipments are made not only to all parts of the United States, but to almost all civilized parts of the globe, the company having patrons in England, Germany, South Africa, Mexico, Australia and the South American States. The capacity of the works is 20,000 vehicles per annum. The History of York County would indeed be incomplete without due mention of this great enterprise and the view (See Volume I) of the works whose products have carried the name of York to so many distant climes, and which have been the means of distributing many thousands of dollars annually through the avenues of trade in the thriving city of York.

Mr. Martin was one of the promoters of the Guardian Trust Company, of York, which was organized June 1, 1903, with a capital of $250,000. M. D. Martin president. This company is recognized as one of the foremost financial institutions of York, and already has deposits amounting to almost $200,000.

Although the president of two such important corporations, Mr. Martin finds time for much quiet enjoyment in his elegant home on East Market street. He is a most affable and kindly gentleman, remembering his own early struggles in attaining the enviable position he now occupies, and is ever ready to lend a helping hand to others.

The factory of The Martin Carriage Works is the largest carriage factory in the East. It is four stories high and has a floor space of fully six acres. It is complete in every detail and equipped with the best and latest improved machinery. As to protection against fire the equipment is second to none. It is completely installed with automatic sprinklers and the buildings and lumber yards are encircled with water lines and hose houses. Two large steel tanks with a capacity of thirty thousand gallons of water connected with an Underwriter's pump with a capacity of seven hundred and fifty gallons of water a minute are installed on the premises with automatic adjustments for immediate service in case of fire. The factory is located on the W. M. R. R. and P. R. R. lines, has ample shipping facilities, and because of this advantageous location with a thirty-foot wide alley on the opposite side is afforded the very best possible light and ventilation. The absence of either one of these advantages would be detrimental to good workmanship and injurious to the health of the employees.

The capacity of this plant is twenty thousand vehicles annually, and its product is shipped to all parts of the world. The main part of this factory was erected in 1897. The total amount of the annual output is from five hundred to six hundred thousand dollars, and as an evidence of the popularity of the product of this factory at home the dealers and consumers in Pennsylvania alone buy annually one-fourth of the entire output.

In 1900 a stock company was organized, capitalized at three hundred thousand dollars. This concern now employs from three hundred and fifty to three hundred and seventy-five workmen. The location of this factory is a natural output to the centers of trade and commerce, and is very well located for shipments abroad.

N. SARGENT ROSS, senior member of the legal firm of Ross & Bremenman, and one of the most prominent members of the York county Bar, is a son of Rev. Joseph Alexander and Mary Jamison (Harvey) Ross, and was born in Northumberland, Northumberland county, May 3, 1858.

Mr. Ross's paternal ancestors came from Scotland to the United States, some time prior to the Revolution, one of them, James H. Ross, served as an officer in that war. After the close of the war for Independence, Mr. Ross, who had rendered that patriotic service, settled down as a civilian in Mifflin Co., Pa., where he became a man of influence and means. Lawyer Ross's progenitors on the maternal side were among the oldest and most notable settlers of Luzerne county, Pa. The Harveys are of English stock, Mr. Ross's grandfather, Benjamin Harvey, of Harveyville, Luzerne county, having founded the place which bears his name, and having been prominent as a prosperous farmer, mill owner and merchant. Descendants of this family have occupied conspicuous positions in the professional and business life of Luzerne county, and have been identified with many of its industrial enterprises and material improvements and developments. In religion the Rosses were Scotch Presbyterians, while the Harveys were affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

One of the descendants of James H. Ross was the Rev. Joseph Alexander Ross, father of N. Sargent Ross. The former was born in McVetown, Mifflin county, July 4, 1816, and spent his early years and received his elementary education at that place. He subsequently studied theology and entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he labored faithfully and with signal success for many years. Shortly after his installation he was assigned to several churches successively in Pennsylvania and Maryland, and in 1860 and 1861, was pastor of the Beaver Street Methodist Church of York. A short time afterward he removed to Carlisle, Cumberland county, and while pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church there he was appointed chaplain in the Regular Army of the United States and remained in the federal service during the Civil war. After his retirement from the army in 1866, he again entered the itinerancy, filling various appointments in the Central Pennsylvania Conference of the M. E. Church. He continued active in the labors of the ministry until about two years before his death, which occurred on his farm near East Waterford, Juniata county, Feb. 14, 1888, after fifty years of active, consecrated service in the cause of Christianity. He was followed to his grave by a large concourse of people.

N. Sargent Ross was born in Northumberland county, but removed from that place soon after, the father's place of residence changing from time to time, by the various assignments of the M. E. Church. He received an academic and collegiate education and subsequently read law in the office of Judge Jeremiah Lyons of Mifflintown, and was admitted to the Bar of Juniata county in 1882, and later, on October 4th, of the same year, was admitted to practice in the courts of York county. He moved from Millersville in March, 1883, to become a resident of York. Subsequent to his removal to York he went into the office of Edward W. Spangler, and has occupied offices with Mr. Spangler ever since. His present alliance with H. C. Brenneman was formed under the firm name of Ross & Brenneman in 1896.

On April 12, 1890, Mr. Ross was united in marriage with Miss Sue W. Sanks, daughter of Rev. James Sanks, of York. To this union was born one child: Ruth C., who died July 12, 1892.

In the political field, Mr. Ross has always been an active Republican. In 1885 he was elected a delegate to the Republican State convention, and in 1892 he was made the nominee of his party for its representative in Congress from the Nineteenth Congressional district. The traditional Democratic majority was large and immobile, and he was consequently defeated by the Hon. F. E. Beltzhoover, late Democratic representative from Carlisle, Cumberland county. While devoting his best time to his professional business, Mr. Ross has been interested in a number of business enterprises. He is a director of the City Bank of York; has various minor business interests, and has always manifested a commendable degree of activity in the public welfare, material progress and moral improvement of his adopted city. He is a member of Harmonia Lodge, I. O. O. F.; a charter member of Crystal Lodge, Knights of Pythias, and of York Lodge, B. P. O. Elks; and also belongs to Codorus Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., York Conclave, I. O. H., and the K. O. T. M. He is also a prominent Mason, being past master of York Lodge, No. 266, Free and Accepted Masons; past high priest of Howell Chapter, No. 190, Royal Arch Masons; past eminent commander of Gethsemane Commandery, No. 75, Knights Templar; and a member of Lulu Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, Philadelphia, of which he is at present one of the directors.

SMYSER WILLIAMS, a son of David F. Williams and Anna Margaret (Smyser) Williams, was born in the city of York, Pa. His father, a newspaper publisher and editor, was United States collector of internal revenue for the York district during several terms, and was president of York County National Bank of York for a number of years prior to his death in 1881. His mother was a daughter of Michael Smyser and a descendant of Michael Smyser, a colonel in the American army during the war of the Revolution.

Mr. Williams began his education at the York County Academy and graduated from the York high school in the class of 1873. He subsequently entered Amherst College, but did not remain until the end of the course. He studied law with Hon. Thomas E. Cochran and William Hay, Esq., and was admitted to the Bar of York county, Pa., on Sept. 15, 1879. In 1883 he formed a partnership with Richard E. Cochran, Esq., under the name of Cochran & Williams, in existence at the present time (1906). He was a referee in bankruptcy from 1898 to 1901.

Mr. Williams has been vice-president of the York Trust Company since its incorporation in 1890, and has been a director in the York National Bank of York and Secretary of the York Water Company for many years.

Mr. Williams married Henrietta C. Hersh, a daughter of the late G. Edward Hersh, who during a long and successful career was prominently identified with the business life of York. Their two children are Henry Guthbert Williams and Eleanor Hamilton Williams.

EDWARD SMALL RUPP (deceased), who for many years carried on a very profitable business in York, was born there Jan. 22, 1829, son of Daniel Rupp and grandson of Gottlieb Rupp, who died in York City.

Daniel Rupp, the father of our subject, was a native of York, and a well-known butcher, and died here at the age of eighty-six years. He was one of the first members of Trinity Reformed Church. He married Lydia Small, a cousin of Philip and Samuel Small (both of whom are deceased), and she died also at a ripe old age. They had the following named children: David; Catherine, Mrs. Cornelius Garrison; Daniel; Margaret, Mrs. Granville Hartman, who is the only surviving member of this family and now resides in York; Edward S.; Mary, who died young; and Rebecca, who married Dr. Roush and died in York.

Edward S. Rupp was educated in the public schools of York and learned the butcher business with his father, and when the latter died he took up the business and continued it. After marriage he lived in and bought the old homestead, and later the home in which Dr. Yeagley now lives. Here Mr. Rupp died, June 4, 1892. He was at one time very active in church work, having been one of the deacons in Trinity Reformed Church in years gone by. In politics he was a Republican.

Mr. Rupp was married in 1861 to Miss Elizabeth Spangler, who was born in York, daughter of Charles Spangler, who died in that city; he was a hatter by trade. Mrs. Rupp's mother, Sarah (Shultz), also died here. To Mr. and Mrs. Rupp children as follows were born: Mary and Margaret, at home; Sarah, Mrs. Franklin Myers, who resides near Pittsburg; Henrietta, a school teacher in the York high school; Frances, a clerk in P. Wiest's Sons' store in York; and Daniel, at home.

I. C. GABLE, M. D., one of the leading and successful medical practitioners of York, who stands deservedly high in citizenship as well as professional life, is the son of Valentine and Mary (Miller) Gable, and was born June 26, 1849, in Windsor township, York county. He comes of Colonial ancestry on both sides of his family, his great-grandfather, Valentine Gable, having been a commissioned officer in the Revolutionary war under Gen. Anthony Wayne. Dr. Gable's father was for many years a teacher in the schools of York county, and also engaged in agricultural pursuits.

Dr. Gable, after receiving his preliminary education in the public schools of his native township, took a literary course at the Pennsylvania State Normal School at Millersville. In 1867 he became a school teacher, devoting himself to this honorable vocation until 1874, during which time he taught school in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana. He began the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. James W. Kerr, and, after a preliminary course of reading, in 1875 entered the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, from which he was graduated with honors March 12, 1877. While attending the university he pursued a special course of reading under Dr. Charles T. Hunter, who held the chair of Clinical Surgery, and subsequent to graduation took a post-graduate course at his alma mater, devoting most of his time to the special study of general surgery in that institution and in the Pennsylvania Hospital.

In 1878 Dr. Gable opened an office in York, where he speedily advanced in his profession to a commanding position, being a thorough student of medical literature, thoroughly aggressive, progressive and up-to-date in his ideas, and with the harmonious development that results from practical skill united with high intellectual attainments. He is a member of the York County Medical Society; has been twice vice-president of the Pennsylvania Medical Society, and served for many years as a member of the State Medical Legislative Committee, and for seven years was its chairman. During the period of his service on the committee the present statutory enactment known as the State Medical Act of Pennsylvania was passed.

In 1894, at a meeting of the State Medical Society in Philadelphia, Dr. Gable was appointed to deliver the annual address on "Medicine," in Chambersburg, the following year. He has contributed other valuable articles to the Society, which have been widely circulated in the published proceedings of that body. For twelve years Dr. Gable was a member of the board of trustees and judicial council of the State Medical Society, during five years of that time being its president. He has been prominent in national as well as state medical councils. In 1880, in a meeting held at New York City, he became a member of the American Medical Association, and was made chairman of the Pennsylvania delegation at the meeting of that organization held in Milwaukee, Wis., in 1891. Dr. Gable is a member of the Pan-American Medical Congress, and was a member of the auxiliary committee appointed for the organization of that body. He is one of the censors of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia. He is County Medical Inspector to the State Department of Health, and is an active member of the American Public Health Association. Aside from these more strictly official relations, Dr. Gable is medical examiner for many leading life insurance companies represented in this city, and has a professional practice in the various departments of medicine and surgery enjoyed by but few in this district.

Dr. Gable was married Dec. 15, 1888, to Miss Eva A. Fon Dersmith, of Lancaster, Pa., who is descended from one of the oldest and most highly honored families of that county. One son has been born to this union, Raymond F.

HON. EDWIN K. McCONKEY, Republican State Senator from York county, is of Scotch-Irish lineage. His ancestors came from the northern part of Ireland, the original emigrant leaving there in 1756, and on arrival in America settled in Lancaster county. Early in the history of York county, members of the family purchased land in what is known as Peach Bottom, and here the name has been handed down from generation to generation. His great-grandfather, Hugh McConkey, served in the Revolution from York county, and grandfather James McConkey passed his life here, a merchant by occupation, he having been in the mercantile trade at Peach Bottom for a period of over fifty years. He was a veteran of the war of 1812, responding to the call of the Government for troops at the time Baltimore was threatened. He was a man of large influence and very active in the public life of the county, serving as a Whig in the State Senate from York county from 1836 to 1840.

William McConkey, son of James and father of Senator McConkey, broke the associations at Peach Bottom, removing to Wrightsville, where he became associated with David E. Small and Michael Schall, of York, in the ownership of the Aurora Furnace. He was also interested in other business enterprises, and was for many years prior to his death, which occurred in 1886, president of the First National Bank of Wrightsville. He took an active part in politics, and in 1855 was elected by the Whig party to represent York county in the Legislature. He married Susan Silver, of Silver Mount, Maryland.

Edwin K. McConkey was born at Wrightsville in 1864. Reared in a refined and cultivated home atmosphere, he passed his boyhood in the pursuit of an education in the public schools, graduating from the Wrightsville high school, and later finishing at the York Collegiate Institute. His first business venture was in the mercantile line, as a member of the firm of McConkey Brothers. A stronger attraction, however, was that of the service of the Pullman Car Company, and for a number of years he was one of their most faithful employees, receiving promotion until he had become assistant superintendent at Philadelphia.

Senator McConkey’s marriage in 1891 to Annie, daughter of David Strickler, of York, changed the course of his business life and made him a resident of York. Mr. Strickler was secretary and treasurer of the Farmers’ Fire Insurance Company of York, and Mr. McConkey, becoming interested in the company, succeeded to Mr. Strickler’s office at his death, in 1900. He is also interested in the York National Bank, being a director of that strong financial institution, and is also on the directorate of the York Water Company, the York Gas Company and the Guardian Trust Company.

The Senator’s grandfather was one of the leaders of the Whig party in York county. His father, originally a Whig, in 1856 became one of the founders of the Republican party in York county and was always actively interested in public affairs. From his honored father and grandfather Senator McConkey inherited strong intellectual endowments and learned by training and association to advocate and support the same political policy and principles as his ancestors. He always voted the Republican ticket, but not until 1902 did he take an active part in politics. It was during that year that the Republican party of York county invited him to accept the nomination for State Senator. Although the county had previously sent a Democratic representative to the State Senate since the organization of the Republican party, Mr. McConkey accepted the nomination. An active and vigorous campaign followed, in which he was one of the chief participants. It resulted in his election by a handsome majority. He served with credit in the State Senate, taking a prominent part in all the deliberations of that body. His active experience in the business and financial affairs of York had eminently fitted him for this position and he performed his duties with entire satisfaction to his constituents, serving on the committees on Banks and Building and Loan Associations, Judiciary, Education, Appropriations, etc. He was at the same time an active member of the Board of Education, by which he served as Treasurer for many years.
tions, Street Railway, and others equally prominent. He also performed important duties at the extra sessions of the Legislature held in 1906, and at the close of the session received a personal letter of congratulations for his intelligent efforts from Gov. Pennypacker.

Mr. and Mrs. McConkey, together with their two daughters, Mary Elizabeth and Hannah H., reside in a delightful home on East Market street, York. They are prominent in the social life of York, and he is a member of Riverside Lodge of Masons, the Country Club, the Order of Elks, and the Bachelors Club. He is also a mumber and has served as president of the Lafayette Club, one of the leading social organizations of York.

During the Revolution William McConkey, a brother of Senator McConkey's great-grandfather, resided in Pennsylvania above Trenton, near the Delaware river. On the night of Dec. 25, 1776, before he crossed the Delaware and won the decisive battle of Trenton, Gen. Washington stopped at the McConkey mansion with his intimate friend, William McConkey. According to the newspapers, last winter the Washington Society of Trenton, N. J., crossed the Delaware river at the same spot as Washington.

JOHN H. YEAGLEY, M. D. This is a familiar and honored name, dating far back in the history of Pennsylvania. The bearer of the name, John H. Yeagley, has for many years gone in and out before the people of York in the busy life of a practicing physician, and has ever evidenced a disposition to sacrifice his own comfort in order to ameliorate the sufferings of others. He comes of a family of practitioners and is well and favorably known as a physician. He was born in Johnstown, Pa., in 1852. His grandfather, Henry Yeagley, was a well known farmer of Fayette county, this state, and his father was Dr. Henry Yeagley, for many years a prominent practitioner of Lancaster, Pa. He formerly practiced medicine in Johnstown, Pa., and in Berlin and Waterloo, Canada. Referring to Dr. Henry Yeagley, who was a very eminent practitioner, a well known medical journal says:

"Among the honored names of early and successful eclectic medical men of recent times, that of Dr. Henry Yeagley is worthy of a conspicuous place. The popularity of eclecticism now, in the section of country where he labored in its interests, is an evidence of the successful manner in which he discharged the duties of a reformer. Thus, it will be seen, he was one of the pioneers in disseminating the principles of liberal ideas in the medical world. It must be remembered that when he began to practice, in 1848, the dominant school was using calomel, and blood letting ad libitum — until recently familiar to all — with memories dating back that far. This irrational treatment has long since been abolished and the credit of this and many other reforms is largely due to the commanding influence of the homeopathic and eclectic schools of medicine." Dr. Henry Yeagley died in Lancaster, May 2, 1902. He married Miss Sarah Dibert, a daughter of John Dibert, a merchant and tanner of Johnstown, Pa. Their family numbered five children, as follows: John H., now of York; Lizzie, wife of John Shaub, a shoe merchant of Lancaster; Dibert Lincoln, a farmer and stock-raiser of Kansas; Rella, wife of Finley H. Torrence, city clerk of the department of public works in Pittsburg; and Dr. James M., of Lancaster.

Dr. John H. Yeagley, of York, was educated at University College, in Cobourg, Canada, and at Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia. He graduated at the latter institution in 1878 and at once took up the practice of medicine in York, where he has since conducted a large practice. On April 20, 1892, the Doctor was united in marriage to Rebecca Elizabeth Buckingham, a daughter of John W. Buckingham, a retired merchant of York. Three children were born of this union: Rebecca Buckingham, Henry and John Dibert Yeagley.

Dr. Yeagley is ex-president of the Goodno Homeopathic Society and holds high rank among the members of his profession. He has been the pioneer in York in the use of the X-Rays and electricity, being equipped with the latest and best in the scientific world, and it is not strange, therefore, that his practice is a very large one, for, like his lamented father, he has always occupied advanced ground in the pursuit of his learned and honored profession.

As a member of the First M. E. Church he is a well known worker, and brings into his every-day life the precepts set forth by his church. For many years as a member of the board of trustees he has worked for its best welfare and upbuilding. He has given to this cause not only of his time and labors, but most liberally of his means.

HENRY A. EBERT belongs on both sides of the family to stock that dates farther back than the Revolution, and is identified with Pennsylvania’s early history, while his wife’s lineage is equally ancient.

The Ebert family was originally German, and the first American ancestor, Michael, came from Wurttemberg about 1742, and settled in York county, where he took up 600 or 700 acres of land along the Codorus. The popular Highland Park was a part of this tract. Martin Ebert, son of Michael, secured the best portion of his father’s possessions, by purchase, and in the next generation the old homestead descended to Adam, who spent most of his life there, but finally retired to York and there died.

Henry Ebert, son of Adam and father of Henry A., was the next in line. He lived in the old home in Manchester township where he was born, for the greater part of his life, but after giving active participation in agricultural pursuits, he lived in York for a time. He soon tired, however, of the new surroundings and went back to his old home for the remaining seventeen or eighteen years of his life, and there passed away in 1884, aged seventy-five years. Henry Ebert married Sarah Smyser, daughter of Jacob Smyser, of West Manchester. She traced her descent from the original Smyser, who settled in York county, in 1735. Henry and Sarah Ebert had five children: (1) The eldest, Charles A., died Jan. 16, 1904, in Kansas City, Kansas, where he had moved thirty years before, and become a successful real estate dealer. (2) Anna Maria and (3) Martin Luther made their home together on West Market street. (4) Sarah Jane married the late Rev. Charles C. Lanius, of the Moravian Church. (5) Henry A.

Henry A. Ebert was born on the family homestead, Dec. 10, 1841. He received his education in the public schools of York, in the York City Academy and in Peiffer’s College, Oxford, Adams county. On entering business life he chose a mercantile career, and for fifteen years followed that line, but at the end of that time retired from it to undertake the management of his own property and that left by his father, of which latter he and his brother, Martin Luther, were trustees. On looking into affairs, the brothers conceived the idea of developing a portion of the tract into a suburb of York, and at once proceeded to carry it into execution. Beginning with but two houses, the old Ebert mansion and a tenant’s house, the settlement grew rapidly until it numbered fully 200 dwellings and included a prominent manufacturing plant. It was known as Eberton, and became so important that a trolley line was built to the suburb, which in turn increased its growth until the region was formed into “West York Boro.” By the residents, however, and in fact by people generally, it continues to be called Eberton.

Mr. Ebert is very unostentatious and avoids publicity as much as possible, but he, nevertheless, is known better to the York public as a whole than most of the citizens. He is a Republican in his political belief. Although he has never been induced to seek or accept office, he is a loyal supporter of his party and always ready to promote the real welfare of the community. He has belonged for many years to the Union Lutheran Church, of York, and does his utmost to further its efforts for the moral uplifting of the city. He has been a faithful worker in it, in various departments, serving as elder for twenty-two years, treasurer of the Sunday-school for thirty-five, and as a teacher in the latter for forty years. He was also one of the organizers of the Y. M. C. A. and was for years on its board of managers.

On June 7, 1870, Mr. Ebert was united in marriage to Miss Mary Sheller, daughter of the late Dr. Adam Sheller, a prominent physician of Mt. Joy, Lancaster county. Three children have been born to this union: Anna Laura, at home, having completed her studies in the Young Ladies’ Seminary, of York, and the Lutherville Seminary; Ella V., wife of J. Wilbur Yeats, in Philadelphia; and Harry S. The son is a prominent real estate agent, with his office on Market street, is a member of the board of managers of the Y. M. C. A., a trustee of the First Presbyterian Church and very active in whatever field he is interested.
Mrs. Mary (Sheller) Ebert traces her ancestry to Major Abraham Scott, through his grandson, Hugh Peden. Capt. (afterward Lieut. Col.) Hugh Peden fought at Brandywine and Germantown, serving first as captain of a company under Col. Lowrey, and later as major in Col. Jacob Cook's battalion. He was one of the "flying corps" of both Col. Galbraith's and Col. Lowrey's battalions. He formed in 1775 the first company in Raphe township, Lancaster county. Mrs. Ebert possesses quite a wealth of historical matter of Revolutionary date, and among her interesting relics is a bill rendered by Dr. Hand for professional services. Dr. Hand afterward became General Hand, and his old home in the suburbs of Lancaster is a historical spot of much interest. Mrs. Ebert is a member of the D. A. R., and might justly claim admission to the Colonial Dames, as her ancestors, the Scotts, came to America in 1730, and held various offices under the Colonial government.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Ebert are zealous church workers, though the latter is a member of the First Presbyterian Church, instead of the Lutheran, and does her share through its agencies. She is a woman of beautiful Christian character, and is thoroughly in accord with her husband's charitable and philanthropic enterprises.

WILLIAM S. BOND, treasurer of the Weaver Organ & Piano Co., which conducts one of the extensive and important industrial enterprises of the county, is a native of York, born in that city May 9, 1863, son of William H. and Elizabeth (Slegel) Bond.

William H. Bond was born in Maryland, of Scotch-Irish lineage, and came to York in 1861. Here he engaged in the grocery business, with which he continued to be successfully identified for many years, being one of the county's honored citizens. He was summoned to his reward in 1893, at the age of sixty-five years. His wife, whose father was a prominent farmer of North Codorus township, still resides in York. Their seven children were: The first-born died in infancy; Allen died in 1890, at the age of thirty years; William S. was the third; Emma J. is the wife of Dr. Charles Lenhart, a successful veterinary surgeon of Dover, this county; Frank is engaged in the general merchandise business in the west end division of the city of York; Luther is constructing engineer for the York Manufacturing Co.; and Bertha E. is the wife of John Rosenfield, a traveling salesman of York.

In the public schools of his native city William S. Bond secured his early education, and he later took a course of study in the National Normal University, at Lebanon, Ohio, after which he was for three terms a successful teacher in the public schools of his native county. Not desiring to follow pedagogy as a vocation, he became bookkeeper in the office of the York Daily, retaining this position three years, at the expiration of which he opened a retail music store in York and built up a most satisfactory business, in which he continued for six years. He then sold out and in 1891 accepted the position of treasurer of the Weaver Organ & Piano Co. Three years later he was also made secretary of the company, and he has since given his entire time and attention to the exacting duties of his dual office. The industry is one of the most important in the city, the output of the works being four hundred organs and fifty pianos per month, which represents a large increase in capacity, while the capital stock has been increased from the original thirty thousand dollars to the notable amount of four hundred thousand. Of the immense output of the Weaver establishment it is pleasing to note that fully one thousand organs are annually exported to Europe, South Africa, New Zealand, and other foreign countries. Mr. Bond has been an important factor in the building up of the great enterprise, which has marked bearing on the general prestige and material welfare of the city and county. In addition to his association with this concern Mr. Bond is also a member of the directorate of the York Silk Manufacturing Co., and is known as a progressive and public-spirited business man and loyal citizen. In politics he gives his support to the Republican party, and in 1901, for a term of four years, was elected a member of the board of school control of York, as representative of the Ninth ward. He was elected for a second term of four years by an increased majority in 1905. In this office he has brought to bear the same discrimination and executive power which have conserved the success of the business enterprises with which he is or has been identified. After serving on other committees for two years he was appointed chairman of the Finance committee, which position he now holds. Both he and his wife are zealous and prominent members of the Union Lutheran Church, and since 1900 he has served most acceptably as superintendent of its Sunday-school. Mr. Bond was one of the principal supporters of the pastor, Rev. A. G. Fastnacht, D. D., in the raising of $23,000 for the new Sunday-school building which was dedicated in June, 1900, and under his superintendency the Union Lutheran has become one of the largest and most successful Sunday-schools in the city of York, as well as in the General Synod of the Lutheran Church of the United States. The membership has already almost doubled since the beginning of his superintendency, now numbering over 1,000.

Mr. Bond served six years, from 1886 to 1892, as director of the Y. M. C. A., being treasurer the last three years mentioned. He is now a member of the board of trustees of the same institution, having served in that capacity since 1890.

On May 16, 1888, Mr. Bond was united in marriage to Miss Sallie S. Loucks, who was born and reared in this county, daughter of the late Franklin Loucks, an honored and influential citizen of York, where he was long engaged in the grain, flour and feed business, while he was also a member of one of the county's old and influential families. Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Bond, Walter was a member of the class of 1905 in the York high school, and is now taking a four years' course in the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce, of the University of Pennsylvania; Urban is a member of the class of 1907; and Mary and Anna are likewise attending the public schools. The family home is a center of gracious hospitality, and Mr. and Mrs. Bond are prominent in the social life of the community.

DANIEL K. TRIMMER, attorney-at-law, and prominently engaged in the real estate business at York and elsewhere, was born in Dover township, York county, Sept. 10, 1846. His parents were Daniel B. and Elizabeth (Kauff- man) Trimmer, and his ancestors on the paternal side were formerly residents of New Jersey, but for the past five generations have been identified with the life and interests of York county, Pennsylvania.

The first of the family to settle in York county was George Trimmer, who purchased a large tract of land in Dover township. William Trimmer, great-grandson of the settler, was an influential citizen in his day, and a leading Bishop of the German Baptist Church in York county. His son, Daniel B. Trimmer, the father of Daniel K. Trimmer, was born on the homestead farm in Dover township, in 1809, and died in 1873. Early in life he married Elizabeth Kauffman, a representative of an early Pennsylvania family, prominent in York and Lancaster counties, who died in 1900. They had eleven children, of whom are surviving: William, of York; Reuben, of Goshen, Ind.; Nancy, wife of George B. Stauffer, of Dillsburg, York county; Elizabeth, wife of John R. Altland, residing on the Trimmer homestead in Dover township, which has been in the Trimmer name for five generations; Alice, of York; and Daniel K. Both the parents were earnest and devout members of the German Baptist Church, to which their ancestors had belonged for several generations. In politics the father was a Whig and later a Republican.

At the age of ten years Daniel K. Trimmer left the paternal home, growing to manhood in the family of an aunt, who resided in West Manchester township, near the city of York. He obtained his preliminary education in the country schools, and at York County Academy (of which he is now a trustee), in each of which he excelled as a student. At the age of eighteen years he began the profession of teaching in the township schools, and later taught a grammar school at Middletown, Pa., and in the city of York. During the last years of his teaching he registered as a law student with Hon. George W. Heiges, and was admitted to the Bar of York county Oct. 23, 1874, and later to the Superior and Supreme courts of Pennsylvania and the United States District courts. For two years he practiced his chosen profession at Hanover, and then removed to York, where he has since resided, and where he has been actively engaged as a lawyer and a dealer in real estate, prospering in both lines. His professional labors have been almost exclusively devoted to the settlement of land titles and trust estates, and to corporation work. He has served as vice-president and solicitor for the York Street Railway Company; was counsel for the eastern extension of the Baltimore & Harrisburg Railroad Company from the time of its organization until 1900, when this road became a part of the Wabash system; has been secretary and counsel for the York Hotel Company, and has been identified with various other corporations. He was the pioneer real estate dealer of York, but his efforts in that line are now confined to the management of his own estate and looking after extensive land deals in association with others. Besides his real estate interests in York he has interests in the city of Washington and at Fort Meyer Heights, Va., on the west bank of the Potomac, opposite the city of Washington. Within recent years a large portion of his time has been devoted to Orphans’ court practice. During the summer and fall of 1905 he joined with a number of capitalists of Philadelphia in the organization and incorporation of the Philadelphia Life Insurance Company, of which he is the vice-president.

Being interested in the material progress of the city of York, Mr. Trimmer became associated with Capt. William H. Laniu in organizing and advancing the interests of the West End Improvement Company, which has developed in a remarkable degree the northwestern section of the city. He has been a conspicuous figure in the material upbuilding of the city of York, and is justly esteemed as such in his community.

In politics Mr. Trimmer has advocated the policy and supported the principles of the Republican party. In 1878, owing to his activity in electing the first Republican burgess of York, he was chosen solicitor for the borough. He served as chairman of the Republican County Committee during the years 1879 and 1884. Throughout his life he has been an active member of various social, benevolent and fraternal orders. For many years he was devoted to the interests of the Knights of Pythias; he is a past grand of the I. O. O. F., and a past Chief Patriarch of the Encampment; is a past officer in the Order of Elks; and has taken a high rank in the Masonic fraternity, being a past master, past high priest and past commander. In the city of York he is a member of the Lafayette Club and the Outdoor Club, and has been active in promoting the interests of the Historical Society of York County, of which he is a charter member. He has also served as vestryman in St. John’s Protestant Episcopal Church, of which he is a member.

Mr. Trimmer was married in July, 1900, to Miss Louise F. Dezendorf, daughter of Hon. John F. Dezendorf, ex-member of Congress from the State of Virginia. They have three children, Daniel, Mary and Louise.

JACOB L. KUEHN is not only one of the more prominent plumbers and house furnishers of York, but is widely known in other connections. His ancestors on one side, the Launmasters, settled in America before the Revolutionary War, some of them being soldiers in that historic conflict. On the other side Mr. Kuehn’s forefathers, the Beckes, had a similar Revolutionary record.

Jacob Launmaster was a wagonmaker, and later became well known as a bridge-builder, the latter business being continued by his sons. John Kuehn, the paternal grandfather of Jacob L. Kuehn, came from Leipsic in 1816, and settled in York county. John Lewis Kuehn, the father of Jacob L., was born in Cassel, Germany, and accompanied his father to York. He learned the trade of millwright with a noted millwright, Peter Zorger, following that occupation for several years, became a contractor and carpenter and later engaged in mercantile pursuits. He died in 1886, aged seventy-two years. He married Catherine Launmaster, daughter of Jacob Launmaster, and she became the mother of four children: John H., a carriage-builder, who died in 1890, aged forty-eight years; Maria L.; Catherine Agnes, wife of Luke R. Rouse, retired; and Jacob L.

Jacob L. Kuehn was born March 28, 1836, in the city of York, and was educated in its public schools. His first occupation was with his father, as a carpenter. He then worked as a machinist, and became superintendent of the York Gas Works, which position he filled for forty-two years, for twenty-five years of that time acting as superintendent of the York Water Company. Retiring from these offices, Mr. Kuehn established the plumbing, gas-fitting and house-furnishing business which has since become so prosperous. He is located on George street, and one of his specialties is the erection of all varieties of heating apparatus and systems.
Mr. Kuehn was married Nov. 1, 1857, to Anna Catherine Vogel, daughter of Sebastian Vogel, a well known gardener and florist of Lancaster, and of the four children born to them, we have record of two, Anna Elizabeth and Harriet Augusta. The former married Dr. Gyula Ullmann, who has been awarded a medal by the Paris University for his small-pox remedies, and who lives and has practiced his profession for several years in Chester, Pa. Mr. Kuehn's first wife died in 1890, and in June, 1891, he was married (second) to Susan Hyde, daughter of Adam Ruhl, a carpenter of York; one daughter was born to this union, Louise Margaret, who is attending the York high school, being a member of the class of 1907. Mr. Kuehn's second wife died in 1893, and in March, 1899, he married Caroline Keiser, daughter of Francis Keiser (deceased), who was born in Hanover, Germany, but died in York.

Mr. Kuehn belongs to the Artisans. In politics he is a Republican. He is a man who possesses fine conversational powers and a wonderful fund of reminiscences of the early and later days of York.

LOGANS OF DILLSBURG. The Logan family is one of the oldest families of York county, having settled along the Yellow Breeches Creek prior to the time the county was organized. The original settlers were cousins of James Logan, the secretary of William Penn, and who is said to have been second only to Penn in the founding and developing of Pennsylvania. The family settled among the mountains surrounding Dillsburg and gave the name Monaghan township to that section of the country, taking the name from their original home in Ireland. At this time the Blair, Campbell, O'Hail and McCurdy families—families also of Irish origin—settled in that neighborhood. The township of Monaghan was afterwards divided, and Carroll township formed from part of Monaghan township.

The Logan family is of Scotch origin. Its history can be found among the records of the early history of Scotland under the title "Logan of Restalrig." From the time of William the Lion (12th century) and through subsequent ages the family was connected with most of the important events in Scotch history. [See Tyler's History of Scotland—Buchan- non's History of Scotland].

One of the family married a daughter of Robert II of Scotland, and inherited a tract of land known as "Lands of Grugar." Two members of the family—Sir Robert and Sir Walter Logan—were associates of Robert the Bruce, and together with Sir James Douglass, were charged with the crusade to convey the heart of Bruce to the Holy Sepulchre. While en route to Palestine the Crusaders stopped in Spain and engaged in battle with the Moors near Granada (1313). The heart of Bruce, enclosed in a casket of gold, was flung by the Scots in advance of their line into the heart of the enemy. In the desperate rush to recover the heart, the Logans, together with Lord Douglass and the greater part of the Crusaders, fell. [Gross' Antiquities of Scotland—Buchan- non's History of Scotland].

Later the Laird of Logan became possessed of a large estate near Edinburgh. Within the domains of this estate was located Restalrig Church, where Mary, Queen of Scots, was married. During the time of James VI of Scotland and I of England [Robertson's History of Scotland and Bucker's History of Scotland] the Crown of Scotland coveted the estate of the Logan clan, and falsely caused charges of treason to be brought against a dead Baron of the house, who had died unsuspected of treason some years previous thereto. The bones of this Baron were dis-interred, brought into court and by false testimony condemned, the descendants attainted and corruption of blood decreed. The lands of the Logan family were forfeited to the great profit and lasting disgrace of the Scottish Crown, and the family driven in exile to Ire- land.

The Logan coat of arms will be found among the books of heraldry, and, referring to the heart of Bruce, has this motto— "Hoc Majorum Virtus." The Logan clan Tartan is also of record as is the Logan plaid.

The first settlement of the family in Ire- land was at Luigam. John Logan, the immediate progenitor of the Logan family of Dills- burg, was born at Cout Hill (Koot Hill), County Monaghan, Ireland, in 1712. He was married in Ireland to Ann, otherwise Agnes, who was born 1700 and died 1799. About the year 1746 John Logan, with Ann, his wife, and five others—making seven in all—sailed for America. After a voyage of fourteen weeks, during which time one of the number died and was buried at sea, the survivors landed in this country. They came at once to the Cumberland Valley, and prior to 1750 settled in Carroll township, York Co., Pa. Here they secured lands which, with others afterward secured, were patented under the name of Logania, and which have continued in the possession of the Logan family to the present date.

At the time the Logans settled near Dillsburg, the country was practically a wilderness. A few of the well-to-do families kept negro slaves. Indians roamed at will, and deer were in abundance. The nearest market was Baltimore. Practically the only thing that the settlers were able to take to market was corn whiskey. This made necessary the erection of a “still” house by nearly every farmer. The settlers were nearly all Irish and mostly Presbyterians. Monaghan Presbyterian Church was built at Dillsburg, and was said to have been the centre of forty “still” houses within a radius of three miles.

While the settlers considered themselves well-to-do, they lived very simply. For example, the house built by John Logan was a small log affair with a dirt floor. The first floor was divided into two rooms. A ladder led to the second floor. A partition of logs about four feet high divided the second floor into two rooms. No door was ever sawed between these two rooms. Entrance was had into the back room by climbing over the partition. In this house two generations of the Logan family lived.

Two of the women belonging to the family were carried into captivity by the Tuscarora Indians during the French and Indian War. Both the women returned, one after a captivity of eighteen months. Another member of the family was lost with Braddock's Expedition. The members of the family lie buried in the old Dillsburg grave-yard.

Henry Logan, son of John Logan, was born in Ireland in 1738, and died Aug. 3, 1825. He was married to Susanna Blair (B. 1743—D. 1817), who was a daughter of Bryce Blair. The Blair family at that time were prominent owners of land in York county, and gave their name to several hills in Carroll township. One of the descendants (James Blair) was a Deputy United States Consul to Brazil under President Cleveland.

Henry Logan left to survive him the following children, all of whom were more or less prominent in their day and generation, namely: Eleanor, wife of Robert Lynch; Sarah, wife of Matthew Lynch and grandmother of the Abraham DeHuff family of York, and also grandmother of Lyman D. Gilbert, now of Harrisonburg, an ex-Attorney General of the Commonwealth; James; Henry; and William.

Colonel Henry Logan, M. C., son of Henry Logan above referred to was born April 14, 1784, died Dec. 26, 1866. He served in a regiment commanded by General Thomas C. Miller, of Gettysburg, during the War of 1812, and was present at the battle of North Point during the defense of Baltimore at the time the British General Ross was killed. He was made Captain of the 10th Company, 19th Regiment, 2nd Brigade, 5th Division of the Pennsylvania Militia, and afterward (Aug. 1, 1814) Lieutenant Colonel of the same regiment. In 1818 and 1819 he represented York county in the Pennsylvania Assembly, and in 1828-1831 in the Pennsylvania Senate. In 1831 he was elected commissioner of York county. From 1831-1835 he represented York county in Congress at Washington. He was a hard Democrat, and a strong politician. He was accustomed to sit toward the end of his life that he had gone to Congress when it was an honor to go, and that he had never solicited an office or asked a single person to vote for him. He was a member of the American Colonization Society, whose object was to transport the negroes to Liberia. He was a member of the original Masonic lodge organized in York City, Pa., and which was suppressed in the days of anti-Masonry. He was a successful farmer, and at the time of his death owned more than seven hundred acres of land in Carroll township and vicinity. He married, Feb. 22, 1825, Martha O'Hall, daughter of Edward O'Hall, a Revolutionary soldier and an elder of the Monaghan Presbyterian Church. Her mother was Jane Richey. The children of Henry Logan were: Susan, wife of William Beatham, of
HISTORY OF YORK COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA

Carlisle, Pa.; James Jackson (born 1830—died 1902), of Carroll township; Mary Ann, wife of Abraham Williams, owner of the Granger Picnic grounds near Dillsburg, Pa.; Martha; Josephine, wife of Dr. William D. Bailey, of Dillsburg (Dr. Bailey was a son of Colonel S. N. Bailey, 12th Pennsylvania Reserves, and was himself Major of the 87th P. V. I., during the Civil war, while his brother, Hon. John M. Bailey, deceased, was President Judge of Huntingdon county, and another brother, D. B. Bailey, was a member of the York County Bar); Rev. William H., now of Wilmington, Del.; and John N.

John N. Logan, senior member of the law firm of Logan & Logan of York and Dillsburg and son of Col. Henry Logan, was born April 17, 1846. He was reared on his father's farm and attended the local schools. He afterward attended Tuscarora Academy, entered Princeton College and received the degree of A. B. in 1869. In 1871 he commenced the study of law. About that time he accepted the position of cashier of the Dillsburg National Bank, which position he held for more than twelve years. In 1889 he was admitted to practice at law at York, Pa. From 1870 to 1880 he served as justice of the peace in Carroll township. He served as elder of the Monaghan Presbyterian Church from 1871 to 1898, and was superintendent of the Sunday-school for more than twenty years. It was largely through his efforts that the Dillsburg branch of the Cumberland Valley railroad was built in 1870-1872. He is the owner of certain magnetic iron ore lands in Dillsburg, and has devoted many years to the study of minerals.

In 1874 Mr. Logan married Ella M. Coover, who was descended on her father's side from Dietrich Kover (Coover) of the Palatinate on the Rhine, who sailed on the Ship "Thistle" of Glasgow from Rotterdam, and arrived in Philadelphia Aug. 29, 1730. Her father was Jacob Coover, born 1816—died 1899; and her mother was Lydia A. Welty, daughter of Frederick Welty, and Sarah Eichelberger, and grand-daughter of John Welty of Emmitsburg, a Revolutionary soldier, born at Eppigen in 1722—died at Emmitsburg in 1817. [Maryland Archives, Vol. 18, pp. 238-305.] Through the Eichelbergers, she is descended from Matthias Smyser, the elder, of York. To John N. and Ella M. (Coover) Logan were born children as follows: James J., Frederick W., Helen M., Caroline E., Henry and Eleanor.

James J. Logan, son of John N. Logan, and junior member of the law firm of Logan & Logan, was born in Carroll township Jan. 24, 1876. After attending the country schools of the neighborhood, he received an appointment to West Point in 1893, but failed to enter. In 1894 he entered the York Collegiate Institute, and in 1896 Lafayette College, receiving the degree of Ph. B. with the class of 1900, and the degree of M. S. in 1903. He was admitted to practice law at the York County Bar, Sept. 9, 1901, and to the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in 1904. He is also a member of the United States District Court. During the Spanish-American War he served as sergeant of Company I, 4th Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was in Porto Rico.

James Buchanan Ziegler. A continuous practice for forty years before the courts of York County and southeastern Pennsylvania, a period unsurpassed but by two members of the York County Bar, made the late James B. Ziegler a familiar figure. He was the grandson of John Ziegler, a native of Union county, Pa., and the son of Samuel Ziegler, the latter a former well known business man of York. Two brothers of Samuel, Jacob and Daniel, were well-known clergymen of the Reformed Church.

The father's life was spent in York, where he was engaged in the saddle and harness business. He married Miss Charlotte Danner, whose father was identified with the tobacco trade of York. The father died Jan. 27, 1867, at the age of fifty-one, the mother's death occurring several years later. The Ziegler family consisted of eleven children; five of this family are deceased, those living being: Sarah, who is the wife of Adam Wisman, of Marietta, Lancaster county; Laura, wife of William Llewellyn, of the same place and county; Emma, wife of James E. Munday, postmaster of Mt. Holly, Cumberland County, Pennsylvania; Catherine, wife of Jacob Krug of Hanover, York County; Daniel, also of York County, who lives in Hanover; and Edward, who is traveling.
BIOGRAPHICAL

James Buchanan Ziegler was born in York Dec. 2, 1838, in the old home that stood on the site of the present opera house on South Beaver street. His education was received at the York County Academy and at the Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, Pennsylvania. Later he became a law student in the office of J. W. Bittenger, now President Judge of the Courts of York County. Mr. Ziegler was admitted to the Bar Aug. 24, 1864, and later to the Supreme and Superior Courts. From that time until his death he sustained a splendid reputation, not only as a successful practitioner, but as a broad minded, public-spirited citizen, seeking to encourage the phenomenal progress of the race as it works out the problem of civilization.

Mr. Ziegler's marriage to Miss Catharine Getz, occurred Oct. 4, 1864. She was a daughter of George Getz, of Lancaster county, now deceased. He was well known throughout the county by that peculiar phrase which expresses so much, "a genius," and was related to Charles Getz, a noted scenic painter of Baltimore. To Mr. and Mrs. Ziegler three children were born: Arthur G., of York, is the Supervising Principal of the King Street School; Herbert S., a printer, and George P., a florist, reside in York.

The citizenship of Mr. Ziegler was marked by many acts evidencing loyalty to duty and his sincere desire to ameliorate the ills of mankind. As a member of the common council for some three years, he was always alert to the interests of his constituents of the Thirteenth ward, and he aided in carrying out several important reforms in the city government. As a member of the fraternal organization known as the Heptasophs, he evinced his interest in his fellowman socially; and as a worker in the Trinity Reformed Church and for long years an efficient and faithful Sunday-school teacher, his influence among the young people was a benison to the community. He passed away in 1906.

William H. Rice, father of Edward A., is court crier for the courts of York county. He married Sarah, daughter of Peter Julius, a farmer of Dover township. The great-grandfather of Sarah (Julius) Rice came to York county from Germany, and the land which he bought, and on which he made his home, is now the property of his great-grandson, George D. Julius.

William H., and Sarah (Julius) Rice became the parents of the following children: Anna M., wife of Jacob Joseph, a farmer of West Manchester township; Charles P., D. D. S., a dentist of York; and Edward A.

On June 14, 1863, Edward A. Rice was born in Dover township, and he attended the public schools of York county, and the State Normal School at Millersville. He was for thirteen years a teacher in the schools in the town and county of York, and for six years he attended the summer terms of the East Berlin Academy in Adams county. Mr. Rice began his banking career as teller in the Farmers' National Bank of York, where he was employed from 1891 to 1898. He was then made cashier of the Western National Bank, and he still retains that position.

In 1903, Mr. Rice married Mary G. Wiest, daughter of Peter C. Wiest, a prominent manufacturer of York. Mr. Wiest is president of the York Corrugating Company, manufacturers of corrugated iron cornices, spouting, etc., and his son-in-law, Mr. Rice, is secretary and treasurer of the company.

Fraternally Mr. Rice is connected with the Odd Fellows. He is a member of Grace Reformed Church, where he has been an elder for a dozen years or more. He is also superintendent of the Sunday-school, and carries into that field of endeavor the same earnest energy and vital interest that characterize his secular affairs, and which have advanced him in his banking business. Mr. Rice has made a success of all his undertakings from the time he began teaching school: his career, already a credit to his county and town, opens toward even a brighter future. No life is without its influence for good or evil, and the community is fortunate which possesses citizens of the stamp of Edward A. Rice—clean, strong, kindly and helpful, an inspiration to the younger generation, reaching out for guidance to the highest things of life.

EDWARD A. RICE, cashier of the Western National Bank, is a native son of York county, and comes of a family well known in the county for generations.

William Rice, grandfather of Edward A. Rice, was born in Codorus township, where he lived and died.
ISAAC RUNK (deceased); who for many years was engaged in a mercantile business in what is now East York, lived retired from 1886 until his death, which occurred April 5, 1906, at his home in York. He was born in York township, York county, Dec. 3, 1829, son of John Runk.

The father was born in York county, and being left an orphan at an early age was reared to manhood by a Mr. Bollinger who resided in York county, near Spring Grove. He learned the shoemaking trade, which, however, he did not follow long. He engaged in farming until 1836, in that year purchasing the “Spring Garden Hotel,” in Spring Garden township, which since his death has been converted from an old dilapidated building into a fine hotel structure, with all modern improvements. This he conducted until his death, in 1845. The hotel is now owned by the widow of Edward Witmer. John Runk was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Reformed Church. Mr. Runk married Lydia Sowers, who was born in York county, daughter of Caspar Sowers, a representative of one of the pioneer families of York county. Mrs. Runk died in 1886 at the age of eighty-three years, and was buried at Prospect Hill cemetery. She and her husband had children as follows: Isaac, our subject; Louisa, who married Heiman Adams, both now deceased; Levi, who died young; and Mary Ann, the wife of Edward Blosser, the well known contractor and builder of York.

Isaac Runk received his education in the common schools of York and learned the cigarmaking trade. In 1854 he engaged in a mercantile business at Freystown, now in the city of York, or East York, his store being located on East Market street near his home, and he successfully continued in that line until 1886. From that time on he held the office of treasurer of the Eastern Market of York, also being a stockholder in that enterprise. Mr. Runk purchased the fine home in which he resided, at No. 743 East Market street, from John Bender in 1880 and he was one of the oldest residents of the East end. He passed away April 5, 1906, after a decline of about two months’ duration and was buried in Prospect Hill cemetery.

In 1855 Mr. Runk married Eliza Frey, daughter of George and Mary (Spangler) Frey. She died in 1901, and was buried at Prospect Hill cemetery. To Mr. and Mrs. Runk were born: Ada L., who lived with her father; Mary A., the wife of William Miller, a skilled patternmaker of York; Irene A., the wife of Charles Lichtenberger, a tinsmith of East Market street, York; and Cora A., the wife of A. A. Myers, a druggist of Norristown.

Politically Mr. Runk was a Democrat, and he served as township auditor and clerk. He was one of the leading members of Emanuel Reformed Church, and was a man well liked and respected by all with whom he came in contact. A resident of this section for many years, he could readily recall the tearing down and hauling away of the old court house which formerly stood in Centre Square, in which work Mr. Runk took part. Mr. Runk had in his possession a pair of infant's shoes (turns) made by his father in 1830, and worn by the subject of this sketch.

CHARLES P. RICE, D. D. S., a brother of Edward A. Rice, was born in Dover township, York county, Feb. 19, 1868. He is, in education, a product of the public schools of his home district, his professional education having been secured at the Baltimore College of Dental Surgery. Prior to taking this course in dentistry, Dr. Rice spent some nine years in the shoe business. The date of his graduation was 1891, he at once opened offices in York, and has since continued in successful practice at this point.

Miss Elizabeth Gallatin became the wife of Dr. Rice, May 28, 1896. She is the daughter of D. Y. Gallatin, now deceased, who was for many years a prominent merchant of Hanover, York county. To the marriage of Dr. and Mrs. Rice was born a son, named Edward Julius Rice.

Dr. Rice is a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, having membership in the Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery, and also in the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of the Junior Order of the United American Mechanics. He is an active worker in the Sunday school of Grace Reformed church, being at the present time secretary. Dr. Rice is a young man much esteemed in the business and social circles of York, where he and his wife move in the most exclusive circles.

THOMAS B. BAIRD, assistant cashier of the City Bank of York, represents one of the honored pioneer families of York county, where he has passed his entire life and has not failed to maintain the prestige of the honored name which he bears.

The founder of the Baird family in York county was Samuel Baird, who came hither from Maryland and settled in Hopewell township, where he established a distillery and became a citizen of prominence and influence, continuing his residence here until his death. His son, Thomas, father of Thomas B. Baird, died in 1878, at the age of sixty-five years. He devoted most of his life to contracting, and wielded much influence in business and civic affairs, while his name stood as a synonym of integrity and honor in all the relations of life.

He married Sarah Hartman, who was born and reared in York county, where she continued to reside during the entire course of her life, her death occurring in 1903, when she was seventy-six years old.

Thomas B. Baird was born June 20, 1866, on the old homestead farm in Hopewell township. After completing the work of the public schools he continued his studies in the Stewartstown Academy and then entered a business college in the city of Baltimore, Md., where he completed a course of study and was graduated in 1889. For the ensuing eight years he was a successful and popular teacher in the public schools of his native county, and at the expiration of this period, in 1897, became bookkeeper in the City Bank of York. In 1900 he was appointed assistant cashier, a just recognition of fidelity and efficient executive service on his part. He enjoys marked popularity in the business and social circles of his home city, and is a member of the Lafayette Club and the Country Club. He is a communicant of St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church, for the past several years has been a member of its vestry, and since 1900 has been treasurer of the parish, being known as a thorough churchman and taking great interest in all branches of the parish work.

Mr. Baird likewise is a communicant of and zealous worker in the church. Mr. Baird gives his allegiance to the Republican party, and though he is a loyal and public-spirited citizen he has never been an aspirant for political office of any description.

On Sept. 12, 1900, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Baird to Miss Isabelle McLean, daughter of James McLean, a prominent dry-goods merchant of York, and to this union have come three children, Elizabeth, Helen and Isabelle.

WILLIAM FROELICH. With a record of half a century's connection with the business interests of York, and that in the same business, and practically in the same firm, William Froelich, of the firm of William Froelich & Son, merchant tailors, becomes at once an interesting subject for the biographer. In this connection will also be mentioned the "Son" of the firm, William A. Froelich, one of the choice business spirits of the city, and recently the honored president of the Merchants Association of York. William Froelich & Son have their place of business in Odd Fellows Hall, at Nos. 100-107 South George street.

Froelich is a German name, this branch of the family having been brought to the United States by William Froelich, who arrived here May 15, 1850. He started the present business in 1862, in 1868 forming a co-partnership with F. A. Stieg, and they were together under the name of Stieg & Froelich until 1869 when the co-partnership was dissolved, Mr. Froelich continuing alone until 1888, when the change to the present name was made.

Mr. Froelich was united in marriage to Miss Pauline Stieg, a daughter of Frederick A. Stieg, and their family consisted of eight children, two of whom died in early childhood. Those living are: William A., partner with his father in the business of merchant tailor; Walter S., a druggist in Philadelphia; Philip H., a clerk in his father's store; Minnie S., the wife of Henry P. Palmer, an insurance agent of York's social circles, being prominent in the latter a graduate of the York Collegiate Institute, and of the State Normal School at Millersville, class of 1905.

WILLIAM AUGUST FROELICH, the son and partner, was born in York Dec. 22, 1864. With the advantages of the public schools he secured a good business education, and then entered his father's store as a clerk, continuing in this relation until 1888, when he was made a partner, and the firm name changed to that of William Froelich & Son. The son has developed a splendid aptitude for business, and has put much life and energy into the firm. The combination of his youthful energy and the father's long experience has resulted in building up a business of large and profitable proportions.

William A. Froelich took unto himself a wife, in 1895, in the person of Annie S., daughter of Frederick A. Beck, warehouse manager for P. A. & S. Small. They have had two children, Mary and Virginia.

William A. Froelich is a popular member of York's social circles being prominent in the Elks and other fraternal organizations in the city. He has interested himself, however, to a greater degree in the line of business development of the city. He was one of the organizers of the Merchants Association in 1897, and evinced such an intelligent interest in its growth and welfare as to cause his election in the spring of 1904, as its president, he being the third to hold this honorable position. During the Sesqui-centennial of the city, one of the greatest successes in the line of business displays ever given in York, Mr. Froelich had the honor of being a member of the executive board of the General Committee which planned and carried the program to its successful fruition.

Of the father it may be said that while his life has not been a spectacular one he has met his opportunities fairly and squarely and has made the most of them, in that open, honest, persistent way that always wins success. No man stands higher in business circles today in York, and he and his family are held in high regard.

R. HATHAWAY SHINDEL, the capable and efficient cashier of the First National Bank of York, whose thorough understanding of finance has won him enviable standing in the banking world, is the eldest son of Jacob G. and Abigail (Hathaway) Shindel, and was born at Selinsgrove, Snyder Co., Pa., Sept. 29, 1850.

Hon. Jacob G. Shindel was born in 1818, in Northumberland county, of German descent. He was educated in his native county, and there spent the earlier years of his life. Subsequently he removed to Selinsgrove, and for a time engaged in general merchandising, but later pursued the drug business in which he continued for many years. He was an old-time Democrat, but being a man of unusual popularity, was elected associate judge on the Democratic ticket in a county strongly Republican. He was one of the stalwart men of his county, useful in both public and private life. He married Abigail Hathaway, whose father, Reuben Hathaway, was of English descent, and resided in Snyder county. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Shindel: R. Hathaway; James C., a Lutheran,clergyman of Newark, Ohio; and Susan M., wife of Simon L. Kamp, a resident of Millmont, Delaware Co., Pennsylvania.

R. Hathaway Shindel grew to manhood in his native village, receiving his education in the public schools and the missionary institute now known as the Susquehanna University. When he laid aside his text books, he became a clerk in his father's drug store, where he remained for six years. Leaving the drug store he was appointed station agent at Selinsgrove for the Sunbury & Lewiston Railway Company, whose service he left some years later to become teller in the Snyder County Bank. He was subsequently promoted to the position of cashier, and served the bank in that capacity until 1876, when he removed to York and became bookkeeper in the First National Bank, of that city, a position he held until 1887. In that year the City Bank of York was organized, and he was elected to the position of cashier in that institution. In further recognition of his ability as a banker, Mr. Shindel was June 4, 1900, elected cashier of the First National Bank of York, of which his father-in-law, the late Jacob D. Schall, was president. On Feb. 14, 1905, he was elected a director to fill the vacancy caused by the death of John H. Small, and at the organization of the board was appointed vice-president and cashier. During his many years of banking, Mr. Shindel has been a careful student of banking institutions and systems, and has proved himself a conscientious and capable official. He is recognized as a conservative financier, of undoubted integrity and fine intellect. After coming to York, Mr. Shindel interested himself in a number of its business enterprises outside of the bank with which he is connected, preferring to aid the progress of home industry and home enterprise, even when it seemed more advantageous to indulge in foreign investments.

Mr. Shindel is a member of the Masonic fraternity in high standing, and also of several secret and beneficial organizations, among which may be mentioned the Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks. In matters of religion Mr. Shindel is affiliated with the Episcopal Church, of which organization in York he is a vestryman and warden. In politics he is an earnest advocate and supporter of Republican policies, and under the first charter of York was elected a member of the common council, and in 1889 was made city treasurer. After serving one year in the latter capacity, the law then regulating the election of city officials in the State of Pennsylvania was declared unconstitutional, and after the requisite legal change was made, he was re-nominated and elected for a term of three years under the declared constitutional requirements. Mr. Shindel is president of the Sixth Ward Republican Club, and was made vice president of the Republican State League when it met at York, in 1895, and again in 1896 when that body convened at Erie, Pa. He was elected a delegate to the Republican National Convention which met at St. Louis, Mo., in June, 1896, was an ardent supporter of McKinley, the successful candidate for President, and in that year a Presidential elector for this district. In 1900 he was delegate to the National Republican convention which met in Philadelphia to nominate McKinley and Roosevelt.

In December, 1872, Mr. Shindel was united in marriage with Mary B. Hummel, a daughter of L. R. Hummel, of Selinsgrove, Snyder county. Mr. Shindel's first wife died in August, 1880. In 1882, he married Lizzie M. Schall, the estimable daughter of the late Jacob D. Schall, who was president of the First National Bank.

REV. DAVID S. CURRY, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of York, Pa., is of Scotch-Irish ancestry, that race which our historians declare has played such an important part in our country's progress.

The mother of David is Mary Elizabeth Stewart Curry. The father is William Curry. Both are Presbyterian Church members and are descended from Presbyterians. William has been for fifty years owner and a successful manager of one of the largest farms in the vicinity of Belfast, Ireland. From boyhood it had been the purpose of William Curry to give himself to the Gospel ministry, but being the only son of his parents no way was opened up whereby he could attain the cherished ideal of his life. That purpose Providence effected in ways other than he had originally planned, for two sons, Samuel and David S., felt called of God to enter upon that life-work which had always been so near to the heart of their father. The former is now a leading Presbyterian pastor in Clones, Ireland, where he has labored successfully for eight years. The latter is pastor in York.

David Stewart Curry received his education in the schools of his native country, attending for two years the Model School at Coleraine, also the Coleraine Academy for five years, and the Queen's College, Galway, for three years.

It was in 1898 that he graduated from the Royal University of Ireland, in Dublin, with the classical degree of A. B. Among the honors won by him in connection with the Queen's College and the Royal University were the following: prizes in the College Athletics, especially in football and tennis; a first class honor in English in the entrance examination for the University, being fifth among about two thousand competitors; the money prize each year, for three successive years, in open competition in three annual examinations; the Senior Scholarship money prize in History and Political Economy; the "Sir Thomas Moffett Medal for oratory and composition," founded that same year and presented to Mr. Curry as its first recipient by the president, Sir Thomas, in connection with the Queen's College Debating Society.

But Scotland and America were destined, in some respects, to play parts of still greater moment in his history. In order to pursue his studies for the ministry he crossed to Scotland, the historic fountain head of Presbyterianism, and there in Edinburgh, the seat of Scottish lore, "Scotia's Darling Seat," he studied in the New College of the Free Church, coming under the influence of such men as Professor Marcus Dods, Professor A. B. Davidson, Reverends Alexander Whyte, Hugh Black, and George Matheson.

Turning his attention in his middle years toward Princeton, where his brother had studied a few years previous, he spent his second and his third theological years at its Seminary, coming under the influence of men such as Professors Green, Paxton, Purves, Warfield and Davis, graduating in 1900.

Immediately after graduation, which occurred on May 8th, Mr. Curry came to York as assistant to the late lamented Rev. Henry E. Niles, D. D., in the First Presbyterian Church, having been elected in February, four months before graduation, and having been ordained (by the Presbytery of New Brunswick) a minister of the gospel before leaving Princeton. No sooner had Mr. Curry become located in York than he entered on his work as assistant. Owing, however, to the fact that Dr. Niles died a few days after Mr. Curry's arrival, the latter labored as "Acting Pastor" for six months. It was on Oct. 18, 1900, at a congregational meeting, that Mr. Curry was called to assume the duties of the full pastorate of the First Church, founded in 1790, by Rev. Robert Cathcart, D. D., also of Coleraine, Ireland, rebuilt in its present beautiful style in 1860 under Rev. Dr. Street, a stronghold of Presbyterianism for over a century, second to none of all York churches in influence for good, advanced to its present prominence by the blessing of the Almighty on successive generations of pastors capable and faithful, and of people loyal, generous, and devoted to the church and its progress.

Rich Divine blessing has attended the Rev. Mr. Curry's efforts and these of his people, as seen in the manifest growth in membership, attendance on public worship, interest in church work, and gifts during his pastorate, the church membership having increased from 450 in 1900, to 620 in 1905, and the already generous annual gifts for benevolences of over $3000 having been increased considerably, as well as the gifts for the current expenses of the church itself.

It was on March 12, 1905, that a most important event occurred in the life of the pastor—his marriage to Miss Catherine Barclay Fraser, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Fraser, of Edinburgh, Scotland. In virtue of her beautiful and lovable personality, her winning manner, and her capacity to form and retain friendship, she has been from the beginning a great help and inspiration to her husband, not in the Manse alone but also in the church and its work, both among young and old. The people of the church have shown their devotion to the Rev. Mr. Curry and his gifted wife in many ways and on many occasions. To them two sons have been born: George Fraser in 1902; and David William in 1905.

Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Curry paid a visit to England, Scotland and Ireland in 1903. On Jan. 2, 1905, Mr. Curry renounced for ever his allegiance to King Edward VII, and became a citizen of the United States of America. Mr. Curry has been an officer several times in the Ministerial Association, was a Commissioner to Pennsylvania Synod in 1904, is a trustee of the Collegiate Institute and President of the York County Sabbath Association, and was a Commissioner to the General Assembly in Des Moines, Iowa, in 1906.

GEORGE FREDERICK MOTTER, whose sudden demise is still fresh in the memory of his fellow-citizens of York, was born Oct. 23, 1838, in York county, at the Motter homestead on the Wrightsville Pike. For the last few years of his life he had lived retired, but he had been for many years prominent in business circles and in the development of various interests in the city, and he accomplished much that is destined to be of enduring value to the community.

Mr. Motter came of a family whose members have been identified with the history of this section of Pennsylvania from the early days of York and Adams counties. The first of the name to come to this country were Frederick, Henry, George and Louis Motter, who emigrated from Germany. They settled in Pennsylvania, near the Maryland line, and their descendants have since maintained high standing among the substantial residents of that section. Henry Motter was the grandfather of George F. Motter, whose name introduces this sketch. He lived in Adams county, and reared a large family, namely: Samuel Henry, Joseph (who served in the Mexican war), Daniel, Jacob, Jesse, Lewis, Frederick, Catherine, Martha and Margaret.

Col. Daniel Motter, father of George F. Motter, was born March 21, 1814, and married Catherine Klippepeter, who was born April 6, 1814, daughter of Frederick and Christina Klippepeter. They had a family of nine children, all now deceased but two, namely: Martha, who was the wife of William Stapley; Lewis; George F.; Mirah J., wife of William Smyser; Mary C., who is the wife of Edwin I. Kraber, who is in the plumbing business in York; Catherine A., widow of George Ross, of Homer, N. Y.; Louisa A., deceased; Daniel Joseph, who died young; and Alice M. The mother of this family died in York at the age of seventy-three years.

When a young man Daniel Motter learned the tanner's trade, but he did not follow it long. He was best suited to affairs that brought him into constant contact with his fellowmen, and so he made a success at auctioneering, at which he continued for some time, becoming well known in that line. In the late forties he moved into the city of York, and there owned and conducted the "Motter House," becoming very popular in that connection. Indeed, there were few men in York in his day who were better known or had more friends. The nature of his business gave him social opportunities which were entirely congenial to his disposition. He was a man who bore the utmost goodwill toward all his fellow creatures, and his desire to help others, no less than his native energy, made him active in many lines outside of his actual personal interests. He took considerable interest in public affairs, and was captain of the York Washington Artillerists and president of the Vigilant Fire Company, both of which organizations mourned in his death the loss of a most able officer, and one whose efforts had done much to promote their efficiency and high standing. Col. Motter served in many official positions, and in every case discharged his duties in the most conscientious and satisfactory manner. On June 10, 1854, shortly before his death, at a meeting held in the courthouse by the friends of the York, Dillsburg, Shippsburg & Green castle railroad, he was appointed one of a committee composed of influential citizens who were to wait upon the people of York county to solicit subscriptions for the road. Though he died at the early age of forty, Aug. 2, 1854, after a protracted illness, he filled a place in the community not often attained by men whose years covered much more than the allotted span. With all of his many interests of a purely personal or social nature, and to all of which he attended faithfully, he was a man of marked business capacity, and by his own efforts he won success and attained an independent position, which, unfortunately, he was not long permitted to enjoy. Naturally robust, and possessing a sturdy constitution, the long illness which preceded his death was very trying, and he continued at his work and bore his increasing afflictions with a fortitude which was wonderful. His funeral, which was conducted by Humane Lodge, I. O. O. F., the York Washington Artillerists and the Vigilant Fire Company, was one of the largest ever known in York.

George F. Motter, son of Col. Daniel Motter, was a worthy successor to his father in the business life of York. He was about ten years old when his parents moved to this city, his father at that time taking charge of the "Motter House," and he attended the public schools of the city and the York County Academy. He commenced work as a clerk in the dry goods store of John A. Weiser, at the southeast corner of Center Square, and followed that occupation for several years. But merchandising did not appeal to him, and he went to learn the trade of machinist at the establishment of Baugher, Frey & Kurtz, now Eyster, Weiser & Co. This proved to be the principal work of his life, for he made his greatest success as a manufacturer of machinery. In time he became a member of the firm of Frey, Motter & Co., who had a branch of the West End Manufactory, this concern doing business for about ten years, when it was reorganized as Frey & Motter, manufacturers of boilers and engines. The senior member, Enos Frey, died in 1802, and the business was then assumed by Mr.
Motter and his sons, under the style of George F. Motter & Sons, continuing so until four years before Mr. Motter's death, when he sold his interest to his sons, thereafter living retired. Mr. Motter was always looked upon as one of the ablest promoters of up-to-date industrial conditions in York, for though not an idle theorist or reckless speculator, he was progressive to the core, and his energy and thorough executive ability made him recognized as a friend of progress from the time of his early manhood. He encouraged and supported many enterprises outside of his own line, being a far-sighted manager and a shrewd financier, and at the time of his death was still serving as a director in the York Safe & Lock Company, the Farmers Market Company and the York County National Bank, and was treasurer of the York Clay Company. He was one of the originators of the Westinghouse Light, Heat & Power Company of York. Outside of these numerous interests he found time for the various projects which tend to improve a city both morally and materially, making a community self-respecting, safe, convenient and agreeable as a place of residence. Like his father he was particularly interested in the Vigilant Fire Company, of which he was a member for many years, and at one time engineer, and although he was not in the active service for several years before his death he personally attended fires and looked after the steamers. For a number of years he was one of the trustees of the Prospect Hill Cemetery Company.

Fraternally Mr. Motter united with the Artisans and the Freemasons, and his religious connection was with Trinity Reformed Church, of which he had been a member of the Consistory for many years prior to his death. He passed away at his home quietly and suddenly, at a quarter to seven in the morning of March 15, 1906, while reading his newspaper, without any warning that death was so near, for he arose that day apparently in his usual good health. Though he had lived retired for the four years preceding his demise his sudden taking away affected many interests, and he was widely missed and as widely mourned, and there were many expressions of sincere regret from his associates in the different ramifications of life. In "Pulpit and Pew," for April, 1906, appeared the following:

At a meeting of the Consistory of Trinity Reformed Church, held March 13, 1906, the following resolutions were adopted in memory of Mr. Geo. F. Motter:

With sorrow the Consistory of Trinity Reformed Church has learned of the very sudden death of Mr. Geo. F. Motter, and would hereby record its high appreciation of the personal worth and valuable services of the departed.

Mr. Motter was all his life a member of Trinity Reformed Church and for thirty-seven years a member of the Consistory, serving first as Deacon, and later as Elder and Trustee. In all these offices he acted for the betterment of his fellowmen and the welfare of Trinity Reformed Church.

By courtesy and kindness, as well as by purity of life and character, our departed friend has secured the love, esteem and confidence of his co-workers in this church and elsewhere. We express our deep sympathy to the family of our deceased brother in their great loss and bereavement.

J. Frank Gable, A. Lee Shulenberger, E. H. Pilack, Committee.

IN MEMORIAM.

George Frederick Motter, Elder and Trustee of Trinity Reformed Church, died suddenly at his home in this city March 15, 1906, at nearly sixty-eight years of age. An impressive funeral service was conducted by his pastor, assisted by the pastor of Grace Reformed Church, on March 17. The very large attendance of friends and representative citizens was a just tribute of respect and honor in which he was universally held. At the close of a beautiful afternoon his body was laid to rest on a sunny slope of Prospect Hill Cemetery in the simplicity and faith in which he lived his life. Not only is his loss keenly felt by a loving family but very deeply do his friends miss his bright and cheerful countenance and sympathetic heart, his business associates feel the absence of his helpful and sound thought and judgment, and his church realizes the removal of a true and devoted Christian and a conscientious and faithful Elder.

Mr. Motter loved his home. To him his family was a sacred circle, in which his great heart beat with devoted throbs. The relation of flesh and blood was to him a hallowed one. Nothing was too much to sacrifice for the blessing of the household of which he was the loving head and center. He had a very wide circle of friendship and was himself always a true and faithful friend. There was nothing half hearted as there was nothing deceptive about him. When he gave his friendship it was not to be taken back nor at times withheld but grew stronger as the years went by.

Mr. Motter was a successful business man. He began at the bottom of the ladder and climbed by his own effort and perseverance, rung by rung, until he stood among those who represented the manufacturing and financial interests of the city. He made a record of which he could be proud, and which deservingly placed him in honor and position.
Martin Luther Ebert was reared from 1855 on the farm in West Manchester, and attended the public schools, later on attending York County Academy. After finishing his studies he returned home and assisted his father, at which he continued until he formed a partnership with his brother and embarked in the mercantile business, which he disposed of several years later. He then engaged in the real estate and insurance business, continuing in this line until 1884, when he retired from the insurance business, but kept his real estate interests.

Mr. Ebert has been connected with the Western National Bank for a number of years, and is a director and large stock holder. He is also interested in the Central Market House of York, of which he is one of the directors. Politically he is a Republican, for one year being a member of the city council from the Fifth ward, now the Eleventh. Fraternally Mr. Eberts is affiliated with the Mt. Zion Lodge No. 74, I. O. O. F., also with the Grand Lodge of the State of Pennsylvania.

The responsibilities of Mr. Ebert's positions have been great and onerous, but he has discharged his duties in a most able manner. He also has other business interests in York, being an active promoter of a number of projects and a director of several companies. Mr. Ebert has many warm friends who enjoy his business success and his social and political prominence.

CHARLES KURTZ. In connection with the department of this compilation touching upon the life histories of those who have figured conspicuously in industrial, commercial and civic affairs in York county, there is definite interest attaching to the career of Mr. Kurtz, who stands as a representative of one of the sterling old families of the county, and who is personally one of the prominent business men and influential citizens of York, the attractive capital city of the county. His honored father long held precedence as one of the leading business men and most progressive and public-spirited citizens of York, where his name ever stood as a synonym of honor and integrity in all the relations of life, while he attained to distinctive success in temporal affairs through his own well-directed efforts along legitimate lines of enterprise, having established the malting business still conducted under his name over a half century ago, in partnership with J. Hamilton Ness. The business is now conducted under the firm name of W. H. Kurtz & Son, and in control is the subject of this review, who has given his personal supervision and control since the death of his father. The business dates its inception back to the year 1845, when William H. Kurtz became associated with J. Hamilton Ness in establishing the enterprise, whose scope and importance were limited at the start, but through reliable methods and indefatigable industry the progress of the concern was certain, direct and rapid, and resulted in the building up of the present magnificent malting business, which is one of the largest and most important of the sort in the southern part of Pennsylvania, while its ramifications extend throughout this State and the name of the firm stands for absolute reliability and honorable business methods wherever it is known. The original firm of Kurtz & Ness continued operations about twenty years, and Mr. Kurtz then secured sole control of the business, while the present title of W. H. Kurtz & Son was adopted in 1885, when the subject of this sketch became actively identified with the enterprise. His father continued to be active in connection with the supervision of the business until the time of his death, in 1804, and his name merits a high place upon the scroll of the loyal, honorable and able citizens who have contributed in marked measure to the industrial and civic advancement and prestige of the city of York, where his circle of friends was circumscribed only by that of his acquaintances. Since the death of his father Charles Kurtz has continued to carry along the business on the same conservative lines which have ever defined its course, and he has fully upheld the distinction of the honored name which he bears and the reputation of the concern which absorbed so much of the thought, energy and pragmatic ability of his father.

Charles Kurtz was born in the city of York, June 3, 1857, and secured his early educational discipline in the public schools, and after completing the curriculum of the same he continued his studies in the York County Academy, where he rounded out his education and properly fitted himself for assuming the business responsibilities which soon devolved upon him. He is a progressive business man and a thoroughly public-spirited citizen, while he enjoys unreserved popularity in the city which has been his home throughout the course of his life. He is identified with a number of important local enterprises aside from that of which mention has been made, being a member of the directorates of the York County National Bank, the York Opera House Company, the York Gas Company, the York County Mutual Fire Insurance Company, one of the most prosperous and solid institutions of the sort in the state, the York Water Company, and several turnpike companies. He has various other capitalistic interests of importance and is ever ready to lend his aid and co-operation to the support of enterprises or measures for the furtherance of the general welfare and the material and civic advancement of his home city, which holds a distinct and certain place in his affections and in which he takes just pride, as do all loyal citizens of the attractive and favored little city. In politics Mr. Kurtz accords a stanch allegiance to the Republican party.

Mr. Kurtz has been twice married. By his first union was born one son, William H., who is now a student in the famous old Phillips Academy at Exeter, N. H., where he is being prepared for Harvard College. By the second union a daughter, Julia B., blesses the home circle.

MATTHEW JAMES McKINNON, M. D. A practicing physician for over half a century and for thirty-two years in the city of York is a record which makes Dr. McKinnon a well known figure. And still he passes in and out among the people, healing their physical ills and counseling with them in their various and manifold activities, carrying gladness and sunshine wherever he goes. Dr. McKinnon is a most popular member of York society, and is passing his declining years amid hosts of the friends he made in his earlier career.

Dr. McKinnon is a descendant of the McKinnon Clan of Scotland, the first of the name to come to America being Thomas McKinnon, whose coming antedated the Revolutionary war. He settled in Harford County, Md., and here Grandfather McKinnon married into the Whiteford family and later removed to Lower Chanceford township in York county. The Doctor’s father, Michael Whiteford McKinnon, was then a baby in arms. When he grew to manhood he married Ann Logue McCall, of the historic family whose name is so familiar in the county, and which will be more fully mentioned in another part of this work.

Dr. Matthew J. McKinnon was born in Chanceford township and passed his boyhood on his father’s farm, receiving a good common school education in the country schools and at private Academies and College at New Athens, Ohio. His professional course was taken at the University of Maryland, from which he graduated in 1853. His first practice was in Huntington Co., Pa., where he continued successfully until the breaking out of the war. He at once volunteered for the service, and became surgeon of the 53d Regiment. He followed the fortunes of this regiment for some sixteen months, and then was compelled to resign on account of ill-health, brought on by exposure in the Peninsular campaign.

The Doctor resumed the practice of his profession at Hagerstown, Md., and was engaged at that point until his coming to Chanceford township in 1870. Three years later he came up to York, and since that date has been actively engaged to the present time. It is unnecessary to add any word of encomium on Dr. McKinnon’s professional work in York, his extensive practice being evidence sufficient to proclaim him one of the city’s best physicians and surgeons. He has had official connection with the York City Hospital as surgeon since its organization thirteen years ago, and for eight years has been surgeon to the York County Almshouse. He has also been for thirty-two years surgeon at York for the Pennsylvania and Northern Central railroads.

Dr. McKinnon has reared a family of six children in York, his marriage taking place in Hagerstown, Md., in 1857. His wife’s maiden name was Amelia J. Scheindel, and her children are as follows: Annie, who married William F. Ramsey of York, and died in 1889; Carrie, wife of I. Newton Faust, a citizen of Huntingdon county; Margaret, wife of William T. Ellis, one of the directors of the Philadelphia Press; Robert Bruce, City Engineer of York; Walter Scott, engineer, assistant to his brother; Dr. John Whiteford McKinnon, a dentist at York. The last named was born at Hagerstown June 28, 1868, and was educated at York Collegiate Institute and the University of Maryland, graduating at the latter in 1889, taking a course in dentistry. He has since conducted an office successfully in York, where he is a popular member of society, being a member of the Masonic lodge, the Bachelors’ Club, and of the Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Matthew J. McKinnon has always taken an active interest in affairs at York, and is always found in the forefront of every movement looking to the betterment of her society. He was made a Mason long years ago at Hagerstown (1868), and affiliates with the Artisans. In religious belief he is a Presbyterian, having been a member and an elder in that church since before the war. His voice has always been for advancement, and though well up in years he is yet in the full possession of his powers. Both he and his family are among York’s most popular citizens.

ROBERT BRUCE McKINNON, city engineer of York, comes of stanch Scottish lineage, as his name indicates, and he is a native of the State of Maryland, having been born in the city of Hagerstown, Washington county, Dec. 3, 1864, son of the now venerable Dr. Matthew J. McKinnon, of York, a sketch of whose honorable and useful career immediately precedes. When Robert B. McKinnon was about five years of age his parents removed from Maryland to York, and in the public schools of the city and under the instruction of private tutors he had well-ordered educational discipline in his youth. He had given special attention to technical study along the line of his present profession, and when twenty years of age found employment as a member of the engineering corps of the Southern Pennsylvania Railroad Company. His next position was of a similar nature, with the Kansas & Nebraska Railroad, and later he was identified with engineering work on the line of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company. He was concerned with railroad work of this order in the West for a period of about twelve years, during which time he operated in Kansas, Arkansas, Missouri and the Indian Territory. One of the most eventful periods in his career, however, was that during which he was engaged in the lumber business in the famous Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory, where he remained about one year, meeting with excellent success in his operations. In 1898 Mr. McKinnon returned to York, Pa., and in the same year was elected to his present office, that of city engineer. He had previously served in that capacity for three months, during the illness of the regular incumbent. So faithful and satisfactory have been his services in this office that he has been retained in the same consecutively, having been honored with two elections, for terms of three years each. His preferment is well merited, since he has won precedence by reason of his marked ability as a civil engineer, while he is held in confidence and esteem as an executive and as a citizen.

Regarding his professional work in the West, it may be said that the record of Mr. McKinnon's experiences in railroad operations in that section would fill a volume, while the details could not fail to prove most interesting. He was the chief engineer in a continuous survey of one hundred and eighty miles, and had charge of the surveying of eighty miles of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf railroad, running all the way to the Gulf of Mexico. The fact that he lived in tents for a period of five years indicates in a measure the untrammeled life which was his, while he also endured many hardships and encountered danger from various sources while operating in wild and unsettled sections of the far West. That his physical powers did not suffer through his experiences is evident to all who meet the sturdy and vital city engineer of York.

In politics Mr. McKinnon is a stalwart Democrat, taking a lively interest in the questions and issues of the hour. He and his wife are members of the First Presbyterian Church of York. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, in which he has attained the Knights Templar degree and belongs to the Shrine, and also belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Bachelors' Club, the Country Club and the Artisans, enjoying distinctive popularity in both business and social circles.

On Oct. 14, 1902, Mr. McKinnon was united in marriage to Miss Marion Grace Downey, daughter of James B. Downey, a prominent and influential citizen of Lancaster, Pa., and of this union has been born one son, James Downey McKinnon.

LIEUT. CHARLES H. STALLMAN is one of the leading spirits in the commercial life of the city of York, being a large wholesale dealer in tobacco and cigars, president of the City Bank, and identified with manufacturing interests of various kinds. Lieut. Stallman is a native of Prussia, born Oct. 20, 1840, and he came to York with his parents when a six-year-old boy. His father died here the sixth year after his arrival, at the age of fifty-two years, and the mother in 1861, when fifty-six years of age.

Lieut. Stallman managed to secure a good common-school education, and began his business career at the early age of fourteen years in the hardware store of Rosenmiller & Co., then the leading hardware merchants of the city. He remained with this firm until the breaking out of the Civil war, when he enlisted, and did not again engage in business life until after his discharge, March 12, 1865. He then became connected as a clerk with P. A. & S. Small, then a large firm in York, with whom he remained until 1874, this marking the date of his entry into the wholesale tobacco business in York with R. L. Shetter, under the firm name of Stallman & Shetter. In 1900 he purchased the interests of his partner and in 1902 formed the present firm of C. H. Stallman & Son, by the admission of his son George L. Lieut. Stallman has acquired other interests during this period, being a director in the hosiery manufacturing firm of Joseph Black Sons Company, director in the York Wall Paper Company, and president of the City Bank of York. He is a member of the school board of thirteen years' standing, and served as president of the board for two years, his service in this regard being marked by highly increased efficiency in the public schools.

In social life Lieut. Stallman is a familiar and popular figure. He is a leading member of the Knights of Malta, and in all the organizations incident to his military career—Sedgwick Post, No. 37, of the G. A. R., the Union Veteran Legion and the Loyal Legion. Lieut. Stallman also takes a lively interest in the affairs of the Methodist Episcopal Church, having been a steward for thirty years, a trustee for twenty years, and superintendent of the Sunday-school for the past ten years.

In June, 1867, Lieut. Stallman married Miss Elizabeth Bennett, daughter of Thomas Bennett, now deceased, and to them have been born the following children: Jeanette, at home; Lulu, wife of Charles Beck, cigar manufacturer of York; Margie, now the wife of John Stormfeltz, coffee roaster of York; and George L., who is a partner with his father.

Lieut. Stallman is one of the surviving officers of the Civil war whose record in that gallant struggle to preserve the integrity of “Old Glory” is worthy the highest commendation. He entered the service as a private soldier in April, 1861, and was promoted through the serjeancy to second, and then to first, lieutenant of his company. His first enlistment was for the three months’ service in what was called the Worth Infantry, this company becoming part of the 16th P. V. I. For “three years or the war,” at the end of this first service, he enlisted in Company C, 87th P. V. I. This regiment went to the front as a part of the Army of the Potomac, and spent the first winter in camp at stations, doing guard duty, on the North Central railroad. Our subject was at this time promoted to be serjeant major, and commanded Company C as second lieutenant at the battle of Locust Grove, Nov. 27, 1863. As the regiment moved on to Mine Run he commanded a detail of men to assist in building corduroy roads for the rapid movement of the troops. On Christmas Day, 1862, he received his commission as second lieutenant, and participated in the engagements around Winchester. After the battle of Carter’s Woods he accompanied the regiment in its retreat to Bedford, Pa. Lieut. Stallman was commissioned first lieutenant of his company Jan. 31, 1864, and for three months thereafter was on special duty at Carlisle, Pa., as a recruiting officer. He returned to his company at North Anna in May, and on June 1st, when the battle of Cold Harbor opened, was in command of a detail of men on the skirmish line. As his men moved through a clearing a Confederate battery opened on them. The Lieutenant and his men dropped to the ground, and moving on hands and feet across the brow of the hill, did some effective work as skirmishers during the battle. Our subject was now to experience the hospitality of the enemy in their famous, or infamous, hosteleries, beginning with Libby. Before Petersburg, while doing duty on the skirmish line, he was captured, together with others, June 22, 1864. He was first sent to Libby, thence by rail to Lynchburg, Va. From that point they were marched across to Danville, arriving in time to celebrate the nation’s birthday, though that had to be in thought only. There they were incarcerated in a tobacco warehouse, and fed on corn bread and pork. Down to the very heart of the Confederacy they next journeyed, feeling that fate was indeed against them. However, they were soon transferred across to Savannah, where they received kind treatment and plenty to eat. But “Uncle Billy” Sherman was abroad in the land, and they were moved on up the coast to Charleston. Their stay here in the hot and dirty jailyard proved the undoing of a number, their death casting a gloom over the remainder. At Columbia where they were next taken their quarters were good, but the rations were poor. As Sherman advanced two thousand officers were sent to Raleigh, N. C., and from this place they were moved to the point of exchange about eight miles from Wilmington, on the Cape Fear river. There they saw the old flag for the first time since their capture, and a glad sight it was. A guard of honor was waiting to receive them. On the march to the steamboat landing colored troops formed in line on both sides of the way. They had erected an arch over the road with the words “Welcome Home” in the center. The circumstances and the surroundings touched the hearts of the sternest men, and brought forth such feelings of emotion as were seldom witnessed. The same day, March 1, 1865, Lieut. Stallman and some of his comrades took the boat at Wilmington for Annapolis, Md., where they arrived on the 5th, without shoes, and with very little clothing. He was mustered out of service by special order of the Secretary of War, March 12, 1865, and thus ended an experience which comes to but few men, and which he himself cares not to repeat.

A faithful soldier, a loyal and patriotic citizen, a successful business man and a tried and true friend in all circumstances, Lieut. Stallman combines qualities which have endeared him to all his townsman and a host of friends throughout the State and nation.
REV. R. R. RODES belongs to a branch of the Rodes family which is of German ancestry and is descended from a progenitor who left his native land for the New World in 1730. Landing at Philadelphia, he became one of the early settlers of York county, Manchester township.

(II) John Rodes (or Roth), the next in line, was born in 1756, and died in 1835. He bought a large tract of land lying between what is now Manchester township and the Susquehanna river, and moved thither with his parents who died there and were buried on the farm. In 1813 John Rodes built on his place the large gristmill now operated by Kochenour Brothers, situated a half-mile north of Mount Wolf. Besides engaging in farming he served as a minister of the Mennonite Church, and was the founder of the old church of that persuasion which is situated three quarters of a mile north of Manchester. Rev. John Rodes had eight sons and two daughters.

(III) Christian Rodes was born in 1780, and died in 1838. After his marriage, in 1805, to Miss Susanna Bowers, he settled at a home lying along the same stream on which his father’s mill stood. Five years later he built a stone structure, the upper story of which was used for his residence while he distilled whiskey in the basement. In 1820 he built a fulling-mill, and operated it for thirteen years, but in the meantime store goods had been brought into competition and the fulling business was ruined. Christian Rodes was a man of considerable reputation as a mechanic and builder; the barn on Whistler’s Island, east of York Haven, which was demolished by the ice flood in the spring of 1904, was built by him in 1805, and stood there for nearly a century. In 1806 he erected the substantial barn which is still standing on the George Lichtenberger farm in East Manchester. The family of Christian Rodes was composed of five daughters and six sons.

(IV) Daniel Rodes, born in 1806, died in 1890. On April 14, 1831, he married Miss Susannah Palmer, and they had a family of six sons and six daughters, of whom four sons and one daughter died in infancy. Another son, Joel, died in 1803, in the army hospital at Louisville, Ky., and one daughter passed away after reaching maturity. Daniel Rodes spent his entire life on his father’s homestead. In 1840 he was one of the strongest Harrison Whigs, and not only attended political meetings and pole raisings, but also made many speeches during the campaign. He was made captain of the Manchester militia, and for year after year, until he resigned, Capt. Rodes drilled the “Broomstick Brigade” regularly on George Wogan’s Commons, and on each battalion day led out his gallant men in their uniforms of homespun. Among the well-known military and political friends whom he made at this time may be mentioned Sheriff Daniel Ginter, Col. Daniel Stillinger, George and Michael Hay, and that honest, level-headed citizen and editor and lawyer, Thomas E. Cochran. Daniel Rodes became a member of the United Brethren Church in 1843, and later developed into a local preacher of good repute, being not only a man of true Christian piety but also very well informed for his time. He officiated at many funerals, particularly for the poor. During the Civil war he served as school director, and was the man chosen to go to Harrisburg with a sum of money to buy substitutes to fill the quota for Manchester township.

(V) Zebulon P. Rodes, at present a resident of Mount Wolf, was born in 1834. In 1856 he married Miss Sarah Zorger, who died in 1892, aged fifty-seven years. Of the five sons born to them four are now living, namely: John M. and Jesse J., of Mount Wolf, Christian, of Starview; and R. R.

(VI) Rev. R. R. Rodes has filled important charges in New Cumberland and Dallas-town, and is now pastor of the Allison Memorial United Brethren Church, on West Princess street, York.

WILLIAM HAMILTON GRIFFITH, now living in leisurely retirement, at York, has been connected with the city’s banking interests for many years.

Mr. Griffith comes of Welsh ancestry. He was born Aug. 19, 1836, on West Market street, York, and is the only survivor of three children born to his parents, William and Sarah (Gotwalt) Griffith. The father was born in 1803, near Dillsburg, York county, and he came to York when a boy. Here he learned the shoemaking trade, one which he followed until his death. His business was a large one for his day, he having many workmen, as, in his time, all work was done by hand, and he amassed what was then considered a comfortable fortune. He was noted for his quiet, dignified manner, and he was held in just esteem as an upright and honorable man. For many years he was a trustee of the First M. E. Church.

William Hamilton Griffith first attended the York schools, pursuing classical studies in the York Academy, and in 1854 he entered Dickinson College. There he was graduated in 1858, with the degree of A. B., and the college subsequently conferred the degree of A. M. After his graduation he taught school for a season, spending several years in this profession, at the Cumberland Valley Institute, in Dauphin county, and also in Maryland. In 1861, in association with Prof. S. B. Heiges, he started a Normal School at York, and was connected with this enterprise until 1865.

On Dec. 1, 1866, Mr. Griffith accepted the position of bookkeeper in the York National Bank at York, and continued his connection with this financial institution until Dec. 1, 1896, filling the successive positions of bookkeeper, teller, discount clerk and cashier, occupying the latter position for seven years. In 1896 he retired from business activity. In various ways he has been a prominent citizen here, always interested in public movements and fully acquiescing in plans for the public welfare. He served as a member of the school board for the Third ward, and for a number of years was a member of the town council. For some time he was president of one building and loan association, and treasurer of another.

In 1865 Mr. Griffith was married to Annie M. Lehman, who died in January, 1889, leaving three children: Louisa M., a resident of New York City; John H., connected with the street railway company of York; and Isabel B., wife of Harold Stieg, of Washington, D. C. In September, 1898, Mr. Griffith married Rose C. O'Neill, formerly of Baltimore, Md. The comfortable family home is at No. 5 West Philadelphia street.

Jacob Brillhart was born in Seven Valley, Aug. 17, 1822, and was left fatherless when only seven years old. He was at once taken from school and bound out to Henry Leib, owner of the Codorus mill, learning the miller's trade under him. When he was eighteen the youth went to farming and made his own way sufficiently to marry four years later, and rent a large farm of 200 acres, to be his home. There he remained twenty years before buying a farm of his own. At the end of that time he invested in 100 acres. For ten years he tilled this, then sold it, and bought a smaller tract where the rest of his life was passed. He was married in 1844, to Miss Sarah Ann Homer, daughter of Jacob and Catherine (Bremer) Homer, who was born in West Manchester township, July 11, 1824, and died Feb. 1, 1904. She became the mother of the following children: Martin V., was born March 23, 1845. Emma, born in December, 1847, married Andrew Gross, of Dover township, died Jan. 27, 1905, and is buried at Salem's Church. Catherine, born in March, 1849, who married William Spangler, of Dover, lives near Hazleton. Albert, born in October, 1851, married Miss Lydia Lichty, and lives in West York. Jane, born Dec. 25, 1853, married Samuel Yeager, and is residing in York. George W., born in 1855, married Miss Ellen Polly, and lives near Austin, Texas. Amanda, who died young, is buried at Salem's Church. Alice, born about 1860, is the wife of Howard Stambaugh, and lives in York. J. Clayton, born in November, 1863, married Miss Phoebe Christ, and lives in Dover township.

Jacob Brillhart passed from this world April 12, 1889, and is buried in the family lot at Salem's Church, near Dover, where his wife was afterward interred beside him. Mr. Brillhart's death left only one of his father's family surviving. The brothers and sisters were as follows: Joseph, deceased about 1866, in Illinois; David, who died aged seventy-five, and is buried in Washington township; Peter, who died young and is buried in York county; Daniel, who died about 1874, aged sixty-seven years, and is buried at Salem Church, near Dover; Jesse, who died in Virginia; John, deceased in West Virginia; Adam, who is still living as a retired farmer at Porter, Heidelberg township, and who married Miss Emma Stambaugh; Elizabeth, who is buried in Manchester township; Esther, who is buried in York county; Catherine, buried in Manchester township; Lena, who died young in York county; and Polly, who is buried in York County.

Martin V. Brillhart attended the public schools near Dover borough until he was seventeen, and worked after school hours on his father’s farm. In 1862 he went to the Millersville State Normal School for a term, and with this preparation entered the teaching field the next year. From 1863 until 1876 he followed that profession, but was at the end of that time decided upon a radical change and going west to Abilene, Kans., embarked there in a mercantile enterprise which absorbed his attention for fourteen years. In 1890 Mr. Brillhart returned to Pennsylvania, settled in York, and went into business as the proprietor of a gentlemen’s clothing and furnishings store. His place of business was located on the northwest corner of Market and Penn streets, and continued there until he retired from active business in 1895.

Mr. Brillhart’s marriage occurred during the period of his teaching. His wife was a Miss Ellen Lauer, daughter of John and Cassandra (Becker) Lauer, of Dover borough, and their union was solemnized Oct. 1, 1871. The children born to them were: Nettie B., born in York city, Nov. 2, 1872, wife of W. P. Swartz. now residing in York; Mace J., born in Dover township, April 1, 1876, who became the wife of George L. Stallman, a wholesale cigar and tobacco dealer; William M., born in Abilene, Aug. 4, 1878, a prominent electrical contractor in York; and Charles E., born in Abilene, July 25, 1882, who was graduated from the Naval Academy at Annapolis Feb. 2, 1903, and is now an ensign on the U. S. S. “Stewart.” Mr. and Mrs. Brillhart have many friends in York, and are held in high esteem.

JOHN W. STEACY, a prominent iron man of southeastern Pennsylvania, and a resident of York, is a native of Lancaster county, having been born in Strasburg June 9, 1833, son of John and Elizabeth (Graham) Steacy.

Mr. Steacy is of Irish ancestry, both his father and grandfather having been natives of County Derry, Ireland. The grandfather lived and died there, but the father, born in 1786, came to America about fourteen years of age, and located near Strasburg, Lancaster Co., Pa., where he died in 1844. He was a farmer and contractor and also engaged in freighting between Pittsburg and Philadelphia, having in that service a number of teams. For eight or ten years he served as a magistrate. Politically he was of the old Jackson school of Democracy, and took an active part in such matters. He married Elizabeth Graham, and they had two children, one of whom died.

John W. Steacy received his education in the public schools and at Strasburg Academy, but he left his studies at the age of thirteen and went to work on the farm, leaving that occupation to go into the foundry at Eden, where he acquired a knowledge of the trade. Soon after serving his apprenticeship he entered a country store at New Providence, Lancaster county, where he continued for some time, and then went to Columbia. For five years he clerked in a dry goods store, and then embarked in mercantile pursuits for himself, in the towns of Columbia and Marietta. After twelve years spent in merchandising he engaged in the oil business, as part owner in the Columbia Oil Works, and as buyer and seller for the firm, which was known as Trescott & Co. They went out of the oil business in 1876, and Mr. Steacy then for a time conducted the flouringmill near Columbia, under the firm name of Steacy & Co. In 1878 Trescott & Co. purchased the York Rolling Mill at York, and the business was conducted as a partnership concern under the name of Schall, Steacy & Denny with Mr. Steacy in the position of manager. In 1886 a joint stock company under the name of Steacy & Denny was organized and the plant, which at that time was employing 250 hands, was worked. In 1886 the firm bought the Columbia Rolling Mill, and Mr. Steacy became treasurer and manager of that interest. Two years previously the firm had purchased the Aurora Furnace at Wrightsville, and added the Vesta Furnace, at Watt’s Station, to their possessions.

In 1899 Mr. Steacy was one of the promoters of the consolidation of the Columbia Rolling Mill, Vesta Furnace, Aurora Furnace and York Rolling Mill into the Susquehanna Iron and Steel Company, of which he was a director for several years, and then became general manager. It was capitalized at $1,500,- oo. Mr. Steacy withdrew from this concern Dec. 1, 1903, and devoted himself to the building of suburban trolley lines around York, he being one of the seven gentlemen controlling the entire system. In addition to these interest Mr. Steacy has been president of the Edison Electric Light and Power Company for several years; has been a director of the York Trust Company since its organization, and was a charter member of the York County Traction Company, of which he is now a director. He is a director and vice-president of the Norway Iron & Steel Company; was a director of the Baltimore & Harrisburg (eastern extension) railroad, commonly known as the Western Maryland, of which it is a division; is at the head of the firm of Steacy & Co., in the lime business at Wrightsville, an industry that has been in successful existence for fifteen years, and of which Mr. S. S. Wilton is manager; a director in the Broomell, Schmidt & Steacy Company; has been a director of the Columbia Trust Company since its organization, and is closely affiliated with other interests bearing upon the material welfare of the community.
While a resident of Columbia he served as a director of the First National Bank.

Having moved to York upon his assuming the management of the rolling mill in 1880,
Mr. Steacy became very prominently identicified with the civic, business and charitable interests of the city. While in Columbia he served on the school board, and in the councils of that town. Locating in York, he was honored by the people of his district by being elected to councilors here. He served in the first select branch upon the inauguration of the city government, and for several succeeding terms.
Despite his pronounced Republicanism he was elected president of the branch, though at that time it was controlled by the Democrats, and he filled the position with strict impartiality, retiring with a record beyond criticism. He has served as director of the York Hospital and of the Children’s Home, and as trustee of the York County Historical Society.

John W. Steacy married Mary Harmley, of Columbia, by whom he had two sons: Frank H., deceased; and Edwin G., a resident of York. Mr. Steacy’s first wife died in 1866.

He married (second) Anna Gyger, of Bryn Mawr, Pa., in 1877.

ANDREW G. HIRT, who passed away Aug. 22, 1905, was a resident of York for many years, was well known in business circles, and while engaged in contracting and building erected some of the best buildings of the city. Mr. Hirt was born in Overham, Kretz-heim, Germany, April 20, 1820.

George Hirt, the father of Andrew G. Hirt, was a tailor in Germany, where he died in 1838, his wife surviving until about 1848.
Their children were: Margaret, who died in Germany; Michael, who died in Germany; Lenhart, who also died in Germany; Andrew G.; Mary, who came to the United States and married Lenhart Himmelreich, deceased;
George, who died in Germany; and Martin.

At the age of fourteen years Andrew G.
Hirt left the parochial school and went to learn the mason’s trade, at which he served three years. In 1846 he came to the United States, sailing from Bremen to Baltimore on the sailing vessel “Sophia”, the trip taking two months. Mr. Hirt could speak no English, but he found employment at the ore banks near Baltimore, receiving eighty cents per day, and this he continued two years. In 1846 he was first married, and he then engaged in a saloon business on the Washington road, between Washington and Baltimore, near the ore banks.
In 1850 he removed to Harrisburg and engaged in working on the bridge being built across the Susquehanna river, but becoming sick the first day he was obliged to give up this work. He then located in York and went to work at his trade. For six years he worked for others and then engaged in the contracting business on his own account, erecting the old opera house, the Lutheran church on West Market street, and also building the Kreutz Creek church, in Helam township. While working in York he helped to build the Zion Reformed church. Mr.
Hirt carried on business until about 1900, when he retired from active life.

Mr. Hirt’s first wife died in York, and he married (second) Mary Pfeffer, who was born in 1842 in Nieder Hessen, Germany, and died April 2, 1897: she was buried in Prospect Hill cemetery. Her parents died when she was six years old, and she and her five sisters came to the United States. To Mr. and Mrs. Hirt children as follows were born: Annie, who died at the age of thirty years; Margaret, Mrs. Louis Watson, of York; Andrew George, living in Reading, Pa.; Otto, of York; Albert, who died in infancy; Franklin, deceased; Oscar, at home; Mayme, Mrs. Jacob Pyle, at home; and Walter, also at home. The Hirt family are members of Bethlehem Evangelical Church. In politics Mr. Hirt was a Democrat.

HENRY WEITSEL is now living retired in York, after many years of business life. His birth occurred Sept. 15, 1826, in Fishing Creek Valley, Fairview township, York county, and he is a son of John Weitsel.

The grandfather of our subject was a prominent farmer of Fairview township, where he died, leaving two children, one of whom died in Middletown, Dauphin county.

John Weitsel, father of Henry, was a blacksmith by trade, having learned that occupation at Harrisburg. He followed that all of his life in Fishing Creek Valley, and died there at the age of forty-seven years, being buried at the Salem Church in his native township. He was one of the first to be buried in that yard. He married Nancy Fisher, daughter of John Fisher, and she passed away in York, aged eighty-seven years, being buried beside her husband. They had these children: David; Henry; Mary, who married Henry Strickler; Samuel; Harriet, who died young; Ellen, wife of William Brubaker, of Ohio; Nancy, wife of Eli Petrow, of Ohio; Rebecca, wife of Dr. J. H. Betz, of York City, whose sketch appears elsewhere.

Henry Weitsel spent his schooldays in Fishing Creek Valley, leaving school at the age of sixteen years. When twenty years old he came to York and learned the plastering trade, at which he worked for ten years, being then employed as boss on the 13th Division of the Northern Central Railroad, and remained with that company until 1880. Then he was employed by P. A. & S. Small as night-watchman, and after twelve years of this work, in 1892, resigned his position. Since that time he has lived retired at his home, which he built in 1895 at No. 685 East Philadelphia street, York.

Mr. Weitsel married Catherine A. Miller, daughter of Adam and Elizabeth (Decker) Miller, of York. Mrs. Weitsel was born Feb. 12, 1826, and married Mr. Weitsel March 28, 1856, in York. Rev. Jacob C. Smith, a United Brethren minister, performing the ceremony. The following children were born to the union: John W., a machinist employed at Brillinger & Small's, who married Mary A. Lay; Mary E., the widow of Daniel Spangler, of York, Pa.; Henry C., who died young; Gilbert, employed with the Northern Central Railroad, and residing at home; Annie, wife of Walter Blaiser, a printer of York, Pa.; George, a painter and grainer, employed at Strack Bros., York, and married to Carrie Baker; Edmund S., a printer by trade, residing at home; Lillie M. R., wife of D. Wilson Kuehn; superintendent of the bill-posters of York; Clara A., deceased; and one child that died in infancy.

Politically Mr. Weitsel is a Republican, and served three years as councilman. He is a member of the United Brethren Church. Mrs. Weitsel is well known in York city and county. She is a charter member of the Evangelical Church, for nearly sixty years taking a great and active interest in all church work, and has been a teacher in the Sunday-school for fifty years in both English and German, having taught a class of young men in the Sunday-school since they wore knee-trousers. She is a member of Aid, the Home and the C. E. Societies. For forty years she has belonged to the Rebekahs. She is superintendent of the Alms House, and has been connected with the W. C. T. U. for the last twenty-two years. Few women are better known in York city, and her great and good work in all lines has been felt and appreciated by all. Kind and gentle, she is a good Christian woman, and is loved and honored by all who know her.

Fraternally for fifty years Mr. Weitsel has been connected with Humane Lodge, No. 342, I. O. O. F., and Mt. Vernon Encampment, No. 14, I. O. O. F., of York, and in this order he is extremely popular. Like his venerable wife he is highly respected by all. Especially well is Mr. Weitsel known for his strict honesty and integrity and for the businesslike manner in which any business is carried out by him. He and his wife have reared a family of children which would be a credit to any community, and they may be truly called a representative couple of the city of York.

Frederick Williams, grandfather of our subject, was born in 1763, and died July 30, 1832. He married Elizabeth Raymond, daughter of Henry Raymond, who died in 1816, aged twenty-three years.

John B. Williams the father of our subject died Jan. 12, 1881, and his wife, Catherine Koller, April 10, 1887.

Eli K. Williams grew to manhood on his father's farm, being reared to the life of a farmer, and educated in the common schools. He was married Feb. 28, 1860, to Miss Amanda E. Gottwald. Prior to his marriage he had worked for a time in the Farquhar shop in York, and after marriage he built a home on Chestnut street, and moved to York. He later went to work in the car shops, and from there to Lafean's candy factory, where he continued until his death. Mr. Williams was buried at Prospect Hill cemetery. He was a member of the Zion Lutheran Church. Politically a Republican, he took a great degree of interest in public affairs. His fraternal connections were with the Red Men. To him and his wife were born: Harry L., born Dec. 24, 1860, married Esther Steese, and is a proof reader in the Brooklyn Times office; and Charles H., born Nov. 30, 1865, married Mary Shaffer, and they reside on East King street.

Mrs. Williams was born April 24, 1839, on Beaver street, York, and in her youth attended the town schools. Mrs. Williams joined Christ Lutheran Church in early girlhood, and was a teacher in the Sabbath schools for many years. After marriage she attended Zion Lutheran Church, but since her husband's death has returned to Christ Church. Her father, George Gottwald, was born near York, where he attended school. He was a hatter by trade, having learned that business with Peter Ahl. He later carried on brick making, and at this he continued until his death in 1879, aged sixty-one years. He was a member of Christ Lutheran Church. Politically he was a Republican. Mrs. Williams' mother Mary Ann Huchman, was born in York, Nov. 30, 1811, and died Dec. 25, 1893. She was confirmed in Christ Lutheran Church. She was the youngest child of Frederick Huchman, a teacher of the parochial school and organist in Christ Evangelical Lutheran Church.

Mr. Huchman was born in Hanover Germany, Feb. 13, 1766, and confirmed in the church in 1782, coming to the United States in 1791. He was married Sept. 28, 1794, to Mary Magdalene Gerst, of Winchester, Va., and he and his wife moved to Hagerstown, Md. When the Rev. Dr. Schmucker in 1809, removed from Hagerstown to York to become pastor of Christ Lutheran Church, he persuaded Mr. Huchman to accompany him and take charge of the parochial school, and to be organist in the church. Mr. Huchman has a memorial window in the new Christ Lutheran Church.

ANDREW MILLER, a retired citizen of York, for a number of years carried on agricultural operations and milling in Windsor township, in which township he was born Dec. 18, 1825, son of Michael Miller.

Michael Miller, Sr., the grandfather of Andrew, was born in Windsor township and was a large landowner and prosperous farmer. He married Miss Susan Lantz, who was also born in Windsor township, and both died in that township, being buried at Freysville Union Reformed Church. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Michael Miller, Sr., were as follows: Frederick, who married Miss Susana Paules, and had a family of twelve children, went to Ohio, and spent his life in farming; Catherine, who married Mr. Kenmerly, died at Shrewsbury, York county; Michael was the father of our subject; Mrs. Keeler accompanied her husband West, where they both died leaving a family.

Michael Miller, son of Michael, Sr., was born in Windsor township, where he followed farming. He purchased a mill, which he operated in the township for many years, and he died at the age of eighty-one years and eight months. His wife in her maidenhood was Elizabeth Zeller. They are both interred at Freysville Emanuel Reformed Church in Windsor township. Their children were: Jacob, a retired farmer, married Miss Mary P. Anstine, and died in Red Lion; Mary, the wife of Valentine Gable, lived in Windsor township; Susan, who died in Shrewsbury township, was the wife of Jacob Striewig; Catherine, who died in Lower Windsor township, was the wife of Samuel Leberknecht; Elizabeth, who died in Shrewsbury township, was the wife of Frederick Austine; Charles, a retired miller and merchant, living at Dillsburg, Pa., married Catherine Kauffman (he still owns the mill which is operated by his son); Michael, who died in York, married Catherine Stine, who is living on Prospect street, York, Pa.; Andrew is the subject of this sketch; David, who died in Windsor township, the first of eleven children to die, left a widow, Rebecca (Gohn), who is still living; and Misses Sarah A. and Rebecca kept house for their father until his death, after which they moved to York, Pa., and bought the home on College avenue, where they now reside, provided with ample means.

Andrew Miller spent his school days in the common schools of his district and learned the milling business with his father. In December, 1857, he married Elizabeth M. Lutz, daughter of George W. and Maria (Mann) Lutz, of Manor township, Lancaster county.

After his marriage Mr. Miller purchased the mill and mill property, and operated there until 1893, when he located in York, and has since lived retired. He is the owner of three farms in Windsor township, and all are up-to-date in every respect, consisting in all of 250 acres. The mill property he sold to Michael M., his son, who is still operating it. To Mr. and Mrs. Miller were born these children: Andrew L., who married Annie Austine, is postmaster and merchant at Freysville, York county; Michael, who married Catherine Kauffman, is running the old family mill; Charles E., who married Miss Sallie Kauffman, is a well-known and successful brick manufacturer and stone quarryman of York; George, who married Ida Seitz, is engaged in the mercantile business at the corner of Queen and Princess streets, York; J. W., whose sketch will be found elsewhere, married Emma Stoner; and Sallie A. is the wife of Thomas Wilson, of York. Mrs. Elizabeth M. (Lutz) Miller died Dec. 27, 1874, aged forty-three years and eleven months, and Mr. Miller married (second) on March 7, 1878, Catherine Meyers, daughter of Henry Meyers, of Shrewsbury township, York county.

In politics Mr. Miller is a Republican, but has never sought public office. He has been connected with the Drovers and Mechanics National Bank of York, since its organization, and had been repeatedly urged to serve as a director, but always refused until 1902, when he finally accepted the honor and has served as such ever since. He is connected with the Reformed Church of Freysville, York Co., Pa., to which his wife also belongs, and he has held the offices of deacon and elder for many years. Mr. Miller's years of active labor are over, and he is now surrounded by all that makes life dear, affectionate friends, devoted descendants, ample means, and a wide circle of estimable fellow citizens who hold him in the highest regard.

MATTHEW H. McCALL, president of the First National Bank of York, is descended from the family that gave the historic McCall's Ferry its name, and he is the third in direct line to bear the name of Matthew. His grandfather, Matthew McCall, was an industrious and upright citizen, much esteemed in his section.

Matthew McCall, father of Matthew H., was a noted educator in his day. He was a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College, Canonsburg, and for one year was a professor in that institution, later filling a professorship in Blairsville Academy. His death occurred in 1848. He married Amanda Manifold (an aunt of Sheriff Manifold), of Hopewell township, York county, and their three children were born of this union: Amanda, who died in early childhood; Sallie A., wife of James W. Wallace, a farmer and merchant of Hopewell Center, York county; and Matthew H.

Matthew H. McCall was born in Blairsville, Indiana Co., Pa., Sept. 24, 1843. He received his early education in an academy taught by Prof. James A. Murphy, and in 1860-61 was a student in the Millersville State Normal School, in Lancaster county. When he left school as a student he entered the teacher's profession, and taught in Hopewell, Fawn and Lower Chanceford townships. The outbreak of the Civil war changed his plans, as it did those of many young men. When less than nineteen years of age he enlisted Aug. 7, 1862, becoming a private in Company I, 130th P. V. I. He participated in the battles of Antietam, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, and was honorably discharged at the expiration of his term of enlistment, nine months. On June 17, 1863, he re-entered the service, becoming first lieutenant of Company B, 1st Battalion, P. V. I., and was discharged Oct. 3, 1863. Still filled with patriotic ardor, Mr. McCall enlisted a third time, Jan. 27, 1864, in the 187th P. V. I., and on March 18th following was made quartermaster of the regiment, being but twenty years of age at this time. Although frequently under fire he escaped without injury, and was mustered out with his regiment Aug. 8, 1865. He had been offered the captnancy of his company, but declined, as he preferred the quartermastership.

After the close of the war Mr. McCall engaged in merchandising at Gatchellville, York county, remaining continuously in business for thirty-nine years, and only giving it up when he was made president of the First National Bank of York, an honor that came to him Feb. 14, 1905, after the death of President Schall. Mr. McCall had been a director of the bank for eighteen years, and had made a careful study of finance, so that the mantle of President Schall could hardly have fallen on more capable or worthy shoulders.

On Jan. 27, 1869, Mr. McCall was married to Mary Amanda Livingston, daughter of Dr. Livingston, a prominent practicing physician of Chanceford township. One child was born to this union, Hugh Livingston, who grew to manhood and became his father’s valuable assistant in the mercantile business, but who died at the age of twenty-eight, in the prime of young manhood, leaving a widow but no children.

Fraternally Mr. McCall is a member of York Masonic Lodge, No. 266, having joined the order in 1874; and for seventeen years he was commander of Lieut. Frank Torbet Post No. 506, G. A. R., of Gatchellville, a post he took an active part in organizing. He also belongs to the Military Order of the Loyal Legion, an order to which but seven men in the county belong. Religiously Mr. McCall is a Presbyterian, being a member of the Presbyterian Church at Chanceford, where for nine or ten years he was secretary of the congregation.

In politics he is a Republican, and has been a delegate at various times to the State conventions, and has also been a member of the Republican State Committee. Unostentatious in manner, genial at all times, but possessed of a forceful nature that stamps all his acts with the mark of quiet determination, Mr. McCall shows himself at all times a capable man in responsible position.

DAVID F. STAUFFER. The annals of York county give evidence that the Stauffer family has long been identified with its history, and David F. Stauffer is one of the county’s influential and prominent citizens and representative business men. He is concerned in industrial enterprises of wide scope and importance and the owner of most valuable realty, and stands high in the regard of the people of his native county, where he has risen to success and prestige on the ladder of his own building. In the city of York Mr. Stauffer is the owner of a large and profitable industrial enterprise, that is concerned in the manufacturing of crackers and cakes. This business dates from 1858, when it was founded by the late Jacob Weiser, who later sold it to Barney Sauppy. He continued the undertaking until 1866, when he was succeeded by Casper Loucks, the latter remaining at the helm until Mr. Stauffer purchased the plant and business, in 1871. He has rebuilt and remodeled the plant, and it is now one of the best in equipment and in the superiority of its products in the State of Pennsylvania, while a large business is controlled throughout the territory normally tributary to York as a wholesaling and jobbing center. Mr. Stauffer is also engaged in the manufacture of brick, under the title of the York Shale Pressed Brick Company. The concern has a well appointed plant and its output is of the most substantial and attractive order, the brick being of a beautiful cherry red and made from dry shale, compressed under very high hydraulic pressure. This establishment also controls a large and profitable business, and in its management has felt the vitalizing and progressive impetus given by Mr. Stauffer, who has shown marked initiative and executive ability in every enterprise, private or public, with which he has consented to identify himself. He is the owner of three large and finely improved farms in York county, his landed estate comprising 456 acres. The farms are well stocked and are operated largely under his personal supervision. He is a director of the York County Agricultural Society, a member of the directorate of the City Bank and a valued member of the municipal board of public works. He is ever ready to lend his influence and co-operation in the promotion of all worthy enterprises tending to conserve the general welfare and the advancement of the best interests of his home city and county, and he commands the high regard of those with whom he has come in contact in either a business or social relation. He served ten years in the city fire department; as a member of the city council for two terms, representing the Fourth ward; and has been for two years chairman of the highway department of the municipal government. In the position last named he has practical supervision of the important work of the department, through the operations of which employment is afforded to a corps of about two hundred men. Mr. Stauffer and his family are valued members of Trinity Reformed Church.

Reverting to the earlier points in the career of this worthy and popular citizen, it should be noted that Mr. Stauffer is a native of York county, having been born on a farm in Windsor township, where he passed his boyhood days and received the rudiments of his education in the district schools, while through personal application and well directed reading, together with his discipline as an active man of affairs, he has rounded out what may well be termed a liberal education. Mr. Stauffer is a son of the late Rev. Frederick and Mary (Forry) Stauffer, both of whom were born and reared in York county. The father was a man of noble character, for forty years a minister of the Mennonite Church, in which he attained distinction and high honors, serving as a bishop of that denomination for eighteen years. Both he and his wife died in the year 1894.

Mr. Stauffer remained on the home farm until 1867, when he located in York township and identified himself with the milling business, which received his attention until 1870, when he purchased the bakery which he has since so successfully conducted.

On July 30, 1870, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Stauffer to Miss Lucinda Wayne, who was born and reared in York county, daughter of the late Samuel and Susan Wayne. To Mr. and Mrs. Stauffer have been born ten children, namely: Calvin, Harry, Nettie, Mazie, Ann, William H., David Preston, Albert E., Frederick and Elsey. Those deceased are Albert, Elsey and Frederick. Nettie Stauffer is the wife of Curtis Mehring, wholesale hardware and groceryman; Mazie, wife of Colvin Craft, cashier of the City Bank; Calvin, associated with his father, who married Abba M. Eaton, of York; Harry, superintendent of his father's factory, married to Estella Etter, of York; William H., in his father's office; David Preston Stauffer, attending Pierce's Business College in Philadelphia.

J. FRANK SMALL, M. D., a prominent physician of York, won particular renown as the health officer of that city, a position he held for more than eight years with distinguished ability. He was born July 6, 1865, in York, son of David Etter and Mary Ann (Fulton) Small, and is a descendant of one of the oldest and most distinguished families in Pennsylvania.

In boyhood Dr. Small received a thorough literary training in the public schools of York and the York Collegiate Institute. In 1886 he entered the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, from which he was graduated in the class of 1889. Immediately after graduation he was engaged for two years in the wholesale drug business at York, associated with his twin brother, J. Hamilton Small, who afterward became a physician and teacher in the Medico Chirurgical Hospital, Philadelphia. Upon the dissolution of this partnership Dr. Small made an extensive tour of Europe, during which time he took a post-graduate course in the London hospitals, and was interested in other professional observations on the continent and elsewhere.

Returning from his continental trip in 1893, Dr. Small opened an office in York, where he has risen rapidly in his profession, enjoying a very lucrative practice. In 1898 he became a close student along the line of anti-toxin, which he introduced in York. At present, and for some time past, he has been studying preventive medicine, making a special study of typhoid fever. He has written several important papers along this line, which have been published in the medical journals and republished in the York and Lancaster papers.

Dr. Small served the city as president of the board of health in 1894, and was elected health physician in 1895, being re-elected in 1896, and serving, as previously stated, over eight years. His skill in general medicine and surgery is supplemented by a quickness in reaching conclusions and promptness of action which have saved the day on more than one occasion. One instance is particularly noteworthy. A case of smallpox was discovered late one evening in the servants' quarters of one of the leading hotels of York, the top floor was immediately quarantined, and by two o'clock in the morning every guest in the big hotel had been vaccinated. The result was that not another person in the hotel took the disease and though there were sporadic cases through the city the epidemic stage was never approached. Thousands of dollars were thus saved the municipality, and the citizens generally were spared the loss of trade which always attends such a calamity, to say nothing of the life and happiness of many. Dr. Small's heroic action in the emergency, with the board of health back of him, certainly deserved the warm commendation it received.

The Doctor is a member of the York County and Pennsylvania State Medical Societies, and has taken an active interest as a member in the American Medical Association and the Pan-American Medical Congress. For one term he presided over the York County Medical Society, and he has served at various times on different important committees in the State and national medical organizations.

Dr. Small has always been a stanch Republican, and is a charter member and ex-president of the Young Republicans of York. He has frequently represented the party in caucus, local and State conventions. For a number of years the Doctor has been prominent in fraternal circles. He is officially connected with the Alpha Mu Pi Omega medical fraternity of the University of Pennsylvania, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Junior Order of American Mechanics, Patriotic Order Sons of America, Artisans Order of Mutual Protection, and the Royal Arcanum, for which latter he is medical examiner. He is also one of the highest degree Masons in the United States, having passed through the lodge, chapter, commandery and consistory.

JAMES WILSON KILGORE, secretary and treasurer of the Guardian Trust Company of York, is well known in the business, fraternal and social circles of that city.

Mr. Kilgore comes of a Scotch-Irish family long settled in the north of Ireland, whence the American ancestor came to York county, Pa., early in the eighteenth century. This pioneer was Matthew Kilgore, who located at first in Delaware, but after a brief stay came to York county, where he settled. The grandfather of James W. Kilgore, John, was a farmer in Lower Chanceford township, and his son, Robert N., who was also a farmer, died at Brogueville, York county, in 1877, aged sixty-six years. Robert N. Kilgore, father of James W., married Mary E. Wilson, daughter of James Wilson, of Harford county, Md., and three children were born to them as follows: Maggie M. and Jennie, unmarried; and James Wilson, whose name introduces this sketch.

James Wilson Kilgore was born Feb. 22, 1851, at the old homestead near McCall's Ferry in Lower Chanceford township. His early education, received in the public schools, was supplemented by some terms in the Union Academy, Pleasant Grove Academy and York County Academy. He began his public life as a storekeeper in Brogueville, and was a merchant in that place at three different times, aggregating fourteen years. He then came to York, where he engaged in the flour and grain business from 1899 to 1903. On June 1, 1903, he was elected to his present responsible position as secretary and treasurer of the Guardian Trust Company, which began business at that time, with a capital of $250,000.

On Nov. 23, 1898, Mr. Kilgore married Susan C. McConkey, daughter of William McConkey, a leading banker of Wrightsville, and sister of Senator E. K. McConkey. No children have been born to this union.

Mr. Kilgore is one of the directors of the company of which he is secretary and treasurer, and he is also a director in the Drovers' & Mechanics’ Bank of York, the Mount Rose survance Company of York, the Mount Rose Cemetery Association, and the Hollywood Brick Company, and is vice-president of the Boren Gulch Mining Company. Fraternally
he is identified with the Masonic Order. He is a member of the Lafayette Club of York. In politics, like his brother-in-law, Senator Mc-Conkey, he is a stanch Republican.

C. H. DEMPWOLF, who is connected with a number of industrial and financial concerns of the city of York, came to this country from Germany when a youth. His earliest years were spent in his native country, where he was born April 23, 1850. At the age of seventeen Mr. Dempwolf accompanied his parents to America and the family settled in York.
The young man began at once to support himself and assisted in establishing a new home.
He was so engaged until 1869, when he went to New York, attended a business college and then accepted a position as bookkeeper. For three years Mr. Dempwolf remained there, employing his spare time in the study of chemistry and attending several courses of lectures at Cooper Institute. He returned to York in 1874, went into business and formed the firm of C. H. Dempwolf & Co. for the manufacture of fertilizers. Their dealings grew to such proportions that in 1895 the York Chemical Works was incorporated with a capital of $100,000, C. H. Dempwolf becoming president. The company manufactures twenty brands of high grade fertilizers, the works having a capacity of 20,000 tons a year. Dem-pwolf’s fertilizers find a ready market throughout Southern Pennsylvania. The York Chemical Works is undoubtedly the concern in which Mr. Dempwolf takes his most vital interest, for it is practically his own creation, but he is identified with other important interests in York, and holds not a few positions of responsibility. He is president of the Hoover Wagon Company and the City Building and Loan Association; secretary of the York Silk Manufacturing Company; treasurer of the York City Land Company, as well as of the Fertilizer Manufacturers’ Association of the United States; treasurer and director of the York County Agricultural Society; and director of the Security, Title and Tru: Company, and of the York Hotel Company.
There are also a number of minor enterprises with which he is connected. The business capacity has in Mr. Dempwolf been developed to an extent that entitles him to be considered one of the powers in York’s financial circles.

On Oct. 9, 1878, Mr. Dempwolf was united in marriage to Miss Emma Jane Smith, daughter of Charles H. Smith (deceased), a well-known lime manufacturer of York. To this union four children were born, as follows:
C. H., Jr., a chemist; Nellie C., who attended Wellesley College, in Massachusetts; Clara Agnes and Marion Louise, who are both in school. Mr. Dempwolf is a member of Christ Lutheran Church, while in the political field he affiliates with the Democratic party. He also belongs to the Lafayette and Country Clubs. The family residence on South George street is one of the most attractive and hospitable in the city.

MATTHEW GARRETT COLLINS is the efficient general manager and treasurer of the York Silk Manufacturing Company, whose business has developed to its present proportions under his skilful care. He is one of the younger business men of York, and is a conspicuous example of the success that waits on fidelity, intelligent enterprise and good judgment.

The Collins family in America was founded by five or six brothers who came to this country from Scotland. One of these brothers settled near Pittsburgh, and became the great-grandfather of Matthew Garrett.

George M. Collins, grandfather of Matthew Garrett, was a contracting painter, a business which his son, Oliver C., also followed. The latter met his death prematurely, by a fall from a ladder, in his thirty-eighth year.

Oliver C. Collins married Elizabeth Rode-baugh, daughter of Samuel Rodebaugh, of West Newton, Pa. Of the seven children born to this marriage, three died in infancy. The other members of the family are: Samuel R., a merchant of Charleroi, Pa.; George McL., also of Charleroi; Oliver C., of Pittsburgh;
and Matthew Garrett, of this sketch.

Matthew Garrett Collins was born Feb. 25, 1874, in McKeesport, Pa., and was educated in the public schools. He took up his father’s DIAMOND BRANCH, YORK SILK MANUFACTURING COMPANY
business of painting, making a specialty of signs. But that work was not to his taste, and he gave it up and went to New York City, where he found employment as a messenger with a firm of bankers and brokers. After a year in this position he had so gained the confidence of his employers that they sent him to Pennsylvania, and in 1898 he built a silk mill at Fleetwood. The superintendent left soon after the mill was put in operation, and Mr. Collins took the management into his own hands. He soon put up another mill at Carlisle, and in 1899 came to York, that “city of industries,” where he built two more mills. These four mills, at Fleetwood, Carlisle and York, are now consolidated under the management of the York Silk Manufacturing Company, with Mr. Collins as its general manager. The concern makes a specialty of Money-bak black silk, which finds a ready market all over the United States. The enterprise was successful from the start, and paid the stockholders a seven per cent dividend each year from the beginning of operations. The capacity is ten thousand yards a day, and in 1904 the business amounted to two million dollars.

Mr. Collins married, Dec. 22, 1898, Effie L. Craig, daughter of Hugh Craig, superintendent of the mines of the Pittsburg Coal Company, at Charleroi. A daughter, Louise, was born in 1900 and died in 1901, aged fifteen months. One son, Craig, was also born to this marriage.

Mr. Collins is a Mason, a member of the Blue Lodge, and also a member of the Artisans. In politics he is a Republican, but has never been blindly partisan. He is an active member of the Methodist Church of York, of which he is a trustee; and in all of his affairs, social, business, political and religious, he is known and honored for his liberal and broad-minded views. The two magnificent silk mills in York of which he was the instigator and founder will prove enduring monuments to his memory, employing, as they do, hundreds of skilled laborers whose comfortable homes are made more easily possible through their lucrative wages, sending thousands of dollars through the avenues of trade; and no man in the community has done a better work in this direction than has Matthew Garrett Collins.

JOHN HAY WOGAN has been for more than twenty years past president of the York County Agricultural Society, and has been largely instrumental in making a national reputation for that association.

An early American ancestor of the Wogan family was John Wogan, who, on June 18, 1737, secured from John, Thomas and William Penn a grant of 318 acres of land in Lancaster county, Pa. A portion of this estate remains in the possession of the family to-day. By the will of this John Wogan, dated Dec. 20, 1747, a tract of 100 acres was bequeathed to the Protestant Church of the neighborhood “never to be sold, but always to be used for church purposes.” The Wogan family is of Scotch-Irish descent, and the first emigrants to this country settled in Maryland, but moved to Pennsylvania early in the eighteenth century. The name was originally spelled Hogens, which was modified to Vogens and many generations ago became Wogan, as at present.

George Wogan, father of John Hay, was born on the ancestral farm, and died at York in 1879, at the age of seventy-nine. He married Margaret Hay, daughter of Col. John Hay, a veteran of the war of 1812 (a sketch of whom appears elsewhere), who died at the age of eighty. She was the mother of three children, of whom Anna H. died at the age of fifty-eight, and Rebecca at the age of seven. The third child was John Hay Wogan.

John Hay Wogan was born Dec. 15, 1837, in Manchester township, York county, was sent to boarding schools in Cumberland, York and Chester counties, and completed his studies in the York County Academy. After his marriage Mr. Wogan occupied himself for thirty years with farming. He then retired to Mount Wolf, and in 1902 removed to York, where he has since made his home. For more than twenty years he has been prominently before the public as president of the York County Agricultural Society, and is widely known in business circles as president of the West York Furniture Manufacturing Company.

In 1859 Mr. Wogan married Sarah Wolf, daughter of Adam Wolf, a merchant of what is now East Manchester, York county, and to this union six children have been born, as follows: Caleb, general dealer in stocks; Anna H., wife of Charles Sayres, a merchant of York; George, a farmer, living on the homestead farm; William W., D. D. S., a graduate of the University of Baltimore, class of 1887, now practicing dentistry in York; C. Edward, D. D. S., a graduate of the University of Baltimore, class of 1889, now practicing dentistry in Carlisle, Pa.; and I. Park, superintendent of a furniture factory at Mt. Hope, and also of the factory of the West York Furniture Company.

John Hay Wogan is one of the most substantial and progressive residents of York, a keen business man and public-spirited citizen. He is a Republican in politics. While living in Manchester township he was for six years one of the board of school directors. His father was one of the organizers of the York County Agricultural Society, of which Mr. Wogan has been for many years the efficient president.

JOHN McCoy is vice-president and manager of the York Card & Paper Company, of which he was one of the principal organizers and stockholders.

Mr. McCoy bears the full patronymic of his paternal grandfather, John McCoy, who was of Scotch-Irish descent and who was a successful gardener in the city of Philadelphia, where his death occurred. There was born his son Robert, father of our subject, and he became a leading contracting plumber in that city, where he died in 1899, at the age of sixty-two years. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Wentz, was likewise born and reared in Philadelphia, and there she still maintains her home. Of the ten children of this union it is recorded that Elizabeth, Martha, Catherine and Adam died in early childhood, and, besides Mr. McCoy himself, the survivors are as follows: Hugh and Robert, who are employees of the York Card & Paper Co.; and Margaret, Mary and Anna, who remain with their mother in Philadelphia.

John McCoy, son of Robert, was born in Philadelphia, Sept. 5, 1856, and in the public schools of his native city he secured his education, though he early began to assume the practical responsibilities of life, having secured work in a local wallpaper manufactory when but ten years of age. His first position of importance was that of foreman in the paper factory of the Janeway Company, at Brunswick, N. J., where he remained five years. At the expiration of that period he was similarly employed in the works of the A. A. Yerkes Paper Company, of Philadelphia. Still in the employ of the same company, he came to York in 1887, the factory of the concern being there established in what is now known as the Codorus Paper Mill, while about three years after its locating there the business was sold to the national wallpaper trust. Shortly afterward, in 1892, Mr. McCoy associated himself with Judge W. F. Bay Stewart, of York, in the organization of the York Card & Paper Co., of which the Judge became president and Mr. McCoy vice-president and general manager. The first building utilized by the new concern, which valiantly placed itself in opposition to the trust, was that now occupied by the York Wall Paper Company, while to-day the plant occupies a large and substantial modern structure, which was specially erected for the purpose, under the personal supervision of Mr. McCoy. In the works employment is given to nearly 300 persons at the time of this writing, and the products of the vast concern, particularly in the line of wall paper, are sold in all sections of the Union, and an export trade of important scope has been established and is constantly expanding. In addition to his identification with this magnificent enterprise Mr. McCoy has signalized his progressive spirit by associating himself with other important concerns. He is president of the Cecil Paper Company, and a member of the directorates of the Norway Steel & Iron Company and the Gypsum Product Company, of Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. McCoy was formerly a director of the Security Trust Company of York, resigning this office, in 1902, to become a candidate for the city treasurership, for which he was nominated on the Republican ticket. Though York was at that time normally Democratic by a large majority he was defeated only by the narrow margin of about fifty votes. He is a stockholder in the Safety Storage Company, of York, and also in the York Knitting Mills. He is a valued member of the Royal Fire Company, of York, was chairman of the building committee which superintended the erection of the present fine engine house, and is now a trustee and one of the vice-presidents of the company. As promoter of the York Card & Paper Co., Mr. McCoy may be said to have inaugurated the industrial boom, which has not only made West York a center of industrial activity but given the entire city an impetus of pronounced order. Few citizens in recent years have done more for the advancement of the city along industrial lines.

Mr. McCoy has ever accorded allegiance to the Republican party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic order, being a member of Zeredatha Lodge, No. 451, also with the B. P. O. E. while socially he is a member of the Lafayette, the Country and the Bachelor Clubs, of York. He is held in the highest confidence and esteem in both business and social circles. Both he and his wife hold membership in the First Presbyterian Church.

On Feb. 9, 1878, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. McCoy to Miss Catherine Wallace Smith, of Stirling, Scotland, where she was born and reared, daughter of John Smith, a prominent shoe manufacturer and an influential citizen of Glasgow. Mr. and Mrs. McCoy have three children, namely: John S., who is treasurer of the York Card & Paper Co.; Elizabeth Wallace, the wife of C. H. Emig, of York; and Robert Douglas, who is preparing himself to succeed his father as manager of the York Card & Paper Company.

JOHN S. McCOY. Ours is an age of pre-eminence for the young man in business. One of the most important of the industries of the city of York is that represented by the York Card & Paper Company, of which John S. McCoy, although still on the sunny side of thirty, is secretary and treasurer. He is a son of John McCoy, the able vice-president and manager of the company above mentioned, and a member of an old and honored family.

John Smith McCoy was born in New Brunswick, N. J., Jan. 30, 1878, and was about eight years of age at the time of his parents’ removal to York, in whose public schools he secured his preliminary education completing a course in the high school, and thereafter continuing his studies in Mercersburg College. From the latter institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1897, while in 1901 he completed the course in the college department of the University of Pennsylvania, receiving the degree of B. S. Soon afterward he became identified with the executive management of the York Card & Paper Company, his father being one of the stockholders of the concern, and in 1901 he was made secretary and treasurer of the company. An idea of the responsible and exacting duties devolving upon him in this connection may be gained when it is noted the fact that the annual output of wall paper is greater than that of any other factory in the world, having reached the stupendous aggregate of twenty-five millions of rolls a year. Farther than this, however, Mr. McCoy finds demands on his time and attention as an executive officer, since he is treasurer of the York Safety Storage Company, director and secretary of the York Market Company, and secretary of the Royal Fire Company and general manager of the Cecil Paper Co. His capacity for detail work is large; he is a reliable, progressive and energetic young business man and one who has won much prestige in a minimum period. He is a master Mason, being affiliated with Zeredatha Lodge, No. 451, A. F. & A. M., and the B. P. O. E., and, in a social way, is a popular member of the Bachelor and the Country Clubs, of York. Both he and his wife are members of the First Presbyterian Church.

On May 22, 1902, Mr. McCoy was united in marriage to Miss Rose Elma Manifold, daughter of Sheriff S. M. Manifold, former general manager of the York Traction Company and the Edison Electric Light Company, who resigned those positions to become the sheriff of the county, having been elected to that office in November, 1904. Mr. and Mrs. McCoy have one son, Samuel J., who was born Aug. 13, 1903.

JOHN EDWARD VANDERSLOOT, a promising and active member of the York county Bar, was born at Glen Rock, York county, Feb. 17, 1869, son of Dr. Frederick W. and Sarah G. G. (Fife) Vandersloot. The family is of German lineage, the first progenitor in Pennsylvania having been the Rev. Frederick W. Vandersloot, who was born in Zerbst, a town in Anhalt-Dessau, a principality in Upper Saxony, Germany, in 1743. He was the only son of Rev. Frederick Wilhelm Von-der-sloot, and emigrated to Pennsylvania in 1782, his wife and family remaining in Europe. His first field of labor lay in Allen township, Northampton Co., Pa., and became known later as the “Dry Land Charge.” From 1784 to 1786 he served as the German Reformed pastor of the Goshen-happen Church, in Upper Salford township, Montgomery county. His first wife having died, he married, Jan. 29, 1784, Miss Anna Margareta Reid, oldest daughter of Jacob Reid, of Hatfield township. Mr. Vandersloot returned to Northampton county, where he died in 1803.

Rev. Frederick W. Vandersloot (III) was an eloquent and forceful preacher. He was born Nov. 11, 1775, in Dessan, Germany. After finishing his education at Heidelberg University he followed his father to Pennsylvania, where he married Catherine D. Pauli, daughter of Rev. P. R. Pauli, of Reading, Pa. From 1812 to 1818 Mr. Vandersloot was the German Reformed pastor at Goshen-happen Church and also preached inPhiladelphia, Pa., in West Virginia, and at other places, finally settling in York county, where he died Dec. 14, 1831. He was buried with his wife at Holz Schwaühm Church, his last charge.

Frederick W. Vandersloot (IV) was born in Philadelphia, Jan. 8, 1804, and, following in the footsteps of his honored ancestors, became a minister. He upheld the high reputation gained in the pulpit by his predecessors, and proved himself worthy of their mantle. His labors were confined almost exclusively to York county, where he was widely known and greatly esteemed and beloved. His charges in York were numerous, among them being Sadler’s Church, Ziegler’s, near Seven Valley, Blimyer’s Church, Zion’s Church, Springetsbury and Stahley’s Church, Lower End. At the last named charge his ministry extended over a period of forty-four years. He married Mary A. Witman, and died Sept. 11, 1878. Both are interred in Prospect Hill cemetery, York, Pa.

Dr. Frederick W. Vandersloot, the fifth of that name and the eldest son of his father, was the first in five generations to seek a professional career outside of the ministry of the German Reformed Church. Dr. Vandersloot was born in Windsor township, York county, Jan. 30, 1834, and lived to be one of the oldest physicians in York county, having been in active practice from 1855, in which year he graduated from the University of Maryland, until his death, in 1904. He married Sarah G. G. Fife, a daughter of Robert Fife, of Shrewsbury. Mrs. Vandersloot was born in Shrewsbury, Feb. 21, 1838, and was of Irish descent. She died Feb. 13, 1898, aged fifty-nine years. They reared a family of five children: Frederick W., Jr., Anna (who married John F. Kissinger), Robert F., John Edward and Lewis. Dr. Vandersloot died Jan. 13, 1904.

John Edward Vandersloot was educated in the public schools. He became a clerk in the Pennsylvania Agricultural Works, and later accepted a position with the York Dispatch as news reporter, continuing thus for several years. He acquired a knowledge of stenography and typewriting and, after leaving the Dispatch, became stenographer and clerk in the chain manufacturing establishment of J. C. Schmidt & Co., with whom he remained for a period of three years. At the expiration of that time he registered with George S. Schmidt as a law student, and was admitted to the York county Bar in October, 1893. Mr. Vandersloot’s clerical experience and his proficiency in typewriting and shorthand, as well as his legal knowledge, constitute an unusual and practical equipment for his legal duties, and have enabled him to rapidly rise in his profession.

Mr. Vandersloot has for a number of years been a member of the Duke Street Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he holds official position, and to whose extension and moral work he has given largely of his time, efforts and means. He is an earnest Republican in politics, and gives liberal support to the principles and policies of his party. He was chairman of the York County Republican organization for several years. In December, 1903, he was appointed referee in bankruptcy for York and Adams counties, succeeding John B. McPherson, who removed to Boston.

On June 5, 1895, Mr. Vandersloot was married to Miss Carolyn S. Helker, daughter of D. A. and Emily (Sayres) Helker, of York. They have two children: Charles Edwin and Sarah Emily.

JAMES GRAHAM GLESSNER, one of the leading lawyers of York, who holds the office of district attorney, was born at Lewis-
Henry Glessner and his wife were both natives of York county. He was of Swiss descent, while his wife's ancestors were of Scotch Irish origin. Henry Glessner was a painter and cabinetmaker by trade, lived a quiet and unassuming life at Lewisberry, and died Feb. 21, 1884, at the age of fifty-four years. Both Mr. and Mrs. Glessner affiliated with the Methodist Church. They became the parents of seven children.

James G. Glessner was reared in his native village and attended the common schools until he was sixteen years of age. He then taught school and afterward attended school at Lock Haven, Pa., and subsequently attended the Cumberland Valley State Normal School, Shippensburg, Pa., from which he was graduated in the class of 1885. In the ensuing year he commenced the study of law with the firm of Kell & Kell, of York, and after teaching a term of school in 1887, was admitted to the Bar of York county in the following year. Immediately after his admission to the Bar he opened an office with Silas H. Forry, and took up his residence in York, where he has since made his home. Mr. Glessner's success was immediate and emphatic and he at once became prominent in both professional and public life. He is an ardent and energetic Republican and has been actively interested in the policies of his party since early manhood. In 1890 he was elected secretary of the Republican County Committee, and held that position through two active campaigns. Upon the death of the county chairman, in 1892, Mr. Glessner at once announced himself as a candidate for the vacant position, and after a spirited contest was elected chairman. In this position he had to deal with new faces and factors in State and national politics, but acquitted himself with so much satisfaction and such undoubted ability for leadership that, during the four succeeding years, he was honored by unanimous re-election. During all these years, and especially in 1896, he fully sustained the well-earned distinction of 1892. A vigorous and untiring worker, he has shown himself amply able to meet the exigencies of political campaigning, and has, by ability and sagacity, won a high reputation as a successful Republican leader.

In 1890 Mr. Glessner's party made him its candidate for district attorney, but notwithstanding his advanced vote he was unable to overcome the large adverse majority in the county. Mr. Glessner was again nominated by the Republican party of York county for the office of district attorney, in 1904, and was triumphantly elected in the memorable campaign of November of that year, which wrested York county from Democratic control; and no voice or influence had more to do with effecting that radical change than had the voice and influence of James G. Glessner. He is a trenchant and eloquent speaker, of fine intellectual endowments, and with the marked forensic ability he has shown has reached an eminent and secure position in the legal fraternity of his county.

Mr. Glessner is a stockholder, director and vice-president of the Drovers' & Mechanics' National Bank, and is also interested as a stockholder or director in a number of other concerns. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic order, the Knights of the Golden Eagle and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a past exalted ruler of the last named order.

On June 18, 1891, Mr. Glessner was united in marriage with Joanna Bowen, daughter of Mrs. Mary M. Bowen, of Shippensburg, Pa., and two children, a son and a daughter, have been born to this union, namely: Hazel M. and Silas Forry.

H. C. Brenneman, the well-known and successful lawyer of the York county Bar, is the eldest son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Berkheimer) Brenneman, and was born in Washington township, York county, Jan. 14, 1858.

Mr. Brenneman's parents were of German extraction, and belonged to the sturdy class that have done much toward the industrial and material progress of Southern Pennsylvania. His father, Jacob Brenneman, was born in 1833, and was in early life a manufacturer of woolen goods, and afterward turned his attention to farming. He died in 1886, his wife surviving him until 1893. There were four children born to them, one of whom, the only daughter, Mary, died in infancy. The survivors are: Henry C., Martin L., and Andrew J.

Henry C. Brenneman left the public schools when sixteen years of age, and after attending Central Pennsylvania College at New Berlin, Union county, one term, entered the State Normal school at Millersville, from which he was graduated in the class of 1880. He then took a post-graduate course at Millersville, and became principal of the Adamstown public school, Lancaster county, which position he acceptably filled for one year. At the expiration of that time he was elected vice-principal of the York High school, in which he taught mathematics and history for a period of six years. In 1887 he became a candidate for, and was elected to, the superintendency of schools in York county, and his conduct of educational affairs during his first incumbency was such that he was unanimously re-elected in 1890.

Toward the close of his second term as county superintendent, Mr. Brenneman concluded to leave the educational field in which he had been so conspicuously successful as teacher and superintendent, to take up the profession of law. He registered as a law student in the office of N. Sargent Ross, Esq., and was duly admitted to practice in August, 1895. Shortly after his admission, a partnership was formed with his former preceptor, Mr. Ross, which resulted in the present legal firm of Ross & Brenneman, one of the leading law firms of York county. A few months after entering into practice Mr. Brenneman was appointed county solicitor, a position which he held for five years. On Jan. 1, 1906, he was again elected county solicitor. Politically he is a Democrat, and has been identified with the active work of his party. He is a member of the Lafayette Social Club, Royal Fire Co. No. 6, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Improved Order of Heptasops, Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks, Knights of Pythias, and is a high degree Mason. He is a past officer of York Lodge No. 266, Free and Accepted Masons; Howell Chapter, No. 199, Royal Arch Masons; York Commandery No. 21, Knights Templar; Harrisburg Consistory; and Lulu Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine of Philadelphia. He is past master, past high priest, and past eminent commander in the Masonic fraternity.

On May 21, 1891, Mr. Brenneman was united in marriage with Ida Lee Sanks, daughter of Rev. James Sanks, deceased.

AUGUSTUS LOUCKS, for many years an active factor in the development of York, and for over four years from Nov. 1, 1901, postmaster of the city, is one of the few to whom were presented by the State of Pennsylvania “Medals of Honor” in recognition of their prompt enlistment as defenders of the flag in the dark days when treason and rebellion were rampant throughout the land. Mr. Loucks was on the roll the second day after the call, and on the 10th of April was doing guard duty on the Northern Central railroad in Maryland. The patriotism, which was his moving spring of action, then, still burns with unabated fervor, as he regards with a pardonable pride the glorious country which he was privileged to aid in keeping intact.

Germany was the ancestral home of the Loucks, the original emigrant, Peter Loucks, leaving the Palatinate, in the Fatherland, and at Rotterdam embarking on board the ship “Nancy and Friendship,” in June, 1738, for the great unknown western land. He arrived in New York, according to record on Sept. 20, 1738, later locating in Tulpehocken township, Berks Co., Pa., where he became an extensive land owner. The maternal great-great-grandfather of Mr. Loucks, Philip Frederick Eichelberger, came from Ittlingen, near Sinsheim, Grand Duchy of Baden, now in the empire of Germany. He set sail on June 22, 1728, in the ship “Albany” from Rotterdam, Holland, and landed at Philadelphia Sept. 4th of the same year, afterward locating in York county.

Caspar Loucks, the grandfather of Augustus, came to York county in 1800 and settled on a landed estate in Manchester (now West Manchester) township, where he passed the remainder of his life. Here on the old homestead was reared Peter Loucks, the father of Augustus, and to the same place he brought his bride, whose maiden name was Maria Eichelberger, and whose father, William Eichelberger, owned and lived on the farm now known as the York county fair grounds. To the marriage of Peter Loucks and his wife Maria five children were born, two of whom are now living: Caspar and Augustus, the former a retired farmer whose residence is North Newberry street, York.
Augustus Loucks was born on the old homestead in West Manchester township, York county, April 7, 1840. His education was received in the schools of his home district, and he eagerly grasped every opportunity that offered for the increase of his knowledge. After a few years spent in farming on the old home place, he left the homestead and engaged in business for himself. Locating in York, on the corner of Market and Penn streets, he started in the business of general merchandising, in which he continued for fifteen years. Leaving that business in 1879, in 1880 Mr. Loucks became the superintendent of the “York Chariot Line,” as the street conveyances at that time were called. He engaged in this work about three years, resigning when the present street railway system was established, when he retired from business. In 1888 he was elected assessor in the Fifth (now Eleventh) ward and served one term; in 1895 he was honored by being chosen commissioner of highways for the city of York, resigning in the spring of 1896, and afterward being elected alderman of the Eleventh ward. His incumbency of this position lasted five years, during which period he served his ward most faithfully. In 1901 President Roosevelt appointed Mr. Loucks postmaster of the city of York, in which office he served Uncle Sam most faithfully, and to the general satisfaction, until February, 1906.

Mr. Loucks was married to Miss Emma L. Zeigler, a daughter of the late Rev. Daniel Zeigler, of the Reformed Church. To this marriage six children were born, all of whom, with the devoted mother, have passed into the “Better Land.” The children were: Daniel Henry, Charles A., Eva, Nettie H., Grace and Mary. All of them died when very young except Nettie, who entered into rest in 1892, at the most interesting age of sixteen years. The mother’s death occurred some ten years previous to that of her little daughter, on Jan. 12, 1882.

If there is any one thing more than another of which Mr. Loucks has reason to be proud it is the fact that he voluntarily became one of the defenders of his country at the opening of the Civil War. On April 16, 1861, one day after Lincoln’s call to arms, he enlisted in Company K, 2d Pa. Vol. Infty., and was notified by Gov. Andrew G. Curtin to report for duty on April 17th. So, at the age of twenty-one, he found himself placed on guard duty along the line of the Northern Central railroad in Maryland. He enlisted for three months and at the end of that period received an honorable discharge at Harrisburg, on July 25, 1861. While in the service he contracted a serious illness, and as a result for many months was entirely incapacitated; in fact, he has never fully recovered from his disability. Mr. Loucks, as has been intimated, is the proud possessor of a medal of honor given him by the State of Pennsylvania, for having been one of the “First Defenders.” He is a member of Sedgwick Post, No. 37, G. A. R. In politics he is an earnest worker in the ranks of the Republican party, and in religion, belongs to the Reformed Church. Augustus Loucks was not permitted to serve the entire four years of the Civil war, but showed the true ring of patriotism and did his duty well. His life has been that of a loyal American citizen, and as such he is greatly esteemed in the city of York.

JEREMIAH Z. HILDEBRAND is another of the strong men of Pennsylvania who have risen into prominence through the sheer force of their own industry and ambitions. He was born Jan. 4, 1841, and comes from one of the very old families of this part of the State. His great-grandfather was Casper Hildebrand, a resident of this part of the State during the war of the Revolution, and a man of wealth. During the war of 1812 his son Casper was a resident of Springfield township, where he owned a farm. He had the following children: One daughter who married Daniel Walter; Frederick: John; Daniel and Henry, soldiers in the war of 1812; Peter; Casper, and Joseph.

Daniel Hildebrand, the grandfather of Jeremiah Z., was born in Springfield township, where he was reared, and lived there until his death. He was a prosperous man of his day and married Margaret Pflieger, who was born in North Codorus township. They had these children: William; Joseph, a shoemaker and farmer; Manasses, a wheelwright; Daniel, a shoemaker; Caroline, who married John Ehrhart; and Rebecca, who married Jacob Hamm.

William Hildebrand was born in 1816 and his death occurred in April, 1882. He was a shoemaker by trade, but most of his life was spent in farming, first in Washington township, and later in Springfield township, where he owned and operated a farm of 100 acres. He was a member of the German Reformed Church of which his parents were also members. He married Miss Catherine Zellers, who was born in North Codorus township, in 1818, daughter of Daniel Zellers, and her death occurred in 1901. She became the mother of the following children: Jeremiah Z., our subject; Catherine, who died in childhood; William, who died in January, 1881, in Kansas, where he had followed farming; and Ida, who married E. R. Krout, of Loganville.

Jeremiah Z. Hildebrand was born in 1841, in Springfield township, from where his parents moved to Washington township, York county, where he remained fourteen years, at the end of that time returning to Springfield township. He received his education in the York county schools, the York County Academy, and at Cottage Hill College, and meantime, when in his seventeenth year, began teaching school. By teaching, which he followed ten terms, he earned the money which carried him through the academy and college. In 1869 Mr. Hildebrand embarked in the mercantile business at Glatfelter Station, and from there removed to Wellsville, where he spent two years in a general store. He then located in Goldsboro, where he was for five years engaged in a mercantile line. He then spent five months in York, returning to Wellsville for two years, after which he returned to Goldsboro and purchased property upon which he built a residence and storeroom. Here he conducted a general merchandise establishment until 1885, in that year retiring from active business to live in York. For three years he lived in the Fifth ward, after which he located in the Ninth ward, where he has since made his home. Mr. Hildebrand owns a fine farm in West Manchester township, which he operated for many years, the management of which he has lately given up. He takes a considerable interest in fruit culture.

Since 1856 Mr. Hildebrand has been interested in politics. He has been very active in the work of the Democratic party, and in April, 1902, was appointed to fill a vacancy in the office of county commissioner, being elected the same fall for the term of three years. He has made his presence felt on the board, and believes in honest dealing in both public and private life, attributing his success to honesty in all matters.

Mr. Hildebrand was married Sept. 17, 1865, to Miss Lovina Holtzapple, daughter of Adam Holtzapple. Mrs. Hildebrand was born in West Manchester township, and became the mother of two children: Martha died in childhood; Ida Victoria became the wife of Daily Buser, a clerk in West's mercantile establishment, and they had four children, Jeremiah W., Philip (deceased), Richard F., and Norman (deceased). Mr. Hildebrand has been active in church work in this section, being a charter member of Grace Reformed Church of York, and serving on the official board for a number of years. He and his wife reside at No. 540 West Market street, York, and are highly respected in that city.

JOHN FERDINAND KLINEDEST, M. D., was born in York Dec. 27, 1866, and received his early education in the public schools. As a youth he obtained employment in a drug store, and after two years there entered the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, where he spent a year in study. He then began the study of medicine with Dr. Jacob Hay, and entered the medical department of the University of Maryland, in Baltimore, from which he was graduated April 20, 1889. He soon established himself in practice in York, making a specialty of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. Great success has attended his work, and he has established a large practice. On April 20, 1898, Dr. Klinedinst married Christine Gminder, whose father, Jacob, a manufacturer of military goods, died in 1900. Three children have been born to this union, as follows: Herman W., Margaret E. and Helen.

Dr. Klinedinst is not only a skillful and popular physician, but an active citizen and earnest church member. He is a member and treasurer of the York County Medical Society, and a member of the State and the American Medical Associations. He is an ex-member of the board of pension examiners, on which he served five years; and is eye, ear and throat surgeon for the York hospital. He has served several years as a member of the board of school control of York. He is a member of St.
Paul's Lutheran Church, in the work of which he is actively interested.

CHARLES A. MAY, attorney-at-law, is a native of York county, and has been practicing law in York for the past two years. He is of Scotch-Irish ancestry, a strain to which York county owes much of its best citizenship now as in earlier times.

Charles A. May was born in Hanover, York county, Oct. 5, 1878, son of Noah C. and Rosa (Gallatin) May. His mother's mother was Anna May Spangler, a member of the large and influential family whose history is recorded in the interesting and voluminous publication, "Spangler's Annals." To Noah C. and Rosa (Gallatin) May, were born three children, as follows: Charles A.; John Luther, a student in the State College; and Edna Blanche, a member of the class of 1905, York high school.

Charles A. May went through the grammar and high schools of York, graduating from the latter in the class of 1896, after which he attended the York County Academy. He began the study of law in the office of Niles & Neff in 1899, and was admitted to the York county Bar, as practicing attorney, Dec. 22, 1902. He has since been admitted to the Supreme Court practice. Mr. May is prominent in fraternal and social circles, being a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Royal Arcanum; and York Lodge No. 213, B. P. O. E. He also belongs to the Riverside Outing Club, the Calumet Club, and the York County Historical Society. He belongs to the Union Lutheran Church. In politics, he, like his father, is a stanch Republican. His father has for sometime been alderman of the Fifth ward of York.

JOHN EDGAR SMALL, who is a well known attorney of York, and active in the social and professional life of that city, comes of a family that has long been influential in York county. His father was John H. Small, who died July 11, 1902, president of the Billmeyer & Small Company, a firm of car builders of extensive reputation. John H. Small was a son of Henry Small, a lumber merchant who traded as H. Small & Sons. He was a member of the First Presbyterian Church, and was president of the board of trustees for many years; was vice-president of the First National Bank for many years; was a director of the Mexican National Railway Company, and of the Keystone Coal Company for many years, and was identified with many other prominent enterprises. Mr. Small was thrice married, his third wife being Margaret A. McKinnon, a daughter of Michael McKinnon, a farmer and tailor of Chanceford township, York county. The only child born of Mr. Small's first marriage was Henry J., and Maggie H. was born of the second union. The former studied with Liszt and became a professor in the Leipzig Conservatory of Music. He married in Germany, where he died at the early age of thirty-four, after a ten years' residence, leaving a widow and one child. Maggie H. Small first married Walter Spahr, and her son, H. S. Spahr, is a student in the Belmont School in California. She contracted a second marriage in November, 1904, with J. C. Bannister, of California. The children of John H. and Margaret A. (McKinnon) Small were as follows: Mabel, wife of Walter F. Myers, member of the firm of T. A. Myers & Co., of York, and president of the York Valley Lime Company; Fred M., treasurer and general manager of the York Candy Manufacturing Company; Catherine E. (a graduate of York Collegiate Institute) and Lucy Logue, both living at home; and John Edgar.

John Edgar Small was born in York Dec. 3, 1874, and received his early education in York Collegiate Institute. He attended the Hill school at Pottstown, and then entered the law department of Yale University, from which he graduated in 1897. He was at once admitted to legal practice in both the lower and Supreme courts of Connecticut, and in 1898 was admitted to the Bar of York county, and the Supreme court of Pennsylvania. Mr. Small is secretary of the York Valley Lime Company, is a member of the Country Club, and a member and secretary of the Outdoor Club. In politics he is a Republican. He is connected with the First Presbyterian Church of York, and actively interested in the Sunday-school, in which he is a teacher.

KELL. The Kell family of York was established in that city in 1856, by James Kell, a native of Youngstown, Westmoreland Co., Pa. Mr. Kell was born Dec. 14, 1828, his parents, Samuel and Margaret (Mears) Kell, being of Scotch-Irish descent. His mother was a native of Franklin county, Pa., where much of his youth was passed. After coming to York Mr. Kell taught school for several years, then read law with Henry L. Fisher, Esq., and was admitted to the Bar Jan. 10, 1862. From that time until within a few months before his death June 4, 1899, he was engaged in the successful practice of his profession.

James Kell married, March 19, 1862, Jane Elizabeth Fischer, daughter of Dr. John Frey Fischer, of York. Mrs. Kell is still living in the home at No. 134 North George street, where she was born March 19, 1837. She is one of the few persons in York, of her age, who have lived a whole lifetime in the same house, and she has seen the neighborhood change from a residence district to one given almost entirely to business houses. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Kell are as follows: John Fischer; James Alexander; Helen M., a teacher in the Children's Home; Mary C., of Washington, D. C.; William S., of Philadelphia; Alfred M., engaged in the law office of his brother (John Fischer); Jane F., a teacher in the York public schools; and Eliza K.

Mr. Kell had two sisters: Rachel K., wife of Hugh W. McCall, Esq., mother of James St. Clair McCall, the present mayor of York, and Mary E., who taught in the York high school from the time of its organization in September, 1870, until the spring of 1904; for some years prior to her retirement, Miss Kell was the instructor in German.

For forty years prior to 1899 James Kell was a prominent figure in the public affairs of York. He was for many years the Republican leader in the county, and at different times occupied various public offices. During the late sixties he was president of the Union Fire Engine Company on North George street. He was at one time school director of the old North ward school district; and was one of the original trustees of the Children's Home (founded in 1865) and of the York Collegiate Institute (established in 1873), organizations which he continued to serve until his death. He was the Republican nominee for additional law judge in 1875, at the first election held for that office, when the successful candidate was Hon. Pere L. Wickes. In 1877, he was appointed Register of Wills of York county by Gov. Hartranft; and he was postmaster at York from 1884 to 1888. Fraternally he was connected with York Lodge, No. 266, Free and Accepted Masons, of which he was past master. He and all his family were members of the First Presbyterian Church of York.

John Fischer Kell, eldest son of James Kell, was born at the family home in York, Jan. 30, 1863. He attended the public schools, and took supplementary studies at York Collegiate Institute, after which he read law with his father. He was admitted to the Bar in York county July 14, 1884, and later admitted to practice in the Supreme, Superior and United States Courts.

On April 19, 1888, Mr. Kell married Ella Louisa Brown, daughter of John M. Brown, of the firm of Brown & Smyser, retail coal and lumber dealers. The one child of this union is John Fischer, Jr., who is at school. Mr. Kell is a successful lawyer, and enjoys a large and lucrative practice. He is a man of kindly and affable disposition, always ready to encourage and assist those less fortunate than himself.

James Alexander Kell, second son of James Kell, was born June 22, 1866, and received his early education in the York public schools. He was graduated from York Collegiate Institute in 1883, studied law in his father's office, and was admitted to the York county Bar Nov. 11, 1890. In 1892 he entered the employ of the Bradstreet Mercantile Agency, with whom he remained nine years. He was chiefly engaged in the business of this company in Philadelphia, but from 1895 to 1897 was superintendent of the Augusta, Ga., office. He is now a resident of Germantown, Philadelphia, where he is connected with the Title and Trust Department of the Germantown Trust Company.

Mr. Kell married June 11, 1903, Anne Elmen Garrett, daughter of Isaac P. and Sarah E. Garrett, of Lansdowne, Delaware Co., Pa., members of the Society of Friends. Mr. Kell is a member of Social Lodge No. 1, Masons, of Augusta, Ga. He belongs to the Pennsylvania Society of Sons of the Revolution, and is a member of the Historical Society of York County.
ALFRED MEARS KELL, a rising young business man of York, who fills the position of manager of the collection department, for his brother, John Fischer Kell, mention of whom precedes, was born July 18, 1876, in York, son of James Kell, Esq.

After finishing his education Alfred M. Kell spent one year in the office of his father, after which he engaged in patternmaking with Broomell, Schmidt & Steacy, with whom he remained three and one-half years, at the end of which time he became connected with the York Safe Works, resigning his position there to go to Harrisburg. Returning to York, Mr. Kell entered upon his duties as collector in the law offices of his brothers, where in addition to his collection work he pursues the study of the law.

Fraternally Mr. Kell is affiliated with Zeddatha Lodge, No. 451, F. & A. M.; with Willis Council, No. 508, Royal Archanum; and with York Lodge, No. 213, B. P. O. Elks. He is a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church. In politics he favors the Republican party.

Mr. Kell married, Oct. 14, 1903, Miss Edna Agnue Geesey, daughter of Charles Geesey, a prominent member of the Blair county Bar. Mr. Kell is well known throughout York and is highly regarded for his many estimable traits of character.

JOHN FISCHER. Among the substantial citizens of "Yorktown" during the Revolutionary period was John Fischer, who was born in Pfeffing, Swabia, Germany, June 4, 1736, emigrated to America about 1749, and removed to York, Pa., about 1756. He resided at No. 7 (now Nos. 15-17) North George street where he died Dec. 8, 1808. He was married in Baltimore, Md., July 19, 1766, to Barbara Lightner (daughter of Adam Lightner and Anna Barbara Beard), who was born at No. 13 North George street, York, Pa., Dec. 7, 1749, and died Dec. 24, 1832. The remains of John Fischer and his wife are buried in Zion Lutheran Churchyard, directly in the rear of the York county court house.

Mr. Fischer was of an inventive turn of mind, possessed considerable mechanical ability, was a carver in wood and a painter of merit; but his business was that of manufacturing clocks, and there are still to be found in many homes of York specimens of his handicraft, familiarly known as "grandfather" clocks. As he lived within a few yards of the old court house in Center Square, where the Continental Congress met in 1777, during the British occupancy of Philadelphia, he became acquainted with prominent men who visited the town at that period, among others General Gibbon and Count Pulaski, who presented him with substantial tokens of their regard, which are still in the possession of the family. He was a strong-minded man, of many attainments. He had three children, viz.: George, John and Charles F.

(1) George Fischer married Mary M. Frey, of Lancaster, Pa., and had ten children, whose descendants are living in different parts of the country.

(2) John Fischer, born May 10, 1771, married Catharine Frey, of Lancaster, Pa. He was a successful physician, and lived at No. 21 North George street, where he died Feb. 14, 1832. His wife was born Feb. 22, 1776, and died Aug. 6, 1855. Their children were: Jacob A. Fischer, a lawyer by profession, admitted to the York County Bar, March 28, 1822, never married. E. Eliza Fischer married George P. Kurtz, and was the mother of Miss Catharine Fischer Kurtz and Miss Amelia Margaret Kurtz, who still live at the old homestead on North George street. Dr. John Frey Fischer, born April 24, 1808, a graduate of Jefferson Medical College, was a physician of local prominence, a well-read man generally, and active in local affairs. He married Mary Ann Cobean, who was born in Gettysburg, Pa., Nov. 13, 1810. He died Jan. 21, 1862, as a result of injuries received by the fall of a large derrick which was used in raising the large flag-pole in Center Square, York, April 29, 1861. His wife died Feb. 11, 1847. Dr. John F. Fischer was the father of Mrs. Maria Dritt Lochman, widow of Dr. Luther M. Lochman; Mrs. Jane F. Kell, widow of James Kell, Esq., of York; and William C. Fischer, deceased.

(3) Charles F. Fischer, born Aug. 3, 1783, was in the copper-smithing business, which was quite an extensive trade in York in those days. He died Aug. 26, 1842. His wife was Hellenah Dorothy Spangler, who was born June 24, 1789, and died May 15, 1842. They had three children, but all their descendants are dead except their grandson, Charles F. Demuth, of Des Moines, Iowa.

There are now no descendants of John Fischer, clockmaker, living in York, Pa., bearing the surname of Fischer, but his great-granddaughters, the Misses Kurtz, Mrs. Lochman and Mrs. Kell, above named, are residents here.

SPENCER DOYLE WAREHEIM is a native of Glen Rock, Pa., and was born Oct. 6, 1877. His paternal grandparents, George Wareheim and Abie (Armacost) Wareheim, lived on a farm in Carroll county, Md., where his father, Edward A. Wareheim, was born. His great-grandfather, Edward Armacost, was a veteran of the War of 1812, being engaged in the defense of Baltimore. His father, after graduating at the New York Homoeopathic Medical College and Hospital, removed to Glen Rock, Pa., where he practiced his profession until his death, on July 13, 1898.

His maternal grandparents, Jonathan Faust and Elizabeth (Deveney) Faust, were residents of Pennsylvania, having first lived in Shrewsbury township, York county, and later at Glen Rock.

To the marriage of Edward A. and Achsah (Faust) Wareheim five children were born; two of these, Carroll and Abie, died in infancy; those living are: Spencer D., the subject of this sketch; Guernsey G., a graduate from the Dental Department of the University of Maryland, and now a practitioner of dentistry in Baltimore; and Grover Faust, a student at Franklin and Marshall College, at Lancaster, Pa., class of 1906.

Spencer Doyle Wareheim received his preliminary education in the public schools of Glen Rock and the York Collegiate Institute at York, Pa., later attending Franklin and Marshall College, at Lancaster, Pa. He graduated from the latter institution as one of the ten honor men, in the class of 1890. He then attended the Harvard Law School, and later read with Joseph R. Strawbridge, at York, Pa. He was admitted to practice on Jan. 18, 1904.

In politics our subject is a Democrat. Of fraternal orders he affiliates with the Masons. His religious persuasion is Lutheran.

DAVID S. COOK, of Wrightsville, York county, is a well-to-do iron manufacturer with large business interests in different places, and he is a prominent man in social, fraternal and church circles.

James Cook, father of David S., was born in Chester county, Pa., Sept. 24, 1811. He had few opportunities, and began his life like hundreds of other poor boys. He learned the blacksmith's trade in Wilmington, Del., where Messrs. Harlan and Hollingsworth, of the afterward noted firm of Harlan & Hollingsworth, of Wilmington, were apprentices with him. Mr. Cook married, in Chester county, Martha Stackhouse, of an old family of Morristown, N. J., where her girlhood was spent. Mrs. Cook's father was David Stackhouse, a farmer, who spent his later life in Chester county, Pa. He lived and died a Quaker, and is buried in the New Garden cemetery in Chester county, belonging to one of the largest Quaker congregations in Pennsylvania.

In 1856 James Cook moved his family to Wrightsville, where he bought the Baker interests in the firm of Baker, Hillis & Co., lime burners. Later Mr. Cook bought still larger interests in the concern, which did business for many years under the firm name of Cook & Hillis. In those days the only means of transportation for merchandise of any sort was by canal boat. Mr. Cook continued to be actively engaged in business until 1873, and his death occurred in 1876, when he was sixty-four years of age. His wife lived to be ninety-two years old, and her twin sister, Mary, who made a home with her, lived to the age of ninety-three. Mr. and Mrs. Cook were brought up in the Quaker faith, and adhered to it through life. Mr. Cook was an old time Whig, and later a Democrat; he served as school director for several years. He was one of the organizers of the Wrightsville Bank, of which he was a director many years. His children were: Mary, who died at the age of nine; and David S., of this sketch.

David S. Cook was born in Chester county, near Wilmington, Del., in October, 1838, and when he was eighteen his parents moved to Wrightsville. He attended school in Chester county and Millersville, and was graduated from the Millersville Normal School with the class of 1860. His preceptor was Prof. J. P. Wickersham, a cousin of his father's, who for many years was state superintendent of schools. On leaving school Mr. Cook entered the employ of his father in Wrightsville, but soon branched out for himself as a coal merchant. He handled Wyoming Valley coal, which was all transported by canal boat. Later he bought out his father’s partner, Jesse Hills, of Havre de Grace, Md., and after his father’s death continued to carry on the business alone for some time. He then formed a partnership with the Kerr brothers and Mr. Weitzel, which continued a number of years. The Wrightsville Iron Company, William McConkey, president, and David S. Cook, secretary and general manager, was organized in 1866. Mr. Cook superintended the building of the plant, and remained in the business until 1872. He then went to Botetourt county, Va., and built a smelting furnace; this he soon sold, and built another, and the town of Glen Wilton, Va., named in honor of Mr. Cook’s son of that name, has grown up around the industry thus established, and in which Mr. Cook is still actively interested. The Glen Wilton plant was incorporated in 1900, under the laws of New Jersey, Mr. Cook being president, and his son, Wilton, secretary and treasurer. Mr. Cook has large interests also in the Susquehanna Casting Co., which he and his nephew, Ralph Wilton, established in the fall of 1899.

Mr. Cook married (first) in Wrightsville, Caroline, daughter of Henry Wilton, and they had two children; Mary, who died when four years old; and Wilton. Wilton Cook was born in Wrightsville in 1868, attended the public schools, and Prof. Meig’s school at Pottstown, Pa., became clerk in his father’s employ, and then a partner. He married Ora Heppenstall, and their one living child is Marion.

Mr. Cook married (second) Margaret McConkey, of Wrightsville, daughter of William and sister of Senator E. K. McConkey, of York (a sketch of whom appears elsewhere). No children have been born to this union. Mr. Cook has been for ten years president of the Wrightsville Bank, of which he is an original stockholder; he and his father were among the organizers of this bank, and both were directors. Mr. Cook is connected with Riverside Lodge, No. 503, F. & A. M., Wrightsville; the Chapter and the Commandery, Columbia. He joined the chapter in 1872, and the commandery the following year. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is chairman of the board of trustees.

REINHARDT DEMPWOLF. A firm well and favorably known throughout eastern Pennsylvania and Maryland is that of Dempwolf Brothers, architects, of York. Many monuments to their genius exist throughout the territory contiguous to York, and their work has also received recognition in other States. Both gentlemen are natives of Germany, but were reared in York, where their parents settled in 1867. Their father, Charles Dempwolf, was a millwright by occupation. He married Miss Wilhelmina Beaker, of Germany, and they came from Germany to America in 1867, settling in York, where the father died in 1882, at the age of sixty-seven; the mother’s death occurred some time before.

Reinhardt Dempwolf was born in Germany in 1861. His education was received in the York County Academy and the York College Institute. Later he went to Philadelphia, where he studied sculpture for three years, and after returning to York, where he spent a year or so, Mr. Dempwolf decided to complete his education in Europe. So in Paris, the mecca of American students of art, he took up the study of architecture, remaining in that city four years. After finishing his work there he returned to York, where he became an assistant to his brother, a well-known architect, in whose business he is now established.

In 1896 Mr. Dempwolf was united in marriage with Miss Nellie Scharzerberger, the elder daughter of a well-known retired farmer, Edward Scharzerberger, of York county.

Reinhardt Dempwolf is a gentleman of pleasant and engaging personality and is a member of society much thought of in York. He is very popular among the young people and has taken a decided interest in their welfare during the years past. In his position as vice-president of the Y. M. C. A. for the last ten years he has wielded a powerful influence for good among the young men, and as a teacher in the Sunday-school of Christ Lutheran Church he has also done much to foster and strengthen the high moral tone of the community. He takes but little interest in politics, but supports the Democratic party with his vote and is pleased to aid in its success.

JONATHAN JESSOP. There are few men in York better or more favorably known than Jonathan Jessop. A descendant of one of her oldest and most honorable families, a veteran of the Civil war, postmaster of the city for eighteen years immediately following that great event, and for the past twenty years one of the leading insurance men of the city, he combines points which make him a character almost inseparable from the city itself.

Mr. Jessop is not able to give names when speaking of the earlier members of the family, but he has knowledge of their having been in America from the earliest Colonial times, and having resided just prior to the Revolutionary war in the vicinity of Guilford Court House, N. C. Here his great-grandfather owned a farm, on which was fought the battle known in history as the battle of Guilford Court House, which event was witnessed by his grandfather, Jonathan, then a lad in his teens. Soon after this battle it appears that Jonathan left home and came to York county, Pa., where he was apprenticed to a famous clockmaker by the name of Samuel Kirk, some of whose "grandfather's clocks" are yet to be found in the country. Jonathan Jessop became famous as a clockmaker, also, and passed the remainder of his days in the county engaged in that occupation. He lived to the extreme old age of ninety years, dying in 1856.

Edward Jessop, son of Jonathan, was a prosperous farmer of the county, and also had extensive business interests in Baltimore, Md., being interested in a hardware store there, and making weekly visits to that point. He married Mary H. Newbold, daughter of Samuel Newbold, a farmer of Philadelphia county. To this marriage ten children were born, one of whom, William, died at the age of twenty-one years, and Frank (married), died in 1878. Those living are as follows: Elizabeth, wife of A. B. Farquhar, the widely known manufacturer of York; Charles, who has charge of an ice plant at Birmingham, Ala.; Jonathan, subject of this sketch; Samuel, retired; Hannah, wife of Isaac Gover, of Boston, Mass.; Caroline, widow of Samuel I. Adams, formerly of the firm of Myers, Adams & Co. of York; Alfred, superintendent of the plow department of the Columbus (Ga.) Iron Company; and Jeanette, wife of Judson Kuney, of Hornbrook, Cal., division superintendent of the railroad running from San Francisco to Portland, Oregon.

Jonathan Jessop was born in Baltimore, May 12, 1842, but was reared in York county. He was given a good education, completing courses at the York Academy, after which he went to Baltimore and for a time was employed in his father's store. Returning to York county he worked on the home farm until he entered the army. This was in 1863, just as he had reached his majority. He joined the 187th P. V. I., as second Lieutenant of Company B., and was serving in this position before Petersburg when the loss of a leg, on June 18, 1864, necessitated his discharge from the army. Having thus sealed his loyalty to the flag by the giving of his life's blood, Mr. Jessop returned home, and, after recuperating his strength, took up the burden of life as an employee in the Pennsylvania Agricultural Works. However, he was not long connected with this company, as in 1865 he received from President Johnson the appointment of postmaster of York. For eighteen years he performed the duties of this office faithfully and well. In 1884 Mr. Jessop, on leaving the post-office, engaged in the real estate and insurance business, having purchased that business from Kirk White.

Mr. Jessop was married in October, 1870, to Anna M. Lochman, daughter of the late Rev. A. H. Lochman, D. D., who for fifty years was pastor of Christ Lutheran Church of York. To this union were born five children: John L., with the Carnegie Steel Company, at Homestead, Pa.; Mary Emily and Susan H., both at home; Edward, with the Pennsylvania Railway Company, in Altoona, Pa.; and George A., with the S. Morgan Smith's Sons Company waterwheel manufacturers. Fraternally Mr. Jessop affiliates with the Heptasophs and the Royal Arcanum. His religious views are those embodied in the Quaker faith. He is, of course, a dyed-in-the-wool Republican, and as such was elected to the common council of York from the Second ward, serving one term. The life which he has lived in York has been filled with earnest devotion to duty, his charity, his kindliness of heart and his sympathetic helpfulness having become proverbial.

CHARLES F. KEECH. Realty is the basis of all security, and the basis of security in real estate transactions is found in the knowledge and probity of those through whom they are conducted. Holding, by reason of prudence, integrity and signal ability, a position of prominence among the real estate dealers and conveyancers of York county, Mr. Keech may be considered one of the representative business men of the city of York. He is a native of York county, a member of one of its old and honored families, and a popular alderman.

Charles F. Keech was born on the home farm, in York township, York Co., Pa., Jan. 27, 1848, and is a son of John S. and Mary (Weitkamp) Keech, the former of whom was born in Chester county, this State, March 25, 1824, while the latter was a native of York county, her birthyear being 1831. Her father, Henry Weitkamp, was one of the sterling pioneers of the county. The father of Charles F. Keech came to York county in his youth and eventually became one of the substantial farmers and influential citizens of York township, where he served for fifty years as justice of the peace. In politics he was a stalwart Democrat, while both he and his wife were members of the Moravian Church. Her death occurred in 1900. Of the nine children born to them all are living.

Charles F. Keech was reared on the home farm, and after completing the curriculum of the township schools entered the York County Academy, at the county seat, where he continued his studies for two years, after which he was for one year a student in the Cottage Hill Normal School, where he duly prepared himself for successful pedagogic work. After leaving the Normal he taught in the public schools and followed this vocation for ten successive terms, five of which were passed in the schools of his native county. He made an excellent record in the educational field and continued to teach until 1884. In the year named he established his present business in the city of York, where he has built up a flourishing enterprise in the handling of real estate of all kinds, having at all times many desirable investments represented on his books. He also makes a specialty of conveyancing, the collection of rentals, etc. In politics Mr. Keech is an uncompromising advocate of Democracy and has taken a zealous interest and an influential part in the furtherance of its cause. In 1884 he was chosen to the office of justice of the peace, since which year he has been continuously elected to that position. He has been selected four times to represent the 8th ward as alderman, securing a large and gratifying majority on each occasion, his last term expiring in May, 1906.

On May 10, 1868, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Keech to Miss Amelia E. Immel, who was born and reared in York county, daughter of John and Mary Immel, residents of Spring Garden township, where Mr. Immel is a substantial and influential farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Keech have seven children, namely: John L., farming on the old homestead at Spry, York township; Robert R., with Morgan E. Gipe; Morgan S., with the Rapid Transit Company in Philadelphia; Leonard H., with McClellan & Gotwalt; Nevin H., who served in the Spanish-American war, at Porto Rico, and now a stone-cutter in York; Ralph Ward, with McLean Bros., and Mary Edith, at home.

WILLIAM SHEARER WANNER is prominently engaged in the leaf tobacco trade in York, Pa. He was born in Ohio, Nov., 5, 1856, and is a brother of Nevin M. Wanner, Esq., whose sketch will be found elsewhere in this volume.

William S. Wanner received his education in the public schools of York, to which city his people had removed. His first occupation was clerking for P. A. & S. Small, and his next position was that of mailing clerk in the postoffice, under James B. Small. After filling that office with great efficiency for four years he engaged in the leaf tobacco trade. This was in August, 1903, and the business has since grown to fine proportions. Mr. Wanner has his sample room and office in the Small building, on East Market street, and his store room, with a capacity of three hundred cases, is on Mason alley. He is also interested in a packing house in Ohio, dealing, as he does, almost exclusively in Western tobaccos.

Mr. Wanner was married Nov. 20, 1884, to Carrie Stair, daughter of Philip Stair, deceased, who was a well-known lumber merchant of York. Three children were born to this union: Ethel, a graduate of the York high school; Myra, at the York high school, class of 1907; and William S., Jr., also at school. Mr. Wanner, who is a most genial gentleman, is connected fraternally with the Artisans and the Royal Archunum. His religious affiliations are with the Episcopal Church. In politics he is a Democrat.
CHARLES S. WHITE, a well-known and efficient detective in Pennsylvania, is a son of T. Kirk White, who was born in Maryland.

Mr. White's father located in York, where he became state agent of the Phoenix Assurance Company, of London, for the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and Pennsylvania. He established the firm of White & Jessop, insurance agents. Mr. White died Jan. 2, 1901, aged over seventy-six years, and his partner, Jonathan Jessop, continued the business, particular reference to whom will be found elsewhere. Charles S. White's mother was Susan Jane Smith, of Strasburg, Lancaster county, who died in 1896, aged seventy-two years. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. T. Kirk White were: Mary A., who was the wife of Thomas F. Owen, of York, and is deceased; Walter B., an insurance agent; George C., a traveling man, of Baltimore, Md.; Harry C., of Harrisburg, a detective; and Charles S., of York, Pennsylvania.

Charles Smith White was born April 12, 1862, in York, was educated in the Collegiate Institute and the York County Academy, and after leaving school learned upholstering, pursuing that business for ten years. His next venture was in the theatrical business, and after five years on the stage as a song and dance man, and Irish comedian, Mr. White became a commercial traveler for four years. In April, 1898, he established his detective agency, which is now known all over the country.

The ability of Mr. White as an officer was fully recognized when, after a service of five years, he was licensed by the court to do detective work, and was at once made chief of the detective service of York city. It was Detective White who arrested A. J. Glasgow, the sanctimonious horse thief of Millersville, Lancaster county, the New York World having thought the arrest of so much importance as to illustrate an extended article on the subject, with pictures of Glasgow, the church he was attending at the time of his arrest, and Detective White, who made the arrest. Mr. White has been specially successful in the detection of horse thieves, and Capt. Linden, the Pinkertons and other thief takers regard him as one of the best horse thief detectives in the business. He has brought more prisoners from other States than all the other officers of the city and county of York combined, having brought important criminals from New York, Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, District of Columbia, New Jersey and Delaware; he brought seven prisoners from Maryland in one month. One of his most notable exploits was the arrest of five safe blowers in a bunch. Mr. White is in exchange with the detective bureaus in the country, and is as conscientious and reliable as he is shrewd and speedy in his work. He was one of the detectives selected to serve at the inauguration of President Roosevelt, and while acting in this capacity had the pleasure of forming the acquaintance of prominent detectives from all the larger cities of the United States, who were detailed to act in a similar manner, and in the distribution of officers at this time Mr. White was always among those detailed to serve in the most important locations.

Mr. White was married Oct. 1, 1884, to Ella M. Keech, daughter of William L. Keech, a justice of the peace of York, and uncle of the well-known alderman Keech. One child was born of this union, Pauline Marian, a graduate of the Woman's College, Maryland.

JOHN K. ZIEGLER, a retired farmer of North Codorus township, was born in that township, Oct. 9, 1834, son of John E. and Barbara (Koller) Ziegler. His grandfather, John Ziegler, born Dec. 18, 1767, was married Nov. 23, 1790, to Katherine Epley, and died July 9, 1845. John Ziegler was the donor of the land upon which the well-known Ziegler church—one of the old landmarks of the county—stands, in North Codorus township, and with his son John E. helped to build that edifice. He now rests at the entrance of the church.

John E. Ziegler was born April 14, 1806, in North Codorus township, and his wife was born in Shrewsbury township Jan. 20, 1804. He was very prominent in farming and business circles, and in his death, Nov. 19, 1875, the community lost a good citizen. His wife survived until March 20, 1883, and both were interred at Ziegler's church. They had children as follows: Sarah A., born July 24, 1825, married Henry Bott; Julianne M., was born Sept. 11, 1829; Matilda Jane, born Oct. 8, 1832, married Dr. H. K. Weiser, of York, and they are both deceased; John K., is our subject; Israel K., born Oct. 22, 1840, married Ann Maria Stick, and resides in York.
John K. Ziegler received a common school education, and assisted his father in farming. He now owns considerable property—the old homestead of 223 acres; an adjoining farm of 123 acres, where he now lives in a home which his father erected for him; a seventy-nine acre tract in Codorus township; and seventeen acres of woodland.

John K. Ziegler married Elizabeth Shaffer, daughter of Jesse and Elizabeth Shaffer, of Codorus township, and they had children as follows: Emma Jane, who is now the wife of William Stauffer, of Spring Grove; John C., who married a Miss Hoke, and resides in North Codorus township; William, deceased; Paul, unmarried, residing at home; and Allen W., who married Almena Kessler, and is operating the home farm.

Mr. Ziegler is one of the oldest directors of the York National Bank, having been appointed a director April 3, 1884. For the past several years he has lived retired from active pursuits. In his religious belief he is a Lutheran.

CHARLES BRADY PENNYPACKER, the popular principal of York high school, is descended from a Dutch family that settled in Pennsylvania in 1688. Through his own family, and that of his wife, Mr. Pennypacker is related to half the families in Lancaster county, a connection reaching up into the thousands.

The American ancestor of the Pennypackers was Heinrich Pannebecker, who left his home in Holland, and settled in what is now Montgomery county, Pa. Grandfather James Pennypacker was born in Chester county, and from there went to Lancaster county, where he taught school. He married Philena Yentzer, of Conestoga Center.

John Pennypacker, father of Charles Brady, is a leaf tobacco dealer of Mountville, Lancaster county, who married Martha Getz Brady, daughter of Charles Brady, a miller of Manor township, in that county. Four children were born to this union, one of whom, Philena, died in infancy. The others are: John, at home; Ella, wife of Joseph Hoover, a confectioner of Mountville; and Charles Brady.

On Nov. 16, 1860, Charles Brady Pennypacker was born in Manor township, Lancaster county, and as a boy attended the public schools. He then entered Franklin and Marshall College, and graduated with the class of 1897, immediately after that coming to York as assistant teacher in the high school. In the spring of 1902 he was principal of the high school, and continues to fill that position with success. Five hundred pupils are enrolled in the school, and there are fourteen assistant teachers, of whom five are ladies. This is a small community in itself, and requires no little executive ability in the governing head to make it run smoothly and effectively. Mr. Pennypacker had four years' experience in teaching before coming to York, having taught in West Hempfield township, Lancaster county, in the intervals of his studies, before graduating.

Mr. Pennypacker married Elvira Doner Stehman, daughter of Jonas Garber Stehman, a retired farmer of Mountville, and one daughter, Mary Anita, has been born to this union. The family connection is of enormous proportions, including the Doners, the Stehmans, and the Herrs of Lancaster county. In politics Mr. Pennypacker is a Republican. Fraternally he is connected with the Masons, Odd Fellows, Knights of Malta and Modern Woodmen. He is an earnest member of the First United Brethren Church, where he is superintendent of the Sunday-school, and ex-officio member of the board of control.

VINCENT R. WEAVER is a native of York, where his grandfather was among the pioneer settlers. The German Fatherland was the ancestral home of the Weaver family, where they were a race of sturdy farmers. Francis William Weaver, grandfather of Vincent R., came to York (then a borough) from Germany, and became the owner of the land now known as "the reservoir district." This property is now all within the city limits, but in the day of Grandfather Weaver it was a farm in a sparsely settled region. The maternal grandparents of Mr. Weaver were also of German birth, and settled in York county on their arrival in this country.

Anthony Weaver, father of Vincent R., died Oct. 28, 1905, aged seventy-nine. He was a carpenter and joiner, and was employed in the car shops of the Pennsylvania Railway Co., until the removal of the shops from York. He married Christiana Riehl. Of the eight children born to them, two died in infancy. The living are as follows: Mary C., wife of
C. F. Gibson, a carpenter and contractor of Philadelphia; Clara C., wife of C. D. Smith, of McSherrystown, Adams county, where he owns farm lands and quarries; F. W. employed in the postal service in Baltimore, Md.; Lizzie R., wife of C. F. Smith of York, conductor on the Pennsylvania railroad; A. Amelia, unmarried; and Vincent R.

Vincent R. Weaver was born Feb. 5, 1867, in York, and received his education in the public schools of that place. As a young man he entered the Variety Iron Works as an apprentice to the molder’s trade, and after mastering it he remained with the establishment for twenty years. During that time he was elected to the office of county assessor in the Fourth ward for four terms of three years each. At the end of ten years, before the expiration of his fourth term, he resigned the office of county assessor to accept that of clerk of the courts of York county. He was elected to the latter position in November, 1902, for a term of three years, and assumed his duties the first Monday in January, 1903.

Mr. Weaver married Cora M. Bond, daughter of John A. Bond, of Williamsport. In politics Mr. Weaver is a staunch Democrat. He is a member of St. Patrick’s Catholic Church, being also well known among the fraternal orders, as he is a member of the Knights of St. Paul, the Knights of Columbus, the Eagles and the Foresters of America.

JOHN THOMAS McFALL is the senior member of the firm of McFall & Son, of York, hatters and dealers in men’s furnishing goods—a business established by Mr. McFall in the autumn of 1869. The McFall family is of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and in days past the name was spelled MacFall. Many of the family are still living in Edinburgh, Scotland, whence the emigrant ancestor came to America before the War of the Revolution.

Thomas McFall, father of John Thomas, was for many years a farmer, but in later life engaged in the burning and shipping of lime. He died in 1847, at the early age of thirty-four. His wife was Eliza Mensch, daughter of Nicholas Mensch, a German Lutheran clergyman, of Lewisburg, Pa., where he died in 1854, aged seventy-four years. Of the five children born to Thomas McFall and his wife, James died in 1894, in his sixtieth year; and Mary A., wife of Thompson Donachy, a boat builder of Lewisburg, Pa., in 1903, at the age of seventy. The living children are Emma, wife of Eli B. Plummer, of Altoona; Charles A., a farmer in Union county; and John Thomas.

On Aug. 25, 1842, John Thomas McFall was born in Union county, Pa., and educated in the Lewisburg public schools. After finishing this elementary education he was employed for ten years as a house painter, and then, in October, 1869, established his outfitting store at No. 122 West Market street in York. This business he still carries on with great success moving into his present quarters in 1877, and receiving his son into partnership in 1892.

On June 26, 1866, Mr. McFall married Mary E. Johns, daughter of Jonas Johns, a wagon builder of Gettysburg, Pa. Mrs. McFall died in July, 1899, aged fifty-nine years. Three children were born to this union, one of whom, Mina, died in 1881, at the age of nine years. Edith M. (Mrs. E. C. Tillman), a twin sister of Mina, is a resident of Philadelphia, Pa. Wayne G. McFall, in business with his father, was born in York, March 21, 1870, and is a graduate of the York High School and York County Academy. Before going into partnership with his father, in 1892, he had been employed as stenographer by P. A. & S. Small.

Mr. McFall has a military, as well as a mercantile record, having enlisted twice in the Union army during the Civil war. He first joined the company of Capt. William R. Thatcher, enlisting from Chester, Delaware county, about the time of the battle of Antietam, as an emergency man. He afterward enlisted in Company A, 37th P. V. I., under Capt. William Frick, serving as second corporal.

Mr. McFall is past master in the Masonic Order, past high priest of the Chapter, and past commander of the Commandery, Knights Templar; and a member of Zembo Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Mystic Shrine, Harrisburg. He also belongs to the Royal Arcanum and the Fraternal Mystic Circle, while his social connection is with Lafayette Club, York. In religious faith he is a Lutheran. Politically he affiliates with the Democratic party.

WILLIAM HENRY MILLER, of the shoe firm of W. H. & H. M. Miller of York, comes of a family long settled in that region. He and his partner, who is also a member of an old York county family, although of the same name, are not even remotely related.

Samuel Miller, the grandfather of William Henry, was born and reared in Conewago township, York county, and died in Manchester township, same county.

Lewis R. Miller, son of Samuel and father of William Henry, was also a native of Conewago township. He married Maria Bull, daughter of Dr. Ross Bull, a physician of wide reputation. Mr. Miller died in 1866, and a six-year-old son, John Ross, died the same year. The surviving children of the family are Anna E., widow of H. C. Ziegler, of York City, Pa.; and William Henry.

The birth of William Henry Miller occurred Sept. 18, 1857, in Conewago township, and he was educated in the public schools of York. He began his business career as clerk in the store of Rosenmiller Brothers, where he remained from 1871 to 1877. He then entered the employ of E. J. Miller, father of his present partner, a shoe dealer, whose business was established in 1866. He was a clerk in this store until 1888, and then he and H. M. Miller bought each a third interest in the business. After two years of this triple partnership, the senior member of the firm, E. J. Miller, retired, and the firm became W. H. & H. M. Miller, as it remains today. The establishment is located in West Market street, and does a thriv ing trade.

On June 30, 1881, William Henry Miller married Sarah J. Yost, daughter of Abraham and Mary Yost, of Manchester township, where Mr. Yost was a prominent farmer. The children of this marriage are Clara E., a graduate of the York high school, class of 1901, and a member of the class of 1905 in the Ladies Seminary, at Norton, Mass.; and George L., in the class of 1907, University of Pennsylvania. In politics Mr. Miller is a Republican, but he reserves the right to vote independently. He is a member of St. Paul’s Lutheran Church, where he was a deacon for four years, and where for twenty years he has been a teacher in the Sunday-school. He is a member of the Royal Arcanum and of the Artisans.

H. M. Miller, partner of William Henry Miller, comes of an old York county family. His grandfather was one of the early surveyors and school teachers in the county, and his father, E. J. Miller, established the prosperous shoe house now owned and carried on by these younger men.

Mr. Miller was born Dec. 21, 1861, in Strinestown, York county, and attended the public schools, and the Eastman Business College in Poughkeepsie. He was a clerk in his father’s store for four years before he became a partner in the business. Like his partner, he is an independent Republican in politics. Fraternally he is connected with the Eagles. He is a member of the Beaver Street Methodist Church.

JOSEPH R. MARTIN, M. D., formerly one of the eminent medical men of York county, and a prominent citizen of Stewartstown, now living retired in Christiana, Lancaster county, was born Sept. 14, 1838, in Lancaster county, Pa., son of James and Eliza (Morrison) Martin, both of whom were natives of the same county.

Samuel Martin, Dr. Martin’s paternal grandfather, was a farmer in Lancaster county for many years. He was born in the north of Ireland and was of Scotch-Irish parentage. His children were as follows: James; Samuel; Sarah, wife of William Mackey; and John, who died young. Dr. Martin’s maternal grandfather was Samuel Morrison, who was born in Scotland. After emigrating to America and settling in Lancaster county, Pa., he followed milling and farming. Both grandfathers were men of sterling character in their community, and strong adherents of the Presbyterian faith. The children of Samuel Morrison were: John; Robert; Gabriel; Samuel; Rev. Alexander; and Anna Eliza, who became the mother of Dr. Joseph R. Martin.

James Martin, father of our subject, was a farmer and miller in Colerain township, Lancaster county. He was much more a man of settled principles, with the courage to live up to his convictions. A strong Whig all his life, he died in the year of the formation of the Republican party, with which he undoubtedly had been identified as he held advanced views on the slavery question. He was a great admirer, as he was also a personal friend, of that noble statesman, Hon. Thaddeus Stevens, and was so firm in his views that he was one of a half dozen men of his locality to build the Free Presbyterian Church, located in Colerain township, near Andrew's Bridge, and to employ a minister who had the daring that was then necessary to promulgate Abolition sentiments. A man of noble character and broad-minded philanthropy, the influences of his life extended far beyond the years of his earthly career. James Martin married Eliza Morrison, and they had these children: John, M. D.; Josiah, D. D. S.; Silas, Martha, Sarah, Isabella, Samuel (died at twelve), Harriet (died at twenty-one), Alexander, Harriet, Joseph R., M. D.; Annie, Martha, and Sarah, of whom Alexander and Joseph R. are still living.

Dr. Joseph R. Martin completed the common school course in Colerin township, afterward spending three years at the Christiana Boarding School, and then entered upon the study of medicine, under the direction of his brother, Dr. John Martin. By him he was prepared for entrance to Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, where he enjoyed three courses of study and a special course under the eminent surgeon, Dr. D. Hayes Agnew, of Philadelphia, completing his studies in 1862. After a short practice at Marticville, Lancaster county, he was accepted as assistant surgeon in the United States army, and in the same year was sent to Harrisburg to be medical examiner of both the volunteer and drafted men. Two months later he accompanied Dr. Abraham Harshburger in the 124th P. V. I., and worked seven months with this regiment as surgeon. He then returned to his home, remaining until 1863, when he again entered the service as surgeon, and was assigned to the Officers' Hospital, at Alexandria, Va. He continued there until late in 1864, when he resigned and returned to Lancaster county to take up his private practice.

Dr. Martin located first at Atglen, Chester county, where he practiced four years, coming to York county in 1860. He settled at Stewartstown where he continued in the active practice of his profession until 1905, when he retired and with his wife moved to Christiana, Lancaster county, where also dwell his sons, Dr. John R., Jo-Newell and Robert. Dr. Martin is widely known all through this section of the State. His medical knowledge and surgical skill have brought health and happiness to hundreds, while the esteem and confidence he has inspired in this way is only second to that aroused by his personal characteristics.

In 1866 Dr. Martin married Abbie Smith, daughter of Rev. Samuel H. Smith, a Presbyterian minister in York county. A family of eleven children was born to this union, namely: Janet, wife of J. Mitchell Jordan; Annie L., wife of W. L. Fredeking; Harriet B., wife of Rev. Paul S. Lainbach, a clergyman of the First Reformed Church, Easton, Pa.; D. C., a practicing physician; Jo-Newell; John R., a practicing physician at Christiana; Robert C., a machinist; Kenneth H., who died at the age of thirteen years; and three children that died in infancy.

Of the above family, Dr. D. C. Martin, who has taken his father's practice in Stewartstown, read medicine with the latter and graduated in 1903 at the Philadelphia Medico-Chirurgical College. His professional success points to a bright future. The experience of the father combined with the modern, scientific training of the son made a firm of great strength. Both physicians belong to the leading medical societies of county and State, and keep fully abreast of the times in their profession.

Our esteemed subject has a number of valuable business connections in the county, and is one of the directors of the Stewartstown First National Bank and a director of the Stewartstown Furniture Company. Fraternally he is a Mason, belonging to that body for a long period. He is one of the leading members of the Presbyterian Church at Stewartstown, having united with the same some forty years ago. He has always been active in church work when professional duties permitted, and for twenty years has been an elder in this body. Dr. Martin has also been a member of the Stewartstown board of health for a number of years.

In his own person and as a representative of his late father, Dr. Martin exemplifies all that is meant by good citizen. This citizenship has not taken the form of seeking for public office, although never shirking public duty, but has been shown in a deep interest in public-spirited movements, a just appreciation of what development and progress means for a community, and the faithful upholding of those principles which have seemed to him to be right. In the beginning of his career he put aside personal preference and not only offered his services to his country, and through a long and useful life he has shown the same devotion to duty. This slight tribute is due to one of York county's justly honored and representative men.

SOLOMON BOYER has been a resident of the borough of Dover, in York county, since 1886, and has long lived retired from active work, but though past eighty he is as energetic as a man twenty years his junior, and is in full possession of all his faculties.

Mr. Boyer is a native of York county, having been born Oct. 28, 1819, in Manchester township. He is of German descent and Revolutionary ancestry. His grandfather, Frederick Boyer, was born June 20, 1756, in Leipsic, Saxony, Germany, came to America when eighteen years old, and took part in the Revolutionary war. It is thought that his name was originally Byers, the present spelling having been adopted after he went to the war. In 1818 he was pensioned for life in recognition of his services. Frederick Boyer married a Miss Shull, who was born June 2, 1765, and also came from a good German family. She died in April, 1845, aged seventy-nine years, ten months, one day, and his death occurred Dec. 4, 1840, at the age of eighty-four years, five months, fourteen days. Both died in Newberry township, York county, near Ball Hill, where they had settled, and they are buried there. Their children were as follows: Peter became the father of Solomon; John died in Carlisle, Cumberland Co., Pa.; Joseph died at the old home at Ball Hill; Jay also died there; Jacob and Charles died in Ohio; Augustus died in the West; two daughters died in York county.

Peter Boyer was born in 1789 in York county, and there learned the trade of millwright with his uncle, following that calling and farming throughout his active years. He lived retired for about twenty years before his death, which occurred in 1881, when he was ninety-two years old. He married Sarah Hidelbaugh, daughter of George Hidelbaugh, of York county, and she died in Dover township at the age of seventy-five years. They are buried in Strayer's Churchyard, in Dover township. Five children were born to this worthy couple, namely: Elizabeth married John Meckley, and is now living in Dover township with her daughters. Solomon is mentioned below. Sarah married Michael Zeigler, died in Dover township, and is buried in Strayer's Churchyard. Israel married Savilla Bowersox, and died in 1904; his widow lives at Weigelstown, in Dover township. John married Annie Lauer, who died in York county, and he subsequently married Mary Deisinger; both are deceased, and are buried in Strayer's Churchyard.

Solomon Boyer was reared in his native township, and began his education there in the pay schools of the neighborhood, later attending at Abbottstown, in Adams county, and lastly at Dover borough, where he took a course in surveying, although he never followed that calling. Under his father he learned the trade of millwright, which he followed for about five years, and he also worked with his father at farming, the latter calling being really his life work. After his marriage he located on the old homestead, remaining there for over twenty years, or until 1869, in which year he bought a small farm of thirty acres in Dover township, to which he removed. There he had his home until 1886, when he built the place in the borough of Dover where he has since resided. Mr. Boyer was successful as a farmer, and is now enjoying the competence acquired in years of hard labor. Though he gave proper attention to his own affairs he was deeply interested in the affairs of the community and was active in promoting good government, in his younger days taking a lively interest in public matters as well as in business pursuits, and he has always been regarded as a man of excellent judgment and intelligence. He served as director of the poor, school director three years, tax collector, assessor, township auditor and clerk, and was faithful in the discharge of every duty. Though often solicited to take office since his removal to the borough, he has declined all public honors. His political support has always been given to the Democratic party.

In 1843 Mr. Boyer married Louisa Lenhart, who was born Dec. 17, 1820, daughter of Henry and Christiana (Stouch) Lenhart, of Dover township, the former born March 11, 1793, the latter in November, 1792. Henry Lenhart was a soldier in the war of 1812. He died in 1867. Mr. and Mrs. Boyer had children as follows: Edwin, who married Annie Y. Essler, died in Dover township, and is buried at Strayer's Church. Aaron, a prosperous farmer of Dover township, married Susan Smith. Amanda L., born in 1853, is the widow of Jacob R. Zinn, who was in the milling business at Oxford Mills, Iowa, where she still resides; they had eight children, Harry A., George S. (deceased), Katie C., Nettie E., Frank E., Charles A., Jacob William (deceased) and Marion.

In 1886 Mr. and Mrs. Boyer made a visit to their daughter, Mrs. Zinn, in Iowa. Mrs. Boyer passed away Oct. 29, 1889, at the age of sixty-eight years, ten months, and is buried at Strayer's Church. She was a member of the Reformed Church, and Mr. Boyer is a Lutheran in religious faith.

E. WINCHESTER KEYSER, cashier of the First National Bank of Delta, York county, was born Oct. 27, 1867, son of Harry and Isabel (Ross) Keyser, the former a native of Philadelphia, and the latter of Lower Chanceford township, York county.

The great-grandfather of E. W. Keyser was Peter Keyser, a noted German Baptist preacher, who ministered to a large congregation of that religion for a number of years in Germantown, Pa. He married Catherine Clemments, who was also a native of Philadelphia.

E. W. Keyser, grandfather of our subject, was also born in Philadelphia, where his early educational training was secured. Early in life he engaged in the lumber business, and was one of Philadelphia's leading merchants in that line for many years. He amassed a handsome competency, including valuable holdings in real estate, and was well-known in the financial world, being president of the National Bank of Northern Liberties, of Philadelphia, for many years. When a young man he married Maria Fox, also born in Philadelphia, a descendant of one of the good old German families of that name. The children born to this union were: George F., deceased, who lived in Philadelphia; Mrs. Catherine Wallace; Frances; Mrs. Sarah Savage; Harry; and Benjamin W., of Washington, D. C.

Harry Keyser, the father of our subject, was educated in the schools of Philadelphia, and when yet a young man came to York county, and purchased a tract of land in Lower Chanceford township, near Airville. He at once set out to improve his land, and added to it from time to time until at the time of his demise he owned some of the best land in that township. His aim was to improve the conditions of the county, and he was broad-minded and public-spirited. Mr. Keyser was one of the prime factors in the establishment of the Peach Bottom Railroad, being greatly instrumental in the building of that road, of which he was one of the stockholders. He was one of the board of directors from 1884 until 1889, when the road was sold to Baltimore capitalists. Mr. Keyser was a director of the First National Bank of Delta from its organization until his death in 1896.

Harry Keyser was married in 1863 to Isabel Ross, daughter of Hugh Ross, of Lower Chanceford township, York county. [An extended review of the Ross family will be found elsewhere.] To this union were born: R. Glenn, who became the wife of Rev. Craig B. Cross, a Presbyterian minister of Carlisle, Pa.; E. Winchester; and Katharine, the wife of C. Collins Smith, a merchant of Airville, Pa. Mr. Keyser was a stanch Republican. In his religious affiliations he was a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Keyser died in 1903, aged sixty-eight years.

E. Winchester Keyser attended the common schools of Lower Chanceford township and the York Collegiate Institute, after which he returned home, and assisted his father with the labors of the farm until 1888, when he accepted a position with the Peninsula Lumber Company, of Wilmington, Del., remaining with this company until 1890. In that year he returned to Lower Chanceford township, and managed the home farm until 1902, when he accepted his present position with the First National Bank of Delta. Besides being cashier, Mr. Keyser is a director of this institution, having held this office since 1896.

In 1903 Mr. Keyser married Miss Eliza C. Fulton, daughter of James C. and Sarah (Mitchell) Fulton, of Lower Chanceford township. Mr. Keyser, like his honored father, is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is ruling elder of that religious body. Politically a stanch Republican, he is not, however, an office seeker, preferring to devote his entire time and attention to his numerous business interests. He has always taken a public-spirited interest in the town, however, and supports every movement which his judgment has led him to regard as beneficial. He is universally esteemed, and occupies a high social position.

GENEALOGICAL RECORD OF THE FRICK FAMILY of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, first compiled by B. F. Frick, of York, Pa., in October, 1886, and copied by H. A. Frick, of Hall, Pa., in October, 1901.

The within record is from data furnished by Benjamin Summy, of Washington, D. C., and Tobias Witmer, of Philadelphia, N. Y., both of whom married into the Frick family in the early part of the preceding century, also by Anna Frantz, daughter of Jacob Frick, born March 17, 1801 (who was a son of Abraham Frick, born June 20, 1759), and died Jan. 31, 1897, at his home near Neffsville, Manheim township, Lancaster Co., Pa., on the same farm where Jacob Frick (born Nov. 12, 1684) took up, in company with Bachman and Rassler, a large tract of land deeded to them by the Penns, their nearest gristmill being at Downingtown, Pennsylvania. To begin with

(1) Henry Frick, who was at one time an officer in one of the Cantons of Switzerland: His date of birth is unknown, but supposed to be about the years 1621-1650, and from him the following named three children descended: Barbara Frick, born May 8, 1683; Jacob Frick, born Nov. 12, 1684; John Frick, born March 20, 1688.

(II) To Jacob Frick, born Nov. 12, 1684, were born the following seven children: Maria, born April 26, 1725; Barbara, born May 10, 1726; Anna, born July 17, 1726; Jacob, born Sept. 4, 1728; Elizabeth, born Jan. 8, 1730; Catharine, born Oct. 17, 1731; and John, born June 6, 1733.

(III) Jacob Frick, born Sept. 4, 1728, son and fourth child of the above and last named Jacob Frick, near Neffsville, Lancaster Co., Pa., was married to Magdalena Herr, born Jan. 11, 1739. The York branch of the Fricks are the descendants of

(IV) Christian Frick, born Sept. 2, 1754, son of Jacob and Magdalena (Herr) Frick (the former born Sept. 4, 1728), and grandson of the first named Jacob Frick, born Nov. 12, 1684, in Europe, who came to America and took up a large tract of land in company with Bachman and Rassler, in Lancaster county, Pa., deeded to them by the Penns. Christian Frick, the son and first named child of Jacob and Magdalena (Herr) Frick, was married to Anna Witmer Nov. 19, 1780. To them were born the following named four children: (1) Catharine, date of birth and death unknown, married a Mr. Sheetz, of Lancaster, Pa.; (2) Jacob W., born Nov. 26, 1782, died April 12, 1835; (3) John, born Sept. 16, 1784, died when four years old; (4) Anna, born March 18, 1789, died when three years old. The mother of these four children died in 1790, and on Jan. 25, 1791, the father married Miss Elizabeth Herr, of Lancaster county, Pa., by whom he had twelve children, as follows: (1) Fanny, born Oct. 29, 1791, married David Martin and moved to Illinois. (2) Magdalena, born Jan. 26, 1793, married Joseph Hershey, of Lancaster county, Pa. (3) Christian, born April 12, 1794, married Elizabeth Long and moved to New York. They had one child, Anna, who married Tobias Witmer and had fourteen children. (4) Elizabeth, born Dec. 26, 1795, married her cousin, Jacob, son of John Frick, who married Anna Hershey, and lived near Williamsville, N. Y. (5) Maria, born Aug. 20, 1797, married Henry Roades. (6) Anna, born Jan. 1, 1799, married John Reist, a bishop of the Reformed Mennonite Church in Williamsville, N. Y. (7) Barbara, born March 28, 1801, died when seven months old. (8) Abraham, born Dec. 4, 1802, married Rachel Stever, and died in Lancaster county, Pa. (date unknown). (9) John, born Jan. 6, 1805, married Susanna Schenck, and lived in Williamsville, N. Y. (10) Barbara (2), born Aug. 13, 1806, married Benjamin Brubaker and moved to Stephenson county, Ill. (11) Martin, born Nov. 23, 1808, married Catharine Miller. (12) Susanna, born Feb. 26, 1812, married Benjamin Summy, and moved to Washington, D. C.

About the year 1808 Christian Frick, father of the above named sixteen children, moved with the larger part of his numerous family from Manheim, Lancaster Co., Pa., where he lived, to Amherst, Erie Co., N. Y., near Williamsville, where he died (date unknown) at the old homestead now occupied by his sons Abraham and Martin Frick.

(V) Jacob W. Frick, the eldest son and second child of the aforesaid Christian Frick, born Nov. 26, 1782, was married to Magdalena Peifer, Dec. 3, 1811. She was born Nov. 12, 1793. They had the following named three children: (1) John P., born Dec. 6, 1812, was married Nov. 26, 1839, to Hannah Hershey, of York county, Pa., who was born Feb. 3, 1815, and died May 23, 1879. He died May 23, 1889, in York, Pa. They had seven children, William Henry, Benjamin, John, Abraham, Mary, David and Joseph. (2) Maria, born April 21, 1815, married Levi Winterode, of Manchester, Md., and died Jan. 26, 1887. (3) Christian, born Dec. 17, 1817, died Aug. 15, 1863. Mrs. Magdalena Frick, wife of Jacob W. Frick, died Oct. 8, 1822, in York county, Pa., and he married in 1825 Elizabeth Arnold, of York county, by whom he also had three children, namely: (1) Annie E., born Dec. 13, 1825, married Daniel Bond, of Baltimore, Md. (2) Jacob, born Aug. 27, 1827, was killed by the running away of his team between Baltimore city and Hampstead, Md. (3) Englehart, born Jan. 4, 1829, married Cecilia Showers, of Manchester, Md. The father of this family, Jacob W. Frick, died April 12, 1835, at Manchester, Maryland.

(VI) Christopher Frick, third named child of Jacob W. and Magdalena (Peifer) Frick, born Dec. 17, 1817, was married Feb. 2, 1851, to Matilda Joanna Speck, who was born Dec. 7, 1821. They became the parents of five children: (1) John Henry, born Oct. 30, 1852, died Dec. 30, 1890. (2) Laura, born Oct. 30, 1852, married Frederick Bentz. (3) Elizabeth, born May 19, 1854, married Joseph Deardorff, and is living in Mills county, Iowa. (4) Jacob Martin was born Nov. 22, 1855. (5) Charlotte, born Sept. 4, 1858, died when three years old. The father of this family died Aug. 15, 1863, and about the year 1867 the mother moved with her four remaining children from Manchester, Md., to York county, Pa., where she spent the most of her days with her children and had her home with her daughter, Mrs. Laura Bentz, near Wellsville, York county, where she died Nov. 5, 1894.

(VII) John Frick, son of Christian and Matilda Joanna (Speck) Frick, was married Nov. 8, 1877, to Lydia Kraut, of York county, Pa., and they were engaged in farming for a number of years near Hall, Pa., and afterward moved to near Abbottstown, Adams Co., Pa., where they lived until his death, Dec. 30, 1890. Mrs. Frick, the widow, is still living, residing with her children near Abbottstown. Three children were born to John and Lydia (Kraut) Frick. Daisy May, born Feb. 18, 1879, who was married May 21, 1901, to John McMaster; Preston Eugene, born Jan. 12, 1881; and Hattie Belle, born Jan. 4, 1884.

(VII) Jacob Martin Frick, born Nov. 22, 1855, in Carroll county, Md., son of Christian Frick, is now living retired in Washington township, York Co., Pa. He was actively engaged in farming there until the spring of 1905, and is one of the prominent citizens and large landowners of that township. Mr. Frick spent his early life in his native county, coming to York county with his widowed mother in 1867. From that time until he was twenty-four he lived with his uncle, Joseph Speck, and during that period attended school in Warrington township, receiving an excellent common-school training. On leaving his uncle he commenced agricultural work on his own account, and in spite of his youth had the ambition to buy 103 acres in Washington township, of Adam Kinter. He lived on that tract for many years, making all the changes and improvements which give the place its high value at the present day. He has always been progressive, and by first-class methods and the exercise of excellent judgment in his work he succeeded so well that he was able to purchase more property from time to time. His holdings now comprise 253 acres of valuable improved farming land, all adjoining in Washington township. The place on which he has lived since he retired, in the spring of 1905, is a nice farm of fifty-two acres, and he bought the adjoining farm of eighty-seven acres from Solomon Border's estate. Few farms are better situated anywhere in York county; a fine view of this beautiful agricultural region is to be had from the site of Mr. Frick's home, and his own attractive acres form a pleasing part of the prospect. Mr. Frick is still in the prime of life, and with the comfortable competence he has accumulated by good management and judicious investments he can look forward to many enjoyable years. He is an estimable citizen, living his own life for the good of others as well as for his own benefit, and is willing to help others do the same. As a deacon in the Lutheran Church at Barrentz he is actively interested in Christian work generally as well as in the welfare of his own church, and exercises a strong influence for good in his community. He is not identified in any particular way with public affairs, but gives his sympathy and support to the Republican party.

Mr. Frick was married, Oct. 30, 1879, to Hattie B. Speck, from Virginia, daughter of Frederick and Susannah (Berkheimer) Speck, and a member of a well-known York county family. Three children have blessed this union, Oscar E., Harry Arthur, and Ora, who is at home. Oscar E. (now aged twenty-five years) married Grace Harbold, and they are living on the large farm of his father in Washington township, which Oscar cultivates.

Harry A. Frick entered Goldey Business College at Wilmington, Del., in January, 1901, and followed the course until May 30th, of the same year, on which day he met with a serious accident in a trolley wreck, which disabled and prevented him from entering school again until February, 1902. After finishing the complete course he accepted a position in Philadelphia, Pa., in May, 1903, and is now holding a responsible position with the same firm, The International Harvester Company of America.

ENOS S. MANN, M. D. The medical profession has in York county an able and popular representative in Dr. Mann, who maintains his home in the attractive borough of Dallastown, York township, and who controls a large practice throughout that section of the county, where he is held in high esteem as a physician and a citizen. The Doctor has been in a significant sense the architect of his own fortunes, having gained through his own efforts the funds which enabled him to complete his academic and technical education, and thus his success is the more gratifying to contemplate.

Enos Seitz Mann is a native of the old Keystone State, having been born in Manor township, Lancaster county, Oct. 17, 1865, son of Henry W. and Anna C. (Seitz) Mann, both representatives of old and honored pioneer families of that section of the State, where his father devoted his life to agricultural pursuits.

Bernhart Mann, the great-great-grandfather of Dr. E. S. Mann, was born May 9, 1740, and when eight years of age emigrated from Heifenhart, Germany, to America. He was, in accordance with the method of that period among emigrants, sold for his passage money to a Mr. Stehman, of Lancaster county, with whom he remained until his majority was attained, after which he settled upon a purchase of eighty acres of land in Manor township. He married Mary Staumb, also of German ancestry, and their children were John, Bernhart, George, and Elizabeth, who became Mrs. Wormley. Mr. Mann's death occurred June 6, 1817, in his seventy-eighth year, and that of his wife April 21, 1821, also in her seventy-eighth year.

John Mann, their son, was born March 7, 1774, on the paternal land, where his life was devoted to farming. He married Elizabeth, daughter of George Snyder, of East Donegal, Lancaster county, who was born Oct. 8, 1780, and died March 25, 1870. Their children were: Bernhart S., Jacob, Margareta, Marie, Elizabeth, Sophia, Catharine, Barbara Sarah, John S. and George. Mr. Mann during his lifetime espoused the tenets of the Lutheran belief. He died Dec. 3, 1843.

Their son, Bernhart S. Mann, was born Aug. 20, 1803. On March 8, 1827, he married Miss Anna Wertz, who was born Dec. 23, 1803. To them the following children were born: John W., Henry W., Elizabeth B., Mary Ann, Margaret S., Anna M., Simon B., and Caroline C. Mr. Mann's death occurred April 15, 1880, and that of his wife Jan. 12, 1881.

Their son, Henry W. Mann, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born June 14, 1829, on a farm adjoining the old homestead. He married Anna Charles Seitz, Nov. 19, 1856. Their lives were devoted to farming. To them were born eight sons, Amos, Jacob, Eli, George, Henry, Enos S., Simon and Hiram.

On the maternal side the Doctor is the great-great-grandson of Jacob Seitz, who came to America from the Palatinate (Rhenish Bavaria), Germany, in 1764, and who settled in Manor township, Lancaster county. Mr. Seitz married Elizabeth Witmer, daughter of Michael Witmer, who came from Germany in 1732 and settled in Manor township. To them were born eleven children. John, Henry, Michael, Jacob, Abraham, Veronica, Barbara, Catharine, Magdalena, Anna and Elizabeth. Veronica lived to within a few weeks of 104 years. John married Annie Garber. His death occurred in 1847 and his wife's in 1862, in her ninetieth year. Their son, Jacob G. Seitz, was born in Manor township Jan. 23, 1813. He married Bahara Charles April 13, 1832, and to this union were born nine children: Anna C. (the Doctor's mother, born May 27, 1832), John C. Jacob C., Charles C., Barbara C.
Elizabeth C., Amos C., and Christian and Henry, who died young. Mr. Setz died June 17, 1802. His wife died in 1848.

The Doctor early became mired to the strenuous labor involved in the work of the home farm, located near Washington borough, and in the local public school he secured his preliminary educational training, his ambition to secure a liberal discipline in that line having been quickened while he was still a boy, so that he made good use of such opportunities as were afforded him. After leaving the public schools he continued his studies for two years in the First State Normal School at Millersville, where he fortified himself for successful pedagogic work, having been thereafter engaged in teaching in the public schools of his native county until 1887. In that year he secured a clerical position in the Columbia National Bank at Columbia, that county, where he was employed until 1890, when he accepted a similar position in the Lancaster County National Bank, in the city of Lancaster, retaining this incumbency two years. In the meanwhile he had determined to prepare himself for the medical profession, and with this end in view he took up the study of medicine under the preceptorship of the late Dr. M. L. Herr, of Lancaster, and at the same time was enabled to secure private instruction of a technical order in Franklin and Marshall College, in that city. In the autumn of 1892, he was matriculated in the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1895, receiving his well-earned degree of Doctor of Medicine. To further fortify himself for the active labors and responsibilities of his chosen profession the Doctor passed a few months in the city dispensary and maternity department of the city of Philadelphia, under Dr. Joseph Price.

Dr. Mann initiated the active practice of his profession by locating in Columbia, Lancaster county, where he remained until April 1896, when he came to York county, and took up his residence in Dallastown, where he has since been established in practice, having gained a representative support and secured recognition as one of the thoroughly skilled physicians and surgeons of the county, while he holds the high regard of his professional confreres and of the people of the community in which he has so earnestly and effectively labored in the alleviation of pain and suffering. In 1896 the Doctor became a member of the Lancaster County Medical Society. He transferred his membership to the York County Medical Society soon after his removal to Dallastown, and was its president during 1906, while he is also identified with the Pennsylvania State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is also a member of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia, Pa. He is a close and appreciative student of his profession, and through the careful utilization of the best standard and periodical literature pertaining to medical and surgical science he keeps in touch with the advances made in each branch, while he is specially fortunate in his ability of properly applying his knowledge in the active work of his practice. In his political proclivities the Doctor is a Democrat, and in a fraternal way he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Order of Independent Americans at Dallastown, and with the organization of the Knights of the Mystic Chain at Yoe, this county. Both he and his wife are members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church at Dallastown.

On June 19, 1901, Dr. Mann was united in marriage to Miss Mary Ann Fulton, of Muddy Creek Forks. They have had three sons, Enos Harold and Horace Fulton, born Sept. 10, 1902, and Bernard Fulton, born March 31, 1905. Horace Fulton died March 22, 1903. Mrs. Mann was the youngest daughter of James and Mary Ann (Webb) Fulton. She was born at Winterstown, York county, where she lived until the death of her father, Aug. 30, 1872. She then moved with her mother, who in 1876 became the wife of Judge Valentine Trout, to Muddy Creek Forks. Mary Ann (Fulton) Mann's great-grandfather was David Fulton, and he married a Miss Griffith; they were both of Ireland. Their son David was born in 1791 and died in 1859. His wife was Miss Margaret Patterson, native of Scotland, born April 22, 1791, died June 9, 1871. To them were born seven children, John, David, Andrew, James, Mary, Sarah and Martha. James Fulton (Mrs. Mann's father) was twice married, his first wife being Miss Meads, his second Mary Ann Webb, who he married Aug. 7, 1855.

Mrs. Mann's maternal great-great-grandparents, Richard and Elizabeth Webb, were Quakers of English descent, who settled at Fawn Grove, York Co., Pa. Four sons and one daughter were born to them, the sons being James, Joseph, Jesse and Richard.

James Webb was born Dec. 8, 1778, and died May 16, 1865. On April 15, 1800, he married Mary Ann Miller, who was born Oct. 9, 1779, and died Feb. 7, 1837. Their children were: Elizabeth, Jesse, Catharine, Joseph, James, John, Lydia Ann, Mary Ann and Henry Webb.

Henry Webb was born Aug. 20, 1803, and died Jan. 16, 1868. He married Mary Ann Yost, of New Market, Md., who was born Oct. 18, 1806, and died Feb. 21, 1865. Their children were: Euphemia Helen, Arabella, Josephene, Henry Y. and Cornelius.

On Aug. 7, 1855, Mary Ann Webb became the wife of James Fulton. Their children were: Euphemia Helen, William T., Cornelius McC., John and Ida (both of whom died in infancy), and Mary Ann, who became Mrs. Mann.

EDWARD HELB. This well-known business man and manufacturer, who is also coming into notice as an inventor, is a son of the late Frederick Helb, so long and favorably known as a tanner and farmer of Railroad borough, York county, and a brother of Theodore R. Helb, one of the leading brewers of Pennsylvania.

Edward Helb was born in the borough named April 29, 1854, his parents being Frederick and Rebecca (Henry) Helb. His father, a native of Wurttemberg, Germany, emigrated to the United States when he was nineteen years of age, finding employment in Baltimore at his trade of tanner. Afterward he removed to Railroad borough, then Shrewsbury township, where he met and married Rebecca Henry, daughter of George Henry, an honest farmer and miller of that locality. Of this union were born ten children, of whom Edward was the fourth. At Railroad borough the elder Mr. Helb was both tanner and farmer, being proprietor of a considerable manufactory, and was actively engaged in these occupations up to the date of his death, in April, 1905, at the age of eighty years and one month.

Edward Helb received his early education in the district schools of his native place and the Shrewsbury Academy, these foundation courses being supplemented by a training in F. Knapp’s Institute, at Baltimore, from which he graduated in June, 1871. Later he was employed in his father’s tannery, being thus engaged in the spring of 1886, when he took charge of the store and postoffice at Railroad borough. With all his other interests, he has continuously held that position, but expects to retire at the conclusion of twenty years of service, in the fall of 1906.

For a number of years Mr. Helb has been engaged in the manufacture of creamery butter, being the proprietor of two milk separator stations—one at Newmarket, Md., and the other at Rhuls, Md. He also manufactures the America Combine Level and Grade Finder, which he patented in the United States July 12, 1904, and in Canada, in December, of that year. The invention is pronounced most ingenious and useful, and promises to be so generally introduced among mechanics that he will give his entire attention to its manufacture.

Mr. Helb has been largely interested in the F. Helb & Son furniture factory, having been its manager, but upon the death of Frederick Helb, the father and senior member of the firm, he bought the plant at public sale, and resold it to the Sieling Furniture Company, the latter now operating the establishment. He is one of the executors of his father’s estate, amounting to several hundred thousand dollars, the position demanding careful supervision and much executive ability. For the past ten years he has also served as secretary of the board of directors of the Shrewsbury Savings Institution.

In many respects Mr. Helb has evinced his practical public spirit. His work in connection with the water works of Railroad borough is an illustration in point. In the fall of 1905 he installed a system at his own expense, which reached about $6,000. A dozen fire plugs were placed in different portions of the borough, and water was carried not only to his tenants’ houses, but to all other residences. The origin of the supply consists of a large reservoir of spring water, connected by a six-inch main with another large body of water, the fall to the square at the station being at least 130 feet. The fall furnishes sufficient force to send a stream over the highest buildings on the water line, giving ample protection to all the dwellings and factories of the town.
and being the means of a material reduction of fire insurance rates. Besides being the founder of the Railroad borough water works Mr. Helb has demonstrated his ability as a public official, being now in his fifth term of service as justice of the peace. He has also laid out and opened up a new street in the borough at his own expense—there being a scarcity of good building lots—and he will erect a number of good brick and frame houses for tenants.

Mr. Helb is unusually happy in his domestic relations, his wife, to whom he was married July 8, 1879, being known in maidenhood as Jennie I. Rishel, daughter of Squire Daniel and Sarah Rishel, respected residents of Troutville, Clearfield county, Pa. They are both active members of the Lutheran Church at Shrewsbury and Railroad. Mr. Helb himself has been prominently connected, in various official capacities, with both the local organization and the broader affairs of the Synod. For a number of years he has served as deacon, lately as an elder, and he has been superintendent of the Sunday-schools at Shrewsbury and Railroad. He has been a member of the Home Mission Board of the General Synod of the Lutheran Church in the United States for the past eight years (six years as treasurer), and has been elected a number of times as delegate to the West Pennsylvania Synod, and by them at different times elected as a delegate to the General Synod. For several terms he has been a director of the Loysville Orphans Home, Perry county, Pa., and for twelve years past president of the York County Lutheran Sunday-school conventions.

Fraternally Mr. Helb is connected with Mt. Vernon Lodge, No. 143, of Shrewsbury, and Mt. Vernon Encampment, No. 14, of York, I. O. O. F.; also with Friendly Lodge, No. 287, K. of P., of Glen Rock.

JOHN H. GROSS, extensively engaged in the harness making business at Davidsburg, was born there July 25, 1861, son of Samuel M. and Matilda (Leib) Gross.

John Gross, grandfather of John H., was born in Dover township, where he learned the blacksmith’s trade, following it until his death, which occurred in his eighty-seventh year. He married Polly Myers, who was born in Dover township and died at Davidsburg, and they are both buried at Strayer’s Church in Dover township. The children born to this worthy couple were: Samuel M.; Elizabeth, living at Davidsburg; Catherine, married to Daniel Jacobs, deceased, and living in Davidsburg.

Samuel M. Gross was born in 1833, at Davidsburg, attended the township schools, receiving a good education, and then learned the blacksmith’s trade with his father, with whom he worked for a time. He later went into business with his father, and they were together until his father’s death, after which he continued in that line by himself. Mr. Gross married Matilda Leib, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Leib, of Dover township, and she died in Dover township. Both Mr. and Mrs. Gross were interred at Strayer’s Church.

John H. Gross was the only child of his parents. He received a good education in the schools at Davidsburg, which he attended until about nineteen years of age. In 1880 he started to learn the harness making trade, and in 1882 started in business in the place of his nativity. Mr. Gross has been actively engaged there ever since, and makes only the finest goods, shipping his products to the West. He employs from three to six hands, and is himself a very skilled mechanic.

In 1884 Mr. Gross married Mary Altland, daughter of George and Elizabeth (Overly) Altland, of Paradise township. After their marriage they located in the present home in Davidsburg. The children born to this union were: Daisy E., Samuel, Harvey, George, Melvin, John, Margaret and Wilmer, all residing at home. Politically Mr. Gross is a Democrat, and in 1902 was elected prothonotary of York county, which office he has filled very satisfactorily ever since. Fraternally he is affiliated with the P. O. S. of A. of Davidsburg, in which he is very popular.

Mr. Gross is a business man of high rank, public spirited and up-to-date, and is looked upon by his friends and neighbors as an able and honest citizen.

MATTHEW GROVE, in his lifetime one of the substantial and representative farmers of York county, resided on his well-cultivated estate of 100 acres in Chanceford township. Mr. Grove was born Sept. 24, 1821, on the old home farm in Hopewell township, son of Thomas and Mary (Williamson) Grove, and grandson of Jacob Grove.

Jacob Grove was born in York county, whither his father had emigrated from Germany with a brother in young manhood. He married a lady of English descent, and took up 300 acres of land, on which he built a log house. He was a faithful member of the U. P. Church, having belonged formerly to the Seeligers. Jacob Grove died about 1828, in his eightieth year, the father of the following children: Francis died in Fawn township; James and William both died in the West; John; Matthew is mentioned elsewhere; Martin died in the West; Peggy married John Stewart, and died in Chanceford township; Betsy, married F. Graham, and died in Fawn township; Thomas; and Jennie, who died in York county, married George Anderson.

Thomas Grove was born on the homestead in Chanceford township, in 1785, and grew up on the farm, helping his father to clear it up from the wilderness. He married Mary Williamson, and they removed to Hopewell township, where he bought land, and resided for several years. He then returned to Chanceford township, and took up his father's home farm, caring for the latter in his declining years. After his father's death, Thomas Grove bought the farm, and resided upon it until his death in 1852. Religiously he was a member of the Guinston U. P. Church. In his political sympathies he was an old-line Whig. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Grove were as follows: Jacob; Peggy, who married Robert Brooks, died with our subject; James, who married Ellen Allison, died in Hopewell township; William, father of James W., a sketch of whom will be found elsewhere; Matthew; Eliza Jane died young; Mary married A. P. Thompson, of Dallastown; and Martin, who died on his grandfather's home farm, married Sarah Lutz, who survives.

Matthew Grove remained on the home in Hopewell township, and when a small boy his father bought 300 acres of land, part of which our subject lived on at the time of his death. This land is part of what Jacob Grove took up, and part of the old house which he built still stands, being used for a wash house, and the land upon which it stands being the property of William Runkle. Matthew Grove went to the subscription schools, and later to the public schools, his educational advantages, however, being limited to a day now and then. His days were filled with much hardship, the reaping being done in harvest time with a sickle, by the men, while the women stayed at home and made the children's clothes from homespun. Mr. Grove's mother had died in Hopewell township, and he was cared for by his step-mother. He took up his present property in 1850, now owning 100 acres of land and carrying on general farming. In 1852 Mr. Grove was married to Miss Margaret E. Stewart, whom he brought to his new home, and here he resided until his death Feb. 17, 1905. Mrs. Grove died Dec. 9, 1867. To Mr. and Mrs. Grove were born the following children: J. Thomas, of Chanceford township, married Aggie J. Wilson; Agnes Margaret; Annie M. is the wife of W. A. Liggitt, of York; William McBurney married Mary E. Maughlin; and Charles H. married Miss Mae Wise, and will move to Collinsville, the old home having been sold to Mr. John Craley.

Mr. Grove had always been a devout member of the Guinston U. P. Church, joining when a young man, and had taught in the Sunday-school for many years. In politics he had been a Republican all his life, and he cast his last presidential vote for President Roosevelt. He was one of the substantial men, as well as one of the most highly respected citizens of Chanceford township.

WILLIAM H. BRODBECK, county treasurer of York county, was born in Shrewsbury township, April 6, 1851, son of George S. Brodbeck.

John Brodbeck, Sr., the great-grandfather of William H. was a farmer and blacksmith of Manheim township, where he died.

John Brodbeck, son of John, Sr., also followed blacksmithing and farming. He married a Miss Shanck, by whom he had children: Jeremiah; George S.; Nimrod; John; Mrs. Buckingham, of Ohio; and Mrs. Shue.

George S. Brodbeck, son of John, and father of William H., was engaged in the mercantile business, and carried a full line of general store goods, also handling lumber and coal, at Seitzland, York county. From 1868 until 1892, he was in business in Jefferson borough, passing away in the latter year. George S. Brodbeck married Christiana Cramer, who died.
in 1895, and was buried, as was her husband, at Jefferson borough. They had these children: Jabez, who married Anna Burke, and died at Council Bluffs, Iowa; J. C., postmaster at Jefferson borough; William H.; Dr. J. R., of Jefferson borough, who married Sarah Brinkman; Hester A., wife of John S. Rohrbaugh, the railroad agent at Shrewsbury; Ellen J., wife of Fred Brumhouse, an attorney of Philadelphia; Laura B., wife of J. T. Thoman, a horse dealer at Jefferson borough; and Mollie, wife of Calvin Hinkle, a clerk in Leroy, New York.

William H. Brodbeck attended the public schools of Seitzland, and three months at Glen Rock, in 1868-69. He began teaching in Jefferson borough in 1871 as an assistant, and continued until 1893, all but four terms of which were taught in the same borough. He is now secretary of the Codorus & Manheim M. P. Insurance Co., of which he was at first agent. In 1876 he was elected a justice of the peace, a position he still holds. Mr. Brodbeck is a Democrat, and was elected Nov. 7, 1905, to the office of treasurer of York county. He served as clerk to the council for fifteen years. He is a director of the Codorus Canning Company, of Jefferson borough.

Mr. Brodbeck married (first) Susan Myers, by whom he had two children: George D., in the horse dealing business at Jefferson; and Cora M. After the death of his first wife Mr. Brodbeck married Emma Bupp, daughter of John F. Bupp, of Springfield township, York county, mentioned elsewhere. To this marriage were born two children, Ellen A. and Morris F. Mr. Brodbeck is a member of the Reformed Church, in which he is now serving as elder. Mr. Brodbeck's fine home was erected by him in 1893, and is one of the town's beautiful residences. Since 1876 he has been a member of Mount Zion Lodge, No. 908, I. O. O. F., and he has been secretary of the lodge since its organization, and he also belongs to Hanover Encampment, Hanover, and to York Lodge of Heptasophs (I. O. H.) No. 124. He is very public spirited, and is a liberal supporter of every movement which promises to be of benefit to the community in which he has so long been a resident.

REV. ALEXANDER S. AIKEN. To have ministered to the spiritual needs of one congregation for as long a period as thirty-one years certainly indicates a large measure of personal influence and ability as a pastor, and an equal amount of satisfaction in a congregation. Such is the state of affairs found in the Lower Chanceford United Presbyterian Church, where the Rev. Alexander S. Aiken has so long been the honored and beloved minister.

The Aiken ancestors came to America from the North of Ireland after the close of the war of the Revolution. Alexander Aiken, grandfather of the Rev. Alexander S., was a son of William Aiken, and with three brothers—James, John and William—and one sister—Sarah—came to America with their mother. They settled for a time in Cecil county, Md., thence moved to Harford county, in the same State, and later came to Pennsylvania, settling first in Westmoreland county, and afterward locating in Beaver county, where they were early pioneers. They purchased land close together, all following farming, and they were prominently identified with the agricultural interests of that time. Alexander Aiken was a soldier in the war of 1812, and it is thought that one of his brothers was also a participant in that struggle. Alexander Aiken married Miss Mary Henry, a native of that section, of Scotch-Irish descent, whose brother was a member of Congress for a time.

William F. Aiken, son of Alexander and father of Alexander S., was born in that part of Beaver county which is now Lawrence county. He followed farming all of his life and died in that section aged seventy-five years. He married Margaret Van Emon, of Scotch-Irish descent, who died when our subject was still very small.

Alexander S. Aiken was born on a farm near Princeton, Lawrence county, Feb. 3, 1846, and grew to manhood in that neighborhood. He was educated primarily in the public schools, and began teaching at the age of seventeen years, continuing this vocation four or five years. He then entered the Westminster College at New Wilmington, Pa., graduating in the class of 1870. He spent the summer months in teaching select schools at different points and in the fall of 1870 he prepared to enter the ministry, enrolling himself as a student in the theological seminary at Allegheny City, graduating in the class of 1873. The Rev. Mr. Aiken was a classmate of the Rev. Samuel G.
Fitzgerald, of Philadelphia. Mr. Aiken's first appointment was to his present charge, where he remained three months, spending the next six months in Iowa, and he answered a call to return to the parish where he is found today. There is, perhaps, no other clergyman who is held in higher esteem or in closer personal affection than is Mr. Aiken by the people of Lower Chanceford township.

Mr. Aiken enlisted in February, 1865, for one year, at New Brighton, from Lawrence county, as a private of Company I, 16th Pa. Vol. Cav., and was promoted to sergeant at Lynchburg. He was under fire just before the evacuation of Petersburg, being at this time with the dismounted men, but was later mounted. He was honorably discharged at Richmond, in August, 1865. In political matters Mr. Aiken was reared a Republican, but for a number of years, he has been a Prohibitionist. He is now serving his third term as school director in Lower Chanceford township, and since 1891 has been a member of the board of directors of Westminster College—his alma mater. He was married in Huntingdon county, April 5, 1882, to Miss Mary J. Porter, daughter of George and Sarah Porter.

WESLEY CALVIN STICK, M. D., for over thirty years a successful medical practitioner in Codorus township, is a member of a family which has been settled in that part of York county since the time of the Revolution.

John Casper Stick (who spelled his name Stück in Germany), the Doctor's grandfather, was born Oct. 4, 1752, in Reichen Saxen, Hesse-Cassel, Germany, son of John and Anna Martha Stück. His godfather was Casper Stück, whose wife was Anna Margaretha. John Casper Stick was one of the Hessian mercenaries brought to this country in 1775, but he deserted the army in Baltimore, secreting himself in a huckster's wagon, which was bound for Manheim township, York Co., Pa., about forty miles north of Baltimore, and six miles south of Hanover, Pa. He made a permanent settlement there, and prospered, becoming the owner of about three hundred acres of land two miles east of Sherman's church. On Sept. 17, 1776, he married Margaretha Schallin, and they had a family of eleven children, born as follows: Johanas, June 7, 1788; George, June 14, 1789; Elisabeth, Sept. 24, 1791; Anna Maria, March 20, 1794; Jacob, Sept. 7, 1796; Margaretha, Nov. 5, 1797; Catharine, Sept. 19, 1799; a son whose name is not given, 1801; Anna Madalena, Feb. 5, 1803; John Casper, Jan. 4, 1805; Henry, June 28, 1808. The father of this family died about 1814, the mother shortly afterward; they are buried in Sherman's Church cemetery. Of the children Johanas and John Casper settled in Randolph county, Ind., where their descendants are now living. Jacob lived in Carroll and Baltimore counties, Md.; he had two daughters, Susan (Mrs. Richards) and Mary (Mrs. Brown). Anna Maria married Henry Cramer, of Codorus township, York Co., Pa., and had one daughter, Priscilla, who never married. Margaretha married a Stansbury, and passed most of her life in Baltimore; her children were William, Jacob, Lottie, Rebecca, and Joanna. Another of the daughters married a Mr. Gruber, who lived in Maryland, and one married a Mr. Fuhrman, who resided in Wooster, Ohio.

Henry Stick, the youngest of his parents' family, was a weaver by trade and located in Codorus township about 1826. He was the founder of Stick's Tavern, an old landmark for many years in York county, and had many interests, conducting a farm, hotel, general store and butchering business, and looking after the post office. On Oct. 25, 1836, he married Mary Ann Thoman, who long survived him, Mr. Stick dying May 12, 1882, and Mrs. Stick March 31, 1903. They are buried in the Stone Church cemetery in Codorus township. They had children as follows: Henrietta, born July 17, 1837, died unmarried; Oliver, born Oct. 23, 1839, died in childhood; Miranda was born March 6, 1841; Anna Maria, born Aug. 22, 1842, married Israel K. Ziegler, lives in York, and is the mother of three children, John Clayton, Edwin and Jennie (wife of Jacob K. Klinefelter); Emmeline, born Feb. 8, 1846, died in childhood; Henry Silas, born Jan. 28, 1848, married Rebecca Koller. Feb. 25, 1860, and lives at the old homestead (their surviving children are Lewis, M. D., assistant physician at the Worcester Asylum; Charles Franklin, a merchant at Lineboro, Carroll Co., Md.; Rev. Jacob Monroe, business manager of the Reformed Church at Sendai, Japan; John, a student in dentistry; Anna, wife of Dr. Lewis Wetzel, of Baltimore, Md.; Miranda and Jennie, at home); William Chester, born Oct. 26, 1850, married Langama Rohrbaugh, and resides at Hampstead, Md. (they have one son, John W. C. Stick, who is now professor of Latin in the preparatory department of Swarthmore College); Edwin Chapes, born July 15, 1853, died in childhood; Wesley Calvin was born May 6, 1855; Kynes Ambrose, born July 26, 1857, died in childhood; Joanna Alice, born Sept. 30, 1859, married Dr. Jacob L. Barthold, has one child, Miriam, and resides in Perham, Ottertail Co., Minn. Of this family Henrietta, Oliver, Emma, Edwin Chapes and Kynes Ambrose (all of whom died in childhood but Henrietta) are buried in the Stone Church cemetery.

Wesley Calvin Stick was born May 6, 1855, in Codorus township, York Co., Pa., and there passed his boyhood on his father's farm, attending the public schools and assisting with the work at home, the different duties pertaining to his father's interests giving him a varied experience, to which he added himself by teaching in the public schools of Codorus township, when he was but fifteen years old. His further literary training was received at the York County Academy, Washington University, and the University of New York, he receiving his degree of M. D. in 1874, becoming a registered physician in Pennsylvania and Maryland. He took a post graduate course in medicine during the winter of 1876-77. Immediately after graduating in medicine Mr. Stick located at his father's home in Codorus township, and there he has since resided and practiced, having met with gratifying success in his chosen profession from the beginning. However, he planned to remove in April or May of the present year (1906), with his family to Hanover, York Co., Pa., where he will continue to practice. Dr. Stick is a member of the York County Medical Society (which he joined in 1877), the Pennsylvania State Medical Society (1895) and the American Medical Association (1884). He also was a member of the Ninth International Medical Congress in 1887.

Dr. Stick's standing in the profession and his personal influence in the community are sufficient evidence of his value as a man. He has taken an active interest in the general welfare, and particularly in the subject of public education. He was virtually the originator of the Glenville Academy, in Codorus township, and has been president of its board of directors throughout the existence of that school, which he founded in 1892, and has been very active in its success and management. He has been the life and center of the school all this time, collecting the money necessary for its support, obtaining teachers, etc., and has developed the academy into one of the first schools of its class in the State. Dr. Stick has been a director of the First National Bank of New Freedom since its organization. He is a member of the Reformed Church, and is a Democrat in politics.

On Jan. 27, 1881, Dr. Stick was married to Mary Agnes Wentz, who was born Oct. 1, 1860, a daughter of Edward R. Wentz, of Manheim township, York county, whose ancestors came from the Palatinate, Germany; her mother, whose maiden name was Margaret Coulson, was from New Oxford, Adams Co., Pa., and of English descent. Mr. Stick has one brother, Dr. A. C. Wentz, of Hanover, Pa., and three deceased sisters: Lamanda Elizabeth, Margaret and Amelia. From this union three children have been born: Henry Wentz Stick, Nov. 20, 1881; Edward Wentz Stick, Oct. 24, 1884; and Margaret Stick, April 25, 1886. Henry W. is a graduate of the Glenville Academy, 1897, and he graduated at Franklin and Marshall College in June, 1901, receiving the A. B. degree; later he entered the Johns Hopkins University. Edward W. graduated from the Glenville Academy in 1900, and the same year entered Franklin and Marshall College, in Lancaster, Pa., where he graduated in June, 1904, receiving the A. B. degree. In the fall of the same year he was elected principal of the high school of Yeagertown, Mifflin Co., Pa., where he remained one year, entering the Medical Department of the Johns Hopkins University in the fall of 1905. Margaret graduated from the Glenville Academy, now Codorus township high school, in June, 1903, and is now specializing in music. She prepared herself (under private tutors) for the musical department of Peabody Institute, Baltimore, Md., where she has been studying for the last two years.

ABRAM FLEMING, of Franklin township, York county, is descended from Scotch-Irish ancestry. He was born in Carroll township, York county, July 21, 1836, son of Abram, Sr., and Susannah (Cochin) Flemming, and grandson of Timothy Flemming.

Timothy Flemming came to this country from Ireland and settled in Perry county, Pa., where he engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, the date of which is not known. He had these children: Timothy; John; Frederick; Elizabeth (Beelman); Abram; Sarah (Gear); and Mary (Strine).

Abram Flemming, Sr., father of Abram, was born in Cumberland Co., Pa., where he obtained a common school education. When a young man he engaged in driving teams to Philadelphia and Baltimore, and after several years accumulated enough money to purchase a farm in Carroll township, which he operated until his death in 1873. He being then sixty-nine years old. His wife passed away in 1862, in her fifty-fifth year. They were the parents of five children, as follows: Mary Ann, John, Abram, Samuel and Susan. Our subject's mother was a member of the United Brethren Church, and was a very devout Christian woman.

Abram Flemming, son of Abram, was educated in the common schools in Carroll township, and at Dillsburg, Prof. Heiges being his teacher for a time. When a young man he taught school for five terms, but he later turned his attention to farming, and is now the possessor of two fine farms in Franklin township, devoting his time to general farming and stock-raising.

Mr. Flemming was married, in 1864, to Miss Catherine Diller, daughter of Samuel Diller, and four children have been born to this union: Catherine, John, Irvin and Martha. Mr. Flemming is a member of the Church of God, in which he has been elder and superintendent of the Sunday-school, the house where he worships having been built principally by him. A Democrat politically he held the office of school director for six years, was auditor, and at one time supervisor. He is very highly esteemed, and has many friends.

ELMER E. WENTZ. Receiving under the supervision of his father, one of the successful merchants of Hanover, a valuable and extensive training in mercantile pursuits, Elmer E. Wentz has in comparatively recent years commenced for himself a career among the prominent business men of that city that has in it the promise of marked success. He is a dealer in dry goods, carpets and notions, with a store that is centrally located, and with a stock of goods that is modern in every respect.

He was born in Hanover, April 22, 1861, son of Valentine R. and Adeline (Orr) Wentz.

Valentine R. Wentz, who is still living, was born in Manheim township, June 30, 1834. His wife, Adeline Orr, was born in York county in 1840, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Waltman) Orr; she died in 1902. Three children were born to Valentine R. and Adeline Wentz: Allen H., a jeweler in Baltimore, Md.; Bertha E., wife of L. H. Hoffacker, of Hanover; and Elmer E.

Elmer E. Wentz was educated in the public schools of Hanover. His first employment, at the end of his school days, was in the office of the Hanover Herald, where he learned the printer's trade, continuing in that employment for three years. He then entered his father's store, and continued with him until 1899, in which year he started in business for himself, purchasing and establishing a new stock of dry goods, carpets and notions at the corner of the Square and Baltimore street, which is not only a central location, but had been known for many years as the site of a thriving business house. Mr. Wentz's stock of goods has been carefully selected, and since the inauguration of his venture he has enjoyed a most gratifying trade.

In 1885 Mr. Wentz married Miss Lillian K. Stine, of Hanover, daughter of John R. and Leah (Smyser) Stine. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wentz, namely: Leah A.; Irene; John V.; Lillian; Bertha; and William E. Mr. and Mrs. Wentz are members of St. Mathew's Lutheran Church. Among the fraternal orders, Mr. Wentz is a Mason, being affiliated with Patmos Lodge, No. 348, F. & A. M.; Good Samaritan Chapter, No. 79, R. A. M., Gettysburg; and Gettysburg Commandery, No. 19, K. T.

SAMUEL B. HOKE, postmaster and merchant at Summit Station, Manheim township, York Co., Pa., was born in Oxford township, Adams Co., Pa., in 1839, son of David and Barbara Bechtel and grandson of George Hoke.

George Hoke was born in Jackson township, York Co., Pa., where he carried on farming all of his life. He died from an accident while working among his stock. He married Catherine Stambaugh, and both are buried in the old burying ground west of Spring Grove. Their children were: Solomon, who was a farmer in Cumberland county, along the Yellow Breeches Creek, for some forty years, and then removed to West Virginia, where he died; David; Casper, who died leaving a widow and children: Mrs. William Menges (at McSherrystown, Adams Co.), Mrs. Reaver (Menges Mills, York Co.), George and Emanuel (Abbottstown, Adams Co.); Samuel, who died at Frederick, Md.; George, who inherited the old farm in Jackson township, and died there, his son George—the third of the name, now owning the farm; Magdalena, who married Andrew Hershey, and died at Spring Grove; Rebecca, who married Jonas Rebbert (who died about twelve years ago), and now lives at the Penn Grove camp grounds in Heidelberg township; and Katie, widow of Edward Rebbert and residing in York.

David Hoke, son of George and father of Samuel B., was born Dec. 24, 1805, and he died Aug. 17, 1873. He married Barbara Bechtel, who was born May 24, 1807, and lived to be ninety-two years old, dying March 20, 1900. They had these children: Susan, born Jan. 5, 1832, died when sixteen years old; Rebecca, born July 16, 1833, of Hanover; Isaac, born April 26, 1835, died aged thirteen years; David Jr., born Nov. 13, 1836, married (first) Louisa Carl, and (second) Annie Slagel, and resides at Hanover; Samuel B., born Jan. 28, 1839; George, born March 12, 1841, died aged seven years; Abraham, born Jan. 31, 1843, married Josephine King, now deceased, and lives retired in York street, Hanover; Barbara, born June 5, 1845, died aged seven years; Michael, born Feb. 11, 1847, died aged six years; Solomon, born March 27, 1849, married Amelia King, has two children, Emma, wife of Howard Bair, of Hanover, and Ruhel, and is in the cigar box manufacturing business with his son Ruhel and son-in-law, Howard Bair, at Hanover.

David Hoke went to Adams county in young manhood, and the greater part of his life was passed there carrying on large farming interests. Later he retired to Hanover where the closing years of his life were spent and where he died aged seventy years.

Samuel B. Hoke was educated in the schools of Oxford township and remained with his father, assisting in the management of the farm, until he was twenty-six years of age, when he married and for the next seven years farmed on shares. In 1870 he came to Manheim township, and bought the farm he now owns, a tract of 120 acres of well improved land, situated at Summit Station, bordering the Western Maryland railroad. Here he erected a substantial building which he stocked with general merchandise, and he has continued successfully to carry on this enterprise until the present. In 1880 the postoffice of Hokes was established, and he was made the first postmaster, still holding the office. In addition to his other interests he handles grain, phosphates, and almost any commodity needed by the farmers, or their families, in this section. Since 1900 he has given up active farming, his other business requiring all his attention. He has built a fine residence at Summit Station, and is one of the popular and much esteemed citizens of this part of the township.

Mr. Hoke was united in marriage with Barbara Hershey, daughter of John and Nancy (Sprenkle) Hershey, an old family here. She died in 1885, and was buried at Hanover. They had these children: Franklin H., who married Ellen Luckenbaugh, and is farming in West Manheim township; Samuel H., who married Annie Grote, and lives at Glen Rock; Edward J., who married Mary Roades, and lives near Millersville, Lancaster county; Georgiana, her father's devoted housekeeper, a most estimable lady; Vertir K., who married S. P. Bange, and is assistant postmaster at Hokes, and is telegraph operator at Summit (B. & H. Div. of W. Md. R. R.), a position he has occupied since boyhood; Albert, who married Maggie Albright, and is a stenographer at Tacoma, Wash.; and Martin J., of Baltimore. Politically Mr. Hoke is neutral, voting independently. He has served as school director for some years. He was a leading member of the Reformed Church at Hanover and now belongs at Lazarus, Md. Among the representative citizens of Manheim township, he occupies a prominent place.

BETZ. The written history of the Betz family begins with the year 1688, when John George Betz was born in Mannheim, Germany. Records of earlier dates were destroyed during the troublous times of the period. Earlier generations of the family were engaged in the stone business, which was a large factor in the building trade from remote periods. Owing to financial reverses John George Betz, although advancing in years, set his face toward the New World to make a fresh start in life, more especially for the benefit of his family. His marriage had taken place comparatively late in life. He was a man of strong resolution and self-reliance. Leaving the traditions of the Fatherland behind him at the expense of many pecuniary and social sacrifices, he descended the Rhine to Rotterdam, and set sail for America, landing at Philadelphia in 1746. He moved to what is now known as Schoeneck, but then called the wilderness of Northern Lancaster County, in Pennsylvania. This region was then in the township of Co-calico, which has since been subdivided into several smaller ones. This portion of Lancaster county was embraced in the New Red Sandstone formation, which passes somewhat diagonally through the State, and its course all through its extent is marked by sandstone houses and barns. The first headstones erected in the earlier graveyards were of sandstone. Many of the earlier graves remained unmarked, owing to pressing necessities among the living. Through lapse of time the duty to the dead in many cases remained unfulfilled. After a period of well on to two hundred years, in many cases much sooner, the inscriptions on these stones have become almost wholly effaced. John George Betz and the male members of his family followed their hereditary calling, adapting themselves to the exigencies of a new country. Much of their handiwork in its various form and lines is pointed out to this day. The patriarch Betz had six stalwart sons, all of whom rendered him implicit obedience. They made many sacrifices, accounts of which have come down, and are in the hands of their descendants.

One of the sons, Peter Betz, who was born in 1749, enlisted as a drummer in the Revolution. He accompanied Washington's army across the Delaware, and was in the attack upon Trenton, where he met with a narrow escape, his drum being shot to pieces. He re-enlisted after the expiration of his time, and was with the army at Brandywine and Germantown, and was in the encampment during the trying winter at Valley Forge. Owing to the scarcity of provisions and clothing the soldiers would forage for supplies whenever opportunity offered. On one occasion Peter and a comrade visited the turkey yard of a noted Tory and appropriated a choice turkey for themselves. The Tory traced the perpetrators, and came to the encampment to state his grievance to Washington in person. The General promised to look into the matter, and the accused were called to headquarters, where the Commander-in-chief dilated upon the enormity of the offense and wound up with the following admonition: "My children, you can steal turkeys if you feel that you need them, but please keep the fact away from me, for if I am made aware of it I will be forced to punish you." Peter used to say that he trembled with apprehension while in the presence of Washington, but after the latter had finished his lecture he quietly asked them to send him some of the turkey, when they felt relieved. They sent the General a choice portion, which, it was reported, the great man ate with relish. Since the offense was in being found out, they took good care, in future depredations on Tory supplies, that no fault should be found in this direction to get them into trouble.

John George Betz, the emigrant head of the house, died in 1793, reaching the great age of one hundred and five years. He and his family were members of the Muddy Creek Lutheran congregation, which was organized in 1730. His remains were interred in the large burying ground of the Congregation. His son Peter died in 1848, aged ninety-nine years. Another son and namesake, John George Betz, of the second generation in America, was born in 1750, and died in 1826, aged seventy-six years. He was buried at White Oak cemetery, about ten miles north-west of Muddy Creek church, where he removed during the Revolution. He and his wife Magdalena are buried in the center of this burying-ground, in which at least three thousand interments have been made. The White Oak Lutheran Reformed Church was erected in 1735, and was replaced by a second building in 1832. Franklin Chest tombs of sandstone were erected over their graves by their grandson, George Betz, son of Michael Betz, the latter being of the third generation. Until 1847 not a single marble headstone nor monument was to be seen in this cemetery. The first marble stone was erected over the remains of the widow of Michael Betz in 1847, by her son, George Betz. The marble headstones have now become so numerous that the sandstones are hardly noticeable. The remaining brothers removed to distant regions, and the name with its peculiar orthography has become widespread.

Michael Betz, of the third generation, was a son of John George Betz (2) and was born in 1776 at White Oak, where he died in 1824, aged forty-seven years.

George Betz, son of Michael and a representative of the fourth generation in America, was born in 1812. He did a large business in the sandstone and marble industry, and was also proprietor of the well-known "Union Square Hotel" in Lancaster county from 1844 to 1848. This was before the era of railroads, especially before long lines were extended over the country. Stock was then brought from the West, chiefly from Ohio, in droves. Hotels dotted the highways, averaging one to every mile. From three to five droves stopped at a hotel nightly during the season, the farmers in the vicinity making a business of furnishing pasture to drovers. The hotel prices for entertainment, which were regulated by custom, were very moderate in those days.

In 1849 George Betz and his family removed to Ohio, locating in the Western Reserve. The journey was made by canal, a distance of thirty miles being covered in a day and a night. The start was made from Columbia, Pa., at sundown, and sometime during the next morning the travelers passed through Harrisburg, which was then a town of less than six thousand inhabitants. At Hollidaysburg, which is now six miles from Altoona (which did not then exist, nor was the Pennsylvania railroad built across the mountains), the boats were floated on trucks, and drawn by stationary engines up five inclined planes, ascending, and lowered down five inclined planes, descending. This railroad across the Alleghanies was thirty-six miles in length, and terminated at Johnstown, where the journey by canal was resumed by the same boat, to Pittsburg. The boat was then towed down the Ohio river by steamboat to Beaver, where the canal was again taken, the journey being pursued by way of Canton, Akron and Massillon, where it terminated. Thence—some fifty miles further—the trip was continued by wagons. The whole trip required from May 2 to May 18, 1848, a period of sixteen days, the distance being 400 miles. The return trip was made ten years later by railroad in eighteen hours. Before the days of the canal many travelers made the journey on foot. "Movings," as they were termed, were made by wagon. In fact, during the forties and fifties the roads from May till September were lined from morning till night by what were later termed "prairie schooners." Thus the Great West was peopled in earlier days. Later the railroads went ahead of the settlers. In the thirties and forties Northern Ohio was a comparatively new country and was known as "the West." Even now our extreme Western States and Territories hardly present as many indications of newness as Northern Ohio did in those days. The country was heavily timbered, and had only been opened to settlement after the second war with Great Britain, some twenty or thirty years previously. In 1848 the traces of primitive settlement were still strongly in evidence. All buildings, such as they were, were constructed of oak timber. No sawmills existed. Iron was heavy, and not easily transported, and besides the means of the settlers did not permit it. Hardware, including nails, was used sparingly, and it was curious to observe how necessity became the mother of invention. The heavy growth of timber and great abundance of nuts caused game to be plentiful. The younger men became adepts in the uses of the axe and the rifle. Log-rollings and quiltings afforded an outlet to the social instincts of life. The country was largely peopled by New Englanders, and was often called "New Connecticut." In fact, it was often said that a streak of Yankeeism ran all the way from Connecticut to Nebraska in this latitude, and after due consideration it would seem that there was a large element of truth in the assertion. The New Englanders made their impress upon the community. They founded and encouraged good schools, which were very effective. In those days all school visitors were "loaded up" with speeches, and no visit was complete unless the visitor was heard from. A stock assertion was that if the "scholars" were faithful and industrious they might some day become Presidents of the United States! It would seem the orators builded better than they knew, since the Reserve furnished three Presidents, two out of the same regiment, the 23d Ohio, through Hayes and McKinley, while Garfield commanded the 42d Ohio. Probably more might have been supplied, but the truth remains there was not "enough to go around." The Western Reserve contained many men who later became conspicuous in public life, among whom may be named Senator William B. Allison, of Iowa; Mayor Strong, of New York City; Judge Peter S. Groseup, of Chicago; the Studebaker Brothers, of South Bend, Ind.; George Kennan, the Siberian writer and traveler; Wilson Shannon, the earlier Territorial Governor of Kansas; John Brown, who later became noted on the plains of Kansas and in the mountains of Virginia; and many others.

The southern part of Ohio produced the cattle which supplied the eastern markets. The northern part supplied the sheep, the raising and shearing of which, with droving to the East, became a noted business. It required from thirty-five to forty days and more, at times, to take a drove of sheep from there to eastern Pennsylvania. They traveled very slowly, on the average not more than eight to ten miles daily. To deliver a drove in the East in good condition required good judgment and care. Cattle traveled much faster, and were not so easily overdriven. Turkey droving required care and short days, since if driven too late in the day the turkeys would roost.

George Betz dealt largely in stock, especially horses and sheep. The exercising of the former afforded great pleasure to his sons, while the droving of sheep to the East left vivid recollections. During one of their trips the father bought the brownstone quarry and farm at Goldsboro, York Co., Pa., of Mr. Symington, of Baltimore, and removed there with his family during 1857. He worked the business properly until the commencement of the Civil war, when everything in the building line had to yield to the preservation of the Union. He also had an interest in the Hummelstown sandstone quarry in its early days. His practical knowledge of the stone business, as applied, to the arts, was large and varied, and his judgment seldom went amiss in relation thereto. While still in Ohio, during the decade of the fifties, the sons became interested in the Anti-slavery movement and the Underground Railroad. Reform ideas were constantly at work on the Reserve. They became readers of the Columbus Ohio State Journal, which teemed with the accounts and fomentation aroused by the Christiana tragedy, which occurred in Lancaster county, Pa. They also were introduced to Greeley's New York Tribune, Garrison's Liberator, and the Anti-Slavery Bugle, of Salem, Columbiana Co., Ohio, which sounded in no uncertain tones.

George Betz married Rebecca Hummer, daughter of Jacob and Rebecca (Freimeier) Hummer, and they became the parents of four sons and two daughters, who were all given good educational advantages. George Betz died in Mechanicsburg, Cumberland Co., Pa., in 1885, aged seventy-three years, and his wife passed away in Lewisberry, York Co., Pa., in 1871, aged sixty years.

Jacob Hummer was a son of John George Hummer, was born at New Holland, Lancaster Co., Pa., in 1758, and died at White Oak, Pa., in 1854, aged ninety-six years. His wife, Rebecca Freimeier, passed away in 1815, aged thirty-eight years. One of their daughters, Catherine Hummer, married a nephew of Dr. Benjamin Rush, of Philadelphia. The Freimeiers were people of note, and lived at New Holland, Lancaster county, where they settled at the time of their emigration from Germany. Several members of the family had attained important positions in official life before removing from the Fatherland.

Dr. Israel H. Betz, son of George, was born in Penn township, Lancaster Co., Pa., Dec. 16, 1841. When he was six years old his parents removed to Ashland, Ohio, where he was reared. He was given good educational advantages and did not neglect them, later becoming a teacher in the public schools of York and Lancaster counties. He also attended the Cumberland Valley Institute, conducted by I. D. Rupp, the local historian, and A. F. Mullin, and later for several years attended the Normal School at Millersville. In 1865 he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. William E. Swiler, in Yocumtown, York county, and later attended the Jefferson Medical College, at Philadelphia, graduating in 1868. He located in Cumberland county and practiced there continuously a quarter of a century, and now lives in York, whither he removed from the Cumberland Valley, and where he is still engaged in the practice of medicine. He is a member of the York County Medical Society and of the State Medical Society of Pennsylvania. He is a member of the York County Historical Society and of the Kansas State Historical Society. All his life he has been a student and a lover of literature, and has written much for publication. He has accumulated a large library, rich in works on medicine, science, philosophy and general literature, to which notwithstanding a busy life he has given much attention. His pen has given to the world a number of volumes on Genealogy, which required great labor and research. Local history has interested him in every locality in which he resided.

In 1869 Dr. Betz was married to Miss Rebecca F. Weitzel, daughter of John and Nancy (Fisher) Weitzel, the former of whom lived in Fairview township, York county, and died during Mrs. Betz's infancy. Her mother died some years ago in Springettsbury township, York county, reaching almost ninety years of age.

John Weitzel, her parental grandfather, was of Dauphin county, and he was survived by his widow, Christina (Marsh) Weitzel, who was born in 1777 and died in 1850. She was buried in the Weitzel plot at Salem United Brethren Church, in Fishing Creek Valley.

John Weitzel, father of Mrs. Dr. Betz, was one of the original members of Salem Church, and was also the first person to be buried in its cemetery on the completion of the church, in 1844, in the erection of which he had taken a very active part.

Gottlieb Fisher, the maternal great-grandfather of Mrs. Dr. Betz, was an early settler of Fishing Creek Valley in York county. From Gottlieb Fisher and his wife, Ursula Fisher, sprang a large number of descendants in the upper end of the county, many of whom have removed to distant localities. His son David Fisher was the grandfather of Mrs. Betz. Seven generations of the Fisher family have been residents of York county.

Another of the sons of George Betz was Reuben Betz, a resident of Newberry township, the deed to whose farm is, perhaps, thus far the oldest in the York County Historical Society, bearing the date of 1735. His house, built of sandstone as early as 1780, was the scene of a thrilling occurrence about 1830. It was a station on the "Underground Railroad," and a fugitive slave being secreted under its hospitable roof the house was searched from cellar to garret, by the slave catchers, after they had traced their "property." The fugitive, being driven to the garret, jumped out of the east window, a height of twenty-two feet. He ran, but was brought to the ground by heavy fowling-pieces, sixteen buckshot striking him. They were extracted, and the fugitive was taken back to Virginia as a warning to curb the aspirations of freedom in the breasts of others. But he died of his wounds later.

George Betz, of the fifth generation, son of George Betz, lives in Solomon Valley, Kans., and is a prosperous farmer and stock grower. Earlier in life he was a teacher. His son, George Betz, Jr., represents the sixth generation.

Milton Betz, son of George Betz, resides near Dover, and is a successful fruit grower. One of his sons has become a resident of Nome City, Alaska.

Mrs. Eliza Garretson, daughter of George Betz, died in Newberry township some years ago, after a long affliction, in which she was tenderly cared for and nursed by her husband, Jacob Garretson.

The remaining sister, Hattie, was for a number of years a teacher in Newberry township, but for a long time has been an invalid.

Six generations of the Betz family have descended from the original settler. John George Betz, and each generation save one has had a namesake of the original progenitor, although the name, John George, has given way to George.

Much can be said about the origin of surnames, and it has been remarked that the man who could give the origin of geographical and biographical names would know more about a country and its people than any other who has ever lived. That is probably true, were it possible, still the pursuit and study of the subject is a matter of rare interest and fascination. As regards general biographical history, the time must come when all researches in this direction will be treasured as rare and valuable acquisitions by those who will live in the future. Every scrap of family history will be eagerly scanned by the descendants of past generations, and such biographical collections as are embraced in volumes like the present, though necessarily brief, will have an important value. The present generation would do a noble work in making scrap books relating to personal and genealogical traits, and transmitting them to posterity. Newspapers bound in volumes would be a valuable acquisition if such volumes were preserved and handed down to the future. Owing to necessary and unavoidable changes which occur in the personnel of communities such collections too often become lost and scattered. Historical Societies established and supported would overcome the difficulty in part, as everything of rare historic or personal interest should be preserved for future reference.

America is destined to have a glorious history, and it is precisely in the direction in which we have alluded that the greatest interest will focus. It is so in the careers of individuals who rise to celebrity. We turn to their earlier years, and the most trite and commonplace incidents become invaluable. Lincoln, Garfield and McKinley are cases in point of illustration. In a country so widely extended as the United States, where constant removals are occurring, unless some such means are put in requisition it will be extremely difficult to trace relationships after a great lapse of time. European countries have possessed certain advantages which are not possible under our institutions. Removals there from one country to another are comparatively rare and therefore produce no perceptible changes. The preservation of parish records, in which much of the population figures, often throws much light upon genealogical descent. But while such countries afford great facilities for research it must be frankly admitted that their subjects do not afford striking instances of favorable changes in worldly conditions to the extent they do in the United States. We stand upon the threshold of a mighty future, in which great possibilities are involved. This pertains not only to the aggregate, but to the individual unit, as is becoming more and more evident. Formerly the aggregate counted for much, the unit very little. All has been changed by the growing intelligence of the age and its marvelous achievements, in which the individual has taken a leading part. This is the outcome of free institutions, based on intelligence, and fostered and awakened by popular education. Unless the dial of progress is turned backward by some great moral convulsion, we believe that the coming Republic of Republics will crystallize, and become a factor in the economy of the world.

ADAM S. SEITZ (deceased) was born in Shrewsbury township, Feb. 5, 1826, son of Rev. John Seitz, a local minister in the Evangelical Church, born March 22, 1778.

Rev. John Seitz died July 4, 1856, aged seventy-eight years, three months and twelve days. His wife, Eva Stabler (now Stabley), to whom he was married March 10, 1801, was born March 18, 1785, and died Oct. 3, 1856, aged seventy-one years, six months and sixteen days. They followed farming in Shrewsbury township, and were interred at Mt. Zion cemetery in Springfield township, near the Shrewsbury township line. They had children: Samuel, born Jan. 30, 1802; Daniel, born April 26, 1803, a sketch of whom will be found elsewhere; Jacob, born Feb. 21, 1805, died Jan. 2, 1894, aged eighty-eight years, ten months and eleven days; Catherine, born July 4, 1806; Elizabeth, born Sept. 14, 1808; George, born Oct. 20, 1810; Samuel, born Dec. 28, 1811, died May 23, 1893, aged eighty-one years, one month and twenty-one days; Christine, born July 4, 1813; John, born Sept. 24, 1814; Joseph, born March 16, 1816; Noah, born May 22, 1817; Magdalena, born June 16, 1819; Catherine, born Aug. 24, 1821; Adam; and Benjamin, born May 15, 1827.

Adam S. Seitz spent his early life in Shrewsbury township, where he engaged in farming, later locating in Springfield township. He married Marian Miller, born Feb. 17, 1830, daughter of Michael Miller. They purchased the old Daniel Ludwig farm of 115 acres, in Shrewsbury township, near the line of Springfield township, and there Mr. Seitz died Feb. 12, 1905, aged seventy-nine years, seven days, and was buried at Mt. Zion’s Church in Springfield township. His children were: Malinda, who died young; Sarah, who also died young; Sophia, wife of Frank Goodling, deceased; Celeste; Catharine F.; Melvina; Ida, wife of George Miller of York; J. Edwin, a clerk in the York postoffice; Seth G., who attended the York County Academy, the Westchester Normal School, and taught eleven years in Shrewsbury township; one that died in infancy; and Irene, who taught school in Shrewsbury township.

Politically Mr. Seitz was a Republican. On Oct. 10, 1862, he enlisted in Company B, unattached regiment, under Capt. Edwin J. Luthers, and was in the service until July 12, 1863. In his religious belief he was a member of the Evangelical Church, in which he always took an active part.

JOHN WESLEY GABLE comes of a family long settled in York county. He is a grandson of Jacob Gable, who is mentioned elsewhere.

Jacob Gable, father of John Wesley, was a native of Chancetord township, York county, where he was born early in the nineteenth century. He had little schooling, and began his life work of farming in his boyhood. His marriage to Anna Maria Jackson took place in Upper Windsor, York county, and they settled on the farm where they passed the remainder of their lives. They were Evangelical in their religious faith, and lived to a good old age. Mrs. Gable died in 1892, at the age of seventy-nine, and her husband in 1893, at the age of eighty-two. Their children were as follows: Elizabeth, who married Henry Kreidler, of Jacobus, York county; Priscilla, who married John Snyder, and died in York township; Samuel, who married Amanda Overmiller, and lived at Loganville, York county; Mary, who married William Lehman, of York county; Jacob, who married Barbara Defoff; John Wesley, who is mentioned below; Sarah, who married William Shearer, of York; Amanda, who married J. S. Billet, of York; and George F., who married Melinda Hively, and lives in Hellam, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere. Jacob Gable, father of this family, was all his life a staunch adherent of the Republican party.

Anna Maria (Jackson) Gable, wife of Jacob, was a daughter of Abraham and Priscilla (Clayton) Jackson, both natives of Maryland, and the latter of English descent. Abraham Jackson was born Nov. 20, 1783, was a soldier in the Mexican war, and at its close moved from Maryland to Upper Windsor, York county, where he spent the rest of his life. He was a famous wood chopper in his day, and could cut and split more wood in a given time than any other man in the region. He lived to be ninety-two years of age, and his wife reached the age of ninety, both dying at the home of their son-in-law, Jacob Gable, where they had lived for nearly a quarter of a century. They had the following children: Abraham, who died young; Anna Maria, born April 18, 1813, who married Jacob Gable; Henrietta, born May 2, 1815, who died in childhood; Joseph Addison, born April 22, 1817, who died in Millersburg, Pa.; Granville, born May 22, 1819, who was a minister of the Gospel, and died in Springfield township, York county; Mary, who married Levi Knaub, and died in Upper Windsor township; Priscilla, born Sept. 25, 1823, who married John Walker, and died in York; Hannah, born Dec. 6, 1825, who married John Fried, and lives in Spring Garden, York county; William, deceased, who was born Oct. 16, 1826; and John, born Dec. 9, 1830, who died in Allegheny City, Pennsylvania.

John Wesley Gable was born on the home farm in Upper Windsor, June 4, 1844, and as a child attended school in that township. When a mere boy he could do a man's work at cradling and binding wheat and oats, holding his own with the best. At the age of fourteen he left home and went to work as a clerk in the store of Alexander Blessing, at Hellam, where he remained a year, and during the following three years held a position as clerk with M. W. Bahn, in his store and freight room connected with the postoffice at New Freedom. With the money earned in that way he was enabled to spend six months in study with Messrs. Heiges & Boyd, of York, then went to Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and took a course in the Eastman Business College. Returning to the employ of Mr. Bahn for another two years, he next came back to Hellam, and went into business with J. A. Blessing in the same store where he had begun life as a clerk. The partnership continued a year, after which Mr. Gable took entire charge of the business for four years. He then leased the store for five years, but there being only a verbal agreement Mr. Blessing, at the end of the second year, refused to allow him the further use of the building. Mr. Gable, who had just com-completed a fine residence, was not anxious to build a new store, and also feared there was not enough trade to support two stores in the place. In his difficulty he took the advice of a friend, David Stoner, a Dunkard preacher, who said to him: "Johnnie, you always make money; go in and win, and build." His success has proved the wisdom of this advice. For over thirty years Mr. Gable carried on a cigar manufacturing business, as well as his store, but has now withdrawn from both.

John Wesley Gable married in Hellam, Sept. 25, 1875, Elizabeth M. Hiestand, daughter of Henry and Susan (Loucks) Hiestand. They have had two children: Susan H., who married Harry E. Frank, of York, and is the mother of two boys, John Gable and Henry Hiestand; and Chauncey, who died in infancy.

Mr. Gable served as postmaster at Hellam from 1875 until Cleveland's first administration; he was re-appointed under Harrison; out again during Cleveland's second term; again re-appointed by McKinley, and holds the position today. When he first became postmaster there were two mails a week at his office; he soon succeeded in having a daily mail, and in less than two years there were two mails each day. At present five daily mails are received, and six sent out.

Mr. Gable owns considerable property, including two fine farms, one of 120 acres in Hellam township, and one of 114 acres in Springettsbury township. He also owns a ten acre lot near Hellam, and fifteen acres of woodland in Hellam, on which is the historic Chimney Rock. He still owns the store which he built on the advice of his preacher friend, and the house and lot adjoining; he has property in York, on College avenue, and at the corner of Girard street and the plank road. In Hellam he owns eight fine building lots, and his beautiful home is surrounded by four acres of ground.

For three years Mr. Gable served as a school director. He is one of the directors of the York County Bank, of York, Pa. In politics he has always been a Republican. He and his wife are earnest workers in the Lutheran Church, of which Mr. Gable is an elder, and president and treasurer of the church council. He has been superintendent of the Sunday-school for twenty-five years.

WILLIAM H. MINNICH, M. D. In the great competitive struggle of life, where each must enter the field and fight his way to the front or else be overtaken by disaster of time or place, there is ever particular interest attaching to the life of one who has turned the tide of success, has proceeded onward in a confident and positive way, overcoming difficulties and grappling with adverse circumstance, until he has gained the end sought and shown his ability to cope with others in their rush for the coveted goal. Dr. Minnich has been in a significant sense the architect of his own fortunes, having been dependent to a large extent upon his own resources from his boyhood days, while he has pressed steadily forward to the mark of the high calling to which he set himself, while through his fidelity to trust, his deep humanitarian spirit and his definite accomplishment in one of the most exacting of professions, he stands forth as a type of that sterling American manhood which our nation delights to honor, from the fact that honor is due. Dr. Minnich is a scion of stanch pioneer stock in York county, with whose annals the name has been linked for more than a century, and in this county he has passed essentially his entire life thus far, while his standing in the community is such as to set at naught the application of the Biblical aphorism that "a prophet is not without honor save in his own country." The genealogical history is given elsewhere.

William Henry Minnich was born in Dallastown, York township, this county, Sept. 30, 1864, son of Granville and Mary (Spatz) Minnich, both of whom are deceased, the former having died when the Doctor was a child of about two years, in 1866, while the devoted mother was summoned to the land of the leal in 1874, both having passed their entire lives in York county, where the father followed the vocation of laborer until the time of his demise.

Granville Minnich was born in the year 1818 and was a son of John and Mary (Mitchell) Minnich, who also passed their entire lives in York county, while of their children the following, besides Granville, attained to years of maturity: Jonathan and Isaac, who died in this county; Michael, who resides in Yorkana, this county; Susan, wife of Frederick Menkedick, of Baden Baden, Germany; and Caroline, widow of Harrison Keese, and residing in Dallastown, Pa. Regarding the brothers and sisters of Mary (Spatz) Minnich, mother of the Doctor, the following data are available: Jacob F., William Joshua and Benjamin are deceased; Julia is the widow of Frederick Fix, and resides in Dallastown; Lydia is the wife of Tobias Eberley, of Arbor; and Elizabeth, who became the wife of Zachariah Taylor, is deceased. To Granville and Mary Minnich were born only the two children, of whom the elder is John W., the well known banker and manufacturer of Dallastown.

Dr. Minnich was deprived of a father's care when he was but two years old, and he was but ten years of age when his devoted mother was likewise called to the life eternal, so that in a large measure he had to shift for himself when a mere boy, as did also his brother, who has likewise attained to noteworthy success and honor. Our subject's early educational advantages were meager, being limited to a somewhat desultory attendance in the public schools of his native township, but through personal application and determinate efforts he has not only gained a liberal academic education, but also a high standing in one of the learned professions, showing how effectually he has overcome the early handicap. In his youthful years he attended the public school at Adamsville during the winter terms, while in the meanwhile he worked at the cigarmaker's trade in order to provide for his maintenance. Determined to prepare himself for a wider plane of endeavor, he bent all his energies to the accomplishing of his purpose. In 1885 he began reading medicine under the able preceptorship of the late Dr. A. P. T. Grove, of Dallastown, with whom he remained one year, while during 1886 he continued his studies at home. In the autumn of 1887 he was matriculated in the Baltimore Medical College, Baltimore, Md., where he completed the prescribed technical course. Soon afterward he entered the College of Physicians & Surgeons, in the same city, where he took two courses, being graduated in 1890, and receiving honorable mention, together with the supplemental degree of Doctor of Medicine. Having thus fortified himself most effectively for the active work of his chosen profession, Dr. Minnich located in Windsorville, York county, in 1891, while in the following year he removed to Jacobs, where he built up a representative practice, continuing his residence there until 1895, when he came to Dallastown, where he has since maintained his home and professional headquarters, and where he has been retained as physician to many of the representative families of that section. He has met with gratifying success in his labors here, is recognized as one of the representative physicians and surgeons of his native county, and is held in high esteem in professional, business and social circles. The Doctor is a member of the American Medical Association and the York County Medical Society, while in a social way he is affiliated with the Improved Order of Heptasops, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Fraternal Order of Eagles. In politics he is found aligned as a staunch supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and he has ever shown a loyal interest in all that has touched the civic and material welfare of his home city. He has been active and zealous as a member of the Dallastown board of education since 1900.

Dr. Minnich, on May 1, 1894, was joined in marriage to Miss Elizabeth E. Crist, daughter of Michael and Susan (Rohrbaugh) Crist, of York New Salem. Two children have blessed this union: Janet and Mary. Mrs. Minnich is a member of the Reformed Church, and the Doctor of the United Brethren.

GEMMILL. The Gemmills are of a very old Scottish line which has been known in the western part of Scotland since the year 1200 A. D. They seem to have been a family of strong and courageous nature. History records the burning of a Ralph Gemmill at the stake during the persecutions of the Christians in the old country. A now fallen monument erected in Scotland to the memory of Christian martyrs who fell July 20, 1685, bears the name amongst others of a John Gemmill. The first John Gemmill of whom we have any record was martyred by Claverhouse at Kilmarnock in the latter part of the 17th century.

A John Gemmill of the sixth generation from this martyred John Gemmill came from Kilmarnock, Scotland, about 1750, and settled near Carlisle, Pa., where he married Elizabeth Porter in 1758. He was a clock and watchmaker, having learned his trade in Glasgow, Scotland. While living near Carlisle he made a beautiful grandfather's clock for William Gemmill, of York county, which still remains at what was the old homestead of the latter. On the face of this clock is a large raised silver plate, on which is handsomely engraved, “John Gemmill, Carlisle, Fecit.” Having been burned out about 1765, he moved to the Juniata valley, and was buried at Lewiston, Pa. His son, the seventh John Gemmill, was born Nov. 12, 1759. The eldest son was always named John to perpetuate the name.

Capt. Hugh Gemmill, son of Zachariah and Janet (McBride) Gemmill, born in Irvine, Scotland, in 1766, came to this county when quite young. In 1793 he commanded the ship “McGilvray” an American vessel, sailing from Baltimore. This being at the time of the French revolution, and during The Reign of Terror, his ship was seized and carried into the port at Brest. The owners made claim for damages and recently were granted some money, under what are known as the French Spoliation Claims. Capt. Gemmill afterward settled in Somerset county, Md. He married (first) Ann Handy, and after her death Jane Wilson. Later he moved to Newcastle county, Del. He was a stanch Presbyterian elder, and was buried in the old churchyard at Christiana, Delaware. He had a large family.

William Gemmill, according to a faint tradition a brother of the John Gemmill referred to previously, was born in Scotland in 1722. He came to this country and settled in what is now East Hopewell township, York Co., Pa., about 1745. We first find him located about one mile east of Cross Roads borough. He was the progenitor of all the York county Gammills, a family which multiplied rapidly and is now scattered throughout the United States. In some lines it now reaches to the eighth generation. He took out warrants for and sold land to a great extent in this county. By occupation he was a farmer, and also a storekeeper from 1760 to 1780. In 1767 he was one of six commissioners appointed to erect Hopewell township from Shrewsbury township. In 1768 he was a member of the board of county commissioners who erected the first jail in York county. He was an officer in the French and Indian war, and on Nov. 4, 1756, was commissioned a lieutenant and served under Capt. Andrew Findley, who at that time commanded a company of 106 men in His Majesty’s army. His wife, whose name was Jennette, was born in 1725. They both died in March, 1789, and were buried in Old Guinston graveyard. They had a family of seven children, namely: John, Margaret, David, Ann, William, James and Robert. Of William and Margaret we have no account. They did not live to become heirs to their father’s estate.

Major Robert Gemmill, the youngest child, was born in 1762, and died in 1846. He married Sarah Smith, daughter of William and Catherine (Campbell) Smith, both of whom came from Scotland and settled about a mile north of Cross Roads, about 1760. Major Gemmill was the father of ten children. William, the oldest child, was a pupil of Thaddeus Stevens in the York County Academy, was admitted to the York bar in 1818, and died in 1820. Catherine married Capt. James Wallace, and had four sons, Robert Gemmill, William, John T. and James W., M. D. Ann married David Wallace; their children were Robert Gemmill, D. D., Mary, Joseph Gemmill, James David, Margaret and Andrew. David married Martha Gemmill and had a family of five. Sarah married Moses Rankin and had five children. Margaret married Andrew Wallace; they had no children. Thomas married Mary Ann Caldwell; they had seven children. John married Jane Ann Collins and they had one child.

James Gemmill, son of William, married Sarah Wiley; their children were Mary, Jennette, William, Joseph, Margaret, James and Ann. Joseph was a soldier in the war of 1812 in Capt. William Allison’s company.

Ann Gemmill, daughter of William, married David Wiley, a major in the war of the Revolution. He was born in 1747. He lived on Mason and Dixon’s line, between Stewarts-town and Center Presbyterian Church, where he and his wife are buried. After the war of the Revolution he made several trips to Ireland, bringing back Irish linen in exchange for some commodity of this country. His daughter Jennette married James Edie. Margaret married David Gemmill, of John. His son, David Wiley, inherited the home place, and was in the war of 1812, a lieutenant of the 1st Brigade, 5th Battalion, Pennsylvania Militia. [In War of 1812, p. 468].

David Gemmill, son of William, born in 1750, married Jane Hepburn. Their children were: William, Jennette, George, John, Margaret, Mary, Thomas and Ann.

John Gemmill, the oldest of the family of William and Jennette, born about 1745, died in 1798. He was twice married and the father of twelve children. His first wife was Agnes Wallace, daughter of James and Agnes Wallace, and their children were Margaret, William, James, Jennette, John, David, Agnes and Ann. By his second wife, Elizabeth, were born, Elizabeth, Mary, Jean, Robert and Sarah. Of this family, Margaret, born in 1770, married Major John Collins, and had ten children. William married Martha Edie, and they had ten children; their eldest son, John, was a soldier in the war of 1812, from Sept. 3, 1814, to March 5, 1815, a private in the company of Capt. James McCullough, 5th Battalion, 1st Brigade, under command of Major McFarland. [War of 1812, p. 287]. Jennette married William Allison, and twelve children were born to them. William Allison was captain of a company, in the war of 1812, which was stationed for a time in York. James married Betsy McPherson; their family numbered eleven. David married his cousin, Margaret Wiley, and they had nine children. Ann married Benjamin Manifold, of Joseph, and seven children were born to them in York county; they later moved to Washington county, Pa. John, grandfather of the writer, was born in 1778 and died in 1861; he married Mary Smith, a daughter of Robert and Mary (Leiper) Smith, and a granddaughter of James and Mary Leiper; John Gemmill was universally respected and beloved and was a ruling elder in the Hopewell Presbyterian Church for more than forty years; he was the father of ten children, namely: Mary, Robert, John, Agnes, Martha Eliza, William, Margaret, James Leiper, Sarah and Jennette.

(1) Mary married Matthew Grove. They had nine children. Their first born, Hepburn Grove, was a member of the 87th Pennsylvania Volunteers in the Civil war and died in Andersonville prison. (2) Robert married Jane Duncan. They had five sons and four daughters. The four older sons, William, John, Andrew and Smith, were soldiers in the Union army during the Civil war from as many different States. (3) John married Mary Ann Earle, of Ohio. They had three sons and two daughters. (4) Agnes married Robert Gemmill Wallace. They had no children. (5) William married Agnes Prout McCalister, daughter of John and Jane (Proutfit) Mc-

Calister. Two sons were born to them, John McCalister Gemmill, author of this sketch, and William James. The latter married Sue M. Jamison, daughter of Rev. Dr. Samuel Jamison. Their family consists of four sons and one daughter. (8) James Leiper married Sarah Jane Freeland. They had five daughters and two sons. He and his wife and two daughters reside at Freeland, Baltimore Co., Md., where he started in the merchant business sixty years ago. He was born April 15, 1817, and married March 1, 1849. He has always been a stanch Whig and Republican. On Jan. 21, 1851, during the administration of Zachary Taylor and Nathan K. Hall, P. M. G., he was appointed postmaster at Freeland, Md., and has held the same continuously ever since. This makes Mr. Gemmill the oldest postmaster at this time in the United States in point of service and probably in years also. (9) Sarah married William Kirkwood Thompson. They had three sons and one daughter. (10) Jennette married William Wallace, son of James and Catharine (Gemmill) Wallace. Two sons and two daughters were born to this union.

The homestead of William Gemmill, Sr., located two miles south of Cross Roads, and purchased by him in 1756, has been in the Gemmill name ever since. William Gemmill, Sr., and all his family, except his daughter Ann, were buried in the Downing or Old Guinston cemetery.

JOHN McCALISTER GEMMILL of East Hopewell township, York county, is influential in its political, business, religious and social circles. He was born on the farm he now operates Jan. 16, 1848.

Mr. Gemmill received his preliminary education in the public schools of his township, and supplemented it with a course at Pleasant Grove Academy, under Prof. Taggart and Robert H. Smith, the latter afterward becoming a distinguished member of the Baltimore (Md.) Bar. When twenty years of age Mr. Gemmill left school and began teaching. He became well and favorably known as an educator, teaching in the public schools and at Murphy’s Academy. Mr. Gemmill was also a salaried singer in some of Philadelphia’s leading churches. He had been reared to the life of a farmer, but in 1868 migrated to Rock Island, Ill., and secured a clerkship in a hardware store. It had been his intention to make that city his home and "grow up with the country," but in 1873, his father having died, he was called home. In 1875 he married Elizabeth T. Hamilton, who was born and reared in Philadelphia, Pa., and was a lineal descendant of Sir William Hamilton, of Scotland. Mrs. Gemmill's ancestors came direct from Lanarkshire, Scotland, to America.

Mr. Gemmill spent the years 1875-76 in Philadelphia, and a portion of this period was engaged in the produce commission business; he then removed to the homestead, upon which he has since resided. The farm consists of 125 acres, one of the most highly cultivated tracts in his section of the county. He has also greatly interested himself in public affairs, and took a leading part in establishing the first rural free delivery route in York county.

Mr. Gemmill has been very active in Masonic circles in York county, his initiation in 1893 taking place in York Lodge, No. 266, F. & A. M. Later he joined Howell Chapter, No. 199, York; in 1895 Gethsemane Commandery, No. 75, York (of which he was elected eminent commander in 1906); and in 1902 was admitted and constituted a Noble of the Mystic Shrine in Rajah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., at Reading, later transferring his membership to Zembo Temple, Harrisburg. He joined the Round Hill Presbyterian Church in East Hopewell township about 1897, and has continuously been one of its most active members. He has served as trustee since that year, is a teacher and assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school, and has been chorister for the past thirty years. He is a stanch Republican, and for two years he served his township as a careful, interested school director.

To Mr. and Mrs. Gemmill have been born the following named children: Anna E., wife of Rev. C. G. H. Ettlich, pastor of the Hopewell Presbyterian Church, has two children, Olga and Alma; William H., of East Hopewell township, married Mae Manifold, and has two children, Wilma and Robert; Albert V., who for the past several years has been a professor in the Goldie College, Wilmington, married Anna F. Smith and they have one child, Elizabeth Evelyn; John M., Jr., is of Philadelphia, Pa.; Florence attends normal school at West Chester, Pa.; and Roscoe, Chauncey and Norman are at home.

HENRY LUCKING, Sr., a retired brick and lime burner of York, Pa., comes from good old German stock, and is himself a native of Germany, born Sept. 2, 1835. His parents, Caspar and Catherine (Steinschamp) Lucking, both died in Germany, as did our subject's only brother, Christian.

Henry Lucking, Sr., came to America in 1854, landing at Baltimore, Md., on May 18th of that year. He arrived in the morning, and in the evening of the same day left for York, where he has since resided. His education was rather limited, owing to the fact that he was obliged to support himself, and his first occupation was burning limestone, which he followed for one year in York. In 1861 he engaged in burning lime, a business in which he was very successful until he retired from active life, in 1904, since when he has led a quiet life in his handsome residence at No. 115 South Water street, York. Mr. Lucking, in connection with lime burning, also engaged in burning brick for eleven years, and in this business, as in the other, he prospered greatly.

In 1858 Henry Lucking, Sr., was united in marriage with Miss Mary Kottcamp, daughter of Frederick Kottcamp, and to this union the following children were born: Emma, deceased, who was the wife of Wesley Hildebrandt; Jennie M., at home; Henry, Jr., who is in the coal and wool business; Rose, deceased, who married Jacob Keener; Daniel F., a machinist residing at No. 111 South Water street, York; Ellen, the wife of Rev. John Klieffman, a U. B. minister now located at Carlisle, Pa.; Lillie M. and Mollie F., at home; and Ida, wife of John L. Rouse, an attorney of York, who is now serving as city solicitor. The mother of this family died in 1877. Mr. Lucking was married July 28, 1879, to Mrs. Annie Kottcamp, widow of Frederick Kottcamp. Mr. and Mrs. Lucking are members of the First United Brethren Church in York. In politics he is a Republican.

HENRY LUCKING, Jr., a prosperous coal and wood dealer of York, whose place of business is conveniently situated on West Princess street and the Bridge, was born in York in 1860, son of Henry and Mary (Kottcamp) Lucking. He attended the schools of that city, and learned the blacksmith's trade with Spangler Bros., which occupation he followed for eight and one half years. In 1884 he engaged in the coal and wood business on College avenue, where he continued for eight years, at the end of which period he came to his present place of business, where he has since been located. His business is constantly increasing, and Mr. Lucking's straightforward ways of dealing together with his reputation for honesty and integrity, have won the confidence of the people of York, thereby securing for him a constant trade.

Mr. Lucking was married first to Alice Greiman, a daughter of Charles F. Greiman, and she died in 1894, and was buried at Prospect Hill cemetery. She bore her husband the following children: Evelyn K., Charles H., Mary C., Mabel E., George D., Annie and Paul E. Mr. Lucking, after the death of his first wife, married Irene M. Butler, and they reside in their pleasant home at No. 514 South Duke street. In his political belief Mr. Lucking is a Republican. He and his family are valued members of Christ Lutheran Church of York.

MILTON B. GIBSON, ex-mayor of York, York county, is the great-grandnephew of Chief Justice John Bannister Gibson. The Gibson family is of Scotch-Irish descent and one of the oldest and best known in Pennsylvania, and has left its impress upon the social, political and military history of the State.

Col. George Gibson, Mayor Gibson's great-great-grandfather, was a son of George Gibson, Esq., of Lancaster, Pa., a notable figure in the early military life of the country, who emigrated to America from County Derry, Ireland, early in the eighteenth century. In his younger manhood Col. Gibson had been engaged in the trade to the West Indies, and afterward was a trader with the Indians at Fort Pitt. Returning to the East, he bought a farm and settled at Gibson's Rock, Perry county (then a part of Cumberland), and married Anna West, a descendant of the Wests of Ireland. During the Revolutionary war he enlisted at Fort Pitt a company of 100 brave men, sharpshooters known as "Gibson's Lambs." He was commissioned colonel of the 1st Virginia Regiment, joined Washington before the evacuation of New York, and took part in many of the leading battles of the Revolution. In 1791 he took command of a regiment under Gen. St. Clair, in his campaign in Ohio against the Indians of the Northwest Territory, and lost his life at the battle of Miami Village, dying at Fort Jefferson, Ohio, Dec. 14, 1791. He left three sons, of whom John Bannister Gibson became Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, occupying the bench from 1816 to 1851, and was one of the most distinguished jurists of the State. Another son, Brig.-Gen. George Gibson, was chief of the commissary department for a period of forty years. The third son was Francis F., great-grandfather of Milton B. Gibson, who was also in the army, and filled several civil positions with honor and fidelity. A relative of these gentlemen, whose name was also George Gibson, was a Presidential elector in 1789, voting for the first President of the United States. Other relatives of the grandfather of our subject held eminent and responsible positions under the State government.

Robert Gibson, the grandfather of Milton B. Gibson, was a native and resident of Perry county, Pa., and was familiarly known as "Squire Gibson. He was appointed justice-of-the-peace by Gov. Pollock, and served continuously in that office for a period of thirty-seven years. He married Hannah Kreamer, and they were blessed with three children: Francis F., George A. and Mary.

Francis F. Gibson was a surveyor by profession, but during the latter part of his life pursued a general merchandising business near Landisburg, Perry county, where he died in 1867, when only thirty-seven years old. He was married to Mary Ann Stiebel, daughter of Judge Jacob Stiebel, of Perry county, who died, leaving a son, Francis S. Several years later Mr. Gibson married again, espousing Catherine E. Baker, granddaughter of the late Conrad Holman, of Perry county. This union was blessed with two children: Milton Bucher and Walter Spotts, the latter dying in infancy.

Milton B. Gibson's father died when he was but seven years old and he grew to manhood deprived of paternal care. He received his elementary education in the common schools, completed his academic studies at Bloomfield Academy, in his native county, and taught successfully for three years. In 1881 he purchased his father's property near Landisburg, and engaged in mercantile pursuits for several years, during which time he became interested in the Weaver Organ & Piano Company, which was at that time building the factory which it now occupies in York. Mr. Gibson became a stockholder, and, making a success as a retail salesman of their instruments, was soon appointed State representative for the company in Pennsylvania. In 1885 he removed to York, where he has since resided. In 1886 he was elected secretary of the company, and in September, 1890, at the death of Mr. J. O. Weaver, the founder of the company, he was elected treasurer and general manager in addition to the secretaryship. In 1896 he was elected to his present position, that of president of the company. The Weaver Organ & Piano Company has now a capacity that enables it to supply far more than a mere local market, and the details of its present output will be found elsewhere.

Milton B. Gibson was married, April 18, 1882, to Miss Elizabeth S. Shumaker, daughter of Samuel Shumaker, of Harrisburg, Pa., who was prominent in public and business affairs of Perry county. To this union were born five children: Holman S., who died July 10, 1897; Amy Ruth, who died in infancy in 1889; Edith Belle, wife of W. T. Sibbett, manager of the Keystone carpet mills; Catherine Blanche and Marion Elisabeth, both graduates of the York high school, class of 1905.

In politics Mr. Gibson is a Republican, and in 1898 he was elected to the select council of the city of York for a period of four years, from the Second ward. In 1902 he was elected mayor of York for a period of three years. He is a member and one of the organizers of Heidelberg Chapter, No. 38, Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, a religious organization, and is a member and past chancellor of Crystal Lodge, No. 248, Knights of Pythias. In religion he is affiliated with the Reformed Church, being a member of the congregation at Heidelberg, in which he is an elder and has been acting superintendent of the Sunday-school for the past twelve years. Mr. Gibson is a director of the Young Men's Christian Association of York, and a member of its important committees. He is also vice-president of the Pennsylvania State Sunday-School Association, of which Mr. John Wannemaker is president.

Mr. Gibson was one of the organizers of the York Card & Paper Company, and was a director and vice-president of the company for several years. He is a member of the International Advisory Board of the Philadelphia Commercial Museum, and was a delegate to the congress of delegates for North and South America which met in Philadelphia, June 1st to 5th, 1897, to dedicate the museum and transact business of international import. Mr. Gibson is a sagacious business man, and his abilities have pushed to the fore the important company which he represents.

Mr. Milton B. Gibson has for years been a conspicuous figure in the ranks of the Republican party in York, and in addition to having been a member of the select council, and mayor of the city, was one of the committee on the eminently successful sesqui-centennial celebration of the organization of York county, observed in York, the first week in September, 1899. The committee was chosen by the city council, the board of trade and the Merchants' Association. Mr. Gibson became president of the joint committee, and was one of the chief promoters of the grand jubilee, and took an active part in the preparation of the memorial volume published at that time.

As mayor of York, Mr. Gibson honored the city as much as the city honored him, his clean and dignified administration of the city's affairs having had much to do with maintaining the Republican supremacy which was so emphatically expressed in the election of February, 1905. In brief, Mr. Gibson is honored abroad as much as at home, and it was a fitting compliment to him and to the city that he was made a member and served on the staff of the late Gen. Joseph Wheeler in the great inaugural parade March 4, 1905—a parade that was the prelude to the most notable inauguration in the history of the country.

THEODORE R. HELB occupies a foremost place among the prominent business men of York which would justify his being pointed out as one of the notable examples of the self-made man in that city today. The average man is well contented to achieve success in the commercial affairs to which his best talents must be devoted. But Mr. Helb has broader ideas of life, believing that mere money getting cannot fill the full measure of human satisfaction, and, as he was obliged to give his early years entirely to work, so he has made time since opportunity permitted for travel and the social amenities in which he takes such pleasure. He is still in his prime, and able to enjoy to the full the ample fortune he has accumulated. The fact that it has been acquired by his own efforts undoubtedly gives his appreciation a keener point.

Mr. Helb is one of York county’s native sons, having been born Oct. 17, 1851, in Shrewsbury township (now Railroad borough). He attended the public schools there and in the city of Baltimore, and began work early, learning the trade of brewer. When he began the business for himself at York, in 1873, there was nothing to suggest the magnificent establishment which he now owns and conducts. So modest, indeed, was his start that for the first ten years he himself did the most important part of the manual labor necessary, having one assistant during the winter months, and none the rest of the year. But Mr. Helb knew his business thoroughly, and realized its possibilities. He was also apt at recognizing real improvements and has always had a progressive spirit which not only enabled him to keep up with new methods and ideas, but also to inaugurate a number himself. By strict attention to the wants of his patrons he increased his custom until he found it had reached what to him would have been at one time undreamed-of proportions. He was conservative and not over-sanguine, and only added to or remodeled his brewery as the actual demands of business necessitated. But he was never slow to take advantage of a good opening or indifferent to his opportunities, and he has at the present day an establishment which for up-to-date equipment in second to none in the country. It is finely planned architecturally, presenting an artistic appearance, and no establishment in York is kept up better. That Mr. Helb is one of the most substantial citizens of York, the most prominent man in his line in that city, and one of the best known throughout the United States, is but the natural climax to his career, though to the mere observer, with nothing to judge the race by but the start and the finish, it seems extraordinary. He commenced with absolutely no financial assistance, a fact which kept him in moderate circumstances for a number of years, during which he was obliged to make the best use of his inherent traits of thrift and economy. Thus he fixed many excellent habits, which have won him good-will and friendship wherever he has gone. His chief characteristics are the sterling ones that form the basis of success and happiness of the lasting sort—industry, honesty, application and reasonable enterprise.

Among the secret fraternities Mr. Helb is well known, being a member of the Odd Fellows, Elks, Foresters, Knights of Pythias, Knights of the Mystic Chain, Knights of Malta, Red Men and Heptasophs. He has taken particular interest in the last named order, which he helped to organize, and of which he was the first supreme treasurer, holding that office for four years.

Mr. Helb was married to Emma Louise Rausch, daughter of John Rausch, a shoe merchant of Baltimore, Md., and two children have been born of this union, Louis and Herbert, both of whom have been well-educated. Louis being a graduate of Nazareth Hall, and of the Polytechnic Institute, class of 1894; Herbert graduated from the Maryland Institute, in Baltimore, in 1903. Both sons are engaged with their father in official capacities. The family home is a magnificent brownstone and marble structure, probably the costliest residence in the city, and is charming in all its appointments.

Mr. Helb has probably found his greatest pleasure in travel. He has made five voyages to Europe, having visited every European country except Servia and Bulgaria, and there are only two States in the Union which Mr. Helb has not visited, those being Arkansas and South Dakota. He has visited Egypt and Palestine, Turkey, Asia Minor and Greece and was accompanied on one of the latter trips by his son Herbert, in company with whom he also went to Alaska, and British Columbia. On another occasion he made an extended visit to Mexico, and twice he went to California.

JULIUS C. HELB, who has carried on a bottling business at York for a number of years, has had an interesting and successful career. In his present enterprise he has developed an extensive patronage by straight business methods and up-to-date service to his customers, and he is ranked among the reliable business men of the city. He was born July 28, 1862, in Railroad borough, York county, and is one of the sons of the late Frederick Helb, a full account of whose life and work will be found elsewhere in this work.

Mr. Helb was educated in the German schools of Baltimore. When he commenced work he learned the trade of tanner, with his father, and was engaged at same during the greater part of his early manhood, though before he had reached his majority he followed the sea for two years, and also put in one year at railroad work. He was only nineteen when he entered the service of the Pennsylvania Railway Company, being engaged as signalman and trainmaster's assistant. His experiences as a mariner were varied and interesting. He eventually became his father's successor in the tannery business at Railroad borough. After remaining there two years he bought and operated the Union tannery at Manchester, Md., at which place he was located for six years. He then sold the plant and turned his attention to another line, buying the wholesale bottling works of Schmidt & Wagner, of Hanover, where he did business for five years. He next located in Railroad borough, where he erected and operated the F. Helb & Sons furniture factory for two years. Then he came to York and established his present bottling plant, on East Market street, where he has been continuously engaged up to the present time. He bottles imported and leading western beers, and is the authorized bottler of Helb's Brewery. His facilities insure the utmost satisfaction from his patrons, as his establishment is one of the best equipped in the entire country. Mr. Helb has left nothing undone which would add to the completeness or efficiency of his plant, and he employs up-to-date methods, being a leader in this respect. His standing as a business man is irreproachable.

Mr. Helb was united in marriage, Sept. 3, 1886, to Sophia Schenk, daughter of Jacob and Sophia Schenk, of Pfahlbach, Oehringen, Wurttemberg, Germany, and four children were born of this union, one dying in infancy. The survivors are: Theodore Edward, who is a graduate of Patrick's Business College, and George Curtis and Charles Julius, who still attend school.

Fraternally Mr. Helb belongs to the Knights of Pythias and the Improved Order of Red Men, and is an earnest worker in the Fraternal Order of Eagles, Eyrie No. 183, of which he has been a member since he resided in York. Politically he supports the Republican party. In religion he inclines to the doctrines of the Lutheran Church.

JAMES ANDERSON, ex-county poor director, and an influential citizen of East Hopewell township, York county, was born in the old log house on his father's farm, June 4, 1843. son of James and Mary E. (Miller) Anderson.

James Anderson, the great-grandfather of our subject, was born in Ireland, and came to America with his wife. He took up 339 acres of land in what is now East Hopewell township, the tract being known on the old patent as "Unlikely Harbour." It was patented in two tracts, the first bearing the date of Feb. 18, 1773, and the other Dec. 21, 1786.

James Anderson, son of James, was born on this farm, and followed farming throughout life. He acquired the home farm, upon which he remained until his death, which occurred in 1832; he was buried in the old Round Hill cemetery, where his wife, who had been Esther Thom, of Dauphin county, was also interred. They were Presbyterians in faith, being what was known as Blue Stocking Presbyterians. The children born to this worthy couple were: James, the father of our subject; John, who died in Hopewell township, married Susan Brown; William went to Hancock Co., Ohio, where he married Jane — and died; Esther, Mrs. Joseph Edgar, died in East Hopewell township; Sarah, Mrs. Thomas Grove, died in Chanceford township; Margaret, Mrs. William Wilson, died in Hopewell township; Rachel died unmarried as did Agnes; and Polly, became the wife of Warren Anderson, who accompanied her brother to Ohio, and she died in that State.

James Anderson, the father of our subject, and the third of that name, was born in the old log house where three generations of the family have been born, March 6, 1799, and received the education common to the youth of his day. He followed farming all of his life, taking the home place at the death of his father. He sold 101 acres to his brother John, from whom he later repurchased it. He erected a stone house on another part of the farm about 1850, and there died in May, 1876. He was a member of the Round Hill Presbyterian Church in his earlier years. Reared a Whig when the Know Nothing party came into existence he joined the Democrats. James Anderson married Mary E. Miller, born in Hopewell township, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Trout) Miller, and she survived her husband until about 1885, when she passed away. She had these children: Esther, died in infancy; Esther, married William Zellers and died in Hopewell township; Elizabeth, twin to Esther, married Benjamin Anderson, and lives in Pawt township; John, of Red Lion, married Alice Flinchbaugh; James, our subject; Sarah Agnes, died at the age of twenty-two years; Priscilla E., died at the age of twenty-three years; Susan A. M., deceased single; and Geary F., of Hopewell township, married Annie McFartridge.

James Anderson, our subject, attended the old-fashioned schools, his first teacher being Lucretia Prall, and the last, a Mr. Ebaugh. He remained with his father until his twenty-fifth year, when he started out in life for himself. He purchased the tract which he now owns, formerly owned by his father, and erected all of the buildings on the place. Mr. Anderson has successfully followed the calling of his ancestors. His property is well located, his buildings commodious, and his home surroundings indicative of thrift and good management. He has been an ardent Democrat all of his life, and cast his first vote for McClellan. Since that time he has missed voting but two elections, one being when Greeley was candidate, when Mr. Anderson would not support him. He has served in many township offices. In a strong Republican township he was elected justice of the peace for one term and prior to this he served one term as school director. He was elected poor director in the fall of 1899 and served as such one term. In 1904 he served as supervisor of his township. He is a member of the Stewartstown Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Anderson was married, in 1877, to Miss Mary McFartridge, born in Hopewell township, daughter of George and Susan (Grove) McFartridge, the former of whom, who was a shoemaker by trade although he followed farming, is now deceased, while the latter is still living, aged about sixty-nine years. Mrs. Anderson is a member of the Stewartstown Presbyterian Church and of the Home Missionary Society. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Anderson are as follows: William L., in the feed business in York; James Thom, ex-teacher, in the feed business with his brother, William; Alda E., educated in the public schools, the York County Academy and the Shippensburg Normal; George E., Robert R., Mary Susan and Georgie A., all at home; and Esther J., who died in infancy.

GEORGE E. HOLTZAPPEL, M. D. Hesse-Cassel of the Fatherland contributed the name of Holtzapple to the records of American patriots who braved the dangers and privations of a pioneer life in order to obtain the precious boon of liberty. The emigrant ancestor settled in Lancaster county, the next generation moving to a point some three miles northwest of the present site of York—then a wild and unbroken wilderness. There and thereabouts succeeding generations of the family have tilled the soil and maintained an honored name to the present day. A worthy member of the last generation is Dr. George E. Holtzapple, a prominent and successful physician of York.

Erasmus Holtzapple, the original emigrant, crossed the Atlantic in 1731. Christian names then grow dim with the years until Grandfather George Holtzapple appears on the scene, a prosperous, stirring farmer of “ye old time” when the tiller of the soil stood first in the ranks of society. In his generation the father also, Israel E. Holtzapple, was a man of influence and position in the community, his farm consisting of a part of the original Holtzapple holdings. Israel E. Holtzapple married Christiana Lecrone, daughter of John Lecrone, of an old and worthy agricultural family of the county, and they became the parents of eight children, three sons and five daughters. Of these children, Noah P. died in July, 1903; John H. is a machinist in York; Mary is the wife of Adam Stover, of York; Ella J. is the widow of J. D. Folkemer, of Baltimore; Clara A. married Charles Myers, a farmer at Hanover Junction; Louisa A. married Edward Gladfelter, a merchant at Seven Valley; Annie I. is Mrs. Wiley Shepperd, of Seven Valley; and Dr. George E. is mentioned below. Israel E. Holtzapple, the father, lived the Psalmist’s allotted span, and died Oct. 13, 1900, but his widow is still living, being now sixty-nine years of age.

On the old homestead which had witnessed the joys and sorrows of many of his ancestors, Dr. Holtzapple first opened his eyes on the scene of action, May 22, 1862. The period of childhood and adolescence was spent in the manner of children of the well-to-do farmers of that section of the county, his earlier scholastic training being that of the country school. Before taking up his professional course the Doctor attended York Collegiate Institute, several sessions of the York County Normal School, and taught four years in the public schools of York county. He then entered Bellevue Hospital Medical College of New York, and after a thorough course there was graduated in the class of 1884. Dr. Holtzapple has always been a deep student of his profession, and besides his private reading has taken two post-graduate courses in medicine and one in philosophy, in 1894 at the Post-graduate Medical School and Hospital in New York, and in 1899 at Johns Hopkins Medical School in Baltimore. His course in philosophy was what is known as a non-resident course, covering a period of three years, the school being Lebanon Valley College.

Upon taking his degree in 1884, Dr. Holtzapple practiced for a short period at Loganville, York county, and then at Seven Valley, where he established the excellent reputation which made it a comparatively easy matter to secure the splendid practice which he now enjoys in York. As referred to before, the Doctor is a student, a lover of his profession, and is enthusiastic in everything that pertains to it. He has made quite a reputation as a writer on medical topics, these forming important and valuable contributions to medical literature. He was one of the first to make use of oxygen-gas in the treatment of pneumonia, and in other acute affections attended by carbonic acid-gas poisoning. He also made a most valuable contribution on that rare and unique disease known as "family periodic paralysis" and its treatment. He reported seventeen cases, with six deaths, a larger number than had hitherto been reported by any American observer, and the first deaths in this disease reported in medical literature.

By invitation the Doctor read an extensive paper on this subject at the annual meeting of the American Medical Association, held in Portland, Oregon, in July, 1905.

Dr. Holtzapple keeps in close touch with his profession through the different organizations, being a member of the county, State and national societies, and he is attending physician to York hospital. He has for a number of years been the reporter of the local county society for the Pennsylvania "Medical Journal," the official journal of the State Society. As a member of the committee of Arrangements for the Fifty-third annual meeting of the State society, and chairman of the committee on Halls and Exhibits, he contributed largely to the splendid success of that meeting. The Doctor has served as president of the local society, and while at Seven Valley was surgeon to the Northern Central Railroad.

In 1902, in order to get some relief from the extensive practice he was required to serve, Dr. Holtzapple traveled extensively in England, France, Spain, Belgium, Germany, Austria and the valley of the Rhine, returning to his work with increased enthusiasm. Three years later (1905) with his family he made a ten-thousand mile tour of the home land, visiting Yellowstone National Park and the Great West, including the exposition at Portland, Ore., where, as stated before, he attended the meeting of the American Medical Association.

On Dec. 9, 1886, Dr. George E. Holtzapple was united in marriage to Miss Mahala Gladfelter, daughter of Philip and Catherine Gladfelter, substantial farming people of the county, now both deceased. To this union has been born one child, Gertrude Sabilla, now an interesting and attractive student at York Collegiate Institute.

Dr. Holtzapple is an active and prominent worker in Christ Lutheran Church, taking great interest in the young people and their welfare, being at the present time assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school. He is an active worker in the Y. M. C. A., and is also a member of the York County Historical Society. Both he and his family have made a large place in the hearts of York people since coming among them, and are the recipients of much attention in the most exclusive social circles.
FREDERICK W. WEBER. It has become a truism that the man with a specialty, one who thoroughly understands a business from the ground up, is he who is the most likely to succeed in life. In these days, when industries and enterprises of all kinds are being developed, it is the practical man who is wanted. There is an abundance of capital in the land ever ready to be enlisted in undertakings that promise success. And at junctures like that the man of the hour is he who can conduct the various departments of the enterprise through the intricacies of actual operation. Frederick W. Weber is a practical man. He knows how to do things in the special line of work to which he has devoted himself. He is the treasurer of the Hanover Cordage Company, one of the active industries of that city, and it is a field of industry in which he is most thoroughly at home. The present works were established Jan. 29, 1900, by Mr. John Greenaway, Frederick W. Weber and George H. Bonte, who were known as the Bonte Cordage Company, Limited. This company successfully operated until April, 1903, when Mr. Bonte sold his interests to H. N. Gitt and C. J. Delone, of Hanover, and the Hanover Cordage Company was then incorporated by the following gentlemen: President, H. N. Gitt; vice-president and superintendent, John Greenaway; secretary, C. J. Delone; treasurer, Frederick W. Weber. They took the entire interests of the Bonte Cordage Company, Limited. New machinery was added and the equipment of the plant, once improved and increased, has since been preserved and operated in excellent condition. The business of the company has rapidly increased since the new management has thus come into possession. The capital stock is $100,000, and 150 men and boys are employed. The products of the company are sold through the United States. Mr. Weber has had many years' experience in this branch of manufacture and understands all the details of the cordage business, having started in when a boy fifteen years of age, entering the employ of the Elizabethport Steam Cordage Works of Elizabeth, N. J., in 1878. He has worked in all the branches, such as preparing the various fibres, spinning, etc., and even selling the finished product in many of the States of the Union. It may be mentioned that his maternal grandfather, Frederick Rutchow, came from Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Germany, where he was engaged in the manufacture of twine and cordage, when the business was all done by hand. He was a very successful man in that line and an expert workman. In 1854 Mr. Rutchow came to America with the intention of locating a plant in Cincinnati, Ohio, but finding conditions at the time not favorable decided not to do so and went instead to Elizabethport, N. J. So Mr. Weber has inherited to a great extent that quality which he possesses, and which must be possessed to make any business a success. His father, Anton Weber, who came to America in 1856 from Prussia, Germany, is also a prominent man in the cordage business, in 1860 engaging in the manufacture of (hard fibre) cordage, and having worked in many of the leading manufactories in the United States, to-day having charge of the preparation and spinning for the Whitlock Cordage Company, at Jersey City, New Jersey.

Mr. Frederick W. Weber is a native of Elizabeth, N. J., born Jan. 29, 1864. His parents, Anton and Freda Weber, were both born in Germany, and in 1856 settled in New Jersey, and in that State the youth of Frederick W. was passed. In 1890 he came to Hanover and took charge of the Hanover Cordage Company, Limited, in the capacity of superintendent. He remained with the company until and after the sale of the works to the National Cordage Company of New York, and in 1898 accepted a position with the Lawrence Cordage Company of Brooklyn, N. Y. Returning to Hanover Mr. Weber, in 1900, interested a number of business men in the plant with which he is now connected, since which time he has filled the position of treasurer for the company, as well as having general charge of the buying and selling of its products.

Mr. Weber was married, in October, 1890, to Gussie E. Grube, of Rahway, N. J., daughter of Charles and Caroline Grube. To this union two children have been born: Freda C. and Charles A. Mr. and Mrs. Weber are prominent members of St. Mark's Lutheran Church, of which he has served for a number of years as deacon. In politics he is a Republican. He is prominent in the fraternal orders, belonging to Patmos Lodge, No. 348, F. & A. M.; Good Samaritan Chapter, No. 266, Royal Arch Masons; and Gettysburg Commandery, No. 79, K. T. He is also a member of Hanover Lodge, No. 763, B. P. O. Elks.
J. WESLEY MYERS was born in Carroll county, Md., March 19, 1850, the son of Philip H. and Elizabeth (Baughman) Myers, and the grandson of Jacob and Anna (Lawyer) Myers, the latter living to the age of eighty-six years. Philip H. Myers, the father of J. Wesley, is a man of more than ordinary force of character. He was born in Carroll county, Md., in 1822, and in his early manhood married Elizabeth Baughman, who was born in Maryland in 1825, the daughter of Frederick Baughman, a native of Maryland, an enterprising business man, and the owner of mills and large landed estates, who was widely known for his many estimable qualities. For a number of years Philip H. Myers was engaged in mercantile pursuits, and later turned his attention largely to agriculture. He was for thirteen years the president of the Dug Hill Fire Insurance Company of Carroll county. His wife died in 1894. He is still living, now in his eighty-fourth year. Three children were born to Philip H. and Elizabeth Myers, namely: J. Wesley; Maranda, wife of Samuel Wine, of Hanover; and Elizabeth, who died in infancy.

J. Wesley Myers received his education in a private school in his native State. He early applied himself to the vocation of a farmer, but when he attained the age of twenty-three years he began to deal in cattle on his own account, on the farm in Carroll county, Md., conducting the same successfully for a number of years. The cattle were purchased by Mr. Myers at Chicago for feeding for the Eastern markets, and he continued the business successfully for a number of years. In 1893 he removed from his farm to the borough of Hanover, where he has since resided. Since then he has purchased a number of large properties at Hanover; which he has improved and repaired, besides remodeling buildings already erected.

In every populous and thriving region that owes its wealth and superior advantages to the development of material resources, there are necessarily men who lead in this forward march, men whose perceptions are keen, whose faith in themselves is undaunted and who possess the courage to put into execution the plans, which to the dimmer-vised may seem uncertain of success. Mr. Myers is comparatively young in years, but he was devoted in his younger years to active business enterprises, and he has acquired a competence to which he constantly adds by the trained business faculties he has developed. He is sometimes called by his friends a capitalist, a term which in this instance is one of unblemished honor, typifying as it does the achievement of a well-spent life, and crowned with the means and willingness to further various business enterprises which exhibit to the experienced financier the promise of permanent growth and public benefit. Among other business relations he is a director of the Hanover Savings Fund Society. He is also a director of the Hanover Shoe Manufacturing Company, one of the city's leading industries, the output of whose factory is sold through twenty-three stores, which are located in different States, most of them in Pennsylvania and Virginia. The factory makes a specialty of a superior shoe, which is uniformly sold at all these retail stores for $2.50 per pair. It is a new departure in the shoe business, and one which has proved popular and very successful. Mr. Myers is the owner of a valuable farm in Carroll county, Md. He is also the owner of business property on Baltimore street, Hanover, the three-story structure on which—28x100 feet—is occupied by the dry-goods firm of Wentz & Bro. Mr. Myers is not only a business man of superior merits, but he possesses that affability of manner and courtesy of deportment in his relationship with his fellowmen that has won him a wide popularity.

In 1871 Mr. Myers married Mary Agnes Schaeffer, daughter of Noah and Elizabeth (Kessler) Schaeffer, of Carroll county, Md. Three children have been born to them: Milton P., an active business man of Baughman's Valley, Md.; Clinton N., secretary and treasurer of the Hanover Shoe Company, of Hanover; and Bessie E., who died Sept. 1, 1900, aged twenty-two years and six months. Mr. and Mrs. Myers are prominent members of Emanuel Reformed Church.

JAMES C. MAY, M. D., was born in Washington township, York county, Jan. 14, 1858. His parents were John B. and Caroline (Leathery) May, of York county, and of German descent. They reared a family of four sons and three daughters, of whom James C. is the second. He remained on the farm until his fifteenth year, and attended the common schools and the York County Academy. At the age of seventeen he began teaching in the public schools. After teaching four terms he entered the office of Dr. Kain, at Manchester, and at the end of two years went to Jefferson Medical College, at Philadelphia, where he graduated in March, 1881. Returning to Manchester he formed a partnership with his preceptor, and began practicing at once. In the spring of 1884 he bought the interest of his partner, and has since been practicing for himself. All his time is devoted to his profession.

In October, 1881, Dr. May was married in Columbia, Pa., to Ellen M. Yinger, a native of Manchester. They have two children, a son and a daughter. The son, Charles H. May, is a student in the medical department of the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md. The daughter, Mary, is at home. Dr. May is an ex-president of the York County Medical Society, a member of the Pennsylvania State Medical Society, and of the American Medical Association. He has also served as school director for Manchester borough a number of terms.

CHARLES E. ZIGNER, a prominent citizen and public official of Newberry township, who is post master at Etters and a justice of the peace, has been actively engaged in the fertilizer business and the sale of fertilizers since 1887. Mr. Zigner was born in 1838, in Saxony, Germany. His parents died while he was quite young, and he was sent to America by the will of his guardian. Mr. Zigner located at Mechanicsburg, Cumberland county, where he learned the wheelwright’s trade, and in 1858 he located in Shiremanstown, that county, but stayed there only a short time, removing to Goldsboro, where he made horse rakes, being among the founders of that industry. In 1862 Mr. Zigner married Miss Mary Burger, and returned to Shiremanstown, where he followed coach making until 1869. At this time he was burnt out, and after this loss, spent one year in Harrisburg, after which he went to Mt. Wolf, York county, remaining there three years. In 1872 Mr. Zigner returned to Goldsboro, where he followed his trade for fifteen years, and in 1887 he engaged in the fertilizer business, in conjunction with a livery business, which he has continued up to the present time.

During President Harrison’s administration Mr. Zigner was appointed post master at Etters, and in March, 1903, was re-appointed, and holds that office at the present time. Mr. Zigner was appointed a justice of the peace in May, 1903, and has made a very efficient official. Politically he is a stanch Republican, and has held the office of councilman, and has been a school director for a number of years. He has also held office in Cumberland county.

The children born to Charles E. Zigner and his wife were: (1) John B., who was appointed assessor of Goldsboro in 1900, and again in 1904, and is now assistant postmaster, married Emma Riesser, and lives at Goldsboro; he is a county committeeman and is very active in politics. (2) Robert married Sarah Pfisterer, and lives at Cly, York county. (3) Harry B. is a clerk at Harrisburg. (4) Charles B. married Becky Blessing, and lives in Philadelphia. (5) Lydia M. married Prof. Harry Smith, and resides at York, York county. Mr. Zigner is a representative citizen of Newberry township, one of the solid, substantial, enterprising men whose good judgment and public spirit continually contribute to the advancement of the town.

DAVID S. WITMER, one of the prominent and successful farmers in Windsor township, was born June 29, 1845, on the Witmer farm in what was then Spring Garden (now Springetsbury) township.

The Witmer family is from Swiss ancestry who settled in Lancaster county, Pa. David Witmer, grandfather of David S., moved to York county when a young man and made his home near Stone Ridge, where he owned about ninety acres. He was a Mennonite preacher, and built the first church of that persuasion in his section, still known as the Witmer meeting house. He continued his preaching all through that region until he was prostrated by illness, passing away at his home in 1843, aged seventy years, eleven months, and eighteen days. His wife, Magdalena (Kauffman), whom he married in Lancaster county, survived him until 1857. They were the parents of seven children, namely: John, who married Miss Lefevre, located first at Dills-
David S. Witmer was thirteen years old when his father moved to the present homestead. Previously he had gone to school from the age of five in the old Witmer schoolhouse, to John Throne, who taught there for a term of four months each year. From the age of thirteen Mr. Witmer went to the Locust Grove school, finishing under D. P. Brown, who is now in Baltimore, still teaching. From the local schools he went to the York Normal, studying under S. B. Heiges and S. G. Boyd. At the age of twenty, after leaving the Normal, he began teaching, and his first position was in the Tyson school, in Windsor township, after which he was successively engaged at the home schools for two terms, the Tyson for one, the Windsorville for one, the Tyson for one, and the Spring Garden township school for two. During his vacations he usually worked on his father's farm, and was at times a traveling salesman for the Stauffer Cracker Company, of York, spending, altogether, about a year and a half in that business. For three years he traveled for the Osborn Reaper Company. In 1883 Mr. Witmer took charge of the home farm, and ten years later, after his mother had died, he bought the place and has since then given his entire attention to it. He does general farming, attends market, and is in every way a progressive and wide-awake farmer.

The marriage of Mr. Witmer to Miss Elizabeth Bull occurred in York, and the ceremony was performed by Rev. A. H. Lochman, the same clergyman who united Mr. Witmer's parents. Miss Bull was the daughter of Isaac Bull, and granddaughter of Thomas Bull, who came to this country from England. The following children were born to this union: Albert Vincent, who married Miss Florence E. Kernard, and who is in a railroad freight office in York; Edward H., of Wrightsville, who married Miss Katie V. Poff; Eli W., of Windsor township, married to Miss Ida J. Wonymous; and Annie C., unmarried.

Mr. Witmer and his wife are members of the Mennonite Church. A lifelong Democrat, he has always been active in politics, and has filed several offices with unquestioned ability. From 1893 to 1895, inclusive, he was register of wills, and for nine years in succession served on the school board, the last time polling the entire vote of his own party and three Republican votes in addition. In 1900 he was appointed census enumerator for Windsor township, being the only Democratic appointee to that position in York county. Mr. Witmer is a man of considerable influence, able and well trained, and is held in the highest esteem in his community.

EDWARD M. STRICKLER, dealer in agricultural implements, is a well-known citizen of Hellam township, where he, like his father before him, has passed his entire life. His grandfather, Benjamin Strickler, is mentioned elsewhere.

Benjamin Strickler, father of Edward M., was born in Hellam township, near Wrightsville, in December, 1821. The farm on which he was born and where his boyhood was spent is now the property of Henry L. Stoner. He received what, in those days, was a good education in the subscription and public schools, and was brought up to farming; in which calling he was engaged throughout life. After his marriage he settled on the farm of his father-in-law, a half mile north of the Pike, near Hellam. This farm he afterward bought, and there he died in 1893, after a long and useful life. He was widely known for his kindliness and helpfulness to others, and lived an upright, honest and honored life. He was always a Republican in political faith, and filled the office of school director and judge of elections. In religious matters he followed Dunkard teachings. He married Eleanor Bahn, daughter of David and Rachel (Witman) Bahn, who was born in 1831, and still lives on the home farm. David Bahn was a well-known farmer of Hellam township, where he lived and died. He was an active citizen and held several township offices. He was a member of the German Reformed Church of Kreutz Creek, of which he was one of the founders. His daughter, Mrs. Strickler, is also a member of that church. The children of Benjamin and Eleanor (Bahn) Strickler were as follows: Byron B., a farmer of Hellam township, who married Annie, daughter of Frederick Sultzbach, of that township; Edward M., who is mentioned below; Albert W., who died at the age of twenty-four, unmarried; Elmer D., who married Katy Myers, and lives on the home farm; Mary E., who lives at home, unmarried; and Flora R., who is Mrs. Edward B. Stoner, of Hellam township.

Edward M. Strickler, was born on his father's farm in Hellam township, Jan. 17, 1856, and attended the public schools of the neighborhood until he was twenty years old. He also attended York Academy for a few terms, his vacations being spent in farm work. After leaving school he taught for four years; his first school was in Lower Windsor township, the other three years he taught in Hellam township. He married in 1881, and went to farming in his native township, but after five years moved into Hellam, and was there engaged in the meat business for fifteen years. At the same time he served as justice of the peace, his first election to that office being in 1889, with two re-elections since. In 1901 he established himself in the agricultural implement business in Hellam, while he continues to carry on with success.

Mr. Strickler married, Sept. 29, 1881, Clara V. Stoner, daughter of Christian S. and Rebecca (Landis) Stoner, of whom the former, now deceased, was a farmer and lime dealer in Hellam township, while the latter is now living in York.

Mr. and Mrs. Strickler have had the following children: (1) Ralph S., born Jan. 1, 1883, attended the public schools in Hellam township, and York Academy, and graduated from Patrick's Business College in York; he was bookkeeper for the firm of McClelland & Gotwalt, and died May 14, 1905, aged twenty-two years. (2) Claude E., born Dec. 2, 1887, attended the public schools and graduated from Patrick's Business College at York in September, 1904. (3) Carrie V. died in infancy. (4) Walter B. was born June 24, 1892. The family are members of the German Reformed Church. Mr. Strickler has always voted the Republican ticket, has acted as election inspector, and has served six years on the township school board.

G. MILTON BAIR, investment securities, Hanover, has been active in the financial and in the political affairs of York county, and for ten years, as a Republican, he was elected a member of the city council from a Democratic ward. He has for a period of thirty-four years, or ever since he attained his majority, been a strong advocate of Republican principles. For fifteen years he served on the County Executive Committee of his party, and for fifteen years as a ward committeeman. To his ripe experience as a financier and business man he adds a geniality, which has made for him a host of life-long friends. Mr. Bair is a native of Hanover. He was born in that borough Dec. 30, 1850, són of Edward and Delia (Gitt) Bair.

Edward Bair was born Jan. 14, 1810, and was by trade a saddler, a vocation which he followed through life, surviving to the age of seventy-one years, his death occurring Sept. 14, 1882. His father, John Bair, was also a saddler by trade, and was twice married, first to a Miss Bittinger. Delia (Gitt) Bair, the mother of our subject, was born in Hanover in 1813, and was a sister of Josiah W. Gitt. She died in August, 1903. To Edward and Delia (Gitt) Bair were born five children, two of whom died in infancy. The survivors are: J. Emory Bair, cashier of the Gettysburg National Bank, one of the oldest national banking institutions in that city; G. Milton; and Alice O., wife of Jacob N. Slagle, for many years treasurer of the Hanover Savings Fund Society.

G. Milton Bair was educated in the schools of Hanover, completing his education in the High School and Dickinson Business College, Carlisle, Pa. He began his business career as a merchant, continuing the same for twelve years, during which time, he was associated with G. W. Welsh. At the expiration of that period Mr. Bair engaged in his present business, consisting of real estate, insurance, stocks, bonds and investment securities. Besides the political career to which reference is made above, Mr. Bair was for three years a member of the school board, representing the Fourth ward of Hanover. He is a member of the Knights of the Mystic Chain; of the Royal Arcanum, which was organized in 1886; and of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Mr. Bair was married Nov. 26, 1869, to Miss Emma C., daughter of George W. and Maria (McSherry) Welsh. To Mr. and Mrs. Bair two sons have been born, Edward W., a successful insurance broker of Philadelphia; and Ray W., a student at State College. Mr. and Mrs. Bair are members of St. Mathew's Lutheran Church.

HARRIS LENTZ, director of the County Poor of York county, Pa., is a native of Springfield township, born there Oct. 4, 1835, son of Daniel Lentz.

The grandfather of our subject was a native of Springfield township, where he followed farming, and had these children: John, Frederick, George, Joseph and Daniel. The last named was a farmer in Springfield township. He and his brother, John, purchased the old homestead and there Daniel remained until his death, June 9, 1864, at the age of seventy-five years. His widow, Lydia Falkemer, died Sept. 29, 1893, aged ninety-two years, and both are buried at Bupp's Union Church in Springfield township. Their children were: Daniel, is deceased; Harris; Leah, widow of Eli Ehrrhart, lives in North Codorus township; John, who married Susan Leader, lives in York township, where he follows farming; Catherine, the widow of William Burns, is living in Paradise; Anna Mary, who died in 1874, was the wife of H. Glessner.

Harris Lentz attended the schools of Springfield township, and at the age of eighteen years engaged in the carpenter's trade, which he followed thirty-three years. He was for two years employed with the Northern Central Railroad, from Baltimore to Marysville, and from York to Wrightsville, for a time having charge of a gang of men. Mr. Lentz built some of the finest buildings now standing in York county, especially in Springfield township, having employed from ten to sixteen skilled mechanics. He followed contracting until 1866, in which year he, in company with Fred Scott, purchased the old Falkemer homestead of 234 acres. He also owned the old homestead of 100 acres. Mr. Lentz now resides on a small place of six acres.

of York; William H., born May 13, 1874, married Katie Stough, and is farming in Springfield township; Arabella, born Oct. 24, 1876, married William Roser, and also lives in that township; Harvey, born April 6, 1879, married Carrie Burns, of Springfield township; Harry, born Feb. 20, 1881, married Lydia Krout, and they also live in Springfield township; Emanuel, born May 14, 1883, married Daisy Kerchner, of Shrewsbury township, and is living at home; and Charles E. C., born May 26, 1886, is living with his brother, Harry.

Politically Mr. Lentz is a Democrat, and was elected director of the poor in 1902, a position he has held up to the present date. He is a member of Paradise Lutheran Church, in which he has held the office of elder for a number of years. He is considered one of Springfield township’s representative men, and is highly esteemed in the township for his many sterling traits of character.

JOSEPH DISE. In a publication which purports to touch upon the history of the men and forces whose contribution to the development and material and civil prosperity of York county has been of distinctive scope and importance, it is imperative that definite mention be made of Joseph Dise, who is one of the most honored citizens and most prominent business men of the attractive and thriving little city of Glen Rock, where he has maintained his home for many years. He is a native of York county, and in both paternal and maternal lines comes of old and honored families of this section of Pennsylvania. Aside from his particularly successful career as a business man and his precedence as a worthy and public-spirited citizen, to him also belongs the distinction of being a veteran of the Civil war, in which he rendered loyal service.

The Dise family was founded in York county in the early pioneer epoch, the first representatives of the name having located here in the latter years of the eighteenth century, as is manifest from the fact that Henry M. Dise, grandfather of our subject, came from the upper part of the State, or from along the Susquehanna river, and settled in Springfield township, York county, there passing the rest of his life. He was a blacksmith by trade and vocation, and also became the owner of valuable real estate, being one of the influential citizens of his township. His wife, whose maiden name was Falkenstein, died there also. They were the parents of five children, all of whom except John F., and William are now deceased, namely: David, Henry, John F., William F. and Mandilla, the last named having become the wife of Ephraim Trout.

Henry Dise, father of our subject, was born in Springfield township, York county, Feb. 22, 1820, and there passed the greater portion of his life, having been a carpenter by trade and vocation. His death, the result of an accident, occurred May 13, 1853, when he was aged thirty-three years, two months and twenty-one days. He was a young man of sterling character, and was taken from the scene of life’s endeavors in the very flower of his vigorous young manhood. He married Miss Eve Seitz, who was born May 29, 1823, and was reared in York county, daughter of Rev. John Seitz, who was for many years here prominent as a local preacher of the Evangelical Church, and who was a member of one of the prominent pioneer families of the county, as was also his wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Stabley. Rev. John and Elizabeth Steitz became the parents of seventeen children, and many descendants still remain in the county, the names of the children who attained maturity having been as follows: Daniel, Jacob, Benjamin, Samuel, John, George, Noah, Adam S., Joseph, Elizabeth (Mrs. Henry Meyers), Lena (Mrs. Joseph Sykes), Christina (Mrs. William Ludwig), Catherine (Mrs. Francis Grove), and Eve (mother of our subject). Mrs. Eve (Seitz) Dise survived her husband many years, and was summoned to the life eternal Nov. 4, 1882, aged fifty-nine years, five months and seven days. Henry Dise and wife became the parents of five children, as follows: Benjamin is a resident of Avis, Pa., and is a minister of the Lutheran Church; Uriah S. is engaged in manufacturing at Glen Rock, Pa.; Anna Mary is the wife of Lyman B. Moody, of Glen Rock; Leah E. is the wife of Jacob W. Herbst, of Seitzland; and Joseph is mentioned below.

Joseph Dise was born in Springfield township, York Co., Pa., Oct. 8, 1849, and was but four years of age at the time of his father’s death. At the age of six he was placed in the home of his uncle, Adam S. Seitz, of Springfield township, with whom he remained one year, after which he was reared to the age of fourteen years in the home of his paternal uncle, John F. Dise, a well-known farmer of Shrewsbury township. In the public schools of his native township he secured his early educational discipline, which he later as a young man supplemented by appreciative study in night school at Glen Rock. He continued to devote the major portion of his time to farm work during his youth, and was thus engaged at the time of the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion. In 1864, though not yet sixteen years of age, he manifested his patriotic ardor by tendering his services in defense of the Union, enlisted in Company H, 79th P. V. I., and was mustered in at Harrisburg. His command was assigned to the Army of the Cumberland, 3d Brigade, 1st Division, 14th Army Corps, and from September, 1864, until the latter part of the following December, he was detailed on special duty in the quartermaster's department in front of Petersburg. On making delivery of ammunition on the line of the Weldon railroad, his tent mate was killed by the explosion of a shell, he himself having a narrow escape. Mr. Dise participated in the battle of Bentonville and several spirited skirmishes, and at the time of the surrender of Gen. Johnston his regiment was encamped on Cape Fear river, North Carolina, from which point the command forthwith started for the Federal capital, marching altogether a distance of 1,100 miles in the pursuit of Johnston and afterwards to the Federal capital, requiring about two months' time, and arriving in Washington May 22, 1865. With Sherman's forces he participated in the historic Grand Review, on the 24th of that month, and on the 12th of the following July he was mustered out, near Fairfax Seminary, while he received his pay and honorable discharge on the 17th of the latter month, at Camp Cadwalader, in the city of Philadelphia. In Lancaster, the following day, the regiment was tendered an enthusiastic reception by the people of the city and surrounding country, the occasion being a notable one.

After thus closing his military career Mr. Dise returned to York county, where he was variously employed until April, 1867, when he located in the village of Glen Rock, where he served an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade, becoming a skilled workman and gaining the status of a journeyman after serving two and one-half years. Thereafter he engaged in contracting and building, employing several men, and continued operations along this line about one year. In 1871 he entered into partnership with Edward Anderson, in the same field of enterprise, and shortly afterward he erected a store at the corner of Main and Baltimore streets, in Glen Rock, and there established himself in the furniture business, in partnership with Mr. Anderson, this being the first furniture store in the town. The enterprise proved a very successful one, and Mr. Dise continued to be actively identified with the same until April, 1875, when he sold out and turned his attention to the retail lumber business, in connection with the manufacturing of sash, doors, etc., in which undertaking he was associated with other residents of Glen Rock. He had charge of the factory in the capacity of manager until March 1, 1877, when he purchased a third interest in the business, which at that time was at a low ebb. He infused such energy and discrimination into the management of the concern that the business soon began to advance in scope and importance, and he has ever since continued to be identified with the same, which represents at the present time one of the leading industrial enterprises of Glen Rock, the general management being retained by Mr. Dise. Soon after becoming associated with this business he also took up the study of architecture, for which he manifested a distinct predilection and talent, becoming very proficient, and soon assuming the work of executing the drawings and plans for the major portion of the contracts entered into by the firm of which he was a member, the business having been originally conducted under the title of Hoshour, Dise & Co., while in March, 1894, it was incorporated as the Glen Manufacturing Co. Mr. Dise was made treasurer and general manager of the company, of which he is one of the largest stockholders, and this dual office he still retains. The company has a fine modern plant and gives employment to a corps of about seventy men the year round. Work of the best grade is turned out and the concern has a high reputation on this score as well as on that of reliability and fair dealing, all work being turned out on order or on contract. It is a recognized fact that the upbuilding of this important industry has been principally accomplished through the efforts and able administration of Mr. Dise. In his professional work he has to his credit many fine residences, principally in Middletown, Harrisburg and other parts of Pennsylvania, and at Roland Park and other leading and exclusive suburbs of Baltimore, Md.; while in addition may be mentioned upwards of twenty-five church buildings scattered over a large portion of Pennsylvania and parts of Maryland.

In 1886, owing to rumors of official malfeasance and mismanagement, the depositors of the First National Bank became alarmed and instituted a heavy run on the institution, the withdrawal of deposits being such as to threaten the ruin of the concern. The result was that all but one of its officials were prosecuted and finally sentenced to the penitentiary, and at this critical period of the bank’s history Mr. Dise assumed charge of its administrative affairs, taking a block of its stock and becoming a member of its directorate. Through his advice and efforts a reorganization of the bank was accomplished, and its affairs were placed upon a solid basis, while public confidence was soon regained, our subject having been chosen president of the bank and having turned his splendid energies to administering its affairs. The deposit ledger soon gave most flattering assurance, and the list of patrons includes not only the original supporters but also many new ones, while the institution is regarded as one of the solid and ably conducted banking houses of this county. Mr. Dise has otherwise shown his versatility and enterprising spirit. In 1895 he was one of those prominently concerned in the organization of the Glen Rock Wire Cloth Co., of Glen Rock, of which he was a large stockholder, president and director for a number of years, and in 1890 he organized the Industrial Sewing Co., of Glen Rock, being one of the principal stockholders of the concern, which now affords employment to about one hundred and sixty operatives. In public affairs of a local nature Mr. Dise has shown a lively and helpful interest at all times, especially in all that pertains to his home town. In 1900 he was elected a member of the village council, and while incumbent of that position it was largely due to his progressive attitude and determined advocacy that the securing of an ordinance providing for the establishing and main-aining of the waterworks system was made certain. He met with vigorous opposition on the part of many taxpayers, but they all admit the wisdom of his course and fully appreciate the value of the fine water system which Glen Rock enjoys to-day. For six years our subject served as secretary of the local board of education, and it may well be said that he has identified himself most intimately with the social, civic, public and business affairs of the thriving little city which is the center of so much of his interest. In politics Mr. Dise gives his allegiance to the Republican party, while his religious faith is indicated in his prominent identification with the Lutheran Church. He was for several years leader of the church choir, has been for a number of years past a member of the official board, while since 1883 he has been treasurer of the church. For the past thirty-five years he has been a valued teacher in the Sunday-school, while it may be also noted that Mrs. Dise likewise is prominent in the various departments of the church work, as she is also in the best social life of the town. In 1872 Mr. Dise associated himself with an equally enthusiastic coadjutor, Mr. Nathaniel Z. Seitz, and effected the organization of what is known as the Glen Rock Musical Association, which has grown to be an important adjunct to the social and artistic life of the community. For eight years Mr. Dise was leader and conductor of the said association, which has attained a national reputation, having given concerts in various sections of the United States and Canada, by special invitation, and having met with most gratifying receptions. Mr. Dise has made a thorough study of music, and aside from his interpretative skill he has also composed and published a number of attractive band scores which have gained marked popularity throughout the Union. He wrote a prize composition for the State Musical Association which met in Evansville, Ind., and his selection not only gained the prize, but also the hearty approval of musical critics of high reputation.

On Nov. 7, 1872, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Dise to Miss Amanda Frey, of Freystown, this county, where she was born and reared, the place, which was founded by her grandfather, being now a part of the city of York. To this union came children as follows: Charlotte N., wife of Rev. Elmer E.
Schantz, a clergyman of the Lutheran Church, residing in Gordon, Pa.; Robert E., who died at the age of four years; Homer A., a student, class of 1906, of the University of Pennsylvania; Mary E., who died at the age of fourteen years; Joseph I., a student in the University of Pennsylvania, class of 1909; Alvin P., attending the York Collegiate Institute, of York; and Orin K., attending the public schools.

ANDREW KEENER, living in Windsor township, was born July 6, 1836, in that township, son of Henry and Catherine (Wise) Keener.

Henry Keener was a tailor by trade, and he and his wife were the parents of these children: Henry, deceased; Jake, deceased; William, deceased; Joseph; Andrew, our subject; Alexander, deceased; and Susan, Lydia, Ann, Caroline and Jane, all deceased.

Andrew Keener attended the township school near Felton, during the winter terms, but the bad condition of the roads kept him at home very often. During the summer, Mr. Keener worked at farming, which has been his chief occupation all his life. On Oct. 31, 1857, Mr. Keener married Miss Elizabeth Shoff, born in Chanceford township, July 20, 1835, daughter of Christian and Catherine (Markle) Shoff. Mr. Shoff was a day laborer and the children born to him and his wife were: Eve, deceased; Zacharias, who lives near McCall's Ferry; Elizabeth, wife of Mr. Keener; Henry; Annie, deceased; Ruby, deceased; and Fanny.

After his marriage Mr. Keener located on his father's farm for a while, and afterward lived at various places, finally settling on his present home, then a piece of five acres, in the spring of 1870. He later added land to his original purchase, and sold a part for building lots. Mr. Keener has been very successful, and is counted one of the substantial men of the community. The family are valued and consistent members of the United Brethren Church, to which Mr. Keener is a liberal contributor. Politically he is a Democrat.

Mr. and Mrs. Keener are the parents of the following children: Cathrine E., born Sept. 3, 1858, died at the age of four years; Susan, born Sept. 18, 1859, married (first) Leander Hess, and (second) Daniel Smith, and she resides in North York; Mary M., born in November, 1861, died young; Caroline E., born Nov. 30, 1862; Christian Henry, twins to Caroline E., born Nov. 30, 1862, married Mary Ellen Shrace, and they reside in Red Lion; John I., born Aug. 6, 1865, married Catherine Sheaffer, and they reside in Red Lion; Jacob A., born Feb. 28, 1868, married Ida Runkle, and they reside in Red Lion; Alice M., twin to Jacob, died in young womanhood; Pious A., born July 10, 1870, married Tillie Smeltzer, and they live at home; and Laura J., born June 15, 1873, married a Mr. Isensmith, of Dallas-town.

WILLIS W. STAUFFER, a well known educator of York county and principal of the Red Lion schools, comes of an ancestry originally German, and the name in that language implied a "staffbearer." The great-grandfather of Willis Stauffer was one of three brothers who came to this country before the Revolution and settled in Cumberland, Lancaster and York counties, respectively.

The paternal grandfather was born in York county and passed his life on a farm near Freysville now "Bollinger's farm." He was also a preacher in the Mennonite Church and officiated in the Stony Brook Church, where his son Moses is now installed as minister. Both he and his wife died on their farm home. The children were as follows: David, a cracker manufacturer of York; Jacob, who died in Riverton, Cumberland county; Moses; Joseph; Ryal, Mrs. Cormony, of York; Mrs. Ziegler, who died in Freysville; and Lydia, Mrs. Frederick Vineka, of Wagner's ore bank.

Joseph Stauffer was born on the Freysville homestead, and alike as boy and man followed farming. He remained on the old place until 1884, and then removed to his present property in West Manchester township. He married Miss Lizzie Winter, and they had the following children: Willis W.; Harry, a blacksmith living at home and married to Miss Lizzie Moul; Charles, of West Manchester township, who married Miss Carrie Zarfoss; and an adopted daughter, Mary Myers. Mr. Stauffer, who has held several township offices, is a Democrat in politics and a member of the Lutheran Church, while his wife belongs to the Reformed Church.

Willis W. Stauffer was born on his grand-father’s farm, Oct. 28, 1876. His education was begun in the Freysville school, where he went for one term to old Prof. Kauffman, but after his father moved to West Manchester township, he went to the public schools there, continuing till he was eighteen years old. Being of a true student’s nature, he determined to follow the profession of a teacher, and as a step toward preparing himself he spent one full year and two spring terms in the County Normal School at York, studying under Profs. Grass and Crowell. He took his first teacher’s examination when he was twenty years old, and began his work in 1897, at Loucks school in West Manchester. The spring of 1898, and that of the following year, he spent in the West Chester Normal School, and then taught two terms in the home school. During the second he was successful in starting a fine school library. After two terms more at the West Chester Normal, Mr. Stauffer was appointed principal of the public schools of Hallton, Elk county, and two years later, in the fall of 1904, he received his appointment, as principal of the Red Lion schools, where he has remained. Since locating at Red Lion, he has started a Normal school there, which opens in April sometime, and continues eight weeks each year. He also inaugurated a successful course of lectures last winter, which is to be repeated again next season.

In Mr. Stauffer’s early days even while in York Academy, he displayed a marked literary taste, and belonged to the school literary society. As a teacher he has always been active in starting township institutes and did much to promote the West Manchester literary society, as well as the one in Red Lion, later. He has also instituted debates on questions of the day, with the New Salem Literary Society, and in fact throughout the county the cause of education has received much impetus from Mr. Stauffer’s ability and enthusiasm. Politically Mr. Stauffer is a Democrat, and cast his first vote for Parker. He united originally with the Lutheran Church at his old home, but since residing in Red Lion has transferred his membership to the Church there. He has always been active in the church, particularly along musical lines, organized a church choir at the Hallton Methodist Church, and was a member of the choir during his school days. He has secured his education almost entirely by his own efforts, earning the money to pay for his tuition.

Mr. Stauffer was married in Hallton, Elk county, Aug. 26, 1903, to Miss Grace B. Mohney, daughter of Silas and Maggie Mohney, the former deceased. To this union has come one child, a daughter named Ethel.

JAMES KENNETH TAYLOR, a representative business man of the younger generation in the lower end of York county, where he has resided from the time of his birth, is a leading manufacturer of the county, his plant and headquarters being in the town of Yoe. He was born in York county, in the immediate vicinity of the present borough of Shrewsbury, Oct. 1, 1865, youngest of the six children of Henry F. and Anna Y. (Keeney) Taylor.

Henry F. Taylor now makes his home in Dallastown; his wife, Anna Y. Keeney, daughter of the late John Keeney, died in April, 1899. Only four of their six children are still living.

James K. Taylor passed his boyhood in the vicinity of his birth place, and was practically reared to the discipline of the farm, while in the district schools common to the rural localities he secured his preliminary educational training. His public-school work was supplemented by three terms in the Normal Department of York County Academy, at York, where he fitted himself for teaching, and became the instructor in one of the district schools in York township when eighteen years of age. He has pronounced talent, however, in another direction. As a penman he displayed much artistic ability and facility, and this talent secured him no little recognition in an incidental way. After three seasons of successful work as a teacher, under the county superintendence of D. G. Williams and H. C. Brenneman, he decided to turn his attention to the “art preservative of all arts,” for which he manifested no slight predilection. Readily and with due appreciation he mastered the intricacies of the printing business, and several years were devoted to working for different persons engaged in business along this line. Mr. Taylor was not satisfied, however, and his ambition soon led him to formulate plans to engage in business for himself, and he forthwith began canvassing the situation and devising ways and means. Realizing that considerable capital would be demanded to inaugurate an enterprise of very considerable scope, he wisely decided to begin operations upon a modest scale, and accordingly, Feb. 11, 1892, he purchased six small fonts of type and a small Dorman hand press, capable of printing a form five by seven and one-half inches, and with this little equipment initiated the business which has now grown to be one of considerable scope, as the result of his energy and able management. To-day Mr. Taylor owns the finely appointed plant and businesses conducted under the titles of the Yoe Printing Co., and the Taylor Calendar Co., and his concerns have gained reputations which transcend the limits of the State of Pennsylvania. With his six fonts of type and small press Mr. Taylor began the printing of cards, note-heads, envelopes, etc., at his residence, then in Jacobus, this county. He was his own solicitor by day, journeyman printer by night and bookkeeper at intervals. Trials and tribulations were encountered on every hand, and at times the outlook was far from alluring, Mr. Taylor's greatest woe being his inability to have an office of adequate equipment to enable him to turn out a great amount of work which was tendered and which he was compelled to refuse for lack of proper facilities. Many a time, in the coldest days, of winter and the hottest of summer, he was his own pack-mule, never having been troubled with false pride. With finished work that would weigh 160 pounds he would trudge from one town to another to deliver the same, which he carried on his back. His perseverance and unremitting application brought the business to a prosperous standpoint. The enterprise at that time was conducted under the title of the Jacobus Printing Co. New type, larger presses and other mechanical accesories became necessary, and Mr. Taylor made additions to his equipment as rapidly as he felt justified, and finally, almost before he realized the condition, he found himself in control of a plant from which could be turned out almost anything desired in the printing or paper line. His specialty from the inception of the business was mercantile work, and his motto is at the present time, "If it's made of paper, we have it." Novelties of every description are now to be had from this admirable establishment, and special features are cartons, cigar-cases, cigar pouches, telescope pouches, calendars and fans for advertising purposes, besides book, job, half-tone and lithogravure printing of the highest class. The goods of this company go into all parts of the Union, and while the establishment is one of the most prosperous and well equipped under Mr. Taylor's management, the enterprise can hardly be said to be more than an "infant industry," for with the application of his originality, push and marked power of initiative, a prediction as to the ultimate magnitude of the business is difficult to make. A year ago the Taylor Calendar Company was organized to take care of the wholesale part of the calendar business, and it has already assumed great proportions. The two concerns are rated in both Bradstreet's and Dun's mercantile books. Mr. Taylor has made his field of business brighter by a number of years of patient toil and hard, indomitable application. Among his most valued possessions to-day is the little Dorman press, which stands silent in the midst of the fine modern machinery of a thoroughly first-class printing establishment, and the estimate which he places on the primitive little press is based on his full appreciation of the fact that it was the nucleus of the present large business enterprise.

On July 13, 1888, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Taylor to Miss Emma Jane Hengst, who was born and reared in this county, a daughter of John and Fienna (Knaub) Hengst, old and honored residents of York county. In his home are centered our subject's highest hopes, affections and interests, and the conditions are ideal in their nature. About the pleasant heartstone of the home are the following named children: Ada Adella, Austin James, Edna Grace, Florence Estella, Mabel Minerva, Emma Leona, Herold DeWitt, Dwight Clement and Kenneth Hengst. Both Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are zealous and devoted members of the United Evangelical Church, in which he has been a most active and valued worker. Several years ago, as a mark of appreciation of his zeal and his ability as a Bible student and expounder, the church ordained him as a preacher, and he frequently occupies the pulpit. Notwithstanding the exactions of his business and the manifold claims upon his time and attention, Mr. Taylor takes a deep interest in everything connected with the material and civic welfare of his home town, freely giving his time and energies, as well as his financial support, to those movements which tend to conserve the general good. He is identified with a number of fraternal and other organizations.
STEPHEN S. SECHRIST, a well-known business man of the borough of Red Lion, in York county, comes of a family which has long been located in this region. His grandfather was a farmer and distiller in Chanceford township, where he owned a large farm, and was widely known in his section. He hauled his whiskey to Baltimore for sale. He was twice married, and had children by both unions.

John Sechrist, father of Stephen S., was born in Chanceford township in 1813, and was a farmer all his life, during his early manhood also driving team for his father, taking the product of his distillery to Baltimore. He was given the advantages of a common-school education, and made such good use of his opportunities that he became a prosperous and respected man. After his marriage he settled on the farm of 140 acres in Chanceford township, which was his home for fifty-six years, during which period he was successfully engaged in general farming. At the end of that time he sold the place and removed to Red Lion, where he passed the rest of his days in retirement, dying in 1901, at the advanced age of eighty-eight years. Mr. Sechrist was a lifelong Democrat, and an ardent supporter of the principles of his party, but he could never be induced to accept public office. He was a devout Christian, a member of Trinity Evangelical Church of Chanceford, of which he served many years as trustee, being quite active in church work. He endeavored to live up to the teachings of the faith he professed, and practiced fair dealing in all his transactions.

John Sechrist married Susan Fry, daughter of Jacob Fry, and she still survives, at the age of eighty-three years; she has been a member of the Evangelical Church, and active in its work. To Mr. and Mrs. Sechrist were born nine children, as follows: Henry F., a farmer of Chanceford township, who married Sarah Richard; Jacob, formerly a farmer, now supervisor in Dallastown, who married Mary Schauf; Amos, who was also reared to farming, but is now engaged in cigar manufacturing in Red Lion (he married Sarah Craley); Leah, Mrs. Emanuel Stablee, who died in the summer of 1904; Lizzie, unmarried; James, of Berwick, Pa., a United Evangelical minister, who married Della Reichard; Stephen S., mentioned below; William, who died when eight years old; and John F., a cigar manufacturer of Freysville, York county.

Stephen S. Sechrist was born March 24, 1857, in Chanceford township, York county, on the old home farm previously mentioned, and received his early education in the local public schools, which he attended from the age of six years until he was sixteen. For a short time he was a pupil at the Union Seminary, at New Berlin, Pa., and at the early age of eighteen he began teaching, in the home school in Chanceford township. He continued to follow that profession for sixteen consecutive school terms, being engaged at Dallastown, Red Lion and Windsor, all in York county. He first commenced his present business at Red Lion on a small scale, in 1884, and continued to conduct the factory until 1899, when he formed his present partnership with T. E. Brooks and D. A. Horn, the firm being known as the Porto Rico Cigar Co., of which he has always been treasurer. The business increased rapidly from the start, and the firm now has the largest factory in the borough, occupying a building 35 x 85 feet in dimensions, with room for 100 employees; it is a substantial brick structure and was erected in 1900. The Porto Rico Cigar Co. manufactures all grades of cigars from those that sell for two for five cents up to the ten-cent varieties, and also deals largely in leaf tobacco, doing a prosperous business in both lines. There is no doubt that the excellent financial condition of the company's affairs is due principally to the sound judgment and good management of the founders of the business, for Mr. Sechrist has always ranked among the most reliable men in the borough since he took up his residence there. Beginning with a small shop, he has worked his way to a place among the leaders in his line in this section, without aid from anyone, and he is accordingly regarded with the utmost respect by his business associates and fellow townsmen generally. For the past three years he has been one of the directors of the First National Bank of Red Lion, and in all his business relations enjoys the merited confidence of those with whom he has dealings. He has been identified with the local civil administration as member of the borough council and school director, in which offices he discharged his duties with the fidelity and efficiency which might have been expected of an enterprising business man, who understands the necessity for promptness and straightforwardness in municipal affairs as well as in private undertakings. He is a staunch Democrat in political faith, and takes part in the religious life of the community as a member of the United Evangelical Church. Socially he is an Odd Fellow, holding membership in Katahdin Lodge, at Red Lion.

Mr. Sechrist was married in Windsor township, York county, Sept. 11, 1883, to Miss Susan G. Stine, daughter of Daniel and Susan (Grove) Stine, and they have had four children. Bertha (wife of Charles F. Zarfos), James and Elsie, living, and Stella, deceased. The home occupied by the family is conceded to be one of the finest in the borough.

DAVID A. MILLER, merchant in Red Lion, comes of a family long known in Pennsylvania, for the old Miller homestead was originally purchased from William Penn himself, by the great-grandfather of David A. Miller, and it remained among the descendants for over 100 years, but is at present occupied by W. Blouse.

Michael Miller, son of the original purchaser, lived on the homestead first, but later bought another farm to which he moved for a while, afterward selling this property to his son Jacob. Michael Miller lived to the age of eighty-eight years. His wife's maiden name was Sellers.

Jacob Miller, son of Michael, was born on the homestead in Windsor township, and was a lifelong farmer. He bought the old home from his father and lived there till he was sixty-five, when he retired to Red Lion, and gave up all active part in affairs for the ten years intervening before his death in 1895. A member of the Reformed Church, he was always prominent in its work and filled various church offices. A Republican in politics, he was elected to several township positions. Mr. Miller married Miss Mary Ann Anstine, who was born and brought up in Lower Windsor township. Her father was George Anstine, a Revolutionary soldier, and her mother's maiden name was Smith. Mrs. Miller bore her husband ten children, of whom three died in infancy. The others were: Catherine, Mrs. Jacob Flinchbaugh, of Red Lion; William H., deceased; Malinda, Mrs. Pius Kersey, of Dallastown; Eliza Jane; Ellen, wife of Rev. G. Grover, of Stark county, Ohio; Jacob A., of Red Lion; and David A.

David A. Miller was born on his father's farm in 1849, and lived there till he was eighteen years old, attending the Miller school. His first teacher was Mr. Hollinger, while he finished under Miss Annie Dietz. Jacob Miller was an almost daily visitor at school during the sessions of four and five months, and kept careful watch to insure his children's studying hard, and improving every moment. The teachers boarded in the family, and additional help was given to the youthful students in the evening.

At the age of eighteen David A. Miller left home to go into the tanning and currying establishment of J. Klump, of Marietta, Pa., and then,after two years there, went west to Canton, Ohio, where he worked as a journeyman. The next year was spent in the lumber camps of Michigan, whence he made his way to Lincoln, Nebraska, and there secured employment from the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, in laying the track to Denver. This occupied him for six months, the next three were spent in grading the road from Georgetown, Colo., to Deadwood, and then for two years and a half he traveled about taking any employment he could get, and making his way finally down along the Pacific Coast to Mexico. He never had any difficulty in securing work for he was a good mechanic and could turn his hand to anything. In 1882 Mr. Miller returned home and became a partner with his brother, J. A. Miller, who was running a general store, grain elevator and lumber yard. After three years' experience with him David A. Miller went into business for himself, opening the first bakery in Red Lion, and conducted it for four years. His next enterprise was in a cigar and leaf tobacco business in the same city, and there, three years later, in 1897, he opened the general store which has ever since absorbed most of his attention. He is wide awake and progressive, and his store is the largest of its kind in town.

Mr. Miller was united to his wife, whose maiden name was Agnes S. Dietz, in May, 1886. Mrs. Miller was a daughter of the late Jacob Dietz, of Hellam township, and his wife Sarah (Louck) Dietz. One son, Luther, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller, but he died in infancy. Mr. Miller is a member of the Reformed Church. Politically he is a Republican. He was one of the organizers of the Farmers and Merchants Bank, and has been a director in it ever since.
CAPT. GEORGE GRAYBILL belongs to an old York county family, being the grandson of Joseph Graybill, who was a distiller and the owner of several farms in West Manchester township, and who, in his earlier manhood, carried freight by wagon to Baltimore. Captain Graybill's father, Samuel Graybill, who died in 1882, aged seventy-three years, was a farmer for many years and for the last fifteen years of his life, a horticulturist, having been an extensive fruit grower near York.

Captain Graybill has had a very remarkable military career. He is the possessor of six military commissions, one of them, his captain's commission, having been signed by the late Matthew Stanley Quay, when Secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and his first commission during the war was signed by the late Charles A. Dana the assistant secretary of war. Captain Graybill enlisted in the Union army, in the War of the Rebellion, when only sixteen years old and was a commissioned officer before he was twenty, serving gallantly in Gen. John F. Hartranft's Third Division. He was commissioned first lieutenant of the York Zouaves, on Dec. 2, 1873, the commission being signed by John F. Hartranft and M. S. Quay. These Zouaves afterward became Company A, 8th P. N. G., Captain Graybill commanding, and of this regiment he became quartermaster, serving seven years in the National Guard; earlier he had been inspector general of the Fourth Division. During the war Capt. Graybill participated in many battles, and no soldier bears a better record.

Next to his military career, Capt. Graybill has reason to be proud of his record as a volunteer fireman of York. He was one of the organizers of the Rescue Fire Company, of York, of which he was president for some years, and he also organized the Firemens Union, of York, of which he was also president for a time. The forming of this union gave the volunteer fire department of York its present solidity, and with all the diplomacy of which Capt. Graybill is possessed, it kept him busy for six months in getting the several fire companies of York together. Capt. Graybill was also honored with the presidency of the State Firemen's Association in 1885-86, and has in his office the complimentary resolution passed by that body at the close of his term of office.

But it is not only in the fields of war, fire matters and insurance that Capt. Graybill is known, but also in the field of invention, he being the inventor of the Graybill Electro-Medico, a device for administering medicines by means of the electric current (Patented, 1901), and also of the Rheostat, a device for controlling electric currents (Patented Feb. 9, 1904).

Capt. Graybill was married, Dec. 10, 1874, to Anna M. Detwiler, daughter of David Detwiler, a farmer and capitalist of Wrightsville, who died Dec. 14, 1898, in his eighty-first year. One daughter was born of this union, Sarah, who died in August, 1876, aged ten months.

Capt. Graybill controls one of the most extensive insurance agencies in the interior of the State. He represents six fire insurance companies; two life insurance companies—the New England Mutual and the Travelers; and one plate glass company. The stability of his companies and his own reputation for integrity have brought him a very extensive business.

ADAM KOHLER, who for nearly forty years has been identified with the business life of Dallastown, is a native of Pennsylvania, born in York county Jan. 1, 1842, son of Jacob and Mary (Sechrist) Kohler. He was one of a large family, having five brothers and three sisters, as follows: George and Eli, deceased; Jacob, of Nashville, York county; John, a farmer in Chanceford township; Charles, a cigar box manufacturer in Dallastown; Mary, Mrs. Reuben E. Beard, of Philadelphia; Leah, deceased, who married (first) Henry Neff and (second) William Snyder; and Cassandra, deceased wife of Henry Myers, of Red Lion.

Adam Kohler was sent first to the public schools of York township, and when he had completed that preparatory course attended Cottage Hill College, York, where he was under the preceptorship of Prof. S. B. Heiges. After leaving the college he taught in his own township for seven terms and another in Dallastown, but he never adopted teaching as a permanent employment, and about 1866 engaged in business in Dallastown as a general merchant. For the next twenty years he was thus occupied, and during part of the time also conducted a cigar factory and carriage business, but in 1886 he disposed of his other interest, and has ever since devoted his attention exclusively to manufacturing cigars.

On May 28, 1870, Mr. Kohler was united in matrimony to Miss Alice Geesey, daughter of Samuel and Sallie (Reachard) Geesey, of York township. To this union six children have been born, namely: Claudia Estella, Mrs. Halbert Bayler, of York City; Lillie May; Alberta Bell; Mabel Garland; Leona R.; and Howard Lee, who is in business with his father.

Mr. Kohler is a man of varied interests. He is a member of the school board, belongs to the I. O. O. F., Dallas Lodge, No. 1017, and his church associations are with Christ Evangelical Lutheran Church, of which he is a trustee. He is also an old army man, having enlisted in 1865 in Company G, 103d P. V. I., and served until the close of the war. For forty-two years he has been well-known in connection with the Dallastown Band, one of the oldest musical organizations in the State, which he formed in 1862. This band has furnished music on many notable occasions, one of which was the funeral of President Lincoln, in 1865, when Mr. Kohler was chosen to act as bugler. In all the relations of life he is highly esteemed and possesses the respect of his fellow citizens.

REV. WILLIAM HENRY EHHRHART, a Lutheran minister of Codorus township, holding the Jefferson charge, comes from one of York county's early families. William Ehrhart, his father, was born in Shrewsbury township, York Co., Pa., Oct. 18, 1830, son of William and Ablena (Runk) Ehrhart and grandson of William and Susanna Ehrhart. William and Ablena (Runk) Ehrhart had three sons and four daughters, namely: William, father of our subject, who was the last survivor of the family; Emanuel; Henry; Mary; Maria, who married Peter Fullmer; Eliza, who married Harry Zeck, and Lucinda, who married Harry Gladfelter.

In February, 1854, William Ehrhart married Eliza Stump, daughter of John and Margaret (Hall) Stump, and the following children were born to them: William Henry; Benjamin; Adam A., a farmer of York township; Jesse: John, Lucy and Elizabeth, all three deceased; and Catherine, who is unmarried and resided with her father in Dallastown. The mother passed away April 22, 1902, and the father Feb. 6, 1906. During his boyhood William Ehrhart attended the pay school in his native township, and after leaving school he went to work at farming, which was his occupation throughout his active years. He lived in York township until April 1, 1903, when he retired and moved to Dallastown.

William H. Ehrhart was born in York township Oct. 26, 1861. He first attended the township schools, then the York County Academy, and in 1884 was studying at Millersville, Lancaster county. After teaching in Dallastown and York township six terms he spent a year and a half at the drug business in Philadelphia, and then resumed his studies. He graduated from Pennsylvania College, in Gettysburg, in 1893, and from the Lutheran Theological Seminary with the class of 1896. His first charge was at Silver Run, Carroll Co., Md., where he remained seven years, and in the fall of 1903 he came to his present charge, known as the Jefferson; it includes four churches, the St. Jacob's (or Stone) Church, Trinity, Zion and Bethlehem. Rev. Mr. Ehrhart is an earnest and conscientious worker, and is doing good service in the congregations under his care, where he has made many friends and gained much influence.

Rev. Mr. Ehrhart married Emma A. Strine, daughter of Hon. E. Z. Strine, and they have two children, Janet Elizabeth and Kenneth Strine.

HON. E. Z. STRINE, an ex-member of the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, and a prominent lawyer, was born in Strinestown, Conewago township, June 11, 1842, a son of Peter S. and Margaret (Zeigler) Strine. Peter S. Strine was born in Conewago township in 1815, and his wife in Codorus township in 1817. He died in 1854, and is buried in Union cemetery, Manchester borough, but the mother survived some time and resided on the old homestead at Strinestown, until her death, attaining an advanced age. Both were Dunkards, and gave their son a religious training from childhood. The great-grandfather, Peter Strine, a native of Germany, settled in America during the middle of the eighteenth century and served under Gen. Washington in the Revolution. Margaret (Zeigler) Strine's parents were of German descent, her father, Daniel Zeigler, serving as a soldier in the defense of Baltimore in the war of 1812-14.
Hon. E. Z. Strine was employed on a farm during his youth. He was educated in the common schools and ranked high as a scholar. He came to York in March, 1862, and was in the mercantile business until 1872, when he started as a law student in E. D. Zeigler's office. On Feb. 24, 1873, he was admitted to the Bar in York county, and since that time has been engaged in successful practice. He has been prominent in politics as a Democrat for thirty years, and in 1886 was elected a member of the House.

Mr. Strine has always taken great interest in military affairs, and has the rank of captain. He left York for Gettysburg July 1, 1863, to march with the 5th Corps, Union army, and the Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, from Hanover to Gettysburg during the night of the 1st of July, arriving on the Gettysburg field on the morning of July 2d. He was present with the troops and saw the second day's battle. On July 3d, he was taken prisoner by the Federal forces as a Confederate spy, but after the military authorities heard the evidence offered and had proof of identification he was released. On July 12, 1866, he was commissioned second lieutenant of the Zeigler Guards of York; May 12, 1868, first lieutenant of the Worth Infantry of York, and July 12, 1869, was made its captain; he became captain of York Continental Rifles, late Company C, 8th Regiment, N. G. P., on the 10th day of October, 1870, he organized the York Grays July 4, 1875, and was commissioned captain of York Grays, Company A, 8th Regiment, N. G. P. He was recommissioned a number of times, and served until July 12, 1893, when he resigned, his name being placed on the roll of honor by order of Gov. Robert E. Pattison. He was present with his company and assisted in suppressing the Homestead riot.

Mr. Strine was married in 1865 to Adaline Elizabeth Dehoff, a daughter of Amos M. and Emaline (Stambaugh) Dehoff. Mrs. Strine was born in West Manchester township Jan. 4, 1846. Her great-grandfather was George Philip Dehoff, who was a Frenchman and settled in America during the eighteenth century. He served in the Revolutionary war under Gen. Washington, participating in a number of battles, among them those of the Brandywine and Trenton, and also was at Valley Forge during the winter of 1777-78. Mr. and Mrs. Strine have two children, Emma A. and Ulysses S. Grant. The parents are members of Trinity Reformed Church of York.

Ulysses S. G. Strine, who married Amanda Waring, daughter of George W. and Maria (Grim) Waring, was previously a student at York County Academy and was graduated from the York Collegiate Institute with the class of 1887. He was first sergeant of Company A, 8th Regiment, N. G. P., from May, 1884, to 1894, and was present with his company at the Homestead Riot of 1902. He is now engaged in mercantile business. His father Mr. Strine was born in Franklinville, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., and her mother in Dallastown, York Co., Pa. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. U. S. G. Strine, Janet Waring and Frances Lois.

JOHN S. TRONE, former county recorder of York county, and at the present time serving Heidelberg township as justice of the peace, comes from one of the pioneer families of the county. He was born in Heidelberg township, in 1856, son of John B. Trone, grandson of George, great-grandson of Abraham, and great-great-grandson of John Trone, who came from Germany and settled in Heidelberg township.

In Heidelberg township John Trone received a grant of 250 acres of land, from Thomas Penn, March 31, 1762, recorded at Philadelphia, Pat. A. A., Vol. 3, page 155, with full claim and title, as follows: "Thomas Penn to George Trone; George Trone's heirs to John Trone; John Trone to Abraham Trone; Abraham Trone to George Trone; Sarah Trone's Heirs to George Trone; George Trone to Samuel and John B. Trone; Samuel and John B. Trone and wife to Adam Smith; Adam Smith to Reuben Sheffer; Reuben Sheffer to John B. Trone. Second part of tract: Daniel Forry to Andrew E. Rudisill; Andrew E. Rudisill to John B. Trone; Anna B. and John S. Trone, executors, to Alexander Beeker; Alexander Beeker to John S. Trone, March 31, 1892."

The land is situated in Manheim township, now the central part of Heidelberg township, near Smith's Station, along the Western Maryland Railroad.

Abraham Trone, son of John, carried on agricultural pursuits on this farm, and also served in the Revolutionary war. He was twice married and had a family of seven children.

George Trone, son of Abraham, was the grandfather of our subject. He followed farming, and was a Mennonite minister. He married, and both he and his wife died on the old home. Their children were: Abraham, Samuel, Joseph, John B., George, Mary, Rebecca, Elizabeth, Kate and Sarah.

John B. Trone was born Aug. 27, 1827, on the old homestead. He received a common school education, and at the age of ei-ten years began the blacksmithing business, which he followed at Trone's Stand, Smith's Station, for twenty-two years. He married first Eliza Shutt, daughter of Joseph Shutt, by whom he had five children, Valentine, Franklin, John S., Lizzie and Mary. Mr. Trone married (second) May 20, 1866, Annie Rohrbaugh, daughter of George and Sarah Rohrbaugh, and to this union six children were born: Charles, Joseph, George, one that died in infancy, Sarah and Alla Mary. The greater part of Mr. Trone's life was spent in farming on his tract in Heidelberg township, where he died aged fifty-eight years. He was a member of the German Reformed Church, in which he took an active part. Politically he was a Democrat, and held a number of township offices.

John S. Trone attended the township schools, the graded school at Hanover and the academy at Glen Rock, and at the age of seventeen years began teaching, in which he continued for nine years. He then engaged in the mercantile business, at Smith's Station, where he remained eight years. In 1884 he was elected justice of the peace and has held that office to the present time. In 1890 he was elected recorder of York county on the Democratic ticket, his majority being 4403, one of the largest ever received in the county.
He filled that office to the satisfaction of all for three years, and was then appointed deputy recorder and deputy registrar of York county, serving for three years and eight months.
He is one of York county's best known men, and is very popular with all. He is now engaged in the machine and fertilizer business at Smith's Station, and owns the old home of sixty-three acres of land, which is one of the oldest farms in the county. Politically Mr.
Trone is a Democrat. He is a member of the German Reformed Church, and takes a great interest therein. He is connected as director with the Hartley Fire Insurance Company, which company's main office is in York.

Mr. Trone married Lena Hamm, daughter of Jacob L. and Susan Hamm, and to this union these children have been born: Minerva; Curtis H.; Amy, the wife of Charles Trone, of Hanover, Pa.; Daisy, wife of Curtis Strawbaugh, residing in York; Stanley and Ray.

ADAM E. KOHR, of Hanover, former worthy justice of the peace, and present member of the Legislature, was born in Manchester township Feb. 20, 1865, son of Lewis and Lena (Witrecht) Kohr, and paternal grandson of L. and Rebecca (Westheffer) Kohr, and maternal grandson of John and Christina (Weigle) Witrecht.

The Kohrs are among the oldest and best known families of the county, the original ancestor having migrated from Switzerland. The paternal grandfather of Adam E., was a native of Manchester township, and one of its most prosperous farmers. His son Lewis, the father of Adam E., was born in York county Oct. 16, 1840. He was a farmer by occupation but became a minister of the United Brethren Church, devoting to his religious calling over thirty years. He is still living and still engaged in the consecrated work of the ministry. His wife Lena was also a native of York county, where she was born Jan.
1, 1841.

Adam E. Kohr received his education in the district schools, where he prepared himself for admission to Lebanon Valley College at Annville, Pa. Entering this institution he pursued his studies for some time, after which, in the autumn of 1882, he began a career as a school teacher, which he continued for nine years in various country and village schools of York county. Mr. Kohr moved to Hanover in 1894 and has since continued one of the public-spirited and enterprising professional men of the city. In 1896 he was chosen city engineer, which position he has since held. He was elected in 1808 a justice of the peace on the Democratic ticket for a term ofive years, and re-elected in 1903, resigning the office in 1906, after having been elected to the State Legislature. He has been actively affiliated with the Democratic party since he became a voter, and has always taken a deep interest in local and county politics. He is a prominent member of the P. O. S. of A., and of the Modern Woodmen of America.

In 1886 Mr. Kohr married Laura I. Smith, daughter of Michael and Maria Smith, both her parents being now deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Kohr have been born five children, namely: Olive Joyce, E. Lane, Miriam Sapporah, John and Mary.

FRANKLIN P. DIETZ, one of the representative citizens of York county, which has been his home from the time of his birth, and with whose industrial and civic affairs he has for many years been prominently identified, has long operated a well-equipped flouring-mill in York township, and though at the present time he is practically retired from active labor he is giving his supervision to his various industrial and capitalistic interests, including which may be mentioned the York Water Company and the York National Bank of York, Pennsylvania.

Mr. Dietz was born in Hellam township, this county, Jan. 18, 1847, and is a scion of one of the honored pioneer families of this section of the old Keystone State. His grandfather, Jacob Dietz, who was of stanch German lineage, settled near the present village of Stonybrook, in Spring Garden township, this county, where he took up a large tract of wild land, a portion of which he placed under cultivation in course of time. He also operated a distillery for a number of years, thus following a line of industry which was one of prominence here in the pioneer era. He continued to reside here until his death, and his remains lie at rest in the family cemetery in Hellam township. Of his children, George died at the homestead; Joseph died in Windsor township; Samuel and Jacob died in Spring Garden township; John was the father of Franklin P.; Sarah became the wife of Harry Neiman, and died in Manchester township; Mrs. Michael Blessing died in Manchester, this county; Magdalena, wife of Frederick Schatzberger, died in East York; Polly, wife of Jacob Lehman, died in Hellam township, as did also Catherine, who was unmarried.

John Dietz, father of Franklin P., was born in Spring Garden township. He availed himself of the advantages of the common schools of the locality and period, and assisted in the work of reclaiming and cultivating the homestead farm, and also in the operation of the distillery. He finally became the owner of a valuable farm in Hellam township, where he continued to be actively identified with agricultural pursuits for about two score years. He finally purchased a residence and distilling property in Wrightsville, where he maintained his home for about three years, after which he returned to the farm, and there remained for the ensuing fifteen years. Then he returned to Wrightsville, where he passed the closing years of his life, attaining the age of sixty-five years, and his remains were interred in the family cemetery in Hellam township. John Dietz married Miss Susan Luttman, who was born and reared in this county, and she died, in Hellam township, at the age of sixty-eight years, being laid to rest beside her husband. Of their two children, Franklin P. is the younger; his sister, Rachel, who was the wife of David W. Graybill, a farmer of Hellam township, died there in 1894.

The mill owned by Franklin P. Dietz is located in the southern section of York township, and has been in operation for the greater part of the time since 1832, when the present substantial building of stone and brick was erected. It is still in an excellent state of preservation, while it is conspicuous as one of the landmarks of the county. During his residence there Mr. Dietz built a commodious modern home, now occupied by one of his sons, who has charge of the mill and the surrounding farm, which comprises eighty-four acres of fine land, under a high state of cultivation. Mr. Dietz has maintained his home at Dietz's since 1875, owning there a most attractive modern residence. In politics he has ever accorded a stanch allegiance to the Democratic party, and has been prominent in local affairs. At the time of this writing he is incumbent of the office of auditor of York township. He and his wife are valued members of the Reformed Church at Jacobus, in which he has served as deacon, and he was a member of the building committee which had in charge the erection of the present church edifice. He is a stockholder in the York National Bank, and has been a member of its directorate since February, 1903, and he is a stockholder in the York Water Company.
In December, 1870, Mr. Dietz was united in marriage to Miss Clayanna Jane Dosch, of Windsor township. They have had children as follows: Mary M., wife of Henry C. Leader, a painter at Paradise, this county; John C., who married Leah Sheaffer, of Glen Rock, and is associated with his father in the milling business; Harry S., who married Jennie Falkenstein, and is engaged in farming and general teaming in York township for his father; Doris Susan, who died at the age of thirteen years, and is buried in the beautiful Prospect Hill cemetery in York, as are also Edward, who died when one year old, and Charles, who died at the age of eight months; and Morris A., Ameda F., and Allen F., who are the younger children and still brighten the home circle.

HARRY I. GLADFELTER, postmaster at Hanover Junction, York Co., Pa., is engaged in the cigar manufacturing business. Mr. Gladfelter was born in North Codorus township Oct. 18, 1850, son of Benjamin Gladfelter.

Daniel Gladfelter, the grandfather of our subject, married a Miss Emig, and both died in York county.

Benjamin Gladfelter, son of Daniel, was born in 1812, in North Codorus township, where he received a common school education. He married Sarah Gibbons, and they located in North Codorus township, near Seven Valley, where he followed farming on his small farm, and died at the age of seventy-two years, his wife passing away at the age of seventy-one. Both are buried at the Ziegler Church in their native township. Their children were: Cornelius, deceased; Jesse, deceased; Nathan, a cigar manufacturer of Seven Valley; Dallas, deceased; Dr. Jacob Allen, deceased; Amanda, the wife of Samuel Gayman, of Sunbury, Pa.; Lucy A., wife of H. C. Kuntz, a large cigar manufacturer of Seven Valley; and Harry I.

Harry I. Gladfelter spent his school days at Ziegler's school, and after finishing his education taught school for two terms. He then became weighmaster at Seven Valley for the Thomas Iron Company, later coming to Hanover Junction as clerk for the railroad agent of the Northern Central railroad. He served as freight and passenger agent at Hanover Junction for the Hanover & Gettysburg Railroad Company fifteen years, also acted as postmaster, and had charge of the Western Union Telegraph from 1872 to 1904, when the Western Union wires were removed. He was also employed as superintendent by the Codorus Ore Company a few years, and in 1884 began the manufacture of cigars, in which he has since continued. He employs about thirty skilled workmen, selling most of his cigars in New York City and the West. He manufactures cigars from $14 to $60 per thousand, his special brand, which is in great demand, and is always as represented, being the "Belle of York." He has a two-story building which is conveniently located near the Northern Central railroad station.

Mr. Gladfelter married Miss Mary Estelle Wheeler, daughter of Darius Wheeler, of Baltimore, Md. Mr. Gladfelter is a Democrat politically, and served as township auditor six years. He is a member of the Seven Valley Lutheran Church, where he has served officially as leader of the choir.

REV. CHRISTIAN NESS, known throughout York county for the great and good work he has accomplished as a minister of the Gospel, comes from one of the early and honored families of the county.

John Jacob Nes, as the name was then spelled, the great-grandfather of our subject, came from Germany and settled in Shrewsbury township, York Co., Pa., following farming as an occupation.

Michael Nes, son of John Jacob, was also a farmer, following that vocation in Springfield township. He married (first) a Miss Swartz, and after her death, a Miss Frey. He was a large land owner, and died at the age of eighty-six years in York township, being buried at Blimyer's church. Michael Nes was a Lutheran, and was very active in church work. His children were: Michael, Jacob, John, Henry, George, Samuel, Emanuel, Polly and Elizabeth.

Of the above family, George Ness was the father of our subject. He was born in 1802 in Springfield township, and received a common school education. On reaching maturity he took the old homestead in Springfield township. George Ness married Mary Myers, and after her death he married (second) Elizabeth Bankert. Mr. Ness was a faithful member of the Dunkard Church, and died in that faith at the age of seventy-six years, being buried in the home burying ground on the farm. The children born to him and his first wife were: Rev. Christian, Sallie and Mary. To his second wife were born: George, in Springfield township, married Sarah Feigley; Leah is the wife of Reuben Sprentle of York township; and Elizabeth is the wife of Mr. Meyers.

Christian Ness was born Oct. 8, 1830, and received his preliminary education in the public schools of his native township, assisting his father at farming. In 1854 he married Catherine Stiles, daughter of Jacob Stiles, and she died in 1890, and was buried at the Dunkard Church, of which she was a faithful member. The children born to this union were as follows: Jacob, of Harrisburg; George, of York township; Albert, of Springfield township; Thomas, also of Springfield township; Edward, of York; Mary, wife of Albert Reigart; Sarah, the wife of Levi Krout, of Springfield township; Leah, the wife of S. B. Myers, a farmer of Springfield township, who was ordained a minister in the Dunkard Church, May 26, 1866; and Catherine, the wife of Milton Myers, of Hopewell township. After the death of his first wife Mr. Ness married Catherine Myers, widow of Joseph Myers, who was a farmer of Springfield township, and died in 1864, aged forty-five years in the faith of the Dunkard Church, leaving these children: Salome, wife of Samuel K. Hartman, of Springfield township; Leah, wife of F. M. Baugh, living in Jefferson borough; Mary, wife of Milton Lehman, of Springfield township; Samuel B., who married Leah Ness; and Andrew, who died at the age of four years.

Samuel Bowser, father of Mrs. Catherine Ness, was a farmer of Shrewsbury township, and her mother was Mary Hershey. Mr. Bowser died at the age of eighty-two years, leaving children: Mrs. Ness, the wife of our subject; Elizabeth; Margaret; Samuel; Lydia and Christian; Mary, the wife of Charles B. King, of New Freedom, York county; Benjamin H., living on the old homestead in Shrewsbury township, and Julia, the wife of Lewis Kraber, of York.

Mr. and Mrs. Ness reside on her farm of 240 acres, Mr. Ness owning another farm of 160 acres near Loganville. They have had no children. Rev. Mr. Ness united with the church in 1858, and was ordained a minister June 4, 1866, at the home of Samuel Bowser, in Shrewsbury township, since which time he has been an active worker, preaching all over the county. Since 1892 he has lived retired from active life. He is the oldest minister in the Church, and is loved and honored by all who know him.

SIMON A. BARSHINGER, the owner and operator of the Kohler flouring mill in North Hopewell township, one of the oldest mills in the county, is a representative of one of the pioneer families of this section of the old Keystone state, and has here passed his entire life thus far, while he has gained through worthy and well-directed effort a position of prominence as a business man and a success which is of no indefinite order. In the early epoch when York county was yet to a large extent a wilderness, the Barshinger family came thither, and in each generation have been found men of sturdy integrity and sterling citizenship. The lineage traces back to German origin, and the original American progenitors came from the Fatherland in the Colonial era of our national history. Simon A. Barshinger, born on his father's farm, in Windsor township, this county, Aug. 7, 1863, son of Emanuel and Catherine (Anstine) Barshinger.

John Barshinger, grandfather of Simon A., married Susan Stabley, and they became the parents of nine children: George, Jacob, Andrew, John, Benjamin, Henry, Susan and Catherine (wife of John Streavig), all deceased; and Emanuel.

Emanuel Barshinger was born and reared in York county. He married Catherine Anstine, daughter of Simon B. and Mary Ann Anstine, sterling pioneers of this county, whose other children were: Amos; Daniel; Susan, wife of Philip Laucks, of Windsor township; and Maria, wife of Jacob Landis, of Windsor township. Of the children of Emanuel and Catherine Barshinger, all except Simon A. are deceased, the others being: Franklin Porter, Adam Emanuel and Mary Catherine. The parents make their home in Red Lion, and both are active in the Reformed Church. Mr. Barshinger is a Democrat.

Simon A. Barshinger passed his boyhood days on the home farm, early beginning to assist in its work, while his educational advantages were those afforded by the public schools of his native township. He attended the Koons school during a portion of each year until he had attained the age of sixteen years. In his youth he was employed for a time in the An-stine mill, in Windsor township, and later became again associated with his father in the work and management of the home farm, remaining thus engaged until 1885, when he embarked in the same line of enterprise upon his own responsibility, becoming the owner of a fine farm property in North Hopewell township, and there continuing his residence until 1891, when he identified himself with his present industrial undertaking, having successfully operated the Kohler mill since that date. As before stated, this is one of the oldest mills in the county, having been erected about 1853, by Jacob Kohler. The mill is now equipped with the best modern machinery and accessories having a capacity for the output of about thirty barrels of flour per day and controlling a large custom trade, besides a considerable outside business. Mr. Barshinger gives his personal supervision to the mill, and is known as a reliable and progressive business man and public-spirited citizen. In politics he is an un-compromising advocate of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, in whose ranks he has been an active and influential worker in a local way, having been for many years a member of the election board of North Hopewell township, and having served in various local offices of trust, while in the Democratic county convention in August, 1904, he was nominated for representative in the State Legislature, but suffered defeat at the polls in the following November. Both he and his wife are members of the Reformed church, and fraternal he is affiliated with Dallas Lodge, No. 1017, I. O. O. F., in Dallastown.

On Sept. 22, 1885, Mr. Barshinger was united in marriage to Miss Ellen Grove, daughter of Charles and Leah (Seachrist) Grove, well known and honored residents of Windsor township, and of this union have been born three children: Clarence Franklin, Charles Emanuel and Edith May, all at home.

GIBSON SMITH (deceased), son of Abraham and Salome (Smith) Smith, in 1852 married Susan E. Fahs. For the first four years after his marriage he engaged in the management of a rented flour-mill, after which he bought from William Wilt a coal-yard located on North Water street, York, giving his entire attention to this business until his death, in 1888. He was buried at Prospect Hill. Two sons were born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith, namely: Edgar Fahs, born in Manchester township, May 23, 1853, who married Miss Margaret A. Gruel, and resides in Philadelphia; and Allen John, born in York, on Dec. 8, 1863, who married Pearl Pierce and lives in Philadelphia.

Mrs. Smith was born in West Manchester township June 10, 1829, daughter of John and Susan (Ilgenfritz) Fahs. Mrs. Smith's paternal grandparents were John and Eva (Feiser) Fahs, the former a native of Dauphin county, Pa., and in later life a blacksmith of York. He followed that trade for about fifty years, and then lived retired until his death, in 1835, when he was laid to rest in Prospect Hill cemetery.

JOHN FAHS (2), born in York in 1792, attended the public schools until he was fourteen years of age, and then worked in his father's smithy until he was twenty. In 1822 he married Miss Susan Ilgenfritz, daughter of Samuel and Mary (Crone) Ilgenfritz, of York county, and began farming in West Manchester township. After his father's death he inherited a farm which he conducted for fifteen years, and then, retiring in 1850, removed to York, and spent the balance of his life there. He passed away Sept. 6, 1880, and was interred at Prospect Hill. Mrs. Smith received a common school education, and in 1832, when twenty-three years of age, was united in marriage to Gibson Smith.

JOHN F. PATTON, proprietor of the City Drug Store, so well known to the citizens of York, Pa., was born in Lower Windsor township, York county, on Dec. 15, 1839, son of Ebenezer and Rebecca (Smith) Patton. Mr. Patton's grandfather, John Patton, was born in County Antrim, North of Ireland, while his grandmother, who had been Margaret McGowan, was born in County Tyrone. In 1780, soon after their marriage, this worthy couple emigrated to America and located in Chester county, Pa. They had fifteen children—twelve boys and three girls. Both grandparents died at the age of eighty years or upward.
Ebenezer Patton was the eighth son of this couple and early in life learned the shoemaker’s trade. He moved to Chanceford township. In 1820 he was married to Rebecca Smith, of Lancaster county. The other brothers and sisters located in Chester, Lancaster and Berks counties, and the family became very numerous. Ebenezer Patton died at the age of forty-nine years, and the mother with her eight children moved to Wrightsville, York county, where she died in the year 1852.

John F. Patton, the fourth son of the family, received his education in the common schools. In 1853 he located at York and engaged as a clerk in a dry-goods store. In the spring of 1856 he entered the drug store of Dr. Jacob Hay, Sr., to learn the business for which he has since proved himself so admirably fitted. He entered the wholesale drug establishment of Thomsen & Block, of Baltimore, in 1859, remaining there until 1866. During the latter year he went to St. Louis, but on account of sickness remained there but a few months. In the year 1869 he began the drug business for himself in a small room on the north side of West Market street, York, on the site of his present handsome and commodious establishment.

In 1873 Dr. Patton moved his store to the large business room of Martin Bender, nearly opposite the “Motter House.” There he prospered greatly, enjoying a constantly growing trade. The familiar name of “City Drug Store” was found in the newspapers of the county, and on all of the conspicuous advertising places that could be utilized. His industry, progressive business methods and close application were rewarded with unusual prosperity, but the disastrous flood of June, 1884, played sad havoc with his stores, which were almost totally wrecked, and Mr. Patton barely escaped with his life. He had already begun the erection of the new City Drug Store, a three-story brick building, with a large and elegant store room, which he stocked and fitted up on a more extensive scale than ever, in September, 1884. In this place he continued to meet with a well deserved patronage, enjoying a wide and lucrative trade.

Mr. Patton is a member of St. Paul’s Lutheran Church of York. He was president of the Pennsylvania State Pharmaceutical Association in 1891, was made president of the American Pharmaceutical Association in 1900, and presided over the national meeting at St. Louis in 1901. In addition to these honors, Mr. Patton was a member of the council of the National Association, having served on the administrative committee for a period of three years, beginning in 1902, this committee consisting of fifteen members, elective from the entire body of druggists of the United States.

SAMUEL M. MANIFOLD, who enjoys the distinction of being the first sheriff of York county ever elected by the Republican party, is of Scotch-Irish descent, his ancestors having settled in York county about 1730.

Henry Manifold, his paternal grandfather, was a son of Joseph Manifold, who was a private in Capt. John Moffit’s Company in the Revolutionary war—a company that also included among its members David McKinley, great-grandfather of President William McKinley. Henry Manifold was an elder in the Hopewell Presbyterian Church.

Joseph Manifold, son of Henry and father of Samuel M., was a farmer in Lower Chanceford township, and he died in 1889, aged seventy-four years. He married Rebecca P. Martin, daughter of Rev. Samuel Martin, D. D., a distinguished Presbyterian divine, who had preached at Slate Ridge and Chanceford churches for a period of forty-two years, and who died in York county. Six children were born to Joseph Manifold and his wife, as follows: Rosanna E., who married Zenas H. Dougherty, of Lower Chanceford; William F., a farmer of Lower Chanceford; Margaret J.: Keziah, who married C. C. Smith; Henry, and Samuel M.

Samuel M. Manifold was born in Hopewell township, May 8, 1842, and was educated in the schools of that district. His first occupation was farming, which he followed, off and on, until he was thirty years old. During the war of the Rebellion he enlisted in the 21st Pennsylvania Cavalry, being promoted from time to time, and when mustered out of service was a second lieutenant. He spent the first year of his enlistment in the Shenandoah Valley, where the cavalry regiment, of which he was a member was dismounted and brigaded with the infantry, taking part in the battles of Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, and others. In 1864 his regiment was remounted.

and attached to Gregg's Cavalry Division, Army of the Potomac, with which he served, until the end of the war. After the close of hostilities he served in the provost marshal's office at Lynchburg, Va., and Campbell Court House, where the oath of amnesty was administered to Gen. Longstreet and many other prominent Confederates. Mr. Manifold's war record is one of which any man might well be proud, and it is a notable fact that he was never sick or absent from duty a single day of his term of enlistment.

When peace had again settled over the land Lieut. Manifold returned to farming, continuing at that until 1872, when he went to railroading, and was attached to the engineer corps who were surveying the Peach Bottom railroad. In 1874 he became chief engineer in charge of construction, and built the last twenty miles of that road. In 1878 he became the superintendent of the York & Peach Bottom railroad. His next position was that of roadmaster of the Baltimore & Lehigh railroad, in which capacity he continued for several years, or until 1891. In the latter year he surveyed the extension of the Stewartstown railroad into Delta, York county, after which he accepted a position in the transportation department of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Washington, D. C. His next position was that of master of transportation of the Baltimore & Lehigh railroad, from which he was promoted to the office of general manager, and later became superintendent of the Baltimore & Harrisburg division of the Western Maryland railroad, being promoted to general superintendent. On Jan. 1, 1904, Mr. Manifold was called to the position of general manager of the York Street Railway Company, being in charge of the constructing and superintending from three hundred to four hundred men. He was also manager of the Edison Electric Light Company of York. At present, besides acting as sheriff, he is chief engineer of the New Park and Fawn Grove Reservoir.

Mr. Manifold was married Jan. 1, 1875, to Sarah E. Gregg, daughter of George and Sophia Gregg, farming people of York county, and eight children have been born to this union, as follows: Granger R. died at the age of two years; Rebecca P. died at the age of four years; J. Howard is an attorney-at-law, whose sketch will be found following; Rose Elma, a graduate of Wilson College, married John S. McCoy, secretary of the York Card & Paper Company; Myra Ross, who is a graduate of the Women's College, Baltimore, class of 1905, is teaching in Porto Rico; Emily Martin is a graduate of the York high school, class of 1905; Keziah W. is at the Women's College, class of 1909; Margaret Brinton is a student in the York Collegiate Institute, class of 1909.

Sheriff Manifold belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Heptasophs, and York Post, No. 37, G. A. R. He is a member of and a deacon in the First Presbyterian Church. He has always been an active worker in the ranks of the Republican party, and was twice elected to the city council of York, having been returned from the Fifth and Sixth wards. His triumphant election to the office of sheriff on the Republican ticket during the memorable campaign of 1904 gave abundant evidence of Mr. Manifold's popularity throughout York county.

JOSEPH HOWARD MANIFOLD is a son of S. M. Manifold, general manager of the York Traction Company, and sheriff of the county, and is a native of the city of York, born April 26, 1875. There his boyhood days were passed, and his early educational training was secured in the excellent public schools of the city, and he then entered the York Collegiate Institute, from which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1892. In the autumn of 1894 he matriculated in the law department at Yale, where he completed the prescribed course, and was graduated in 1896, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, while in the following year the degree of Master of Laws was conferred upon him by his alma mater. In the same year he was admitted to the Bar of the State of Connecticut, and in December, 1898, he was admitted to practice in the courts of his native county, where he gained his first practical experience. He is meeting with excellent success both as an attorney and counselor, and enjoys marked popularity in the professional, business and social circles of his native city. He is one of the representative younger members of the Bar of York county, is a gentleman of high scholarship and technical learning, and has won no uncertain prestige in his chosen vocation, though but a few years have elapsed since he gained admission to the Bar. In politics he accords an unswerving allegiance to the Republican party, taking much interest in its cause, being one of the active young working members in the local ranks of the party. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Socially he belongs to the Bachelors Club of York.

JOSEPH HARRISON WALLAZZ, a native of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, born March 1, 1874, graduated from Girard College in 1892. He is now representing R. G. Dun & Company, in York and Adams counties, of which he has had charge since 1898. Mr. Wallazz is careful and painstaking, and his reports can always be relied upon. His wife was Mary Edith Dodson, daughter of William M. Dodson.

HENRY B. KING, M. D., is a member of one of the old and distinguished families of this section of the Keystone State, with whose annals the name which he bears has been indissolubly linked ever since the early pioneer era. He was born in the city of York in 1860, son of E. A. and Arabella F. (Nes) King, both of whom were likewise natives of York county, where their entire lives were passed. The former passed to his eternal rest in 1877, and the latter in 1882. E. A. King was an influential and successful business man, having been a skilled sculptor and marble cutter and having for a number of years been engaged in business along this line in York, while he was also identified with the phosphate trade and with the milling industry and general farming. Being a man of alert mentality, inflexible integrity of character and marked ability, he attained to a high degree of success in temporal affairs and commanded the most unqualified confidence and esteem in the community which was his home for the major portion of his earnest and useful life. He was a stanch Republican in his political proclivities.

Dr. Henry Nes, the Doctor's maternal grandfather, was one of the most honored and able of the pioneer physicians and surgeons of York county, where he continued to reside until his death. No man in the county was held in higher regard, and this fact was emphasized by his having been chosen to represent his district in Congress, of which he was a member for several terms.

Henry B. King completed the curriculum of the public schools of York and continued his studies in the York County Academy. He early determined to prepare himself for the noble profession in which he has met with such signal success and gained such noteworthy prestige. He began reading medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. Benjamin F. Spangler, one of York's leading practitioners, and matriculated at famous old Jefferson Medical College, in Philadelphia, where he was graduated in the class of 1883, receiving his well earned degree of Doctor of Medicine. In addition to his three years' course in Jefferson Medical College he also took a post-graduate course in the institution. His ample fortification for the active work of his profession has been best shown in his record as a practitioner. He is a close student, and has recourse to the best standard and periodical literature pertaining to the medical and surgical sciences, while his devotion to the work of his profession has been constant. He has been successfully established in York since he began practice, and he is one of the valued members of the York County Medical Society, and the Pennsylvania State Medical Society.

WILLIAM GAMBLE, who passed his closing years in York, left a name which will not soon be forgotten in China and Japan, in which countries he contributed so largely to the diffusion of western ideas. By "his two main inventions—the making of matrices of Chinese type by the electrotype process, and the Chinese type case, as now generally in use, * * * he did a work that has hardly been equalled in the annals of missions or in the history of the development of the art of printing." *

Mr. Gamble inherited the strength, perseverance, ingenuity and practical business instincts of a race of Scotch-Irish ancestors. Through both parents he was descended from families which numbered many men of ability. His grandfather, the Rev. William Gamble, of Greenhill, Letterkenny, County Donegal, was one of the first covenanting ministers in the North of Ireland. He is described by the late J. B. Marcus, of Ballymoney, in his Synopsis of Church History, as "A dignified Christian gentleman, and eminent theologian." The Rev.

Rex Christus, an Outline Study of China," by Arthur Smith.
Samuel Ferguson, in a recent sketch of his life, says the following: "The family from which William Gamble sprang was one of the many families that fled from Scotland during the period of the persecution. Consequently they were of far different fiber from most of those 'planted' by James I, in Ulster. Originally their home was Saltcoats, Scotland, and as some of their ancestors bore arms in the siege of Derry, they must have been settled prior to 1688."

The Rev. William Gamble, of Greenhill, was married to a lady of noble birth by the name of Errol. Their son, William, father of the William of whom we write, married Anne Dill, a daughter of John Dill, of Oak Bank, Ramelton, and his wife Anne (Scott) Dill. They had five children: William, whose work was in China; John Scott, who died at sea; Reverend Robert, of Woodbine, York county, Pa.; Alexander, of Sydney, Australia; and Anne Martha, late of Ramelton, County Donegal, Ireland, a former missionary to Japan.

On the maternal side, Mr. Gamble was a scion of the Dill family, celebrated in Ulster for the many eminent Presbyterian divines of that name. Mr. Gamble was a descendant of David Dill, who before the siege of Derry resided in Fannet, near Magheradrummen Lake, where the wallstead of his house was recently to be seen. He married Catherine Sheridan, of a Roman Catholic family of Drogheda. She was a woman of very high spirit, and is said to have killed the last wolf seen in that part of Ireland, by thrusting her hand wrapped in an apron down its throat. She also rescued her husband's cattle from a foraging party of King James, during the siege of Derry. Their son Francis married Rebecca Anderson, also a lady of much strength of character.

Their sons, Marcus and John Dill, of Springfield, married sisters, Mary and Susan McClure, of a family "who lived near Convoy, and who have been distinguished in the persons of Sir Robert McClure, the Arctic explorer, and of Admiral McClure, of the United States Navy." These two couples lived together in the old manor house of Springfield, the walls of which were six feet thick and "so grouted that it was next to impossible to penetrate them." All of the twelve Presbyterian divines so well known in Ireland were either sons or the grandsons of these two "patriarchs of Springfield," as they were called. The most distinguished of these clergymen were three of the grandsons of John Dill of Springfield, and were as follows: Rev. Richard Dill, of Dublin, who helped to found Magee College, Londonderry; Rev. Edward Marcus Dill, M. D., of Clonkilty, the author of able controversial works against the Church of Rome; and the Rev. Samuel Marcus Dill, D. D., professor of Theology at Magee College.

2. Mr. Thomas Gamble, Jr., of Savannah, Ga., in a recent book of genealogy says the following: "The family name of Gamble had its origin in the old Dan-ish-Saxon name of Gamel or Gamyl, of Northern England. The Gamels held considerable land in Northumbria, Yorkshire and Lincolnshire, in the eleventh century, and are found opposing the conquest of William the Conqueror, being dispossessed by him of their holdings."
3. The Rev. W. T. Latimer, in his "Twelve Dills," says the following: "Almost every member of this family was celebrated for his reasoning powers. The Dills were logicians, metaphysicians and theologians. No doubt some of them, like the Rev. Edward Marcus Dill, were exceedingly eloquent, but it was by their quick perceptions and acute logical powers, more than by their eloquence, that they excelled most of the other ministers of the Synod of Ulster."
4. According to Mr. Latimer a John Dill was settled in Fannet between Lough Swilly and Lough Foyle, as early as 1665. The family, however, is of Dutch origin. Mr. Latimer in his "Twelve Dills" gives his reasons for believing the Dills to be descendants of one John Van Dale, of Brabant, who received a grant of demesne in Fannet in 1665.

3. Many of the sons and grandsons of the brothers of Springfield entered the medical profession. Dr. John Dill of Brighton, formerly surgeon of the East India Company, was a son of Marcus Dill of Springfield. Marcus Dill had also a grandson, Richard, who settled at Brighton as a medical practitioner, and married Miss Wale, daughter of Gen. Wale and niece of Archbishop Whately. Dr. Marcus Dill, of Ballykelly, and formerly surgeon in the Royal Navy, was a son of John Dill, of Springfield; and Dr. Francis Dill, the first Colonial Surgeon at Hong Kong, China, was a grandson of John Dill, of Springfield. This is significant in view of the fact that for a long time Mr. Gamble's inclinations wavered between medicine and the ministry. He finally took up the study of medicine, but not until his work in China was finished.
4. Samuel Marcus Dill, while on a mission to America in 1839, received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Princeton College. The following year he was made moderator of the General Assembly of Ireland.
of William Gamble, was also a son of John Dill, of Springfield, and his wife, Susan McClure. He has been described as “one of the cleverest of the name, full of wit and humor.” He was married to Anne Scott, daughter of Alexander Scott, of Rosreagh (later called Oak Bank), and Anne (Park) Scott. Their daughter, Anne Dill, became the wife of William Gamble (secundus), and the mother of William Gamble, of York.

William Gamble, the eldest of five children, was born in Ramelton, County Donegal, in 1830. His mother dying when he was nine years old, he and his brothers and sisters were taken to the Oak Bank, the home of his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. John Dill. This little old stone house was built by Alexander Scott from some of the stones still remaining from the ancient castle of Ramelton, long since disappeared. The Rev. James Reid Dill thus describes the place in his “Autobiography of a Country Parson”: “We were invited to spend a summer in Uncle John’s Oak Bank, Ramelton. The Oak Bank was one of the most delightful spots, commanding a view of Lough Swilly on the east, with a forest of grand old oaks on the west, and the beautiful River Lanyan flowing in front.” The house is still standing on the lough, though much changed. But half a dozen of the oaks are still left.

It was in this beautiful spot that Mr. Gamble spent his boyhood. He was carefully educated in the Classical School of Ramelton, where he developed a particular proficiency in mathematics. Financial reverses, however, coming at the age of nineteen, he and his brothers were forced to emigrate to America. He first attempted to settle in New York, but not finding congenial employment there, he went to Philadelphia, where he was taken into the large bookbinding firm of Altemus & Co., to learn the business of gilding and stamping book covers. Having thoroughly mastered this business, he returned to New York, to accept a position in the Bible House, with which he was connected until called to the work to which he practically devoted his life. Most of his leisure he spent in study, his ambition at this time being to obtain a college training. He even contemplated entering the ministry; and being unable for the lack of money to buy the books he needed, he copied out the whole of “Hodge’s Systematic Theology” by hand.

When the position in which he afterward so distinguished himself was offered him, he was extremely reluctant to accept. It was so entirely different from the plans he had made for himself, and he was so modest in regard to his own powers, that it took much persuasion on the part of his friends to make him see his fitness for so responsible a task. Of this work we can give no better idea than that contained in the memorial sketch by his friend and co-worker, the Rev. John Wherry, which was read at Mr. Gamble’s funeral, and printed in the York Daily of May 22, 1886. We quote all but the opening lines, the substance of which is given above:

“At this time a competent layman was wanted to take charge of the infant press that the Presbyterian mission had established at Ningpo. Mr. Gamble’s intelligence, education, energy, practical business capacity, robust health, all crowned with strong Christian principles, marked him as the man for the place, and he was unanimously chosen by the board, and after some months’ study of electrotyping, at that time a new art, was sent out about the year 1858. On his arrival at Ningpo, it became his ambition to make the small and comparatively inefficient establishment he found there the most potent factor possible in the enlightenment and evangelization of China. To do this it soon became necessary to remove it to Shanghai, which, after its opening as a port, began to absorb the trade of Ningpo and other ports, and to become, as it now is, the great commercial metropolis of Eastern Asia. Here it remains, and here it flourishes to-day. With commodious buildings and ample appliances it soon became the leading publishing house of the East; and, were this all he had accomplished, his career would have been called a success. But this was only the preliminary condition of his real work. To explain clearly in the brief space allotted to me to an audience unfamiliar with the Chinese language what this was is difficult; but I hope at least to give an intelligible idea of it. It must be remembered that Chinese writing is not alphabetic but ideographic, that words cannot be compounded of letters, and that, in printing, each word must have its own individual, solid, metallic type. Thus instead of twenty-six capitals, twenty-six Roman letters, ten numerals and the few punctuation marks and other signs which make up an English font, and which will suffice to print all the words in the dictionary, the ten thousand words in common use in Chinese require, except for a modification of the system, which eases the matter somewhat, ten thousand distinct individual kinds of type, requiring ten thousand matrices to cast. To make them was the problem Mr. Gamble set himself to solve. By the old method the character was cut out of a solid block of steel, and this as a punch, when hardened, was driven into a piece of copper, which, properly adjusted to the typecasting machine, became the matrix for that character. But the cutting out of steel of ten thousand different punches, some of them most complicated, involved such prodigious labor, patience and expense, as to become practically an impossibility. Mr. Gamble, studying the problem, conceived the idea of cutting the characters on ends of oblong blocks of boxwood, taking from these, when set up, like pages of type, wax impressions on presses made for this purpose, transferring these impressions, properly covered with plumbago, to an electro-typing battery, backing up the copper plates thus produced with type metal, sawing the plates into squares, each containing a character, and fastening these into blocks made most ingeniously out of grooved bars, thus producing, except the cutting on boxwood of each character, a simple Chinese art, matrices by the hundreds instead of singly. These matrices, thus made, not only cost but a fraction of the expense and time of those made by the old method, but were much superior in form and accuracy. This invention, for so it must be called, though not patented, revolutionized the making of Chinese type. The next difficulty Mr. Gamble had to meet was to arrange these cheaply produced ten thousand kinds of types in cases so as to be readily accessible by the hand of the compositor. As a preliminary he employed competent native Chinese scholars to index not only all the different characters in the thirteen Chinese classics and the Bible, as translated by Dr. Culbertson, his colleague, but to count the number of times each occurred. Bookkeepers who know what it is to post accounts can judge of the labor of making so many entries in a ledger as there are words in the Bible (I do not mean kinds of words), and thirteen books besides. It took three industrious men a whole year to accomplish this preliminary work. On the relative frequency of characters thus ascertained, besides regulating the number of each kind of type to a font, he arranged the size and position of the boxes in the type-cases, which were in the shape of a hopper, with the compositor in the vortex, relegating to drawers or cases on the walls characters that were only called for perhaps a few time in a whole book. The labor and loss of time thus spared to the compositor can only be appreciated by one who has personally seen the old style and the new. I may add that Mr. Gamble published a list of these characters, thus indexed and counted, with the number of times found, which is one of the curiosities of literature; and also that on the basis of the relative frequency of characters thus laboriously obtained Dr. Martin, now of the University of Pekin, prepared a text-book for beginners in Chinese, both native and foreign. These great projects having been successfully accomplished, Mr. Gamble's next work was to construct by his new processes a font of Chinese types, which, while perfectly legible, were to be but of the size known to printers as small pica—smaller than hitherto had been practical. His object was two-fold—first to be able to print the Bible in a conveniently small and inexpensive form for general circulation; and second, to be able to align Chinese and Roman types in the dictionaries, grammars, and scientific books he was constantly called on to publish. This, after several years' labor, was successfully accomplished, and admirably answered both purposes. I cannot show you Dr. William's large Chinese-English dictionary, which, though not printed by Mr. Gamble, was printed soon after his departure from China on the type he had made, but I hold in my hand a copy of the Bible printed by himself from this font, which, from cover to cover, binding and all, is in the most important sense his workmanship. This done, to make practical reference Bibles in Chinese, he produced a small font of legible types but the fourth part of the size of small pica. Con-jointly with these great works he undertook to perfect all existing fonts of Chinese types, and made new sets of matrices by his own processes, which are now carefully preserved in fire-proof safes in our press at Shanghai. This also was a work of years, but done once was done forever. I might also mention Manchu, and especially Japanese fonts, the latter of which cost him much thought, many experiments and no small correspondence with missionaries in Japan, the beautiful result of which is seen in Dr. Hepburn’s Japanese-English dictionary, also printed at our press simultaneously with Dr. Williams’. He also undertook to make electro-type plates of the chief standard Christian books published by the Press, to lessen expenses and facilitate rapidity of production. He had the satisfaction, and it was a very great one to him, of producing, before he left Shanghai, from such plates a beautiful edition of the New Testament, which he could afford to sell, bound in the Chinese manner, in paper stitched with silk, for five cents a copy.

2. Anne Park (wife of Alexander Scott, of Rosreagh) was the daughter of Nathan Park and Anne Wood, a niece and ward of the Earl of Belmot. This family intermarried with the Shaftsbury and Enniskillen families. The Parks were an important county family in the North of Ireland at that time, holding large possessions in County Donegal.
In like manner he produced a cheap popular edition of the celebrated Mr. Burns’ translation into Chinese of the Pilgrim’s Progress.
If it be remembered that while he was exec-tuting these laborious projects with the assistance of other hands, which had only become skilled out of the crudest material by his own years of patient teaching, he was at the same time directing and looking after, to the minutest particulars, a printing establishment that poured out annually nearly 30,000,- 000 pages of Christian and other literature, the indomitable courage and energy of the man can begin to be appreciated. This involved the selection and oversight of forty or fifty workpeople, inspection of their work and pay rolls, purchase of materials in other ports and Europe and America, innumerable accounts, an extensive banking and shipping business, and a correspondence that extended to every port and mission station almost in China, as well as to England, America, Australia, the Sandwich Islands and Japan. Only perfect system, perfec control of his forces, and untiring industry, could have enabled him to accomplish so many, so varied and so difficult tasks. And in the meantime was growing without his wish a type foundry rivalling the Press in the extent of its operations, supplying, as it did, the World with Chinese types. There are fonts made by himself, or from his matrices, in various parts of China, Japan, England, France, and the United States. From the ‘Mei Hua Shu Kuan,’ as it is known over China, at the east gate of Shanghai, have sprung many Chinese printing establishments, some Governmental, some missionary, some newspaper, some private, through which our friend, though dead, is still effectually assisting in the intellectual and religious awakening of that Empire. This was his life work, so far as it was peculiar. In it he had found his sphere, and was peerless.
It is safe to predict that for a century to come not a Bible, a Christian or scientific book printed from movable Chinese types in that Empire or in Japan, but will bear the impress of Mr. Gamble’s hand. And yet, such was his modesty, that I doubt if even his most intimate friends had any adequate conception of what he had done. It was as a rule only incidentally that he spoke of his work. This sketch would not be complete without a few words about his religious life as I saw it in Shanghai. His workmen were native Chinese, and most of them were at first heathen. For their instruction in the doctrines and duties of Christianity he was always anxious, and made constant provision. In this he was assisted by his colleagues, a native preacher who is now the pastor of the separate church that embraces the workmen at the Press, and by his native foreman, a devout Christian man, and most trusted friend. He attached himself to the Union Church at Shanghai, and was seldom absent from its services or from the weekly prayer meetings and other meetings of the mis-ion. But he took special interest in a class of young men, English, Germans and Swedes, whom he gathered together at Shanghai, and met each Sabbath at his own house for the study of some Scripture lesson and prayer.
Every branch of the work of his own mission received his careful thought and, burdened as he was by his own tasks, he still found time to advise, help and encourage his colleagues in all their work. He took special interest in the founding of the China Inland Mission, under J. Hudson Taylor, the special object of which was to place missionaries in the interior and in every province, and when the ship ‘Lammermuir’ brought the first dozen missionaries of that society to China he received them into his own home, and entertained them until they were able to make arrangements for their abode in the interior. His hospitality to the members of the mission, and indeed to all men, was unbounded. He lived to see this society the largest by all odds in China, able to send out seventy new missionaries. I believe, in one year. When his work in Shanghai was done he made a tour of the mission ports and stations in China, and after several years' labor in Japan, where he went at the request of a Japanese prince, to teach type founding and printing, he returned to this country. With the desire for knowledge, especially of a scientific kind, which always characterized him, he entered the Sheffield Institute at New Haven, where, in recognition of his services to China and Japan, Yale College conferred on him the honorary title of Master of Arts. He then entered the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, and continued his medical studies at Paris, residing afterward successively at Geneva, London and Edinburgh, whence he returned to this country, and settled in York. His life here, as you know, was quiet and uneventful. His true work had been done in China. There his name will be gratefully remembered. There his influence through the mighty engine of the press will be felt for all generations. Of our personal relations I cannot now speak. Suffice it to say, that thrown together for five years in a heathen land, intimately associated in our work, for mine in a sense supplemented his, we formed mutual attachments which death has not power to dissolve."

Mr. Gamble was married Sept. 1, 1874, in Philadelphia, to Miss Phinia Miller, daughter of the Rev. Samuel Miller. Immediately upon their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Gamble went to Europe, where they remained seven years. Wishing, however, to have their children brought up in America, they returned to this country in the spring of 1881 and came to York in the summer of that year. Mr. Gamble built a home on the corner of Duke street and Cottage Place, but did not live many years to enjoy it. He caught a violent cold in May, 1886, and died on the 18th of that month. He is buried at Prospect Hill cemetery. His children are as follows: Rev. William Miller Gamble, Anna Dill Gamble and Samuel Gamble.

EPHRAIM SMYSER HUGENTUGLER has since 1901 been the efficient assistant postmaster of York, and for twenty years prior to that time was connected with the York Dispatch. Mr. Hugentugler is a descendant, on both sides, of old and honorable families, the Smysers receiving fuller consideration elsewhere.

The history of the family bearing the name of Hugentugler can be traced back to the year 1710, at which date the original emigrant came to America from Hesse-Darmstadt. From 1710 no trace can be found of the name until 1750, when the birth of Abraham Hugentugler, the great-great-grandfather of Ephraim S., occurred. Four daughters and two sons were born to him. In 1794 one of the sons, the great-grandfather of Ephraim, married Miss Christina Ortman. Ten children, seven sons and three daughters, were born to this union.

One of the sons, Samuel Hugentugler, the grandfather of Ephraim S., was born in 1813. He was united in marriage to Miss Rebecca Madden, and of this union were born four children, three sons and one daughter. Of this family Ephraim M. Hugentugler, born in 1838, married Mary A. Smyer, and their family numbered eight children, seven of whom are living, Rebecca having died when only six years of age. The living are: Ephraim S., assistant postmaster of York; Luther S., wholesale cigar dealer of Columbus, Ohio; Harry S., a chairmaker of York; and Estella, Abbie S., Grace and Mary, living at home. The father, Ephraim M. Hugentugler, an honored resident of York, is a retired merchant. For many years he was one of the able business men of that place and through honest dealing and thorough business methods acquired a competency, by which he was able to retire in his advancing age.

Ephraim Smyser Hugentugler was born in Columbia, Lancaster county, May 31, 1869. When he was ten years of age his parents took up their residence in York. Here, at the York high school, he received his education. Soon after leaving school he became a carrier for the York Dispatch. Afterward entering the office of that paper as an apprentice, he was advanced until he became one of the most efficient printers in the office. On Nov. 1, 1901, he was appointed assistant postmaster of York.

On June 26, 1892, Mr. Hugentugler was joined in matrimony to Miss Laura Dander, of Lancaster, Pa., a daughter of a partner in the well-known Hollinger tannery of Lancaster, Pa. Mr. and Mrs. Hugentugler have one child, Charles R., a student at school.

The career of Mr. Hugentugler in York has been entirely creditable and is an evidence of the fact that earnest and conscientious endeavor counts in this work-a-day world. In politics Mr. Hugentugler is a staunch Republican; an active worker for his party, he was for nine years secretary of the Republican county committee. Socially he is a member of the York Club, the Heptasophs, the Elks, the Royal Arcanum, and the Jr. O. U. A. M. In religion he is a worthy member of the Union Lutheran Church. His obliging disposition and painstaking efforts to please the public have won him a very large place in the hearts of the people, and gained him their hearty approval.

WALKER A. DROMGOLD, of the former firm of Hench & Dromgold, and now vice-president and general manager of the Hench & Dromgold Company, manufacturers of agricultural implements and machinery, is a son of John and Bandina (Hench) Dromgold. He was born near Ickesburg, Perry Co., Pa., March 4, 1850, being of Scotch-Irish ancestry.

Thomas Dromgold, grandfather of Walker A., was born in County Louth, near Dublin, Ireland, where his father was a merchant, mill owner and farmer. The former came to the United States in young manhood, emigrating from Warren Point, in the north of Ireland, about the 11th day of May, 1801, and arriving at Newcastle, Del., July 22d of the same year. He traveled from there, mostly on foot, to the Chesapeake Bay, continuing his journey from the mouth of the Susquehanna river, following the river until he reached Millerstown, Pa. Removing from Millerstown to Donally's Mills, in the same county, Mr. Dromgold, the pioneer of that name in this country, purchased a farm near Ickesburg, Perry Co., Pa., and married Elizabeth Donally, of Donally's Mills. Four children were born of this union, three sons and one daughter. He resided on this farm until the time of his death, his widow subsequently remaining there, where she was tenderly cared for by the father of Walker A. Dromgold. In the Common Pleas court in Bloomfield, Perry county, Jan. 5, 1830, Thomas Dromgold, then fifty-five years old, became a naturalized citizen of the United States. He died in Perry county, of which he had been one of the early settlers, March 8, 1841; and his wife, Elizabeth (Donally) Dromgold, died Sept. 28, 1860, in her seventy-fourth year.

John Dromgold, one of the three sons of Thomas Dromgold (the other two having been Edward and Manassas, and the daughter having been Susanna, who married Jacob Miller), was born on the old homestead farm near Ickesburg, March 20, 1811, and died on his farm near Ickesburg Jan. 13, 1887. On Aug. 18, 1834, he married Bandina Hench, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Yohn) Hench, who had two sons and three daughters, our subject's mother having been the eldest. Samuel Hench, the maternal grandfather of W. A. Dromgold, who was of German descent, had three brothers and five sisters: John, Jacob, Peter, Elizabeth, Susan, Catharine, Mary and Lena. Samuel Hench's farm adjoined that of the elder Dromgold. Bandina (Hench) Dromgold was born Jan. 17, 1815, and died Dec. 1, 1876. During the first five years of their married life Mr. and Mrs. Dromgold lived on a farm near Dever's Run, then removed to Turbett township, near Port Royal, Juniata county, a few years later removing to Spruce Hill township and finally returning to their native county, where they spent the remainder of their lives. He became the owner of his father's great farm of 600 acres, 300 of which he improved, erecting a number of tenement houses, employing many laborers, and being justly regarded as a very prominent man. Honored with various offices in his township, he was active in political and business affairs. He was a Democrat politically, and a devout member of the Lutheran Church. Five sons and four daughters were born to him: Eliza J., deceased, who married Solomon Bower, deceased, late of Blain, Pa.; J. Ellen, wife of Nicholas Ickes, of Nebraska; Maggie A., deceased, who was the wife of George Kochenderfer; Sarah P., deceased, wife of Philip Kell, of Ickesburg, Pa.; Samuel M., of Blain, Perry county; William S., living on the old homestead; Dr. Thomas M., a practicing physician at Seneca, Ill.; Walker A., our subject; and Dr. Stewart T., a practicing physician of Elmore, Ohio.

Walker A. Dromgold was reared on the farm upon which he was born and was educated in the public schools at Spring Grove and Mt. Pleasant. After leaving school he went to farming with his father, remaining at that until twenty-one years old. Then he conducted a farm for three years on his own account, and next removed to Patterson, Juniata Co., Pa., continuing agricultural and other pursuits on the estate of Hon. James North, a very prominent citizen of that section.

His next move was to Turbett township, same county, where he continued to reside until 1877, when he disposed of his interests and associated himself with S. Nevin Hench, of Ickesburg, in the manufacture and sale of agricultural implements, near Port Royal. At the end of two years Mr. Dromgold removed to Perry county, to take charge of his father's farm, remaining there three years, and, in addition to managing his father's farm, selling and manufacturing agricultural implements during that period. In 1882 Mr. Dromgold left Perry county and located in York, where the business he then established has grown to great proportions. In the formation of the National Harrow Company of New York Mr. Dromgold was elected a director in the interests of Hench & Dromgold, serving and continuing as such to the present time. A few years later, on the formation of the Standard Harrow Company, of Jersey City, N. J., capitalized at $2,000,000, Mr. Dromgold was elected a director, as a recognition of his large practical knowledge and sterling business abilities.

On Sept. 23, 1871, Mr. Dromgold was married to Martha E. Shull, daughter of William Shull, of Ickesburg, Perry Co., Pa., and five children were born of this union: Lelia Alice, Corinne, Thomas Edward, Bradie Lawrence and William Shull. Corinne and William Shull died in infancy. Mrs. Dromgold died Nov. 24, 1881. On Feb. 19, 1891, Mr. Dromgold again married, his present wife being Ella F. Wilt, of York, and six children have been born to this union: Florence Aileen, Davis Elkins, Kathryn Isabelle, Stewart A., Justina Marie Davenport, and Margaret.

Mr. Dromgold is president of the Hench-Dromgold - Hartman - Rice - Ickes Reunion, which was attended by over one thousand people, and which was originally organized as the Hench-Dromgold Reunion. Not only does Mr. Dromgold take an active part in the affairs of the Hench & Dromgold works, employing 225 people and sending their goods to all parts of the world, but he is also a member of the firm of Hench, Dromgold & Shull, manufacturers of lumber, having purchased, and now owning about twenty thousand acres of timber land at Mill Creek, W. Va., where they have a large sawmill plant in operation, having about fifteen miles of railroad for hauling logs, bark and pulp-wood. They also have a large wholesale and retail dry goods, grocery and furniture store at that point, giving constant employment to from 150 to 200 men. He is also a member of the firm of Hench, Dromgold & Co., Coffee Exchange Building, New York City, doing a large export business.

Mr. Dromgold finds time, in addition, for much social enjoyment as well. His favorite recreation is in visiting his farms, of which he owns four, and the two largest of the four are noted for the splendid crops produced, for Mr. Dromgold is as successful in farming as he is at manufacturing.

The Hench & Dromgold Company, as it now exists, was incorporated in 1902, with a capital of $350,000, and Mr. Dromgold was made vice-president and general manager. He is a Mason of the thirty-second degree, belonging to the Reading Shrine and Harrisburg Consistory. In politics Mr. Dromgold is a stanch Republican, and was, for four years, a member of the select council from the Eleventh ward. Here, as in all other matters intrusted to him, he gave intelligent and earnest thought, doing much for the city's good. In fact Mr. Dromgold does all things thoroughly and well, whether it be manufacturing, farming, or whatever else he may undertake.

(1) Johannis Hange (John Hench) emigrated from Germany more than two centuries ago. Through the Palatinate, along the Rhine, the border provinces had been repeatedly ravaged by cruel and merciless war. Their cities, towns and villages were burned, their property confiscated or destroyed, their crops and vineyards trodden down, and their churches and schools ruined. Finding no rest, peace nor security in their own land, many thousands of them fled down the Rhine, finding refuge in Holland, and other thousands in England for a time. In England many found a sympathetic friend in William Penn, and he invited many of them to come to America. Queen Anne of England also invited them, and even bore the expenses of transportation for many of them to come to the Colonies.

Among those Germans who came to America to select their homes was Johannis Hange (John Hench), a blacksmith by trade, from Wurttemberg, who landed at Philadelphia on the ship “Lydia,” Sept. 20, 1743. After a time he returned to Wurttemberg and was married. He returned to America, landing at Philadelphia, Sept. 2, 1749, on the ship “Chesterfield.” He settled in Vincent township, Chester Co., Pa., removed to Pikeland township in 1753, and purchased land. His name appears on the list of Chester county taxables from 1756 to 1778.

To John Hench and his wife were born eight children, five sons and three daughters. The sons were Peter, Henry, John, Jacob and George; the daughters, Maria Elizabeth, Christina and Betsy or Elizabeth. Two of the sons, Peter (a fifer and drummer) and Henry, enlisted on a war vessel, in the war of the Revolution, in 1774. They were afterward captured and died of neglect and starvation on a prison ship at New York, and were buried under a mound in Trinity churchyard, New York. Their names are found in the Pennsylvania Archives.

The third son, John, enlisted in 1777 and was made second lieutenant, 4th Battalion, Pennsylvania Continental Line, under Major Peter Hartman, a kinsman. Not only in the field but at home they rendered valuable services to the cause of freedom, by furnishing cattle to the army and rendering services and care and food to the sick and wounded soldiers in the hospital at Yellow Springs, which was not far from their home. After the battle of Brandywine a portion of Gen. Wayne’s division retreated across the valley hill and encamped in the evening in the meadows on John Hench’s farm. Mr. Hench told the soldiers they were welcome to take whatever they wanted. As soon as they pitched their tents and lighted their camp fires from the fences, forty head of fat cattle were driven into the yard, and the slaughtering continued until all their wants were supplied. Many of the soldiers were shoeless, and used the skins from the bullocks, strapping them in the form to use them as shoes, to protect their feet, which were sore and bleeding.

John Hench’s will was dated June 28, 1801. Before his death he removed to Mifflin county, now Juniata county, in Milford township, with his sons and daughter, Mrs. Zachary Rice. He was buried at Academia, Pennsylvania.

(II) John Hench married Margaret Rice, daughter of Zach. Rice. Children of (II) John Hench: Sons—Peter, Jacob, John, Samuel and Conrad, who was killed when young; daughters—Elizabeth married John Bryner; Jane Christina married Joseph Bryner; Susanna married Daniel Motzer; Sallie married Jacob Strauch; Rebecca married John Ritter; Judith married Jacob Evinger; Catharine married George Rausch; Pauline remained unmarried.

Children of Jacob Hench (I) (son of emigrant John Hench) and his wife, Susanna Rice: Sons—John, Zachariah, Major Peter; daughters—Abigail, Mary and Nancy.

Children of George Hench (I), son of emigrant John Hench: Son—John; daughter—Maria.

Children of Peter Hench (2), brother of grandfather Samuel Hench: Sons—Parkinson H. and Samuel H.; daughters—Jane and Margaret.

Children of Jacob Hench (2), brother of grandfather Samuel: Sons—George Hench and John Hench; daughters—Elizabet Mary, Susanna and Rebecca.

Children of John Hench (3), brother of grandfather Samuel: Sons—John, Jacob, Conrad and Samuel; daughters—Elizabeth and Margaret.

Children of Samuel Hench, grandfather of Walker A. Dromgold: Sons—Jeremiah Hench, George Washington Hench; daughters—Bandina married John Dromgold; Sarah Ann married John B. Ritter; Margaret married Joseph Kell.

HOWARD P. GOODLING, manager of the office of the A. B. Farquhar plant in York, is one of the rising young men of that city. He was born Dec. 6, 1872, at Loganville, in Springfield township, York county, son of Rev. Charles H. and Eliza (Miller) Goodling.

Rev. Charles H. Goodling was also born at Loganville, in 1850, and spent his early life there. He educated himself for the ministry and was ordained in 1881, now filling a charge at West Berwick, Pa. He married Elizabeth Miller, daughter of Samuel and Mary (Fishel) Miller.

Howard P. Goodling spent his school days in Williamsport, Baltimore and York, attended two years at Central Pennsylvania College, and three months at the Rochester Business University, Rochester, N. Y. He then taught school for one year in Union county, and in 1895 entered the employ of the A. B. Farquhar Company as clerk in the office, where by hard and conscientious work he has advanced himself to his present position, having charge of the office and the advertising and sales business. In 1893 Mr. Goodling was united in marriage with Maggie Spangler, daughter of John and Jane (Schoch) Spangler, of Union county, and to this union have been born two children, Donald E. and Margaret E. He and his family reside at No. 47 North Queen street, York. In his political affiliations Mr. Goodling is a Republican.

CHARLES FREDERICK SCHNABLE, one of York’s prominent retired citizens, was born in Prussia, Germany, Feb. 9, 1822, son of Charles Lewis and Wilhelmina (Kromer) Schnable, the former of whom was a stone mason by trade, a vocation he followed in his native country, where he died at the age of seventy-one years. Mrs. Schnable died when sixty-five years of age.

Charles Frederick Schnable is the only child of his parents yet living, and he received his education in his native country. He came to America in June, 1839, landing in Philadelphia, where he remained, however, but one day. He made his way to York by way of Lancaster and Columbia, in a wagon, there being no railway service at that time, and on arriving in York he found employment as clerk in a hardware store for Mr. Rosenmiller, with whom he remained eighteen years. Mr. Schnable then went to Tyler’s hardware store, being employed at that place twenty-seven years, as manager, and at the end of that time he retired from active life. Mr. Schnable spent twelve years in the city of Chicago, but now makes his home with his daughter, Mrs. J. D. Harnish, of No. 625 East Market street, York. Mr. Schnable is the owner of a fine home in Irving Park, one of the fine residence suburbs of the city of Chicago, Ill., and he also owns the building occupied by the Bixler Candy Company, of York, situated at No. 207-209 West Market street.

In 1849 Mr. Schnable and Sophia Holtstine were united in marriage. Mrs. Schnable was born Oct. 2, 1828, in Germany, daughter of Adam Holtstine, and she died in 1895, being buried at Prospect Hill cemetery. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Schnable were as follows: John Henry, who died March 17, 1874; Edwin, who died June 30, 1854; Mary, who died Oct. 10, 1870; Annie, wife of J. D. Harnish, of East Market street, where our subject resides; Charles L., who married Eva Shirey, and is in the job printing business in Chicago, Ill.; William, who married Pearl Dudgeon, and is a partner with his brother, Charles L., in the printing business; George M., who died Sept. 14, 1888; and Harry, deceased. All of the deceased children were interred in the family burying lot in Prospect Hill cemetery.

In politics Mr. Schnable is a Democrat, but takes no interest in political matters, and for the last twelve years has not even attended the elections. He is a faithful member of St. Paul’s Lutheran Church of York, in the work of which he has been active, and has served as a member of the church council. Mr. Schnable’s eighty-four years show that time has touched him lightly, leaving him in the enjoyment of physical vigor and mental strength. Through his years of successful business experience he has retained the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens which he gained in his earlier years.

HENRY CARLS was for some years engaged in agricultural pursuits, but has lived retired for some time. He was born May 2, 1829, in Hanover, Germany, son of Frederick W. and Annie E. (Myers) Carls. The father was a day laborer in Germany, emigrating in 1854 to America, where he followed farming until his death, in his eighty-sixth year, at the home of his son in Michigan. His wife had died aged fifty-two years, leaving these children: Charles F., who is now living at the advanced age of eighty years, at Columbia, Pa.; Francis H., residing in South America; Henry; Herman H., who died in 1905, in Michigan; Margareta, who lives in Indiana;
Henrietta, who resides in Cincinnati; and Annie Catherine, who passed away in York, aged twenty-two years.

Henry Carls received a common-school education and learned the tanner's trade in Germany. On June 25, 1856, Mr. Carls landed at Baltimore, whence he removed to York, where his father and brother (Herman H.) were located. Mr. Carls' first employment was with a mason, no work at his own trade being obtainable. On Oct. 5, 1856, he engaged with Kurtz & Baugher at his trade and was employed by that firm when he enlisted, on Aug. 21, 1864, in Co. H, 200th Pa. Vol. Inf. He was an active participant at Fort Steadman, Petersburg, and in a number of other engagements, and was discharged at Alexandria, Va. After the war he returned to York, where he worked at his trade for a few years with Mr. Smyser, the tanner. He then purchased a farm in Hopewell township, but as his wife did not care for country life he returned to York after a three months' experience as an agriculturist. He was employed by Mr. Baugher until 1895, since which time he has been living in retirement at his home, No. 348 North Philadelphia street.

In 1856 Mr. Carls married Anna Mary Catherine Brinkmyer, who was born in Germany, daughter of Henry Brinkmyer. She died July 22, 1904, and was buried at Prospect Hill cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Carls had these children: Louisa Catherine, the wife of Caspar H. Oberdick, a carpet weaver of York; Amelia, the wife of Henry F. Fisher, foreman of the A. B. Farquhar foundry in York, where they reside; and Annie, Charles, Frederick, Henry and Samuel, all deceased. In politics Mr. Carls is a Republican. He is an active member of the First U. B. Church, in which he has been class-leader and Sunday-school treasurer for twenty-six years.

HENRY WASBERS, president of H. Wasbers' York City Laundry Company, is one of the most familiar figures in the business, political and social life of York. It is safe to say that there is no name with which the people of York are more familiar than that of Henry Wasbers. As a laundryman he is widely known, his wagons being constantly "on the go" through the streets of York, and his signs visible on almost every street in the city.

The building which Mr. Wasbers occupies for laundry, residence and apartment flats is one of the finest on East King street. The original building, which was 24x110 feet in dimensions, was erected by Mr. Wasbers in 1895, and more recently, in 1903, an addition was built, which made the dimensions 48x110. This building, which is of buff brick and terra cotta, is four stories in height, the first and second floors being devoted to laundry purposes. Besides having his residence there, Mr. Wasbers rents four flats of six rooms each, each flat having an individual bath. He has twenty out-of-town offices to his laundry, and the business has doubled in the last seven years, the output of work now amounting to $1,000 per week. Mr. Wasbers was the pioneer in his line, establishing and for a long time conducting alone the business that in April, 1905, became the H. Wasbers York City Laundry Company, with a capital stock of $100,000. The officers are: H. Wasbers, president and treasurer; Jacob Wasbers, vice-president; and H. C. Ulmer, secretary.

The laundry is not the only business in which Mr. Wasbers is interested, he being the president of the Rockdale Powder Company. He is manager of the York County Agricultural Society, treasurer of the Merchants' Electric Light, Heat & Power Company, and financially interested in many other directions. He is also president of the York City Gun Club, and president of the York County Game Protective Association, having been one of the organizers of the latter club. Fraternally he belongs to the B. P. O. E. and the Lafayette Club.

In politics Mr. Wasbers is a Democrat, and he was elected to the select council from the First ward for a four-years term, this election having taken place in February, 1904. He is one of the most intelligent and progressive members of the Highway committee, and is ever ready to contribute of his time, influence and means to the material growth of the city of York. It is not a matter of wonder, therefore, that he was urged by his Democratic friends, as well as by many Republican friends, to accept the nomination for mayor of York in the spring of 1905.

HENRY F. FISHER, foreman in the foundry of the A. B. Farquhar Co., of York, Pa., and a public spirited and representative citizen, was born June 12, 1857, in Manne-
The grandfather of our subject was a farmer of Prussia, Germany, who had a family of twelve children: William; Henry; Louis; Mary; Elizabeth; Maria; and (2) Frederick, who came to America at the age of thirty-two years, and was never heard of again by his family: Catherine; Ida; Frances; and William J. Of the above family Frederick, Catherine and Ida were triplets.

William J. Fisher was born in Prussia May 8, 1824, and there followed farming. He enlisted in the war of the Rebellion as a private, 1847 to 1851. On Oct. 1, 1857, he landed in Baltimore with his family, remaining there one night, after which he located in York, where he found employment in a stone quarry, remaining for forty-five years, for thirty-seven years of which he was with H. Y. Kottcamp. He married Mary Stottmyer, born April 25, 1828, in Germany, daughter of Anthony Stottmyer. They are both still living and in good health, making their home at No. 141 North Penn street, York. For twenty-eight years Mr. Fisher has been a class leader in the First United Brethren Church. His children were: Mary Ann, who married George A. Shettley, died in 1891, and is buried at Prospect Hill cemetery; William J., who died in Germany at the age of one year; Henry F.; J. William, who died in York in 1885, and is buried at Prospect Hill cemetery; and Louise Jane, wife of John Myers, of York.

Henry F. Fisher attended the district schools of the township until eleven years of age, when he found his first employment in York at stripping tobacco, and he also worked at the old brick yard. In 1869 he engaged with Mr. Baugher at the molding trade, and remained there until 1880, when he went to the A. B. Farquhar Company. In 1896-7-8-9 he was janitor of the Garfield school, but after that returned to the Farquhar Co., taking charge of the foundry July 1, 1900. He is a very skilled mechanic, and has eighty-five men working under his order. Mr. Fisher makes his residence at No. 39 North Penn street, York.

In 1879 Mr. Fisher and Miss Amelia Jane Carls were united in marriage. She was born Aug. 21, 1859, daughter of Henry and Anna Mary (Brinkmyer) Carls. The following children have been born to this marriage: Charles H., born April 25, 1880, attended the Collegiate Institute of York for three years, graduated from the Lebanon Valley College in 1904, and is now attending the Union Theological Seminary at New York City, studying for the ministry; Nettie K., born Sept. 16, 1881, a graduate of the York High School, is teaching in the Garfield school; Lottie M., born July 6, 1884, is a graduate (1905) in music, from the Lebanon Valley College; William J., born Feb. 7, 1886, is a draughtsman at the A. B. Farquhar Co.; Rosa J., born Sept. 8, 1887, is at home; Clarence E., born May 8, 1892, is at school; and Ralph F. was born Nov. 3, 1901. Politically Mr. Fisher is a Republican, and is now serving on the city school board from the Fifth ward. In 1887 he was a member of the common council.

H. KISTER FREE, of the firm of H. Free & Co., dealers in wines and liquors at York and also county commissioner, is one of the leading young business men of that city. He was born Aug. 9, 1869, at York, and comes of one of the old York county families.

Adam Free, the grandfather, was a farmer and distiller in Manchester township, York county, where he died aged fifty-eight years, and lies buried in the Prospect Hill cemetery. He married Mary Ann Hake, daughter of Jacob Hake and she died aged sixty-two years, and was laid to rest by the side of her husband. Their children were: Eli H. Free married (first) Mary Kraft, who died in 1865, and (second) Catherine Cassel, and they reside in Newberry township near Falls Station; Jacob, deceased, married Adeline Fink; Andrew married Eliza Stare, and lives near Emigsville, Pa.; Henry married Leah Rutter, and died in York; Augustus is mentioned below; Louise, widow of Alexander W. Shetter, resides at No. 119 Beaver street, York; Mary is the wife of John Schall of York: Amanda is the wife of H. Gipe of York; John W., deceased, married Katie Ingelfritz; and Catherine Jane is the widow of John Loucks of York.

Augustus Free, father of our subject, with his brother Henry, established the business which is now operated by H. Kister Free. He died in York in 1898. He married Jennie Kister of Eitters, Pa., who survives.

H. Kister Free was educated in the public schools of York, and at York Academy, and began business life as clerk for his father and uncle Henry in the very store of which he is now one of the proprietors. Here he continued to clerk for ten years. In February, 1900, he and his brother Ralph A. bought the business and have conducted it very successfully ever since, having a very large trade in this and surrounding counties. The location continues the same as formerly, No. 44 North George street.

Mr. Free is one of the city's active Republican politicians, having been elected to the council first to fill out the unexpired term of Peter Keller, in 1895, and subsequently was elected to the office for three terms from the Second ward. Under the administration of Mayor Gibson he was elected county commissioner in January, 1901, and still most efficiently fills the duties of the office. He has great influence with all elements, and is looked upon as one of the rising young business men and politicians.

Mr. Free married Annie M. Stallman, daughter of William H. Stallman, of York, and they have two children, Raymond K. and William A., both at school. Mr. Free has a wide circle of friends both in and out of the various fraternal organizations, he having membership in a number of these, being president of the Rex Hook and Ladder Co. of York; of Codorus Council, No. 115, Jr. O. U. A. M., of York; Odd Fellows Lodge No. 853; Heptasaphs No. 12, and has passed all the chairs in York Lodge No. 213, B. P. O. E., of which he is one of the past Exalted Rulers.

DR. WILSON W. BOLTON, of York, Pa., proprietor of the establishment of Albany Dentists, is a native of the State of Kansas, born in Marysville, that State, Sept. 28, 1872, son of Rev. C. S. Bolton.

Jacob H. Bolton, grandfather of the Doctor, was born in Harrisburg, Pa. In early manhood he went to Ohio, and there died, as did also his wife, Rachael (Ross) Bolton, who had been born in Lancaster, Pa. A brother of Jacob H. Bolton founded the well known Bolton Hotel, in Harrisburg, which still bears that name.

Rev. C. S. Bolton, father of Dr. Bolton, was educated at Oberlin, Ohio, for the ministry, and followed that calling in the Baptist faith for a number of years. He retired in 1900, and since that year has lived in Cameron, Mo., with his wife. The Rev. Mr. Bolton married Lydia A. Shelly, and they had six children: Dr. J. C., a dentist of Lancaster, Pa.; J. H., a merchant of Cameron, Mo.; Minnie; Alice; Luella; and Dr. Wilson W.

Dr. Wilson W. Bolton spent his early school days in his native place, and graduated from the high school at Cameron, Mo. He then entered the Kansas City Dental College, from which he graduated in 1892, and in 1893 he came to Pennsylvania and located at Lancaster, where he remained three years, engaged in the practice of his profession. After this he attended a Pennsylvania dental college, and when he had graduated he settled in York, opening an office in 1899 at No. 24 West Market street, where he has since been engaged. He has one of the best equipped offices in the city and has built up a large practice.

The Doctor was united in marriage in 1890 to Miss Adele Eichler, daughter of H. P. Eichler, a manufacturer of Lancaster, Pa., and two children have been born to this union: Helen Adele and Richard Wilson. The Doctor is a member of the Elks and is past regent of the Royal Arcanum. He is a member of the Baptist Church, while Mrs. Bolton is a Moravian.

JACOB E. WEAVER. The law is an exacting employer, and yet a sure and liberal paymaster. Served faithfully, the profession yields its devotees good financial returns and what is inmeasurably better a mental quickening which makes it increasingly more profitable in both lines. The gentleman whose honored name heads this review is one of the youngest attorneys, in point of service, of the York County Bar, though he is by no means a stranger in legal circles, having been for some ten years prior to his admission in January, 1904, a stenographer to Joseph R. Strawbridge, one of the leading attorneys of York county.

A native of the county, Mr. Weaver comes of one of its oldest families, his grandfather, Daniel Weaver, having emigrated from Germany and settled in this section in an early day. A farmer, by nature, he became possessed of considerable land, of the cultivation and care of which no one has a better knowledge than the German, Samuel Weaver, the father of our subject, was a merchant of York. He was born in 1820, and died July 17, 1883, at the age of sixty-three. The mother, whose maiden name was Anna Mary Ziegler, was a daughter of Rev. Jacob Zeigler, a minister of the Reformed Church, and a sister of ex-Congressman Zeigler, a prominent member of the York County Bar. To the marriage of Samuel and Anna Mary (Zeigler) Weaver were born four children: Jacob E.; Samuel G., in the service of the Pullman Car Company; Daniel A., United States Mail carrier; and William H., employed by the York Manufacturing Company.

Jacob E. Weaver was born in York, Sept. 24, 1868. His earlier education was received in the public schools of his native place, but later he attended the Walworth Stenographic Institute, in New York, where he graduated. For some time after graduation he worked in New York City, afterward returning to York, where he became stenographer in the law office of Gise, Ziegler & Strawbridge. For ten years he gave his best efforts to this work, and in return received the experience and knowledge of law and business generally, acquired only in the office of such men as Mr. Gise, Mr. Ziegler and Mr. Strawbridge. His evenings were spent in reading law, and after passing a most creditable examination he was on Jan. 18, 1904, admitted to the practice of law in his home county. He is at present notary public for the York County National Bank, and to the J. H. Baer & Sons Bank, and the Western National Bank.

On Jan. 30, 1893, Mr. Weaver was united in marriage to Miss Catherine I. Lauer, daughter of Edmund E. Lauer, a former resident of York, now deceased. Four children were born to this union: Charles E.; Katherine M.; Jacob L.; and George, deceased.

As intimate in the opening paragraph of this review, Mr. Weaver found in his new field of endeavor many friends. In addition to having been associated with one of the leading attorneys he had served as court detective during Mr. Strawbridge's incumbency in the office of district attorney, an experience which gave him a fine insight into the workings of the courts. Success seems assured for one so well equipped for the practice of the law. Along social lines Mr. Weaver is prominent in Odd Fellowship, having in 1904 been district deputy grand master of the Subordinate Lodge of York county, and is at present a Representative to the Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Pennsylvania. He is also a worthy member of the Masonic Order and a member of the Vigilant Steam & Chemical Fire Engine Company No. 1 of York, Pa. In political action he favors the Democratic party, and in religious faith is a consistent member of the Reformed Church.

WILLIAM H. AND GEORGE A. SWORDS are the well-known Swords Brothers, prominent photographers of York. The present firm, established in 1889, is a recognized factor in the business life of the town, the brothers doing an excellent business in all the standard lines of their work, to which they have recently added a line which makes even greater demands on the artistic capabilities—oil portraiture. Their success in this departure is the best evidence of their ability.

William Swords, grandfather of the brothers, lived and died in Lancaster county, Pa. His son, David Swords, came to York county some thirty years ago from Maytown, Lancaster county. He married Adaline Dreibenstadt, also of Lancaster county, and they had six children, of whom three are living. Of the others, Cassandra died in early childhood; Anna, who married Benjamin Leber, died in 1883; and Flora, who married William Rudy, died in 1888. The survivors are: Frances, wife of Fred Recker, formerly of York and now of Philadelphia; and William H. and George A., the photographers.

William H. Swords was born in Maytown, Lancaster county, Jan. 30, 1865, and received his education in the public schools of his native place. He learned the art of photography in Columbia, Lancaster county, and when ready to go into business settled in York, where he has lived much of his life. He was for a time junior partner in the firm of Pentz & Swords, and in 1889 his brother George A. became his partner.

Mr. Swords married (first) Adaline Doi- ler, who died, leaving him a daughter, Ger- trude, now Mrs. William Miller, of York. The second wife of Mr. Swords was Jennie Passeet, daughter of James Passett, of York. No children were born to this union.

George A. Swords was born in Maytown, Jan. 31, 1860, and attended school in that place and in York. For several years he was asso-associated with a Mr. Jefferies, and then bought out the interest of Mr. Pentz, his brother's partner, and the firm of Swords Brothers was established.

Mr. Swords married, in 1885, Jennie Wampler, daughter of Lewis B. Wampler, deceased, of York. One child has been born of this marriage, Earl W., a student.

C. F. Wiest, one of York's successful business men, is a native of that city, where he has spent his entire life. He was born June 21, 1853, son of Michael and Sarah (Berkheimer) Weist.

Michael Wiest was born in 1821, at what is now Nashville, York county, and there he learned the blacksmith's trade. Coming to York, he followed his trade until 1855, when he engaged in the machine business at the rear of his residence, No. 234 West Market street. Having made a success of this enterprise, in 1892 he turned the business over to his sons, Clayton F. and Jacob L. Michael Wiest married Sarah Berkheimer, daughter of Henry Berkheimer, who died in 1900, being buried at Prospect Hill cemetery. In politics Mr. Wiest is a Republican. He is a charter member of the Heidelberg Church, in which he is a deacon, elder and trustee. The children born to himself and wife are as follows: William H., who resides at No. 232 West Market street, York, married Miss Mary Fisher, and is clerking at the Bon Ton store; Clayton F.; Jacob L., who married Emma K. Greiman, is in business with his brother, our subject.

Clayton F. Wiest attended school until fifteen years of age, when he learned the machinist's trade with Baugher & Brother of York, with whom he remained until 1875. He was then employed by A. B. Farquhar until 1878, and is now engaged in a very successful machine business. Most of the work is job work, and the firm has a match-box machine (their own invention) on the market which is known all over the United States.

Mr. Wiest was married, in 1875, to Miss Annie Shetrone, who died in May, 1903, and is buried at Prospect Hill cemetery. Their union was blessed with children as follows: John M., deceased; Sarah M.; Walter C., deceased; Ethel M., deceased; one that died in infancy unnamed; and A. Louise, deceased. Politically Mr. Wiest is a Republican. He lives at his home No. 465 West King street, York.

Jacob L. Wiest, who, with his brother Clayton F. Wiest, is conducting a large and successful machine business in York, Pa., is one of the successful business men of that city. He was born in York, April 16, 1856, son of Michael and Sarah (Berkheimer) Wiest.

Jacob L. Wiest attended the common schools of York, and afterward the York County Academy, finishing his education at the age of sixteen years. His first employment was in a cigar box factory, but he later learned the machinist's trade, in which business he has made a success. In 1892 he and his brother took control of their father's business, which the latter had retired from, and have been very successful, the product of their shop being known all over the United States.

In 1874 Mr. Wiest was united in marriage with Miss Emma K. Greiman, and they are living at No. 422 South George street, York. They have these children: Edwin Michael, deceased; Fannie E., Maude E. and Jacob Frederick. Politically Mr. Wiest is a Republican.

Julia T. Hill Crawford, M. D.
The lady whose name opens this sketch is one whose advancement in her profession has given her a prominent place in the medical fraternity not only of York, but all over the State of Pennsylvania. She has a remarkably interesting family history, its records reaching far back to the early settlers of New England and the days of the great revolutionary struggle which separated the Colonies from the Mother Country. History has few more distinguished names in the records of that day than Elder Brewster and Jonathan Edwards, the Conants and De Beirces, Puritan and Huguenot mingling.

Marquis De Beirce, one of these ancestors, suffered on the guillotine, a victim on the eve of St. Bartholomew, but his brother escaped and later reached American shores, laying aside his title of nobility. Hezekiah Beirce, his descendant, was, with at least a dozen other ancestors, a member of the Patriot army, and a seasoned military man, having served also in the French and Indian war. He had property interests in four counties.

Another ancestor, Dr. Ebenezer Marvin,
Michael Wiest
went to the assistance of Ethan Allen and Benedict Arnold at Ticonderoga and served until after the capture of Gen. Burgoyne. His skill and courage in caring for the terribly wounded soldiers was only on an equality with the fortitude of his wife, who, while preparing lint in the cellar, gave birth to a son.

Naturally Dr. Crawford values her membership in the Society of Colonial Dames of New York, the Beirce, Conant, Marvin and Townsend families each having given her that privilege by service to the Crown.

The Townsends descended from Sir Roger Townsend, of Rainham Hall, Norwich, England, the present seat of the Marquis of Townsend. While in England in 1902 Dr. Crawford visited this historic spot, also the British Museum, and in Westminster Abbey saw the monument erected by the Viscountess Townsend to the memory of her son, Lieut. Col. Roger Townsend, who fell in the battle of Ticonderoga. The coat of arms of the Townsends has three shells on the shield, and the Latin inscription is Haec generi incrementa fides. The great-grandfather Townsend was a graduate of Princeton and a prominent man in the State of Vermont, being the first Secretary of State. He owned several grants of land in Canada.

Dr. Crawford was born at Dayton, Ohio, Dec. 2, 1860, daughter of Micajah Townsend Hill and Flora Eldred (Beirce) Hill, the former of Highgate, Vt., and the latter a daughter of Horatio Nelson and Chloe Bridge- man (Conant) Beirce. The mother of Dr. Crawford died when she was about twelve years of age; a brother, Alfred Marvin, died also at the age of twelve; a sister, Helen, wife of Walter Grant Taylor, died Feb. 26, 1896. The surviving members of the family are: Mary Beirce, Agnes Gale, and Dr. Crawford, of York. Both sisters are prominently identified with the W. C. A. work, Agnes being the general secretary for India, Ceylon, and Burmah, and Mary, for Madras. Dr. Crawford has a half-brother, Alfred Reed Hill, graduated at Yale, in 1902, in the theological class of Cambridge, in 1905, and ordained a priest on June 1st, of that year, and he is now curate to Dean Slaterly at the Cathedral, Faribault, Minnesota.

Dr. Crawford was educated at Oberlin College, later entered upon the study of medicine and was graduated at Hahnemann Medical College at Chicago, in 1884, and from the Woman's Medical College at Baltimore, in 1886. She then took an extended tour through Europe, visiting the hospitals of London, Edinburgh and Paris, bearing letters of introduction to eminent physicians and surgeons in those cities. She entered upon the practice of her profession at Chambersburg, Pa., and associated with the late Dr. Katherine Crawford, built up a lucrative practice, continuing for seventeen years.

On April 30, 1892, Dr. Crawford married Frederick Markley Crawford, who lived until coming to York on the old Crawford estate that has been held by the family from the time of the Penns. The Crawfords were with the original colony that settled Franklin county, Mr. Crawford having the original deed conveying Penn's Manor, consisting of 600 acres, to the Crawfords. In digging up the soil of the old Manor garden it is not an infrequent occurrence to find a George III. silver piece there. A number of the Crawfords served with distinction in the Revolutionary War.

Dr. Crawford belongs to the Daughters of the Revolution, the Colonial Dames, the Mayflower Society and the New England Society. In religious observance she is an Episcopalian. Socially she is a charming, cultured woman, and professionally she is skilled and successful.

ROBERT E. GEAPHART, who held the responsible position of agent for the Adams Express Company, handling the large amount of business here transacted with the company with marked discrimination and ability, and enjoying unqualified popularity with the local public, is a member of a family whose name has been identified with American annals since the Colonial era, the early progenitors having located in Maryland and West Virginia, whither they came from Germany.

John Gephart, grandfather of our subject, was an extensive dealer in cattle and maintained his home in Cumberland, Md., where his death occurred.

John H. Gephart, father of Robert E., resides in the city of York, and is route agent for the Adams Express Company, with whose service he has been identified for a number of years past. The maiden name of his wife was Sallie O. Walters, and she was born in West Virginia, a daughter of George Walters. Of this union our subject is the only child.

Robert E. Gephart was born in the city of Cumberland, Md., on the 7th of Dec., 1872, and his boyhood days were passed in Lancaster, Pa., where he secured his early education in the public schools, having attended the high school and also the Yeates Institute, in that city, and having been graduated in Weidler’s Business College, at Lancaster, Pa., as a member of the class of 1889. His first practical business experience was in connection with a clerkship in the wholesale coffee house of Paul Gerhart, of Lancaster, and in 1889 he came to York, as assistant in the local office of the Adams Express Company. He was later promoted to a clerkship in the office of the superintendent, and still later was made depot agent for the company, while in 1899 he became clerk in the city office, and on Dec. 9, 1901, he received gratifying official endorsement in being promoted to the position of agent of the company for the city of York, an appointment which was justly conferred, as the incumbent has amply proved. Alert, genial, systematic and reliable, he handled the local service with marked ability and is held in high regard by all who know him in either a business or social way. In March, 1906, he resigned his office as agent of Adams Express Company to accept an unsought position as secretary and treasurer of the Manufacturers’ Associations of York, with offices at No. 15 West Market street. In his political proclivities Mr. Gephart is a stalwart Republican, and both he and his wife hold membership in St. Paul’s Lutheran Church, while he is affiliated with the local council of the Royal Arcanum, of which he has been treasurer from the time of its organization, in 1903.

On Nov. 29, 1894, Mr. Gephart led to the hymeneal altar Miss Georgie Frey, daughter of the late George S. Frey, a well known and honored business man of York, where he was a contracting painter, and of this union has been born one son, John Richard.

WILLIAM H. BOLL. While it is as the teller of the City Bank of York that William H. Boll is best known, he is also one of the strong financial and real estate men of the city.

Mr. Boll was born in York, Jan. 5, 1875, son of Henry and Mary A. (Kahler) Boll, and spent his boyhood days in the city schools, also assisting his father in his shoe business. After his preliminary education in the public schools, Mr. Boll took a course at Sadlers, Bryant & Stratton’s Business College at Baltimore, and at the age of fifteen years entered the employ of the City Bank of York, as a messenger, from which position he was promoted to general ledger bookkeeper, a position attained when he was sixteen years of age. In 1900 he was promoted to the position of teller, and he has served in this capacity ever since. For a young man, Mr. Boll has made rapid strides in the direction of success, and all indications point to a bright and prosperous future for him.

In 1900 Mr. Boll erected a handsome residence at No. 152 Beaver street, where he made his home until April, 1904, when he erected a row of three flats, and made his home at No. 307 South Cherry street. These properties are a credit, not only to the young man himself, but to the city of York. In these transactions Mr. Boll was associated with his father-in-law. He has given considerable attention to his real estate transactions, when a boy investing his first money saved, $200, in a piece of property, and since that time has been more or less engaged in this line.

Mr. Boll is a member of the B. P. O. Elks, York Lodge No. 213, a member of the Knights of Columbus, and a member of the Knights of St. Paul, of which he has served as secretary. He and his wife are members of St. Mary’s Catholic Church.

On Oct. 25, 1900, Mr. Boll married Miss Magdalene M. Steckler, daughter of Anthony Steckler, a retired milk dealer of York.

CHARLES E. SMITH, cashier of the Farmers and Merchants National Bank of Red Lion, has won his way through superior natural qualifications and high attainments. Calm, clear judgment. the training of his mental endowments along congenial lines, and, withal, correct principles of living, have gained in a few years what may fail to be won in a lifetime of less systematic effort.

The Smith family came originally from Scotland. Jacob Smith, the first of whom there is record in this country, was probably born in Chester county, whence he removed to York county. Fanning and homemaking consumed his active years. He married Catharine Hostetter, and became the father of four children: William, Christopher, Jacob and Mary (who married George Gable).

William Smith, son of Jacob, was born in Chester county in 1812. His early life was spent in his native county, and after accompanying his father to York county he became engaged in the various occupations of farming, home-making and weaving, chiefly in Windsor township. He married Rebecca Lebenight, and they had nine children, namely: Eliza; Mary A.; David, father of Charles E.; Katherine, unmarried; William, who married Louise Haines, daughter of Charles Haines; Zacharias, who married Mary Meckes; Mary, the wife of Isaac Slenker, of Windsorville, and who died at the age of thirty years; Moses, who married Mary Goodling; and Amanda, wife of David Jacobs, of Windsorville. William Smith, the father, lived to the advanced age of eighty-eight years, when he passed away greatly respected by all who knew him.

David Smith, son of William, was born in Windsor township, Dec. 13, 1842. He received the benefit of a common school education, and was early trained to farm work, continuing at that occupation until he was seventeen years of age, when he was apprenticed to learn the shoemaker's trade. After mastering that vocation he located on a farm in Windsor township, but now makes his home in Red Lion, retired from active work. In February, 1867, he was united in marriage with Miss Rebecca Neff, daughter of Levi and Mary (Flinchbaugh) Neff, farming people of York County. This union was blessed with the following children: (1) Mary Jane, born Aug. 18, 1868, married Harvey Ziegler, a cigar manufacturer of Red Lion, and they have had eight children: Effie (deceased), Arthur, Lily (deceased), Pauline, Pansy, Martha, Reba and Susan. (2) Benjamin F., born Sept. 12, 1870, died at the age of twenty-three. (3) Charles E., is mentioned in full below. (4) Howard N. was born Oct. 13, 1875. (5) David C., born April 16, 1881, is living in New Jersey, where he is employed as a bookkeeper and stenographer. The wife and mother entered into rest March 30, 1885.

Charles E. Smith was born in Windsor township, York county, Oct. 2, 1873. His preliminary education was received in the Freyville public schools, which he attended until he was seventeen years of age. After being a student at the York County Academy for a time he was engaged to teach the Cedar Hill school in Windsor township. After one term there he was installed as teacher of the Fairview school. He met with no little success as teacher, and, being thorough himself and naturally in love with his work, he became a source of inspiration to those under him, and he was able to accomplish much of permanent good. He entered the Millersville State Normal School, and was graduated therefrom in the class of 1895. Following his graduation he became principal of the schools of Washington borough, Lancaster county, and then later was a teacher in the York County Academy. The last named position he resigned to become principal of the Red Lion schools, where he was retained for a period of seven years, during which time he had occasion to refuse the principalship of the Johnstown schools, which he was earnestly urged to accept. Not alone did he win a high reputation as a successful instructor and disciplinarian, but he gained the honest respect of all who came to know him. His profession as teacher was relinquished only when he was elected cashier of the Farmers and Merchants National Bank, at Red Lion—a position he has filled with signal ability ever since.

On Aug. 16, 1902, Mr. Smith was married to Miss J. Irene Smith, daughter of R. T. and Elizabeth (Hermann) Smith, the former a cigar manufacturer of Red Lion. Mrs. Smith was born in Windsorville Jan. 27, 1881, and received a substantial education in the schools of Windsorville and Red Lion and at Lebanon Valley College. She is an accomplished musician, and prior to her marriage was engaged as a music teacher. Both Mr. Smith and his wife are active in the work of the United Brethren Church, of which they are both members. In his political belief Mr. Smith is a Democrat, as was his father before him.

HENRY KAUFFMAN DEHUFF, a retired business man of York, was born in Dillsburg, York county, March 16, 1828, son of Abraham Dehuff. The father was born in York, Nov. 15, 1798, and received his education in the common schools of the town. By occcupation he was a maker of watches and fobs, and continued to work in that specialty until his death in 1895, at the age of ninety-six. He married Miss Maria Lyon, who was born in Botetourt county, Va., and five children were born of this union: Henry K. was the eldest. Francis Marion, born March 24, 1830, died in 1887, and is buried in Prospect Hill cemetery. Sarah Ann became Mrs. Conrad C. Leiben, and lives in Minneapolis. Annie E., living in York, is the widow of Dr. Frank Koch. George W. died in York in 1872, and is buried in the Prospect Hill cemetery.

Henry K. Dehuff was given an ordinary public school education, and when eighteen years old made his first essay in business, beginning as a dry-goods merchant and continuing in that line until 1852. The following year he went to California, when he spent four years employed in government surveying and in mining. Returning to York in 1857, he entered into a lifelong partnership with his brother. For the first ten years they were engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements, but in 1872 they turned their attention to the jewelry business. After the death of Francis M. Dehuff, in 1887, Henry K. continued to conduct the business until 1894, in that year retiring from active life. He has since lived quietly in York, respected and esteemed by all who know him. In his political sentiments Mr. Dehuff is a Democrat.

JOHN HENRY BROUGI was born in Reading township, Adams Co., Pa., Jan. 21, 1855. As a boy he attended the common schools in said township and East Berlin, Pa., and assisted in doing farm work; at the age of sixteen he taught school in the building where he began his school-boy days, and during the following three winters taught the same school, continuing teaching for seven consecutive winters. In 1876 he entered the store of T. W. Belt, corner George and King streets, York, but a year later took a course of study in the Iron City Commercial College, of Pittsburg, Pa., and in addition to his diploma was given a very flattering letter from Prof. J. C. Smith, principal and owner of said college. One extract from this letter reads: "He has shown himself while here to be unusually quick, accurate and reliable. Of the nearly twenty thousand students who have attended this institution I know of none possessed of superior ability, or more deserving than him. I regard him in short as a young man of superior worth and rare capacity as a thorough practical accountant."

In 1878 he located in Hanover, Pa., becoming bookkeeper and clerk in the store of Grove & Carver, later Carver & Little. He continued in this position for twenty years. In 1898 he relinquished the mercantile business, and established an Insurance, Brokerage and Real Estate Agency, which he still continues very successfully. During the same year he became the general manager of the Hanover Telephone Company, and continued as such for about three years, when largely through his influence, the stock of said company was sold at over one and three-fourth times its par value. In 1902 he was elected president and general manager of the Consumers’ Water Company, of Hanover, Pa., also, in the same year, president and general manager of the McSherrystown Water Company. To both these positions he has been re-elected each year since then. He is a director in the First National Bank of Hanover, Pa., and has been a member of its Finance committee for over six years. In politics he is a Republican, but always declined any political office. He also owns and manages three good farms near East Berlin, Pa., and is financially interested in several of the leading industries of the borough of Hanover.

On Nov. 8, 1886, Mr. Brough married Ida M. Young, a most estimable lady, to whose devotion to her husband and family may be attributed much of their success in life. She is the oldest daughter of William Jacob Young, and Louisa Catharine (Eichelberger) Young. To this union were born three children: Charles Young Brough, who is a graduate of Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., Class of 1904, Mechanical Engineering, and at present employed by J. S. Young & Co.; Katie May Brough, a graduate of the Women’s College of Baltimore, Md., Class of 1903, and who in her Senior year was awarded a scholarship to the Marine Biological Laboratory, in Woods Holl, Mass.; and Myra Elizabeth Brough, a member of the Class of 1907, Wilson College, Chambersburg, Pa., at present at home. The family are members of St. Mark’s Lutheran Church of Hanover, Pennsylvania.
PATERNAL ANCESTRY.

Hermanus Bruch, great-great-grandfather of our subject, landed in Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 20, 1743, from the ship "Lydia," whose master was James Abercrombie, shipped from Rotterdam, last from Cowes, England, and was the first Bruch who landed in the Colonies. [This information is from I. D. Rupp's 20,000 names of the first settlers]. From Prof. M. G. Brumbaugh's History of the German Baptist Church we learn that in 1779 Hermanus Bruch was a member of Upper Conewago German Baptist Congregation (Mummert), which was established in 1741. On Jan. 6, 1786, Hermanus Bruch bought from David Myers a farm near East Berlin, Pa., which is one of the three farms now owned by John Henry Brough, and for which he has a continuous chain of title from then until he became the owner. Hermanus Bruch died in 1796, leaving issue. One of his children was Jacob, who was the great-grandfather of John Henry Brough. Letters of Administration were granted May 24, 1796, to Peter Brough, eldest son of Hermanus Bruch, and John Stauffer. The father spelled his name Bruch, the son Brough. Peter Brough died Jan. 23, 1823; the administrators of his estate were Michael Haines and John Miley. Jacob, the great-grandfather of John Henry Brough, spelled his name Brugh.

Jacob Brugh was born July 5, 1752, and died Sept. 25, 1828, aged seventy-six years. Two months and twenty days. He was married to Sophia Trimmer, who was born Feb. 3, 1752, a daughter of Andrew Trimmer, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. She died May 8, 1835, aged eighty-three years, three months and five days. Jacob and his wife are buried in a graveyard located on the north bank of the Conewago, below Diehl's Mill, about three miles from East Berlin, Pa. About fifty people, mostly Trimmers and Diehls, are buried there. Jacob Brugh had six children: John, who was the grandfather of our subject; Catherine, who married Abraham Trostle; Lizzie, who married Issac Bowers; Sallie, who married Jacob First; Andrew; and Polly, who married Christian Picking.

John Brough, grandfather of John H., was born Feb. 15, 1784, and died April 21, 1848, aged sixty-four years, two months, and six days. He married Hannah Bowers, who was born June 24, 1788, and died Oct. 20, 1854, aged sixty-six years, three months and twenty-six days. Both are buried at Mummert's German Baptist Meeting House near East Berlin, Pa. He was a farmer and besides for many years before railroads were built he drove a team from Philadelphia and Baltimore to Pittsburg and Wheeling, W. Va., hauling merchandise; he took great pride in having one of the best teams on the road. They had six children: (1) Abraham married Susanna Albert, a daughter of Rev. Mr. Albert, of the Lutheran Church. They had three children. Abraham is buried at Ground Oak Church, near Trostle's Mill. His widow survived him, but is now also deceased. (2) Sarah, the only daughter, was born Nov. 13, 1812, and died March 16, 1884, aged seventy-one years, four months, and three days. She is buried at Mummert’s Meeting House. She married Peter Studebaker, who was of the family that now manufacture the “Studebaker Wagons,” after his death marrying Philip Breckbill, of Boiling Springs, Cumberland Co., Pa. She never had any children. (3) Emanuel, born Jan. 27, 1814, married Caroline Shultz, who bore him ten children, six of whom died young. The other four still live and are: Andrew, of near Bendersville: Edward, of Biglerville; Mary, who married Abraham Deitrich, of York Springs; and Hannah, who married James Leer, of near Clear Spring, York Co., Pa.; each of these four children has children. After the death of Emanuel's first wife he married Mrs. Catherine Mumper, who was a widow and a sister of his first wife. She still lives in Gettysburg, Pa. Emanuel died Feb. 23, 1879, and is buried at the Latimore Meeting House. He was a farmer, but for a number of years before his death lived retired in York Springs. (4) Jacob was born Sept. 10, 1815. He married Leah Eliker, and they had eight children, one of whom died young, the others growing up and marrying: Peter, William and Levi are farmers and live near Latimore P. O., Adams Co., Pa. Jacob and Susan are deceased. Kate and Sarah are widows, each having children living. Jacob was a farmer and died Oct. 7, 1873, while actively engaged in farming. He is buried at Latimore Meeting House.

(5) Andrew Brough, father of John Henry was born near East Berlin, Pa., Dec. 18, 1817, and was reared on his father's farm. On Jan. 16, 1845, he married Eve Harbold, who died June 20, 1846, and is buried at Latimore Meeting House. To this union one daughter, Sarah was born Oct. 11, 1845. She married Jacob Leas, and died Oct. 26, 1900, leaving one daughter, Kate, who is married to S. Ambrose Trostle, and has four children. On Jan. 17, 1850, Andrew Brough married Catharine Agnes Arnold (mother of John Henry Brough), who was born Feb. 1, 1826, and is now living on the corner of Baer avenue and Middle street, Hanover, Pa., enjoying good health, and retaining in a wonderful measure her mental faculties. She reads very much and retains well what she has read, remembering things that happened during any part of her long and useful life. She is a consistent member of the German Baptist Church and loves to attend preaching services. She is, and for many years has been, a Bible student, and can quote from memory passage after passage from the Scriptures, and endeavors to live an exemplary Christian life. To this union were born two children: John Henry, born Jan. 21, 1855, and Catherine Alice, born Oct. 23, 1857. The latter died June 26, 1890, aged thirty-two years, eight months and three days. She was a noble girl, beloved and admired by a very large circle of acquaintances. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Hanover, Pa., and is buried at Mummerts Meeting House.

Andrew Brough died Oct. 26, 1808, aged eighty years, ten months and eight days. He retained his mental faculties until the last moment of his life, was conscious until the last breath, and died very peacefully. He was a member of the German Baptist Church and is buried at Mummerts Meeting House. He was a man of noble qualities, was as honest as steel, and his word was as good as a bond. By carefully managing his farms he acquired considerable of an estate, for many years being actively engaged in farming, but during the last twenty years of his life he lived retired in the borough of East Berlin, Pennsylvania.

(6) John Brough, the youngest of the family of John and Hannah (Bowers) Brough, was born Oct. 5, 1830, near East Berlin, Pa. After the death of his father he became the owner of the farm where he was born, about 1865 erecting buildings on one part of the farm, and remained there until his death, which occurred Oct. 26, 1902, he dying very suddenly. He retired in his usual health, but about midnight his wife discovered he was dead. He is buried at Mummerts Meeting House, having been a member of the German Baptist Church, and for many years a minister in said church. He was married to Susanna Gochnauer, who was living at the home where he died at the time of her death in 1905, when she was laid to rest beside her husband. They had five children: Emma died young. Sarah married Franklin Eisenhart, a miller and they had nine children: Sarah died Jan. 26, 1892, and is buried at Holtz-Schwamm Church, about three miles from East Berlin; she was a member of the German Reformed Church. Mary married Benjamin Malaun Miller, who has for many years been a justice of the peace and is successfully engaged in farming and lime burning; they have three children. Lizzie married Michael Burgard, an extensive and successful farmer, and they have five children. William E. married Kate Baugher, and they have two children; he lives where his father died and is engaged in farming.

MATERNAL ANCESTRY.

Abraham Arnold, great-grandfather of John Henry Brough, was born Oct. 3, 1761, and died Oct. 25, 1827, aged sixty-six years, twenty days. He was married to Catherine Close, when she died was aged sixty-eight years, five months and nineteen days, both being buried at Mummerts Meeting House. (John W. Garret, former president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company, was a brother-in-law.) They had four children. Jacob, Abraham, Catharine and Elizabeth.

Jacob Arnold, grandfather of John Henry Brough, was born June 16, 1791. He married Nancy Kauffman, a daughter of Henry Kauffman, and a twin sister of Rev. Andrew Dierdorff (who was the father of Rev. Daniel Dierdorff, of Franklin Grove, Ill.), also a sister of the wife of Rev. Daniel Trimmer, father of D. K. Trimmer, Esq., of York, Pa. She was born Jan. 12, 1802, and died Feb. 21, 1848, aged forty-six years, one month and nine days. She was one of the most useful women of her time, was a devout Christian, and beloved by every one who knew her. She is buried at Mummerts Meeting House. They had two children, Nancy, born March 17, 1823, and Catharine Agnes (mother of J. H. Brough), born Feb. 1, 1826. Nancy married Jacob LeFevre, and they had two children, Jacob and Henrietta, both of whom are living in Ohio. Nancy died Sept. 24, 1853, and is buried at Mummerts Meeting House. Jacob Arnold (grandfather of J. H. Brough) died Sept. 18, 1864, aged seventy-three years, three months and two days, from the effects of a paralytic stroke received the day before. He was a noble Christian man, unusually well versed in the Scriptures, a member of the German Baptist Church, and he was highly esteemed by all who knew him. During most of his life he was engaged in farming, mercantile pursuits, and manufacturing blankets and woolens. He is buried at Mummerts Meeting House.

Abraham Arnold was born March 29, 1797. He was married to Anna Baker, and they had three children. He died in Hanover, Pa., July 11, 1878, aged eighty-one years, three months, and twelve days. He was a carpenter, a good mechanic, and a very jovial man. He is buried at Mummerts Meeting House; his wife Anna died March 22, 1882, aged sixty-seven years, eleven months and seventeen days, and is buried at Mummerts Meeting House.

Catharine, sister of Jacob Arnold, married Joseph Grove. They had four children, one of whom died young. The others were: Nancy married John Nicholas Kimmel and for many years lived near Wadesville, Va. They had two children, Andrew Jackson and Abraham, both married and living in Virginia. John Nicholas Kimmel and his wife Nancy are deceased. Barbara, who married Peter Shaffer, of Dillsburg, had several children, one of her daughters being married to Michael Bender, a prominent business man of Dillsburg. Abraham, of York Springs, married Mrs. Mollie Leatshaw, a widow, who was the daughter of Jacob Shaffer, of York Springs, and has one son.

Elizabeth, sister of Jacob Arnold, married John Grove, and had seven children: Frances, Adam, Abraham, Samuel, John, Catharine and Susan.

Ancestry of Ida M. Young Brough.

Ida M. Young, wife of John H. Brough, was born May 6, 1861, and is a descendant paternally and maternally of Philip Frederick Eichelberger, the emigrant and head of the Eichelberger family in America, he being her great-great-great-grandfather and born in Germany April 17, 1693. On Nov. 11, 1714, he married Anna Barbara Dorness, and they had five children, John Martin, Anna Margaret, John Frederick, Margaret Barbara, Anna Barbara or Elizabeth. By his second marriage, in March, 1736, to Mary Magdalene —, he had four children, Adam, born May 12, 1739 (who is the maternal great-great-grandfather), Jacob, born Sept. 26, 1746 (who is the paternal great-great-grandfather), Leonard, born Aug. 12, 1750, and Lewis, born in 1752. Philip Frederick died Sept. 19, 1776.

Adam Eichelberger, commonly called "Capt. Adam," married Magdalene Bechtel in 1761, and died Dec. 9, 1787. "He was a stout, lusty man, over six feet in height, weighed over two hundred pounds, had light hair and eyes, and was noted for his great kindness of heart and genial temperament." Soon after his marriage his father gave over to him the "Home Place" (later known as the Charles Eichelberger farm along the York road). Magdalene, his wife, died Dec. 30, 1821. They had eight children: Frederick, born Aug. 10, 1763; Michael (maternal great-grandfather), May 17, 1765; Samuel, Jan. 5, 1769; Elizabeth, Dec. 11, 1770; Adam Jr., Nov. 26, 1771; Susannah, Aug. 14, 1778 (died Sept. 21, 1804); Joseph, Jan. 15, 1781; and Salome, Aug. 11, 1783.

Michael Eichelberger, the second son of Capt. Adam, was a rather delicate child and man. To him his father left the home farm. While quite young he married Catharine Smyser, and they had five children: Adam, born Oct. 24, 1791; Polly, January, 1793; Elizabeth, April 10, 1795; Michael, Oct. 2, 1797; and George, Feb. 22, 1800 (who was the maternal grandfather). George was a babe in arms when his father died. The widow managed well until Adam grew to manhood, at the age of twenty-one applying to court and obtaining an order to buy the place for $11,934. This Adam, known as Sheriff Adam, was a tall, strong man, almost physical perfection, so finely proportioned that unless one stood beside him he did not seem to be so large a man.

George Eichelberger, who as already stated was a babe in arms when his father died, grew up on the home place, which had belonged to his great-grandfather, and when he became of age he bought it. On Jan. 18, 1822, he mar-rried Sarah Diehl, who was born Aug. 23, 1804. They had eight children: Martin, born March 25, 1823; Anna Maria, born May 5, 1825, died Aug. 29, 1842; Michael D., born March 20, 1827, died May 14, 1863; George W., born Nov. 17, 1829, died Feb. 28, 1838; Franklin, born March 10, 1832; Charles F., born July 2, 1834, died April 6, 1900; Sarah, born April 12, 1838, died in 1842; and Louisa Catharine, born July 4, 1842, who married William J. Young, and is the mother of Ida
M. Young Brough. When George's son Michael became of an age to take the farm George moved to Hanover, where he resided for some years prior to the death of his esteemed wife, which occurred Jan. 11, 1865. George was a prominent Democrat, for many years county commissioner. Four of his children died before him. He died March 10, 1869.

Jacob Eichelberger (the paternal great-great-grandfather of Ida M. Young), the second son of Philip Frederick and his second wife, was born on the “Farm” Sept. 26, 1746, but chose Hanover as his home. He was much interested in the cause of the Revolutionary war, gave largely of his means, and wrote and attended to business matters connected with his town and surroundings. He married Anna Maria, eldest daughter of Capt. Casper Rein-acker, who served in the Revolutionary war with honor and credit. She was born March 26, 1752, and died May 19, 1837. He died Aug. 14, 1811. They had only one child, a son, Jacob, who was the great-grandfather of Ida M. Young. He acquired fine business qualities early in life. The father and son settled up estates and carried on a great deal of business together. When the father died the son was fully equipped to take his place. Jacob Sr., was first buried in St. Matthew's Lutheran Church graveyard, of which he was a consistent member and part founder; afterward his remains were removed to Mt. Olivet cemetery, Hanover, Pa. He had carried on a farm and tavern as well, both of which the son took up on the death of his father. Jacob, the son, was born April 24, 1775. He became quite prominent in the borough of Hanover for a great many years. When the village was incorporated as a borough in 1815 the meetings necessary to the same were held in the house of Jacob Eichelberger. The tavern which he kept is now the “Central Hotel.” He also became a merchant and in connection with all his other duties settled up many estates. He was the first president of the Maryland Line Turnpike Company, and was active in organizing the Hanover Saving Fund Society, of which he became president in 1835, and served as such with great acceptance for many years.
He died Aug. 18, 1843. He was twice mar-rried, first to Elizabeth Nace, in 1796. They had four children: Louisa, born in December, 1797, married George Trone, and died March 4, 1872; Maria, born March 20, 1799, mar-rried Jacob Young, of Hanover (she was the grandmother of Ida M. Young); Eliza, born Aug. 20, 1800, married Michael Barnitz, and they had two children, a son Covington, and a daughter Elizabeth, who married Rev. Joseph A. Seiss, D. D., LL. D., of Philadelphia, a very noted divine, who died in June, 1904 (Eliza died June 10, 1841); Susannah, the other daughter of Jacob, died young. Upon the death of his wife Elizabeth, Jacob married Maria, daughter of Christian Wirt, of Hanover, Pa. They had eight children: Matthew, Jacob, Henry, Catherine M., Abdiel W., Rutus A., Amanda and Amelia H. (these were half-sisters and brothers of Maria Eichelberger, who married Jacob Young, the grandfather of Ida M. Young Brough). [Information regarding Eichelbergers from Capt. A.
W. Eichelberger's history.]

Maria Eichelberger, second daughter of Jacob Eichelberger, and grand mother of Ida
M. Brough, was born March 20, 1799, and died March 26, 1872. On Dec. 19, 1820, she married Jacob Young, of Hanover, Pa., who was a grandson of Charles and Elizabeth Young, who emigrated from Germany about the year 1750, and located on a small farm three miles southeast of Hanover, a short distance from the Jefferson road. Here they spent the remainder of their lives and died in the year 1800. Their son, William Young, who was the father of Jacob, married Catharine Etzler, a daughter of George and Francina Etzler. They had three children: Jacob,
George and William. Jacob was born Dec.
4, 1795, and died June 8, 1875. He was a saddle-tree maker, and for a number of years after his marriage lived in Carlisle; later he bought a farm near Hanover, and moved thereon and continued farming until 1856 when he moved to Hanover and lived retired for the balance of his life. For years he was a director in the Gettysburg National Bank and in the Hanover Saving Fund Society. When he retired from the directorate of the Hanover Saving Fund Society his son Henry A. was elected in his stead. Jacob and Maria Young had seven children: (1) Alexander, born March 27, 1824, married Rebecca Felty, June 20, 1848, and had four children; Rose Elizabeth, who married Levi Eckert, and they have one son, Paul; George W., who married Ella Weikert, and they have one daughter, Ada; Rebecca Jane, and Jacob H. Alexander died Nov. 16, 1873. (2) Anna Eliza, born Dec. 12, 1825, never married. (3) Edward Eichelberger Young, who was born Nov. 28, 1827, married Elizabeth Alexander, on April 18, 1854, and they had one son, Hugh, who is married and has children. (4) Maria Louisa, born Sept. 22, 1829, married Henry L. Sprenkle, May 19, 1853, and they had two children, Hamilton Young Sprenkle, who married Anna George, and has four children, Arthur, Walter, Emma and Louise, and Mary J. Sprenkle, who married John Luther Long, a lawyer, and writer of several Japanese story books. (5) Henry A. Young was born May 26, 1832, and died March 27, 1890. On Dec. 17, 1857, he married Catharine Reiff, and they had no children. She died April 13, 1889. After this he married Mrs. Elizabeth Mickley, a widow, and sister of his first wife. She still lives. (6) Cornelius Young was born May 9, 1835, and Oct. 25, 1870, was married to Nancy Bechtel. They have one daughter, Alberta, who is single. (7) William Jacob Young, the youngest child, was born June 14, 1838, and he married Louisa Catharine Eichelberger. Immediately after their marriage he commenced farming on his father's farm near Hanover. After several years he moved to Hanover and engaged in the horse and livery business, in which he continued until 1872, when he engaged in the grain and feed business, which he is still continuing very successfully. They have ten children: Ida M. married John Henry Brough. Sarah B. married George A. Klinefelter, a native of Hanover, now resides in Baltimore, and is engaged very extensively in the laundry business in Baltimore, Washington and Philadelphia; they have one daughter, Katie, and son George Young. Robert E., a resident of Omaha, extensively engaged in the fruit commission business, is married to Nellie Morris, and they have one son William. Cora B., who is married to Dr. Horace M. Alleman, a prominent physician, of Hanover, Pa., has one son, Winmore. Grace M. married Harry C. Naill, an active young business man, manager of the Naill Chair factory, and they have four children, Richard Young, Catherine Elizabeth, William and Mary. Anna Catharine married Frank H. Jenkins, a druggist and member of the firm of Emlet & Jenkins, and they have one son, Mitchell. Edward B. lives in Philadelphia; he is connected with his brother-in-law, Mr. Klinefelter, in the laundry business, at present managing the Philadelphia plant. Carrie A., Helen E. and Henry William live at home.

REUBEN A. PAULES holds the position of secretary and treasurer of the York Wagon Gear Company. He was born Dec. 12, 1848, in Lower Windsor township, at a place now called Yorkana, son of Jacob and Julia (Keller) Paules.

John Michael Paules, the great-great-grandfather of Reuben A., was born in Germany in 1699, and his wife, Catherine, in 1705. They were married in 1723, and their first daughter, Christina, born in 1725, was received as a member of the Reformed Church in 1739; Appalona was born in 1731; Magdalena, in 1734; Maria, in 1736; Lawrence, born in 1743, settled in the State of Virginia, but all trace of his descendants is lost; Harry located in the eastern part of Pennsylvania; John Adam is mentioned below.

John Adam Paules was born in Germany in 1740 and came to this country with his parents in 1742, settling in Lower Windsor township, at a place now called Margaretta Furnace, where his son, Adam, was born.

Adam Paules was a farmer and justice of the peace; in 1859 became a York county commissioner, serving as such until 1862, and then lived retired until his death, in 1867. He was buried at Canadochley church. He married Elizabeth Hartzler, born in Lower Windsor township, who died in 1858 and was buried at the same place as her husband.

Jacob Paules, the father of Reuben A.
Pauls, was born in May, 1823, in Lower Windsor township, and there received a common school education. After leaving school he learned the tanner’s trade, and later farmed his father’s property. His death occurred in 1849, and he was buried at Canadochley church, Lower Windsor township. His wife was born May 6, 1827, in Lower Windsor township, the daughter of Peter and Salome (Will) Keller.

Reuben A. Pauls received a common-school education in Lower Windsor township, where he remained until he was twenty years of age. He then attended the York County Academy for one term, after which he taught school for one year in Lower Windsor and North Codorus townships. Mr. Pauls then served a two years’ apprenticeship to the carpenter’s trade under his uncle, Peter W. Keller. Later he removed to Freeport, Ill., where he remained but a short period, returning home to start a general store near Margareta Furnace. This he operated for sixteen years also engaging in the manufacture of cigars. In 1895 Mr. Pauls located in York, and purchased the interest of Peter W. Keller in the York Wagon Gear Company, with which firm he now holds the position of secretary and treasurer.

In 1873 Mr. Pauls married Eliza J. Gilbert, daughter of Joseph and Leah Gilbert, of Lower Windsor township, the former a farmer of that township. To this union have been born the following children: Jacob Mark; Annie M.; Robert N.; Carrie M.; Charles C.; and Rufus, who died in infancy.

Mr. Pauls is a member of Heidelberg Reformed Church of York, with which Mrs. Pauls is also connected and which represents the family faith for many generations. Mr. Pauls himself has been an elder and teacher in the Sunday-school for many years. He has in his possession the family Bible of his ancestors, which was brought to this country in 1742, and which bears the date of 1670. The Bible is in perfect condition and is prized very highly.

CLEMENT G. TRIMMER was born Oct. 17, 1846, in Paradise township, York county, son of Jonas and Sarah (Grove) Trimmer, and grandson of Barnet Trimmer.

Jonas Trimmer was born in Paradise township, where he married Sarah Grove, daughter of Samuel Grove. Mr. Trimmer followed farming in his native township until the age of fifty-six, afterward living a retired life, until his death at the age of sixty-eight years. His wife died at the age of thirty-seven years, and they were both buried in Paradise township. The children born to this couple were as follows: Maria, who died in infancy; Clement G.; George W., deceased; Joseph M., who died at the age of fourteen years; Alice, wife of Isaac Mumert, living in Paradise township; and Sarah Ellen, who died in infancy.

Clement G. Trimmer attended the township schools until the age of thirteen years, and assisted his father at farming until twenty-one years of age, when he went to clerking at Big Mount with John E. Zinn, with whom he remained two years. He then returned to farming in Paradise township for five years, after which he spent three years in West Manchester township at farming. He then located in York, and engaged in the mercantile business, which he followed four years. In 1892 he embarked in the manufacturing business, making overalls and shirts, and built a fine up-to-date factory, two stories high, 22 x 60 feet, in which he employs twenty hands. Mr. Trimmer sells his goods in York and Baltimore, where he always finds a ready market, his trade having increased greatly since its inception.

In 1869 Mr. Trimmer was united in marriage with Emma Elizabeth Zinn, daughter of Jacob R. and Elizabeth (Emig) Zinn, and these children have been born to this union: William H., residing at home; Sarah Elizabeth, wife of George K. Piltzgarff, of York; Flora May, who was the wife of Charles R. Holsinger, and died in 1902; Jonas R., an electrician, a member of the firm of John E. Graybill & Co., of York; Martha Emma, at home; Alice Katie, who died in infancy; and Clarence E., at home. Politically Mr. Trimmer is a Republican. He is a member of the German Baptist Church, in which he has always taken an active interest.

During the Rebel invasion during the Civil war Mr. Trimmer, with eighteen of his neighbors, left home with forty-five horses, for Lancaster county, but they could not cross the Susquehanna River, so turned into the River mountains, remaining one week. Thinking the danger over they started for home, but when within five miles from their destination they were captured by Stuart's Cavalry, with all their horses, taken along fifteen miles farther and set at liberty, being obliged, however, to leave the horses.

COL. WILLIAM H. H. WELSH has the most remarkable record, as soldier and prisoner of war, of any man in York county. He belongs to an old York family, his grandfather, John, having owned an extensive tannery in York; and his father, Jacob Welsh, who died at the age of seventy-three years, having been a well known tobacconist. Mr. Welsh's mother was Eliza Schall, and she was the mother of children as follows: John R., who died at the age of thirty-eight years; Elizabeth, wife of Artemus Wilhelm, of Shrewsbury, York county; Margaret, wife of John Mitzel, of York; Annie, wife of William Kaufman, of York; Vinton R., a tobacconist, of York; Martha, wife of Henry Steining, of York; Jacob, a clerk of York; C. Spangler, of York; Franklin B., a member of the city police force of York; Samuel and Penrose, cigarmakers of York; Oscar, a druggist of Newark, N. J.; and William H. H., whose name heads this article.

William H. H. Welsh was born in York, Nov. 21, 1841, was educated in its public schools, and learned cigarmaking in his father's shop. At fifteen years of age he commenced work as a carpenter, remaining thus employed one year, and then (in 1857) enlisting in the 2nd Dragoons, U. S. A., serving thus one year. Mr. Welsh was only sixteen years old when he enlisted and was sent with his company to Utah to fight Brigham Young, but the Mormon leader yielded to the forces that confronted him, and the trouble passed without bloodshed. At the end of his term of service Mr. Welsh returned to York, but, at the first call for troops in the war of the Rebellion, enlisted, and became orderly sergeant in the Shawnee Guards, under Captain Welsh. He was discharged at the expiration of his three-months' term, and on Sept. 11, 1861, enlisted as third sergeant in Company D, 87th P. V. I. His first promotion was in the spring of 1863, when he was made 2d lieutenant. He was captured by the Rebels at the battle of Winchester, June 15, 1863, and was promoted to the position of 1st lieutenant while a prisoner of war, having been a prisoner from 1863 to 1865. He was placed in the Libby dungeon for six weeks for attempting to escape. When liberated he was so weak he could scarcely walk, crawling upstairs on his hands and knees. He could take handfuls of mold from his beard, and had had no meat for seventeen days. There was 1,800 prisoners in Libby at the time Colonel Welsh was there, and, after he had gained some strength, he and ten other prisoners gave an entertainment. Many of them had instruments and knew how to play them, and, after fitting up a stage, spent $1,500 in Confederate money for the printing of the programs, one of which Colonel Welsh has in his possession at the present time. After spending eleven months in Libby prison, Colonel Welsh was sent to Danville, then to Macon, Ga., and next to Charleston, S. C., where 500 Union prisoners were placed under the fire of the Federal guns. After some other changes in his imprisonment, Colonel Welsh was sent, with others, to Columbia, S. C., where the Union prisoners were compelled to live on corn-meal and molasses. On Nov. 9, 1864, Colonel Welsh escaped, with eight others, and were followed by bloodhounds. They divided into two parties, five in one and four in the other. Colonel Welsh had in his party, Captain Skelton, Captain Wilson, of Ohio, and Captain Dusenberry, of Newark, N. J. They succeeded in getting to Transylvania county, N. C., surrounded by Rebels at almost every point of the route, but they managed to evade their enemies, and built a little log cabin, in which they lived for four weeks, during which time they became acquainted with seventeen deserters from the Confederate army. This made a party of twenty-one men, and, all of them being armed, they started on their perilous march from Ducktown, Tenn. After marching for three days and three nights, they were attacked by 100 Rebel cavalymen, but Colonel Welsh, Captain Dusenberry and one of the Confederate deserters escaped. They traveled three days without food, then, encountering the Notley river, crossed a bridge and were compelled by hunger to approach a house for food. There they found a man named Brown, and after considerable talk, disclosed their identity. Brown gave them a good supper, kept them all night, and directed them on an underground railroad to a man named Bussey, who had sons in the Union army. It was foggy at eight o'clock in the morning, but toward noon the mist cleared, and they came to a road, following which they reached a house, where they received directions, traveling until four o'clock in the afternoon, when they were surprised by a squad of Rebel cavalry and recaptured. They were taken back eleven miles and recrossed the river, but the next morning they again escaped and succeeded in again reaching their friend Brown's, where they received new directions, and for a second time found their way to Bussey's, the latter's son being now at home. Through the friendly offices of the Bussies, the escaped prisoners were guided to Tennessee. During his imprisonment, as well as during his weary marches by day and night, Colonel Welsh and his comrade lived largely on raw pumpkins and raw corn, being two months and nineteen days in escaping.

Colonel Welsh was honorably discharged at Washington, D. C., and his first employment after the war was in the building of Chambersburg, Pa. This work having been finished, Colonel Welsh returned to York, where he became a letter carrier under the penny-delivery system, and then a carrier in the service now in vogue, remaining in that capacity until President Cleveland's administration. In 1888 Colonel Welsh started the bottling business in York, and on March 18, 1904, added to that line the wine and liquor trade, at No. 129 North George street.

William H. H. Welsh was married in October, 1865, to Emma A. Swartz, of Hanover, York county, daughter of Augustus Swartz, who had served in the Union army, and was the editor of the Hanover Citizen. Mr. and Mrs. Welsh have had one daughter born to them—Ida E., the wife of Charles F. Welsh, who is a partner with Colonel Welsh in the wine and liquor business. To the latter couple has been born one child—Eugene S.

Colonel Welsh belongs to the B. P. O. Elks. In politics he is a Republican. He has little time, however, for politics or lodge affairs, and when not devoting himself to business, may be found in his commodious and elegant home on West Market street. One of the apartments in his dwelling, which he calls his "den," is an ideal place for contented retirement. Here his male friends may smoke and chat to their heart's content, and there is no cosier retreat in all York. Among the pictures in this apartment is a reproduction of the pen-drawing that Colonel Welsh made of the log cabin he built, which was occupied by himself and companions while escaping from the Rebel prison. A pleasant recollection of Colonel Welsh is that concerning Sam Tinsley, one of the Rebel deserters who joined his party when they were escaping. This man was with them when they were recaptured, and was ordered to be shot, but Colonel Welsh interceded for him, saved his life and brought him to York. This, however, was only one of many intensely interesting experiences in the capture and escape of Colonel Welsh, to give a full recital of which would in itself require a good sized volume.

JOSEPH D. BROWN, for many years a coachmaker in York county, whose death Dec. 31, 1903, caused deep regret among his many friends, was a native of East Berlin, Adams county, where he was born March 3, 1840. Jacob Brown, father of Joseph D., was a Dunkard preacher of considerable local renown. His week-day occupation was that of a saddler, and he worked faithfully at the duties laid upon him in both fields. His death was an untimely one, for he reached only the age of forty years, dying in 1852. He was buried in Mummmert's Meeting House in Adams county. His wife's maiden name was Leah King.

Joseph D. Brown attended the school in East Berlin, and after finishing his education learned the coachmaking trade with his brother-in-law, at Dillsburg, York county. In 1871, shortly after his marriage, he settled in Dover borough, and established himself in the coachmaking business there, and for four years continued to make his home there. In 1885 he moved to York, and resuming his former occupation successfully continued it for six years, finally retiring in 1891. Mr. Brown was prominent in other than business circles, as he was well known in politics, an active worker for the Democratic party, and had also been for thirty years a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge at York. At the time of his death, Mr. Brown had reached the age of sixty-three years, nine months and twenty-eight days. He was married Dec. 4, 1870, to Miss Amanda Strayer, and they became the parents of five children, namely: Catherine, who died in infancy; Mary Louise, born in Dover, who married Augustus Button, and lives in York; Edith who died in infancy; Sally, born in Dover, now Mrs. Charles Rittenhouse, of York; and Anna, born in Dover, now Mrs. Nevin Wagner, of York.

Mrs. Amanda Brown was a daughter of Jacob and Sarah (Hamme) Strayer, the former of whom was a farmer in Dover township, where he owned a tract of 160 acres. He was the founder of Strayer's Church, and donated the ground where it is now situated. Late in life he moved into Dover borough, and there lived in retirement until he passed from this world Sept. 17, 1885. He was buried at Strayer's Church. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah Hamme, was a native of York county, daughter of John and Mary Hamme. She died more than a year before her husband, April 10, 1884, and was buried in the family lot near Strayer's Church. Their children were: Amanda, Mrs. Brown; Theophilus, who died in 1808, and was buried at Strayer's Church; Peter, a resident of Davidsburg, Dover township; Mary Ann, Mrs. Jacob Stauf- fer, of Clear Spring, York county; Eliza, who died in 1883, and is buried near the other deceased members of the family; Israel, of York county; Sarah, living in Clear Spring; George, of Dover; and Calvin, residing at Lewisburg.

JOSEPH ELSESSER, who for many years was prominently identified with the business interests of York, retired from active life in 1900, and on April 2, 1905, entered into rest in the seventy-third year of his age.

Michael Elsesser, grandfather of Joseph, was a farmer in Germany, where he died at the age of eighty years, leaving these children: Conrad, Michael, Henry, John, Elizabeth, and Annie.

Michael Elsesser, father of Joseph, was a shoemaker by trade, learning his occupation in Bavaria, Germany. He came to America in 1841, landing at Baltimore, where he remained but a short time. He came to York county, where he followed his trade, and later came to York City, where he died at the age of eighty-three years and was buried in St. Mary's cemetery. He was twice married, first to Mary Flickenstine, who died leaving two children, Lawrence and Joseph. Mr. Elsesser's second marriage was to Margaret Elsesser, by whom he had these children: John, Adam, George, Rebecca, Mary Jane, and James.

Joseph Elsesser was born in Bavaria, Germany, March 12, 1833, and first attended school in his native country, finishing his education in York county. He followed farming in Dover township, York county, until twenty-seven years of age, when he located in York and learned shoemaking, which he continued to follow until 1900, when he retired. In 1859 he started in the shoe business near Center Square, in 1876 removing to No. 205 South George street, where he engaged in the harness-making business, which he carried on in conjunction with his shoemaking. His place of business at that location in York was well known. In 1887 he built the home he occupied at No. 636 East Prospect street, and also built the residence next to it. He was interested in real estate and put up a number of residences in the Twelfth ward, or East York.

Mr. Elsesser was united in marriage with Eva Kemmerer, who died Dec. 17, 1894, and was interred in St. Mary's cemetery. To Mr. and Mrs. Elsesser the following children were born: Mary, Michael, Louis, Kate, Frank, Lena (wife of Edward Beck), George, Maggie, Vincent, Joseph and Harry. Besides his children Mr. Elsesser leaves to mourn his loss five brothers and two sisters: Lawrence, John and Adam, of York; James, of Philadelphia; George, of Baltimore; Mrs. Charles King, of York; and Sister Helena, in a Catholic convent in Tacoma, Washington.

Politically Mr. Elsesser was a Democrat. In his religious connection he was a member of St. Mary's Catholic Church, of which he was one of the founders. He was one of the directors of the Keystone Building & Loan Association. Throughout Mr. Elsesser's long and active career his affairs were conducted with the strictest honesty and fairness, and there was none who enjoyed the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens to a greater extent.

JOHN HENRY WESTERHOLD, who owns and operates one of the finest drug stores in York, is a native of that city and was born March 1, 1866, son of Frederick and Mary (Rabe) Westerhold. The father was born in 1820, in Germany, and received his education in his native country, where he was reared to manhood. When twenty-one years of age he came to the United States, and, settling in York, Pa., spent ten years in the milling business in Spring Garden township, with P. A. & S. Small. He then engaged with the same firm to take charge of the iron department of their business, for twenty-three years, retiring a decade prior to his death, which occurred in his seventy-third year. He married Mary Rabe, both in Germany, who died in 1885 and was interred, as was her husband, in Prospect Hill cemetery. They had children as follows: Sarah, born in York in 1864 and married to Frank Bierman; John Henry; and ten children who are deceased.

John Henry Westerhold attended a private school in York for nine years and at the age of fourteen commenced to clerk for Dale & Hart, druggists (now Dale & Co.). In their employ Mr. Westerhold spent nineteen years, and, after receiving his certificate from the State Board of Examiners at Harrisburg, on Sept. 13, 1887, engaged in the drug business with George W. Sample, whose interest he purchased two years later. Since that time Mr. Westerhold has conducted the business alone, and has one of the finest establishments in his line in the city. His place of business is located at the corner of Beaver and Market streets.

In 1895 Mr. Westerhold was united in marriage with Ida Jane Patrick, daughter of John and Sarah (Mann) Patrick, of Lisbon, Howard Co., Md., farming people of that section. To this union have come two children: Olive Joy, born in York Oct. 9, 1900, and Frederick Henry, born in the same city Aug. 29, 1902. Mr. Westerhold is a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles at York. His religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, while in his political belief he is a Republican and has been a delegate to several county conventions.

HENRY W. MILLER, a well-to-do retired citizen of York, was born Dec. 31, 1824, in Hanover, Germany, and is the son of Frederick and Elizabeth (Miller) Miller. The father was a native of Prussia, where he was a miller and shoemaker, locating in America in 1848, where he lived retired with his son, Henry W., until his death at the age of seventy-four years. The mother was a native of Germany, and is interred with her husband in Prospect Hill cemetery.

Mr. Miller attended school until fourteen years of age. In 1845 he came to America and located in York, being engaged by P. A. & S. Small, in whose employ he remained for forty-one years. In 1890 he left Mr. Small's employ and since that year has been living retired in York. In 1830 he married Mary Stallman, daughter of Henry and Charlotte Stallman, farming people of Spring Garden and to this union these children were born: Elizabeth, the wife of John Getz; Amanda; Frederick; Mary, who was the wife of Herman Daehnke; and Lillie—all deceased and buried at Prospect Hill. The following are residents of York: Henry, who married Annie Webel; Martha, the wife of George Herman; and Annie, now Mrs. Charles Kunkel.

Henry W. Miller is a member of St. John's Lutheran Church, in which work he has always been active, and is highly respected in York for his many fine traits of character.

ROBERT BOYD, alderman of the Twelfth ward, was born Dec. 4, 1846, in Wrightsville. John Boyd, grandfather of Robert, came from Ireland to America and settled in Oxford, Chester county, where his son, our subject's father, was born. In early manhood Robert Boyd's father was a farmer, and removed to Wrightsville, York county, in 1836, where, with his brother Robert, he engaged in the lumber business until 1855, at the end of which time he purchased a large farm in Lower Chanceford township. He died in 1882, aged eighty-two years. His wife was Anna Cath-phy. He first occupied himself at farming, then learned milling, and next conducted a passenger stage and mail route from New Holland to York, remaining at the latter for three years, at the end of which time, he was appointed steward of the York County Almshouse, filling that position with great credit to himself for three years and three months, and was then elected alderman of the Twelfth ward of York for a period of five years, this election having taken place in 1903.

Alderman Boyd was married Sept. 28, 1865, to Martha Jane Robinson, daughter of Daniel Robinson, a farmer who formerly lived in Lancaster county. Twelve children were born to this union, one of whom died in infancy, and another, Nora May, died June 5, 1892, aged five years. The survivors are: James F., a wealthy merchant of Maryland; Isaac N., a storekeeper of York; John C., train inspector of the Northern Central Railroad, of York; Robert D., a baker of York; Jesse W., a stenographer at the Pennsylvania Railroad office, in York; Annie C., wife of Dr. John B. Kain, of York; Maggie Jane, who married Israel Able, of the Merchants' Oil Company, of York; Elizabeth, the wife of Charles Kohler, in the Northern Central Railroad service, New York; and Bertha B. and Ida May, at home.

Alderman Boyd belongs to the Odd Fellows; Good Will Fire Company, No. 5; the Firemen's Relief Association; and Camp No. 439. P. O. S. of A. He is an active member of the Duke Street Church, where he has been steward and trustee at various times. He is very prominent and influential in the Democratic politics of the city and county of York, but is popular with the men of both parties.

WILLIAM L. GLATFELTER, treasurer of the York Manufacturing Company, is a son of Mr. P. H. Glatfelter (mentioned elsewhere), president of the concern, and was born in Spring Grove, York county, April 27, 1865.

William L. Glatfelter received his education in York County Academy, Pennsylvania College at Gettysburg and Eastman's Business College at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. After leaving the latter institution Mr. Glatfelter entered the office of the Spring Grove Paper Mills, of which his father was the founder, and in which the son, soon after leaving school, became a partner. The York Manufacturing Company, of which Mr. Glatfelter is treasurer, was organized as it at present exists, March 5, 1875. In 1887 Mr. Glatfelter became associated with this concern, his father having become interested in the business at the same time, the latter having been the assignee of the old concern, which he purchased. After this purchase the business was conducted under the firm title of P. H. Glatfelter & Co., the son, our subject, being a partner, and the next move was to organize the York Manufacturing Company, Limited, and later incorporated with a capital of $400,000, which was afterward increased to $1,500,000. The company employs one thousand skilled workmen, and they have the largest clerical force of any industrial concern in York. Their products, of which ice and refrigerating plants are the leading features, are shipped all over the world, and such is the demand for them that the works, although covering acres of ground and equipped with the latest machinery of the century, are constantly taxed to their utmost capacity.

William L. Glatfelter is secretary and treasurer of the P. H. Glatfelter Company of Spring Grove, Pa., manufacturers of book and lithograph papers. Mr. Glatfelter is also treasurer of the Carroll Manufacturing Company of Baltimore, manufacturers of artificial ice; president of the Hanover Wire Cloth Company; president of the First National Bank of Spring Grove; president of the board of school trustees of Spring Grove, to which office he was first elected in 1895, and was chief Burgess of Spring Grove for a period of three years. In his religious views Mr. Glatfelter belongs to St. Paul's Lutheran Church of Spring Grove, in which he was a deacon for several years. Politically he is a stanch Republican.

William L. Glatfelter was married Sept. 15, 1887, to Kathryn Rebecca Hollinger, daughter of George Hollinger, a prominent farmer living near Abbottstown. One son has been born to this union, Philip Hollinger. Mr. Glatfelter, although unostentatious in manner, has accomplished much for a man of his years, and has evidently inherited from his father that force of character which has made the latter one of the prominent men of the State.
SYDNEY H. SOUTER is one of the able and popular representatives of the younger generation of leading business men in the city of York, where he is concerned in a line of industry with which the family name has long been identified, as president and general manager of the Monarch Silk Mill Co., one of the important industrial enterprises of York county.

William Souter, grandfather of Sydney H., was born near the Scottish border in England, where he was reared and educated, and where he learned the silk manufacturing business. He came to America about 1805, and settled in Paterson, N. J., becoming one of the pioneer silk manufacturers of that State, and at the time of this writing, in January, 1906, he was residing in Paterson, well preserved in mind and body, though he had attained the patriarchal age of ninety-two.

William Souter, Jr., father of our subject, was born and reared in England, and his entire business career was one of prominent identification with the silk manufacturing industry. At the time of his death he was vice-president and manager of an extensive silk manufacturing concern in Whitehall, N. Y. He was an authority in his line of business, having traveled extensively, making a special study of the methods of silk making in both China and Japan. He met his death in October, 1900, as the result of an accident, being killed by a trolley car in Newark, N. J. He was only fifty-three years of age at the time of his demise. His widow, whose maiden name was Martha Anna Chancelley, and who died in 1880, was born and reared in England, a daughter of Robert Chancelley, who was a prominent contractor. Of the ten children of William Souter, Jr., and his wife, Annie died in infancy; Sydney H. is mentioned below; Robert William is superintendent of the Littlestown silk mill in Littlestown, Pa.; Charles Harold is in the railroad service at Schenectady, N. Y.; Clyde Douglass is a member of the class of 1907, Dartmouth College; Ada is the wife of Edward Sargent, a contractor of Newark, N. J.; Jessie, Elizabeth and Margie are all trained nurses, graduates of the training school of the Newark (N. J.) General Hospital; and Edna is attending school.

Sydney H. Souter was born in Presbury, England, April 1, 1869, but his eldest sister was born in America, the parents having emigrated to this country in 1865, and having returned to England two years later, not becoming permanent residents of the United States until 1879. Our subject secured his early education in the common schools of his native land, and after the coming of the family to America he became a student in Latimer's Business College, in Paterson, N. J., and later completed a course in the celebrated Bryant & Stratton Business College, Buffalo, N. Y. He began his active business career by securing a position in a silk mill in Paterson, N. J., where he was employed in 1881-82, after which he attended school for one year at Northampton, Mass. He then secured a position in the silk mill in that city, where he remained employed for the ensuing nine years, at the expiration of which he returned to Paterson, where he continued to be identified with the same line of industry for one and one half years. He next passed a year in a silk mill at Pompton, N. J., and for the following three years was employed in the mill of which his father was manager and vice-president at Whitehall, N. Y. During the following two years he was again employed at Paterson, and he then removed to Catasaqua, Pa., where he had charge of the establishing, equipping and placing in operation of a silk mill, ably completing his work, after which he came to York, arriving in this city Sept. 6, 1900. Here he became associated with Henry Musser... until recently the president of the Monarch Silk Co., which they forthwith organized, equipping a modern mill and instituting active operations on Sept. 18th of the same year, the date the company received its charter from the State. Employment is afforded to a corps of about six hundred persons, and the annual business has already reached an aggregate of a million and a quarter dollars, while there is a constantly increasing demand for the company's goods in the markets of New York City, Philadelphia, Chicago, San Francisco and other commercial centers. As vice-president and general manager of the company Mr. Souter showed great administrative and executive ability, while his intimate knowledge of the details of the business has largely preserved the phenomenal but substantial growth of the enterprise. So well was this appreciated that on the resignation of President Musser Mr. Souter was the unanimous choice of the directors for president, while he will continue to act as manager.

In his political proclivities Mr. Souter is a consistent and unswerving advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and his religious faith is that of the Presbyterian Church, in which he has been a zealous worker for many years. Within the time of his residence in Paterson, N. J., he was secretary of the board of trustees of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, and both he and his wife are now members of the First Presbyterian Church of York. Fraternally Mr. Souter has attained degrees of high distinction in Freemasonry, in which he has passed the thirty-second degree of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite. His affiliations are as follows: Zeredatha Lodge, No. 451, F. & A. M.; Howell Chapter, No. 199, R. A. M.; Gettyseman Commandery, No. 75, Knights Templar, all of York; while he is identified with the Consistory of the Scottish Rite and also the Temple of the Mystic Shrine, in Harrisburg. He is also identified with the I. O. O. F., the B. P. O. E. and the Lafayette Club, of York; and the Woll Club of New York City.

On June 25, 1890, Mr. Souter was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Morton McLeod, daughter of Alexander McLeod, a representative business man of Paterson, N. J. Of this union have been born two children, Sydney Herbert, Jr., and Martha Catherine.

But the Monarch Silk Co. is not the only vast concern in which Mr. Souter is actively and prominently interested. He and Mr. Henry Musser successfully organized the Littlestown Silk Co., which was organized at Littlestown, Adams Co., Pa., on July 2, 1903. It was capitalized at $50,000, and, like the Monarch, it is running to its full capacity, the demands for its products keeping the mill in operation until midnight. Mr. Souter is vice-president and general manager of the Littlestown Company, paying the place a weekly visit; and, between this mill, the Monarch and the main office, at No. 27 Spring street, New York, which Mr. Souter also visits weekly, there is certainly no busier man in York, and yet so systematically does he work that he is ever ready to give courteous attention to those who call upon him.

JONAS R. TRIMMER, vice-president and secretary of the firm of John E. Graybill & Co., of York, was born July 16, 1879, at Big Mount, son of C. G. Trimmer, at that time a merchant, now a shirt manufacturer of York. Jonas Trimmer, the grandfather of Jonas R., was a prominent farmer of Big Mount, York county.

C. G. Trimmer married Emma Elizabeth Zimm, whose father was also a prominent farmer of York county, and seven children were born to this union, namely: Flora died at the age of twenty-six years; Alice died in infancy; W. H. is employed with John E. Graybill & Co.; Clarence is employed at the same place; Sallie married George Pfaltzgraf, a cigar manufacturer of York; Martha resides at home; Jonas R. is the subject of this sketch.

During the Rebel invasion of York county Mr. C. G. Trimmer had quite an experience, as he had left home with his father's horses for Lancaster county. After getting close to the Susquehanna river, however, it was reported that it was impossible to cross, so turning aside into the mountains they remained there for one week, and then set out for home. When they had arrived within five miles from there Stuart's Confederate Cavalry pounced upon them and made Mr. Trimmer prisoner, together with twenty-four others and forty-five head of horses. After traveling a distance of twelve miles they were discharged, but were compelled to abandon their horses and walk home, arriving there the following morning, sadly the worse for the experience and minus a number of valuable horses.

Jonas R. Trimmer received his education at the York high school and graduated from the commercial department in 1896. At that time he became a clerk in a store, at which work he continued for a period of one and one-half years, and then entered the firm of John E. Graybill & Co., electrical contractors and supply dealers, which firm was incorporated as a company in 1900, with branch stores in Carlisle and Hanover. The company does an extensive business, installing electrical work all over the country, and their exhibit at the York County Fair of 1904 was the most notable electrical display ever seen at York. Mr. Trimmer, besides being vice-president of this firm, has other interests, being secretary and treasurer of the York Electrical and Machine Company, of which his partner, Mr. Graybill, is president.

Mr. Trimmer is a member of York Lodge, No. 213, B. P. O. Elks, and an officer of the Royal Fire Company. In religion he is a German Baptist. Mr. Trimmer votes the Republican ticket, but he has never aspired to public office. Jonas R. Trimmer is one of the promising young men of his section, and is quickly working his way to success. He has many warm friends in the community, and is justly regarded as a representative citizen of York.

COL. GEORGE C. CAMPBELL, the popular proprietor of the “Hotel Colonial,” in York, is not a colonel “by courtesy,” but won his title and his spurs in fighting Indians on the Pacific coast.

Col. Campbell’s ancestors, as the name indicates, came from Scotland. His grandfather, William Campbell, was a druggist, and his father, George Campbell, was a hotel-keeper on the Pacific coast. The latter married Hannah A. Clendening, a daughter of one of the famous “forty-niners,” her father having been one of the earliest in the gold fields of California, where he became a mine owner.

George C. Campbell was born Jan. 1, 1857, at Oshkosh, Wis., and received his education in the Maine public schools, and the Maine College. His early manhood was spent in the far West, where he was frequently located three hundred miles from any railroad. There he fought the Coyotes and Shawaee Indians, and many and varied were his experiences. It was for gallantry in fighting the Indians that he was made a colonel. After his services were no longer needed in the Indian warfare Col. Campbell kept a hotel for two years on the Pacific Coast, and returning to the East located in Corry, Pa., where he owned and conducted the “Phoenix Hotel” for three years. He next became proprietor of the “Albemarle Hotel,” at Pittsburg, managing it for two years, when the establishment was blown up by natural gas. After settling with the gas company Col. Campbell left that section and located in Parkersburg, W. Va., where he drilled an oil well and became very successful. After spending seven years in that locality he sold his interests and removed to Charlotte, N. C., where he kept the “Central Hotel,” which was the leading hostelry of that section. He also built the “Seashore Hotel,” on Frying Pan Shoals, the railroad company deeding the land to him for building the hotel. Selling his interests there, Col. Campbell removed to Washington, D. C., where he still owns considerable property, and in the fall of 1898 located in York, becoming the proprietor of the “Colonial Hotel.” Col. Campbell also owned and managed the beautiful “Cadillac Hotel,” in New York City, which he sold in 1903.

The Colonel belongs to the Masonic fraternity, having become a Knight Templar and Shriner in Charlotte, N. C., and he is also a prominent and popular member of the B. P. O. Elks.

DR. MARTIN L. BARCHISHER, son of Henry S. and Mary (Geesey) Barshinger, was born in Dallastown, March 16, 1867. He came of reputable and sturdy stock of Swiss ancestry. The first of the family to come to America was Andreas Bersinger, a native of Switzerland, who emigrated some time between 1727 and 1735. Since their name has undergone a modification to its present form. The Doctor’s grandfather, Henry Barshinger, was born near York, and was a farmer all his life. He was a Republican in politics and a Lutheran in religion. The grandmother was Susan Staley.

Henry S. Barshinger was born near York, Oct. 31, 1840, and was educated in the common schools. He engaged in the general mercantile business at Dallastown and afterward came to York, and opened a fire insurance and fertilizer agency. On November 8, 1862, he enrolled in the 166th P. V. I., and served until July 28, 1863, retiring with the rank of sergeant. He was a Democrat in politics, and of the Lutheran faith in religion. Through the insurance business he became secretary of the Southern Mutual Fire Insurance Company. He died May 19, 1885, survived by a widow, his son and a daughter, Sallie A. On the maternal side the Doctor is descended from another old and prominent York county family. His grandfather, Jonathan Geesey, was born near York, son of Jacob Geesey, a Revolutionary soldier. He farmed all his active life, in later years retiring and living in Dallastown. He was a Democrat in politics, and a member and elder of the Lutheran Church. He died in 1877, aged sixty-six. His wife, Sarah (Flinchbaugh) Geesey, survived him twenty years, dying in 1897, at the advanced age of eighty-seven years, three months and twenty-five days.

Dr. Barshinger secured his early education in the public schools and his professional training at the University of Pennsylvania. In preparation for his calling he attended Phillips Exeter Academy at Exeter, N. H., and Pennsylvania College at Gettysburg. He was one of the most active students, becoming President of his class, a member of the Phi Kappi Psi fraternity, a member of the baseball team and the leading athlete of the college. On field day he won the first prize, a gold medal, taking the following events: The hundred-yard dash, standing broad, running broad, standing high and running high jumps, the hop, step and jump, and putting the shot. In 1890 he entered the University of Pennsylvania, where he made a notable record as one of the oars of the 'Varsity crew of '91. He graduated in 1893, and the same year began active practice at his home. The Doctor is a pleasant and agreeable gentleman to meet, takes more than the ordinary interest in his profession, and is alive to the topics and movements of the times. From 1896 to 1902 he served as physician to the York county jail and also to the county almshouse. He was appointed a member of the York Board of Health for the year 1897, and was chosen Health Officer of the city for the years 1898 and 1899. He is a member of the American Medical Association, American Electro-Therapeutic Association, Pennsylvania State and York County Medical Societies. The Doctor, like his people before him, is a member of the Lutheran Church and has served as deacon in Christ's Congregation. He was married Sept. 11, 1894, to Emmelyn Greacen, daughter of Stephen Bailey and Hesse (La Monde) Greacen, of Perth Amboy, N. J. Mr. Greacen is a naval engineer.

Dr. and Mrs. Barshinger have one child, Henry Stephen, born April 10, 1897. They reside at No. 308 East Market street, and one of the most agreeable family circles in the city is that which gathers about the Barshinger hearth.

WILLIAM F. SMITH has spent his whole life in York city, where he was born Dec. 29, 1857, son of Charles H. and Charlotte Smith, the former of whom was engaged in the lime business and died in May, 1902.

Mr. Smith received a common school education in West Manchester township, where he remained until fifteen years of age, when he entered Professor Clark's school in York, where he continued for two terms. After leaving that institution he learned the wood turner's trade with Nathaniel Weigle, remaining with the latter four years. Mr. Smith then went to Baltimore, Md., working at his trade there two years, when he returned to York, entering the employ of Bilmyer & Small. In 1881 he married Annie M. Rabe, daughter of Henry and Sophia Rabe, both of whom were born in Germany. Mrs. Smith's father was engaged in the lime burning business in York until his death in 1867, and he was buried in Prospect Hill cemetery. Mrs. Rabe died in August, 1905.

Mr. Smith has been a member of the Firemen's Relief Association for nine years. From 1884 to 1887 he was county assessor in West Manchester township, and from 1900 to 1904 represented the Thirteenth ward in the select council of York. He has been a lifelong Democrat, and takes a great interest in the success of his party in this section. In his religious views he is connected with St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church of York.

To Mr. and Mrs. Smith the following children have been born: Charles H., born July 17, 1882; William E., born Dec. 17, 1883; Edward J., born Nov. 9, 1885; died Feb. 28, 1892, and was buried at Prospect Hill cemetery; Walter T., born Nov. 13, 1887; Bertha C., born Nov. 25, 1889; Norah M., born March 25, 1892; Mabel M., born July 27, 1894; Arthur F., born Nov. 9, 1896; Frank M., born June 11, 1899; Horace J., born June 19, 1901, and Julia M., born Oct. 20, 1903.

FITZ JAMES EVANS (deceased), for many years purchasing agent for the A. B. Farquhar Company, of York, and considered, in his time, one of the best buyers in York, died at his home May 27, 1868. Mr. Evans was born in York Oct. 31, 1859, son of Fitz James Evans.

Fitz James Evans, Sr., came from Scotland to America when sixteen years of age, and located in Philadelphia, where he followed photography for a number of years. Coming to York, he engaged in business at the Square, as a member of the firm of Prince & Evans, and was later employed by a mining syndicate in Mexico, where he died, being buried there. He married Anne Maria Boyer, of Parkersburg, Md., and she died at the age of sixty-three years. Their children were: Fitz James, Jr., Claude, Arthur, Eugene (deceased), Jessie (deceased), and Vian. Fitz James Evans, Sr., was a vestryman in the Episcopal Church, taking an active interest in the work of that body.

Fitz James Evans, Jr., attended the public schools of York, and then entered the employ of A. B. Farquhar, as office boy. By his energy and strict attention he won the approval of his employers, and he was steadily advanced to the position of general purchasing agent, with full charge of the office. In his death the firm lost an employee hard to replace, he being one of the best and closest buyers in York. Mr. Evans was buried in Prospect Hill cemetery. He married Miss Lucy A. Palmer, a daughter of Phineas and Susan (Lenhart) Palmer, and a member of an old English family. Mrs. Evans survives, residing in one of the oldest and most historic houses in York, situated at No. 31 North Beaver street, and she holds a deed for the same dated 1763, from the Penns. Children as follows were born to Mr. and Mrs. Evans: Louisa P., a graduate of the York high school; Florence, who is attending school; and Fitz James.

In politics Mr. Evans was a Republican, and served as president of the school board of York, among the lasting monuments to his name being the new high school building now erected on Potter’s Field, for it was mainly through his efforts that the plat was secured to the city for that purpose. He was connected with the Episcopal Church, of which he was a valued and consistent member. He was highly respected for his many sterling qualities, and in his death the city of York lost an honorable and upright citizen.

BAIR FAMILY GENEALOGY. The horrors and devastation of war that swept Alsace, the German Palatinate and the Rhenish Alps before and after 1689, as well as religious persecution by the militant Calvinists, caused the pietistic, non-combattant Mennonite ancestors of Robert C. Bair to depart from Switzerland and go into neutral Holland. How long they remained there before emigrating to America is not known, but a well preserved family tradition has it that they also lived a number of years in one of the colonies north of Pennsylvania, in all about thirty years, prior to their arrival with other German families in the Province of Pennsylvania.

The Swiss German families separated and scattered thus by a series of cruel circumstances had been carried during the period mentioned to Ireland and the West Indies, and deposited all along the American coast from Georgia, East and West Jersey to Acadia. By grace of the English Queen Anne thousands had also been brought to the country in and around London (1703), and after suffering three years unutterable hardships at that place were conveyed thence to territory along the Hudson and Mohawk rivers.

It is difficult to find the lost trails by which the early Bairs (they wrote the name Bar) came into Pennsylvania during the period between 1703 and 1727. The names of the original heads of this Bair friendschaft migrating 1707-1709 into what, after 1729, became Lancaster county, Pa., were Henry, Jacob, John, Michael, Martin and Abraham. Of these either Henry or Jacob was the ancestor of the family branch here traced. The name Jacob runs through every generation of this branch. He most probably was the father of certain five sons and one daughter, who were born in Europe and came with their parents across the Atlantic, viz.: Samuel Bair of Co-calico township, Michael of Upper Leacock township, Henry of Earl township, Jacob of Earl township, John of Leacock township, and Barbara of Cocalico, who married a Bowman—all being of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania.

Jacob Bair of Earl was Robert C. Bair’s great-great-grandfather. He early occupied lands in the rich Lancaster county valley ‘twixt the Conestoga and Pequea creeks, near Mill Creek, in Leacock and Earl townships. The land on which his people first dwelt (six hundred acres where Mechanicsburg now stands) was not patented until June 9, 1741, and his homestead tract upon which he died was not patented until July 2, 1765, although warrants and surveys were had, respectively, in 1729 and Feb. 28, 1734.

in Earl township on the north side of the old Peter Bazillion Indian Trader Road. It is immediately in front of the gap that cuts the western terminus of the Welsh mountains, through which runs the Intercourse and New Holland road. This pioneer homestead remained in the family until 1800, when it was sold to Adam Diller. It is in the Diller name now (1906).

Jacob Bair of Earl township died in November, 1769, leaving a widow, Sarah, his second wife, and three sons, Jacob, Michael and Abraham, and two daughters, Barbara and Mary. Barbara married Michael Knisely. Mary married Joseph Hersberger, both of Coocalico (now Ephrata) township, Lancaster county.

Abraham Bair, of Leacock township, great-grandfather of Robert C. Bair, born Sept. 7, 1741, died March 14, 1828, leaving a widow, Catharine Worst, and five sons and five daughters: Jacob, John, Benjamin, David, Abraham, and Elizabeth, Anna, Mary, Leah, and Catharine. Elizabeth married John Miller, of Lancaster county; Leah married Christian Zook, of Shippensburg, Pa.; the others were spinsters.

John Bair, of Leacock township, grandfather of Robert C. Bair, born March 22, 1781, died March 4, 1819, at Intercourse, Lancaster county, leaving a widow, Elizabeth (Miller), daughter of John and Mary (Snyder) Miller, and four sons and two daughters: David married Mary Buckwalter, of Wheatland, Lancaster county; Jacob married Elizabeth Bowman, of Lancaster county; Daniel married Hettie Shenk, of Providence township, Lancaster county; John married Susanna Groff of Camargo, Lancaster county; Elizabeth married John Shaub, of Lancaster county; Catharine married first Daniel Keeport, of Lancaster county, and (second) Joseph McSherry, of Lower Chanceford, York county.

John Bair, father of Robert C. Bair, born May 25, 1816, at Intercourse, Lancaster county, died at the home of his daughter in Chanceford township, York Co., Pa., Jan. 30, 1892, leaving a widow, Susanna (Groff), daughter of David and Ann (Longenecker) Groff, and one son and one daughter, Robert C. Bair and Lizzie. Lizzie married Samuel M. Fulton, of Chanceford township, York Co., Pa. John Bair was a charcoal ironmaster. He came to York Furnace, York county, in 1844. For nearly fifty years he conducted an active business on the Susquehanna Tide Water canal in pig iron, lumber, coal, bark, grain and general merchandise. He was an influential man and has left his mark not only on numerous farms and lands but upon the people who knew him.

Robert Cabeen Bair was born at York Furnace, Lower Chanceford, York county, April 27, 1856. He was educated at Millersville State Normal School and York Collegiate Institute. He was engaged for thirteen years in business with his father, 1878-1891, under the firm name of John Bair & Son. In 1887 he married Ella Nora, daughter of Dr. Henry L. and Emma E. (Rieman) Smyser, of York. To this union a son, Henry Smyser Bair, was born April 2, 1889. Mr. Bair removed to York and read law with Silas H. Forry and James G. Glessner. Admitted to the bar Jan. 1, 1899, he at once entered upon an active practice. He is a close student in genealogy, archaeology, history and statistics, attracting attention as an original and effective worker. As chairman of the York County Republican Committee since 1900, his careful management has unified his party and divided and totally defeated the Democrats. Under his generalship a series of partial victories culminated at the November election of 1905 in the election of the entire Republican ticket by majorities exceeding two thousand. His services and his general capabilities as a statistician found recognition in appointment as chief of the Pennsylvania Bureau of Industrial Statistics by Gov. Samuel W. Pennypacker upon the recommendation of Hon. Isaac B. Brown, secretary of Internal affairs, Harrisburg, May 5, 1903, for a term of four years. The work of this Bureau is of great interest and importance to the public. Its province is to make impartial examinations of the relations existing between capital and labor and inquire into the educational, industrial and social conditions of those engaged in manual labor. To aid the chief of this Bureau all corporations, firms or individuals engaged in mining, manufacturing or other business, and all persons working for wages within the Commonwealth, are required to furnish such statistical information as he may demand.

Henry L. Smyser, physician, graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, was born in York borough Dec. 8, 1825. He was descended from Mathias Smyser, who with Barbara Margerite and George Smyser, emigrated from Germany in the year 1731 to America, and settled in York county, Pa. The genealogical line ascending is: His father, Michael, 1769-1874; great-grandfather, Jacob Smyser, 1765-18—; great-grandfather, Jacob Smyser, 1742-1793; great-great-grandfather, Mathias Smyser (emigrant), 1715-1778. The ancestor Mathias took up land and settled in what is now West Manchester and North Codorus townships, in 1740.

In 1844 Henry L. Smyser began the study of medicine under the late Dr. James W. Kerr, of York, and in 1847, graduated from the University of Pennsylvania. He began the practice of his profession in Jackson township, York county, and had already secured a valuable practice when gold was discovered in California. Joining the Rocky Mountain migration, he became one of the original "forty-niners." The Doctor was an active pick and shovel miner in the washings of California for two years. In 1851 flattering suggestions reached him to induce his return to the East, and to accept the deputy superintendency of the State Hospital for the Insane at Harrisburg. "With much reluctance I pulled up stakes," as he said, "from a certain profit to go a long journey wild goose chasing; for when I reached Pennsylvania, by the long and tedious Panama route, the appointment I expected to receive had already been made." Re-engaging in his practice, which soon became lucrative, in 1855, other inducements coming to him, he went to Europe and attached himself as sergeant-major to the Russian army, serving through the Crimean war. At the close of the war, for distinguished services, Alexander II, Czar of Russia, decorated him with the medal of St. Stanislaus. Returning to America he again took up his profession, locating on South Beaver street, in York, and at once entered upon a fine practice. His experience proved of inestimable value for the Doctor had developed a professional quickness of perception and soundness of judgment and conclusion that made him a physician and surgeon of a high order.

In 1862 he enlisted in the war of the Rebellion, and was immediately appointed contract surgeon in the army. Being assigned to permanent work in the Army Hospital, established on the Commons, now Penn Park, at York, his record in that institution was marked by faithful and efficient service. At the close of the war he was in greater demand professionally than ever before. Having contracted a condition of weak heart, he relinquished his practice at its most lucrative period. For a number of years he rested modestly on his well-earned laurels. He died at York Sept. 16, 1900, at his home No. 30 South Beaver street, the immediate cause of his death being myocardial degeneration of the aorta.

In 1860 Dr. Smyser married Emma E. Rieman, daughter of the late Associate Judge John Rieman, of York. To this union were born two children, a daughter and a son: Ella Nora, wife of Robert C. Bair, Esq.; and John Rieman, druggist, member of the common council of Philadelphia. The brothers and sisters of Dr. Smyser were: Jacob, Albert, Thomas C., Michael, Lewis E., Mrs. Annie M. Williams, Mrs. Ella Hagen and Eliza Barnitz.

Dr. Smyser was unobtrusive, but there are among his friends and the profession which he honored many who will bear testimony to his medical skill, his strong common sense, as well as his careful business methods and financial ability in affairs. Generous and kind, whatever he did was ungrudging and untinted. Though plain, blunt and unpretentious in his ways, the recipients of his favor and his counsel were always sure his acts were honest and his words sincere.

JOHN ELIOT WILLIAMS, of the well-known shirt manufacturing firm of J. E. Williams & Co., York, is a native of the city of which he has become such a successful business man. He was born in 1868, son of David F. and Annie M. S. Williams.

Mr. Williams received his education in the York County Academy, attending that institution from 1879 to 1881, and then went to the York Collegiate Institute, attending during the years 1882-1884. After completing his education Mr. Williams was employed as bookkeeper for one year by A. B. Parzych, and then by Broomell & Schmidt for two years. The next five years were spent with the Variety Iron Works, after which he engaged with the York Dynamite Company, of which he was a stockholder, treasurer and manager. In that capacity he remained three years, and then, with John F. Kell, engaged in the insurance business, the firm being known as Kell & Williams, the partnership continuing three years.

In November, 1898, Mr. Williams engaged in his present business—the manufacture of shirts—under the firm name of J. E. Williams & Co. His first place of business was on Cherry avenue, where he remained three years, but on account of the increase in his business was compelled to seek larger quarters, and he removed to East Philadelphia street. Here he remained three years, when he was again forced to vacate, and he left the building now occupied by the York Dispatch Publishing Co. In 1904 Mr. Williams located in his present place, No. 5 West Gay avenue, in the rear of No. 156 North George street, where he has four floors, and 8640 square feet of floor space. He manufactures men's and boys' shirts and employs over 100 hands. His business is steadily increasing, as his goods are trustworthy and his methods honorable, and he sustains an enviable reputation for honesty and integrity.

Mr. Williams resides at No. 321 East Market street, York. In politics he is a Republican. He is a member of the Lafayette and Country Clubs of York.

JOHN KROUS is a prominent business man and successful farmer of Lower Chanceford township, York county, and for the last ten years has engaged in dealing in furs and the cultivation of ginseng. His birth occurred Oct. 3, 1851, near Grahamville, Chanceford township, and he is the son of John and Margaret (Dressel) Krous.

John Krous, the father of our subject, was born in Wurttemberg, Germany, in 1814, and attended school until fourteen years of age, acquiring a good education. For some years after this he herded geese and worked on a farm. At the age of twenty-one years he sailed for America, landing at Baltimore after a terrible voyage of seventy-two days, on a sailing vessel. The passage had been so rough that it was impossible to cook food on board, and by the time the ship made a landing, after being repeatedly driven back, the crew and all on board were nearly starved. After locating in Baltimore Mr. Krous obtained work as a shoemaker, receiving as wages twenty-six cents per day. He married Miss Margaret Dressel, born in Wurttemberg, Germany, in 1819, who had come over on the same vessel with him, and they were married in Baltimore soon after landing. Mr. and Mrs. Krous moved from Baltimore to York several years after their marriage, and there Mr. Krous followed his trade of shoemaking. He removed to Lower Chanceford township, where he located in a tenant house on the old Ankrum farm, and followed his trade at different points in this section. He finally bought a farm from John Bair, in Chanceford township, which he occupied for twelve years and then sold to Abraham Heaps, and then bought a farm of twenty-eight acres in Lower Chanceford township, where he died Jan. 6, 1900. Mrs. Krous passed away Feb. 6, 1892. Both she and her husband were valued members of the Lutheran Church. In politics Mr. Krous was a Democrat. The following children were born to this worthy couple: Christina married James Duncan, of Lower Chanceford township; Katie (deceased), married George Shott, of Baltimore, Md.; Sophia married Frederick Sheck and died in Baltimore, Md.; Mary married Charles Keener, of Biggsville, Ill.; Henry married (first) Martha Smith and (second) Mary Scarboro; John is the subject of this sketch; George, of Columbia, married Martha Lee; Thomas is a resident of Lower Chanceford township; and Lizzie married George Martin, of Northumberland county.

John Krous spent his boyhood days on his father's farm near Goram, in Lower Chanceford township, and attended the public schools until sixteen years of age, during the winter months, while in the summer he worked on the farm. He remained at home until twenty-three years of age, when he married and began housekeeping in a tenant house on John Bair's farm, where he remained one year, working out. He then farmed the Samuel Curran farm, in Chanceford township, for two years, on shares, and then went to a tenant house on the Stephen McKinley farm, in Lower Chanceford township, remaining on this place one year. He next went to the John Smith farm for one year, and then returned to the Samuel Curran farm, working it this time for Clark Murphy, and remaining two years. After this he bought forty-eight acres of his present farm, adding the other forty-eight acres in 1902. This farm was formerly the old Robert Campbell farm. Although not himself actively engaged in the farm work Mr. Krous oversees all work done, and it is due to his excellent management that the place has become one of the most productive of its size in the community. For the past ten years Mr. Krous has been engaged in raw fur dealing during the winter months, and finds a ready market for his goods in New York. During the summer months he deals extensively in ginseng, buying in Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Michigan, Delaware and throughout Pennsylvania, and selling in New York. Mr. Krous has built up quite a large business in this line, and can say from experience that the cultivation of ginseng pays when properly managed.

On June 28, 1874, Mr. Krous was married, in Lower Chanceford township, to Miss Susan Ellen McConkey, born Feb. 22, 1857, in Bainbridge, and she was reared on the Duncan farm, in Lower Chanceford township. Children have been born to Mr. and John Krous as follows: George William, born Sept. 24, 1875, married Miss Hattie Simmons, and they reside in Lower Chanceford township; John Charles, born March 1, 1877, resides in York; Etta E., born Oct. 20, 1879, married G. W. Stewart, of Goram; Chester B., born May 13, 1882, died in infancy; Lillie E. was born June 10, 1884; T. Wiley, March 10, 1886; Mary M., Oct. 5, 1888; Harry L., Oct. 18, 1890, and Robert J., July 26, 1895.

John Krous was reared in the faith of the M. E. Church, but belongs to no particular religious denomination. In politics he is a Democrat. He is a man who commands the respect of his neighbors, and has a wide circle of personal friends. In every sense of the word he is a self-made man.

MICHAEL J. KELLEY, superintendent of the Philip H. Glatfelter Paper Mill, and one of the reliable and substantial men of Spring Grove, York county, Pa., is a native of America, born Nov. 5, 1861, son of Martin Kelley, a native of Ireland, and a paper maker by trade. Emigrating to America when a young man he found employment for his skill, in a paper mill in Massachusetts, and there he perfected his knowledge of paper manufacturing in all its branches, he following this line of work until 1882.

The early life of Michael J. Kelley was spent at Holyoke, Mass., and there he learned his trade of paper making. He was superintendent of the Dickinson & Clark Paper Company for three years. Later, he removed to Providence, Md., to take charge as superintendent, of the Singerly Paper Company. Still later, he accepted the same position at Lockhaven, Pa., with the New York & P. P. Mills Co., which operated another plant at Johnsonburg, Pa., of which he was also manager. In 1895 Mr. Kelley was offered the position of superintendent of the Philip H. Glatfelter Paper Co., manufacturers of blank book paper, writing paper and label papers. He has had long experience in the paper business with various companies, and in the manufacture of different kinds of paper. Mr. Kelley has become thoroughly acquainted with the business in all its details. He does the greater part of the buying for the establishment; arranges the sales, which extend throughout the principal cities of the east, and makes large contracts with the government for book paper, and he is an expert in his line.

In 1883, Mr. Kelley married Miss Sarah O’Brien, of Holyoke, Mass., and five children have been born to them: Mary A.; Esther; Lillie; Ruth and Sarah. Mr. Kelley possesses in remarkable degree the faculty for organization, and his executive ability is recognized to a marked extent by his company. His keen, clear intellect and quick perception of business opportunities give him that necessary insight into future possibilities, indispensible to a man in his responsible position. Personally Mr. Kelley is a man of pleasing manner, and has a host of loyal friends and numerous business acquaintances, not only in his immediate vicinity, but throughout the entire East.

HENRY L. NEUMAN, ice cream manufacturer, wholesale and retail dealer in ice, building sand and gravel, of York, Pa., is one of the most progressive and public-spirited business men of York, where he is engaged in several flourishing enterprises. He was born in Conewago township, York county, Dec. 9, 1839, son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Lenhart) Neuman, both natives of this county.

Andrew Neuman, the paternal grandfather, was an early settler of Conewago township, while the maternal grandfather, William Lenhart, for many years resided near Dover. Jacob Neuman was a very prosperous farmer of Conewago township, and a man respected by all who knew him. Henry L. Neuman passed his boyhood days upon the farm, attending the district schools during the winter months. Later he went to the Dover public schools, and for a short time had the privilege of attending a select school, and at all times he made the most of his opportunities. In 1835 he came to York, and entered the dry goods store of Peter Wiest, there remaining about six years. At that time the war broke out, and he was too patriotic to remain at home, so enlisted in Company A, P. V. I., Col. George Hay commanding. Mr. Neuman was ordered with his regiment to the front in Virginia, and he participated in a number of engagements, among which was one near Petersburg, on the Weldon railroad, where he was severely wounded June 23, 1864, by a gun-shot, the ball passing through his left thigh. He was sent to the hospital at City Point, partially recovered, and in September, 1864, was discharged at the expiration of his term of enlistment. Returning to York this brave young soldier took up the thread of private life, entering into partnership with Peter C. Wiest in the grocery and confectionery business in which he continued until 1879, that year dissolving the partnership and establishing himself in the business of manufacturing ice cream. In connection with this business he began to handle ice, selling largely both at wholesale and retail, and giving employment to eighteen or twenty men. Naturally from time to time, he added the other commodities he now carries, and has made an exceptional success of his work.

On Oct. 16, 1866, Mr. Neuman married Miss Amanda Wambaugh, daughter of John Wambaugh, and they have had these children: Edward W.; James W.; Margie, wife of Huston E. Landis; Daisy, wife of Charles V. Borling, of Pittsburg; and Mary. Mr. Neuman is a member of Sedgwick Post No. 37, G. A. R.; and of the Union Veteran Legion, No. 65, of which he is serving as quartermaster and has since its organization in 1890. He and his family are consistent members of the Reformed Church, and very highly respected in the community.

LEHMAYER BROTHERS. NATHAN LEHMAYER, the oldest living merchant in York, was born in Germany in 1833, son of Moses and Caroline Leh Mayer. The father died in 1847 in Germany, where he had been a merchant for thirty years, and after his death Mrs. Leh Mayer brought her children to America, where they located, settling in York, Pa.

Nathan Leh Mayer and his brothers, Simon and Joseph, were the founders of the well known men's clothing and furnishing business of Leh Mayer Brothers at York. The firm was established under that name on the site of the present large store, the business at that time, however, being very smal in comparison to the patronage the firm enjoys at present. Joseph Leh Mayer died in 1877 and Simon in 1890, while Nathan continued the store under the same name. On Feb. 17, 1904, his three sons, Martin, Louis and William, were admitted into partnership with their father, and the membership of the firm has continued the same since that time. The name of Leh Mayer Brothers is known throughout York county, and the store has the reputation of being the most reliable of its kind in the city of York. In proportion to the growth of the business so has Mr. Leh Mayer increased his building and stock, being now the employer of fourteen people. The building, 34 x 120 feet, is equipped with modern fixtures and appliances, and the business has grown to large proportions—solely because of the quality and reliability of the goods sold, and through Mr. Leh Mayer's good business judgment and strict attention to business.

Since 1855 Mr. Leh Mayer has been a member of the Masons at York. In religious matters he is connected with the Reformed Hebrew Church. On Jan. 13, 1861, he was united in marriage with Mary Rosenbaum, daughter of Moses and Caroline Rosenbaum, of Philadelphia, and to this union were born children as follows: Pauline, who is now the widow of J. Schall Wilhelm; Martin, born in 1864, who married Martha Rosenau (he is a member of the Masons, the Elks and the Royal Arcanum of York); Daisy M., living in York, who there married Abe Jandorf; Louis, born Nov. 6, 1867, who married Adella Strasberger (he belongs to the Masons, the Elks and the Heptasophs); William, born Nov. 9, 1868, who married Rae Herz (he belongs to the Masons, the Elks and the Royal Arcanum); and Carrie, who lives in Philadelphia, married to Marc Hydeman.
JAMES H. GABLE, president and general manager of the Deer Creek Water & Water Power Company, of Stewartstown, formerly a prominent lawyer of Baltimore, has had one of the most unique not to say distinguished careers of any resident of York county. He became well known not only for his marked legal ability, but for a versatility of talent for achievement in other directions as well. To unusual natural gifts for the profession of the law he united the best of training, and with such advantages his ambition carried him forward to well deserved success.

In both paternal and maternal lines Mr. Gable descends from prominent old families in York county. The tradition is that his maternal great-great-grandfather, George Von Einstein (as the name was originally spelled), was forced to leave Canada at the time of the Revolution to escape British conscription of certain of his grown sons, and fleeing to the United States settled at Catskill, N. Y. Thence he removed to the region of the Wyoming Valley, but again was driven from his home, by the Indian depredations, culminating in the celebrated Wyoming massacre, and he finally settled in York county, in Windsor township, now Lower Windsor, on a tract of 315 acres, for which he paid $2,000 in gold and silver coins, as the deed recites.

Mr. Gable’s great-grandfather, commonly called George Anstine, and son of the preceding George Von Einstein, on attaining the military age entered the Colonial army, in which he remained until the close of the Revolutionary war. In his later years he was often heard to say that he was entitled to a pension but would not apply for one. After his discharge from the patriot army he returned presumably to his home in Windsor, afterward married a Miss Shearer, and subsequently purchased a tract of land in Hopewell township, of about three hundred acres, whereon a large part of Stewartstown is now built.

On his father’s side Mr. Gable’s great-grandfather was Valentine Gable, who built and owned the well known “Brogue Hotel” at Brogueville. The next in line, Jacob Gable, was born in Chanceford township, as was also his son, Israel, on the family homestead near the old Manor Furnace.

Israel Gable followed farming, but he was a many-sided man of great force and business-like sagacity, and had, besides his farming interests, divers pursuits and occupations. At the age of sixty he had acquired a handsome competence, and was the owner of one of the very finest estates in Hopewell township, comprising about three hundred acres. The homestead tract of 200 acres adjoined on the south the borough of Stewartstown, none of it, however, belonging to the old Anstine tract previously mentioned, which lay to the west of said town. Dividing a large part of his estate and property with his children, and having given and provided a liberal education for them all, he lived his later days in leisure and retirement at the old homestead and died in 1901, in the eighty-fifth year of his age. His wife was Miss Catherine Anstine, the eldest of thirteen children born to Henry Anstine, who was a farmer and oil operator in Hopewell township. Mrs. Gable died several months before her husband, aged eighty-eight. To the union of Israel and Catherine (Anstine) Gable were born six children who grew to manhood and womanhood. In the order of age they were: James H., the subject of this sketch; Henry A., wholesale and retail dealer in hardware in Harrisburg; Mary, who married (first) William Norton, of Ohio, and (second) T. C. Thoburn, of Peabody, Kans.; J. Benson, who is on the family estate at Stewartstown; Elizabeth, the first woman physician who matriculated from York county, who first held a responsible position in the Wilmington Asylum for the Insane, and later was at Kirkbride, Philadelphia, but her strength being overtaxed, pneumonia intervened and she died at the old home from tuberculosis; and Esther Anna, the youngest, who was an artist and amateur authoress and for higher musical talent has acquired quite a local reputation.

James H. Gable was born in Shrewsbury, June 7, 1844. He was educated in the Stewartstown Academy, and the Military and Classical Institute at Columbia, Lancaster county, and when only fifteen began his own career as a teacher. His first school was at Old Center School, near Forest Hill, in Harford county, Md., from which place he went to Hopewell township, then to Delta Academy, York county, and finally to Columbia, becoming first assistant in the institute there. This position he resigned to enter the colporteurage field for the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and for the next two years canvassed a large section of the territory then comprised in Donegal, Huntingdon and Northumberland Presbyterianities. He was quite successful in selling and distributing a large amount of the board's books and Presbyterian literature, formed many pleasant acquaintances with the prominent ministers and laymen of the church over the sections visited, and still retains many agreeable remiscent memories of these days. Having made quite a complete canvass for the Board in the city of Williamsport, Pa., and also an extended tour through the West Branch Valley, he was offered the position of secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association at Williamsport, and librarian of its library, the only circulating library of any note then in the city. This place he held for four years, and made use of it for a course of reading and an acquisition of knowledge of both books and men that stood him in good stead in after years. That position Mr. Gable resigned in order to enter the law office of Phelps & Findlay, in Baltimore. Mr. Phelps afterward became Judge of the Supreme court, while Mr. Findlay was returned to Congress. With his own natural powers so adapted for the law developed by these able preceptors, it was to be expected that Mr. Gable would reach a position of prominence at the Bar of Baltimore, and for twelve years he pursued his profession there most successfully. During the twelve years of his active practice, as is shown by the reported cases, he tried or assisted in the trial, and argued in the Court of Appeals of Maryland (the highest court in the State), the Supreme Court of the United States, and other higher courts, some twenty-five or thirty cases reported. These were all additional to a large practice in the Common Law and Equity Courts of original jurisdiction in Baltimore City; his practice was altogether in the Civil Courts, saving an exceptional instance or two in the City Criminal Court; he also eschewed divorce cases and practice. The first case he tried after admission to the Bar was in the Court of Appeals, in which he appeared for the appellant and reversed the Circuit Court for Baltimore County (Judges Grason and Yellott). At the end of twelve years Mr. Gable's health failed, and after a six months' trip and sojourn in Europe he lived for four years in the more genial and favoring climate of Washington, D. C., where his literary turn of mind led him to take advantage of the famous Congressional Library. In 1897 Mr. Gable returned to Stewartstown, to make his home, and there lived in comparative retirement, although he undertook occasional cases in Baltimore. In 1903, however, when he became interested in the Deer Creek Water & Water Power Company, he again entered into more active business life, and is serving as president and general manager of the company at the present time. The water works supply of the company and the power plant on Deer Creek are just now in course of construction and when completed as contemplated promise great results for Stewartstown and vicinity.

Mr. Gable was married July 12, 1877, to Miss Harriet L. Stirling, daughter of Robert Stirling, retired, of Baltimore. Her death occurred July 15, 1890, and eight years later, on Jan. 26, 1899, Mr. Gable was married to Mrs. Ida M. Ritchey, widow of Robert Ritchey, of Stewartstown. Mrs. Ritchey was the mother of one son, Henry, of the class of 1907, York Collegiate Institute.

Mr. Gable belongs to the Presbyterian Church of Baltimore, in which he was for some time vice-chairman of the Church Guild. In politics he is a Republican, and he was one of the charter members of the Reform League of Baltimore, an organization which has exerted a marked influence for good in that city in the final overthrow of the corrupt political rings of both city and State. Mr. Gable is now living quietly in the city of York, where his name and opinions deservedly command the confidence and respect of his fellow-citizens.

GEORGE W. S. LOUCKS, ex-mayor of York, is a prominent Republican and a successful manufacturer of that city. He comes of one of the old York county families, members of which for generations have been well-known farmers.

George W. S. Loucks was born Sept. 20, 1856, at Hoffmansville, Baltimore Co., Md., and was educated in York County Academy under Prof. Ruby. His grandfather, George, lived and died on the homestead farm, one mile from York; his father, Jacob, was a paper manufacturer.

The first employment of Mr. Loucks was with is uncle, P. H. Glatfelter, in the paper making business, where he remained three years. He then, in 1877-78, went into business with his father, the firm being Jacob Loucks & Son, and began the manufacture of various small ice machines. That business was the germ of the present York Manufacturing Company, which has grown to such gigantic proportions. Mr. Loucks remained with the manufacturing company, through its various stages of development, until 1893, when he was elected mayor of York for a term of three years, being the first Republican mayor of that city.

After the expiration of his official term, Mr. Loucks took no active part in business until June, 1904, when he resumed his connection with the York Manufacturing Company, this time in the clerical department.

In July, 1882, Mr. Loucks married Annie M. Lord, daughter of Robert L. Lord, of Shrewsbury, York county. Mr. Lord was a manufacturer of dye stuffs, the dyes being extracted from the bark of various trees. To Mr. and Mrs. Loucks three children have been born, as follows: Robert L., a graduate of the York high school, class of 1904, who received from Congressman Lainey, as a result of a competitive examination, the appointment to a cadetship at the Naval Academy at Annapolis; and Margaret and Catherine, members of the class of 1905, in the York high school.

In a Democratic community, Mr. Loucks has always been an uncompromising Republican, and has time and again been a delegate to county and state conventions. In religious faith he is a Methodist. He is a member of the Masonic Order, a Knight Templar, and a Mystic Shriner. He belongs to the Odd Fellows lodge and Encampment; and is a member of the Order of Red Men, and Knights of Malta. In social and political circles no man in the community enjoys a wider popularity than George W. S. Loucks.

EDWARD WING SHAPLEY, proprietor of the Shapley Publishing House, Dillsburg, editor and proprietor of The New Era, has been in the business at that place for over twenty years, and has one of the best equipped establishments in York county.

Mr. Shapley was born April 7, 1857, in Carlisle, Cumberland Co., Pa., and comes of a family long known in that section, but originally of New England origin, his grandfather, Rufus E. Shapley, having been a native of Massachusetts, whence he came to Carlisle in early manhood. There he became the owner of much valuable real estate and was an extensive manufacturer. He married Lydia E. Metzger, and they became the parents of a large family, all the sons of which became prominent in business and the various professions, namely: John located in Ohio and became widely known in the medical profession; Joel lived in Shippensburg, where he became wealthy and influential; Edmund lived in Mechanicsburg; Rufus E. spent his days in Carlisle, where he was one of the largest property holders and most prosperous men of his day (his son, Rufus E., third of that name, is one of the most distinguished lawyers of Philadelphia); Charles was the father of Edward Wing Shapley, whose name introduces these lines.

Charles Shapley was, like his brothers, a prosperous and influential citizen, making his home in Carlisle, where he was engaged in the manufacture of furniture. He accumulated a large property. His wife, Lydia J. Connelly, bore him the following children: William C., who resided in Carlisle; Lydia and Laura; Edward Wing; Joseph, deceased, who was a prominent business man of Carlisle; and Harry L., now a leading furniture dealer in Carlisle. The mother of this family still makes her home in Carlisle; the father died in 1882. He was an official member of the First Presbyterian Church of Carlisle.

Edward Wing Shapley was taught in the public schools and academy in Carlisle. At the age of twenty he started on a tour of the West, returning after an absence of three years, and settling in Dillsburg, became engaged in the printing and publishing business with J. N. Rhoads, Esq. At the end of the first year he became sole proprietor and as such continued the business for twenty years with uniform success. Meantime he took an active part in public affairs, serving a number of times on the school board, and in the council chambers, and like most successful business men he has been eminently useful in the local civil administration. He is now the proprietor of the Shapley Publishing House, publishing The New Era, one of the most reliable newspapers of this section. The establishment is splendidly equipped with modern machinery for newspaper work, binding, job printing, etc., and enjoys first class patronage. For fourteen years he has also been engaged in farming.

Mr. Shapely is a man of social disposition, and takes much pleasure in his church and fraternal relations. He is a Knight Templar Mason, belonging to the Blue Lodge at Mechanicsburg, Samuel C. Perkins Chapter, at Harrisburg, and St. John’s Commandery, Carlisle; he affiliates with the Heptasophs at Dillsburg. His church membership is in the Monaghan Presbyterian Church, in which he is a ruling elder and teacher of the Young Ladies’ Bible Class.

In 1882 Mr. Shapely married Miss Laura E. Smith, only daughter of J. A. Smith, of Dillsburg. They reside in a large farm in Carroll township, adjoining Dillsburg, which Mr. Shapely owns.

J. C. STEM, M. D., an eminently successful physician and surgeon of York county, whose chosen field of practice is in the city of York, is conveniently situated in his offices on West Market street. Dr. Stem was born July 26, 1855, in Castown, Adams county, son of William and Eliza (Watson) Stem.

Dr. Stem’s parents were natives of Adams county, and of German and Irish descent. They had two children—twins—J. C. and Annie. The mother was a twin. William Stem was a well-known physician of Castown, and lived retired many years, and his father, Ruben Stem, a merchant, was a resident of Adams county, where he also lived retired for many years prior to his death. James Watson, father of Mrs. Eliza (Watson) Stem, died at the remarkable age of 102 years.

Dr. J. C. Stem spent his early days in Castown, where he attended the public and private schools, and afterward for five terms attended a select school at Gettysburg. For three winters he taught school at Buchanan Valley, Adams county. At the age of seventeen years he began the study of medicine with his father, and then attended the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery, from which he was graduated with the class of 1878. He then took a tour through the West, after which, in the fall of 1878, he settled in Lewisberry, Pa., where he built up a lucrative practice. After practicing at Lewisberry for twenty-five years Dr. Stem removed, in September, 1903, to No. 527 Market street, York, where he has since engaged in a general practice, also becoming the official examining surgeon for the local Camp, Modern Woodmen of America.

In 1880 Dr. Stem married Mary Paup, daughter of Hiram and Phoebe A. (Hooper) Paup, of York county. Socially Dr. Stem belongs to the Heptasophs, Artisans, Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America, and is a Mason of the thirty-second degree, being a member of Harrisburg Consistory and past commander of York Commandery, No. 21.

It may be said that Dr. Stem took his first lessons in surgery when a mere boy. When the Confederate army invaded Pennsylvania Gen. Lee had his headquarters during the forenoon of the first day’s fight in Dr. Stem’s father’s lot, and his father’s office was filled with wounded Confederates. The elder Dr. Stem attended to their injuries, and the genial Dr. J. C. Stem, now of York, then a lad of eight years, handing bandages and other needful things to his father, thus rendered all the assistance of which a child of his age was capable.

HENRY W. HEFFENER, of York, Pa., was born in that city, in 1845, son of William H. and Charlotte (Keila) Heffener, both natives of Germany, who settled in York the year in which our subject was born.

The military career of Mr. Heffener is a romantic one, and began when he, at the early age of sixteen, enlisted in Company G, 9th Pa. Veteran Cavalry, and soon thereafter, his regiment was placed under Gen. Kilpatrick’s command, the only Pennsylvania cavalry to participate in Sherman’s famous march to the sea. Mr. Heffener participated in all of the engagements and skirmishes of his regiment from Atlanta, Ga., to Morrisonville, N. C., where he saw Gen. Joseph E. Johnston’s forces surrender, and he remained with Sherman’s Army until the close of the war. At Waynesboro, his horse was shot dead from under him. Mr. Heffener was one of 100 men selected to carry important dispatches from Gen. Kilpatrick to Gen. Sherman. They performed the daring act of piercing the Confederate lines, and passing through them to Gen. Sherman. This was justly considered one of the most daring acts of the war, and richly merits the admiration of all. The Ninth regiment captured, during its term of service, some 8,000 prisoners, twenty-eight pieces of artillery, and destroyed hundreds of miles of railroad and bridges. It was known as Krider’s Mounted Rangers, and did scout duty for all the prominent generals under the famous “Kentucky Bill,” who burnt the house of Gen. Battle, where all the guerrillas had their headquarters, and were commanded by a son of the general. After being mustered out at Harrisburg, Mr. Heffener returned to York, and followed the trade of a painter until 1868. He then became a fireman on the Northern Central railroad, and thus continued until he entered into his present business of manufacturing cigar boxes.

Mr. Heffener, in addition to his other interests, is a member of the Keystone Building Association, and acts as director in the same; he is also a director in the York National Bank. Naturally, he is a prominent member of the G. A. R. and a member of the Lodge of Elks, Heptasophis, and the Lafayette Club, and also belongs to the Rescue Fire Association. For some years, he has served very acceptably on the town council, and is a man of high standing in the community.

In April, 1883, Mr. Heffener married Miss Rebecca Brenner, of Adams county, and they have one child, George W. Mr. and Mrs. Heffener are highly esteemed in the community, where they have many friends. Mr. Heffener has lived an upright, industrious life, and is now beginning to enjoy the fruits of his labors.

DR. EDMUND D. BORTNER, of Green Ridge, Codorus township, York Co., Pa., was born in that township Sept. 22, 1852, son of Charles G. Bortner. The family, one of the oldest of the county, is a large and respected one. It was founded in this country by Baltzer Bortner, who was born in Germany in 1695 or 1697.

Michael Bortner, son of George and Appolona, was the grandfather of Mrs. Edmund D. Bortner, and is mentioned later.

Three of the sons of George and Appolona Bortner married sisters of the name of Gantz. Three Bortner brothers married three Ernsts, two of them sisters. The number of Catharines the Bortners married is noteworthy.

Charles G. Bortner, father of Dr. Edmund D. Bortner, was a son of Jacob, grandson of Ludwig, and great-grandson of George and Appolona Bortner. He received a common-school education, and then learned the tanning trade, which he followed until 1893, since which time he has resided at Seven Valley. He married Lydia Lau, daughter of Daniel and Barbara Miller, and she died May 14, 1892, aged sixty-four years, six months, five days; she is buried at the Stone Church in Codorus township. Her mother died at the advanced age of 103 years, and is buried at Wolf’s Church, in Manchester township. Children as follows were born to Mr. and Mrs. Charles G. Bortner: Esrom, who married Sarah Bankert; Edmund D.; A. Milton, who married Sarah Bahn; Emma J., the widow of Daniel Werner, who died in 1892; Frank, who married Amelia Milner, and resides in Baltimore, Md.; Ozias, who married Cora Snyder, and died Sept. 2, 1893; Rolandes, who died Jan. 18, 1898, and was buried at Stone Church (he left a widow, Maggie Bortner); Eckert, who married Mrs. Clara Gladfelter, and lives at Glen Rock, Pa.; and Jonathan, living with his brother Eckert.

Edmund D. Bortner attended the township schools and went to Ohio to learn dentistry. After completing his education, in 1875, he returned to his native township, where he engaged in the practice of his profession until 1890, in which year he located at his present place. He has the confidence of the community, and has built up a fine practice.

Dr. Bortner married Catharine Bortner, daughter of Jared and Magdalena (Cramer) Bortner, and a descendant also of Baltzer Bortner. To this union were born children as follows: Miles, a graduate of the Goldy College, of Wilmington, Del., is now employed in that city with the Pennsylvania Railroad company, as stenographer, and was engaged in teaching school two terms; Verne died when five years, six months old, and is buried at the Stone Church; Homer attends the Glenville Academy; Arta is attending school. Mr. and Mrs. Bortner also reared Cletus O. S. Bortner, a son of Ozias Bortner, taking him after the death of his father, when he was six weeks old. He is now twelve years of age, and is attending school.

Dr. Bortner is a Democrat in politics, and in 1888 served as school director. He is at present serving his township as treasurer of the board. In religion a Lutheran, he has held office in the church, and is known as a true Christian gentleman. Fraternally he is connected with the A. & I. O. Knights of Malta, at York, Lodge No. 152.

Michael Bortner, grandfather of Mrs. Bortner, our subject's wife, was born Nov. 20, 1780, son of George, and died Oct. 21, 1876, aged eighty-nine years, eleven months, one day. He was thirteen years and fifteen days on his sickbed. He was twice married, his first wife being Margaret Markel, by whom he had four children: John, born Feb. 16, 1808 (married Catharine Kercher); Michael, Nov. 23, 1809 (married Catharine Sweitzer); Elizabeth, Feb. 18, 1811; and Jacob, Jan. 13, 1814 (married Catharine Walker). His second wife, Catherine Markle, bore him these children: Sarah, born June 15, 1818; Jared, Oct. 18, 1819; Henry M., Jan. 3, 1821; Jonas, Dec. 7, 1823 (married Catharine Bortner); Lydia, Nov. 24, 1825; Cassian, Aug. 30, 1828; Catherine, July 12, 1831; and Noah, Jan. 22, 1835.

Jared Bortner, father of Mrs. Bortner, was born Oct. 18, 1819, and married Magdalena Cramer April 21, 1846. She died March 25, 1905, aged seventy-nine years, nine months, twenty-two days. They had eleven children: Reuben, born Feb. 5, 1847; Nathaniel, July 13, 1848; Saranda, Jan. 7, 1850; Martin, Jan. 6, 1853; Edwin, Aug. 22, 1855; Mary, June 18, 1857; Catherine, April 8, 1859; Belinda, Sept. 19, 1860; Diana, Aug. 10, 1862; Chester, July 14, 1864, and Louisa. Jared Bortner followed farming and shoemaking. He was a great reader and has read his German Bible through twenty times. He still survives, and although in his eighty-seventh year is in the best of health and spirits.

A reunion of the Bortner family was held Aug. 7, 1897, under the management of a committee of five: Leander W. Bortner, Dr. E. D. Bortner, Jacob G. Bortner, Hon. H. M. Bortner and David Bortner. The following account appeared in a York paper:

REUNION OF THE BORTNER FAMILY.

(Over 5,000 of That Family and Their Immediate Relatives and Friends Participate.)

On Saturday the contemplated re-union of the Bortner family was held at Brodbeck's Grove, about a mile from Green Ridge. Very extensive preparations had been made for this unique occasion, and to say that it was a success would be putting it mildly. The like has never occurred before in this county, and it is doubtful if any other family in the county could gather so many as 5,000 people, the estimated attendance at the re-union, all of them more or less related by blood and marriage. There was a great handshaking and renewal of friendships. Three cornet bands, one the famous Towson band, of Towson, Md., were present and enlivened the occasion with choice music. Members of the family were there from all over Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia and Indiana.

The feature of the day was the rendition of an interesting programme in the afternoon, consisting of excellent instrumental and vocal music and several very interesting addresses.

Mr. Henry M. Bortner gave the family history, and his reminiscences, of many of which he has personal knowledge, he being nearly eighty years of age, were of particular interest to the members of the family. He traced the family from the immigration, in about 1700, of Balsar Bortner, who came from Holland and settled in Bucks county, Pa., he being the progenitor of George Bortner, who drifted into York county over a century and a half ago, and took up land in what is now the township, he having at that time a very large tract of land, and died leaving much wealth behind. The son of George Bortner, Ludwig, then took the land and selling off tract after tract retained a farm of nearly two hundred acres, which farm has ever since been owned by a Bortner. Balsar Bortner was the great-grandfather of the speaker and his descendants have spread into almost every State and Territory in the Union.

Prof. Theo. Bortner, of Hanover, Pa., in a very neat speech, told of his impressions received at the reunion and hoped for a repetition in future years.

Frank M. Bortner, Esq., a rising young lawyer and junior partner of the law firm of Shambach & Bortner, of our city, made a very eloquent congratulatory address. The speech, which was very complimentary to the family, was enthusiastically received.

The hearts of the old people of the family are not heavy and four or five of them gave vent to their levity by engaging in a very amusing wheeling match, the prizes being a handsome crab stick with gold mountings, won by Mr. Harry S. Bortner, aged eighty-three years; and a box of fine cigars won by Mr. Jacob G. Bortner, aged seventy-eight, of Glen Rock, Pennsylvania.

The oldest member of the family present was Mr. George Bortner, over ninety years old.

Letters of regret were read from Mr. Charles Bortner, of Albion, Ind., who on the day of the reunion was just eighty years old, and from Mrs. Christine Wilson, nee Bortner, of Lewistown, Illinois, who is 102 years of age, and whose direct lineal descendants number 365.

The history of the family given by Hon. H. M. Bortner was in German. The speech was not fully delivered, on account of Mr. Bortner's health and a lack of time, but in the following we give a synopsis of his family sketch:

Ich bin iets old, un ols noch doe.
Jor wor mohl yung, un nown shoon gro;
Anäht wore ols yush der dawdie gro;
Un now sin shon set kinner so.
Ich ains dafoon, schwoch in de ba;

Un aw shuif in meina gnee;
Un wore ich nee net ooda shpree;
My memory is duch als noch doe,
So godt sie wore for fooftsich yore,
Ich bin aw fra dos sel so is,

The following are the names of the children (as near as I can find out) of Baltzer Bortner, who was born in Germany, about 200 years ago: George, Peter and Rozena. Rozena became the wife of Frederick Frasher. Peter, who was born about 1734, came from Bucks county to Dauphin, and had five sons and several daughters, one of whom was married to a Hoofnagle, in Ohio.

The following are names of Peter’s sons: Peter, John, Michael, Philip and Jacob. Peter was born in 1782; in 1810 he married Christiana Losh, with whom he lived seventy-one years, when she died at the age of over 100 years, in Lewistown, Fulton county, Ill. They had thirteen children, ninety grandchildren, 217 great-grandchildren, and twenty-four great-great-grandchildren, a total of 353.

Mike was born in Lykensburg, Pa., in 1812, and four years later (1816) his father died. Mike, at the age of fifteen, moved to Wood county, Ohio, and from there to Freeport, Ohio. Mr. Bortner was the father of nine children. Of John, Philip and Jacob I know nothing.

George Bortner, married to Appolona Floucher, was born about 1731. He settled in Codorus township. In 1754 he was the owner of the property now owned by Jacob W. Bortner, and on Nov. 2, 1774, he bought fifty acres of Ludwig Krebs, executor of the estate of Charles Shafer, deceased. On Oct. 12, 1798, he sold thirty-five acres to Abraham Hosler. On Dec. 13, 1799, he sold thirty-one acres to Abraham Hosler. On Jan. 2, 1801, he sold the balance to his son Peter. On May 2, 1802, it was sold to Ludwig Bortner, who owned it until after his death, when it was sold to John Ziegler in 1817.

George Bortner was the father of twelve children, seven sons and five daughters, namely: George, Ludwig, John, Peter, Philip, Jacob, Michael, Julia, Christiana, Margaret, Elizabeth and Catharine. (1) George Bortner, married to Margaret Gantz, was born Feb. 6, 1761, and died April 8, 1843, aged eighty-two years, two months, two days. They had seven children, four sons and three daughters: Henry, John, George, Jacob, Margaret, Christiana and Elizabeth. Of these, Henry moved to Ohio; John had five children, two sons and three daughters, David, Jesse, Julia, Sallie and Leah; George died at the age of twenty-one; Jacob when sixteen; Margaret died single at the age of eighty-three years; Christiana, married to George Amspacher, died at the age of ninety-three; Elizabeth died in 1853, aged fifty-six. David Bortner was married to a Hartman and had sons and daughters. Those whom I know are Albert, Nathaniel, David and Jesse. Jesse Bortner was killed on the railroad between York and Wrightsville. (2) Ludwig Bortner, married to Elizabeth Gantz, was born May 15, 1762, and died Dec. 12, 1815, aged fifty-three years, six months and twenty-seven days. They had five children, two sons and three daughters, Jacob, John, Barbara, Elizabeth and Magdalene. Jacob was born in 1794, died 1857, aged sixty-three years. He had thirteen children, eight sons and five daughters, Lewis, Jesse, Daniel, Amos, Jacob, Charles, Emanuel, Levi, Elizabeth, Lucy Ann, Catharine, Matilda and Julia. All of the children are still living except Lewis, Jesse and Lucy Ann. John, born in 1797, died in 1853, aged fifty-six years. He had six children, two sons and four daughters, John, Lewis, Leah, Catharine, Mary Ann and Elizabeth. Barbara was married to John Zeigler, Elizabeth to Jacob Fishel, Magdalene first to a Krebs: (3) John, married to Julia Gantz, was born in 1768, died in 1859, aged ninety-one years. He had six children as far as I know, three sons and three daughters, John, Jacob, Josiah; one of the daughters was married to a Fife, one to a Hyson, and the other to a Yost. (4) Peter, married to Elizabeth Wayne, was born in 1770, died in 1832, aged sixty-one years, eight months. They had eight children, seven sons and one daughter—Jacob, George, Peter, John, Martin, William, Henry and Elizabeth. All are dead except Elizabeth. Peter was born March 4, 1798, died Sept. 25, 1888, aged ninety years, six months and twenty-one days. (5) Philip moved to Washington county. Am unable to give anything further of him. (6) Jacob, married to Catharine Snyder, was born Jan.
BIographical

14, 1778, died Jan. 25, 1851, aged seventy-three years, eleven days. They had seven children, five sons and two daughters—Jacob, George, Samuel, Michael, Henry, Elizabeth and Rebecca. Jacob was born Jan. 26, 1803, died Feb. 6, 1890, aged eighty-five years, ten days. George was born March 17, 1807, is over ninety years of age and was the oldest Bortner at the reunion. Samuel was born in 1809, died 1874, aged about sixty-six years. Michael was born in 1811, died in Ohio in 1843, aged thirty-two years. Henry was born in 1816, is still living. Elizabeth was born in 1814, wife of Jacob Strayer, is dead. Rebecca was born in 1818, wife of Levi Bahn, is still living. (7) Michael Bortner, married to Margaret Markel, was born Nov. 20, 1789, died Oct. 21, 1870, aged eighty-nine years, eleven months and one day. He was thirteen years and fifteen days on his sickbed. With his first wife he had four children, John, Mike, Elizabeth and Jacob. All are dead except Jacob. John was born Feb. 16, 1808; Mike, Nov. 23, 1809; Elizabeth, Feb. 18, 1811; Jacob, Jan. 13, 1814. His second wife, Catherine Markel, with whom he had Sarah, born June 15, 1818; Jared, born Oct. 18, 1819; H. M., born Jan. 3, 1821; Jonas, born Dec. 7, 1823; Lydia, born Nov. 24, 1825; Cassian, born Aug. 30, 1828; Catharine, born July 12, 1831; Noah, born Jan. 22, 1835. All are living except Jonas and Lydia. Jacob Bortner, of George, was married to Catharine Snyder; Jacob Bortner, of Ludwig, was married to Catharine Gerbrick; Jacob Bortner, of Michael, was married to Catharine Walker; John Bortner, of Ludwig, was married to Catharine Strickhouser; John Bortner, of Michael, was married to Catharine Kerchner; John Bortner, of John, was married to Catharine Rohrbaugh; Michael Bortner, of George, was married to Catharine Markel; Michael Bortner, of Michael, was married to Catharine Sweitzer; Jonas Bortner, of Michael, was married to Catharine Bortner; Edmund Bortner, of Charles, was married to Catharine Bortner. When the last two, Jonas and Edmund, wished to marry, the Catharines were all taken up, so that, rather than not get Catharines, they married Catharine Bortners. Here is a list of a few Levi Bortners: Levi Bortner, Levi B. Bortner, Levi E. Bortner, Levi G. Bortner, Levi K. Bortner, Levi P. Bortner, Levi S. Bortner, Levi S. Bortner, Levi W. Bortner. Three Bortners (brothers) married three Gantzes (sisters). Three Bortners (brothers) married three Ernsts, two of whom were sisters.

Philip H. Glatfelter. In every community, great or small, there are found men who, by reason of personal attributes, enterprising spirit and natural ability, have arisen above their fellows in business, social or public life. Spring Grove has several examples of this class, and one of these is Philip H. Glatfelter, proprietor of the great paper manufacturing plant of Spring Grove, who was born in 1837, a son of Charles and Louisa (Fishel) Glatfelter.

For many generations members of the Glatfelter family had been engaged in agricultural pursuits, and during the first twenty years of his life Philip H. Glatfelter followed the example his forebears had set, in the mean time attending the district school, and eagerly imbibing all his various teachers could impart. However, the ambitious boy, who from childhood exhibited a restless desire to get on in the world, could not content himself with the humdrum life upon the farm, and in 1857 he entered the mill of Loucks & Hoffman, on the Gunpowder river in Maryland, and for six or seven years he seriously applied himself to mastering the business of paper manufacturing in every detail. At the expiration of that time an opportunity presented itself for him to embark in the business for himself, which he eagerly embraced, although advised to the contrary by friends and relatives. Thus he became the owner of the paper mills located at Spring Grove.

Spring Grove first came into notice as an iron hamlet, Peter Dicks, one of the prosperous iron men of his day, having erected a bloomery there in 1756, coming from Delaware county, Pa., to do so. About 1856 the iron business was suspended, and Jacob Hauer, who had removed from Lebanon to York county to engage in that branch of industrial activity, finding his occupation gone, embarked in the manufacture of paper. Three years later he died, and his heirs, after conducting the business for a time, leased it to a Philadelphia firm. In 1863 it came upon the market, and Mr. Glatfelter bought the plant, which at that time had a capacity of fifteen hundred pounds daily. Five years later the new proprietor had increased the daily capacity to four thousand pounds. In 1874 new buildings were erected, and an entire new plant put in, so that the daily output reached ten thousand pounds. From time to time Mr. Glatfelter has added to his buildings and machinery until he now has a capacity of ninety thousands pounds daily, and his plant covers five acres of land, and is valued at one million dollars. The business was incorporated in December, 1905, as the P. H. Glatfelter Co., with a capital of $1,000,000. Mr. Glatfelter enjoys the distinction of being one of the first manufacturers to make paper from wood and straw pulp, and he is always eager to embrace new methods which promise to be of worth, and to take advantage of improved machinery. The mills are operated day and night, and constant employment is given to some 325 men. A private electric plant generates light for the establishment, and through the generosity of Mr. Glatfelter the town has been lighted for a nominal rental, the borough actually paying less than the cost to him.

In addition to his extensive interests in the paper manufacturing line, Mr. Glatfelter is president of the York Manufacturing Company, one of the largest concerns of the city of York, is possessed of numerous realty holdings, and is a man of wealth and influence. His son, William L. Glatfelter, has been associated with him in the manufacture of paper since 1887, and holds the office of secretary and treasurer of the Company.

The history of Spring Grove since Mr. Glatfelter's location is the history of this benevolent and public spirited man. Always on the alert to second any measure tending toward the advancement and improvement of the place. Mr. Glatfelter is largely responsible for its moral and material growth. Among other gifts he has made to the people is a $20,000 schoolhouse. Recognizing the urgent need of a first-class hotel to accommodate the many guests coming to Spring Grove, Mr. Glatfelter built and furnished the magnificent "Hotel Aldine," which is conducted on strict temperance principles, he being a strong advocate of temperance. Through his efforts Spring Grove is a temperance town, and its people are sober, industrious and prosperous. Not content with forwarding the cause of higher education in Spring Grove, Mr. Glatfelter has given generously to numerous educational institutions, and is always encouraging the young to improve and cultivate their minds.

In 1861 Mr. Glatfelter married Miss Amanda E. Loucks, of West Manchester township, daughter of John G. and Susan C. Loucks, and five children, four daughters and one son, have been born to them: Eva J. (deceased), Clara E. (wife of C. E. Moul, of Hanover), William L., Mellie I. and L. Romaine.

The beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Glatfelter is located opposite the mills. It is surrounded by extensive grounds, carefully cultivated, and here the busy man of affairs enjoys his leisure hours.

Full of charity for others, Mr. Glatfelter has hosts of friends wherever known, while his sound judgment, sterling character and excellent business abilities have won him a place in the front rank of men of prominence and substance.

J. ALLEN BAER, who was formerly engaged in the banking business, is a representative of an old York county family. His great-grandfather, David Bear, was born April 11, 1780, and died Oct. 16, 1831, and the latter's wife, Maria Baer, was born June 20, 1772, and died Nov. 4, 1868. Their old homestead is still occupied by some of their descendants. Daniel Baer, son of David, married Susan Hershey, and their children were: Daniel and Jacob H.

Jacob H. Baer, son of Daniel and Susan H. Baer, was born April 2, 1830, and passed his first eighteen years upon his father's farm, assisting in its cultivation and at intervals attending the district schools. He then entered York County Academy, from which he was graduated in 1853. Entering the commission business soon after, he continued in it for twelve years, then beginning his career as a banker by organizing a private bank, which he conducted for two years. This bank was then merged into the Western National Bank, which he organized, and of which he was president for two years. He then resigned and embarked again in a private banking business, building up one of the soundest financial institutions in the county, ably seconded by his sons Charles F. and J. Allen. In this he continued until 1890. His death occurred May 3, 1896. He was a man of marked business sagacity and possessed the confidence of all. In June, 1858, he married Mary Winters, daughter of John and Maria Winters, of York county, and they had four children: Charles F. married Mary E. Beeler, and is in the banking business at York; J. Allen; Annie M. married Dr. George W. Brose, of York; and Howard D. is in the banking business with his brother Charles F. Mrs. Baer died June 3, 1875, and her remains, as well as those of her husband, rest in Prospect Hill cemetery. The family were reared in the Lutheran faith.

J. Allen Baer was born in York, Pa., July 19, 1863, and received his education in the public schools of York and in York County Academy. From the time he left school until 1893 he was engaged in the banking business with his father, and since then has lived retired.

In 1896 Mr. Baer was united in marriage with Annie J. Runkle, daughter of George W. Runkle, of York. Two children have blessed this union, Helen M. and John A., both attending school. Mr. and Mrs. Baer attend the Lutheran Church, and are active in all good work.

LUCIUS K. FON DERSMITH, cashier of the First National Bank at Wrightsville, is one of the self-made men of York county, having attained high position and honorable reputation through honest effort and intrinsic worth. He is a son of Henry C. and Anna M. (Burg) Fon Dersmith.

Henry C. Fon Dersmith was a merchant in Lancaster for many years and was counted one of Lancaster county's influential business men. He afterward settled in Columbia, that county.

The public schools afforded our subject his only literary advantages. He was but fifteen when his father died, and he was then obliged to look after his own livelihood. He entered the Farmers' National Bank at Lancaster as a messenger, and by careful attention to his duties, won recognition from the bank officials, and was gradually promoted through various departments. Feeling that he might gain greater financial returns in other lines, Mr. Fon Dersmith quit banking, and entered the grocery store of John F. Stauffer, at Lancaster, but the attractions of the banking business proved too strong, and he again entered that line, working for several years in a bank at Columbia. In 1891 he came to Wrightsville, accepting the cashiership of the First National Bank, the position he is today so ably filling.

In Columbia, in 1892, Mr. Fon Dersmith was married to Miss Catherine Gossler, of that city, daughter of Philip and Emily Gossler. One child, Philip Gossler, has blessed this union. Both Mr. and Mrs. Fon Dersmith are members of the Presbyterian Church, the former being an official therein. In politics he is a stanch Republican. His fraternal connections are with the Masons, his membership being in Riverside Lodge, No. 503, F. & A. M. He is very popular among his many friends, who have learned to trust him and to honor him, as a man among men, a friend among friends.

REV. THOMAS THOMPSON EVERETT, D. D., of York, clergyman of the Lutheran Church, was born Feb. 26, 1840, at Peckskill, Westchester Co., N. Y., son of Richard John Everett, LL. D., lawyer, and Elizabeth (Reynolds) Everett. He comes of old Dutchess county (N. Y.) stock, his great-great-great-grandfather having been the principal founder of Poughkeepsie, that county. Dr. Everett removed to New York City, where he resided until after he attained his majority. He attended the Mohawk Valley (New York) Seminary, and was originally educated for journalism, before he became of age entering the office of the old New York Morning and Evening Express, under J. & E. Brookes. The paper was then printed at the corner of Wall and Nassau streets. He was trained from proof-reader to editorial writer, and followed the profession successfully in New York and Pittsburg. For several years he was special correspondent at the Legislature, at Albany, N. Y., for the New York Sun, New York News, New York Journal of Commerce and New York Express, and in 1865 became city editor of the Pittsburg Dispatch. Subsequently he joined the editorial force of the Pittsburg Commercial.

In 1868 Dr. Everett retired from newspaper life. Turning his attention to theology, he took a course at the Theological Seminary at Gettysburg, Pa., and then became pastor of Lutheran churches at Greencastle, Pa., Dayton, Ohio, Harrisburg, Pa., Brooklyn, N. Y., Cobleskill, N. Y., and York, Pa., where he has been located since Jan. 1, 1898.

Dr. Everett has not confined his labors to the ordinary routine of a pastor's work. While in Dayton, Ohio, he was a member of the board of directors of Wittenberg College; served as president of the Miami Synod; and is now president of the West Pennsylvania Synod. He has been four times elected a delegate to the General Synod of his church, and three times as an alternate delegate. He has visited Europe twice and has preached in London, Paris, Geneva, Liverpool, Dublin and other places. He has delivered many baccalaureate sermons and commencement addresses, and has delivered special addresses on numerous public occasions and many lectures. "As a preacher he reveals culture, earnest thought, genuine humanity and a deep love of the truth. On the lecture platform he is a lecturer, not a preacher. He displays his resources to advantage; is magnetic, humorous, eloquent and popular. He understands the art of putting an audience en rapport with himself. Everybody who has heard him speaks in his praise." He has written numerous articles for the religious and secular press.

In 1883 Dr. Everett was offered the position of private secretary by Gov. Robert Emory Pattison, and he discharged the duties of that responsible incumbency from that year until 1887, giving the utmost satisfaction. Throughout that period he also served as recorder of the State Board of Pardons of Pennsylvania. He had previously served in public office in New York City, where he was trustee of the common schools in the Eighth ward in 1864-68. He is a Republican in political sentiment.

As may be judged by the variety of interests to which he has given his support, Dr. Everett is a man of the broadest humanity and of wide sympathies. He is straightforward, unassuming and possessed of unassailable integrity, and his practical methods have enabled him to do effective work in many cherished projects for the betterment of mankind. His pleasant social qualities have won the good will and friendship of those with whom he has been associated in any relation of life. In 1881 he received the degree of Doctor of Divinity, causa honoris, from Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va. He is a past noble grand of Christian Lodge, I. O. O. F., New York.

Dr. Everett married Emma Collingwood, of Pittsburg, Pa. They have no children.

ALTTLAND. The Altland family were among the earliest settlers in York county, Pa., and the old homestead has been the property of succeeding generations for over 170 years. It lies about a mile from Big Mount, and there the great-grandfather of the present generation, by name Jacob Altland, was born. His wife was a Miss Trimmer.

Daniel Altland, son of Jacob, while living on a farm also, was employed at cabinetmaking and in the undertaking business. He was also a preacher in the German Lutheran Church. His death occurred in 1894, when he was aged eighty-six years.

Daniel Altland, son of Daniel, was born two and a half miles from Big Mount, and was sent for his early education to the schools of York county. Later he attended the York County Academy, and after completing his literary training, entered the profession of teaching, also learning the trade of a carpenter and cabinetmaker. In time he gave up teaching, and for many years was engaged in a general mercantile business in Mechanicsburg. He retired from this in 1890, and moved to York, Pa., where he lived retired until the death of his wife, when, in 1903, he removed to Dillsburg. In 1856 he was married to Elizabeth, daughter of David S. Sheaffer, who resided near Gettysburg. Two sons and a daughter were born to this union, Alfred D., Frank M. and Mary J.

ALFRED D. ALTLAND was born near Gettysburg, Oct. 16, 1857. While he was still a child his father located in Mechanicsburg, and there the boy was educated, and later began his business career. He was fourteen when he began clerking for J. A. Kauffman, of that city, and after three years experience in that position he went into business with his father under the firm name of D. A. Altland & Co. In 1880 he engaged in business for himself in Lisbon, Cumberland county, but after two years removed to Dillsburg and opened a general mercantile establishment. Ten years later he started the manufacture of horse fly nets, collars and harness, and was so successful that in 1897 he sold his former business to his brother Frank M., and gave his entire attention to his manufacturing industry. The products of his factory go to all parts of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Maryland, and his plant is the largest in Dillsburg, employing at times as many as fifty hands. In connection with his regular business Mr. Altland handles a full line of harness, saddlery, horse clothing and leather; he is also the owner of the Dillsburg Harness Company.

In 1879 occurred Mr. Altland's marriage with Miss Mary E. Wilson, daughter of George W. Wilson, of Cumberland county. They have one daughter, Lettie, who attended the public schools of Dillsburg, graduated from Harrisburg Business College, and for several years filled the position of bookkeeper in her father's office; in 1904 she married J. Victor Jones, of York, where they reside. Mr. Altland is a Republican in his views, and has been somewhat actively engaged in local politics, holding various offices at different times; he served as councilman for several terms; was president of the board of health for some years; and also held the office of borough treasurer. In religion he is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Frank M. Altland married Miss Alice Brunhouse, daughter of Frederick Brunhouse, of York. They have two children: Daniel and Katherine.

Mary J. Altland is the wife of M. H. Stine, D. D., pastor of the Lutheran Church at Altoona, Pa. They have two children, namely: Charles, a professor in a Ladies' Seminary at Luthersville, Md.; and Walter, who is still at school.

The members of this family are all good citizens, public-spirited, and interested in municipal affairs. They have been eminently successful along business lines, are of sterling integrity and command the esteem and confidence of all who know them.

Archibald Hyson is now making his home on his farm in East Hopewell township, in the house in which he was born, Feb. 10, 1824, which house was built by his maternal grandfather in 1803.

Archibald Hyson, grandfather of our subject, was born in the North of Ireland, and came to America prior to 1776. He settled in Hopewell township close to what is now Fenmore Station, where he entered a large tract of land, which has since been divided into many farms. He served in the Revolutionary war, and fought at the battle of Brandywine, hearing General Washington make a speech to his men on the banks of that river, in which speech he said in part: "Be true to your God, your country and your home." Archibald Hyson married Catherine Ramsey, of Ireland, and after the war settled down to farming near Fenmore. He removed from this farm about the year 1810, selling out to one Peter Saylor, and purchased a tract of 200 acres, two miles south of Cross Roads, on a branch of Muddy Creek. He remained there but six years, when he died. He was one of the founders of the Associate Reformed Church, and was a leading spirit in that Church. He was a great reader, and all his spare time was spent in this manner. Dr. Hugh McDonald at that time had his office in the room which our subject now uses for a reading room, and grandfather Hyson, on coming across a Latin or Greek word which he could not translate, would walk to the Doctor's house, a distance of about a mile, and the learned Doctor would put it straight for him. Archibald Hyson and his wife had these children: Margaret, who married (first) John Brown, and (second) William McWherter, removed to Washington Co., Pa., and there died; Mary, who married John Herr, died on what is now the Eckert place, in East Hopewell township; John, who was a farmer in East Hopewell township, married Catherine Proudfoot, and died near Cross Roads; Catherine and Martha died single; and Robert.

Robert Hyson was born on the farm near Fenmore, in 1774. He grew to manhood on his father's second farm, received a good education for that day, and was a skilled penman. He grew up a farmer boy, and followed farming all of his life, acquiring a part of his father's farm on the latter's death, and there he continued to reside, engaged in agricultural pursuits, until his death, in 1854. He was very highly esteemed in the community for his many sterling traits of character, and had hosts of friends. He was a very religious man, and a member of the Hopewell Associate Reformed Church, which he attended regularly all his life. Robert Hyson married, in 1819, Miss Jane Bortner, born in Hopewell township in 1791, daughter of John and Jane (Gantz) Bortner, of Holland and German blood. Mrs. Hyson died in 1882, and was buried, with her husband, in the U. P. Church at York. These children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hyson: John, who died in 1892, in East Hopewell township, married Margaret Miller; Archibald; and Robert R., who died in March, 1903, in East Hopewell township, married Elizabeth M. Grove, who still survives.

Archibald Hyson received his education at Cross Roads and the Fulton school. From boyhood he showed an inclination for construction, and, after school hours, was often found with hammer and nails; consequently, when at the age of eighteen years he engaged in carpentering, it was no surprise. He associated with Christian Leib, as apprentice, and continued with him for some time, and then went to Baltimore, where he finished his trade in two years, part of which time he worked for George W. Arnold, father of Samuel Arnold, one of President Lincoln's assassins. Mr. Hyson knew Samuel Arnold as a self-willed boy.

Mr. Hyson returned to his native place from Baltimore, and here he has since engaged in carpentering, and, although eighty-two years old, is still engaged in his work. In his time he has erected and repaired nineteen churches, scattered all over Harford and Baltimore counties, Md., and York and Juniata counties, Pa., and he has also erected many school houses, to say nothing of many residences and barns, some of them being the finest in the section.

Mr. Hyson was married Feb. 21, 1856, to Miss Martha J. Gemmell, born in Hopewell township, in 1831, who died in 1874. Her father was Robert Gemmell, at one time commissioner of York county, and her mother Elizabeth Dorris, of Fawn township. In 1857 Mr. Hyson located on the home farm, and there he has since resided. He built a mill on the farm in 1854, and this and his farm are operated by assistants. The farm consists of 100 acres of as fine land as is to be found in the county, and the tract, under Mr. Hyson's management, is a model for order and state of cultivation. Mr. Hyson's second marriage occurred Dec. 21, 1877, to Ellen W. Collins, daughter of John and Margarte I. (Wilson) Collins.

Archibald Hyson has been a director of the Shrewsbury National Bank, and has other business interests. He united with the Hopewell U. P. Church in 1843, and has continued a member thereof ever since, having been a trustee for twenty years, and elder since 1863. He has also, for years, been actively interested in the work of the Sabbath-school. In 1848 Mr. Hyson cast his first vote for Zachary Taylor, and has missed but one presidential election since, that being at the time of Lincoln's first election, when Mr. Hyson was serving on a jury and could not attend the polls. He has been connected with the schools of Hopewell and East Hopewell townships for eighteen years as director and treasurer, and during all of this period has missed but one board meeting, and has been late to but one. He has always taken an active interest in local history, and has written numerous interesting articles on the early history of his church and township. These articles have appeared, from time to time, in the Christian Instructor, printed in Philadelphia. In 1866, Mr. Hyson built the Hopewell U. P. Church.

To Mr. Hyson and his first wife these children were born: Robert Gemmell, died at the age of two years; Ella E. I. married John F. Maughlin, and lives in East Hopewell; John Beniah, who was a farmer in East Hopewell township, and who died aged thirty-three years, in 1894, married Maggie E. Neil, by whom he had three children: Archie C., Robert J. and Nellie Belle. There have been no children born to Mr. Hyson and his second wife, Archibald Hyson is a temperate, domestic, kind and gentle Christian gentleman, and as such is loved and respected by all who know him. He is truly one of York county's representative men.

E. W. LOUCKS, director of the First National Bank of York, is a son of Zachariah K. Loucks, one of the organizers of that institution, in which he was a director from 1864 to 1875.

The annals of the Loucks family are very interesting, historically. John George Loucks came from Germany some time previous to 1780, and settled in the beautiful region of Berks county, known as Tulpehocken, where he purchased a large tract of land. About the year 1780, hearing of the fertile lands west of the Susquehanna, he removed to York county to continue his chosen occupation of farming, and purchased land southwest of York. On May 13, 1805, he purchased the mill and farm, where Z. K. Loucks afterward lived.

George Loucks, son of John George Loucks, and grandfather of E. W. Loucks, was born Aug. 18, 1787, and died Oct. 29, 1849. He followed the occupation of miller and farmer at the Loucks homestead and purchased a great deal of real estate, at his death owning the mill property. He was married to Susanna Welzhofer, of Hellam township, and had three sons and three daughters.

Zachariah K. Loucks, E. W. Loucks's father, was born March 14, 1822, on the place where he lived throughout his life. He received his education in the York county Academy, under Rev. Stephen Boyer. For a number of years he was a classmate of Prof. Kirkwood, who afterward became the famous astronomer and mathematician. He commenced business in York first as a clerk, with the firm of Schriver & Loucks, and afterward was a clerk for Loucks & Becker, at the old Manor Furnace in Chanceford township, where he remained one year. He then entered the store of Henry Becker in York, where he remained until 1839, when he returned to his home in Spring Garden township, and attended to the duties of the grist mill and farm until his father's death. After this event he and his brother, Henry J., succeeded their father in business at the old homestead, where Zachariah continued to reside, about one mile north of York, along the Northern Central railroad. Zachariah K. Loucks built a new and splendid mansion on this site, and carried on his father's milling and farming business with great success. Here was erected one of the first grist-mills west of the Susquehanna. The old two-story mill, distillery and sawmill was destroyed by fire, April 29, 1864, and the present commodious, five-story brick mill was built in the fall of the same year, at a cost of $30,000. It contains the latest improvements of milling machinery and has a capacity of 150 barrels of flour in twenty-four hours. For many years it was leased by P. A. & S. Small of York.

In connection with milling and farming Zachariah K. Loucks engaged in other business pursuits. At the time of the organization of the First National Bank in York, in 1863, he became a director. He was afterward elected a vice-president, and in 1877 was chosen president of that institution, which position he filled until his death, April 25, 1895. He was a director and general financier of the York and Peach Bottom railroad when it was built; for many years he was a member of the board of directors of the York County Agricultural Society, and a life member of same; was president and one of the projectors of the York and Chanceford Turnpike Company; was a director of the York City Market until its completion, when he resigned; was vice-president of the Pennsylvania Mutual Horse Insurance Company, of York; and was largely engaged in the real estate business.

Zachariah K. Loucks was married Jan. 5, 1843, to Sarah Ann Ebert, daughter of Col. Michael Ebert of Spring Garden. She was born March 18, 1822, and the children born to this union were: Alexander, who married Catherine Wambaugh, lives in Manchester township; George E. married Susan Jane Myers, and resides at Hellam Station; Edward W. is unmarried, lives at home and manages the estate; Z. K., the well known lawyer, graduated with honors from Princeton; Isabella, the only daughter, who married John W. Koller, died at the age of twenty-seven years, leaving two children; William; and E. L.

Mr. Loucks, as a business man, had an active and prosperous career, and having good judgment, keen discrimination and excellent financial and executive ability, was eminently fitted for the successful prosecution of the real estate business. Originally a Whig, he afterward became an ardent Republican.

E. W. Loucks was made a director of the First National Bank of York in 1895, and in addition to this responsibility is a director of the Spring Garden Building & Loan Association and Spring Garden Fire Insurance Company, a director of the Rockdale Powder Company, and Rockdale Railroad Co., and has large landed interests at Loucks's Mill, the family seat where he makes his home, as has the Loucks family since 1805. Mr. Loucks conducts a real estate business in York, where he has an office. He is superintending his father's estate which has not as yet been divided. For fifteen years he has been a deacon in Zion's Lutheran Church. Mr. Loucks is justly rated as one of the most active, intelligent and enterprising business men of York, and the mantle of his father could not have fallen upon more worthy shoulders.

EMILE BOILEAU. The honorable distinction of having woven the first yard of broad silk ever made in York county, and of starting the first silk loom in York city, in December, 1878, belongs to an adopted citizen of our country, Emile Boileau, who was born and reared in France.

Nicholas Boileau, father of Emile, married Amelia Febvay, and the first period of their married life was passed in their native France. They had eight children, namely: Emile; Charles, engaged in trucking in Pike county, Pa.; Jules, a mail carrier there; Camille, an electrician in New York; Leon, a trucker in Pike county; Joseph, a hotel steward in New York; Marie, the widow of Joseph Craig; and Justine, who married the late Capt. Joseph Valentine. In 1877 Nicholas Boileau and his family emigrated to America, and, settling in Pike county, Pa., engaged there in trucking.

Emile Boileau was born in the Commune of Fresse, France, May 6, 1860, and was seventeen years old when he accompanied his parents to this country. He had attended school in France and continued his studies in Pike county. On completing his education he entered the employ of Luchneyer & Schaffer, silk manufacturers at Union Hill, N. J., with whom he remained nine years, first as a weaver and for the last three years as a loom fixer. When he left that firm, Mr. Boileau went to Paterson, N. J., as a loom fixer, and after four years there was employed in the same capacity by the Paragon Silk Company and Grimshaw Brothers. In 1896 he became foreman of the Fleetwood mills and two years later took a similar position with the York Silk Manufacturing Company, where he is still engaged. He is foreman of a weaving department, and has over 200 employees under him. He is exceedingly competent, and his employers have the utmost reliance upon his ability and judgment.

In 1883 Mr. Boileau was united to Marie, daughter of Nicholas and Magdalen (Jarillet) Mallet, of Lyons, France. Another daughter, Janne, is the wife of John Anbonnet of that same city. Mr. and Mrs. Boileau are the parents of two children, Paul and Amelia.

Since becoming a citizen of the United States, Mr. Boileau has been identified with the Democratic party, and has been much interested in political issues. In May, 1902, he was elected justice of the peace for Spring Garden township for a term of five years, and is filling the position with great credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. In fraternal circles he is prominent, and is connected with a number of orders. He is P. N. G. of Jackson Lodge, No. 150, I. O. O. F., in Union Hill, N. J.; a member of Unamis Tribe, No. 330, I. O. R. M., of Reading; of Chandler Lodge, No. 227, F. & A. M., of Reading; and of Codorus Council, D. of P., in York. Since residing in York, Mr. Boileau has taken an active interest in the work of the Emanuel Evangelical Church, and as elder and assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school has done much to build up the organization.

SANFORD BRAINERD GLEASON, late of York, was a native of New England, born July 29, 1833, in North Adams, Mass., and he served as lieutenant with the 49th Massachusetts Volunteers, Col. Bartlett commanding, in the Civil war. He was wounded at Baton Rouge, La., and was carried from the field by his captain (later colonel) Byron West- on, of Boston, now of Dalton, Mass. He was honorably discharged May 9, 1863.

Mr. Gleason made York his home for a number of years prior to his decease, coming hither March 9, 1879, and in company with A. B. Farquhar purchasing the lands of Michael Smyser, then farming property. Here Mr. Gleason designed and laid out what is now known as Farquhar Park, naming it after his partner. They carried on an extensive real-estate business in York, and were very prominently identified with that line. Farquhar Park is one of the pleasantest places in York county. Mr. Gleason was also connected here with the Corliss Safe Manufacturing Company, of Providence, R. I., from the time of its organization. His death occurred June 9, 1890, and he was buried in Prospect Hill cemetery, the funeral services being conducted by Rev. J. O. Miller, of Trinity Reformed Church.

It will be noticed that the number "9" played a peculiarly important part in Mr. Gleason's life—born on the 29th day of the month, enlisted in the 49th regiment, on the 29th of October, discharged on the 9th day of May, located in York March 9, 1879, and died June 9, 1890.

Mr. Gleason was married to Mrs. Matilda (Myers) Spangler, widow of Michael Spangler, and daughter of John and Eleanor (Hummer) Myers, a complete history of which family will be found elsewhere. Mrs. Gleason survives her husband and resides in the Express building, on Beaver street, York city.

Leo Myers, brother of Mrs. Gleason, was born in York in 1840 and received his education there, developing unusual ability. He read law with Mr. Cochran, was admitted to the York County Bar, and for many years engaged in successful practice in York, first in company with Lawyer Mayer, and later as a member of the firm of Ziegler & Myers. He died in 1884, after a brilliant career, and is buried near Pittsburg.

THE WEISER FAMILY. On a proclamation of Queen Anne, of England, in 1708, owing to internal dissensions in Germany, about four thousand Germans were transported to Holland in 1709, and thence to England. They encamped near London, when, in the following year, Gov. Robert Hunter, of New York, who was then in England and about to sail for his own country, invited him with about three thousand of these Germans or Palatines to what is now the State of New York, and they were soon afterward located on what was called the Livingston manor, and turned their attention to agriculture. A chief of the Mohawk Indians, who had about this time visited England, presented Queen Anne a tract of his land in Schoharie, N. Y., and in 1713 about one hundred and fifty families were transferred through the wilderness to that place. Among these emigrants was the father of Conrad Weiser, with his wife and seven sons and daughters. He is the great ancestor of the Weiser family in this country. His Christian name is not for a certainty known. From one of his sons the Weisers of York are descended. The colony at Schoharie did not prosper. They commenced building houses and improving lands, and labored until 1723, when they were partly dispersed, owing to defects in their titles to lands. They then began to search for new homes, and began wending their course in a south-easterly direction, until they struck the Susquehanna. Here they made canoes, in which they floated down the river to the mouth of the Swatara, and thence to the fertile spot in Berks county, along the Tulpehocken creek, where they settled among the Indians. The father of Conrad Weiser remained at Schoharie until 1729, when, with his wife and four children, all that were then living, he also came to the Tulpehocken. It was his design to devote all his attention to farming. But on many noted occasions his "services as an interpreter were demanded by the authorities of Pennsylvania. He was a man of great benevolence. It was through him the Moravian people were made so attentive to Indian natives. He died and was buried in Berks county.

Conrad Weiser, his eldest son, was a justice under the King, and the celebrated Indian interpreter and head of the Indian Bureau of Pennsylvania. As a boy he had been sent to live with the Indians, and with them learned their language, thus laying the foundation for his future usefulness. In 1736 he was sent to treat with the Six Nations in New York, concerning a war that was to break out between them and the Indians of Virginia, and his policy accomplished much in averting the threatened rupture. He was visited, Aug. 14, 1752, by Count Zingendorff, at Tulpehocken, who here met a numerous embassy of sachems of the Six Nations. The Count preached the Gospel to the Indians. At the conclusion of his remarks to them he said of Weiser: "This is a man whom God has sent both to the Indians and to the white people, to make known His will unto them." For a quarter of a century he attended all the important treaties. In connection with the governor of Pennsylvania, Benjamin Franklin and several other persons, in 1752, he was appointed one of the trustees of the public schools, which were established through the efforts of Rev. Michael Schlatter; one of these schools was, about this year, started in York. During the French and Indian war he was lieutenant-colonel of a battalion of Pennsylvania soldiers. After an eventful and very useful life he died among his friends at Womelsdorf, Berks county, July 13, 1760, at the age of sixty-four. His remains were interred and still rest in the old graveyard near the house, which is still standing. He left seven children, to whom, by marriage, the Muhlenbergs are related.

Samuel Weiser, a descendant of the Tulpehocken settlement, came to York in 1780, and immediately commenced the business of a hatmaker in a building on the present site of Jacob Wilt's jewelry store, on East Market street. He continued this business until 1822, but opened a dry goods store in 1808, on the corner still occupied by his descendants. During the war of 1812 he employed about fifty workmen making hats, and sent wagonloads of them every Monday morning to Baltimore. He died in 1834, aged seventy-four years, and his remains were interred in the graveyard adjoining Christ's Lutheran Church. They have since been removed to Prospect Hill cemetery. He was married to Eve Phleager, and they had eight children: Samuel, Jacob, Charles, Daniel, Catherine, Eliza, Margaret and Casandra.

Samuel Weiser, the eldest son, succeeded his father in the manufacturing of hats until 1840, when he bought a farm one-half mile south of York, and died there in 1856. Augustus, his eldest son, died on the farm; Albert is living in Preston, Minn., engaged in the jewelry and drug business; Aemilius is located in Decorah, Iowa, in the drug business; Louisa married John Ensminger, and is now deceased; Alexander died unmarried; Catherine married John C. Rupert; Margaret married Josiah Poorbaugh, of Berlin, Somerset Co., Pa.; Annie married David Ziegler, of York; Florence, deceased, was married to Martin Bender, of York; Miss Helen is living in York.

Jacob Weiser, second son of Samuel Weiser, Sr., went into the dry goods business in 1818, with his brother Charles, continuing same until 1836, when he engaged in the lumber trade with his brother Daniel P. Weiser. He was director in the York County Bank, York Water Company, and York & Susquehanna Turnpike Company, each for many years. He died in 1874, at the advanced age of about eighty-three years. He left two children: Franklin S., who succeeded him in the lumber business, and Jane, married first to Jacob Smyser (deceased) and now to Nathaniel Weigle.

Daniel Weiser, fourth son of Samuel Weiser, Sr., was a tanner and currier for many years, and afterward formed a partnership with his brother Jacob in the lumber business. He died about 1855, leaving three sons: Gates J. Weiser (lately deceased), David Weiser and Oliver P. Weiser.

Charles Weiser, son of Samuel, Sr., and father of John A. and Charles S. Weiser, who are prominently identified with the business interests of York, was born in 1796, and was the junior member of the dry goods firm of J. & C. Weiser, commencing business in 1818, and continuing until 1846. In 1850 he founded the banking house in his own name. In January, 1860, his son, Charles S. Weiser, became a member of the firm. In January, 1867, was formed the firm of Weiser, Son & Carl, which has since merged into the York County National Bank. For a number of years Charles Weiser was a director in the York Bank, and president of the York & Gettysburg and York & Susquehanna Turnpike Companies. He was a member of Christ's Lutheran Church under Dr. Schmucker, and one of the founders of St. Paul's Lutheran Church. He died in 1867, aged seventy-one years. He lived for twenty-five years on the property now owned by Jere Carl, Esq. He was married to Anna A., daughter of Gen. Jacob Spangler, and left nine children out of the family of ten born to them: John A., Erastus H., Horace S., Charles S., George (who died in infancy), Josephine (married to Dr. Pentz), Theodosia E. (unmarried), Arabella (now deceased), Amelia (married to M. S. Green), Adaline (married to Jere Carl).

John A. Weiser, eldest son of Charles Weiser, was born July 31, 1824. He received his education in York County Academy. He began his mercantile career in 1838 as a clerk in his father's store, and remained in the same position until 1846, when he succeeded his father in the business. This he continued until 1883, when his two eldest sons succeeded him. This store, in the same location, was continued in the Weiser name from its organization in 1808 until H. P. Weiser & Bro. discontinued the dry goods business. Mr. Weiser had been exceptionally prosperous as a merchant, and his name was familiarly known in York county. Possessing rare business qualifications, John A. Weiser was prominently connected with other interests in the town and county, being one of the founders and directors of the Farmers National Bank, and for many years a director of the York County Bank. He was president of the York & Gettysburg Turnpike Company from 1881; treasurer of the York Gas Company from 1830; manager and treasurer of the York & Susquehanna Turnpike Company from 1867. He was married (first) to Miss Georgiana Eichelberger (now deceased) in 1851, and of this marriage there was one son, Harry P., born in 1852, formerly senior member of the mercantile firm of H. P. Weiser & Bro. In 1859 he was married (second) to Miss Mary Jane Upp, and the children by this marriage are: Bertha, born in 1860; George U., in 1861; Sterrett P., in 1864; Louisa, in 1865; and Annie S., in 1867. Mr. Weiser resided in his delightfully situated home at No. 218 East Market street, surrounded by all the comforts and conveniences of life.

Erastus H. Weiser, second son of Charles Weiser, was born in 1826. He received his preparatory education at York County Acad-
BARNHART, Frank A. gelded and Pennsylvania College, at Gettysburg. He afterward entered Yale College, and graduated in the class of 1849; read law with John G. Campbell, Esq., and had a lucrative practice in this profession before the York Courts until the time of his death, in 1872. He was married in 1852 to Miss Annie Franklin, daughter of Walter Franklin, Esq., of York, who is now also dead. They had two sons, William F. and Charles, the latter a graduate of Yale Law School, class of 1893, and now an attorney in New York City. Mr. Weiser was an earnest and devoted Christian, an elder in the Presbyterian Church at York, and a teacher in the Sunday-school.

Horace S. Weiser, son of Charles, was educated at Yale, and read law with Judge Fisher. He practiced at the York Bar for a few years, then removed to Decorah, Iowa, and founded the Winneshiek County Bank in 1854, conducting the same successfully until the time of his death, in 1875. He married Miss Louisa Amy, of Ohio, and their children were: Charles J., now a prosperous banker of Decorah, Iowa; Amy, who married Edward Carlisle, of Chicago, Ill.; and Anna, Mrs. Jones, of Fargo, North Dakota.

Charles S. Weiser, son of Charles, was born in 1838, and educated in the schools of York and in York County Academy. He began the banking business as a partner with his father in 1860, and continued the senior member of the firm of Weiser, Son & Carl until the banking house was discontinued. For several years he was a member of the firm of Weiser & Bender, engaged in the lumber business in Center county, Pa. The following positions of trust and honor held by him give conclusive evidence of his business capacity and integrity: Treasurer of the York Water Company, of the York County Academy, of the York Hospital and Dispensary, of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, of the York County Mutual Fire Insurance Company, of the Board of Home Missions of the General Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in the United States, of the Theological Seminary at Gettysburg, of the Charles A. Morris fund of $7,000 for St. Paul's Lutheran Church, and vice-president of the Orphan's Home and director in the York & Susquehanna Turnpike Company. Mr. Weiser was married, in 1866, to Miss Isadora Brown, daughter of the late William Brown, Esq., of York, and they had one child, Charles, who died in infancy. Fraternally Mr. Weiser is a Mason. He and his wife are members of the St. Paul's Lutheran Church, and they reside in a comfortable and convenient home at No. 257 East Market street, York.

William F. Weiser, at the time of his death a retired business man of York, and who was for a number of years prominently identified with the banking interests of that city, was a native of York county, a son of Erastus H. Weiser. He attended the graded schools of York and Harford, and entered the bank of Weiser, Son & Carl, in 1872. There he remained until 1889, when he left active business life, thereafter living retired. In politics Mr. Weiser was neutral, having never taken an active interest in such matters, and casting his vote rather for the man than for the party. He made his home at No. 136 East Market street, York, where he died suddenly in the evening of April 1, 1906, in his fifty-third year. His illness was of only a few minutes' duration, heart disease being the cause.

Mr. Weiser was well versed in the history of York county and the State of Pennsylvania, was a member of the Pennsylvania German Society, the Lafayette Club and the Country Club, and was prominently identified with the First Presbyterian Church and the York Young Men's Christian Association. He was a great traveler, having been to every section of the United States, toured Europe and visited Alaska. He was unmarried.

PHILIP J. BARNHART, one of the most prominent citizens of West Manheim township, and a man well-known throughout York county, died April 6, 1905, at his home near Heil's Mill, in West Manheim township. Mr. Barnhart was born in Heidelberg township, this county, June 8, 1846, son of Adam and Eliza Barnhart.

Philip J. Barnhart was reared on his father's farm, receiving his education in the public schools of his native township. He came to West Manheim township in 1864, settling near the place where he resided until his death, and there he became one of the foremost business men of the vicinity. In 1869 he engaged in a general merchandise business, continuing therein for eight years, at the end of which time he engaged in farming, and as a general collector and business agent. In politics he was a Democrat, and he served his party as committeeeman and delegate, the former through fifteen years, and the latter at thirteen conventions of the county, and several State conventions. In 1896 he was mentioned as a delegate to the National Convention, but declined in favor of his friend, H. N. Gitt, of this place. In 1868 he was elected township auditor, was appointed deputy collector of Internal Revenue in 1894, and in 1898 was nominated and elected to the office of register of deeds of York county. Mr. Barnhart was very prominently connected with the business interests of his township, was a director of the Hanover Milling & Manufacturing Co., and a director of the Hanover Foundry & Machine Co. He was, at the time of his death, the adjuster of the Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and was one of the stockholders, and vice president of the board of directors of the Hanover Printing Company. Mr. Barnhart was a self-made man, one of keen judgment, and of tireless energy. In his death York county has lost a public-spirited citizen, an enterprising and successful business man, and a true Christian gentleman.

Philip J. Barnhart was married in 1865 to Miss Barbara Kalebaugh, of West Manheim township, who survives him, as do his two sons and two daughters: Lyman A., a farmer in West Manheim township, who married Elma Meckley, of Blooming Grove, and has six children; Philip C., of West Manheim township; Mollie, who married John D. Dub, and has had three children, Osebar, John and Ella, the last named deceased; and Missouri, who married Henry W. Baumgardner, of West Manheim township, and has two children, Addie and Hattie. Mr. Barnhart was buried at St. Paul’s (Dubs) Church, the Rev. J. H. Hartman conducting the services.

Philip C. Barnhart was born Dec. 9, 1881, in West Manheim township, and there received his education in the public schools, assisting his father, during the summer months, at farming. He now resides with his mother at the old home in West Manheim township. He is single. Mr. Barnhart is a great lover of sports, and was one of the pitchers on the strong Hanover Base Ball Club for two years. He is an amateur photographer of some repute, and is a great hunter.

COOPER. (I) John Cooper, the progenitor of the Cooper family in York county, was born in Kendal, in the County of Westmoreland, England, in 1689. He was the son of a linen draper, and came to America in 1729, landing at New Castle, Del. He settled at Peach Bottom township on a tract of land called “Elisha’s Lot,” containing fifty acres, purchased of Elisha Perkins, who resided at what is now Lapidum, Harford Co., Md. It was granted by patent from Lord Baltimore to Mr. Perkins Dec. 19, 1719, and is described as being in Baltimore county, Maryland. Much of the land in this vicinity, although now in Pennsylvania, was held under Maryland title, being in the territory which occasioned the dispute between Penn and Lord Baltimore. The deed from Perkins to Cooper is dated Jan. 29, 1721. They were both of Baltimore county. The consideration named is eighteen pounds of silver money and a gun; the occupation of John Cooper is given as that of a “weaver.” On May 20, 1724, he obtained a patent from Lord Baltimore for a tract of land lying contiguous to the above called “Deserts of Arabia.” Another tract of 250 acres was laid off for him Sept. 7, 1724, called “Cooper’s Addition,” and later he acquired “Cullins Park,” and also held land under Pennsylvania title. Much of this land is still in the possession of his descendants. At that early date Mr. Cooper was in the midst of the primeval forest, and his stock roamed at will, making it necessary to mark and brand same. He recorded under date of July 30, 1730, his two ear marks and brand as follows: “John Cooper his mark for cattle and hogs, vgt.: a poplar leaf and a slitt in the left ear and swallow forke in the right;” “Jno. Cooper, his mark, for cattle and hogs, vgt.: a crop and an under keal in each ear;” “John Cooper, his brand, vgt.: two round O’s; and a flower dulse.” In order to aid in clearing the land Mr. Cooper leased, in December, 1729, for twenty years, fifty acres to Godfrey Hatfield and fifty acres to Abrahm Ech, on condition that they “shall plant and set out 100 apple trees on the place and to clear the land good. The first year the making a pair of horse traces, and the 2d the making of a plow, and then a barrel of Indian corn for each year.”

John Cooper was married Oct. 23, 1722, to Alice Gill, who was, no doubt, the daughter of Stephen and Elizabeth Gill, who resided at or near where Baltimore city now stands. Tradition states that John Cooper, their son, was the first male white child born in York county. John Cooper died in 1759. His will is dated Oct. 1, 1759, and probated in Baltimore county, Nov. 18, 1759. It is witnessed by John Forwood, Thomas Hambleton and James Brice. The following were the children of John and Alice Cooper: Priscilla, born Oct. 7, 1724, died Dec. 29, 1724; Alice, born July 8, 1726, died young; John, born Nov. 29, 1728, married Hannah Wheeler; Thomas, born March 23, 1731, married Mary Abercrombie; Stephen, born May 13, 1733, married Susanna Morgan; Nicholas married Sarah Gill; Alexander married Mary Whiteford; Agnes, born in 1736, was the wife of John Boyd, son of Samuel Boyd, who settled in Lancaster, Pa.; Elizabeth married William Rowan, removed to Kentucky in 1783, and was the mother of John Rowan. John Rowan was born in Pennsylvania in 1773, and was admitted to the Bar in 1795. In 1799 he was a member of the State Constitutional Convention, and was Secretary of State in 1804; Member of Congress in 1807-09; member of the Legislature for several terms; Judge of the Court of Appeals; and United States Senator in 1825-31. A county in Kentucky and also one in North Carolina bears his name.

(II) Thomas Cooper, son of John and Alice, was born at the old homestead in Peach Bottom township, where he became a successful farmer, the home farm having descended to him by the will of his father. There in 1774 he built a large stone dwelling. He married Mary Abercrombie, daughter of James and Rebecca (Colgan) Abercrombie, who came from Scotland. Thomas Cooper died Sept. 18, 1798, leaving four children, two others having died in infancy. (1) Armfield, born in 1768, married Robert Morgan, the son of David and Lydia Morgan, and resided in Harford county, Maryland. (2) Alice, May 22, 1770, married John Grubb, son of Thomas Grubb, of Lancaster county, Pa. Mr. Grubb was commissioned captain of Lancaster county militia, Oct. 27, 1792; Sept. 11, 1794, as captain of 2d regular brigade; and major of the State Militia in December, 1798. In the fall of 1794 he was ordered to Presque Isle, Lake Erie; there he remained until the fall of 1798, when he returned to his old home and married Miss Cooper. In the spring of 1799, they returned to the land he had selected near the town of Erie, and made it their future home. He was a justice of the peace from 1797 to 1815, and Associate Judge from 1820 to 1841. (3) Duckett, born Aug. 15, 1775, married William Stump, son of Rachel and Henry (Perkins) Stump, of Harford county. They lived near Darlington. (4) Stephen is mentioned below.

(III) Stephen Thomas was born Aug. 29, 1777. His early education was supplemented with a course in Dickinson College at Carlisle. At the death of his father he became the proprietor of the old homestead and engaged in farming. In 1800 fire destroyed the mansion house which he restored, only to be again burned in 1900, when owned by his son, Levi. Stephen T. Cooper married in 1814, Kezia Beall, daughter of Zephaniah and Margaret (Crawford) Beall, of Washington county, Pa., and they were the parents of ten children: Zephaniah B. died in childhood; Levi died unmarried, Jan. 11, 1904, aged eighty-four years, nine months, sixteen days; Zephaniah B. (2) died unmarried, Dec. 20, 1854, aged thirty-one years, seven months, and twenty-seven days; Thomas J. married Sarah Bowne, and died Nov. 17, 1901, aged seventy-seven; Achsa B. died in infancy; Henry, married Martha Ayers, of Jarrettsville, Md.; Stephen Parker, died unmarried, Sept. 15, 1885; Margaret K. resides at the old homestead; Evan B. married Mary Jane Woodroe, now living at Mankato, Minn.; Mary E. lives with her sister at the homestead.

(IV) Thomas J. Cooper was born June 1, 1825, on the old homestead in Peach Bottom township. He completed a common school education at the age of twenty-one years, and then learned the carpenter's trade. He continued at that for about a year before going to New York to learn ship carpentry, but after about eight years at the latter occupation, he returned to York county, built a house a mile west of the old home, and settled down to farming for the rest of his life. At the age of thirty he was married in New York to Miss Sarah Bowne, daughter of William and Mary (Bowne) Bowne, of Monmouth county, N. J. Mr. Cooper returned to Pennsylvania immediately after his marriage. The children born to this union were as follows: W. Spencer, residing on the homestead; Ida, who died in infancy; Nelson B.; Mamie K., Mrs. William S. Dinsmore; Sidney; Emma, twin sister of Sidney, who died aged twenty; John E., of Parkersburg, W. Va.; Carrie, Mrs. William
(V) Nelson B. Cooper was born in the house built by his father on the old homestead, Sept. 17, 1858. Until he was seventeen he was sent to the Mt. Joy school house, and after completing his education learned the blacksmith's trade, which he has followed ever since. In December, 1876, he was married to Miss Deborah E. Stewart, daughter of John and Jane (Huff) Stewart, of Peach Bottom township, and they became the parents of three children: (1) Thorne F. is a blacksmith working with his father. (2) Scott R. married Miss Martha A. Craig, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Myers) Craig, and has two children, Alice G. and Ethel. He is engaged in farming in Peach Bottom township. (3) Walton R. is also a farmer. Nelson B. Cooper is a member of the I. O. O. F. Though a life long Republican, he has never been active in practical politics.

(V) Sidney Cooper was born on the old Cooper homestead March 29, 1862, and attended school until he was fifteen. The following three years he worked on his father's farm, and then spent two more traveling through the adjacent part of the country with no special occupation. Returning home he was employed by his uncle Levi on the farm until 1884, when he began farming for himself on his present homestead in Harford county, Md. He was married Jan. 18, 1884, to Miss Mary M. Stewart, a sister of Mrs. Nelson B. Cooper. To their union ten children have been born, namely: Emma, Ethel, Chester and Levi, all at home; John, who died in childhood; an infant who died unnamed; Mercy, who died in childhood; Vaughn; Stephen and Jason. Mr. Cooper takes no interest in politics, and is not actively allied with any party.

Margaret K. Cooper, with her sister, Miss Mary E. Cooper, lives on the old homestead, a place of 400 acres, situated on the Susquehanna river, and well-improved. On a part of this farm is the family cemetery in which John Cooper and his wife are buried, as well as their descendants. The grave of their daughter, Priscilla, is the oldest one, and the stone marking it bears the date, Dec. 29, 1724. The Misses Cooper are consistent members of the Slateville Presbyterian Church, and very well known and highly esteemed in the community.

EMANUEL J. WEISER, of York township, where he owns property and where he devotes his attention principally to market-gardening and fruit-growing; finding a ready demand for his excellent products in the city of York, from which his home is four miles distant, is a representative of the fourth generation of his family in York county, the original progenitor in the county, and in this country, having been his great-grandfather, who was of German extraction, but who had been a resident of Scotland up to the time of his emigration to the United States (in the latter part of the eighteenth century). He came to York county, Pa., and there took up about five hundred acres of wild land, in Spring Garden and York townships, passing the remainder of his life in this county.

John K. Weiser, grandfather of Emanuel J., was born and reared in Spring Garden township, this county, and in his youth learned the hatter's trade, which he followed for a number of years, while finally he purchased the farm now owned by our subject, continuing his residence here a few years and being incidentally engaged in the huckstering business. He then took up his residence in the city of York, where he established a notion store, and where he passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1873, while his remains rest in the beautiful Prospect Hill cemetery, at York, as do also those of both his first and second wives. The maiden name of his first wife was Elizabeth Crosby; she died in 1863, and was buried in Hindle's Union cemetery, North Codorus township. He married (second) Mrs. Joahanna Reiker, whose death occurred in 1875. His children were: Benjamin C., a carpenter by trade and vocation, died in Spring Garden township; John C.; Alexander is a resident and business man of York; Charles C., of North Codorus township, died Feb. 1, 1906, aged sixty-nine years, nine months and nine days, and was buried at New Salem; Emanuel C., enlisted in the army, took sick in New Mexico and died aged twenty-two years, and was buried by the Government; the next two children died in infancy; Granville, a baker by trade, is a resident of York; and Mary is the wife of Adam Sager, a resident of Brillhart's Station.

John C. Weiser, son of John K., died Dec. 11, 1901, at the age of seventy years, six months and fourteen days, while his devoted wife, Leah J., passed away Sept. 25, 1896, at the age of sixty-five years, three months and twelve days, both being interred in Prospect Hill cemetery. They were both members of Christ Church (Lutheran), in York.

Of the children of John C. and Leah J. Weiser William H., who married Miss Sarah Landis, is a resident of York township, where he is engaged in the trucking business; Charles F., who was a blacksmith by trade, married Miss Leah Levenight, died in York township and is buried in the cemetery of Green Hill church; Miss Emma C. E. resides with her brother Emanuel J., who was the next in order of birth; and Carrie E. first married Nelson Shepp, and after his death became the wife of William Smith, their home being in the city of York.

Emanuel J. Weiser was born at the family home, on Queen street, York, Jan. 17, 1861, and has passed his life thus far in his native county. He duly availed himself of the advantages of the public schools, continuing his studies at intervals until he had attained his legal majority, while in the meantime he assisted his father in his business affairs and labors, and also worked out by the day to a greater or less extent. Upon the death of his father he fell heir to the old home place, which comprises fifteen acres, and here he has since been actively engaged in the nursery and market-gardening business, raising the highest grade of products and having built up a most profitable enterprise, with York as his principal market. He has also given special attention to the growing of small fruits, and in the line of grape culture has gained a high reputation, having specially fine varieties and understanding so thoroughly the proper care of his vines that he secures large yields of most superior grapes, while he has gained on the same many premiums at the York county annual fairs.

Mr. Weiser is held in high regard in the community, and is known as a public-spirited citizen, while his political allegiance is given to the Republican party, in whose cause he takes a lively interest. He is a member of Christ Church (Lutheran), in the city of York, and his wife belonged to the First Reformed Church.

On Aug. 3, 1893, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Weiser to Miss Thirza M. King, who was born and reared in York county, daughter of Henry and Martha (Daw) King. She died in November, 1898, aged thirty years. They had three children, the eldest of whom, Martha, died in September, 1894, aged twenty-one days; the second died in infancy unnamed; John Henry died in August, 1898, aged ten months.

CHARLES FREDERIC LAFEAN, president of the Lafean Paper Company, and brother of Hon. D. F. Lafean, was born in York Dec. 12, 1862. He was educated in the public schools, and his first employment was in the coal yard of his father, Charles Frederick Læfean, which was located where the Læfean paper mill now stands. After leaving there Mr. Læfean spent one year in a grist mill, and then found employment with P. C. Wiest, the manufacturing confectioner, now retired, for whom he worked two and a half years. Mr. Læfean’s next venture was in Baltimore, where he engaged in the grocery and provision business, remaining eight months and then returning to York, again finding employment with P. C. Wiest in the confectionery business. Within a few days after obtaining employment for the second time with Mr. Wiest Mr. Læfean purchased the business from the latter, and associated with him his brother, G. Jacob Læfean, as partner. On the foot of his father’s coal yard property, to which other property had been added, Mr. Læfean established in 1889 a candy factory, but his brothers sold their interests to him, and in 1899 Charles F. established the Læfean Paper Company on the site of the old candy works. It was incorporated May 27, 1903, and was capitalized at $50,000. Of this Charles F. Læfean was made president; his brother, G. Jacob Læfean, secretary and treasurer; and another brother, John R. Læfean, a director. The annual output is 2,500 tons, and the product finds a market all over the United States, Canada and South America.

Mr. Læfean was married June 11, 1885, to Kate Allison, daughter of A. K. Allison, of York, and one child has been born to this union, Carl Luther, Oct. 7, 1890. Mr. Læfean belongs to Christ Lutheran Church, and in politics is an uncompromising Republican. He was born and reared in the Fourth ward of York, where he has always taken an active part in politics, having repeatedly been elected to county conventions, and received other marks of confidence from the Republicans of his district. Untiring in his industry, straightforward in all his dealings and possessed of intelligent judgment in all matters, Mr. Lafean may be said to be only at the beginning of a most successful career, for he is just in the prime of manhood.

HENRY GABLE, who is now living retired in the city of York, was for many years prior to his removal thither a prosperous farmer of Codorus township, this county, and he was held in such high esteem among his neighbors and fellow citizens there that the community regarded his change of residence as a distinct loss. He is a veteran of the Civil war, and his patriotism and public spirit have added to the respect which a life of integrity and right living has won for him wherever he is known.

Mr. Gable was born June 17, 1839, in North Codorus township, son of John Henry and Ann Gertrude (Jacobs) Gable, both of whom were natives of Germany. John Henry Gable was born June 16, 1795, and his wife was born Nov. 5, 1800. They were reared and married in their native land, where several of their children were born, and in 1835 came to the United States, landing at Baltimore. They did not remain there long, however, coming to York county, Pa., and settling in North Codorus township, where they passed the remainder of their lives. Mr. Gable was an industrious and upright man and was well respected by all as a good citizen—in fact he became quite prominent in his township. He assisted in making the tunnel on the Northern Central railroad in North Codorus township, and was employed by the same company for three years, assisting in building the road. A Mr. Feizer, living on the farm now owned by Mrs. John Sprenkel, near the tunnel, was the first man to pass through that tunnel. Mr. Gable bought the Emig farm of sixty acres in North Codorus, and there he engaged successfully in agricultural pursuits, making his home on that place until his death, which occurred in 1844. The place is now owned by George W. Heiges. Mrs. Gable died at the age of eighty years, two months, and both are buried at the well-known Ziegler Church, in North Codorus township. They were members of the Reformed Church, and always took an active interest in its work. Mr. and Mrs. Gable had ten children born to them. Five of this family remained in Germany, and three still survive, Mary Elizabeth, Henry and Daniel. Mary Elizabeth, born Oct. 11, 1839, is the widow of David Brenneman, and resides in Springfield township. Daniel married Caroline Landen, and they reside in Springfield township, York county.

Henry Gable received his first schooling in the old dwelling house on the Israel Fokkerm farm in North Codorus township, and last attended at Mummers meeting-house, in Adams county, remaining in school until his eighteenth year. In 1848 he saw the first telegraph poles thrown off the train that came from York. This was on a Sunday morning, and a pole was thrown off every 300 yards, and one wire was put on. This was a wonderful sight in that day, and a large crowd from the country round collected to view the train as it went speeding past Brillhart. The road was then the Baltimore & Susquehanna, but is now the Northern Central. That same year occurred a notable wreck. A freight train struck a heifer that belonged to James Robinson, a colored man, and was derailed, knocking off the northwest corner of the bridge at Brillhart Station, the engine and cars going into the creek. Five men were injured and taken to the home of John Brillhart, near the station. John Gable, a brother of Henry, was employed there at the time, and he went to the mill north of the station, now owned by the York Water Company, at one o'clock at night for rye flour for poultries for the injured men. By the following Sunday the wreck was all cleared away, except the cow-catcher, and that is still there.

On June 18, 1857, Henry Gable returned to York county from Adams county, and in North Codorus township, near York New Salem, engaged in farm work, to which he had been reared. In the fall of 1861 he came to York, continuing there until his enlistment, Feb. 23, 1864, in Company B, 187th P. V. I. He was wounded June 18, 1864, on the Petersburg & Norfolk railroad, in Virginia, a bullet passing through his left thigh, and leg; Samuel I. Adams, of York, was at his side at the time. He was taken to the Division Hospital June 18, 1864, received attention there on the 19th, the next day going to City Point (Va.) hospital. On June 30th he left City Point Hospital for Washington, where he was received at the Finley Hospital July 1st. His sister, Elizabeth, went to Washington, D. C., in September, 1864, to secure his transfer to York Hospital A, and he left Finley Hospital Oct. 4, 1864, making the trip on the well-known “Penn Park,” York, Pa., and arriving at his new quarters Oct. 5th. On July 25, 1865, he was again transferred, this time to the Citizens Hospital, Philadelphia, where he arrived the same day, the next day leaving for Chestnut Hill Hospital, near Germantown, where he remained from July 26th to Oct. 17th. That day he went to the Christian Street Hospital, Philadelphia, where a piece of bone was taken from his leg Jan. 10, 1866, a second piece coming out years afterward, Sept. 3, 1872, on his farm in Codorus township. Mr. Gable left Philadelphia Feb. 23, 1866, for Harrisburg, where he received his discharge the same day, also entering his application for a pension, at Washington, D. C. Returning to York county, Mr. Gable remained a short time near York New Salem, and thence removed to Seven Valley, where he was engaged at farm work.

On Oct. 29, 1866, Mr. Gable was united in marriage with Mrs. Elizabeth Henry, and they located on the farm in Codorus township, where Mrs. Gable passed the remainder of her active years. It was a fine tract of land, made more valuable by intelligent cultivation and constant improvement, and its owner justly ranked among the most successful farmers in his locality. Mrs. Gable passed away at that home Dec. 26, 1883, and Mr. Gable continued to reside there until Dec. 24, 1903, since when he has lived retired in York. Mr. and Mrs. Gable had no children. She was a member of St. Peter’s Reformed Church, and is buried at what is known as the White Church in Springfield township. Mr. Gable is a member of the Reformed Church in Springfield township. He is a Democrat in political faith. Few men are better known than he in the locality where he made his home for so many years, and none are held in more general esteem.

CALVIN T. KRAFT, for the past five years cashier of the City Bank of York, began his connection with the bank as a messenger boy, and received successive promotions to his present position.

The date when the original emigrant of the Kraft family landed in America has been lost, but it was certainly in Colonial times that the first members of the family came to York county, and founded the settlement afterward known as Jefferson. The later members seem to have followed a mercantile life, both Calvin T. Kraft’s grandfather, Frederick, and his father, Albert, having been merchants at that point. Late in life (1884) the father removed to York, where he was in business for some seven years longer, and then lived a retired life until 1898, which marked the date of his death, at the age of fifty-nine years. His wife was Elizabeth J. Ebaugh, daughter of David Ebaugh, who was for many years a farmer and teacher at Stewartstown, York county, passing his later years in the city of York. Calvin T. Kraft is one of a family of four children. A sister, Lilian, died in infancy; Fannie died in 1890, at the age of eighteen, and Albert L., is now a salesman in York.

The career of Calvin T. Kraft has not been an eventful one, but it has been exceedingly creditable from the point of industry and faithful and efficient service. Born March 30, 1867, he passed the period of youth in gaining an education at the place of his birth, the village of Jefferson, later spending a period in attendance at the York County Academy. He began his business career while yet in his teens as a clerk in his father’s store. After five years he was offered the position of messenger boy in the City Bank, a position which many young men would have scorned to accept, as beneath their dignity. But not so with Mr. Kraft; and having accepted it he attended to the duties involved with as much attention and care as if he were at the top of the ladder, instead of just stepping on the bottom round. Mr. Kraft passed from messenger boy to bookkeeper during the second year of his service, because, while faithfully attending to his work in the former position, he yet had time to acquaint himself with the work of the bookkeeper. Two years in this position, and he was found competent to handle the money of the bank, and as teller he passed a period of eleven years. The important position which Mr. Kraft now holds came to him by election of the board of directors in May, 1900. Here he has maintained his reputation for efficient and painstaking effort, and he is regarded in financial circles as one of the best men in his line in the city.

Mr. Kraft was married, July 10, 1902, to Mazie Stauffer, daughter of D. F. Stauffer, proprietor of the Stauffer Steam Cracker Bakery of York. The genial social qualities of
Mr. Kraft have made him a popular member of York society. In the line of the fraternities he affiliates with the Elks, the Odd Fellows and the Royal Arcanum. In church faith and membership he and his wife are Lutherans. Politics as such have no particular attraction for him; he votes the Democratic ticket, and demands good men and correct principles. He is one of the younger members of the York County Historical Society, an institution which is becoming increasingly the pride of those interested in the past history of York county.

It is true that life with Mr. Kraft has not been a summer vacation at all times, indeed but seldom; yet he enjoys it, being by nature and training gifted with a penchant for work, and happy, therefore, only while busily engaged. No boy born with the true American spirit need have a less successful career if he accepts the opportunities everywhere at hand, and having taken up a line of work, follows it with the same devotion to duty displayed by Calvin T. Kraft.

WILLIAM B. NELSON, now living retired in Carroll township, was born June 30, 1838, in that township, son of Samuel Park Nelson.

Samuel Nelson, his great-grandfather, was born Feb. 7, 1742, and came from England to America at an early date, landing in New York City, whence he later on removed to York county, Pa., where he died Nov. 8, 1802. On March 9, 1769, he married Mary (McMullen) Nelson, who was born May 21, 1747, and she died March 16, 1828. Their children were: Susanna, born Aug. 18, 1770; Margaret, born Feb. 18, 1773; William, born May 31, 1775; Mary, born Nov. 18, 1778; Robert, born June 26, 1781; Elizabeth, born Sept. 25, 1785; Sarah, born Jan. 26, 1787; Rebecca, born Aug. 31, 1790; and Jane, born Oct. 7, 1793.

William Nelson, son of Samuel, was born May 31, 1775, in York county, and there married Frances Parks. He owned two farms in Carroll township, consisting of about 300 acres of land, was very prosperous and highly esteemed in his county. Later in life he removed to Dillsburg, where he lived retired until his death, which occurred in his seventy-fourth year. His wife had died aged forty-five years, and both were buried at Dillsburg. They had these children: Mary, who died in Monaghan township, was buried at Dillsburg, and survived for some years by her husband, William Porter; Margaret, who married James Clark, died at Mechanicsburg, Cumberland county, and was buried at Dillsburg; Samuel Park; Caroline, who died in Carroll township, and was buried at Dillsburg; married Matthew Porter; Joseph, who still lives in Ottawa Co., Kans., sixty miles east of the Rocky Mountains, married Mary Stanley, of Illinois, who died some years ago; Eliza Jane, who married James Williams, is buried at Dillsburg; Frances, the wife of Nebin H. Palmer, lives in Vermilion county, Ill.; and two boys who died when young.

Samuel Park-Nelson was born Dec. 25, 1813, in Carroll township, and there spent all of his life. He received a common school education, and, after his marriage to Margaret Bailey, born Jan. 9, 1815, daughter of John and Anna (Blair) Bailey, they removed to his farm in Carroll township. This place consisted of 128 acres of finely improved land, upon which he erected new buildings and made improvements. He continued to farm there for twenty-four years, but retired from active work some time prior to his death, when he removed to Dillsburg to live a retired life. He was a very prominent man in local affairs, and his death, Feb. 9, 1884, caused universal sorrow. He was buried at Dillsburg. His first wife died aged thirty-two years and nine months, in 1847, and Mr. Nelson married her sister, Joanna, who was born Sept. 28, 1816, and she now makes her home in Dillsburg; being one of the oldest ladies in that part of York county. The children born to Mr. Nelson and his first wife were: Frances A., born Nov. 22, 1835, is single and lives at Dillsburg; William B.; Maria T., born Nov. 1, 1839, died Dec. 28, 1843; Lucinda J., born Oct. 7, 1841, died unmarried Oct. 7, 1872; Robert, born Feb. 3, 1844, married Caroline Livington, and lives in Adams county, where he carries on farming; Maria T., born May 7, 1846, is the wife of James Floyd, a farmer of Monroe township, Cumberland county. To Mr. Nelson and his second wife were born these children: Emerson B., born July 29, 1850, married Katherine Kimmel, and lives at Andersontown, York county; Mary B., born Sept. 28, 1852, died June 2, 1863; Joseph M.,
William B. Nelson attended the Stony Run school in his native township until twenty-one years of age, and then assisted his father at farming. In 1866 he married Mary Ellen Hurst, daughter of J. B. and Susan (Hersheft) Hurst, of Philadelphia. They located on the home farm for five years, and then went to Cumberland county for one year, after which they were spent in Dillsburg. Mr. Nelson then purchased a farm of eighty-nine acres in Carroll township, and remained there from 1879 to 1894. The next two years were spent at Bendersville, and he then engaged in a mercantile business at Wellsville. He built his present residence in 1896, on a small tract of six and one-half acres, and is now living a retired life.

These children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. William B. Nelson: (1) Laura C., born Sept. 12, 1867, died Sept. 28, 1890. She was the wife of Robert M. Metzer, and her son, Nelson P., is making his home with our subject and his wife, they having taken him when quite young, and is now attending school. (2) Jacob H., born April 11, 1871, and working his father's farm, married, July 10, 1894 at Bendersville, Pa., Charlotte Whaley, and has two children, Ellen Hunt, born June 15, 1896; and William R., born Aug. 9, 1900. (3) Park H., born June 11, 1875, died March 15, 1894, aged eighteen years, nine months, and four days.

Mr. Nelson is a Republican, and has been an able and active worker in the interests of his party in his section. He has served his township as assessor, school director, tax collector, and was a delegate to a number of county conventions. He is religiously connected with the Presbyterian Church of Dillsburg, and he has been a trustee of the church for a number of years, his wife and family also attending the services there. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson are both well-educated and fond of good literature, as is evidenced by their large library and the presence of the latest and best magazines in their home. The Nelsons' home, which is located about one mile from Dillsburg, is one of the handsome ones of the township, and the farm is in the finest possible condition. It has been cultivated to a high state, and all the best and latest improvements in the line of machinery are to be found thereon. Mr. Nelson, his wife and family are very well-known in this section, and are most highly honored and esteemed.

HANANIAH SUTTON, a venerable and highly respected citizen of Fairview township, York county, now living retired, was born in that township, March 8, 1823, son of John Sutton, and grandson of John Sutton, Sr., a native of England.

John Sutton, Sr., was born June 3, 1754, in England, and came to America, settling in Chester Co., Pa. He removed to Princeton, Fairview township, some time before 1800, where he followed farming and died March 8, 1849, at the age of ninety-four years, nine months and five days, and was buried in Krone cemetery, at Emanuel Church, Fairview township. His wife, Elizabeth Hoffstot, of Germany, was born May 9, 1755, and died Dec. 17, 1835, aged eighty years, seven months and eight days. The children born to them were: Hannah, who married John Moore; Peter, a farmer; John, the father of Hananiah; Daniel; Mrs. Barbara Fisher; Mrs. Catherine Atticks; and Mrs. Sarah Jones.

John Sutton, son of John, Sr., was born Aug. 12, 1786, in Chester county, where he learned the weaving trade, following this for a number of years in Fairview township, York county, in conjunction with farming; and died there Aug. 15, 1879. Mr. Sutton was thrice married, first to Mary Laird, who died March 11, 1823; second to Catherine Ashenfelter; and then to Mary Snellbecker, now deceased. The children were all born to the first marriage: Barbara died young; John L. died in Fairview township; Daniel, a minister, died in Warrington township; Washington and Elizabeth, twins, of whom Washington died in York, and Elizabeth, who married William Taylor, died in Cumberland county; and Hananiah, the last named being three days old when his mother died.

Hananiah Sutton attended the schools of Fairview township, and also for a short time in Bucks county. At Princeton and Lewisberry he learned the trade of blacksmith, and in the former town he engaged in business, and worked at his trade for forty-two years. For five years he was located at Lewisberry. So expert he became, and so accurate and swift his movements that he could shoe a horse in twenty minutes. In 1867 he located at his present place, buying the old David Cline farm of 240 acres, and has made many improvements. While he is now retired from active work, his shop still attracts and he often goes there, and makes many little things for use on his farm.

Mr. Sutton married Elizabeth Nisley, daughter of Anthony and Susan (Snyder) Nisley. She died in 1875, and is buried at Emanuel Church. The children born of this union were: Robert, a farmer, who married Margaret Frankeberger, and is mentioned elsewhere; Luther, on the home farm, who married Isabella Myers, and has one son, Hananiah Myers; Emma Jane, who died aged four years; and Susanna, who married Luther Bushey, and died in Warrington township, in 1880. Politically Mr. Sutton is a Republican, and in spite of his advanced years he is well posted on public questions, and actively interested in all progressive movements. Hale and hearty, he is a practical example of one who has grown old gracefully, but whose heart and interests are still youthful.

His grandson, Hananiah Myers Sutton, is now a successful and popular teacher, having had four years experience at Cross Roads, in Fairview township, and now being engaged in the school at Pinetown.

LEWIS CLINE, a useful citizen and successful miller in Fairview township, is an honored veteran of the Civil war. He is descended from John Cline, of German descent, who was born in 1769, and who was a farmer living in Newberry township, near Lewisberry. He married Elizabeth Ensminger in 1787, and died in 1839. Both he and his wife were interred in a private burying ground on his farm. They had a family of twelve children: Mary (no record); Elizabeth, who married Jacob Kirk, and died in 1836; John, a farmer of Fairview township, who died in 1857, and was buried in St. John’s cemetery at Lewisberry; Margaret, who died in 1874, and was buried in St. John’s cemetery: Daniel, who died in Ohio; Philip, who lived in Illinois, and died there in 1859; Catharine (no record); Andrew, the father of Lewis (record below); George, a tanner of Dauphin county, who died in 1878; Joseph and Franklin, both plasterers, the former dying in 1874, the latter in 1886, and both are buried in St. John’s cemetery; and Lewis, who lived and died in Illinois.

Andrew Cline, son of John, was born Nov. 3, 1805, and he received a limited school education. He learned the hatter’s trade, making silk and beaver hats, which occupation he followed a number of years, a part of which time was spent in Ohio, called then the “Backwoods,” and it being before the time of railroads, he was obliged to make the journey to that State on foot. Returning to Lewisberry he continued to make hats until 1836, when, having accumulated some money, he purchased a farm of 120 acres of his father-in-law’s estate. This farm was close to Lewisberry in Newberry township, and is now owned by Jacob Fetrow. He built a fine barn and cider mill and otherwise improved the property.

Mr. Cline was a progressive farmer, always ready to try improved methods. He purchased an O. Hussey reaper, the first one in the community, and crowds of people were attracted by the novelty of seeing it work. On its trial trip a little dog belonging to Joseph Starr, tried to make a rather too close investigation, sprang into the knives and had his leg cut off and so lost his life. Mr. Cline also owned the first cook stove in the neighborhood, which was almost as great a curiosity; the cooking previously having been done in pots and kettles, over the coals on the hearth in the chimney corner. In 1852 he bought the Lewisberry mill property, in Fairview township, of John Kauffman, with the beautiful mill dam covering nearly forty acres, known as Silver Lake, and he moved to that property, selling his farm in Newberry township in 1856. Mr. Cline was very successful in both his milling and farming business, and soon purchased a couple of adjoining farms, and gave constant employment to half a dozen men.

Andrew Cline was a Republican in politics and served as tax collector. He was noted for his honesty and integrity, and by industry and foresight he worked his way up from poverty and obscurity to prominence in financial circles, being a stockholder in the Central Transportation Co., various railroad companies, and the holder of a number of Government bonds; and, notwithstanding the depreciation in real estate and some other of his holdings, at the time of his death, had property worth over $60,000.
Lewis Bline.
In 1830 Andrew Cline married Margaret Foster, daughter of Hugh and Avis (Frankenberg) Foster. He died in 1882, and his wife in 1886, and both are buried in St. John’s cemetery. Their children were: Eliza Jane, married to Stephen Pipher in 1859, died in New Cumberland in 1897, and was buried in Mount Olivet cemetery; Henrietta died in 1836; Margaret died in 1835; Lewis is mentioned below; Avis Ann, unmarried, lives in the homestead at Lewisberry; William Henry Harrison, a farmer, unmarried, lives on the homestead (in 1863 he was drafted for service in the army, and his father needing him at home paid the $300 commutation money, and he holds a certificate of release from military duty during the term of the draft); Clarissa married Brice I. Sterrett of Decatur, Ill., in 1879, and lives in Decatur; Lucinda died in 1845; Caroline, unmarried, lives on the homestead with her brother and sister; and James F., who married Sallie Heck, of Lisburn, in 1878, owns the Strinestown mill property, where he lived until 1904, when he built a home in Steetlon, where he now resides.

Levis’ Cline, son of Andrew, was born March 10, 1836. He has followed farming and milling all his life, and is now doing a large business, having made great improvements in the mill. He has put in rolls and a gasoline engine for use when the water is low. He also operates a sawmill attached to the mill. In 1885 he built the fine, large house which he now occupies, and has also built a good barn.

In 1871 Mr. Cline married Elmira Mordorf, daughter of Levi and Susanna (Leiby) Mordorf, of Cumberland county. The children of this union were: Clara, who married George W. Coover, in 1902, and lives in Lemoyne, Cumberland county; Rosaline and Edith, at home, and Lewis, who died in infancy, and was buried in St. John’s cemetery.

In politics Mr. Cline is a Republican, and has served as school director for twelve years. In 1898 he was a candidate for the State Senate. He is a survivor of the great Civil war, and has an honorable war record. He was seriously wounded in the arm at the battle of Antietam, and is still in possession of the bullet which struck him. The injury has greatly incapacitated him and has ever since proved a great hindrance. At one time he was making some repairs and on account of his disabled arm was caught in the master wheel of the mill, breaking his collar bone and receiving other injuries, nearly losing his life. Mr. Cline is a good citizen, a successful business man, and is highly respected throughout Fairview township. He is a member of the Col. H. I. Zinn Post No. 415, G. A. R., of Mechanicsburg, Pennsylvania.

E. M. BAILEY, justice of the peace and merchant in Codorus township, was born there Jan. 30, 1865, and is descended from an old family of York county, originally farming people in that section.

His paternal great-grandfather was a farmer in Codorus township, and died there when ninety-three years of age. His son Henry, born on the homestead, was a mason by occupation in the same neighborhood, and died there at the age of seventy-eight years. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Rohrbaugh, died a number of years before him, and both are buried in Shrewsbury township. Their children were Jesse, Jacob, John, Henry, Samuel, Levi, Sarah and Mary.

Samuel Bailey was born in 1841, and was educated in the public schools. During the Civil war he served four months in the army, enlisting in Company E, 101st P. V. I. On his return home after the war he went into the mercantile business, establishing himself in 1867, where his son is now located, and from that time till 1901 he conducted a flourishing and constantly increasing business; all the buildings now used by his successors were put up by him. For fourteen years he also acted as postmaster, the office known as Neiman being located in his store. His was a long and honorable mercantile career, and he is now living retired. Mr. Bailey married Miss Chrisana Markel, of York county, and a family was born to them as follows: Emanuel M.; Amanda, Mrs. Franklin Luckenbaugh, of Codorus township; Dr. L. M., of Hanover, who married Lucy Glatfelter; Rosa, Mrs. Adam Stable, of Hanover; and Allen, at home, unmarried.

Emanuel M. Bailey was sent to the public schools of Codorus township, and then to the academy at Glen Rock borough. He afterward took up the profession of teaching himself, and was so employed in his home township for eight terms. He then went into his father’s store as a clerk, and worked for him in that capacity fourteen years, but March 1, 1902, he bought out his father, and is now conducting the store with a partner, under the firm name of Bailey & Warner. Their establishment is on the York road, and they do a thriving trade, carrying a full line of goods. They also do paper hanging, and in addition to their other interests conduct a cream separator station. The partners are both wide-awake, enterprising men, and are making a great success of their undertakings.

Mr. Bailey's chosen partner in life was Miss Mary Maul, a daughter of Michael and Sarah (Bohn) Maul, to whom he was united in 1882. One son has been born to them, Victor, of Shenandoah, Pa.; and one daughter, Amy B., at home. The son is a graduate of Patrick's Business College, of York City, and is now general manager of Dempsey's store in Shenandoah, Schuylkill Co., Pa. He married Miss May C. Gelmacher, of Maytown, Lancaster county.

Emanuel M. Bailey is a Democrat, and a leading man in his party locally. He has always been active in township and county affairs, and has been a delegate to the county conventions since he was twenty-one. He has also served as county committeeman. For twelve years he has been a justice of the peace, and at elections has acted as both inspector and judge of elections. He is equally prominent in religious circles. A member of Zion Reformed Church, he is now filling the office of elder, and for twenty-one years has been superintendent of the Sunday-school. He has also been choir master for a long time. Fraternally he is a member of Friendly Lodge, No. 287, Knights of Pythias at Glen Rock, and of Columbus Conclave, No. 262, I. O. H., at York.

Mr. Bailey is thus closely identified with various phases of the community's life, and holds a high place in the esteem of his fellow citizens.

DE HUFF. The first person of this name among the early settlers in Lancaster was John DeHuff, who was born in 1704, and died Dec. 25, 1757. His wife, Catharina, was born March 22, 1704, at Schriesheim, in the Palatinate, and died at the age of eighty-six years. Her parents were Johannes Brecht, an official in the principality, and Catharina Hoffman. In 1725 she came to this country, and was married on Oct. 1, 1727, to John DeHuff, which union was blessed with eleven children. John DeHuff was of Huguenot descent, his people leaving France with many others after the revocation of the edict of Nantes, in 1685. He came to Lancaster from the eastern shore of Maryland, near the source of Labadie, whose commissioners secured for that purpose a large tract of land, situated on Elk river, in Cecil county, Maryland, and called Bohemia Manor.

It is not known when he came to this country, but a record of him is found in Lancaster in 1742 and 1743 as assistant burgess. The charter of the borough of Lancaster was granted May 1, 1742, and "did nominate and appoint Thomas Cookron and Sebastian Graff to be Burgesses, and Michael Bierly, Matthias Young, John DeHuff, John Folkes, Abraham Johnson and Peter Worrall as assistants." In 1744 he served as chief burgess of Lancaster. John DeHuff was a saddler, and prosperous, residing on East King street, and owning a number of houses. In 1742, as history tells us, he was classed as one of the leading men of the town.

John DeHuff, a son of John DeHuff, was one of the original members of the Friendship Fire Company, having signed the articles of the Association Dec. 10, 1763, which included names of prominence, viz.: George Ross, Thomas Barton, James Bickham, Jacob Glatz and others. On the jury empaneled by Sheriff Matthias Slough, Dec. 14, 1763, to investigate the murder of the Indians at their village outside of Lancaster, were Matthias DeHuff and John DeHuff. Between the time of the building of the Moravian Church in Lancaster, in 1746, and 1800, are recorded the names of fifty-six DeHuffs' marriages, births or deaths, showing they were numerous; as much so, perhaps, as any name then known in the community. In 1750, when it was proposed to build a chapel adjoining the church, he thought a building for a boarding school much more necessary, but later gave five pounds to the chapel.

Five children survived John DeHuff, viz.: Susanna (who died in 1761), Johannes (who died in 1774, leaving a widow, Anna Barbara, a daughter of Heinrich Zimmerman), Abraham, Heinrich and Matthias.

Heinrich DeHuff, born Sept. 14, 1738, was first married to Elizabeth Graff, and (second) to Philapena Ebarman, and died April 19, 1799. Following in the footsteps of his father, he was a saddler, and was chosen chief burgess of Lancaster in the years 1778, 1779, 1782, 1783 and 1784, and assistant burgess in 1772 and 1789. He was appointed by the court in March, 1759, as overseer of the poor. At a meeting held Aug. 25, 1764, of the Union Fire Company, Henry and Matthias De Huff were present as members.

Matthias De Huff was born Aug. 27, 1740, and died June 14, 1803. He married Catharine Kreamer. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, serving as a private in Capt. Jasper Yeates' Company.

Capt. Abraham De Huff, certainly one of Lancaster's most distinguished citizens, was born near the source of the river Elk, on the eastern shore of Maryland, Feb. 13, 1735, and died in Lancaster, March 11, 1821. On May 25, 1756, he married Mary Finch, of Philadelphia, daughter of John Finch and Mary Liberty, and she became the mother of nine children. He contracted a second marriage, with Catharina Wolf, Feb. 5, 1793. Maria, the daughter of Abraham De Huff, married Robert Reed, born in Ireland April 28, 1785, and was the ancestor of the late George K. Reed and Mrs. Charles A. Heinitch.

Abraham De Huff was a saddler by occupation. He was assistant burgess of Lancaster in the years 1761, 1762 and 1763. He was also one of the founders of the Lancaster Library Company, in 1759 (renamed the Juliana Library in 1763), establishing the third circulating library organized in the Colonies. On Nov. 8, 1775, Abraham De Huff was chosen a member of the Committee of Correspondence for Lancaster county. He was appointed captain March 15, 1776, in Col. Samuel J. Atlee's musketry battalion, which was recruited in the spring of 1776, and joined the Flying Camp under Gen. Mercer. In Col. Atlee's battalion were two companies from Lancaster county, Capt. Abraham De Huff's and Capt. Thomas Herbert's. Col. Samuel J. Atlee's and Col. Samuel Miles' regiments rendezvoused at Marcus Hook, and were ordered to New Jersey on the 12th of August, being brigaded with Glover and Smallwood's regiments under command of Brig. Gen. Lord Sterling. In the battle of Long Island, Aug. 27, 1776, Col. Atlee's and Col. Miles' regiments suffered so severely that Gen. Washington ordered three battalions to be considered as one regiment under command of Lieut. Col. Brodhead until further orders. On the 5th of October, 1776, the Council of Safety ordered a rearrangement of three battalions. The company of Capt. Abraham De Huff retained its place in the reorganization, being known as the State Regiment of Foot. A part of this regiment was present in the action at Fort Washington, Nov. 16, 1776, and fell into the hands of the enemy, with several of the officers, among them Capt. Abraham De Huff, who had also suffered severely at the battle of Long Island. He was exchanged as prisoner of war, Nov. 16, 1778. On April 1, 1780, Abraham De Huff was appointed sub-lieutenant of Lancaster county.

John, Thomas and Richard Penn, proprietors and governors in chief of said Province of Pennsylvania, by their patent bearing date of Nov. 30, 1717, granted unto Hans Puparther (alias Brubaker) and Christian Hearsay a certain tract of land situated on Little Conestoga creek, then called in ye county of Chester, now Lancaster county, containing one thousand acres. In 1718, by mutual consent, this grant of land was divided into equal parts of five hundred acres each. The heirs of Christian Hearsay, deceased, did grant and confirm unto Peter Baumgardner and Barbara, his wife, 268 acres of said land and the allowance of six acres for roads and highways. The above named persons being aliens, and, therefore, not capable of making a legal conveyance of the said land, he, the said Peter Baumgardner, humbly requested that the proprietaries would be pleased to grant him a release. A patent was granted, recorded in Philadelphia, on the 20th of August, A. D. 1734. On the 21st of November, 1737, John De Huff bought the land held by Peter Baumgardner and wife, Barbara, and in January, 1761, John De Huff, his eldest son, paid £550 for sixty acres of this grant of land on the Little Conestoga creek, in Hempfield township, of the lawful money of Pennsylvania.

James Hamilton, Aug. 14, 1740, granted to John De Huff and Catharine, his wife, Lots 320 and 330, or pieces of ground, situated in the borough of Lancaster, on the north side of King street, in depth of sixty-four feet, near Prince, west of Water; Lot 276, Prince street, near King, on the south, in 1735, with an out lot, No. 17, in Manheim township. John De Huff bought from Roger Hunt and Esther, his wife, Jan. 8, 1743, a lot on Queen street, also a lot on King street from Harmon Updegraff, Aug. 20, 1757. John De Huff was one of the influential men in the organization of the First Reformed Church, before he became identified with the Moravians. The original lot on which the church was built was a grant from James Hamilton, dated Oct. 5, 1741, to Henry Bostler, John De Huff, Peter Balspach, John Barner, Philip Miller and Nicholas Caudle, members of the Reformed Church of the High Dutch Protestants, in the town of Lancaster, and the trustees for the said congregation. Lot sixty-four feet, four and one-half inches in depth, to a fourteen-feet alley; depth two hundred and fifty-two feet. [Recorded in Book H, page 89.]

JACOB MATHIAS SMYSER, a retired banker and one of the most substantial financiers of York, comes of a family long established in this county and is himself a native of West Manchester township. He was born there March 18, 1845, and is a great-grandson of Mathias Smyser, whose old homestead in that township he now owns.

Jacob Smyser, grandfather of Jacob M., was a native of West Manchester, was a lifelong farmer, and owned a large amount of land in York county. He was twice married, and his children were: David, Polly Diehl, Elizabeth Bott, Susan Gross, Mrs. Benjamin Myers and Mrs. Harry Ebert.

David Smyser, father of Jacob M., was likewise born in West Manchester township, and there received his education and a thorough training to agricultural pursuits. He was successful in business, and became a very large landowner, acquiring about 1,200 acres, all in York county except a farm of 190 acres in Adams county. He married Rebecca Eyster, and they passed their lives in their native township, where they are buried, at Wolf's Church. Mr. Smyser lived to be seventy-two years old, his wife to be eighty-nine. He was a member of Wolf's Lutheran Church, which he helped to build. David and Rebecca Smyser had children as follows: Martin, Charles E., D. Albert, Jacob Mathias, Eliza, Sarah Emig, Louisa and Amanda.

Jacob Mathias Smyser received his school-
part as living apartments. He also has in course of erection a fine building at Nos. 116-118 South George street, 230 feet deep and four stories high, for business purposes, which is a credit to the street and to the city. He owns the old homestead of 137 acres in West Manchester township which was owned by his great-grandfather, and on which all the family have been raised, and also has a mill property of twenty acres in Springettsbury township. He is also the owner of one of the finest farms in the county—situated in Jackson township, and containing 100 acres, and he has a valuable store property at No. 106 South George street.

Mr. Smyser has business ability of a high order, and his business standards are unquestioned in the best circles of the county. He has been remarkably successful throughout his career, and his present high position has been gained by irreproachable methods and good management of his various interests, which have benefited the community in many ways.

Mr. Smyser married Miss Amanda J. Smyser, daughter of Adam and Eliza (Brillinger) Smyser, also of York county, and they occupy a beautiful home at No. 472 West Market street, in York, which Mr. Smyser built in 1889. Children as follows have been born to them: Nettie, who died when twenty-two years old; Annie, wife of Frederick Brunhouse, a coal dealer of York; David H., a designer, now of Philadelphia; Mathias, who still lives at home; Mary, wife of William Ebert, of York; Adam, who is in his second year at the law school of the University of Pennsylvania; Lucy, at home; and Jacob, attending school. Mr. Smyser was instrumental in the erection of the Lutheran Church at East Berlin.

MAJOR DAVID Z. SEIPE, one of York's prominent and honored citizens, a surviving officer of the Civil war, comes from one of the old and well-established families of York county. The Seipe family originated in Holland, but for generations have been indigenous to American soil. His grandfather, Adam Seipe, was a prominent farmer in Newberry township, where he reared a family and spent his life. His children were: Samuel, Peter, John, Jacob, David, Emanuel, and three daughters.

Emanuel Seipe, father of Major Seipe, was born in Newberry township, where he was given a fair education in the schools of his day, and there he learned the trade of blacksmithing, which he followed for a number of years in the employ of Alban Ward, of that township. Later he engaged in farming, and continued to farm until his death, which occurred in 1849, when he was aged thirty-five years. He married Hester Zorger, who died in 1905, at the advanced age of ninety-three years. Both are buried in Newberry township. The children of Emanuel and Hester Seipe were: David Z., of York; Herman, deceased; Israel, who died in 1858; Herman; Andrew, a resident of Youngtown, Newberry township, who married Mary Powell; Annie, wife of Jacob Keister, of Newberry; Mary, wife of Martin S. Crull, of York; and Jane, wife of Leonard Jontz, the well-known merchant of York, whose business location is at King and Penn streets in that city.

David Z. Seipe was educated in the township schools and remained at home until he was fifteen years old, when he came to York to learn the machinist's trade. But this proved too hard a life for his health, and he embarked in the tobacco business. He had very fair prospects of business success when the breaking out of the Civil war caused him to put personal considerations aside and to offer his services in defense of his country. In March, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, 16th P. V. I., and served three months as a private soldier. The danger still increasing, he re-enlisted, in 1862, entering Company K, 130th P. V. I. He was commissioned a lieutenant and in the early part of August, of the same year, had won a captain's commission. Capt. Seipe then entered Company B, 187th Regiment, June 23, 1863, which was in the 1st Division, 5th Corps, Army of the Potomac. He served with this body until the close of the war, and in May, 1865, was commissioned major, and was mustered out at Harrisburg in August, 1865. Major Seipe participated in all of the important engagements in which his several commands took part, and was wounded on the field of Antietam.

After the close of the war Major Seipe located at Philadelphia and engaged in the tobacco business, and later became interested in realty holdings in that city. In 1903 he retired from the tobacco business. Although he still retains large property interests in Philadelphia he has returned to make his permanent home with his relatives at York, finding a ready welcome from old associates and daily making new friends. Major Seipe is an honored member of George Meade Post, G. A. R., of Philadelphia.

MALCOLM O. SMITH, editor and publisher, was born in York, Pa., Nov. 2, 1846, son of William W. and Charlotte (Stair) Smith. He obtained his education in the public schools of York, the York Classical and Normal Institute, the Eastman Business College at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and Pennsylvania College, at Gettysburg. The last named institution bestowed upon him, in 1873, the honorary degree of A. B. Mr. Smith taught three terms in the public schools and conducted the Hanover Academy two years.

During the Civil war Mr. Smith served from March to August, 1865, as a private in Company D, 103d P. V. I. He has always taken an active interest in the affairs of the Grand Army of the Republic, and was one of the founders of Major Jenkins Post, No. 99, Hanover, and its commander during the first three years of its existence.

Having learned the trade of printer Mr. Smith founded the Glen Rock Item, in 1870, and successfully conducted it until he sold it, in 1872, to move to Hanover, where he has since resided. In 1872, with P. H. Bittinger, he established the Hanover Herald, of which he has been sole editor and publisher since 1884. A daily edition, The Evening Herald, was begun in 1894, and in 1904 was merged with the Hanover Daily Record, producing the Record-Herald. The Hanover Printing Company was incorporated at the same time, of which corporation Mr. Smith is the leading stockholder, president and superintendent.

Mr. Smith has always paid special attention to local history and pushed original investigations with zeal. As a result, he published in his paper in 1872 a series of articles entitled “Annals of Hanover,” and another series in 1876, “Early History of York County,” besides many single articles—for posterity historical matter of great local interest. To the careful compilation of this matter he devoted much of his time. He is an able writer, and his wide research in such work has made him a recognized authority on the history of York county, his valuable collections rescuing from oblivion many interesting features of the primitive type of life of the country, and they have won for him wide recognition. However, he has not in the pursuit of this special work neglected the present, for his paper has been the fearless exponent of current thought, maintaining the marked influence and position among the foremost publications of this part of the State which it acquired at the outset. Mr. Smith is a man of progressive ideas, and one of the best informed and most successful newspaper men of York county.

He has served for years as secretary of the Hanover Board of Trade. He has been treasurer of McAllister Council, No. 980, Royal Arcanum, for years. He was one of the organizers, and has been secretary and director since its foundation, of the Hanover Improvement Company, which laid out and developed a large tract between Hanover and McSherrystown and adjoining both towns. He has been for many years a director of the Hanover Building and Loan Association. He was one of the founders, in 1884, and has been secretary ever since, of the Hanover Agricultural Society, which has held twenty-one successful annual fairs under his management. He has been active in the introduction of the street car and telephone service, and was secretary and director of the Hanover Telephone Company from its incorporation until its sale to the United Telephone and Telegraph Co. Mr. Smith is a Republican but not an active politician; he served a three years’ term as school director—his only public office.

Mr. Smith was married in Gettysburg, in 1867, to Miss Louisa H. S. Vandersloot, youngest daughter of Dr. F. E. Vandersloot, of that place. Three children, all of whom died in early childhood, were born of this union.

BIRD HAUER LOUCKS, secretary of the York Manufacturing Company, was born in West Manchester township June 24, 1868. His first paternal ancestor in America, and a brother, came to this country with the earliest emigration from Germany, and settled in the State of New York, about 1730. One of the brothers remained in New York. The other migrated to the vicinity of Philadelphia, and later located near Womelsdorf, Berks county, where he reared his family. Peter, one of the sons, remained in Berks county. Jacob, John and Casper came to York county. Jacob Loucks, the great-grandfather of Bird H. Loucks, was married to Margaret Ann Reed, of Scotch-Irish ancestry. Their children were John George, Margaret, Catharine, Sarah, Leah, Mary, Elizabeth and Jacob. John George Loucks, the grandfather of the subject of this biography, was born near York, June 28, 1788, and died Nov. 2, 1861. By his first wife, whose maiden name was Keyser, he had five children: John, Michael, George, Henry and Mary Ann. His second wife was Catherine E. Shank, and their children were Abraham, Margaret, Isaac, Clara Anne, Jacob, Caroline, Columbus, Amanda and Nathan.

Jacob Loucks, father of Bird H. Loucks, prominent in the affairs of York county, was born Nov. 3, 1828. He married Catherine E. Slagle, and they had five children: George, Clara, Laura, Ellen Catherine and Sylvester Jacob. His second wife was Mary E. Hauer, born Dec. 13, 1837, who died Jan. 2, 1900. They had three children: Charles Edward, William Henry and Bird H. Hauer. Mrs. Loucks was the daughter of Jacob and Susan (Thomas) Hauer. Jacob Hauer was born Jan. 29, 1804, and died Aug. 10, 1855. Susan Hauer, his wife, was born Feb. 2, 1816, and died July 9, 1863. Mr. Hauer early in life was manager of the Colemen Furnaces near Lebanon, Pa. In 1835 he removed to Spring Forge, York county, where he became the manager of the large iron industry then owned by the Colemans at that place. Subsequently he purchased this industry and about one thousand acres of land, containing iron ore mines and valuable chestnut timber, which was burned into charcoal and used in the manufacture of iron. In 1852 Jacob Hauer discontinued the iron business and began the manufacture of paper at Spring Forge.

Bird Hauer Loucks grew to manhood on his father’s farm in West Manchester township. He attended the public schools of York, and the York County Academy. In order to acquire a business education, in 1886, he entered Sadler’s Bryant & Stratton Business College, in the city of Baltimore. After graduating from this institution he entered the employ of John A. Dushane & Co., Baltimore, continuing with them until Nov. 1, 1887, when he became connected with Stallman & Shetter, wholesale tobacconists, of York. On Nov. 15, 1897, Mr. Loucks entered the employ of the York Manufacturing Company, one of the largest industrial enterprises of southern Pennsylvania. Through his energy and enterprise he was promoted, and at present holds the responsible position of secretary of this company. Mr. Loucks was chosen school controller to represent the Eleventh ward of York in February, 1901, and was re-elected in February, 1905. He was married to Elsie May Bott, and they have one son, Walter Bott Loucks, born May 5, 1895.

MOUL. The family of this name in York county was founded there by Conrad Maul, as the name was originally spelled, and as it appears on old deeds and gravestones. Some members of the family still spell the name that way, others have been spelling it with an “o” since 1848.

Bartholomew Moul came to York county with the earliest German emigrants in 1733 and took up a tract of land now covered by a part of the city of York. He was one of the founders of Christ Lutheran Church, at York, and was one of the early county commissioners. He died in 1755, bequeathing his property to his wife Elizabeth, his son George, and to his two stepdaughters, daughters of his wife by a former marriage. Conrad Moul, his nephew, and the founder of the Maul family in York county, at the age of twenty-five sailed from the lower Palatinate of Germany, in the ship “Hampshire,” from Rotterdam, Sept. 7, 1748, Thomas Cheeseman, captain. The Record Book of St. Matthew’s Lutheran Church at Hanover records the birth of Catherine, daughter of Conrad and Catarina Maul, Feb. 16, 1750, and of a son Philip Maul, Sept. 8, 1752. Conrad Maul also had two sons, Peter and Conrad. A sheepskin deed now in the possession of Milton Moul, son of Philip Moul, of Moulstown, was given to Conrad Moul by Thomas and Richard Penn, proprietors of Pennsylvania, 1758, in the reign of King George II over Great Britain, and is recorded in Philadelphia, 1759, A, Volume 20, page 250.

Conrad Moul acquired considerable property in Heidelberg township. During the Revolution, he served in a militia company commanded by Capt. Andrew Foreman. This company was called into active service in 1776 and in the fall of 1777 before the British captured Philadelphia. In 1781 he was with his company when it was placed on duty to guard about twelve hundred British soldiers who were prisoners of war at a cantonment four miles southeast of York. At the close of the Revolution, according to a family tradition, Conrad Maul, with two of his neighbors, made a trip to the Blue Grass region of Kentucky on horseback with the intention of purchasing lands and locating there. After an absence of several months the news came to the family that Conrad Maul and his associates had died. Philip Maul, his eldest son, and others went to the region where his father had gone and found the horses and the graves of his father and his comrades, but could not recover the money. After his return home the Orphans Court of York county, on Dec. 4, 1783, granted a deed of the Conrad Maul property of Philip Maul. This deed is in the possession of Milton Moul, son of Philip, the second, of Moulstown, Heidelberg township.

Cadaria Maul, wife of Conrad, was born in Germany in 1729, died in 1806, and was buried in Moulstown graveyard.

Philip Maul, son of Conrad, was born in 1752, and died in 1841; his wife, Elizabeth, was born in 1753 and died in 1836. Both were buried in the Moulstown graveyard. They had three sons and one daughter: Conrad and Henry, who remained in Moulstown; John, who moved to Ohio; and Elizabeth, who remained in Moulstown and was buried there.

Conrad Maul, son of Philip, was born in 1777 and died in 1851. He was twice married, his first wife being Elizabeth Hoshour, who was born in 1783 and died in 1808. She left two sons, Solomon and John, and three daughters: Elizabeth, married to George Baker; Nancy, married to Henry Shireman; and Lydia, married to Solomon Danner. His second wife was Anna Mary Hare, who died in 1871, aged eighty years. The children of this wife were: Conrad, Charles, David, Josiah, Absalom, Jacob, Sarah, Lovina, and Maria (Polly), married to Abrahom Thompson.

Henry Maul, son of Philip, had six sons: John, Jacob, George, Henry, Philip and Peter. His daughters were married to John Miller, Jacob Miller, Jacob Reynolds, John Shaffner and Daniel Bowersox.

John Maul, son of Philip and brother of Henry and Conrad, moved to Ohio. He had two sons, Manassas and Edward, and three daughters, Mrs. Leali Walker, Mrs. Lavina Hershey and Mrs. Rebecca Seifang.

Conrad Moul, son of Conrad, son of Philip, was married to Susan Bollinger, and moved to Hanover, in 1842. They had two sons: Joseph B., and Charles E., and two daughters, Sarah Jane and Carrie, the latter married to Jacob Fitz. Mrs. Fitz died in 1884, leaving three sons, Ervin, Marcy and Earle. Conrad died in 1893, at the age of eighty years, and was buried at Hanover.

Charles Moul, son of Conrad, son of Philip, was buried at York. He had three sons: Milton, Edwin T. and Alexander.

Josiah Moul died in 1901, at the age of seventy-nine, and was buried at Mt. Carmel, near Moulstown. He married Anna Harnish, and had six sons and two daughters: Jacob H., Martin, Clinton R., Josiah S., Edward H., Emory, Emma (married to Martin Bollinger) and Mary (married to George Hamme).

On all the deeds and records the name was spelled Maul until sometime after 1841, when it was changed to Moul by some branches of the family.

CHARLES E. MOUL, treasurer of the Hanover Wire Cloth Company, of Hanover, is one of the representative and enterprising business men of that borough. He was born in Hanover, Jan. 25, 1858, the son of Conrad and Susan (Bollinger) Moul, and the grandson of Conrad Maul, and is a lineal descendant of Conrad Maul, who settled in Heidelberg township, at the present site of Moulstown, in 1748. The grandfather of Charles E. Moul was a prosperous farmer and distiller, distilling being then a common industry throughout Pennsylvania.

Conrad Moul, his father, was born at Moulstown, York county, in 1813. He was educated in the subscription schools, and in his youth acquired the trade of cooper. In 1842 he purchased a small property near Hanover and began the manufacture of water-tight barrels, but soon afterward engaged in the manufacture of grain drills, reapers and mowers. In 1851 he introduced the Hussey reaper into Pennsylvania, and for twenty years was prominently and actively a manufacturer of reapers and mowers, during that time inventing and making many valuable improvements to this important class of machinery. In 1878 he added a planing-mill to the machine shop and organized the firm of C. Moul & Company.

He married Susan Bollinger, who was born near Mount Carmel church in 1817, the daughter of John and Nancy (Stauffer) Bollinger, the former of whom was born at Bollinger’s Mill, now Dubb’s Mill, Heidelberg township, York county, and the latter came from Lancaster county. Four children were born to Conrad and Susan Moul. The father died in 1893, and the mother in 1906 was living at the age of eighty-nine in the full possession of her faculties.

Charles E. Moul received his early education in the public schools of Hanover, and later graduated from Dickinson Seminary, Williamsport, Pa., and took a course at Eastman's Business College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Mr. Moul returned to Hanover, and for three years was in the service of the Hanover Saving Fund Society as teller and for twenty years as director. He was one of the projectors of the Hanover Match Company, and in 1903 he organized the Hanover Wire Cloth Factory, one of the chief industries of Hanover, its pay-roll numbering more than one hundred employees. Mr. Moul was also one of the organizers of the Hanover Sewing Company, another important industry of Hanover, engaged in the manufacture of men's shirts, and employing about one hundred and twenty hands. He has been secretary of the firm of C. Moul & Company since its organization.

In 1880 Mr. Moul married Clara E. Glattfelder, of Spring Grove, daughter of P. H. Glattfelder, a prominent citizen and paper manufacturer. To Mr. and Mrs. Moul have been born three children, Elizabeth G., Philip C. (deceased) and Esther B. Mr. and Mrs. Moul are active members of St. Matthew's Lutheran Church.

MARTIN MOUL, manufacturer, coal dealer and architect, was born in Heidelberg township, June 15, 1853. He is a lineal descendant of Conrad Moul, one of the earliest settlers of Heidelberg township, who came here in 1748. Josiah Moul, the father of Martin, was born on the old Moul homestead in Heidelberg township in 1822, and as a boy worked on his father's farm. He received a fair education in the common schools and followed the vocation of farming through life. He was one of the intelligent and progressive farmers of the county. In politics he was a Democrat. He was a member of the Lutheran Church, Hanover, and for many years an elder of the congregation. He married Annie Harnish, the daughter of Jacob Harnish, and a descendant of one of the pioneer families. Jacob Harnish was twice married. His first wife was a Miss Bechtel, and his second a Miss Myers. To Josiah and Annie (Harnish) Moul were born the following children: Jacob H., a farmer; Martin; Emma, who married Martin Bollinger; Mary, the wife of George Hamme; Clinton R., who resides on the old Moul homestead in Heidelberg township; Josiah S., a teacher; Edward H., superintendent of the Moul planing-mill; and Emory, deceased. Josiah, the father, died in 1901, and was buried in Mt. Carmel cemetery. His wife, Annie, who was born in 1826, died in 1896, and was also buried in Mt. Carmel cemetery.

Martin Moul spent his boyhood days on the old farm, attending the neighboring common schools. At the age of nineteen he began an apprenticeship to the carpenter's trade with Solomon Zartman, of Codorus township. Completing his trade, Mr. Moul worked for several years as a millwright, after which he became interested in the planing-mill at Hanover. In 1890 he started in the manufacturing of matches and was so engaged for nine years, inventing several very useful machines for manufacturing matches. In 1899 he became identified with the coal and lumber business and is now president of the firm of C. Moul & Company, dealers in lumber, coal and roofing material. He is a stockholder of the Fitz Water Wheel Company, of which he has also been elected president. He is a stockholder of the Hanover Wire Cloth Company and has other business interests.

In 1883 Mr. Moul married Mary E. Gemmill, formerly of Baltimore county, Md., the daughter of David W. Gemmill. To Mr. and Mrs. Moul have been born six children, namely: Carrie, who died at the age of nineteen; Walter Ray, a machinist; Alfred Guy; Horace Clare; David Gemmill, and Anna Ruth. Mr. Moul is a member of St. Matthew's Lutheran Church, of which he has served as elder for ten years and of which he is a teacher in the Sunday-school. Mrs. Moul is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics he is independent in local matters and a Democrat in State and national affairs. Mr. Moul possesses talent and ability as an architect, to which profession he has in recent years given considerable attention. He has designed a number of Hanover's finest residences and a number of office buildings and public schoolhouses, these structures showing striking evidence of his originality and skill as an architect.
CHRISTIAN F. MOUL, manufacturer and dealer in coal and wood, was born in Paradise township, York county, Feb. 17, 1871. He is a lineal descendant of Conrad Moul, one of the earliest settlers of Heidelberg township, who came to this country from the lower Palatinate of Germany in the ship "Hampshire," from Rotterdam, Sept. 7, 1748, Thomas Cheeseman, captain. He took up land in and around the site of Moulstown. Conrad Moul had three sons: Philip, born in 1751, died in 1841; he remained on the old homestead. Peter moved to near Holtzschwamm church, and Conrad, father of John, known as Weaver Conrad, located near Abbottstown. Peter, brother of Philip and Conrad, had six sons, Philip, Conrad, Peter, George, Solomon, John, and one daughter, Cathrine, who was born in 1799, and died in 1877 (buried at Roth church).

The second Peter Moul was born in 1794, and died in 1877; he was buried at Roth church. He had five sons and two daughters, Michael, John, Peter, William, Solomon, Lucy, and Cathrine (married to Emanuel Gross).

John F. Moul, the father of Christian F. Moul and son of the second Peter, was born in Paradise township, in 1837, and as a boy worked on the farm of his father. At the age of eighteen years he began an apprenticeship to the carpenter's trade with his brother Michael. After completing his trade he became a contractor and builder. In politics he is a stanch Democrat; he is a member of the Lutheran Church. He married Christiana Gerber, the daughter of Christian Gerber. To John F. and Christiana (Gerber) Moul were born the following children: William H. Moul; Christian F. Moul; John P. Moul; Emma, who married William Straly; Ida, who married J. Emory Flickinger; Mary, deceased, who was married to Charles Brodbeck; Ella, married to George Wildasin; Daisy, married to George Rabenstine; and Sarah, deceased. John, the father, lives with his son-in-law, George Rabenstine, on High street, Hanover, Pa. His wife Christiana was born in 1837, died in 1906, and is buried in Mt. Olivet cemetery, Hanover.

Christian F. Moul spent his boyhood days on the farm and received his education in the common schools. At the age of eighteen he began the carpenter's trade, at which he worked until 1899, when he became interested in the retail grocery business on Abbottstown street, Hanover, which business he conducted for four years. In 1903 he became interested in the manufacturing of plow handles and beams and general woodwork for farm machinery, with his brother, William H. Moul, which has been very successful and is now one of Hanover's leading industries. He is also a member and vice-president, secretary and general manager of the Moul-Miller Lumber Company Inc., who recently bought about ten thousand acres of timber lands in Virginia and West Virginia for the purpose of conducting the manufacture of lumber.

In 1891 Mr. Moul married Emma J. Strine, formerly of Hanover, the daughter of Henry Strine. To Mr. and Mrs. Moul have been born two children, namely: Alvan, who died at the age of one month, sixteen days, and Arthur F. Mr. Moul is an active member of St. Mark's Church and Sunday-school and a member of the choir. In politics he is independent in local matters and a Democrat in national affairs, and in 1906 was elected school director in Hanover.

WILLIAM H. MOUL, a brother of Christian F. Moul, son of John F. Moul, was born in Paradise township, York county. He spent his boyhood days on the farm and was educated in the public schools. At the age of seventeen he became apprenticed to the carpenter's trade with his father. Completing his trade, Mr. Moul became an employee with the firm of Hench & Dromgold Company of York, manufacturers of farm implements, at which place he had a position as assistant foreman in the wood-working department for thirteen years. In 1903 he became interested with his brother Christian F. Moul in the manufacture of plow handles and beams and woodwork for farm machinery, and is president and general manager of the concern. In 1906 he became a member of the Moul-Miller Lumber Company Inc., of which he is treasurer and assistant manager.

In 1891 he was married to Sallie Bowman, daughter of George W. Bowman, of Hanover. To Mr. and Mrs. Moul have been born one son, Raymond, and one daughter, Myrtle. Mr. Moul is an active member of St. Matthew's Lutheran Church and Sunday-school. In politics he is independent in local matters and a Democrat in State and national affairs.
CORNELIUS RUFUS McCOSH, ice manufacturer at Hanover, was born in Alabama, near the Georgia line, May 29, 1850. His ancestors were among the earliest Scotch-Irish settlers of Adams county, Pa. James McCosh, his grandfather, married Deborah McCready, of the York family, and the following spring marching the life of his Academy, public county, succeeding in the extensive Harrisburg store in 1890 for his uncle, Capt. A. W. Eichelberger, and at the latter's death, in 1901, became the owner of the entire plant.

Mr. McCosh was married in 1879 to Nannie Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander and Louisa (Beck) Baugher. Her father, who served as a soldier in the Civil war, was born in the year 1820, and in 1906 was living at the advanced age of eighty-six years. Mr. and Mrs. McCosh have four children: Irma, married to Robert O. Wirt, teller in the Savings Fund Society at Hanover; Henry, now a clerk in the office of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, at Roanoke, Va., married to Florence, daughter of Dr. William Stoner, of Sunbury, Pa.; Robert, a graduate of the Hanover High School and a clerk and stenographer of the Norfolk & Western Railroad at Roanoke, Va.; and Louise, a graduate of the Hanover High School, and now a student at National Park Seminary, near Washington, D. C. Mr. and Mrs. McCosh, and their four children, are members of St. Mark's Lutheran Church, Hanover.

DAVID MILLER, who resides in East Hopewell township, has been a resident of this township continuously since 1865, and is one of its most substantial and influential agriculturists. He was born on his father's farm, close to Cross Roads, April 9, 1824, one of the ten children—six boys and four girls—in the family of John and Elizabeth (Trout) Miller.

Mr. Miller's education was secured in the subscription schools, the sessions being held in an old log building near Cross Roads, which he attended several months each year until he was twenty. In his younger days much of the land in this section was covered with heavy timber, and as a boy he cleared land and picked stones. Only the poorest of crops could be raised, the home farm of 160 acres only yielding ten bushels of wheat for many years. In 1865 Mr. Miller located on his present farm, which he purchased from David Fishel, and in 1883 he erected his present home, the old home—which is occupied by his son, J. C., being over one hundred years old. Mr. Miller was connected with the Know Nothing party, and was a Whig before the Republican party was organized, but being fair-minded, and liberal in his views, votes more for the men than the party, and has never been an office seeker. For fifty years Mr. Miller has been a member of the Hopewell Presbyterian Church, and has served as a trustee. Always an active worker in the church, he is liberal in its support, and donated $500 toward the building of the new church.

Mr. Miller was married May 29, 1853, to Miss Sarah Ann Winemiller, who was born April 28, 1828, in the Cross Roads vicinity, this township, daughter of Joseph and Mary Magdalene (Souder) Winemiller, natives of Hopewell township. Mrs. Miller died Jan. 12, 1894, in the faith of the Presbyterian Church. Before her marriage she was a member of Sadler's Lutheran Church. These children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller: John C., who operates the farm for our subject, married Annie P. Miller; Joseph S., a doctor of York City, married Miss Olivia Miller, of Monkton, Md.; William H., of York City, married Miss Ella Faulkner; Salome A. M., is at home; Carrie died at the age of nine years; Neely died at the age of six years; and Granville died in infancy.

In 1904 Mr. Miller, with his daughter Salome, and a party of relatives and friends, took a trip West, Mr. Miller stopping off at Decatur, Ill., to visit his nephew, D. A. Muffet, whose place he had visited when a boy, while the rest of the party continued on their way to the St. Louis Fair.

DANIEL EBERLY, A. M., D. D., one of the prominent clergymen of York county and now a retired resident of Hanover, was born on the old homestead farm, one-half mile north of Shiremanstown, Cumberland Co., Pa., April 22, 1834. During his boyhood he worked on the farm and attended the public schools. On New Year’s Day, 1852, he started to attend college at Mt. Pleasant, Westmoreland Co., Pa., later entering Otterbein University, Ohio, from which he graduated with the degree of A. B. in 1858. He has also pursued special studies in Brown University at Providence, R. I., during the collegiate year of 1855-56. He recited in the class of Intellectual Philosophy under President Barnas Sears, in which was Richard Olney, ex-Secretary of State, and in the class in Logic, Rhetoric and English Literature, under Prof. R. P. Dunn, was the late John Hay, Secretary of State. After completing his education he entered as a member the Pennsylvania Annual Conference of the United Brethren in Christ, and served congregations in the counties of Cumberland, York and Adams, Pa., and Carroll, Md. He was also pastor of the Scott Street United Brethren Church in Baltimore, Md., and later of Trinity United Brethren Church in Lebanon, Pa. He was president of the Cottage Hill Female College of York, Pa., from 1866 to 1872; and in 1872 was elected president of the Otterbein University, Ohio, but served only long enough to graduate one class, resigning on account of his interests in the East. He was professor of Latin Language and Literature in the Lebanon Valley College at Annville, Pa., from 1876 to 1884. A few years later he was elected to the presidency of the college, but on account of his own business engagements did not accept.

During part of 1863 Rev. Eberly served in the Union army, and since Dec. 2, 1875, he has been chaplain of the 8th Pa. N. G., being in 1906 ranking state chaplain.

On Aug. 23, 1870, the Rev. Dr. Eberly was married to Josephine Bittinger, only daughter of William and Eliza (Hafer) Bittinger, of Abbottstown, Pa. She was a woman of splendid address, cultured, refined and affable in her ways. While on a visit to her parents she took sick and died July 28, 1884, and is buried in the cemetery of her native town. Her father, William Bittinger, was a man of great personal worth, and was held in high esteem wherever known. He possessed great financial ability, and during his life amassed a large estate. He died in 1888, his wife surviving until 1899. After the death of his wife in 1884, Mr. Eberly lived with her parents until their decease. In the spring of 1900 he moved to Hanover, where he still resides. He has no regular charge at present, but almost every Sabbath preaches somewhere. He lectures frequently, and is lecturer on the Philosophy of History in the Lebanon Valley College. In his position as chaplain he invariably goes with the 8th Regiment when on duty in the State.

Much of the time of Dr. Eberly is taken up in the management of his farms and other interests, which demand his attention. He served as one of the three commissioners appointed to erect a monument at Hanover, Pa., to commemorate the battle of Hanover, fought June 30, 1863, his associates in this work being Governor Pennypacker and Col. John P. Nicholson. The monument was dedicated Sept. 28, 1905.
JACOB R. SPANGLER, M. D., who has dignified and honored his chosen calling through his able services, and whose value has not fallen short of popular appreciation of a representative character, is a man of high professional attainments. He is a native son of York county, and a scion of one of its old and honored families. Dr. Spangler was born in Jackson township, this county, Nov. 22, 1850, son of Rudolph and Sarah (Harbaugh) Spangler, both of German descent.

Henry Spangler, his paternal grandfather, was one of the prominent and highly esteemed pioneers of Jackson township, where he passed the closing years of his life. He was a member of Capt. Ament's company, of the Seventh York County Battalion in the Revolutionary war. An exhaustive genealogical record concerning the Spangler family has been compiled and published by Dr. Spangler's brother, E. W. Spangler, and is a most valuable production, being complete and accurate in the data furnished.

Rudolph Spangler was born on the old homestead farm, near Thomasville, Jackson township, this county, June 27, 1800, his parents having early settled in that locality. He was a farmer and general business man, and wielded much influence in his community, where he was held in unqualified confidence and esteem, while he was signal success in his efforts and accumulated a competency. In politics he was a Whig. He and his wife were both zealous and devoted members of the Reformed Church. He was a member of the York Washington Artillers from 1827 to 1831. He died Sept. 30, 1851, and his wife passed away in 1898, at the age of ninety-one years. She was a daughter of Jacob and Mary (Laucks) Harbaugh, and her grandfather was Yost Harbaugh, numbered among the very early settlers in what is now the county of York, and he was a captain in active service in the Revolutionary war. Mr. and Mrs. Spangler became the parents of eleven children, and of the number seven are living.

Dr. Jacob R. Spangler passed his youthful years on the old home farm in Jackson township, while his rudimentary educational training was secured in the district school, after which he continued his studies under most favorable auspices in the York County Academy, while later he became a student in the State Normal School at Millersville. For a portion of each of two years thereafter he was successfully engaged in teaching in the district schools of his native county, and in 1871 he took up the study of medicine, having as his preceptor his brother, Dr. Benjamin F. Spangler, who was at that time engaged in practice in York, Pa. After thus reading for about one year, our subject entered Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1874, receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine, and coming forth well fortified for the active work and responsibilities of his exacting profession. Immediately after his graduation he established an office in his present location on West Market street, and in the intervening thirty years he has built up and controlled one of the largest and most representative practices in the city, while his prestige stands in evidence of his ability, and also his hold upon the confidence and esteem of the people of the community. The Doctor takes great pride and satisfaction in driving a good horse, being an able judge of the noble animal and keeping several well bred horses in his well appointed stables, while in addition to his fine residence property he is the owner of other valuable realty in the city of York. He is a member of the York County Medical Society, the Pennsylvania State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, while he keeps in close touch with the advances made in both branches of his profession, having recourse to the best standard and periodical literature. In 1881 the Doctor served as city physician, while he has twice been elected a member of the city board of education, from the Fourth Ward. In politics he gives an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party, and both he and his wife are valued members of the Episcopal Church.

On Jan. 23, 1895, Dr. Spangler was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Jane McFee, daughter of James McFee, a prominent citizen of Baltimore, Md., and of this union has been born one son, James Henry, now a student in the city schools.

HORACE M. ALLEMAN, M. D., of Hanover, is a son of Dr. Horace and Rebecca (Winnemore) Alleman, and was born at Hanover, York Co., Pa., Feb. 19, 1863. He received his early education in the public schools, fitted for college at Baugher's Academy, and in 1881 entered Lafayette College at Easton, this State, from which he was graduated in the class of 1885. Shortly after graduation, and in the same year, he entered the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, from which he was graduated three years later in the class of 1888, and immediately returned to Hanover for the practice of his chosen profession. He was successful from the start has kept up with the medical advancement of the times, and now enjoys a very enviable practice. He is a member of St. Mark's Lutheran Church. He is a prominent Mason, belonging to Patmos Lodge No. 348, at Hanover, and he also belongs to Hanover Lodge, No. 763, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; and Hanover Lodge, No. 327, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In politics he has always been an active supporter of the Republican party and its principles. He is interested in public affairs, yet no politician, active in working for the supremacy of his party, but no office seeker. He takes a special interest in the schools of Hanover, like his father before him, and when elected as school director in 1896, he accepted, and has been serving in that capacity ever since. He is now president of the board. Devoted to his profession, he is progressive and enterprising, a man abreast of the times and in touch with the medical spirit of the age. He is a member of York County Medical Society, and also of the American Academy of Medicine.

In 1891 Dr. Alleman wedded Cora Young, a daughter of W. J. Young, of Hanover. Their union has been blessed with one child, a son, Winnemore.

Dr. Horace Alleman, the father of the subject of this sketch, was one of the old physicians of Hanover, where he practiced for nearly thirty years. He was born Jan. 18, 1824, in Lancaster county, this State, son of John and Elizabeth (Mackert) Alleman, the former a native of Dauphin county, and the latter of Lancaster county. The Allemans are of German descent and were among the early settlers and prominent people of Dauphin county, where John Alleman was born in 1792. He settled near Elizabethtown, Lancaster county, and died there in 1866, and his wife, who was born in 1797, preceded him to the tomb by one year.

Dr. Horace Alleman was reared on his father's farm, received his education in the Emaus Institute and Pennsylvania College, and read medicine with Dr. Nathaniel Watson of East Donegal township, Lancaster county. He was graduated in the class of 1848, from the Pennsylvania Medical College, now the University of Pennsylvania, and practiced from 1848 to 1859 at Elizabethtown and Safe Harbor, in his native county. In the last named year he came to Hanover, where he soon obtained a good practice, and where he died Jan. 14, 1887. He was an Odd Fellow and a member of St. Mark's Lutheran Church, and in politics was successively a Whig and a Republican. At the time of his death he was burgess of Hanover, in whose advancement he took a great interest, especially in the public schools, having served for many years as school director. Dr. Alleman was recognized as one of the leading physicians of the county, and had a lucrative and extensive practice. In 1847 he married Rebecca Winnemore, daughter of Thomas Winnemore, of near Elizabethtown, Lancaster county, and of the ten children born to them five grew to maturity; John H., cashier of the First National Bank of Hanover; Agnes, a teacher in the public schools; Jennie, wife of J. J. Rohrbaugh, of Helena, Montana; Louise, wife of Edward Wentz; and Dr. Horace M. Mrs. Alleman survived her husband two years, dying Jan. 14, 1889, aged sixty-five years, and the remains of both rest in Mt. Olivet Cemetery.

DAVID HORN, who died June 2, 1905, conducted a large and important business in plumbing, gasfitting and steam-heating contract work, in York, where he was known as a reliable and straightforward business man.

George Horn, father of David, was a carpenter by trade, and resided in York for many years engaged in contracting and building, but lived retired for a number of years prior to his death. He was a man of sterling character and ever commanded the confidence and esteem of all who knew him. He died in 1888, at the age of seventy-nine years. His wife, whose maiden name was Myers, was a member of an old and prominent York county family. To this worthy couple were born eight children, viz.: One that died in infancy, unnamed; William, who died in 1878, at the age of forty-six years; Julia, wife of Albert Gotwalt, who is living retired in York; Amelia, the widow of John Haner, and residing in the city of Baltimore; Henry, a carpenter, residing in York; Emma, wife of George Berkheimer, member of the York Fire Department; Annie, a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y., and David.

David Horn was born in York, May 14, 1816, and in his youth he duly availed himself of the advantages afforded in the public schools of York. After leaving school he secured a position in connection with the Adam Express Company, and continued to be in the employ of that company until 1862, when he signalized his patriotism by going forth in defense of the Union, enlisting for a term of nine months, in Company K, 130th P. V. I., with which he proceeded to the front, participating in the memorable battles of Antietam, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, besides many skirmishes. At the close of his term of enlistment Mr. Horn received his honorable discharge and then returned to York, where he became identified with the tinning and plumbing business, in which line of enterprise he engaged on his own responsibility in 1876. In 1892 he located in the present commodious quarters, at Nos. 217-219 West Market street, where he was at the time of his death. He began operations on a modest scale, and by energy, progressive methods and reliability he built up an extensive and prosperous enterprise, and was considered one of the pioneers in his line of business in the city of York. He handled many large contracts in plumbing, gas-fitting, steam and other heating systems, tin roofing and spouting, and general work along these important lines, while among the more notable buildings which he thus equipped may be mentioned the Security Title & Trust building and the West block. He was held in high esteem in the business circles of his native city, was a member of the Merchants' Association, and was a progressive and public-spirited citizen. Fraternally he was affiliated with Sedgwick Post, No. 37, G. A. R., and the Master Plumbers' Association. He had the distinction of being president of the board of health of York. In politics he accorded stanch allegiance to the Republican party. He was a valued member of the Lutheran Church as is his widow.

In 1865 Mr. Horn was united in marriage with Miss Sara A. Morningstar, daughter of Michael Morningstar, superintendent of the beautiful Prospect Hill cemetery, from the time it was laid out until his death. Of the eleven children born to our subject and his wife, seven died in early childhood or infancy, the four survivors being as follows: Samuel H., an able assistant in his father's business; James B., a musician by profession, who resides in the city of Bradford, Pa.; Luther P., of Hanover, York county, where he is associated in business affairs with his father-in-law, who is the patentee and manufacturer of the laraphone; and Arthur H., a talented musician, and student of the piano in Stuart E. Gipe's Academy of Music and Languages in York, and is also a piano teacher.

DR. AARON MARTIN GONTNER, a physician and surgeon of prominence in York, passed to his last rest May 16, 1903. He was born in 1856, and was a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College, at Philadelphia. He practiced his profession with marked success, for a period of twenty-six years, at York, and at one time he was the physician for the York county almshouse. His professional skill won him a wide acquaintance, and he was beloved for his sterling qualities of mind and heart.

On July 3, 1879, Dr. Gontner was married to Sarah J. Keefer, daughter of Moses Keefer, a contracting plasterer of York, where he died when Mrs. Gontner was but two years of age. She was reared and educated in York. To Dr. and Mrs. Gontner were born children as follows: Mary Anna Romain, who died Sept. 11, 1899, aged twenty years; De Etta Elizabeth, who died in 1887, aged seven years; Amanda Magdalene, who died aged twenty-six days; and Sarah Ellen and Rosa May, who reside with their mother.

Dr. and Mrs. Gontner belonged to the Trinity United Evangelical Church. In political sentiment he was a Republican.

DR. JOSEPH H. BITTINGER, physician and surgeon, was born near Hanover Feb, 3, 1852. He is a lineal descendant of Adam Bittinger (Biedinger), who in 1736 emigrated from Alsace to America. He landed in Philadelphia, and settled first in Lancaster county, and in 1753 purchased a tract of land three miles northwest of Hanover. Adam Bittinger died in 1768, leaving a widow, Sabina, and children as follows: Nicholas, Henry, Michael, Peter, Marrilas, George, Adam, Christian, Frederick and Eva.

Nicholas Bittinger, the eldest son, was a native of Alsace, grew to manhood in America, and as early as 1743 was one of the members of the council of the "Evangelical Lutheran Church of the Conewago," now St. Matthew's of Hanover. For a time, when the church was without a pastor, he was licensed by the Synod to read sermons from the pulpit and conduct other religious services. In 1775 he became a member of the Committee of Safety of York county. He served as captain in Col. McAllister's regiment in the Flying Camp, during the Revolution, participating in all the engagements at Washington, in the campaign of 1776 around New York City. At the battle of Fort Washington, in November, 1776, more than one-half the company commanded by Capt. Bittinger were killed, wounded or captured, and he himself became a prisoner of war, being held by the British in New York City for several months. He was very successful in the accumulation of property, and at the time of his death, on May 2, 1804, owned several good farms within six miles of Hanover, and a number of choice tracts of land in Franklin county. His remains were interred at Abbottstown. He had a family of nine children, two sons, John and Joseph, and seven daughters. One of his daughters married Major John Clark, of York, a famous soldier of the Revolution, who was a major in McAllister's regiment, and afterward served on the staff of Gen. Greene.

Joseph Bittinger, the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born Feb. 26, 1773. In the year 1798 he became the owner of a tract of land purchased by his grandfather, Adam Bittinger, in 1753. He died July 26, 1804, at the early age of thirty-one, and left a widow and five sons, namely: John, Joseph, Henry, Frederick and George. His second son, Joseph, the grandfather of Dr. Bittinger, was born Nov. 13, 1794, married Lydia Bear, of Hanover, in 1819, and died Sept. 27, 1850, on the old homestead of Adam Bittinger, the immigrant. He left twelve children, of whom William Henry, born in 1821, died in 1879. Joseph, a graduate of Pennsylvania College and Andover Theological Seminary, became pastor of Presbyterian churches in Cleveland, Ohio, and Pittsburg, Pa., was a fine speaker, an elegant writer and a doctor of divinity; he died in 1885, and his remains were interred at Hanover. The other children were: Ellen and Edward, who died in Chicago; Rebecca; John; Quiney, a graduate of Dartmouth College and Andover Seminary, pastor of a Congregational Church at Haverhill, N. H.; Daniel; Annie; Howard; Nicholas; and Charles Lewis.

Dr. Bittinger grew to manhood on his father's farm and obtained his education in the public schools and Pennsylvania College, at Gettysburg. He then taught school in Illinois and Pennsylvania for five years. For a time he was associated with his uncles in the foreign and domestic fruit business in Chicago, residing in that city when the destructive fire took place there, in 1871. The following year he returned to his native State, and began the study of medicine with Dr. A. J. Snively, of Hanover. He entered Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and was graduated in 1878 with a class many of whose members have won distinction in their profession. He practiced medicine for two years in Hanover, and then went to Philadelphia to take advantage of the opportunities afforded a young physician in a large city. In 1882 he returned to Hanover, where he soon built up a large and lucrative practice, and became one of the leading physicians and surgeons in York county. Dr. Bittinger has served for many years as surgeon of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and the Western Maryland Railroad Company. He is a member of the York County Medical Society, and of the State Medical Society of Pennsylvania, which he has served as vice-president, and has been a member of the American Medical Association since 1881. He is also one of the censors of the Medical-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia.

In 1887 Dr. Bittinger assisted in organizing the Hanover and Littlestown Turnpike Company, and has been its treasurer since 1889. He was a director and also president of the Penn Flouring Mill Company, of Hanover, until it was disposed of to the Eastern Milling and Export Company. In 1893 he was one of the organizers of the People's Bank of Hanover, of which institution he served as first president, and then for several years was vice-president of that institution. Owing to the increased duties devolving upon a physician of large practice, he was compelled to retire from the banking business to devote his

JOHN W. DEHOFF, M. D. Among the able and popular physicians and surgeons of the city of York is Dr. Dehoff, a disciple of the Homeopathic School of Medicine, who has been successfully established in practice in York for nearly a decade and a half.

Dr. Dehoff is a native of Maryland, born in Carroll county, June 20, 1848, son of John and Susanna (Shamberger) Dehoff, both natives of that same county and members of families long ago founded on American soil. The paternal grandparents of the Doctor were Samuel and Catherine (Wheeler) Dehoff, while Jacob Shamberger, his maternal grandfather, was a native of New York State, of German lineage, who removed to Maryland in an early day and there passed the remainder of his long and useful life.

John Dehoff, father of John W., passed his life in Carroll county, Md., his active years being devoted to farming. His death occurred in 1867, while his wife is still living in Carroll county, Md. They became the parents of four children, of whom two are living, Dr. Dehoff being the second in order of birth. John Dehoff was a stanch Democrat in his political faith, and a United Brethren in religious connection. His widow is a Dunkard.

Dr. John W. Dehoff received his preliminary educational training principally in the common schools of Carroll county, Md., and Manchester Academy, and later for a time was a student in Irving College, at Manchester, Md. At the age of twenty-four years he began reading medicine under the guidance of Dr. Malcolm McFarland, of Philadelphia, and then he entered Hahnemann Medical College at Philadelphia, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1876, receiving the well-earned degree of Doctor of Medicine.

Dr. Dehoff served his professional novitiate in the town of Union Bridge, Md., where he built up an excellent practice, continuing there for a period of fourteen years. In 1890 he came to York, where he has further added to his professional prestige and met with most gratifying success both in the volume and character of his practice. For five years he was Professor of Obstetrics in the Southern Homeopathic Medical College, in Baltimore, Md., while he is a valued and appreciative member of the American Institute of Homoeopathy, as well as the Pennsylvania Homœopathic State Medical Society. In a fraternal way he is affiliated with Zeredatha Lodge, No. 451, F. & A. M. Both he and his wife are active and zealous members of the Reformed Church, being identified with Grace parish, of which the Rev. E. E. Emhoff is the honored pastor. For thirteen years the Doctor was superintendent of the Sunday-school, and for some years an elder. He is liberal in political belief, and is known as a loyal and public-spirited citizen, worthy of the high esteem and confidence in which he is uniformly held.

On May 26, 1870, Dr. Dehoff was married to Miss Charlotte E. Shower, daughter of Adam and Mary Ann (Geiger) Shower, the former being a merchant and manufacturer, also Judge of the Orphans Court of Carroll county, Md. Mrs. Shower was a daughter of Rev. Jacob Geiger, who was a prominent and revered member of the clergy of the Reformed church, and also a physician, being the first to practice homeopathy in the State of Maryland. Of the children of Dr. and Mrs. Dehoff, Mary Helen died aged twenty-one months; Dr. John E. is a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, Pa., and the Southern Homeopathic Medical College, and is now engaged in practice in York; Leonora K. remains at the parental home, and George W., a graduate of Mercersburg, and the Southern Homeopathic Medical College, Baltimore, class of 1905, is assistant to Dr. Barnard in the Barnard Sanitarium, Baltimore, Maryland.

WILLIAM CRONENWETT (deceased). Although remembered chiefly for his remarkable war record, William Cronenwett was a business man of no mean ability, and was the owner of much valuable real estate in York. A native of Germany, born in Baden, Baden, he came to America at the age of sixteen years, locating first at Detroit, Mich., where he followed farming.

On the 16th of May, 1861, Mr. Cronenwett enlisted as a private in Company D, 4th Mich. V. I., and served his country valiantly until Nov. 17, 1865. He was engaged in both battles of Bull Run, was at the siege of Yorktown, before Richmond, at Malvern Hill, South Mountain, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. In the last named battle Mr. Cronenwett was shot through the right leg. He was mustered out of service in April, 1864. On the 25th of September of the same year, he was appointed a corporal in Company E, 22d Regiment, Veteran Reserve Corps, serving at Washington, D. C., Albany, N. Y., in Indiana, and at Columbus, Ohio. He was finally mustered out at Camp Chase, Nov. 17, 1865, having participated in twenty-six engagements.

After the close of the war Mr. Cronenwett located in York, Pa., and engaged in the coal business, which he continued successfully for sixteen years. He later located on his farm, a valuable tract in York, southwest of Penn Park. Here he lived retired for fifteen years prior to his death, which occurred Sept. 8, 1901, at the age of sixty-four years. His interment took place at Prospect Hill cemetery.

Mr. Cronenwett was married, Jan. 18, 1866, to Sarah M. Fishel, daughter of Charles and Elizabeth (Brilliart) Fishel. She died in 1893. One child was born to Mr. and Mrs. Cronenwett, Mrs. Rebecca Elizabeth Irwin, who is the mother of two girls, Edith Cronenwett and Elsie Maria, attending the York Collegiate Institute.

HENRY KELLER, of Lower Windsor township, was born on a farm near Yorkana, Lower Windsor township, April 8, 1829, son of George and Lydia (Will) Keller, both of whom were likewise born and reared in York county, the father having been born in 1809, son of Peter Keller, a pioneer of York county, and the mother in 1808.

George Keller devoted the major portion of his life to agriculture, and was one of the well known and influential citizens of his township, having owned many farms, and having been prominent in local affairs. He was a man of sterling rectitude; so ordering his life as to command the esteem of his fellow men. His first wife, who was his devoted companion during a married life of nearly a half century, was summoned into the life eternal in 1875. Following is a brief record concerning their children: (1) Henry was the first-born. (2) John, born Nov. 1, 1833, married Angeline Kline, and his death occurred in Lower Windsor township. (3) George, born Feb. 5, 1836, married Mary Ann Emenheiser, and they reside in East Prospect, this county. (4) Catherine, born Jan. 23, 1840, is the wife of William Shrenberger, and they reside in the State of Nebraska. (5) Lydia, born Oct. 23, 1845, became the wife of Samuel Ball, and is now deceased. (6) Julia Ann, born May 2, 1845, is the wife of Benjamin Emenheiser, and they reside in East Prospect. (7) Peter A., who was born May 6, 1848, and served as a soldier in the Rebellion, resides in the city of York. He has been twice married, the maiden name of his first wife having been Augusta Fitzker. After the death of his first wife George Keller was married to Miss Anna Nau, who is still living, being now the wife of Jacob Blessing, of Yorkana. To the second marriage of Mr. Keller three children were born.
their names, with respective dates of birth, being: Moses H., Sept. 4, 1877; James W., June 7, 1879; and Amanda C., Nov. 24, 1881. The honored husband and father was called to his reward in 1881, his death being the result of a stroke of paralysis.

Henry Keller was reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm, and agriculture has engrossed his attention from his boyhood days to the present, save for a period of five years, during which he was engaged in teaching school. He secured his early educational discipline in the common schools of his native township, and was successfully engaged in teaching for two years in the Prospect school, for an equal interval in the Gilbert school, and for one year in his home school. He has ever been an avid reader of good literature, and has kept in touch with the questions and events of the day, being a man of broad information and mature judgment. Of late years his hearing has been somewhat seriously impaired, and this fact has caused him to appreciate even more fully the attractions of his books, which he prizes as loyal friends, devoting much time to reading standard and periodical literature. As a teacher he received twenty dollars a month and no board, this being considered good pay at the time. Mr. Keller has never used tobacco or intoxicating liquors in any form, and his entire course in life has been clean and straight forward. It may be said that after leaving the common schools he was for eight months a student in an academy in Lancaster county, where he completed his technical or specific schooling.

At the age of twenty-two years Mr. Keller located upon his present farm, and here he has ever since maintained his home, much success attending his well directed efforts. As a boy he became a member of the Canadochy Lutheran church, having been duly catechized by the Rev. Jonathan Oswald, and both he and his wife are still prominently identified with this church. In politics Mr. Keller was originally a Whig, but he has supported the Republican party from the time of its organization to the present, save in one instance, when he voted for the Prohibition party's candidate for governor. He has held various local offices, including those of assessor, school director, township supervisor, and election clerk, and he has ever manifested a deep interest in all that has touched the welfare of his home county.

In 1853 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Keller to Miss Anna Eliza Kline, who was born and reared in this county, being a daughter of Henry Kline. Of this union were born twelve children, and the loved and devoted mother was called to the life beyond at the age of thirty-nine years. The children were: Catherine Lydia, born Sept. 2, 1853, died Oct. 28, 1854; Eliza Jane, born Nov. 26, 1854, died March 13, 1855; Annie Ellen, born March 8, 1856, died on the 4th of the following September; Henry Clay, born March 25, 1857, is a representative merchant in Wrightsville, this county; Millard Fillmore, born April 13, 1859, is a resident of Westchester, this State; Emma Jane, born Dec. 3, 1860, remains with her father in the old home; George Franklin, born Feb. 5, 1862, died March 13, 1879; Caroline, born Aug. 13, 1864, is the wife of Moses Leiphart, of Lower Windsor township; William Harrison, born Feb. 12, 1867, married a Miss Graham, and they reside in Wrightsville; Charlotte, born Oct. 21, 1868, died March 31, 1870; Anna Rebecca, born March 26, 1871, is the wife of George Roth of Hellam township; and James Washington, born March 10, 1874, died March 13, 1878. On Aug. 25, 1887, Mr. Keller was married (second) to Amanda C. Landis, daughter of Jacob and Anna Mary (Wanbaugh) Landis.

ABSAHOM MENGES, mill owner and farmer in Jackson township, was born near Berlin, York county, Sept. 23, 1837, son of Jacob and Catherine (Zinn) Menges.

The Menges family is an old and honored one in York county, where for many generations they have been connected with its business and industrial interests. John Menges, grandfather of Absalom, was a farmer all his life. He married Miss Lena Lau, and a large family was born to them as follows: Jacob, Peter, John, Daniel, Andrew, Solomon, Samuel, George, Rebecca, Elizabeth, Leah, Mary and Sallie. In religious belief the family were Lutherans. In politics Mr. Menges was a Democrat.

Jacob Menges was both a farmer and miller, owning a good farm in Codorus township. There he died in 1860, aged seventy-two. He was a man of the strictest integrity in all his dealing, and was highly respected by all with whom he came in contact. He was married about 1824 to Miss Catherine Zinn, and a family was born to them as follows: Jonas, deceased; Jesse, deceased; Levi, deceased; William; Leah, widow of the late Henry Renoll, and a resident of Codorus; and Absalom. The family were Lutherans, and Mr. Menges was a Democrat in politics, filling the office of school director.

Absalom Menges received his education in the public and subscription schools of York county, and remained at home until he was eighteen years of age. He then spent a year and a half with Emanuel Bollinger, learning the miller's trade, in the course of which time he also had many opportunities of observing the methods of neighboring millers and learning thoroughly all the details of the business. The young man soon mastered the trade, and has followed it all his life in connection with farming. Mr. Menges owns two farms in Paradise township, and one in Jackson, aggregating 200 acres. He has worked for a number of years and has been rewarded by his present prosperous condition.

In 1860 Mr. Menges was married to Miss Anna Hoke, daughter of Michael and Susanna (Hershey) Hoke both natives of York county. To this union twelve children have been born, the following eight of whom are living: Sarah E., who married Martin R. Berkheimer; Mary E., who married George Henise and has eight children; Ada (married to Charles Shaeffer); Paul, Annie, Mary, Florence, Harvey, George and Arthur; Jacob G., who married Emma J. Stambaugh, and has four sons and one daughter: Norman, Granville, George, John and Anna; Anna J., who married George S. Bollinger, and has one child, Walter; Susan, wife of Allen E. Jacobs, and mother of Ruth, Anna, Amy and Robert; Jonas H., who married Sarah Rudisill, who died leaving three children, Harry, Myron and Corinne, and he married (second) Mary A. (Snyder), widow of the late Allen C. Reynolds; Paul O., of the class of 1905 in the law department of Dickinson College, Carlisle; and Luther A., a clerk and stenographer at York. The family are Lutherans.

Absalom Menges is an adherent of the Republican party, but though he is interested in local affairs he is not especially active in politics, and has never sought office. He is an upright and able man, and as such is highly respected in his locality.

MICHAEL HOSE. As a native son of York county and a representative of one of its sterling pioneer families, Mr. Hose is eminently entitled to consideration in a compilation which has to do with those who have been the founders and builders of this section of the old Keystone Commonwealth, while such is his personal standing as a citizen and business man that still further propriety is lent to a review of his career in this work. He is an extensive manufacturer of cigars and cigar boxes in Dallastown, while he also has other industrial and capitalistic interests of importance, being recognized as one of the able and substantial business men of the county which has been his home from the time of his debut on the stage of life.

On the old homestead farm, three miles east of the city of York, in York township, Michael Hose was born Nov. 13, 1853, son of Michael and Sarah (Keesey) Hose, both of whom were likewise born and reared in York county, as were also their respective parents,—statements which give pertinent testimony as to the early establishing of both families in the county. It may be said incidentally that the Hose family has been notable for longevity, a conspicuous instance being that of Deitrick Hose, grandfather of our subject, who was one hundred and six years of age at the time of his death. The family is of sturdy Holland-Dutch extraction, and was founded in America in the early Colonial epoch. The father of our subject devoted the major portion of his life to agricultural pursuits and was one of the prominent and highly honored citizens of York township, wielding marked influence in local affairs and commanding the confidence and esteem of all who knew him. He was a Republican in his political propensities. He was a consistent and valued member of the Lutheran Church, as was also his devoted wife. He was summoned into eternal rest in 1886, and she passed away in 1871. They became the parents of sixteen children, of whom three are living, the subject of this sketch and his two sisters,—Louisa, who is the wife of Henry Eberly, of Yoe, this county;

Michael Hose, the subject of this sketch, was reared to the sturdy discipline of the home farm, in whose work he early began to assist, while his educational training was secured in the public schools, which he attended during the winter months until he had attained the age of sixteen years. In 1869, he entered upon an apprenticeship to the trade of shoemaking, to which he devoted his attention for two years, after which he learned the carpenter's trade, becoming a skilled workman and following the trade as a vocation about eight years, within which time he did much independent work as a contractor and builder. In 1884 Mr. Hose located in Dallastown, where he erected and equipped a factory and engaged in the manufacture of cigar boxes, bringing to bear marked and characteristic energy, enterprise and discrimination, so that the business rapidly increased in scope and importance, being now one of the leading enterprises of the sort in the county. In 1900 he also began the manufacture of cigars, making needed additions to his plant and its equipment, and his factory now represents one of the principal industrial enterprises of Dallastown and of the county, employment being afforded to about two hundred persons, so that the concern has no slight influence on the commercial precedence of the town in which it is located. Mr. Hose is a member of the directorate of the Drover's & Mechanics' Bank, of York, of the York & Windsor Electric Light Co., and of the Farmers' Canning Co., of Red Lion, Pa.; and a stockholder in the Dallastown Water Co., the First National Bank, of Dallastown, and the First National Bank of Red Lion, while he also has other local interests which indicate to how marked a degree he has identified himself with the civic and industrial interests of his native county. He is essentially progressive and public-spirited, and in politics he is found stanchly aligned with the Republican party, while both he and his wife are valued members, respectively, of the Lutheran and United Brethren Churches in Dallastown.

On May 16, 1883, Mr. Hose married Miss Mary Adelaide Keesey, who was born, reared and educated in York county, daughter of Harrison and Caroline (Minnich) Keesey, well-known residents of York township. To Mr. and Mrs. Hose have been born seven children, of whom four are living, namely: Emery Michael, who is associated with his father's business in Dallastown; and Quinton A., George H. and Violet, who are attending the public schools of their home town.

PETER SIDLE is probably best known as the proprietor of the "Palace Hotel" in Dillsburg, York county, which has a reputation out of the ordinary among travelers, but among the people of the town he is not only recognized as an enterprising business man but also as an able and good citizen. The period of his residence there has been comparatively brief, but as he has been inevitably identified with public affairs and progress from the start he is hardly thought of as a newcomer.

Mr. Sidle was born in Cumberland county, Pa., May 7, 1847, son of Peter and Sarah (Pollinger) Sidle. His father was a veterinary surgeon of some renown, and was also much relied upon as a physician and surgeon in the treatment of human ailments. He spent his life near Bowmansdale, in Cumberland county, and died there, and he and his wife are buried at Filer's Church. They had children as follows: Mary became the wife of W. A. Gardner, a business man of Harrisburg; Latimore C. is deceased; Lizzie, deceased, was the wife of William McLoughlin; Peter is mentioned below; Barbara Ann married Jacob Simonetti, a prosperous business man of Harrisburg; Susan is the wife of Peter G. Baptistia, also a successful business man of Harrisburg.

Peter Sidle was reared as a farmer-boy in his native locality, and received his education in the country schools. When he was sixteen, in 1863, he engaged with his brother Latimore in the lime business, in which they continued until 1869, when Peter commenced butchering at Lisburn, Cumberland county. He remained in that line for ten years, at the end of that time embarking in the wholesale and retail provision business at Harrisburg. This venture proved profitable, and he carried it on until he began the hotel business, in 1884. He has ever since given his principal attention to hotel-keeping, and his success is ample demonstration of his fitness for it. His first hotelery was the "Farber House," at Baltimore, Md., which he kept for six years. In the fall of 1890 he changed his location, and assumed control of the “Carrolton Hotel” site, on Arch street, Philadelphia, where he himself remained two years. Then leaving that place in the care of his son, John, he fitted up and took charge of the “West Jersey Hotel,” at Camden, N. J., which he ran for seven years, and which proved to be one of the most lucrative investments he ever made. During his stay in Camden he purchased the good will and fixtures of the “Grand Hotel,” at Harrisburg, Pa., situated on Market street, and in 1899 he located in that city. In January, 1900, he first became identified with Dillsburg, at that time purchasing the “Hotel Central,” and installing his son William as proprietor. However, he himself made a permanent location in Dillsburg the same year, bought the site and at once began the erection of his present magnificent hotel, known as the “Palace Hotel,” located at the corner of Baltimore and York streets. The building is one of the best constructed and best equipped in all York county, and no modern convenience that is a convenience has been forgotten. The hotel has been remarkably popular from the time it was opened, for the travelers who came to Dillsburg found that they could get the right sort of entertainment at the house of “Pete” Sidle. During his long experience in the business he has become widely acquainted, and, being by nature accommodating, courteous and genial, it is no wonder that he has made his mark in his chosen line. As a side issue Mr. Sidle for four seasons conducted the “Osborne Hotel,” at Atlantic City, N. J., and he had the “Oceanic,” at Barnegat City, N. J., three seasons.

Before he had resided in Dillsburg long enough to acquire a voting privilege Mr. Sidle was nominated and elected councilman. His reputation for progress and modern ideas had preceded him, and the citizens felt the need of the influence of such a man in the council, which at that time was divided on the water question. The force of his personality was soon felt, and the fine water system now in operation in Dillsburg is in a large measure due to his influence. He has served altogether five years in the council, and has done much good work, proving his interest in the welfare of his adopted city in many ways.

Mr. Sidle married Miss Amelia Lutz, and has three sons, namely: John P., William H., and Charles O. John P. Sidle is the owner and proprietor of “The Grand” hotel, Nos. 314-316 Market street, Harrisburg, and William H. is the proprietor of Sidle’s cafe, No. 1415 North Third street, Harrisburg. Charles O. is interested with his father in the “Palace Hotel,” of Dillsburg, Pa. All the sons are married, John P. Sidle having married Miss Nellie Kelly, of Philadelphia; William H. Sidle married Miss Pauline Freeland, of Dillsburg; and Charles O. Sidle married Miss Nettie Snively, of Steelton.

Mrs. Sidle is peculiarly adapted to the hotel business, and much credit is due to her for the splendid management of the “Palace.” Mr. Sidle is a member of Columbus Lodge, Knights of Pythias, of Baltimore.

REV. WILLIAM JOHN GRISSINGER.

After service in the ministry for thirty years, during which time his labors took him over a large extent of the country, made him acquainted with people of high and low degree and enabled him to do a vast amount of good, the Rev. W. J. Grissinger, in 1904, gave up his active church work, entering then into a mercantile business in York, which he continued for eight months, and then returned to the ministry. Mr. Grissinger was born Jan. 16, 1844, in Huntingdon county, Pa., son of Samuel F. Grissinger.

John Grissinger, the great-grandfather of our subject, was born in Germany, and, in company with his cousin Steven, came to America, the latter settling in Bucks county, Pa., while Mr. John Grissinger settled in Lewisberry, York county. Here John Grissinger followed farming and died at the ripe old age of ninety-eight years, being buried at St. John’s cemetery, and having at the time of his death 382 descendants, viz.: fourteen children; 138 grandchildren; 242 great-grandchildren; and three great-great-grandchildren.

Adam Grissinger, the grandfather of our subject, was born at Lewisberry, where he received his education. He followed farming near that place until the age of fifty-six years, when his death occurred. His wife, Eva Farrow, died at the age of ninety two years, in Fulton county, where she is buried. This couple were the parents of these children: Barbara married Charles Rhinehart; Catherine married Rev. Lauer, the United Presbyterian clergyman, at Evansville, Ind.; Rebecca married Sam Gladfelter, of Fulton county; Martha died young; John F. married Margaret McNeal; Samuel F.; Martin F. married Julia Ann Parks; Andrew G. married Rebecca Slates; Daniel Levi married Isabella Foust.

Samuel F. Grissinger was born in 1823, in Lewisberry, where he received a common-school education. In 1843 he married Mary McNeal of Huntingdon county. Mr. Grissinger owned a farm in this county of 140 acres, near Three Springs, which he later sold. In 1870 he purchased a farm in Fulton county, which he worked until his death in 1900, his wife dying six months prior. Their children were: William John; Martin A. died in 1886; James Levi, living in Fulton county, married Elizabeth Brightenstein, deceased; Margaret Jane married Oliver Ezra Cook, a prominent farmer at Cook's Station, Huntingdon county; Mary Ellen married John Ehrenfield, whose brother is the supervisor of a branch of the Pennsylvania railroad at Crescent, Blair county; Rebecca E. married J. Franklin Pierce McClain; Julia Bell married C. H. E. Plumer, and lives at North Point, Huntingdon county; Rachel Alice died at the age of eighteen years; and Frances E. Etta married John Ramsay, and lives at Altoona.

William John Grissinger received his first schooling in Huntingdon county, afterward taking one term in a graded school under Professor Miller. He then went to Millersville, Lancaster county, for the terms of 1863-64, and later taught school in Indiana. From there he went to Illinois where he engaged in farming, and was married at Mt. Carroll, Ill., in 1865, to Catherine Chitty, daughter of Benjamin and Eliza (Templeman) Chitty. Here Mr. Grissinger followed farming for four years, and engaged in well drilling for one year. In 1869 he located in Pennsylvania, and took up school teaching, and in the following year his father bought a store, in which the son clerked for seven years. At the age of thirty years, Mr. Grissinger began studying for the ministry, and in 1876 was licensed and ordained a minister of the Church of God. His first charge was at Newport, Perry county, in 1876, where he served two years, and his charges were as follows: Clearfield Mission, at Clearfield, for one year; Newville and Plainfield, Cumberland county, two years; Newport, for six months; Goldsboro and Newberrytown, Yocumtown and Smoketown, for three years; Landisburg, three years; Elizabethtown, Lancaster county, two years; Mount Joy, three years; Altoona, four years; Harrisburg, two years; Goldsboro, three more years, and in 1900 he took charge of the West Poplar Street Church, where he remained until 1904. On Feb. 1, 1905, the Rev. Mr. Grissinger engaged in the mercantile business at No. 227 East Philadelphia street, buying out the business of the Rev. Long; and he continued in business until September of the same year, closing out and returning to the ministry; his present charge is Hanover, York county.

To the Rev. Mr. Grissinger and his wife the following children have been born: Samuel C., who married Emma Cannon, of Highspire, Dauphin Co., Pa.; B. Frank, whose sketch will be found elsewhere; Clarence Rudolph; Carrie Alice Juanita, living at home; and Oliver L., engaged with his brother, B. Frank, and married to Mabel A. Swartz.

FREDERICK STALLMAN (deceased). Probably no man was better or more favorably known to the people of York, Pa., than was the late Frederick Stallman, father of the "National Hotel," and the Masonic Hall, one of the most extensive cattle dealers in this section of the country, and a reliable and representative citizen. His death, which came as a shock to his great number of friends and acquaintances, occurred at his home No. 106 West Market street, York, at five o'clock in the morning of Feb. 27, 1890.

Mr. Stallman was born Dec. 26, 1820, at Hanover, Germany, and came to the United States when he was ten years old. He learned the butchering business, in which he became so successful, shipping large numbers of cattle to Europe. He bought very extensively in the South, driving his herds to the Northern markets. Mr. Stallman had the distinction of being one of the first to ship cattle from Baltimore to York by rail, and no man in the East was better known in his line of business. Mr. Stallman was the father of the well known "National Hotel" of York, which he purchased in 1863, when it was the "Tremont House," remodeling and enlarging it. In 1863 he built the Masonic Hall, located on North Beaver street, which is still used by that order, Mr. Stallman having sold it to the fraternity. Mr. Stallman was a Mason and at his death this order conducted his funeral.

In 1863, when General Early, with the advance of Lee's army, captured York, Mr. Stallman was one of the leading citizens. When Early made a demand for $100,000, the sum of $28,000 was raised by the citizens before the Confederate force was recalled toward Gettysburg. Daniel Hartman, Frederick Stallman, and a third citizen, whose name is not recalled counted out the money that had been collected by the citizens, in the presence of Gen. Early at his headquarters in the sheriff's office in the County Court House.

Mr. Stallman was first married to Miss Jane Metzel, daughter of Thomas Metzel, who died in middle life. Mr. Stallman married (second) Nov. 13, 1861, Miss Priscilla Gilbertorre, daughter of William Gilbertorre, and she survives, living at No. 2 South Beaver street, York.

PETER A. ELSESSER is to be individually considered as one of the representative citizens and business men of York, where he is incumbent of the office of secretary and treasurer of the Martin Carriage Works, and, in a more abstract sense, as a member of a family whose name has been honorably linked with the history of this section of the State for many decades.

Mr. Elsesser was born near Hanover, this county, April 14, 1867, son of Lawrence G. and Anna (Zortman) Elsesser, both of whom were born and reared in York county, the former being a son of Michael Elsesser, and the latter a daughter of Peter Zortman, both of whom were sterling pioneers. The parents of our subject now reside in the city of York, the father being retired from active business. The major portion of his active career was devoted to general trading. This honored couple became the parents of twelve children, of whom Peter A. was fourth in the order of birth; John died in early childhood, and Emma at the age of six months, as a result of an accident, having been severely scalded. The surviving children are as follows: Harry F. is a painter and paper hanger by vocation; William D. is a resident of Minneapolis, Minn.; Lillie is the wife of Wesley Brubaker, a member of the fire department at Atlantic City, N. J.; Augustus A. is a cigar manufacturer of Abbottstown, Adams county; Sarah A. is the wife of Prof. S. P. Duggan, Ph. D., of New York City; Edward is manager of the Safety Storage Company of York; Alverta E. is the widow of Robert L. Ketterman, who was employed in the Martin Carriage works; Jennie is the wife of George W. Myers, who is employed at the Martin Carriage Works; Catherine remains at the parental home; and Peter A.

Peter A. Elsesser completed the curriculum of the public schools and then became a student in the Normal School at East Berlin, Pa., while later he continued his studies in the York County Academy. After leaving the academy he turned his attention to teaching in the public schools of Adams county, being thus engaged about one year, after which he passed three years in traveling through the West, as salesman and collector for an extensive shirt manufactory. He then returned to York county, and for two terms was a successful and popular teacher in the public schools of Emigsville. In 1892 he accepted the position of stenographer in the office of the Martin Carriage Works, and about two years later he was made general manager, while in 1900 he assumed the office of secretary of the company, in which he is now a stockholder, and in 1903 in addition to all his other responsibilities he was made treasurer as well as secretary. He is also president of the York Safety Storage Company.

In politics Mr. Elsesser is independent, and fraternally he is a prominent and appreciative member of the Masonic order, being affiliated with Zeredatha Lodge, No. 451, F. & A. M.; Howell Chapter, No. 199, R. A. M.; Gethsemane Commandery, No. 75, K. T.; Zembo Temple, of the Mystic Shrine, in Harrisburg, where he is a member of the Consistory of the Ancient & Accepted Scottish Rite Masonry. He also holds membership in the Knights of Pythias Lodge in York. Both Mr. and Mrs. Elsesser are zealous and valued members of St. Matthew's Lutheran Church, in which he has been a deacon since 1902, while he is the able and honored teacher of the Bible class in the Sunday school, said class having started with eleven members, in 1898, and now numbering 115 members. In 1902 Mr. Elsesser was elected president of the York Y. M. C. A., and was chosen as his own successor in 1903, 1904 and 1905. He is deeply interested in religious work, and is a strong factor in the business and social life of the community, where his circle of friends is circumscribed only by that of his acquaintances.

On Jan. 26, 1803, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Elsesser to Miss Lizzie E. Rutter, daughter of Samuel Rutter, a prominent farmer near Emigsville, this county, where, on the old homestead, Mrs. Elsesser was born and reared. Mr. Elsesser was one of the organizers of the Royal Fire Company, of which he was the first treasurer, holding that office continually until the present time, and he has also been a trustee from the organization to the present. There is no other man of his years in York who has done more in public matters and in directing educational, church and Y. M. C. A. work than Peter A. Elsesser.

ROBERT COLVIN WISE, of Lower Chanceford township, York county, was born Nov. 5, 1834, on what is now the Samuel Stokes farm in that township, son of Samuel and Ann (Colvin) Wise, and grandson of Henry Wise.

Henry Wise was a blacksmith by trade, and followed his profession in Chanceford township, where he owned and operated a farm. He married a Miss Shaull, who lived to be 100 years old, and they were the parents of these children: John; Samuel; Jacob; Philip; Joseph; Henry; Betsy, who married a Mr. McAlister; Pollie, who married Mr. Curran; Kate, who married Mr. Ellis; and Andrew.

Samuel Wise was born in Chanceford township, where he received a common school education and followed farming all of his life. When our subject was a year old, the father rented the Hugh Ross farm, and from there went to the William Grove farm, where he stayed two years, then spent four years on the McCall farm, four years on the Samuel Stokes farm, and then located on the William Gemmell farm, where he remained for eleven years. He next bought the farm upon which Robert C. Wise now resides, where he lived until his death. Mr. Wise and his wife, who had been Ann Colvin, were members of the Chanceford Presbyterian Church, in which faith they died on their farm. In politics Mr. Wise was a Democrat. These children were born to this worthy couple: Sally, who died at the age of seven years; Robert C.; William, a farmer, who married a Miss Glenn, and died in Lower Chanceford township; James, who married Annie McIlvane; Ann Elizabeth, who married Gibson Martin, deceased.

Robert Colvin Wise attended the common schools of the township, his first schooling being received at Cherry Hill school under Thomas McKinnon, and finished at Chanceford school, at the age of twenty years, under George Campbell. In the summer Mr. Wise worked on the farm for his father. As a boy Mr. Wise went to the Sabbath-school, and at the age of twenty-three years joined the Lower Chanceford Presbyterian Church, of which he has been a devout member ever since. In his youth he taught a class in the Sabbath-school. At the death of his father Mr. Wise inherited the home farm and here he has since been engaged.

On Jan. 24, 1866, Mr. Wise was married by the Rev. Mr. McElrney to Miss Mary Ann Martin, at his bride's home in-Airville. Mrs. Wise was born Nov. 22, 1831, in Hopewell township, daughter of Andrew and Jane (Gibson) Martin, the former of whom was a farmer, who had been reared near Center Church, Hopewell township, where he owned a farm, which he sold in 1838, and bought a farm, upon part of which Airville now stands. This farm of 180 acres, he divided and sold off in building lots. Here he died in his seventy-second year, while his wife died some years later, being at the time of her death seventy-two years old.

To Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Wise the following children have been born: William G.; Samuel A., born Jan. 20, 1868, married Janet Warner, and they reside at Collinsville, and have five children, Chester. Beulah. Samuel Ross. Robert Norris and Sterl. Warner; Ira B., born Aug. 25, 1870, married Miss Mattie L. Tosh, and has four children, Anne Janet, Ira F., Goldie May and Samuel Amos. Mr. Wise has been a lifelong Democrat, and has been school director two terms, and has also held the offices of auditor and treasurer.

THEODORE F. GIVLER, now living retired in York, Pa., was born Feb. 25, 1844, in Cumberland county, Pa., son of Benjamin and Isabella (McLaughlin) Givler.
Benjamin Givler was a son of parents who came from Germany to Cumberland county after a season in Lancaster county, Pa. By trade Benjamin Givler was a miller, and prior to 1844 he operated the mill back of Carlisle, later moved to the Silver Springs mill, and still later lived near Kingston. In early life he was connected with the Presbyterian Church, but afterward united with the Lutheran Church. He died in 1865, aged nearly sixty-eight years, and his wife passed away in August of the same year, at about the same age. Of their eight children, two died in infancy, and the others were: Thomas, a retired resident of Mechanicsburg; Austin, residing in Cumberland county; Benjamin, a miller near Shiremanstown, Cumberland county; Isabella, wife of Theodore Heagy, of Peabody, Kan.; Theodore F.; and William, lieutenant of Company F, 130th P. V. I., who was killed at the battle of Antietam, in 1862.

Until the age of sixteen years, Theodore F. Givler remained in Cumberland county, and then came to York county to learn the milling business with his brother Austin. While still an apprentice, in 1864, he enlisted in Company E, 200th P. V. I., and served until mustered out in May, 1865, participating in the battles in front of Petersburg and at Fort Steadman, being at the front during the greatest part of his term of service.

After returning from the army, Mr. Givler spent some four years with his brother Austin, and they purchased a mill, but in 1869 he came back to York county and took charge of the Hoops mill, which was the property of his father-in-law, Walh Hoops. This mill he operated for thirteen years, until 1883, one of the most satisfactory mills in Washington township. In 1884 he moved to Hall, and in the spring of 1890 he took charge of the store at that point, and during his four years there was postmaster. Since then Mr. Givler has lived retired. During his active years he took much interest in politics, is a strong supporter of the Republican party, and has served as justice of the peace in Washington township, and as a member of the school board.

On Aug. 1, 1869, Mr. Givler married Miss Lucinda Hoops, daughter of Walh and Sarah Ann (Leach) Hoops. Three children have been born to them: George W., a grocer at No. 145 North Newberry street, York; Charles A., who has a dry goods store at Nos. 105-107 South George street, York, Pa.; and Theodore, who died in childhood.

JACOB T. SMITH, a retired farmer of Washington township, York county, was born April 19, 1833, in Shrewsbury township, son of John W., and grandson of Anthony Smith. Anthony Smith was a prominent farmer of Codorus township, who married a member of the old Werner family. He died in Washington township, aged seventy-six years, and was buried at Red Run Church. His children were: Anthony; Elizabeth, who married John Weigond; John W., father of Jacob T. All became well known and respected residents of Washington township.

John W. Smith was born in Codorus where he spent his early life. He married Hannah Thoman (a complete history of the Thoman family will be found elsewhere), who died aged fifty-six years. They had children as follows: John, who died near Clear Springs, York county, married Anna Hollinger; Jacob T.; Elizabeth married Aaron Urich and died in York county; and Jesse, who died on the home farm in Washington township, married Caroline Hollinger. John W. Smith, the father, was a miller by trade, and owned a mill property of sixty acres in Shrewsbury township, where he also engaged in farming until 1849, when he settled in Washington township, and there bought a farm of 270 acres. In 1857 he erected new buildings and made many improvements, later dividing his large estate into two farms. He lived retired a few years before his accidental death, which came from the effects of a fall from a hay mow, when seventy-two years of age. Both he and his wife are buried at Red Run Church, where they had membership. He had contributed liberally to the erection and support of this church, and he was a well-known and highly respected citizen.

Jacob T. Smith spent his school days in Codorus and Washington townships, being seven years old when he came to the latter. He remembers attending school in an old log schoolhouse near his home, in which the Dunkards also held religious services. After he completed his schooling he assisted his father at home and in 1862 he bought the farm. In 1880 he built a handsome brick residence which is now owned by his son, John C., who purchased the farm from his father. Our subject still owns the adjoining farm, on which he resided for six years. Since the death of his wife he has made his home around with his children.

In 1859 Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Catherine Hollinger, daughter of George and Elizabeth (Asper) Hollinger. The families are closely connected, three Smith brothers marrying three Hollinger sisters. Mrs. Smith died in 1903, aged sixty-six years, and was laid to rest in the cemetery at Red Run. Their children were: Annie, who died aged twenty-nine years; George W., a resident of Harrisburg, who married Amanda Spangler; Catharine, who married John W. Slothower; Lenore, who married John W. Slothower; Calvin, a prominent farmer of the township, now serving as school director, who married Emma C. Kinnel; Jacob H., who married Margrethe E. Schultz, and is engaged in civil service as mail carrier in Harrisburg, near Hall; and Jonas A., who married Mary Bear, and is engaged in the grocery business in Lemoyne. There are sixteen grandchildren.

Mr. Smith is a man of marked intelligence, one who keeps thoroughly posted in all current events, and spends much of his time perusing the best literature of the day. In spite of his seventy-three years he enjoys good health, his only complaint being failing eyesight. He has served in a number of local offices, in 1880 being tax collector and later was both assistant assessor and assessor. On account of his sterling character he has, upon many occasions, been chosen as administrator of large estates in York county, which have been settled in a manner satisfactory to all concerned.

FRANKLIN LEADER, secretary of the Freystown Mutual Fire Insurance Co., with headquarters in the city of York, is a representative of a family whose name has been intimately linked with the history of York county since the early pioneer epoch.

His great-grandfather in the agnatic line was a prominent farmer of Hopewell township, as was also the latter's son, George Leader, grandfather of our subject.

George W. Leader, son of George and father of Franklin, is now living retired in the city of York, his active career having been devoted principally to wagon making. His wife, whose maiden name was Fanny Newcomer, is a daughter of Abraham Newcomer, an influential farmer near Mountville, Lancaster county, where the family has long been one of prominence and no little distinction in industrial and civic affairs. George W. and Fanny (Newcomer) Leader became the parents of five children, namely: Elizabeth and Ella, who remain at the parental home; William H., who is identified in an executive capacity with the York Telephone Company; Emma, wife of George Bailey, of York, her husband having been a soldier in the regular army and being now retired; and Franklin.

Franklin Leader was born in Mount Joy, Lancaster county, Pa., May 11, 1855, and when he was about three years of age his parents removed thence to West Manchester township, York county, in whose public schools he secured his early educational discipline, after which he continued his studies in the Pennsylvania State Normal School at Millersville, where he remained as a student for thirteen weeks. After leaving the Normal he put his scholastic acquirements to practical test by engaging in teaching in the public schools of York county, proving successful in his pedagogic endeavors, and continuing to devote his attention to this profession for ten and one-half terms. In 1897 he was elected justice of the peace of Spring Garden township, for a term of five years, during which he served with marked discrimination and acceptability. He was appointed May 7, 1902, notary public. On June 13, 1904, Mr. Leader was elected to his present responsible position as secretary of the Freystown Mutual Fire Insurance Company, whose interests are well entrusted to his administrative care.

His uncle, John Stough, was county treasurer of York county, and another uncle, William Roberts, served a term as treasurer of Lancaster county, while Mr. Leader himself served fourteen months in 1890 and 1900 as deputy treasurer of York county under W. J. Bush.

In his political allegiance Mr. Leader is identified with the Democracy and he has been an active worker in the local ranks of the party. He is affiliated with the Junior Order of United American Mechanics; the Improved Order of Red Men and the degree of Pocahontas, with which latter his wife also is identified; while he also holds membership in the Spring Garden Relief Association, of which he has been secretary for nearly a quarter of a century; in the Pennsylvania Agricultural Works Beneficial Society; and the Good Will Fire Company, of York, of which he is president.

Mr. Leader has been twice married. In 1879 he wedded Miss Emma Wanbaugh, daughter of Michael Wanbaugh, of Spring Garden township, and she was summoned to the life eternal in 1891, at the age of thirty-two years, having borne three children, namely: Michael W., who died at the age of twenty-two years; Margaret Elizabeth, who is the wife of Elwood Washers, of York; and Fanny Irene, who remains with her father. On Christmas day, 1893, Mr. Leader consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Mary E. Landis, daughter of Henry S. Landis, a representative farmer of Stony Brook, where she was reared and educated. Mr. Leader is well and favorably known in York county, is a progressive and reliable business man, and both he and his wife enjoy marked popularity in the social circles of the community.

DAVID STONER DETWILER, a well-to-do cigar manufacturer and prominent citizen of Wrightsville, has passed his entire life in the neighborhood of that town.

Joseph Detwiler, his grandfather, was a native of Lancaster county, Pa., where he grew up and where he married Susan Garber. In 1820 they moved to York county, settling on a farm in Hellam township, near Wrightsville, which remains in the family to this day. Mr. Detwiler built the barn which now stands on the farm, and enlarged the original house, which is still occupied by his descendants. He and his wife both passed away at their home on this farm where so much of their lives had been spent. He was an active Democrat all his life, and he served many years as a school director, a number of years as pike supervisor, and one term as county commissioner of York county. The children of Joseph and Susan (Garber) Detwiler were as follows: David, father of David Stoner; Joseph, married to Miss Sherk, who died in Mt. Joy, Lancaster county; Miss Susan, who lives in York; Dan-iel, of Columbia, married to Laura Sanderson, of Williamsport; Solomon S., organizer of the First National Bank of Columbia, of which he was cashier until his death, and married to Katherine Redsecker; and Annie, married to Abraham Heistand, of York.

David Detwiler, father of David Stoner, was born in January, 1818, on the Lancaster Pike, near Columbia, Lancaster county. When he was two years old his parents moved to the homestead near Wrightsville, and there he grew up, working on the farm and attending the neighborhood schools. After the death of his father he carried on the home farm, and lived there until 1879. He then built the house which is the present home of his daughter, Mrs. George Graybill, and there resided until his death, Dec. 14, 1898. Like his father, Mr. Detwiler was all his life a Democrat, and served as one of the school directors in Hellam township for many years. He succeeded his father as turnpike supervisor, and held the position for twenty-five years. His wife, Sarah Stoner, was born in Hellam township, Feb. 6, 1829, daughter of Henry and sister of Emanuel Stoner, of Hellam township. Her death occurred in December, 1901, three years after that of her husband. They had the following children: Paul, of Wrightsville; Anna, Mrs. George Graybill, of York; David Stoner; and Ella K., widow of Dr. G. A. Rehman, of Wrightsville.

David Stoner Detwiler was born on the home farm adjoining the town of Wrightsville Jan. 11, 1856. He grew up a farmer boy, but attended school regularly until he was nineteen years old. His first teacher was William Levergood; in Hellam township he came under the instruction of Col. Frank J. Magee, and he attended the Millersville Normal School during the years 1874 and 1875. After leaving school Mr. Detwiler passed a few years at home on the farm, and in 1881 began business as a cigar manufacturer and dealer in leaf tobacco in Wrightsville. His factory is in the building on Front street, formerly used by William McConkey as a grain warehouse. He buys as much as $50,000 worth of leaf tobacco a year, and the yearly output of his factory for some years has been 4,000,000 cigars. He has other business interests in Wrightsville, and has been a director in some of the larger concerns. He gives a great deal of attention to his farming interests in Hellam township.

On Oct. 12, 1886, Mr. Detwiler married Matilda G. Kerr, daughter of William H. Kerr, of Wrightsville, a sketch of whom appears following. Two children have been born of this union: Helen B. and Reba May. In politics, like his forefathers, Mr. Detwiler is a Democrat. His first presidential vote was cast in 1876 for the Democratic candidate. He has served as chief burgess of the town, his term expiring in March, 1903. He is one of the directors of the First National Bank of Wrightsville. Although brought up in the Lutheran faith, he attends the Presbyterian Church with his wife.

WILLIAM H. KERR, a son of Matthew Kerr, Sr., is a prosperous citizen of Wrightsville, where he has passed his entire life.

Mr. Kerr was born Oct. 19, 1828, on the family place which he now owns, situated in the rear of his present home. He obtained his education in the common schools of Wrightsville, and at eighteen began work as mate on the canal boats plying between Wrightsville and the eastern and western shores of Maryland along Chesapeake Bay. He rose to the position of captain of a boat owned by William A. Wilt, of York, and later was captain for a number of years on boats owned by his father and his brother, James L. Kerr. He then purchased an interest in the lime business of his father, and continued with the firm through all its changes until the business passed into the hands of the next generation. The firm, at first, Matthew Kerr & Son, became James L. Kerr & Company; passed successively as Robert W. Kerr & Company, James L. Kerr & Company, Kerr, Cook & Co., James L. Kerr & Co., and finally Kerr Brothers, under which name it is carried on at present by the grandsons of Matthew Kerr, Sr.

Mr. Kerr married in Wrightsville, in 1850, Eliza Beaverson, a native of Hellam township, and a daughter of Henry Beaverson, who was also born in Hellam township, where he was well-known as a boat man, and as a tobacco grower. Mrs. Kerr died at the family home in 1897. She was the mother of the following children: Kate and Sarah, unmarried; Gertrude, Mrs. John S. Musser, of Harrisburg; Harry, who is mentioned elsewhere; Matilda, Mrs. David Stoner Detwiler, of Wrightsville; Sewall B., at home; Eliza, Mrs. Paul McJunkin; and several others who died in infancy.

Mr. Kerr attends the Presbyterian Church, of which his wife was a member. He has always been a Democrat, and he cast his first vote for President Polk. He has served as chief burgess on the town council for several years, and has been a school director for some time. He is one of the directors and vice president of the Wrightsville Bank. Fraternally he belongs to Riverside Lodge, No. 503, F. & A. M.

WILLIAM G. KIMMEL, of Warrington township, York county, who is making his home at Mount Top, was born July 3, 1835, in Washington township, son of David and Elizabeth (Gensler) Kimmel, grandson of David and great-grandson of Nicholas Kimmel.

The Kimmel family in Pennsylvania descended from German ancestry and it is recorded that there were three brothers, who came from Germany, one of whom was the progenitor of the branch of the Kimmel family herein mentioned.

Nicholas Kimmel, the great-grandfather, was born, says tradition, in Lancaster county, but he settled in York county at an early date. He was a farmer, and cleared and improved the farm now occupied by Cleason C. Kimmel, the son of our subject, which the latter owns. Here Nicholas Kimmel lived all of his life, and it is believed, he was buried on the farm. His wife's name is not known, but among the children born to the couple were: David, grandfather of our subject; Timothy; Joel; and several others, whose names cannot be learned. In religious belief they were German Baptists.

David Kimmel, the grandfather, was born in Washington township, and became a farmer, owning a part of the farm which is now owned by Cleason C. Kimmel, and which is located in what is called the Barrens. He became quite a prosperous farmer, and lived many years on the above mentioned property, and also inherited a farm from his father, upon which he died in 1845, aged eighty years. He married Magdaline Wiley, and she bore him these children: John, George, David, Jacob, Mrs. Elizabeth Larue, Mrs. Sally Harbold, Mrs. Harriet Wolfe, Mrs. Leah Best and Mrs. Susan Won-
The family were German Baptists. In his political views Mr. Kimmel was a Democrat.

David Kimmel, father of our subject, was also born in Washington township, and like his forefathers, was a farmer all of his life. He acquired two good farms, and at the time of his death was considered quite well-to-do. He and his wife were the parents of fourteen children, namely: Magdaline, who married Joseph Speck; Mary A., who married John Straley; Philip; William G.; John; Samuel; Eliza, who married Henry Keeney; Jesse; Joseph; Rebecca, who married Conrad Hobaugh; Daniel, deceased; Frederick, deceased, and two that died in infancy. Mr. Kimmel died in 1868, in the faith of the German Baptist Church, while his wife passed away in her seventieth year.

William G. Kimmel was born in Washington township, and received his education in the common schools of his day. He also attended the Whitehall Academy, an institution now defunct, which was located in Cumberland county, and after graduating, he began school teaching, which he followed until he was thirty-two years old. He then turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, and up to the present time he has accumulated three good farms, located in Warrington township, and Washington township. Mr. Kimmel has met with much success due to his industry.

On Nov. 18, 1866, Mr. Kimmel married Mary A. Detter, daughter of John Detter. She was born in Washington township, where she received her education in the district schools. Two children have been born to this union: Cleason C., a farmer of Washington township, married Miss Mary Arnold, and they have had three children: William G., Jr., Lewis and Alta; and Laura J., married George J. Knaub, and they have two children. William L. and Paul. In religious belief both Mr. and Mrs. Kimmel are liberal supporters of the United Brethren Church. In politics Mr. Kimmel is liberal, voting rather for the man than the party. Mr. Kimmel's knowledge is conceded to be far above the average in agricultural matters, and he is highly respected as the worthy representative of an old and honored York county family.

ELMER E. FREY represents a family which has been prominently identified with this section of the State since early pioneer days. He is a member of the firm of Frey Brothers, conducting a large coal and wood business in York, while he is also a stockholder in the Spring Garden Brick Manufacturing Co., representing one of the most extensive industrial enterprises in the line to be found in the county. The interested principals in the wood and coal business are Messrs. Emanuel, Marcellus and Elmer E. Frey, the first mentioned being the brother of Marcellus and father of Elmer E., and both Emanuel and Marcellus are now retired from active association with the business. The enterprise, which has headquarters at the southwest corner of East King and Fulton streets, formerly Freystown, now the Twelfth ward, York, dates its inception back to 1869. The founder was Emanuel Frey, father of the present active member of the firm, and he was long numbered among the prominent and influential business men of York, while as a citizen he has ever commanded the most unequivocal confidence and esteem in the community. He is a native of York county, where he was born Aug. 6, 1836, and for a number of years he was employed in the car shops of Billmeyer & Small, of York, while in 1869 he established the coal and wood business with which he was actively identified until 1892, when he retired, leaving the management of the enterprise to his son, as previously noted. For a number of years he was also prominently concerned in the manufacturing of brick, under the firm name of I. Frey & Co., and he disposed of his interests in this industry in 1901, the firm being succeeded by the Spring Garden Brick Manufacturing Co., Ltd., in which the interested principals are Israel, C. D. Frey, and Elmer E. and Ethan A. Frey, so that the personnel of the company is entirely represented by members of the family. The business was incorporated in 1903, and the executive corps is as follows: Elmer Frey, president; C. D. Frey, secretary, and Israel Frey, treasurer. The company controls a large and important business, its manufacturing plant being located in Spring Garden township, while its offices and yards are located in the city of York.

Elmer E. Frey was born in Freystown, a village named in honor of the family, and now constituting one of the attractive suburban districts of the city of York, the town having been located and platted by his great-grandfather, Capt. Samuel Frey, who was one of the honored and distinguished pioneers of the county and for many years a captain in the State militia. Elmer E. Frey was born Aug. 6, 1861, being the second in order of birth of the five children of Emanuel and Rebecca Frey. He received his educational training in the public schools of York county, and at the age of seventeen years entered upon an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade, with William Miller, of Freystown, with whom he continued to be associated for six years after completing his apprenticeship. He then identified himself with the coal and wood business, in company with his father and brother and has since been actively concerned in the management of this successful enterprise, having bought the interest of Israel Frey in the firm of Frey Brothers in August, 1892. In politics Mr. Frey gives his support to the Democratic party, and fraternal he is identified with Zeredatha Lodge, No. 451, A. F. & A. M., and with the local organization of the Knights of Malta, while he is a sincere and valued member of St. Mark's Lutheran Church.

On Oct. 19, 1886, Mr. Frey was united in marriage to Miss Kate Heistand, daughter of John S. and Annie (Oleweiler) Heistand, well known residents of Springettsbury township, York county, Pa., where she was born and reared. Mr. and Mrs. Frey have two children, Stephen H. and Helen L.

JACOB MYERS, of Monaghan township, who follows a shemaking business and engages in the cultivation of fine fruit on his little farm of thirty-one acres, was born in that same township, Dec. 22, 1827, son of Frederick and Sarah (Fryinger) Myers, both of whom were born in York county.

Frederick Myers was a cooper and butcher by trade, and followed these lines until his death, which occurred at the age of thirty-five years. His wife was killed by a stroke of lightning at the age of forty-four years, and they had two children: Elizabeth, who married Peter Heiges; and Jacob. Frederick Myers was a member of the German Lutheran Church, and a Democrat in politics.

Jacob Myers received his education in the common schools of York county, and at an early age was bound out to Jacob Cocklin, with whom he remained until the age of seventeen years, when he learned the trade of shoemaker, which he has followed, off and on, nearly all his life. He has devoted much of his time to growing fruit, and at one time was in the nursery business. His farm comprises thirty-one acres, and he has raised some excellent brands of peaches—Mt. Rose, Fox Seddley, Crawford's Late Wheatland, Ford's Late Elberta and several other varieties.

In 1851 Mr. Myers married Susan Cromlick, daughter of Frederick Cromlick, and they have had these children: Frederick C., deceased; Jacob J.; John W.; William H.; Joseph, deceased; Andrew J., deceased; and Peter K., deceased. Mrs. Myers died in 1888, aged fifty-six years. Mr. Myers is a consistent member of the Church of God. In politics he votes the Democratic ticket, but has never aspired to office. He has a standing in his community as a man of integrity, and he is one of the first class agriculturists of the township.

WILLIAM JAMES MARTIN, engaged in the blacksmith, wheelwright and general repair business, also carrying on carriage making, was born in Lower Chanceford township, York county, Feb. 26, 1858, and is a highly respected citizen of his community.

Mr. Martin received his education in the public schools and Pleasant Grove Academy, his teachers being: Frances Cameron, Samuel McCollam, Robert Milliner and Robert Chanel, and he finished his schooling at the age of twenty-one years under Professor Grove. Until nineteen years of age he worked on the farm, and then learned the trade of blacksmith with J. F. McDonald, of Lower Chanceford township, carrying on this trade on the home farm until his marriage. After marriage Mr. Martin started on his present place, where he has since been engaged. In the same year, 1886, he built his present home and also his shop, on a tract of eight acres of land. He continued his blacksmithing, also taking up carriage making and wheelwrighting, and at the present time does gun, bicycle and stove repairing, and has been very successful.

Mr. Martin is a member of the Guinston United Presbyterian Church, which he joined in 1874. Since 1884 he has been an elder in the church, has also been at times an officer in the Sabbath school, and for the last five years has been teacher of a Bible class. He has been a member of the Big Spring Presbytery a number of times and once a member of the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church. Politically he is a stanch Prohibitionist.

William J. Martin was married, in 1885, to Miss Ida H. Allison, born in Hopewell township, daughter of Gawn and Isabella (Grove) Allison, the latter a sister of Gordon Grove, of Muddy Creek Forks. Mrs. Martin was educated in the public schools and under Professor Prowell, and for six years she taught school, all of which time was spent in York county, except one year in Hancock Co., Ohio. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Martin, Marian Lois, who is attending the public schools.

ALEXANDER M. GROVE, merchant and miller at Muddy Creek Forks, Lower Chanceford township, was born Aug. 17, 1859, in Chanceford township, son of Alexander Gordon and Elizabeth (Thompson) Grove, and grandson of Jacob Grove.

Alexander Gordon Grove was born Jan. 8, 1823, at the Cross Roads in Hopewell township, and was one of six children. The family was carefully reared by his mother, who combined religious instruction with practical government. Mr. Grove's mother taught him the Alphabet from the Bible, and he later was instructed by James Proudfoot and Squire Sampson Smith, both of whom were noted educators of that day. Mr. Grove's father was a weaver, and after finishing his limited education the boy assisted him in the work, later engaging as a mason, at which work it is justly said he was unequaled, no man in all this region of Pennsylvania bearing a better reputation both as a builder and as a man than did Gordon Grove, as he is known. In 1853 Mr. Grove married Miss Elizabeth Thompson, and located on a forty-acre farm near Brogueville, which he had bought from Jacob Bowman. The soil of the farm was poor, but Mr. Grove's hard labor had its just reward, for at its sale the piece of land which he had purchased for $700 sold for $2,500. After selling his farm Mr. Grove retired, and for four years lived at Dallastown, but since that time has lived with his son. Alexander. He was reared in the Guinston United Presbyterian Church, and during his youth it was the custom of the parents to send the older children ahead to Sabbath service on foot, while they, with the youngest child, would follow on horseback. After his marriage Mr. Grove united with the New Harmony Presbyterian Church, at Brogueville. He was formerly a Whig but became a member of the Republican party on its organization, and has voted for every Presidential candidate of the party.

To Alexander Gordon Grove and his wife the following children were born: (1) Archibald Purdy Thompson, a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore, was for many years one of the most prominent physicians and surgeons in Dallastown, where he died. He married Cora Shaw, and his son, Dr. Austin Grove, was formerly resident physician of the York City Hospital, and is now on the Surgeon's Staff of the Hospital. (2) Robert A. lives in Lower Chanceford. (3) Alexander M. is mentioned below. (4) Emily J. married R. G. Andrews, of York. (5) James K. married S. Florence Wilson. (6) A. Theda married C. M. Fulton, of York. (7) J. William, a graduate of the Dental Department, University of Maryland, married Emily Bucher, and settled in Columbia, Pa., where he died. (8) Sarah B. married F. C. Uffelman, of Chanceford township.

Alexander M. Grove attended the Thompson school from the age of six years until he was seventeen, starting under the tutorage of Mary Bigler. After leaving school Mr. Grove began his business career as a clerk in the store of Henry Curran, at Brogueville, his home village, remaining there about three years, after which he attended Millersville Normal School for a time. He then clerked in the stores of Zeller & Gable and Stouch & Oswald, in York, and one year in Delta with H. R. Lloyd. He then entered a partnership with James W. Kilgore, in Brogueville, continuing with him two years, at the end of which time he embarked in business for himself at Brogueville. In 1888 Mr. Grove purchased from James P. Moffet the property where he has since resided, known as Muddy Creek Forks, and comprising 160 acres, on which were erected a general store, a railroad station, with all the necessary switches, a flour-mill, two dwellings, and other buildings. Under his administration many improvements have been made on the property, all the old buildings having been remodeled or painted, and four new dwellings having been put up, among them Mr. Grove’s present residence. The mill has been twice remodeled, being now an up-to-date roller process flour-mill, with a reputation second to none for making the old process buckwheat flour, which finds a ready sale. He has also built a modern grain elevator (capacity 9,000 bushels) and a new warehouse, the former being equipped with scales and the necessary machinery for handling and cleaning wheat, operated by waterpower. Mr. Grove has leased some of his ground to W. Scott Whiteford, who has erected thereon a large canning house, provided with all the latest machinery, and having a capacity equal to any house of the kind in York county. Mr. Grove’s store, which is the chief structure in this group of buildings, is a fine example of his ideas of what a business establishment should be. It is 40x60 feet in dimensions, three stories in height, and modern in all its appointments. It is heated by steam and lighted by gas from a private plant, and a complete telegraph and telephone service enables Mr. Grove to send and receive messages from any part of the civilized world without leaving his desk. In addition to this establishment Mr. Grove, in partnership with his brother-in-law, F. C. Uffelman, conducts a branch store at Brogueville Station. He also owns a farm which requires close attention, and the supervision of which, in addition to numerous other duties, makes him a very busy man. All his enterprises have prospered. In Mr. Grove’s mercantile venture he attributes equal share of his success to the efficient superintendence of his brother, James K., whose ability and judgment have never been open to question. With his assistance the establishment has become well known and extensively patronized as a reliable, up-to-date department store. He is also a partner with his brother in the fertilizer business.

Mr. Grove has been postmaster and express agent in Muddy Creek Forks for eighteen years, and for the past two years has been agent for the Maryland and Pennsylvania Railroad Company. For fifteen years he has been a director in the City Bank of York, and is president and one of the organizers of the York Eastern Telephone Company. He is a trustee of the York Collegiate Institute.

Mr. Grove since his youth has been a consistent member of the New Harmony Presbyterian Church of Brogueville. For several years he served as trustee and treasurer, and is now an elder, and he has always been a liberal contributor to all church projects. In politics he is a Republican. In fraternal circles he is a member of Esdraelon Lodge, No. 176, A. F. & A. M., of Delta.

On Nov. 1, 1883, Mr. Grove married Miss Elizabeth Uffelman, daughter of Frederick Uffelman, who was born in Germany and came to the United States in 1863, landing at New York, and later settling in Chanceford township, where he died. To Mr. and Mrs. Grove were born children as follows: Bessie N. and Carrie E., who are graduates of York Collegiate Institute and now are at Wilson College, Chambersburg; and Charles Gordon, who is at the York Collegiate Institute. Mrs. Grove has always been in full sympathy with her husband’s plans and ambitions, and though she has never taken any active part in his business affairs, she has done much by her good judgment and wise encouragement to help him in his striving toward worthy ends. The beautiful home in which Mr. and Mrs. Grove reside is situated on a hill overlooking the picturesque winding trail of the Peach Bottom railway. Therein dwell love and refinement, and the true spirit of domesticity, without which even architectural excellence and pleasing surroundings do not make a home.

SAMUEL MARTIN. Among the highly esteemed residents of York county, who have cultivated fine farms, may be mentioned Samuel Martin, who is now living retired on his estate in Lower Chanceford township. He is descended from Samuel Martin, who was of Scotch-Irish descent, and came to America from the North of Ireland. Settling in Hopewell township, in a log cabin which he had himself built, he became a well known farmer, and there he and his wife, who had been a Miss McNeary, reared a family of three sons and one daughter: Peter, who went to the Pigeon Creek settlement, in Washington county; James, who settled near Canonsburg; Andrew, the grandfather of our subject; and the daughter, who married Peter Stewart, and died in Chanceford township. Samuel Martin married (second) the Widow Allison, nee Wallace.

Andrew Martin was born in Hopewell township, where he followed farming all of his life. He married Miss Jenny or Margaret Allison, and died on his farm at a ripe age, and was survived by his second wife. The names of both him and his wife appear on the Guinston U. P. Church roll. Andrew Martin’s children were as follows: Samuel, born July 1, 1786, died a bachelor; Jane, born Dec. 26, 1787, married Joseph Thompson, and moved to New York State where she died; James died in infancy; Agnes, born in 1791, married Jacob Grove; Andrew, born Sept. 9, 1793, married (first) a Miss Brooks, and (second) Jane Gibson; Isabella, born July 25, 1795, married and died in Canonsburg; Alexander, born March 11, 1799; Margaret, born March 7, 1801, married Alexander Gordon, and died in New York State, the mother of the noted India missionary, Dr. Andrew Gordon; and Gavin, born Oct. 9, 1805, settled in Pittsburg, where he married and carried on a merchandise business.

Alexander Martin was born on the homestead in Hopewell township, where his early life was passed as a farmer boy. He located in Chanceford township and learned the carpenter’s trade with Robert Anderson, after which he followed that trade for a time and then bought a 138-acre farm, which now belongs to our subject. The house upon the farm was built by our subject for his father, and he was compelled to make his own sash, doors, etc. Alexander Martin married Elizabeth Allison, daughter of Willia mand Janet (Gemmell) Allison. He and his wife were members of the Guinston U. P. Church, in whose work they were very active. Mr. Martin was an old line Whig, later becoming a Republican. His death occurred May 3, 1871, while his wife passed away Oct. 24, 1865. To this worthy couple the following children were born: William C. A., born April 15, 1822, died at the age of twenty-six years; Andrew died in his second year; Samuel; Alexander and Margaret Janet died young; one died in infancy; John Adams died at the age of six years; and Gavin Allison died young.

Samuel Martin was born April 18, 1826, on the old homestead farm, upon which he has spent all of his life. His education was received in the subscription schools under Samuel McCaul, Thomas Caldwell, Robert Cresswell and Benjamin Fulk, and in the public schools under John Laird and James W. Logue, late of Cleveland, Northfield and Stowe. He left school at the age of twenty years, his schooling having been very irregular. After leaving school Mr. Martin learned the carpenter’s trade with James H. Wiley, with whom he served nineteen months. After serving a short time as journeyman he contracted for himself for a short time. He owned and operated a sawmill for four years in Chanceford township, and then moved it to his farm, where he ran it for a time. He next worked as a car builder for Bimler & Small, and also for Ilgenfritz & White. In March, 1863, he secured a position as woodworker with A. B. Farquhar, and at times worked as a machinist. In 1865 he returned home for a time, in 1867 going back to York, where for a short period he worked as a pattern maker. In 1871 Mr. Martin’s father died, and he returned home to take charge of the farm. He added a machine shop, where he made telegraph insulator pins and brackets, and also ran the sawmill on his place.

Mr. Martin united with the Guinston U. P. Church, in 1849, the year he was married to Miss Elizabeth Kilgore, born June 30, 1825, in Fawn township, daughter of Solomon and Elizabeth (Smith) Kilgore. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Martin: Margaret Elizabeth, born Dec. 14, 1849, married Samuel McPherson, of Lower Chanceford township; Martha Amanda, born July 6, 1851, married Valentine Trout, of Hopewell township; Alexander, born March 9, 1853, married Maggie Kilgore, of Lower Chanceford township; John Andrew, born May 12, 1854, married (first) Mary Koplin and (second) Emma Cooper, and resides at Altoona; Catherine, born Oct. 17, 1855, died in 1892; William James, born Feb. 26, 1858, married April 21, 1885, Ida Allison; Sarah Elnora, born July 3, 1859, married Charles G. McCollum, of Lancaster; Samuel Francis, born March 30, 1861, died Feb. 20, 1889; Mary Rebecca, born June 7, 1863, married Walter Slade, of Harford county; David Gordon, born March 7, 1865, married Mary Greiman, and resides in Philadelphia; Arthur Charles was born Jan. 9, 1867; Harry Edward Allison, born June 9, 1809, died young; and Ida Belle, who was born July 8, 1875, is now the wife of Robert J. Patterson, of York.

Samuel Martin was nurtured in the principles which were embodied in the Whigs into the Republican party, and he has been identified with this political organization since its formation in 1852. Mr. Martin now lives in comfortable retirement after his many active years of agricultural life, and he is highly esteemed and respected in York county.

DR. H. E. BASHORE, of York, is descended from French ancestry, the name having been originally written Borshor. His great-great-grandfather, Jacob Bashore, was a farmer and removed from Berks to York county. Our subject's grandfather was born in this country, and his father now lives a retired life, making his home with the Doctor. Dr. Bashore's mother was Annie Swatzbaugh, whose father was the well known millwright and farmer of York county. Four children were born to Dr. Bashore's parents: Harry; Virtie, wife of William D. Armor, of Gettysburg; Katy, wife of George Yagey, in the railroad service at Baltimore; and Dr. H. E.

The birth of Dr. Bashore occurred Jan. 17, 1862, in Hanover, York county. He entered the University of Maryland in 1883. Immediately after his graduation in 1886 he began the practice of dentistry at No. 137 West Market street, York, and he has remained there ever since in the enjoyment of a large and lucrative practice. Four students who chose him for their preceptor are now successful practicing dentists of York, while a fifth is practicing in Philadelphia.

Dr. Bashore was married Oct. 14, 1890, to Elizabeth Reichley, daughter of Jacob Reichley, of York. The Doctor belongs to the York Dental Society, the Knights of Malta and Crystal Lodge, Knights of Pythias, which he helped to organize, and of which he was the first past officer. In religion he is a member of Christ Lutheran Church, and in all that he does is a painstaking and capable gentleman.

CHARLES GROTHEY, a veteran of the Civil war, now living retired in York, after a life of industry, was born May 10, 1828, at Hanover, Germany, son of Ernest Henry and Charlotte Grothey.

Ernest Henry Grothey was a tanner and shoemaker in his native land. After the death of his wife in Germany, he came to America, where he lived a retired life until his death at the age of eighty-seven years. He was interred in the Prospect Hill cemetery.

Charles Grothey learned the brushmaking trade in Germany, and became a skilled mechanic. When twenty-three years old he came to America and landed in Baltimore, where he lived some four years, and while there enlisted in the State Guards, and was made an officer, serving with that organization for three years. He then came to New Salem, York county, and bought a home but in the following year he removed to Glatfelter's Station, where he followed farming for some seven years. Later he sold this farm and bought a home on North Penn street, in which he lived for five years. During this time he enlisted in Company H, 200th P. V. I., and was out ten months, participating in several important engagements, namely: Fort Steadman, Petersburg and others. Much of the time during his army service he had charge of the pickets, his faithful attention to duty making his services at all times valuable.

Mr. Grothey spent seven years in a mercantile business at Fairfield, in Adams county, and still owns a store property there, and also has a fine farm in North Codorus township. The latter is operated by his grandson, he having retired in 1893, and he is spending the evening of life in comfort and ease at his pleasant home at No. 519 Princess street, York.

Mr. Grothey was married (first) in Baltimore, to Elizabeth Marker, who was born in Hessen, Germany. She died May 2, 1896, aged seventy-one years, seven months and twenty-seven days, and is buried in the Ziegler Church cemetery in North Codorus township. The children of this marriage were: Charles, a farmer, married Annie R. Rosenzweig, and they live in North Codorus township; Mollie is the wife of Charles Deig, of Wisconsin; Henry married Laura Dingle, and they live in North York; Auguste married Henry Keener, of Fairfield, Adams county; Bertha died aged two years, four weeks; and Annie married Dr. William Long, of Frederick City, Md. Mr. Grothey was married (second) Oct. 12, 1896, by Rev. Walker, to Mrs. Annie E. Stoops, who had these children: Mary
George W. Holtzinger, Republican county commissioner, elected in 1905, a leading citizen of Windsor township, was born in that township July 2, 1847, on the farm now owned by M. B. Spahr, of York.

Mr. Holtzinger comes of a family long identified with York county, being a grandson of John and Barbara (Wolf) Holtzinger, who were of German extraction, but natives of Pennsylvania. John Holtzinger was a shoemaker by trade, and followed that calling principally during his active years, living in the neighborhood of Stonybrook, a short distance east of York, where he died about 1844. Of his large family of children, we have the names of John, George, Jacob, Daniel, Benjamin, Nancy, Catherine, Elizabeth, Susan and Mary.

George Holtzinger, father of George W., was born in York county, and received his education in the subscription schools in vogue here during his boyhood. He learned shoemaking from his father, and worked at that trade, and also acquired a knowledge of lime burning, at which he was engaged for about five years. Turning his attention to agricultural pursuits, he devoted his energies to same during the remainder of his active years. He purchased the farm in Windsor township now owned by M. B. Spahr, and later selling that place bought the one in the same township now owned by M. P. Smith. Here he passed his remaining years, and died at the age of sixty-four. He was a member of the Winebrennerian Church. Mr. Holtzinger married (first) Elizabeth Heindel, by whom he had six children namely: Lydia, Catherine, Elizabeth, Rebecca, Mary and Susan. The mother of these was a member of the Reformed Church. After her death Mr. Holtzinger married Susannah Stauffer, a native of York county, who died in 1879, at the age of sixty-six years. She was a Mennonite in religious faith. To this union were born four children, George W., David S., John and Sarah, of whom the last named died in infancy.

George W. Holtzinger obtained his education in the public schools of his native township and at a select school. When he reached the age of nineteen he received a certificate and engaged in teaching for a period of three years. In the meantime he learned the carpenter’s trade, following that occupation during the summer months. He then engaged in the cigar manufacturing business where the village of Holtz is now situated, at that place and at branch cigar factories employing about forty workmen. He continued in this business until 1902, meantime acquiring other interests in the locality. About 1895 he embarked in the mercantile business at the old Sechrist stand in Holtz, carrying on the store successfully four years. During the Harrison administration a post office was established at Holtz, and Mr. Holtzinger served four years as postmaster, having the office in his store. Since 1902, when he abandoned the manufacture of cigars, Mr. Holtzinger has given his attention to farming, to his duties as secretary of the Western Mutual Fire Insurance Company of York County, and to selling commercial fertilizers. He owns the homestead farm of twenty-four acres, and the Sechrist property containing thirty-six acres, and what was known as the Slenker farm of 136 acres. These farms are cultivated by his sons, John, Henry, and David. His other son, Moses, conducts the merchandising business at Holtz. Mr. Holtzinger became a director of the Drovers and Mechanics National Bank at York on its organization, in 1882, and has continued as such ever since. The Red Lion Canning Company, of which he is president, was organized in 1905. He has taken an active interest in public affairs, advocating the policy and principles of the Republican party. He served three years as jury commissioner, to which office he was elected in 1876; and in 1905 he was nominated and elected one of the commissioners for York county. He entered upon the duties of that responsible position in January, 1906, for which his many years of successful business experience have thoroughly fitted him.

In 1869 Mr. Holtzinger was married to Anna E. Keller, daughter of John and Eliza Keller, representative farming people of Lower Windsor township, and fourteen children were born to this union, five of whom died in infancy, and eight survive; Emma, who became the wife of H. A. Kinard, having died in WEBSTER WILLIS, of Newberry township, was born in 1832, in Fairview township, son of Joseph and Susan (Kreiger) Willis.

William Willis was born in 1777, in Dauphin county, and died April 14, 1843, being one of the first to be buried at Yocountown cemetery. During life Mr. Willis was a stone and brick mason, which trade he followed through Fairview township. Mr. Willis married a Miss Taylor and she died and is buried at Newberrytown. The children born to William Willis and his wife were: William, Joseph, John, Thomas, George and Hannah, all of whom are deceased.

Joseph Willis was born in Fairview township, Jan. 10, 1801. He received a common school education, and was a farmer all of his life. He married Susan Kreiger, born Sept. 21, 1802, who died May 21, 1872. Mr. Willis survived until 1873, when he died, and he and his wife are buried at Yocountown cemetery, where a magnificent monument marks their last resting place. The children born to this worthy couple are as follows: William, who died at Goldsboro; Jacob, who died April 15, 1891, aged sixty-six years; Harriet, born Dec. 6, 1826, who married Samuel N. Prowell, father of Prof. George R. Prowell, and died Oct. 8, 1864, being buried at the Yocountown cemetery; Mary, who died single; John, who died in 1900, aged seventy years; Webster; Joseph, in the shoe business at Strinestown; Elizabeth, Adeline and Harrison, deceased.

Webster Willis attended the schools of Fairview and Newberry townships until he reached the age of twenty, and then learned the carpenter’s trade, with his brother, William. He remained with his brother a few years, afterward starting in business for himself, carpentering, and so continuing from 1858 until 1898. Mr. Willis engaged in the undertaking business in 1879, and has continued in that line ever since. He has a fine home, and owns fourteen acres of land upon which he carries on farming.

In 1858 Mr. Willis married Annie E. Brubaker, daughter of Henry and Susan (Zorger) Brubaker, and these children have been born to this union: Washington, who resides at home; Susan, who married William Bamberger, and lives at Goldsboro borough; Minerva, who died at the age of twenty-two years; Minnie, who married John Updegraph, of Newberry township; Elizabeth, deceased, who married Henry Funk; Carrie, who married Lawrence Petrow, and lives at New Cumberland, Cumberland county; Mary, who married Daniel Koller, of Yocountown; Maggie, residing at home; Myrtle, who married William Krone, and lives in Warrington township; Joseph, who married Blance Householder, and lives at Elkwood, Cumberland county.

In politics Mr. Willis is a Republican, but has never sought public office. He is very highly esteemed throughout the community.

PROF. E. M. STAHL, one of the leading educators of southeastern Pennsylvania, who is now in charge of the academy at Glenville, York county, was born Aug. 14, 1864, in Somerset county, Pa., a member of an old established family of that section.

George Stahl, his great-grandfather, married a Miss Baker, and is said to have gone from York county to Somerset county shortly after the Revolution, perhaps between 1795 and 1800.

William G. Stahl, grandfather of Prof. Stahl, was a blacksmith by trade. He lived to the age of eighty-five years, being retired some years prior to his decease. He married Elizabeth Ohler, and both are buried at St. Paul’s Lutheran Church, in Somerset county. Their children were: George, a veteran of the Civil war, who died at City Point, Va., during that struggle; Samuel, living at Pine Hill, Pa.; Susan, wife of Henry C. Wahl, a veteran of the Civil war; Catherine, wife of Ananias Gloss; and John.

John Stahl, son of William G., was born in Somerset county, Pa., and learned the blacksmith's trade which he followed for some years, and then engaged in farming for thirty years. His death occurred March 7, 1901, when he was aged sixty-two years. He married Adeline Hay, daughter of John and Sarah (Musser) Hay, and they had children as follows: Prof. E. M.; Sarah, wife of Ephraim Bauman, a carpenter and surveyor; William R., a minister in the Lutheran Church, and who died at Shanksville, Somerset Co., Pa., Oct. 11, 1905, aged thirty-seven years (he was a graduate of Gettysburg College, and was married to Bertha Tholan); J. Franklin, the farmer on the home farm; Charles H., an artist of ability, who died in April, 1897; Irvin P., a music teacher, who was a student with the distinguished Hutchinson, Goodwin and Boise at Peabody Institute, Baltimore, Md., and died Sept. 17, 1905: Susan M., at home; and Robert M., a student at the Franklin and Marshall College, at Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Adeline (Hay) Stahl was a great-great-granddaughter of Simeon Hay, who is supposed to have gone from York county, or its immediate vicinity, to Somerset county about 1780.

Prof. Stahl belongs to a family of more than usual intellectual attainments. He completed his early schooling at the age of fifteen years, and then taught school in Somerset county until he was twenty-one years of age. In 1886 he went to Iowa, where he taught country schools for two years. Then he entered Iowa College at Grinnell, Iowa, completing the sophomore year, and then for a number of years filled positions as high school teacher until he entered Gettysburg College, where he was graduated in 1894. He returned to Somerset county and spent two years in study, making a specialty of minerals and fossils and plants of Somerset county, of which he has a collection of several thousand. In 1896 he came to Glenville and accepted charge of the academy. In addition to academic studies this school is conducted as the only township high school in York county. The fine school which has been built up mainly under the excellent and intelligent management of Prof. Stahl deserves a history of its own, which will be found elsewhere. The number of pupils averages from seventy to seventy-five.

Prof. Stahl married Lydia Hamm, daughter of Daniel and Salome Hamm, of York county. They have two children: William J. and Mary A. In his political principles Prof. Stahl is a Democrat. He is one of the leading members of the Lutheran Church at Pine Hill, Somerset county. It seems peculiar that after one hundred years Prof. Stahl should come back to the home of his ancestors and so firmly establish himself in the estimation and affection of the people.

DR. MERCER R. GIRVIN, a physician and surgeon practicing at Grahamville, Chanceford township, York county, was born June 27, 1868. He is of blended Scotch, Irish and German descent, and is a son of Elias and Lydia A. Girvin. Elias Girvin was a large land owner of Lancaster county, and later lived retired in Lancaster city.

The subject of this sketch received his education in the common schools and at Octo- raro Academy. For a time he was employed in the insurance business in Reading and Philadelphia. Tiring of that he began the study of medicine with Dr. Charles E. Helm of Bart, Pa., who was one of the most prominent physicians of Lancaster county. In 1890 he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, and graduated in 1893. He began practice at Marticville, Lancaster county, where he remained for a period of three years, and then removed to Grahamville, where he has ever since been in active and lucrative practice.

In the spring of 1894 Dr. Girvin married Miss Lillie M. Shenk, of Martic township, Lancaster Co., daughter of Tobias and Isabelle Shenk, and two children have been born to this union: Chester T. and Harry M., the latter having died in infancy. Dr. Girvin is a member of the Reformed Church. In politics he is liberal in his views, voting rather for good interests than for party. He has been very successful professionally, and has gained a position of importance in his line. While never seeking office he has always taken a public-spirited interest in the town and community, and has generously supported every beneficial movement for its welfare.

Washington township, York county, and a beloved and useful minister of the Dunkard Church, was born in 1833, in Dover township, son of Daniel and grandson of Jacob Gochenauer.

The family was established in York county, Pa., by the great-grandfather of Rev. Emanuel, who emigrated from Germany. The grandfather, Jacob Gochenauer, was born June 19, 1757, and died Aug. 1, 1834, at the age of seventy-seven years and two months. His wife Eva was born March 20, 1768, and died June 7, 1847, aged seventy-nine years, two months and eighteen days. Both were buried in the Mennonite cemetery in Dover township. He owned a farm in that township and erected buildings thereon. His children were: Jacob, Joseph, Michael, John, Daniel, Mary (wife of Christian Bushey) and Mrs. Witmer.

Daniel Gochenauer, father of Rev. Emanuel, was born on the old homestead in Dover township, July 15, 1804, and died Nov. 20, 1834, aged thirty years and four months. He married Katie Weigel, who died June 13, 1867, at the age of fifty-eight years, four months and nine days, and her remains were laid away at Strayer's Church in Dover township. His burial took place in the Mennonite cemetery in the same township. He was a life-long farmer and purchased his father's farm of 137 acres, on which he spent his life. The children of Daniel and Katie Gochenauer were: Lavina, who died in York, wife of Jacob Sunday; Sophia, who died in Dover township, wife of William Gerber; Delilah, who died in East Berlin, Adams county, wife of John Deardorff; and Emanuel.

Emanuel Gochenauer was educated in the schools of Dover township, but the death of his father while he was still a lad, prevented him from pursuing a more advanced course than that supplied by the district schools. He helped his mother according to his best judgment and boyish strength, and when he married he bought the homestead and lived upon it for five years. Then he came to Washington township and bought his father-in-law's farm of 143 acres, and still later purchased another farm containing ninety-five acres. and now owns two of the finest farms in the township. He has been a resident of this township since 1859, and has lived retired since 1884.

In 1870 Mr. Gochenauer was ordained a minister in the Dunkard Church, at Lower Conewago, in Washington township. He served on the building committee when the church was erected, and is an elder in that church now. His estimable wife is also an active member of this religious body, and they both enjoy the esteem and affection of all who know them. They are now spending the evening of life in a small but comfortable home, near their large farms, in the vicinity of Mulberry postoffice.

Mr. Gochenauer married Susan Deardorff, daughter of John and Susan (Baker) Deardorff and their children are: Katie, wife of John Boserman, lives in Reading township, Adams county; John, who is engaged in the sawmill business with his residence at Dillsburg, married Susan Firestone; Daniel, who lives in Dover township, married Susan Moul; Mary married Samuel Aldinger, of West York borough; Emanuel, Jr., a paper hanger living in York, married Emma Wolford; Amanda married Charles H. Altland, and they live on one of our subject's farms in Washington township; Jacob S.; and William E.

Jacob S. Gochenauer is a graduate of the Millersville Normal School, in Lancaster county. He taught school for a number of years in York county, and in the meantime prepared himself and subsequently entered Harvard College, where he was graduated with credit. He continued in the educational field and taught in a number of well-known institutions of learning, including the Westchester State Normal School and Bucknell, and later became principal of the schools of Dubuque, Iowa. At present he is located in St. Louis. He is a man of great scholarly attainments. He married Florence Floiry.

William E. Gochenauer, the youngest son, is also a graduate of the Millersville Normal School. After teaching with success for some years in York he went to Philadelphia, where he is at present engaged extensively in the implement business. He married Bertha Hand.

GEORGE SNYDER, engaged in a carriage making and blacksmith business, at Brogueville, Chanceford township, York Co., Pa., was born Oct. 5, 1855, at Baltimore, Md., son of John and Margaret Snyder.
John Snyder was born in 1830, in Germany, and there learned the tailor's trade. He came to the United States a poor young man and found work at his trade in Baltimore, but later moved to York county, Pa., afterward settling in Chanceford township. Here he worked at his trade during the winter time, and as a farm hand in the summer time. He bought the sixty acre farm on which he still resides. In politics he is a Democrat, and has served as township collector. In religious faith he is a Lutheran. John Snyder was married in Baltimore to Margaret Gohn, born also in Germany, who came to the United States in young womanhood. She died in 1900, on the home farm, and was buried at St. James Church cemetery in Chanceford township. The children of John Snyder and wife were: George; John, who died young; Barbara, Mrs. Jesse Workinger, of Hopewell township; Lizzie, Mrs. Oscar Bair, of Lower Chanceford township; Jane, Mrs. John D. Warner, of Chanceford township; Lewis, of Collinsville, who married Bertha Lloyd; Katy, Mrs. David Wilson, of Carlisle; and William, a farmer by occupation, who married Sadie Householder.

George Snyder lived in the city of Baltimore until he was six years of age, when his father removed to Fawn township, York county, and there he began to attend school, entering the Fawn Grove school when he was but a little lad of six years, and he continued to attend the public schools until the age limit of twenty-one was reached, thus obtaining a very good education. His first work was undertaken when he was about nineteen years of age, as one of the laborers employed in the grading of the York & Peach Bottom railroad. He began work at High Rock, and ended when the gang had completed to Fenmore Station, receiving wages of $1.65 per day.

When he had reached his majority, he came to Brogueville and learned the trade of blacksmith, working one year with Daniel Uffelman, and the balance of the time with Frank Nicholas, formerly of Dallastown. After becoming proficient in his trade, Mr. Snyder opened up his own establishment at Brogueville, a first class blacksmith and carriage making shop, to which, since April, 1903, he has added cigar making. In all the enterprises he has undertaken Mr. Snyder has been very successful, and he is reckoned with the prosperous men of this community.

In 1877, at Brogueville, George Snyder was united in marriage with Mary Catherine McDunn, a daughter of Frederick and Elizabeth (Hastings) McDunn. They have these children: John F., a conductor on an electric road in Philadelphia; and Harry L. and Irving R., both at home.

Mrs. Snyder is of Scotch extraction. Her grandfather was born in Scotland. Beyond the fact of his being a carpenter, the family have no record of where he settled in America nor where he died. It was most probably in Baltimore, for it was in that city that Mrs. Snyder's father was bound out, and subsequently ran away from his employer. In those days it was possible for the employer of an apprenticed lad to use very harsh means to bring a runaway back, and this is probably the reason that the youth dropped his surname of McDunn and was known by his two names of Frederick Henry.

The boy made his way to Chanceford township, York county, and was reared by William Colvin. Mr. Colvin was the proprietor of the "Jack Hotel," in Lower Chanceford township, and in young manhood, Mr. McDunn bought a small farm near Shenk's Ferry, on which he lived until his death, which occurred in December, 1897; his wife had passed away in the previous August. Both were consistent members of the M. E. Church. They had these children: Charles, of Chanceford township, who married Mary Jarvis; Mary Catherine, Mrs. Snyder; William, a farmer in Lancaster county, who married Mary ———; Levi W., a farmer of Chanceford township, who married Maggie Wallace; Martha, Mrs. John Kaler, of Columbia; George and Edward, who both died young; Emma, Mrs. Lewis Ottstal, of near Columbia; Elia, of Lancaster county, who married Mary Ottstal; Clementine, Mrs. David Kindig of Lancaster county; Isabella, Mrs. Solomon Campbell, of Hellam township, York county; Susan, Mrs. George Ritz, of York county.

Mr. Snyder has always taken an intelligent interest in political affairs, voting with the Democratic party. By it he was advanced as a candidate for register of wills. Although not a member, he is a liberal contributor to the support of the Lutheran Church, in which he was reared by a devout mother.
JOHN PLATT ALLEN is descended from New England ancestry, who settled in New Haven, Conn., in 1638, his paternal progenitor, Roger Allen, having been the first treasurer of the Colony and deacon of the first church.

Mr. Allen's grandfather was a farmer of Meriden, Conn., while his father, Edward C. Allen, also carried on farming there.

Edward C. Allen married Jerusha T. Platt, daughter of John Platt, a farmer of Deep River, Conn. Four children were born to them as follows: George W.; Caroline, wife of A. B. Jennings, of New York City; Edward L.; and John Platt.

John Platt Allen was born at Meriden, Conn., Nov. 13, 1850, and received his education in New York City, and in the Highland Military Academy, Worcester, Mass., graduating from the latter in 1868. His first occupation was at civil engineering in Illinois, where he remained one year, and then went to Scranton, Pa., where his uncle was superintendent of the Lackawanna Iron & Coal Co. Col. Joseph H. Scranton, Mr. Allen's uncle's partner and brother-in-law, belonged to the family that gave the city its name. Leaving Scranton after two years service with the Lackawanna Iron & Coal Co., Mr. Allen went to St. Louis, where he remained four years, and then went to New York City, remaining there for twenty-five years in connection with an extensive wall paper manufacturing concern, Fr. Beak & Co., becoming assistant superintendent and secretary. His next venture was in Worcester, Mass., where he established an industry known as the Allen-Higgins Co., manufacturers of fine wall papers, of which Mr. Allen was president. In June, 1903, Mr. Allen, after spending four years in this enterprise, came to York, and took charge of a special fine goods department of the York Card and Wall Paper Co., where his business is to select the designs, color, and in a general way to superintend the manufacture of the high grade goods.

In 1877 Mr. Allen was married to Mary Frances Ramsey, daughter of John Ramsey of St. Louis. She died in 1882. Two children were born to this union: Edith K., wife of M. B. Thayer, of New York City, president of the Colonial Press, which is a branch of Appleton & Co.; and Francis R., a graduate of Cornell University, who holds a responsible position with the Bethlehem Steel Company.

Mr. Allen was married (second) in 1884, to Alice Foster Harris, daughter of William H. Harris, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who was a commission merchant in New York City. Mr. Allen belongs to the New England Society of the City of Brooklyn and to the Sons of the Revolution of New York. He is a graduate of the Old school, No. 35, New York City, the graduates of this school between the years of 1865 and 1870 have formed a society known as the Hunter Association, holding annual banquets in New York City.

Mr. Allen is descended from four Revolutionary ancestors, one of whom, Archelaus Allen, was in the battle of Lexington; another, Asahel Hall, was at Germantown, Valley Forge, Brandywine and Trenton. Capt. Daniel Platt was at Stony Point, and another ancestor, Captain Merriman, belonged to the Connecticut Fourth throughout the Revolution.

AMOS PEIFFER, one of the prominent citizens and successful farmers of York county, passed away at the age of sixty-one years. He was born in North Codorus township, where he was reared and received a common school education. His life was spent in agricultural pursuits. He was a Democrat in politics.

Amos Peiffer married Anna Maria Krebs, widow of Peter Krebs, who was born in Codorus township, the representative of an old family. He also was a farmer, and also died at the age of sixty-one years. The children born to Mrs. Peiffer and her husband were as follows: Sarah, wife of Ephraim Glatfelter, of Codorus township; Julia, wife of John Newcomer, and living on the home place in North Codorus township; Clara E., who married Howard Henry, in the mercantile business at Seven Valley; Calvin, deceased; and Arneda, deceased.

The parents of Mrs. Peiffer were John and Eva (Krout) Miller, residents of Springfield township, where they both died, being buried at Jefferson. Their children were: Elizabeth, Sallie, Michael, John, Emanuel, Levi, Anna, David and Katie. Mrs. Peiffer, who is a most estimable lady, is making her home with her daughter, Mrs. Henry, in Seven Valley.

HENRY M. JOSEPH, a contractor and builder of York, who has been engaged in this business in York since 1900, was born Sept.
16, 1864, in West Manchester township, on Daniel Hoke's farm, near York, son of Henry and Lydia (Sellers) Joseph.

Henry Joseph, grandfather of Henry M., was a farmer of Paradise township, who removed to West Manchester township, and followed farming, later removing to near Berlin, where he died. He married into the Leib family, and became the father of these children: John, who died in Jackson township; Jonas, in business at New Salem, York county; Michael, a retired farmer, living at Red Run Church; Catherine, the wife of Jesse Masemore, living in Washington township; Elizabeth, who died near Spring Grove, wife of Jesse Stambaugh; Sarah, the wife of Abraham Gensler, in West Manchester township; Matilda, widow of Peter Spangler, living at Bear's Station, in West Manchester township; and Henry.

Henry Joseph (2), son of Henry, was born in 1827 in Jackson township, and received both a German and an English education. He remained with his father at farming for a while, and first started on his own account, with Daniel Hoke, with whom he remained for forty-five years, being one of West Manchester township's good, reliable, practical farmers. He retired to New Salem, where he now resides. He married Lydia Sellers, daughter of Henry and Mary (Walters) Sellers, and the children born to this union were as follows: John A., who married Ellen Sligel, and lives at Stoverstown, York county; Hamilton E., who married Maggie Gladfelter, and lives on the old Gladfelter farm in New Salem; Emma, who died at the age of two years; Henry M.; Katie, wife of J. B. Fissel, of Eberson; Mary, wife of William Christ, of New Salem; Allen M., who married Arabella Brenneman; Matilda, wife of Luther Doll, of Codorus township; Juble, who married Mollie Christ, a school teacher at New Salem; and Amanda, the wife of George Brenneman.

Henry M. Joseph attended Hoke's school in West Manchester township until the age of eighteen years, and remained at home on the farm with his father until twenty-six years old. On Oct. 25, 1890, he married Sarah E. Lecrone, daughter of William and Leah (Shriver) Lecrone, and located where he now resides, at No. 758 West Market street, York, in the old Lecrone home, which he rebuilt. He then engaged in carpentering with Daniel Loyd, and remained with him three years, later forming a partnership with him for six months, when he engaged with Becker & Senft. In 1900 he engaged in business in York, and has become very successful in his line, the engine house in North York borough being some of Mr. Joseph's work.

To Mr. and Mrs. Joseph these children have been born: Harry A.; Lotta May and Reba Louise, attending school. In politics Mr. Joseph is a Democrat. He is a member of St. Matthew's Church of York. He is a member of the F. O. E.; of the Volunteer Fire Company, Vigilant Steam Chemical Fire Engine Co., No. 1, of York.

McClellan Swartz is one of the well known citizens of Spring Grove, York county, where he is engaged in contracting and also owns a livery and sales stable. He was born Nov. 9, 1864, son of Dietrich and Anna (Hoke) Swartz.

The paternal grandparents were Henry and Catherine (Minnich) Swartz, the former of whom was one of the representative farmers of York county. Besides carrying on farming in Jackson township he was engaged in carpenter work in Codorus township, where he made his home for a number of years. His last years, however, were devoted to agriculture only. He and his wife had five children, Henry (deceased), Jesse, Harriet, Dietrich and Isaac. The family were Lutherans in religious faith.

Dietrich Swartz was born in Codorus township, but later moved to Jackson, and engaged in farming there until 1882. He then removed to Richmond, Va., and was actively engaged in farming there for some years, but is now living in retirement. At one time he owned nearly all the land on which Spring Grove is situated, and was then considered one of York county's most prominent men. He married Miss Anna Hoke, and the children born to this union were: Kate, Samuel, Harriet, Jesse, McClellan, David, George, Dietrich, Annie and Henry.

McClellan Swartz was born during his father's residence in York county, and was sent to the public schools there. When Dietrich Swartz moved to Virginia, the son accompanied him, but after two years returned to Pennsylvania and rented a farm in Paradise township. For two years he operated that, then moved to Jackson township, renting the Menges farm for two years, spent the following three years in Adams county and then returned to Spring Grove. For the first three years he was engaged in dairying and farming, but in 1857 he went into the livery business, which still occupies his attention. In addition to this he acts as agent for the popular Anderson buggy, and he is also engaged to a considerable extent in taking contracts for excavating and stone work. He is enterprising and progressive, and a good workman and business man, and handles all his interests with much success.

In February, 1887, Mr. Swartz was united in marriage to Miss Mary Myers, daughter of Michael Myers, and to their union have come two children, Maud M. and Annie A. Mr. and Mrs. Swartz are Lutherans and in politics he is a Democrat.

JACOB F. KREBS, a retired farmer of Codorus township, was born Jan. 12, 1854, in the township where he now resides, son of Lewis and Annie C. (Frazer) Krebs.

George Krebs, great-grandfather of Jacob F., is the first of the family of whom we have authentic record. He was most probably born in Germany and came at a very early day to Codorus township, York county, where he subsequently owned 200 acres of land. He lived to be eighty-eight years old, and the remains of himself and wife were among the first to be interred in the graveyard belonging to the Stone Church. He married Catherine Noshley, and they had issue as follows: Elizabeth, John, Lewis, Catherine, George, David, Samuel and Rebecca.

John Krebs, son of George, was born in 1791 in Codorus township, where he was a lifelong farmer, owning 300 acres of land. For some five years prior to his death, at the age of eighty-one years, eleven months and eleven days, he lived retired. His wife died at about the same age, and both are buried at the Stone Church. He married Magdalena Bortner Krebs, widow of Lewis Krebs, by whom she had two children: Lydia, who married Levi Thoman, and died; and John. The children born to her marriage with John Krebs were: Magdalena (who became the second wife of Levi Thoman), Jeremiah, Lewis, Adam, Elizabeth, Catherine, George and Jesse.

Lewis Krebs, father of our subject, was born Dec. 6, 1825. He now lives retired on a part of the old homestead, and owns 117 acres of good farming land and thirty acres of woodland. He married Anna C. Frazer, daughter of Peter Frazer, and they had issue as follows: Adeline, wife of Jacob T. Castlow, of Codorus township; Jesse, who died aged two years; Jacob F.; Lewis F., who married Leah Castlow; George F., who married Belinda Kerchner; William F., who married Catherine McCleary; Annie C., widow of Levi T. Krebs, who died in 1895; and John F., who farms for his father, and who married Ida Fair.

Jacob F. Krebs was educated in what was then known as the Rohrbaugh school, but is now called the Krebs school, and he continued at his books until he was nineteen years old. He remained on the farm assisting his father until his majority, when he entered the employ of his brother-in-law, S. B. Brodbeck at farming and hauling goods for the store, there now being a post-office at this point named for the proprietor. He remained there two years, coming to his present farm in 1880, a property formerly belonging to his father-in-law. Mr. Krebs is the fortunate owner of 272 acres of some of the best farming land in York county, and he has it thus divided: two tracts of eighty acres each, one of eighty-eight, one of twenty, and one of four acres of woodland. He has also one of the finest modern residences in this section of the county, a home that would do credit to any section. Mr. Krebs continued to farm until 1900, when he laid aside active labor, and has lived retired, with the exception of looking after the sales of a certain excellent fertilizer.

Mr. Krebs married Elizabeth Brodbeck, daughter of George and Leah (Bosser) Brodbeck. They have no children. He is a consistent member of the Lutheran Church, in which he was a deacon, and he is much interested at all times in the work of the Sunday-school. His wife belongs to the Reformed Church.

In politics Mr. Krebs has always been a Democrat. He has served on the election board, and has been active in party affairs. For a period of fourteen years he has been treasurer of the Codorus & Manheim Fire Insurance Company, one of the strongest lines in the State, which has a number of leading capitalists on its directing board. Its officers are: Jesse K. Wentz, of Hanover, president; A. T. Grove, of Stewartstown, vice president; W. H. Brodbeck, of Jefferson, secretary; and Jacob F.
Krebs of Codorus township, treasurer. Mr. Krebs is one of the popular men in the township, possessing a genial, pleasant manner, and a kindly nature which leads him to be a good neighbor and a firm friend.

AARON HOSTETTER, president of the Hanover Produce Company, Hanover, Pa., and postmaster at that city, is one of the energetic and able business men of that prosperous little community who have given prestige and growth to the locality by their strong individual efforts. He was born in Union township, Adams county, this State, May 25, 1866, son of Abraham F. and Mary (Huber) Hostetter. The father was for many years a prosperous farmer and merchant, widely and favorably known throughout his own and neighboring counties. He married Mary Huber, of Wrightsville, York county, and to them was born a family of eight children. Abraham Hostetter died on his farm in Union township, Adams county, in 1867.

Aaron Hostetter was educated in the common schools of Adams county, and the knowledge he there obtained was supplemented by a course of instruction at a private academy at Blairstown, N. J. His tastes were for commercial life, and after leaving school he entered the service of E. H. Hostetter & Brother, dry-goods merchants in Hanover, with whom he remained for six years. Later he engaged in the produce business for himself, and in 1900 was the principal organizer of the Hanover Produce Company, which was incorporated with a capital stock of $40,000. Mr. Hostetter was elected president, an executive position which he has since filled. The company does a large and prosperous business, marketing its produce in Buffalo, N. Y., Washington, D. C., and various other centers. The company has offices at Chambersburg, Pa., Table Rock, Adams Co., Pa., Hillen Station, Baltimore, Md., and several others. Mr. Hostetter has traveled extensively and he has acquired a valuable fund of information in connection with his business, being fully advised as to the most advanced and favored methods employed in this important branch of trade. To that self-acquired business education he unites the energy of a young man and that companionableness which makes and holds friends, and is thus equipped with the essentials of an active and successful business career.

Mr. Hostetter was married, June 19, 1890, to Miss Wortha Koplin, of Hellertown, daughter of Rev. Dr. A. B. and Mary (Custer) Koplin. To Mr. and Mrs. Hostetter have been born two children, Harriet L. and Abraham Koplin, both students in the public schools of Hanover. Mr. and Mrs. Hostetter are members of Emanuel Reformed Church. Fraternally he belongs to Patmos Lodge, No. 338, F. & A. M., of Hanover; and to the B. P. O. E. In his political faith he is unwavering, giving his allegiance to the Republican party, and in 1904-05 he was a member of the Pennsylvania State Legislature. In April, 1905, he was appointed postmaster by President Theodore Roosevelt.

ISAAC L. HESS, who passed away in York, April 19, 1886, was for many years identified with the business interests of that city. He was born in Springfield township, May 8, 1826.

Daniel Hess, father of Isaac L., was born in Springfield township, May 8, 1800, and followed farming and carpentering. He married Catherine Leader, and both died in Springfield township.

Isaac L. Hess was reared on his father's farm, where he remained until he grew to manhood. He learned the carpenter's trade with his father, also the cooper's trade, and followed both, off and on, throughout his life. He was married, Dec. 8, 1850, to Miss Melvina Livingston, born in Springfield township in 1831, daughter of George and Elizabeth (Raymer) Livingston. Mr. Hess was interred at Salem Church. He was a member of the Reformed Church, while in political matters he associated with the Democratic party. To Mr. and Mrs. Isaac L. Hess were born the following children: William H., who died in York in 1903, married Elizabeth Spiker; John P., who died in Shelby, Ohio, in 1904, married a Miss Gregory; Cornelius died at the age of ten years; Eliza C. is Mrs. Joseph K. Geron, of York; Charles, of York, married Sallie Freed; Isaac D., of York, married Emma Gentzler; and Albert W., of York, married Maggie Dessenberg.

George Livingston, the father of Mrs. Hess, followed farming extensively in York township, where he owned two large tracts of land. He was well known and highly esteemed and was a good citizen and public spirited man.
BIOGRAPHICAL

He died in York in the faith of the Lutheran Church. His wife died in her sixties, and both were buried at the Lutheran Church at Paradise. Their children were: Mrs. Hess; Eliza, Mrs. Peter Fishel, who died in York county; and John, who married Sarah Haines, and died on the old home farm. Mrs. Melvina (Livingston) Hess was born on her father's farm Nov. 23, 1831, and attended the public schools until fifteen or sixteen years old. She learned to knit, and she helped to make linen for towels, bed linen and table cloths.

GEORGE ANDERSON, whose death at the age of seventy-six years removed one of the best known educators of this section of the State, was a man of great force of character, and was noted for the traits of thrift, perseverance and energy that were bequeathed him by his ancestors. Mr. Anderson was born about 1775, son of David and Margaret (Hepburn) Anderson. His grandfather and grandmother came from Ireland and Scotland, respectively.

David Anderson was born in Hopewell township, and died during the Revolutionary war. His children were: James; George; and Robert, who went West.

George Anderson received his education in the schools of York county, and at an early age he began teaching, which occupation he followed up to the time of his death. He married Miss Jennie Grove (sister of Matthew Grove), by whom he had one child, George, who died in York county. Mr. Anderson continued teaching, and lived in the vicinity of Conrad's cross roads, toward Peach Bottom, on the farm now occupied by John Campbell. Mr. Anderson spent some time in Columbiana Co., Ohio, where relatives lived, and taught in the subscription schools. Mr. Anderson returned to York county, and bought forty acres of land at Laurel Station, near Peach Bottom road, where he died. Mr. Anderson was buried at Downey's graveyard in Chanceford township.

The second marriage of Mr. Anderson was to Agnes Anderson, by whom he had the following children: David, who died on his farm in Chanceford township, married Miss Elizabeth Cross, daughter of Squire James Cross; William Wallace, who died in Lancaster City, married (first) Eliza Moffett; Jennie G., a well known dress maker, now at the age of eighty-nine years is the second oldest member of the Guinston U. P. Church; James, who married Miss Margaret Douglass, died in Chanceford township; Sarah Jane died at the age of fourteen years; Margaret married William Frey, who was raised at John Murphy's, in Chanceford; and Agnes, who married George Wolf, who was raised near Laurel Station. The members of this family were all consistent attendants of the U. P. Church, to which Mr. Anderson was a liberal giver.

Mr. Anderson was a man of unimpeachable integrity and was highly esteemed by all who knew him. His death closed a blameless life, and removed from the township one who had always been one of its best citizens.

SEVRENUMUS P. NOEL, a farmer and miller of Paradise township, York Co., Pa., was born on his present farm, Feb. 10, 1849, and attended the township schools under Professors Cushing, Howard and Smith. He left school at the age of eighteen years, and learned milling with his father, with whom he remained until his marriage.

Mr. Noel was married in 1875, to Miss Sarah King, of Paradise township, daughter of Joseph and Sally (Bivenour) King, the latter of whom is deceased. After his marriage he purchased a mill and farm, and here he has since continued, making many additions and improvements, and having one of the best farms in the township. He has been a member of the Paradise Catholic Church since childhood, and has been organist thereof for the past thirty-five years. He is a stanch Democrat.

Michael Noel, father of Sevrenus P., was born in Paradise township in 1811, and passed all his life there, dying in 1877, while his wife passed away two years later. They were members of the Catholic Church. Mr. Noel was a Democrat. His children were: Sevrenus P.; Fabian, deceased; Felix and Stanislaus, who settled in Kansas, later removed to Oregon, where they are engaged in milling; John, of Baltimore; Susan, Mrs. Francis Marshall, of near Oxford; Michael A., of Philadelphia, a Jesuit priest; and Salome, who was a Sister of St. Joseph, and died in McSherrytown in 1892.

The grandfather of our subject was John Noel, a farmer, who inherited a farm from his father. He married Miss Feby Wise. They were devout Catholics, attending services in the homes of the Catholic residents of the neighborhood in the early days. Their chil-
KERN DARON, an old and honored resident of York, Pa., now employed by the York Manufacturing Company, as a machinist, was born in Manchester township, York county, Oct. 15, 1831, son of George Daron and grandson of George.

George Daron, the grandfather, was born in Hellam township, York county, where he followed farming, later going to Dover township, where the borough of Dover now stands. He built the hotel there now owned by Henry Brunhouse, and engaged in the hotel business a number of years before his death. He was buried in the old Strayer's Church. George Daron's children were: John, George, Jacob, Daniel, Estella, Rebecca, Lovinia, Leah and Mary Gross.

George Daron, father of Kern, was born in Dover township, and received a common school education. He learned the cooper's trade in Dover, and later engaged in agriculture in Manchester township, where he remained about twenty-four years, and then returned to Dover, engaging in the hotel business at his father's old stand, where he remained a number of years. He died aged fifty-seven years, having lived retired some time previous to his death. Mr. Daron was buried at Strayer's Church. He married Lydia Kern, daughter of Peter and Mary (Delp) Kern, and she is buried beside her husband. Mr. Daron was a Democrat, and served on the election boards in Dover. His children were as follows: William, who died in Manchester township; George, who married a Miss Getts, and resides in York; Kern; Emanuel of Dover borough, engaged in the implement business, and married to Ella Hamm; Sarah, widow of Samuel Kohr; Susan, widow of Israel Reiber; Louisa, wife of Henry Quickle, of York; Maggie, wife of Solomon Baughman, of Allentown; and Mary, wife of Ambrose Seifert.

Kern Daron received his education in Manchester township, attending school until his sixteenth year, when he went to learn the carpenter's trade with Samuel Kohr, with whom he remained three years. He then spent one year in Iowa at the millwright's trade, and, returning to Dover, followed his trade for four years. He was engaged in the mercantile business near the borough of Dover, and in the furniture and undertaking business for two years at Rosstown, Warrington township. He came to York in 1883, and was employed with the A. B. Farquhar Company for twenty years, in the machine shop, and in 1903 he engaged with the York Manufacturing Company as a mechanic, and he has continued with that firm until the present time. Although he has passed the seventy-fourth milestone in life's journey, Mr. Daron is in the best of health, in full retention of his faculties, and remarkably active.

In 1857 Mr. Daron married (first) Mary Leas, daughter of David and Sarah (Walker) Leas, and she died in 1882, being buried at Strayer's Church. She was the mother of these children: Sarah Jane, deceased, was the wife of Dennis Bosch; Lydia, the wife of L. Dunning, is residing in Ohio; Maggie is the wife of Frank Sheaffer, a neighbor of her sister's husband in Ohio; Ruth is the wife of Mr. Hoover, of Iowa; George, of Illinois, married Saide Lancaster; David lives at Denver, Colo.; Charles married Mary Hess, and is a carriage maker of York; and John, who married Alice Seifert, is a clerk of York. In 1884 Mr. Daron married Mary (Reisanger) Newcomber, widow of Esra Newcomber, and daughter of Jacob and Sarah (Smith) Reisanger. She was born and reared in Windsor township, York county. By her marriage with Mr. Newcomber Mrs. Daron had one son, Wilber J., who died aged twenty-four years, and was buried in the Prospect Hill cemetery. Mr. Daron is a stanch Democrat, and while in Dover held the office of township auditor and supervisor. In York he served as city assessor, 1897-98-99, filling his office to the entire satisfaction of the people. He is a member of Christ Lutheran Church of York.

An incident of which Mr. Daron is fond of telling is of how, when living in Rosstown, he had a horse stolen from his stable at the time that the Confederate troops were passing through that section.

JAMES L. KERR, deceased, one of the sons of Matthew Kerr, Sr., was, at the time of his death, a retired farmer and lime manufacturer living in Wrightsville.
Mr. Kerr was born in York, Pa., Jan. 18, 1821, and received his education in the common schools of that place. His first teacher was his father, and the school was held in the old frame building opposite the Methodist Church. Another well-remembered teacher was Peggy Parkerson. He was not over-fond of study, and managed to get in a good deal of fun with his school work. At sixteen he left school and began to work for himself, obtaining the position of freight conductor on the Pennsylvania railroad, between Wrightsville, Philadelphia and Baltimore. The freight carried on his run consisted mostly of whiskey and flour, which were frequently unloaded in the streets of Baltimore where the Calvert station now stands. The railway system then in vogue was peculiar. The road was owned by the State, but much of the rolling stock was the property of private individuals. Passengers could be carried on freight trains at a rate of two cents a mile, but the owners of the cars received three cents for each passenger from the State, and the State had an agent on every train to see that there was no cheating. The rails were held in place by wedges which became loosened whenever a train passed over the track, and men were stationed along the road at intervals to keep the wedges in place. Wood was exclusively used for fuel, and the engine drivers had no shelter. Under such conditions it was not surprising that the train crew felt at liberty to stop any where they liked for dinner, or to spend the night. After two years of this railroading, Mr. Kerr became clerk in the lumber yard of Hoover & Duck, of Wrightsville, where he remained several years. He was afterward for many years lumber inspector, and then went into the lime business with his father, the firm being Kerr & Son. After the death of his father several of his brothers went into the business with him, and the firm became James L. Kerr & Co. In the spring of 1861 Mr. Kerr moved to Bucyrus, Ohio, where he owned a farm on which he lived until 1865, then returning home. He was afterward with his brothers in the lime business for ten years, when he retired.

In 1848 Mr. Kerr married, in Chambersburg, Franklin county, Sarah A. Thomson, who was born in that county in 1827. Her parents were Alexander J. and Margaret (Kerr) Thomson, the former a cousin of Judge Thomson, of Chambersburg, father of the late Frank Thomson, president of the Pennsylvania Railway Company. Mr. Thomson was a native of Scotland, Franklin county, where his father, a large property owner, had lived before him. He became a merchant in Fayette, Franklin county, for a time, and then came to Wrightsville, where for years he was the proprietor of a hat store. He and his wife both died in Wrightsville. Mrs. Thomson was a distant relative of the family of James L. Kerr, being a daughter of George Kerr, Sr., brother of the father of James L. Kerr. Mr. and Mrs. Thomson had the following children: John A., M., D., who died in Wrightsville; Eleanor, who married Henry Byers, M. D., and died in Fayetteville, Pa.; Hannah McKee, who died unmarried in Wrightsville; Sarah A., who married James L. Kerr; Samuel Rea, who died unmarried; George A., M. D., who died in Bucyrus, Ohio; Dr. James W., who died in Wrightsville; William A., who died in Wilmington, Del.; Agnes E., who is the widow of R. Frank Wilson, and lives in Oxford, Chester Co., Pa.; and Alexander R., who lives in Wilmington, Delaware.

Mrs. Sarah A. (Thomson) Kerr died while visiting her brothers in Wilmington, in August, 1899. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church in Wrightsville. Mr. Kerr also attended the Presbyterian Church. For many years he was a member of the I. O. O. F., but had withdrawn from the order. He was always a stanch Democrat, and cast his first vote for James K. Polk. He had a family of four children, of whom the only one living, Hannah, is at home. The others were: Margaret, who died in 1901, at home; Eleanor, who died at home; and Thomson, who died in Bucyrus, Ohio, at the age of nine. Mr. Kerr passed away March 15, 1905, at his home in Wrightsville, widely mourned among the circle of friends and acquaintances with whom he had been associated for so many years.

NOAH S. BRILLHART, of North Hopewell township, York county, resides in one of the comfortable homes of that locality, which is beautifully situated in the midst of a well cultivated farm. He was born on his father's farm in North Hopewell township, May 17, 1847.

Abraham Brillhart, grandfather of Noah S., was born Nov. 11, 1763. He came from Germany to the United States with his brother, Samuel, who settled somewhere in York county. Abraham Brillhart died in Shrewsbury township, the father of several children.

Joseph Brillhart, the father of Noah S., was born in Shrewsbury township, York county, July 15, 1804. On Dec. 24, 1824, he married Elizabeth Strayer, born April 4, 1810. After their marriage they located in North Hopewell township, where Mr. Brillhart purchased over 200 acres and some mill property. At the time of the property's purchase an old wagon mill stood upon the land, and a man was hired to operate it. It was afterward replaced with a grist mill. Mr. Brillhart was a blacksmith by trade, and operated a shop on his farm. A very skilled blacksmith, he was a fine worker in steel, making axes and all kinds of edged tools, such as jack-knives, table knives and forks, and also made all of his own horse-shoe nails. He followed smithing up to the time of his death, in February, 1887. He possessed a fine education and taught subscription school. He was a fine penman, and a great reader, the Bible being his favorite reading. Originally a Whig, he changed to the Know Nothing, and then to the Republican party, and he held a number of township offices. He was a faithful member of Mt. Zion Evangelical Church, and was superintendent of the Sunday-school. Mrs. Brillhart died on the home place in 1895. To Joseph Brillhart and wife were born children as follows: Jacob, born June 25, 1831, married Elizabeth Venus and died in Maryland; Mary, born Aug. 5, 1833, married Levi Sheffer, and died in North Hopewell township; Henry, born Oct. 6, 1835, married Mary Ellen Grove, and died at Mt. Olivet, York county; Elizabeth, born March 25, 1837, died at the age of twenty-seven years; Joseph, born in 1839, died in infancy; John W., born Jan. 10, 1842, married Mary A. Gemmell and died in April, 1904, at his home in Virginia; Sarah Jane, born Sept. 19, 1844, married Albert Wise, and died in Dallastown; and Catherine, born Aug. 23, 1849, married William Bortner, and died in Shrewsbury borough.

Noah S. Brillhart attended the school on his father's farm, his first teacher being Martin Heathcote, and his last Squire A. R. McCann. He assisted his father in the blacksmith shop to some extent, but his principal work was on the farm, as a boy cradling and mowing with a scythe. After reaching his majority his father paid him wages, which he carefully saved, being enabled after the death of his father to purchase the home farm from the estate. Here Mr. Brillhart carries on general farming very successfully. He has been a lifelong Republican, and cast his first vote for General U. S. Grant. He has served as tax collector, school director for three years, and was a director in the Shrewsbury Savings Institution for a like period.

Mr. Brillhart was married in Glen Rock, Feb. 8, 1876, by the Rev. Jesse Kohler, a Lutheran minister, to Miss Isabella Diehl, born Feb. 8, 1850, in Shrewsbury township, daughter of Adam and Anna (Tyson) Diehl, both deceased. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Brillhart have been: (1) James Clarence, born May 20, 1878, died in infancy. (2) Hylas Clyde, born Aug. 3, 1880, was educated in the public schools, the York County Normal at York, Pa., and spent one year in the York County Academy at York; he began teaching in his fifteenth year, taught five years in North Hopewell township, and is now in his third year in Gettysburg College, Gettysburg, Pa. (3) Irvin Hunter, born June 26, 1882, was educated in the public schools, spent three terms at the York County Normal, taught school three terms, and then accepted a position with the First National Bank of Glen Rock as bookkeeper. He was there one year when he was taken sick, and went to Texas for his health, where he spent four months, and was returning home when, just prior to reaching Kansas City, he died. (4) Harry Lester, born May 8, 1884, was educated in the public schools, and the Stewartstown Academy, and is now attending Millersville Normal school, having taught one year. (5) Bessie Gertrude, born Aug. 6, 1886, died at the age of thirteen years. (6) Chester Roy, born Jan. 4, 1890, is at home. Carrie E. Craimer is being reared by Mr. and Mrs. Brillhart, her parents being deceased.

WILLIAM FOUST, one of the old and highly esteemed residents of Glen Rock, York county, was born April 25, 1836, in Shrewsbury township, this county, son of John S. and Rebecca (Ehrman) Foust. The Foust family is of German extraction, but as far back as the grandfather of William has been American born, he being a native of Somerset county, Pa., where he carried on the business of milling and farming. His marriage associated him with another old and prominent German family, that of Shaffer, and he and his wife had three sons—Henry, John S. and Jacob—and one daughter, the latter marrying Philip Shaffer. Samuel Ehman, the maternal grandfather of William Foust, was also of German ancestry, and he followed farming in Shrewsbury township. His children were: Samuel; Julia Ann, wife of Jacob Gerwick; a daughter that married a Messersmith; Sarah, wife of Jacob Hess; and Rebecca.

John S. Foust, father of our subject, died in 1867. In 1840, in connection with farming, he began operating a distillery, beginning in a small way, but gradually improving his facilities until his plant produced an average of two barrels of whiskey per day. He married Rebecca Ehman, and they had children: Nathaniel; Joshua E.; Albert; William; Alice A., wife of Henry Howard; and Angeline, wife of Daniel DeHuff.

William Foust attended the common schools of Springfield township, and in boyhood assisted his father in the operation of his distillery, working at home until twenty-four years of age. He then started into business for himself, confining his operations to farming until 1858, when he opened a small distillery. This business has grown under his fine management until it is one of the largest industrial plants in this section. His annual output is something like 3,000 barrels of whiskey. Mr. Foust has all the accommodations necessary for the proper and successful carrying on of this large enterprise. In addition to a U. S. bond house with capacity of 5,000 barrels, is the old distillery (a two-story building 40x50 feet), with so many barns and sheds surrounding, a general store, a number of comfortable residences, and new ware house 100x36 feet, three and one-half stories in height, with a capacity of 3,500 barrels, the whole bearing a striking resemblance to a thriving village. The location of the plant is one of natural beauty. Mr. Foust also owns a retail liquor store and a general grocery here, as well as his own residence and the homes of some ten of his employees. His three sons occupy handsome homes here also, and are interested in the business. In addition to all the above mentioned property, Mr. Foust owns a farm of 240 acres adjoining and surrounding, which is some of the most valuable land in Springfield township, and is situated within a mile and a half of Glen Rock. It is a privilege to be invited to visit this thriving industry and to witness the results obtained from the use of the improved machinery over the methods generally accepted when Mr. Foust entered upon the business. The difference is notable also in the product, the aim at present being the production of a pure article under the best sanitary conditions and under the direction of scientific chemists. The success of this enterprise speaks well of Mr. Foust's executive ability, and it has made him a large fortune.

In 1860 Mr. Foust was married (first) to Henrietta Bricker, daughter of John Bricker, of York county, and the following children were born to this union: John Q. A., who married Mary K. Horst; Luther, who died unmarried, aged twenty-two years; William, who married Maggie Heathcote; Maggie, who married John Menges; Robert, who died aged twenty-nine years; Frederick, who married Alice Richart; Estella May, who married Amos Huffman. The mother of these children died Jan. 14, 1890. In October, 1895, Mr. Foust was married (second) to Laura Taylor, a daughter of Charles Taylor, of Shrewsbury township.

In politics Mr. Foust is one of the township's active Republicans, and in 1893 he was the party's candidate for the office of sheriff of York county. He has numerous business interests here, and belongs to a number of directing boards, being one of the directors of the First National Bank of Glen Rock; a director of the Southern Trust and Deposit Co., of Baltimore, Md., and also a director in the Building and Loan Association of Baltimore. His fraternal connection is with the Knights of Pythias. Mr. Foust is a progressive, public-spirited citizen, and is as noted for his private charities as for his first-class citizenship. He is widely known, and bears the reputation in the business world of being an honorable and upright man.

WILLIAM H. BARND, a director of the Glen Rock National Bank, and an enterprising farmer of Springfield township, York county, was born in North Hopewell township, Nov. 26, 1857, son of John Barnd.
John Barnd was born in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, July 28, 1832, and at the age of twenty-one years came to America, landing at New York. He remained there but a short time, however, and then came to York county, Pa., where he married Mary Hildebrand. They located in North Hopewell township, where he followed his trade of stone and brick mason, and later came to Springfield township, and purchased Adam Hildebrand's farm of 100 acres. Upon this farm he erected a new set of buildings and made many improvements. He did not occupy this farm, but continued working at his trade until 1895, when he retired from active life, living since that year with his son, our subject. Mrs. Barnd died in 1903, and was buried in Mt. Zion cemetery. They had these children: William H.; Rosa A., wife of Rudolph Newman, of Red Lion; Matilda, wife of Charles Myers, of Windsor township; and Samuel, in the mercantile business in Glen Rock. In politics Mr. Barnd is a Republican. During the Civil war he served his country as a member of Company K, 166th P. V. I., under Capt. Daniel Stout. He was in service eighteen months, and participated in several small engagements.

William H. Barnd attended the schools of Springfield township until seventeen years of age, at which time he left home for a year to work on the Hersh's farm, near York City. He married Sophia Smith, daughter of Charles Smith, of Springfield township, and they have had these children: Mary Ellen, wife of Claude S. Gohn, living at Red Lion; John; Ida; and Alverta. Mr. Barnd is a stanch Republican, and has served his township as school director for two terms, being president and later secretary of the board. He also served as supervisor of the township, and on the election board, and has been a delegate to the county conventions. He is a director in the Glen Rock National Bank, and has other business interests. Mr. Barnd is the owner of a fine collection of old and rare coins, which it is his great pleasure to display to a large circle of interested friends.

ADAM F. STRAYER, deputy collector of revenue of the district of York, is a son of David W. and Lydia (Strayer) Strayer, and though born in Lancaster county has spent almost all of his life in York county, his parents having removed to Hopewell township when he was two years old. Mr. Strayer's birth occurred Feb. 25, 1846, at Maytown, Lancaster county. He received his education in the public schools and at Pleasant Grove Academy, and remained on the parental farm until 1863, when he enlisted in Company C, 21st Pennsylvania Cavalry, in which he served nine months, after which he enlisted in Company B, 188th P. V. I. At the battle of Chapin's Farm he was wounded in the right arm, which was subsequently amputated. After the close of the war Mr. Strayer followed school teaching in Hopewell township, York county, for thirteen years. In 1881 he was elected justice of the peace for the borough of Winterstown, which office he filled with great credit. In 1868 he had been appointed postmaster at Apple Grove, later Winterstown, which office he held until 1881. In 1890 he was one of the census enumerators of York, Pa., and has also filled other minor positions. On March 2, 1903, he was appointed deputy collector of internal revenue of York county by Collector Hershey, and has proved a most faithful and efficient official, his civil record having been as creditable as his military career, the fidelity he has shown in his many years of official life being of the same quality as the patriotism which led him, a mere youth, to put aside cherished hopes in order to assist in the defense of his country.

Mr. Strayer was married in 1867 to Sarah E. Snyder, daughter of Jacob Snyder. No children have been born to this union. Mr. Strayer is a member of the United Brethren Church.

DAVID BENTZ, a veteran of the Civil war, now living retired on his excellent property in Washington township, York Co., Pa., was born in this county, in Warrington township, in September, 1842.

Until he was eleven years old Mr. Bentz attended the school known by his family name, and then went to work on the farm. At the age of nineteen years he enlisted in the army as a teamster and drove a Government team from 1862 until 1865. He then re-enlisted in Company E, 200th P. V. I., and participated in several severe engagements, notably Fort Steadman and Petersburg. He was mustered out at Harrisburg in May, 1865, having a record of never being off duty in all this long period. He had many adventures and on two occasions came very near sudden death, a bullet once tearing his clothing from his right shoulder and another tearing away a part of his shoe.

After his return from the army the young man worked for his father and for neighboring farmers for about five years, and then spent two years working at Deardruff's mill. After his marriage in 1872 he spent two years on a farm belonging to his father-in-law, and then rented other farms until 1891, when he bought his present property, which consists of 105 acres formerly belonging to Adam Minear. The land was good at the time of purchase, but Mr. Bentz has erected all the new buildings and made all the improvements. He continued to farm until 1903, and then retired from active labor.

In 1872 Mr. Bentz was married to Catherine Gentzler, daughter of John and Catherine (Speck) Gentzler. They were some of Washington township's most prominent people. Their old homestead is now owned by C. C. Kimmel. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Bentz were: Alice M., wife of J. C. Strayer, a member of the firm of Strayer Bros., in the feed business at York; Catherine J., wife of Curtis Bushey, a farmer of Warrington township; and John A., unmarried, who is inspector in the air brake department of the Pennsylvania Railroad, at Harrisburg.

Mr. Bentz votes independently, using his judgment as to the best man for the place, or the best measure for the public good. He served three years as school director, and was president of the board. For seven years he has been an elder of the Barrens Lutheran Church, of which he has been a deacon. He is a man of high standing in his community.

GEORGE K. SPangler, who is actively engaged in contracting and building in York, was born March 9, 1850, in Dover township, York county, son of Samuel and Eliza (Kling) Spangler.

Jonas Spangler, grandfather of our subject, was born in 1771, and followed farming in Warrington township, where he died in 1856. He was a soldier of the war of 1812-14, in which he served gallantly. Jonas Spangler married Sarah Slepp, and they became the parents of the following children: John and Joseph, who died at Mt. Royal; Peter, who married Catherine Wiest, and died in Jackson township; Elizabeth, who became the wife of Jacob Krone, and died in Dover township; Mary, who died in Dover township, in 1896, wife of John Leathery; Catherine, who died in Dover borough, wife of Jacob Kahn; Lydia, who married David Snellbecker, and died in Dover township; Samuel; Jonas, who married Anna Kendig, and lives on Broad street, York; and George, who married Sarah Grove, and died in Washington township.

Samuel Spangler was born in 1820, in Warrington township, where he received a common-school education. He married Eliza Kling, and located in Dover township, where he followed farming until his death in 1892, while his wife, who was born in 1822, survived until 1901, when she passed away, and they are both buried at Weigel's Church, Dover township. They were the parents of: Henry, who was killed in the second battle of Bull Run; William, a retired farmer, who married Elizabeth Runkle, and died in York; Jacob, who married Mary Boyer, and lives on the old home in Dover township; Sarah, the wife of Philip Crone of Mt. Royal; George K.; Samuel, Jr., who married Emma Rawhauser, and resides in Dover borough; Mary, wife of Emery Harlacker, of Mt. Royal; Jonas, who married Amelia Koch, and lives at Eberton, or West York borough; and Levi, who married Lizzie Rinehart, and resides at York, where he is in business with our subject.

George K. Spangler attended the schools of Dover and Warrington townships, and learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed for fourteen years. He then went to farming, in Warrington township, at which he continued two years, and then learned stone masonry. In 1888 Mr. Spangler located in York and built a home on North West street, later building his present home at No. 901 West Locust street. In 1892 Mr. Spangler engaged in the contracting and building business, at which he has since prosperously continued. Most of his work has been done in stone, but he also contracts for brick. Some of the buildings for which Mr. Spangler has contracted are: The large Monarch silk mills, the central school house and the Garfield school house. In 1904 Mr. Spangler took his brother Levi, as a partner, the firm now being known as Spangler Bros., and is considered reliable and substantial in business circles of York.

George Spangler has been twice married. On June 16, 1875, he married (first) Susan Ziegler, daughter of Henry Ziegler. She was born Jan. 9, 1857, and her death occurred in her twenty-seventh year, May 26, 1883. To this union were born three children: Sarah Jane, born Feb. 15, 1876, married Warren Beitzel, a coach blacksmith of York; Eliza Ann, born May 20, 1878, married Washington Bender, stone mason; and Mary Ellen, born Feb. 27, 1882, married Curvin Dick, a machinist of York. Mr. Spangler’s second marriage was to Lovina March, daughter of Samuel and Susanna (Rowland) March. Samuel March in his younger days had been a school teacher, but later took up farming. He and his wife both died in Warrington township, leaving children: Samuel R., Jacob R., and William R. The children born to Mr. Spangler’s second marriage were as follows: Margaret Louise, born June 28, 1887, is a stenographer; and Emma R., born Feb. 7, 1901, is attending school. In politics Mr. Spangler is a Democrat. He is a member of the Church of God, and was a member of the building committee. He has also served as elder, and is now treasurer. Miss Margaret Spangler, Mr. Spangler’s daughter, is the organist of this church.

SAMAUEL H. FORNEY. About few, if any, old mansions of York county cluster richer memories than those of the old Forney homestead, which joins the borough of Hanover. The present owner is Samuel H. Forney, a retired farmer, well and prominently known throughout this thriving community.

It was in 1795 that Samuel Forney, grandfather of Samuel H., constructed for himself and family a sightly Colonial mansion, the substantial character of which is attested by the fact that it is today in a state of excellent preservation. At the time of its erection it was one of the most stately residences of the county, and even then the locality had for generations become by association dear to the Forney family.

John Adam Forney, the original ancestor of the family in York county, migrated from Switzerland, his native land, in 1734, and settled at what is now Hanover, York county, locating on a tract of 600 acres, much of which he cleared up and put in a state of excellent cultivation.

Philip Forney, son of John Adam and great-grandfather of Samuel H., lived on the old Forney farm near the site of the old “long log house,” which Michael Fisher remembered as standing under the willow trees at the chain of springs in the “little meadow,” on the site of the present spring house. The original stable stood on the rising ground to the west, where the present house stands. An old pear tree, traditionally said to have been brought from Germany, stood within the memory of living persons at the back porch of the log house. In the spring at the edge of the grove, in the large meadow Indian mothers were said to have bathed their papooses. Here, a few rods to the west of the old house, Samuel Forney built the colonial mansion. He is said to have been the last slave holder in York county, the last survivor of slavery having been “old Uncle Sam,” who died in 1841. The small houses, all but one now gone, on the Westminster road just before it enters the Frederick road, were originally built as slave quarters.

Samuel Forney, son of Philip, was born on the Forney farm April 23, 1762. He married Susanna Karle, daughter of George Adam Karle, and to them were born a large family of children. Samuel Forney was deprived of his sight by a nail striking his eye, March 21, 1832, surviving the misfortune twelve years.

Karle Forney, son of Samuel and father of Samuel H., was born on the old Forney farm in October, 1810. Here he was reared, here he lived through a long and prosperous life, and here he died in 1887. He engaged in farming and stock raising on the old farm, and was a man esteemed for his many sterling virtues. In politics he was a Democrat, and was on various occasions called by his fellow citizens to fill local public office. He married Mary Ann Hay, a native of York county, and the daughter of John and Susan (Smyser) Hay, the former a fifer in the war of 1812. Karle Forney and wife were devout members of the Lutheran Church. Six children were born to them: Samuel H.; William G., of Wyoming; Susan, who married Andrew Delone, of Hanover; John W., of Steubenville, Ohio; Robert

Samuel H. Forney was born on the old homestead March 28, 1839. He received his education in the public schools of Hanover, after which he assisted his father on the home farm. He has continued to reside on the farm all his life, first as the assistant of his father, and now as the sole owner. The farm consists of 131 acres of valuable land, immediately adjoining the borough of Hanover, and a great portion of it is doubtless destined to become valuable building lots. The present buildings on the farm include a substantial brick dwelling, and a large bank barn 50x100 feet, built by Karle Forney in 1863. The farm bears every evidence of thrift and prosperity. For about twenty years Mr. Forney has been extensively engaged in the dairy business, supplying his numerous customers in Hanover with the product of a carefully selected herd of cows. In 1893 he leased the premises and retired from the active management of the property. In politics Mr. Forney is a staunch Democrat.

In 1868 Mr. Forney married Mary C. Young, who was born in Adams county in 1845, daughter of Samuel P. and Margaret (Will) Young. To this union were born the following children: Mary M., wife of John H. Fleming, who succeeded his father, D. C. Fleming, in the management of the "Central Hotel," and upon his retirement from the same engaged in the buying and selling of cattle, and the management of his farm in Adams county; Laura, who married J. H. Mackleduff, a prominent lumber dealer in Hanover; and Elizabeth, at home. Mr. Forney and family are members of Emanuel Reformed Church. Mrs. Forney died Oct. 9, 1904, after a brief illness. She was a lover of home, and is deeply mourned by many friends who knew her warm womanly heart.

JACOB S. BENTZ, a farmer of Carroll township and ex-county commissioner of York county, was born April 28, 1836, in Warrington township, son of Jacob L. and Elizabeth (Slothour) Bentz.

Jacob L. Bentz was born in Codorus township. His education was obtained in the common schools, after leaving which he took up farming; an occupation he continued all of his life. He operated on a farm of 115 acres in Warrington township, and was considered to be well-to-do. By his first wife, Elizabeth Slothour, he had eleven children, as follows: John; Michael; Susan, deceased, wife of Henry Arnold; Mary, deceased, wife of John L. Wireman; Jacob S.; Lewis; Rebecca, who married Samuel Deardorff; David; Leah, who married Rudolph Saunders; Adam; and Frederick. Mrs. Bentz was a Lutheran in religion, and died in that faith in 1851, being aged forty years. Mr. Bentz' second wife was Susan Hartman, who survived him. He died in 1873, aged seventy years.

Jacob S. Bentz attended the schools of Warrington township, and in his spare time assisted his father in the farm work. He married Caroline Spahr, daughter of William and Catherine (Wiley) Spahr. After marriage they located in Warrington township, where Mr. Bentz followed the carpenter's trade for about eleven years, afterward engaging in farming in that township. He continued to farm for nine years, and then spent two years in Dover township. He came to Carroll township in 1869, purchasing a farm of 107 acres from Henry Arnold. This is situated about one mile from Dillsburg, along the York road, and here he erected a new set of buildings, now having one of the finest farms in the county.

The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bentz: Oliver W., who is operating the home farm, married Annie Freysinger, daughter of Lewis Freysinger, and has one daughter, Ruth Emma, a loss of twelve years, who is attending school; William Henry, died when eleven months old; Calvin L., who married Lizzie Lau, died when thirty-one years old; and Jacob C., died when five months old. Mr. Bentz is a Democrat, and has served his township as supervisor, school director and auditor for fifteen years. In the years 1881-2-3 he was elected county commissioner of York county, and he filled the office satisfactorily and efficiently. He is a Lutheran, and has held a deaconship in the Barren's Church. He is well known and highly esteemed throughout the county.

WEBSTER MILLARD was born July 29, 1843, in Fairview township, son of Jacob and Anna (Jones) Millard.

Webster, came from England and settled in Fairview township, where he took up 300 acres of land, and followed farming up to the time of his death.

Benjamin Millard, one of the three sons of Samuel, received his share of the 300 acres which were divided among him and his brothers. Like his father, he followed farming all of his life and he was buried in the old cemetery near Lewisberry. He married a Miss Strominger, who is buried beside him. Besides Jacob, who is mentioned below, their children were: Rachael, who married Samuel Laird, died at Pinetown, Fairview township; Mary, who married Peter Crestley, died in Indiana; Sarah, also died in Indiana; Rebecca is the widow of Jacob Urich, and is living in Fairview township; Catherine, who died in Washington, first married a Mr. Collins, and second a Mr. Walter; Samuel, who married Sarah Drawbaugh, died in Fairview township; Michael, who married Martha Ort, is a blacksmith by trade, but followed lime burning; and is now living retired at Steelton; and Andrew, who married Sophia ———, died at Middletown, Dauphin county.

Jacob Millard, the father of our subject, was born in 1811, on the old home in Fairview township, where he received a common school education. He married Annie Jones, and located in Fairview township, buying the home farm, where he remained until his death, which occurred in June, 1876. His wife died in 1850, and they are both buried at Moore's Church in Fairview township. In politics Mr. Millard was a Republican. The children born to this worthy couple were as follows: Andrew B., born in 1838, married Mary Machlin, and died Oct. 26, 1903, aged sixty-five years, eight months and eighteen days; Mary Elizabeth, born in 1839, is the widow of Isaac B. Willard, and is living at Newmarket, Fairview township; Annie Sarah, born in 1840, died single; Webster; Rachel, who married Henry Dietz, is living at Myerstown, Lebanon county, and has one son living and three children dead.

Webster Millard attended the township schools until eighteen years of age, and remained at home with his father until his thirtieth year. In 1873 he married Lydia Ann Ellicker, daughter of Henry and Belinda (Snyder) Ellicker. Henry Ellicker was born Dec. 21, 1825, and died Aug. 31, 1901. He served in the Civil war as a corporal of Company I, 200th P. V. I. He married Belinda Snyder, born May 29, 1834, and the following children were born to this union: Michael, born March 29, 1852; Susan, born Jan. 8, 1854; Lydia A., born Aug. 31, 1855; Jacob S., born Feb. 14, 1859; Henry William, born Dec. 21, 1860; Rachel J., born April 24, 1863; John C., born March 28, 1865; Mary Ida, born May 2, 1867; George W., born July 6, 1869; Sarah Alice, born June 28, 1871; Belinda E., born Nov. 22, 1875; and Emma May, born July 24, 1880. Mr. Ellicker followed farming for a time in Warrington township, but later removed to Miami Co., Ohio, near the town of Troy, where he died. Mrs. Ellicker, his widow is still residing there.

After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Millard located in Fairview township, and bought the George Traver farm of 109 acres of land, which was formerly one of the old Strominger farms. Mr. Millard has since been engaged in general farming and has been very successful in his operations. He and his family are very highly esteemed in the township. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Webster Millard are as follows: Sylvan E.; Tacy Elizabeth, who married Emmer H. Sutton, and is living at Pinetown, Fairview township; Calvin T.; and Ralph W. In politics Mr. Millard is a Republican, and has held the office of supervisor, also having served on the election board as inspector.

JOHN B. BRENNEMAN, a retired merchant of York, is descended on both sides from old families in Lancaster county, and is allied with many others who have been identified with that part of Pennsylvania for generations. Mr. Breneman was born in East Donegal township, Aug. 9, 1827, son of John and Elizabeth (Musser) Breneman.

The maternal grandfather was Henry Musser, a prominent farmer in Pequa township, Lancaster county, and was one of the early settlers there. His wife, Annie, bore him three sons and two daughters: Elizabeth, Anna, Henry, Benjamin and John. Among the paternal grandfather's children were: Mrs. Gish; Joseph; Abraham; Michael, and John.

John Breneman, father of John B., was born in East Donegal township, Lancaster county, April 6, 1792. He was a farmer by occupation and one of the representative men of that section. His death occurred Feb. 20, 1868, at the age of seventy-five years, ten months and fourteen days, while his wife passed away aged sixty-eight years, six months and twenty-four days. They had a large family, as follows: Henry, deceased; a farmer in Jackson county, Kansas, who married (first) Miss Annie Gish; and (second) Miss Annie Nissley; Annie, Mrs. Christian Bosler, who died in Maytown, Lancaster county; Benjamin, deceased, who married Miss Maria Cassel, now a resident of Reading, Pa.; Fannie, wife of John N. Graybill both of whom died in Dickinson county, Kans.; Elizabeth, deceased, at Marietta, the wife of Hon. Henry M. Engle, who served in the State Legislature in 1871-72; David, who married (first) Miss Annie Graybill, and who died in McPherson, Kansas; Barbara, who married (first) Joseph Engle, and after his death Mr. Postlemore, now residing at Elizabethtown, Lancaster county; John B.; Joseph, who married Miss Barbara Hersey, of McPherson, Kansas; Simeon, deceased in Sterling, Ill., who married (first) Mina Fletcher, and (second) Miss Rutt; and Mary, the widow of John Hamsaker, of Middletown, Dauphin county.

John B. Breneman was given the usual common school education, attending there until he was seventeen years old. He remained at home five years longer, and then went to work for Henry H. Engle. After his marriage in 1853, he located at Marietta until 1869, then moved to Frederick City, Md., and at the end of fifteen years returned to Pennsylvania. On April 1, 1895, Mr. Breneman located again in Lancaster county, but two years later came to York, built a handsome residence, and went into the grocery business. The enterprise was more than successful, but in 1903 Mr. Breneman retired altogether from active life, and the business, after a year under the management of his son, Daniel, was sold out.

Mr. Breneman's wife was Miss Fannie Engle, to whom he was married in October, 1853. She was born in 1835, a daughter of Daniel and Mary (Graybill) Engle. Mrs. Breneman bore her husband children as follows: Annie, Mrs. Rogers N. Neighbors, of Frederick City, Md.; Elizabeth, Mrs. George Longenecker, a resident of Philadelphia, at present traveling in California; Monroe, who died in Frederick Co., Md., aged thirteen; Martha, Mrs. William B. Keller, of Mt. Air, Carroll Co., Md.; Rhoda, Mrs. Elmer E. Grove, of Maytown; Alice and Ella, twins, the former married to C. E. Ramsbaugh, of York, and the latter to H. B. Picking, of the same city; Myra, who married George Antran, an operator for the Pennsylvania Railroad, residing at Atglen, Chester Co., Pa.; Harry, who died at the age of sixteen; Lottie, wife of H. B. Gochenauer, a merchant in Lancaster City, Pa.; Mary, wife of William H. Keller, superintendent of a mine in Cambria county, Pa.; and Daniel, who married Miss Lucinda Farmer, and who is a carpenter employed by the York Manufacturing Company.

JOSEPH HILDEBRAND, late of Springfield township, was born April 15, 1819, and died Dec. 18, 1906, aged eighty-six years, eight months and three days, and is buried at St. Peter's Reformed Church.

Daniel Hildebrand, father of Joseph, was also a native of Springfield township, and a shoemaker by trade. In his later life he gave up shoemaking, and engaged in agricultural pursuits. He and his wife, who had been Margaret Fleiger, were both buried at St. Peter's Reformed Church, in Springfield township. Their children were: William, Mathias, Joseph, Caroline and Daniel, twins, and Margaret.

Joseph Hildebrand attended the township schools and learned the shoemaking trade, which he followed in connection with farming. Mr. Hildebrand was very well known in Springfield township, where he owned an excellent farm of forty-four acres, which he purchased from John Goodling, and he himself erected all of the buildings. Mr. Hildebrand was living a retired life for some years. He was in the best of health until the last six years of his life and was noted for his remarkable memory. His death resulted from a stroke of apoplexy. He was a faithful member of St. Peter's Reformed Church, in which he always took an active part. In politics he was a Democrat, and was township treasurer and also served on the election board. Mr. Hildebrand married Lydia Goodling; daughter of Jacob Goodling, and to this union were born: Jacob, who married Catherine Sheaffer, born Feb. 29, 1848, died Oct. 15, 1872, aged twenty-four years, seven months, twelve days; Eli G., married to Eliza Anstine, lives in Shrewsbury township; Malinda, the wife of Augustus Seitz, lives at Seven Valley. Mrs. Hildebrand died Sept. 28, 1858, aged thirty-one years, nine months, five days, and was buried at the Goodling burial ground in Springfield township. Mr. Hildebrand married (second) Elizabeth Miller, daughter of Michael and Mary Ann (Warner) Miller, and to this union were born: Rebecca, born Sept. 28, 1862, is the wife of H. N. Stiles, of Springfield township; Daniel M., born Sept. 4, 1868, married Elsie M. Lau, daughter of Samuel and Catherine (Hamm) Lau, and has always remained at home, and is, at present, farming the old homestead.

THOMAS BYRD GLATZ HIESTAND, whose real estate and insurance office is at No. 8 West King street, York, Odd Fellows Hall building, was born in Springettsbury township (which was formerly part of Spring Garden township) in the same room of the old "York Valley House," in which his father had been born. Dec. 12, 1858, son of John S. Hiestand, a farmer living about two and a half miles east of York, on the Wrightsville road, an extended sketch of whom will be found elsewhere, and whose ancestors are among the oldest and best known in York county.

Thomas B. G. Hiestand was educated in the public schools of the vicinity, and, after working on the farm for a time, taught school for several terms and then became deputy register of wills of York county, having previously held a number of township offices. For ten years Mr. Hiestand was manager and part owner of the York Gazette, and after disposing of his interest in this paper, he embarked in the real estate and insurance business. In 1887 he graduated from the Maryland Law School, and he was admitted to the Maryland and York county Bars, but never practiced the profession. Mr. Hiestand had, earlier in his career, attended the Normal Department of the York County Academy, his preceptors being Prof. Kain, Gardiner and George R. Provel.

On Dec. 8, 1897, Mr. Hiestand married Adaline G. Fallon, daughter of J. C. Fallon, a retired planing mill owner of York. Two children were born to this union, John Fallon and Frances Mary. In fraternal circles Mr. Hiestand is connected with the Masonic fraternity, and is also a member of the Odd Fellows, K. of M. C., K. of P., O. U. A. M., Y. M. D. Society, Spring Garden R. A. and of the Good Will Fire Company, having been a member of the latter for more than twenty years. Mr. Hiestand is a member of Trinity Reformed Church. In politics he is a Democrat, and takes great interest in the success of his party, although he is no politician. He has many staunch friends throughout the county.

GEORGE B. FORRY, a practical farmer operating in North Codorus township, is a native of York county, born in Heidelberg township, in 1846, son of George Forry and grandson of John.

John Forry, the grandfather, was a farmer of Heidelberg township, where he died aged seventy-five years, and was buried at Bear's Meeting House. His children were: Peter, David, Benjamin, George, Jacob and John.

George Forry, father of George B., was a hatter by trade, having learned that trade in Hanover. He followed that occupation only a short time, however, when he learned the tanner's trade, which he followed for about eighteen years. He later went to farming, owning six farms in York county, with a total acreage of 800 acres. Prior to his death he lived retired for a number of years, dying in Heidelberg township, aged seventy-five years. He is buried at Garber's Mennonite Meeting House. He married Nancy Boyer, and to them were born: John, George B., Daniel, Joseph,
Magdalena, Nancy, Katie, Amanda and Sarah.

George B. Forry attended the township schools, having to walk three miles to the Reynolds school. He later attended the Bear's school, which was closer, and still later went to Garber's Meeting House. From the age of twelve to nineteen years he attended the public schools. Mr. Forry remained at home until twenty-six years of age, when his father purchased for him the farm he now owns, containing 110 acres.

At the age of twenty-eight years Mr. Forry married Katie Swartz, daughter of Dietrich Swartz, and to this union were born: Charles S., a graduate of the Cumberland Valley State Normal school, class of 1899, received a business education at Lancaster, Pa., and now holds the position of teller of the First National Bank of Spring Grove; Leroy is a student in the Cumberland Valley State Normal school; and Lena is at home.

Mr. Forry is a Democrat, and served his township as school director three years, and as auditor for nine years. His wife is a member of St. Paul's Lutheran Church, at Spring Grove, Pa. Mr. Forry is very popular in the township, and bears a justly won reputation for honesty and integrity. He has secured such excellent results from his farming operations that he has an exceptionally good farm, provided with good substantial buildings, and well-stocked.

GEORGE G. HEIGES was born in Warrington township, Dec. 6, 1839, son of George and Anna (Hagerman) Heiges, and is now living retired in Monaghan township.

Henry Heiges, grandfather of George G. Heiges, was born in Pennsylvania, of German parentage. He spent nearly all of his life in Franklin township, where he owned several farms. He was the father of these children: Rebecca, Elizabeth, Hannah, Mary, George, Jacob, Daniel, Abraham, and Henry. Henry Heiges was a member of the Lutheran Church. His wife died young, while Mr. Heiges died in the fifties.

George Heiges, father of George G., was born in Franklin township, where he received his education in the common schools. He became the owner of his father's property, which he cultivated all his life, except ten years previous to his death, at the age of seventy-eight years, when he lived retired. His wife died in 1867, aged sixty years. Mr. and Mrs. Heiges were valued members of the German Reformed Church, of which he was a liberal supporter. Politically he was a stanch Democrat. These children were born to them: Henry, Jonas, Levi, George G., Joseph, John, Solomon and Mary A.

George G. Heiges received his education in the common schools of Warrington township, and learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for eighteen years, later becoming a tenant farmer, continuing in this until he bought a farm in Warrington township, which he later sold. In 1897 Mr. Heiges bought his present farm, which consists of seventy-nine acres of well-cultivated land, and Mr. Heiges has lived retired for some time.

In 1870 Mr. Heiges was married to Miss Mary Harbold, born in Washington township, daughter of Daniel Harbold. The children born to this union were: Daniel, William, George, Noah and Sarah A. Religiously the family are connected with the Reformed Church. Mr. Heiges is a Democrat, but takes no active interest in politics. Mr. Heiges is a man of the strictest integrity and a high sense of honor, and has gained the confidence and respect of all with whom he has had dealings.

ADAM HOLTZAPPLE, a venerable resident of York, was born in West Manchester township, Nov. 10, 1816, son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Eisenhart) Holtzapple. The only school which he attended was a small one near a blacksmith shop near his home. After leaving school he helped his father on the farm for some time, later learning the weaving trade. He returned to farming, however, first in West Manchester, and later in Dover township. In the latter place he bought a farm and lived there till he retired from active life, when he went to York to make his home with his daughter, Mrs. Hildebrand.

At the age of twenty-four Mr. Holtzapple was united in marriage to Miss Sallie Quickel, daughter of Philip Quickel. She died and was buried at Strayer's Church in Dover township. She was the mother of two daughters, namely: Lovina, who married J. Z. Hildebrand, present county commissioner; and Sarah, who died young. While Mr. Holtzapple is almost ninety years old, he is still active and erect, able to attend to many lighter duties, such as marketing. His memory, too, is unimpaired, and he is altogether a most unusually well-preserved man.

JACOB HENRY BECK, foreman for the Northern Central Railroad, residing at Glatfelters station, comes from one of the old substantial families of York county. He was born in North Codorus township, Oct. 2, 1854.

Andrew Beck, father of Jacob H., in early life was a carpenter, but later turned his attention to farming and followed that occupation on property which he owned near Glatfelters Station. He died there on Feb. 13, 1905, and is buried at the Ziegler Church. He is survived by his widow, Catherine (Bentz) Beck, who still resides on the homestead. Their children were, Amanda, Rosa, Elizabeth, Ida and Jacob Henry.

Jacob H. Beck received his education in the public schools and after finishing his studies took a position in 1870 with the Northern Central Railroad as a laborer, working on the repair gang. After three years at this work, he was promoted to be assistant foreman, and as he proved himself strictly reliable and trustworthy, attending closely to his own business, he was made in 1878 foreman of subdivision 9 1/2, Glatfelters, with six men and an assistant foreman under him. His portion of the track is among the very best along the line of the railroad.

Mr. Beck married, in 1879, Ella J., daughter of Jonas and Mary (Kissinger) Fiddler, of York county, and five children have been born to them, Lillie K., Andrew, Howard F., Lucy M., and Hattie L. Mr. Beck is a Democrat, and a good citizen, who has served his community as a member of the school board. Religiously he belongs to St. Paul’s Lutheran Church, known as Ziegler’s Church, about two miles west of Glatfelters, which church was built early in the eighteenth century, and rebuilt in 1880. The matter has now been taken up again to build the third church. Mr. Jacob H. Beck being the instigator, and it has been decided so to do. Ground for the foundation was broken Jan. 15, 1906. The building committee consists of five, Jacob H. Beck, Martin Glatfelter, Martin Klinedinst, William Becker, and Emanuel Ruth. The first church was an old log building, the second a stone building, and the new one will be of brick, and thoroughly up-to-date. This church is also known as the Mother of Five Churches—New Salem, Stoverstown, Shafters, Seven Valley and Schulsters.

SIMON G. ENGLEBREATH, a farmer of North Hopewell township, York county, also engages quite extensively in the manufacture of cigars.

Frederick Englebreath, grandfather of Simon G., was a hotel and store keeper, and came of a family of tavern keepers. He was a resident of Germany, where he died a wealthy man.

Frederick Englebreath, Jr., father of our subject, was born at the tavern home in Germany in 1815. He received an excellent education in his native country, and learned the shoemaking trade. There he married Miss Katherine Stabley, born in the same country, of an old German family of high standing. The parents of our subject, with a baby six months old, sailed from Bremen to Baltimore, Md., on a sailing vessel, which met contrary winds, and was over six months on the voyage. On arriving in this country the couple settled in Seven Valley, York Co., Pa., for a time, in 1846 moving to Winterstown, where Mr. Englebreath purchased sixty acres of land. There he died Jan. 13, 1893, his wife having passed away in June, 1890. This couple were members of the Lutheran Church in Germany, but after their arrival in this country became connected with the Evangelical Church. Politically the father was a Republican. The children born to Frederick and Katherine (Stabley) Englebreath were as follows: Maria, Mrs. Jeremiah Henry died in North Hopewell township; Dorothy married (first) Andrew Haney, and (second) one Glessner of York, where she died; Caroline married John Blymyer, of Baltimore, Md.; Lizzie is Mrs. Samuel Moore, of Columbia, Pa.; Simon G.; and E. Frederick, of Bedford, Pa., married Lizzie Wanterly.

Simon G. Englebreath was born Oct. 7, 1846, at Glen Rock, and was but a few months old when taken to Winterstown by his parents. He attended school in the latter place until twelve years of age, when he went to work for T. M. Curran, of Cross Roads, remaining with him nine years, two years of which he attended school in the winter months. During this time Mr. Englebreath took up the study of medicine, but owing to the objections of his father, he abandoned the same, and returned home for a time. He returned to the Doctor after a time, but again went home, taking charge of the home farm, and caring for his parents the remainder of their days. After the death of his parents, Mr. Englebreath bought out the claims of all other heirs, and the home property is now in his possession.

In 1871 Mr. Englebreath was united in marriage with Miss Laura M. Blake, of Peach Bottom township, daughter of Asbury and Catherine (Webster) Blake, the latter a distant relative of Noah Webster, compiler of Webster's Dictionary.

A few years ago Mr. Englebreath sold the home property and moved to the borough proper, where he engaged in carpentering and contracting, and erected seven residences in Winterstown, as well as others at Cross Roads, and worked at his trade in Columbia. Mr. Englebreath has been active in township affairs since attaining his majority, casting his first vote for Grant, on the Republican ticket, and voting with that party ever since. He has served in the borough as judge of election, tax collector and is now serving his second term as school director, of which board he has been secretary. He united with the Evangelical Association when eighteen years of age, and remained with that body until its disorganization. Mr. Englebreath was a teacher in the Sunday-school when nineteen years old, and later became superintendent, and when the church became divided he joined the branch that became the United Evangelical body. Since that time he has been superintendent of the Sunday-school, is class leader, and has been trustee for a number of years. Mr. Englebreath affiliates fraternal with the Red Men and the Knights of the Mystic Chain. About ten years ago Mr. Englebreath engaged in the manufacture of cigars, and he has continued in that line ever since, with great success. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Englebreath were: Chester Blake, who died at the age of twenty-one years; Lula, at home; Georgianna, who died at the age of six years; Raymond Dale; and Walter Russell.

GEORGE B. ZECH was born in New Salem, York County, in May, 1864, son of Peter Zech, and now conducts the only hotel in North York borough.

Michael Zech, grandfather of George B., was born in York county, and followed farming in Conewago and York townships. His death occurred in York township, at the age of seventy-five years. The children born to himself and wife were: Isaac, who died in York county; Zacharias, who died in Shrewsbury township; Peter, mentioned below; Harris, who died in West Virginia; Reuben, who died in York; William, who died in North Codorus township; Sarah, who married Manassa Sheaffer, and lives with her daughter in North Codorus township; Annie, who married Jacob Husson, and both are deceased; and Lydia, who married Jacob Boyer, and died in Logansville.

Peter Zech, father of George B., was born in 1828, in York township, and followed farming and various other callings, spending the last ten years of his life in North York borough and York City. He died in North York borough, at the age of sixty-six years, and was buried in Prospect Hill cemetery. Mr. Zech was married three times. By his first wife, Rebecca Bahn, he had two children: Alexander, who enlisted in the United States regular army Nov. 1, 1871, and served until July 17, 1900, when he died at Passa-Co-Ballas, Cuba, and was buried at Prospect Hill, near York, March 24, 1901; and John, who died young. Mr. Zech married (second) Elizabeth Fishe, daughter of John and Mary Fishe, of Hopewell township, and to this marriage were born two sons, George B. and Albert H. The mother died April 19, 1879, and was buried at Shaffer's Church, Codorus township. Mr. Zech's third wife, Henrietta Smith, survives and lives in York.

George B. Zech attended the public schools of Codorus township, and worked at farming in York and Lancaster counties. He then came to York and worked at the sale and exchange stable of Haas & Grove for three years. after which he removed to Baltimore, where he was employed as bar clerk for three years. Returning to York he became bar clerk at the "Central Hotel" and at the "Marshall House," in all nine years. In 1899 he engaged in the hotel business at North York borough, and he has since continued in that line. His hotel building is fitted with all modern improvements, is well-kept, and is in a convenient location. Mr. Zech owns a one-fourth part of the engine house which adjoins his hotel.

In politics Mr. Zech is a Democrat, and has served as councilman in the borough of North York.

On Jan. 27, 1895, Mr. Zech married Mary Henry, daughter of Isaac and Mary Ann Henry, prosperous farming people of Springfield township. Mr. Zech is not only a sagacious business man, but one of honor and integrity, and he enjoys the confidence of the community.

JOHN B. HAMME, architect of the firm of Hamme & Leber, is descended from one of the earliest settlers of York county. John Valentine Hamme, his great-great-grandfather, was born in the village of Elsheim, in the Province of Rhein-Hessen, Germany, three hours journey from the city of Mayence, about the year 1700. He sailed from Rotterdam in the ship "Loyal Judith," arrived at Philadelphia and took the oath of allegiance Sept. 2, 1743. He went first to Tulpehocken, Berks Co., Pa., but soon after went farther west into York county, where he took up 333 acres of land in Dover township, adjoining the village of Weigelstown on the north, and which has remained in the possession of his descendants until the present time. Here his first wife died and was buried on their farm in April, 1751. He married again, in January, 1752, Louisa May, by whom he had children, as follows: Catherine Dorothy married Daniel May; Balthasar; Christian married Anna Maria Yoner; John Frederick (deceased); John Jacob married Anna Elizabeth Herman, and moved to Martinsburg, W. Va.; and Anna Maria married Rev. John Ruthrauff, and moved to Greencastle, Pennsylvania.

John Valentine Hamme was naturalized by Judges Gordon and Coleman at Philadelphia, in June, 1763, and died in the spring of 1766, "old in years," and was buried beside his first wife in the family burial ground about 100 yards north of the line of the York & Dover Electric railway just across the Little Conewago Creek, where (1901) several stones still marked their last resting place.

Balthasar Hamme, eldest son of Valentine and great-grandfather of John B., was born April 16, 1754, and upon his father's death inherited 199 3/4 acres of land. To this tract he added, from time to time, until he became an extensive landholder, owning at the time of his death 1,236 acres lying on both sides of the Little Conewago Creek, in Dover and West Manchester townships. He owned two distilleries in which the grain from his farms was converted into whiskey, hauled to Baltimore by his own teams and exchanged for other merchandise. He was also extensively engaged before the days of railroads in the business of freighting between Philadelphia and Pittsburg, and had a number of teams on the road making regular trips between those cities. He, and also his brother Christian participated in the war for independence as members of the Fourth Company, First Battalion, York County Militia, commanded by their brother-in-law, Capt. Daniel May, forming part of the York County contingent to the Flying Camp, and saw active service at the seat of war.

Balthasar Hamme was married to Catherine, daughter of Philip and Maria Ester Kreher, and had children, as follows: Susannah, who married Daniel Rauhouser; John, deceased; John Jacob, who married Anna Maria Zimmerman; David, who married Susannah, daughter of John and Anna Maria Wolf, and moved to Ohio, finally settling near the city of Springfield, in that State; Henry, who married Lydia, daughter of John and Elizabeth Heidelbaugh; Catherine, who married Jacob Hoffheins; Anna Maria, who married John May; Adam, deceased; John Frederick; Lydia, who married William Caldwell; and Jonas. Balthasar Hamme died May 1, 1826, three years after the death of his wife, and they are both buried in the cemetery at Salem (Straylers) Church, near Dover, this county.

John Frederick Hamme, born Aug. 6, 1794, sixth son of Balthasar and grandfather of John B., was married March 3, 1827, to Margaret Rebecca, daughter of Conrad and Barbara Gentzler and great-granddaughter of Conrad Gentzler, who with his wife, Maria Catherine, emigrated from Germany to America Aug. 24, 1743. Their children were: Jesse, who married (first) Rachael, daughter of Charles Strine, (second) Elizabeth Shellenberger, of Lancaster county, Pa., and moved to Kansas in 1873; Alfred; John, who married Amanda, daughter of William and Lydia.
Diehl; Maria, who married (first) Alfred Schriver and (second) Jacob Gladfelter; Adam, who married Mary, daughter of John Kaufman; Sarah, who married Henry Z. Bowman and lives in Kansas; Elizabeth, married to Jacob M. Spangler and who moved to Renovo, Pa.; and Rebecca, married to Dr. Herman A. Eisenhart. John Frederick Hamme died March 30, 1861, his wife having passed away some time before.

Alfred Hamme, the second son of John Frederick and father of John B., was born Nov. 7, 1830, and married on March 20, 1853, Maria, daughter of John Bentz and his wife Magdalena, daughter of Philip and Sarah (Kline) Blessing, of Hellam township. Her grandfather was Peter Bentz, a Revolutionary soldier and a member of Captain Simon Copenhaver's Company, Second Battalion, York County Militia. He was a son of John Michael Bentz whose father John, with his wife Maria Magdalena, came to America from Germany Sept. 25, 1732. He settled in that part of Newberry township, which was later incorporated into the township of Conewago, where he died about the year 1787. He was one of the organizers of the First Lutheran (Christ) Church in York, in 1733.

Alfred Hamme was engaged in farming until 1887, when he moved into the city and embarked in merchandising. He had children as follows: Franklin, William (deceased), George, Alfred, John Bentz, Sarah Ellen, Edward, Emma Kate, Charles (deceased) and Magdalena. He was an upright honorable man, a good citizen and an active Christian; a life long member of Christ Lutheran Church, and for twenty-eight years a member of her council, during twelve of which he was the honored president. He died April 15, 1893.

John Bentz Hamme, fifth son of Alfred and Maria (Bentz) Hamme, was born April 8, 1862, in Manchester township, about two miles from the city. In 1863 his parents removed to York, and there he has since lived. He early attended the public schools, and later, the York County Academy, under Prof. George W. Ruby; and on Nov. 4, 1881, he entered the office of J. A. Dempwolf, architect of York, to take up the profession he has made his life work. After five years of study under the supervision of Mr. Dempwolf, he entered, in September, 1886, the junior class at Cornell University, taking the course in architecture and graduating with the class of 1888. At that time he received from his Alma Mater the offer of a position as instructor in architecture, but, preferring to engage in the active practice of his profession, he returned to the office of his early preceptor, Mr. Dempwolf, with whom he remained until 1890, when he went to Seattle, Wash. There he entered into partnership with John Parkinson, and erected a number of structures including the magnificent building of the First National Bank of that city. Returning to York he again entered the office of Mr. Dempwolf, and in March, 1900, in partnership with Edward Leber formed the firm of Hamme & Leber, architects, which has had an extensive and successful practice from the beginning.

On Oct. 28, 1891, Mr. Hamme was married to Minnie A. Kohler, daughter of Elias and Harriet (Peeling) Kohler, of York, who is descended on her father's side from Hans Philip Kohler, a native of Germany who emigrated to this country in 1738, when twenty-one years of age, settling in Manchester township, and on her mother's side from Robert Peeling, great-great-grandfather, who came to America from the north of Ireland just prior to the Revolutionary war, in which he served throughout as sergeant of Captain Jacob Ashmead's company, 2nd Regiment, Pennsylvania Line, commanded by Col. James Stewart. He was taken prisoner at the Battle of Long Island, but escaped by swimming across the East River at night. He died in 1837, and is buried in Strickler's cemetery near Stony Brook, this county. Mr. and Mrs. Hamme have one child, John Alfred, born Aug. 13, 1897.

Mr. Hamme is a Republican in politics and served four years—1900-1904—as a member of the select council from the Ninth ward, York, and as president of that body for one year. He is a member of the Lafayette Club, the B. P. O. E., and of York Lodge No. 266, F. & A. M. He is an active Lutheran, a member of St. Matthew's Church of York, where he is a successful teacher in the Sunday-school. In all the relations of life—business, social and religious—Mr. Hamme enjoys the respect and esteem of all who know him.

WILLIAM F. BAUGHMAN, dealer in fertilizers, lumber, ties, shingles, wood, etc., and operating extensively on timber lands through York county, makes his home in North Hopewell township, and is one of York county's substantial business men.

William Baughman, father of our subject, was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, in 1833, and there attended school until he was fourteen years old. He then worked on a farm until he was twenty, when he came to the United States. Having no capital to start a business of any kind, he went to Baltimore, and from there to York, Pa., where he broke stone in a stone quarry for many years. In 1855 he was married in York to Miss Mary Kottcamp, a native of Prussia, Germany, who came to the United States with her mother and brothers, Henry, Fred and Charles, who now reside in York. In 1865 Mr. Baughman located in North Hopewell township, where he bought a small tract of thirty acres, later selling this to purchase a larger farm. He was a very active man in church work, being a member of the Evangelical Church. In politics he was a Republican. He died in 1904, aged seventy years, while the death of his wife occurred in 1898, when she was aged sixty-two years. They had these children: John H., of North Hopewell township; Annie, Mrs. John S. Eckert, of Windsor township; William F.; Charles S., of North Hopewell township; Mary, Mrs. Lemuel S. Hake, of the same township; Sarah J., Mrs. Nathan Landis, of Winterstown; and Lillie, Mrs. Oscar Grove, of North Hopewell township.

William F. Baughman was born in York, York county, Jan. 19, 1862, and was about five years old when his father located in North Hopewell township. He attended the common schools of the township until about sixteen years of age, first to Sue McGuiggan, while Annie Gantz was his last teacher. Mr. Baughman's educational opportunities were few, and most of his education he has received in the school of life. He remained with his father on the farm until of age, and then hired out as a farm hand for two years. On Oct. 4, 1883, he married Lottie Kohler, born in what is now North Hopewell township, daughter of the late Henry Kohler, a native of Saxony, Germany, who was a three years' man in the 87th P. V. L. during the Civil war, receiving a wound in the leg at the battle of the Wilderness. Mrs. Baughman's mother was Hannah Bressler, also a native of Saxony, Germany, and she is also deceased. After his marriage our subject lived in a tenant house for six years, and farmed tobacco and potatoes on shares. In the six years that he was occupied in this way he accumulated $500, with which he bought his present place of forty-six acres. About 1895 Mr. Baughman went into the fertilizer business, afterward adding the other branches mentioned above. He is a self-made man. Everything he has in this world he has acquired through his own efforts, with the exception of a cow and one dozen chickens which he received from home. Mr. Baughman attributes his success to the fact that he had good credit when he started in the business for himself. He still has that credit, and it is now unlimited. Mr. Baughman is a member of the M. E. Church, which he joined at twenty-three years of age, at that time starting to take an active part in the work of that organization. He has been trustee and steward for years, and was greatly instrumental in having the new church edifice erected at Cross Roads, Pa. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and has always given a great deal of attention to the success of his party. Although often solicited to do so, he has always refused public office. Fraternally he is connected with the Blue Lodge, No. 423, A. F. & A. M., of Shrewsbury; Howell Chapter, R. A. M., of York, No. 199; Gethsemane Commandery, No. 75, York, Knights Templar; Felton Lodge, K. of P.

The following children have been born to Mr. Baughman and his estimable wife: Mayme, Annie, Emma, Ruth and William, of whom Mayme is now attending the Peabody Conservatory of Music, Baltimore, Md.; and Emma is now teaching her second term of school in North Hopewell township.

G. W. Bamberger, a farmer of Newberry township, York county, was born in 1863, at New Cumberland, Cumberland Co., Pa., son of Zacharias Bamberger. The Bamberger family is an old established one in Pennsylvania. Jacob Bamberger, the great-grandfather of our subject, came from Germany, where he was born in 1775, and he died in 1842, in Dauphin county, Pa. His occupation through life was farming. He married Sophia Ettlee, born in 1778, and died in 1839, and they both were buried near Middletown, in Dauphin county. During a part of his life he had lived near Middletown, Dauphin county. They had issue as follows: Mary, wife of Jacob Rife, deceased; Mrs. Motter, deceased; William; Joseph, a minister of the Church of God.

William Bamberger, grandfather of our subject, was born May 3, 1813, in Dauphin county. For a number of years he followed farming, first in Dauphin county, then for nine years on the island in the Susquehanna river. He afterward went to Marsh Run in Fairview township, York county, and was employed with the Northern Central Railroad, under his son, Zacharias, for about five years, and then retired for the remainder of his life, his death taking place in New Cumberland, Cumberland county, Feb. 26, 1901. He married Sarah Parthemore, born Nov. 27, 1816, at Middletown, Pa., who died Oct. 6, 1873, at her home in Fairview township. She was buried in the Highspire Church cemetery, in Dauphin county. She was a consistent member of the Church of God.

Zacharias Bamberger, father of our subject, was the eldest child, the rest of the family being: Mary Sophia, born March 5, 1839, died June 8, 1849, and was buried at Highspire Church; Archibald W., born Aug. 14, 1841, died Feb. 21, 1862, and was buried at Highspire; William H. H., born Dec. 25, 1842, died Feb. 3, 1846, and was buried at the Highspire Church; Mary Elmina, born Jan. 12, 1848, died March 6, 1851, in York county; Alfred P., born Nov. 13, 1848, served as a private in the Civil war as a member of Company C, 112th P. V. I., later being employed for years on the Northern Central Railroad, and now living at New Cumberland (he married Mary C. Diffenderfer, daughter of William and Anna Diffenderfer); Mary E., born Aug. 16, 1851, on the island in the Susquehanna, married William Henry Moyer, born July 1, 1848, son of Samuel and Catherine (Look) Moyer, and now lives in Fairview township; John C., born Feb. 20, 1854, married Susan Green, daughter of John Green, who died in York county; Emma C., born Feb. 6, 1857, died young; and William Franklin, born Dec. 20, 1859, lives in Fairview township.

Zacharias Bamberger, father of our subject, was born May 27, 1838, in Dauphin county, near Middletown. After completing a district school education, the best afforded by that place and time, he went into railroad work, entering the employ of the Northern Central Railroad, May 1, 1857, on the Baltimore Division, and he continued until Dec. 28, 1863. From Aug. 27, 1864, until June 21, 1865, he served in the Civil war in Company F, 201st P. V. I. After his return from the army he re-entered the employ of the railroad company Sept. 1, 1865, and he remained continuously in that service until April 1, 1870, when he was appointed by H. E. Parmore, as foreman on sub-division 16, Section No. 2, Baltimore Division. In the fall of 1900 his health failed, and about April 1, 1901, he was placed on the Pennsylvania Railroad Voluntary Relief Department under medical treatment. This continued until Dec. 1, 1903, when he was retired and placed on the pension rolls. He now resides in Goldsboro, Etters P. O., on the banks of the Susquehanna river. In the great ice gorge and flood, March 8, 1904, all his buildings, except the house, were broken to pieces, and the family were driven out by the ice and water.

On Dec. 30, 1856, Zacharias Bamberger was married (first) to Barbara Eva Wolf, who was born June 20, 1837, and who died July 19, 1895, in York county, aged fifty-eight years and twenty-nine days. The children born of this union were: Sarah Ann, born Aug. 19, 1857, married Oct. 21, 1875, Daniel Miller, and lives in Goldsboro, York county; Elmira Jane, born Oct. 15, 1859, was married June 15, 1880, to Richard F. Kelley, and lives in Fairview township; George W., born Oct. 27, 1860, died Dec. 15, 1860; William Franklin, born Oct. 27, 1861, married Susan Willis, living in Goldsboro; G. W., born Sept. 17, 1863; Daniel Warren, born Jan. 12, 1866, married Amanda Beshore, and resides in Newberry township, having his father's old position as foreman with the Northern Central Railroad; Emma Louisa, born March 26, 1868, married June 8, 1884, Theodore Idle, and lives in York; Harry Alfred, born March 11, 1870, married Emma Brenneman, and lives in Goldsboro, foreman under his brother; Joseph Z., born July 2, 1872, died in 1889; Herman Elwood, born April 21, 1874, married Laura Clemens, and is a carpenter living at York Haven; Minnie Eve, born June 2, 1876, is the wife of Milton Allison, a conductor on the shifting freights at York; and Mary Elizabeth, born Aug. 16, 1877, who died in 1891.

Zacharias Bamberger married (second) Leah Shelly Souders, who was born March 15, 1837, daughter of West and Mary (Hoffstot) Shelly.

G. W. Bamberger attended the public schools until he was seventeen years old, and then went to work for the Northern Central Railroad under his father, and was employed there for six years, and then worked one year at the carpenter's trade. Then he embarked in farming in Newberry township, where he owns two fine farms, one of sixty and one of forty acres.

On Dec. 16, 1883, Mr. Bamberger married Annie Detwiler, daughter of Elias and Frances (Gotwals) Detwiler, and they have had children: William, born March 3, 1885; Minnie, born June 2, 1886; Elias, born Aug. 11, 1887; Zacharias, born Feb. 8, 1889; Frances, born April 28, 1890; an infant, born June 9, 1892; Edna Ruth, born May 28, 1893; Barbara Eve, born Dec. 18, 1894; Elizabeth D., born Aug. 2, 1898, died Aug. 26, 1900; John D., born Dec. 18, 1899, died Sept. 1, 1900; and Anna Lulu, born June 14, 1901. In politics he is a Republican. Mr. and Mrs. Bamberger are leading members of the U. B. Church.

Elias Detwiler, father of Mrs. Bamberger, was born in 1818, in Montgomery county, Pa., and when a young man came to Newberry township, where he bought a farm of 160 acres. He married Frances Gotwals, daughter of Joseph Gotwals. His death took place in 1889, and that of his widow in 1900, and both were interred in the Fetrow graveyard in Newberry township. Their children were: Miss Elizabeth, living at York; James G., married to Mary Gotwals and living in Montgomery county; Samuel, married to Elmira Powell, and living at Steelton; Sarah, wife of Joseph Gotwals, of Norristown; Susanna, wife of Alfred Bamberger, of New Cumberland; Mary, wife of Henry Allebaugh, of Norristown; Catherine, wife of Howard Nicholas, a carpenter in Newberry township; Frances, wife of Jacob Conley, a farmer of Newberry township, extended mention of whom will be found elsewhere; John, married to Alice Hoyer, and living in Montgomery county; Elias, who married (first) Katie Stauffer, and (second) Martha Forbes, and they live in Philadelphia; Joseph, married Jane Schuller, of Conewago township; and Annie, wife of G. W. Bamberger.

As will be seen by this long record, the Bamberger family is not only a numerous one in this section, but it is one which is held in high esteem. Years of faithful service reflect credit upon the father of our subject, and the recognition of this fidelity by the great corporation, emphasized the value in which he was held. The family is one of intelligence as well as substance.

J. W. SHAFFER, a prominent and leading citizen of York county, who is serving as justice of the peace in Monaghan township, follows contracting and building on an extensive scale. Mr. Shaffer was born March 16, 1852, in Monaghan township, son of George and Margaret (Myers) Shaffer, and grandson of James and Martha (Epplcy) Shaffer.

James Shaffer was a stone mason by trade and followed this calling nearly all his life in York county. He died in 1856, aged about sixty-seven years, and his wife died in 1867, aged eighty years. The children born to this worthy couple were: John, George D., Abraham, James, Joseph, Mary A. and Sophia.

George D. Shaffer was a stone mason by trade, but from the year 1847 until his death followed farming. For sixteen years he was in the lumber and coal business in Bowmansdale. He became very prosperous, at one time owning three farms. He died in January, 1902, almost eighty years old, his wife, Margaret (Myers), having passed away in 1896, aged seventy-six years. They were members of the Church of God. Like his father Mr. Shaffer was a staunch Democrat, and always upheld the principles of his party, being honored with several township offices. He and his wife were the parents of these children: Martha J., deceased; Dare G., Samuel M., James W., Elizabeth E., Margaret A., Mary M., Sophia J., Alice M. (deceased), Ida F. and Drusilla E.

J. W. Shaffer received his preliminary education in the public schools of York county, and then attended the Cumberland Valley Institute at Mechanicsburg, which institution is now defunct. He afterward took a special course at the Chambersburg Academy, and graduated from that institution. His first work after leaving school was at farming. Later he turned his attention in 1876 to the lumber and coal business, at which he worked with his father at Bowmansdale for sixteen years. He was then employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad, for several years doing construction work between Harrisburg and Philadelphia. In 1890 Mr. Shaffer returned to Monaghan township and purchased his present property, building a fine, new, modern ten-room house, and good substantial out-buildings. His farm contains 130 acres of valuable land, and is situated about ten miles from Harrisburg, and within a mile of Bowmansdale. His farm is well located, being near both schools and churches, and the ground has excellent irrigation facilities. In 1898 Mr. Shaffer first engaged in contracting and building, and is today considered a very successful man in that line. He is constantly kept busy, generally employing six hands, but sometimes needing eight.

In 1890 Mr. Shaffer married Miss Jessie E. Reever, daughter of Hanson E. and Martha A. Reever, of Bowmansdale, and five children have been born to this union: Violet, deceased; George, deceased; J. Aldons; Marguerite, deceased; and H. Seibert. In religion the family are members of the Church of God. Mr. Shaffer is a Democrat and was one of the enumerators of the Tenth Census in 1880. He has been justice of the peace for eleven years. He was re-elected in 1904, and his commission will expire in 1909. Mr. Shaffer has served under these governors: Pattison, for five years; Hastings, for one year; Stone for five years; and Pennypacker, for five years—a very notable record. He is a local historian with a vast fund of information, concerning this part of the country, and he furnished valuable data for the Gibson History of York county (1886). He has traveled extensively over this country and Canada, visiting the latter country and New York State in 1875, and he is familiar with the States of New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Delaware, which he visited in the winter of 1880, and also with Florida and the southern States.

Both as a business man, citizen and public official, Judge Shaffer is held in high esteem, and is considered one of the substantial representative men of Monaghan township.

THOMAS ENGLE, a contractor for cement work in York, was born in that city Oct. 30, 1861, and comes of a family whose name appears in the records of many of our national wars. His grandfather, Thomas Engle, fought in the Revolution, and the latter's brother Jonathan in the war of 1812; Thomas, a cousin of our subject, was in the Mexican war, and his brother Jacob and cousin Fred were in the Civil War.

Thomas Engle was educated in the public schools and attended until he was twelve years old, at which time he began assisting his father in the lime business. At the age of eighteen he went to his brother Michael to learn the plasterer's trade, and then in turn took up the work of a brickmason. For about thirteen years he worked in Philadelphia, taking contracts on dwelling houses, while from 1890 to 1901 he did contracting in York. In the latter year he took up the cement business, and handles contracts for laying walks, etc., doing a large business, and giving employment on an average to ten men. He is a thoroughly wide-awake, energetic and progressive man, and is continually increasing the scope of his work. He is also active in politics as a good Republican. Fraternally he is connected with the Amity Tribe, No. 93 I. O. R. M., of York.

In 1884 Mr. Engle was united in marriage to Miss Margery Kate Staub, daughter of Andrew and Lydia Staub. Mrs. Engle was born in York, but was reared in the family of John Cochran, of Lancaster, Pa. Of the eleven children born to this marriage, several died in infancy, the others being: Joseph N., Samuel F., Lydia M., Thomas T. (now deceased), David E., William T. and George W. The family attend the Lutheran Church.

GEORGE S. HENNEISE, of East Manchester township, was born Oct. 9, 1842, in Wurtemberg, Germany, son of Gottlieb and Anna Magdalena (Shwemle) Henneise, natives of Wurtemberg.

Gottlieb Henneise brought his family to America in 1831, locating at Baltimore, and after many adventures and inconveniences, owing probably to a want of knowledge of the customs and language of the country, Mr. Henneise succeeded in renting a house of Col. Hay, where the family remained for three years, the father following his trade and doing day laboring. Later they removed to West York where he also followed these occupations, remaining there for five years, at the end of which time he removed to West Manchester township, and located in Col. Stable's tenant house, remaining five years. After this he went to Conewago township, where he followed farming until the spring of 1866, when he died, aged seventy-nine years. He was buried at Prospect Hill cemetery. His wife died in Conewago township, and is buried with her husband. Four children were born to this couple: Beata, married John Palmtag, and resides in York; George S.; Catherine resides in New Jersey; and Lena married Albert Bodey and resides in York.

George S. Henneise was nine years old when brought to this country, and was able to read and write the German language, later being taught English in the schools of West Manchester and Conewago townships. Until the year 1864, Mr. Henneise worked as a day laborer, in this year enlisting in Company B, 200th P. V. I., being mustered in at Harrisburg, and serving faithfully until April, 1865, when he was wounded, and after nine months' service he was mustered out of service. The injury received by the bursting of the enemy's shell still inconveniences Mr. Henneise, and he will probably wear the scars for the rest of his life. After being mustered out of service Mr. Henneise returned to farming in Conewago township where he worked five years, then engaging with Peter Boyer on his farm in Dover township, working seven years, after which he returned to Conewago township, and continued there for eleven years. At this time he came to Manchester township, and engaged in farming near Aughenbaugh's school house, where he remained nine years, at the end of which time, in 1898, he bought the Widow Hensler farm in East Manchester township, which consisted of twenty-one acres of fine land where he is still engaged in farming and trucking.

In 1865 Mr. Henneise married Nancy Miller, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Hamme) Miller, and she died in Conewago township, and was buried at Quickel's Church. To George and Nancy Henneise were born the following children: Elizabeth married Adam Brown, and lives in East Manchester township; Emma Jane, born June 1, 1867, married William Dittenhafer, and lives in Conewago township; William Henry, born Sept. 8, 1868, married Amanda Hake, and lives in Manchester township; Mary Ellen, born Aug. 23, 1870, married Robert Shelley, and lives at West York; Martha married Jesse Schriver, and resides at York Haven; Frank E., born Nov. 30, 1873, married Clara Straubbaugh, and resides in Windsor township; and John Albert, born April 21, 1875, married Amanda Lease, and lives at Stony Brook.

In 1885, Mr. Henneise married Catherine (Benedick) Jordan, daughter of Samuel and Sarah (Dellinger) Benedick, of York county, and to them have been born these children: Harvey Elson, born April 8, 1887, residing at home; Cora, born April 28, 1889; and Charles Edward, born Oct. 6, 1891, at home.

In politics Mr. Henneise is a Democrat, but although being an active party worker has never sought office. He is a member of the Lutheran Church at Quickels, in which he has been an elder for two years. Throughout his long and active career his affairs have been conducted with honesty and fairness, and today he enjoys the confidence and respect of his fellow-citizens.

JESSE L. KRALL, of Washington township, York county, was born in this township, in 1857, and belongs to one of the old and honorable families of this portion of Pennsylvania. He is a son of John Krall, and the full family history will be found in another part of this work.

Jesse L. Krall attended the schools at Kralltown, a village so named in honor of his own family, and went from there to a summer school at York Springs, and later he enjoyed the instruction of Prof. D. G. Williams and Prof. Prowell, at York. This brought him to the age of twenty years, and his school-days closed.

Mr. Krall belongs to an energetic, practical family, and after leaving school and prior to taking up farming, he learned the carpenter's trade and followed it for a number of years, and even yet can compete in this line with many younger men in the trade. He later engaged in farming, spending two summers at Lancaster, one of these being spent on the farm of Bishop Jacob N. Brubaker. He then returned to Washington township, and for the next twenty years farmed the homestead for himself and sisters, a tract of 173 acres of land. In 1903 he bought his present farm of fifty acres from Daniel Shelley, and continues to carry on large agricultural operations here. He has a fine body of fertile, well-located land which he has placed under good cultivation.

Mr. Krall is one of the staunch Republicans of his township, and he has been school director here for a number of years. He is a leading member of the United Evangelical Church, president of the K. L. C. society, is a class leader and has served as steward and Sunday-school teacher. He is an honest, upright man who commands the respect of all who know him, and he ranks with the representative citizens of this locality.

FREDERICK DITMER, who owns a farm of ninety acres in Warrington township, was born in Franklin township, York county, Sept. 3, 1846, son of Henry and Polly (Wireman) Ditmer, and grandson of Frederick and Sarah (Fogelsong) Ditmer.

Frederick Ditmer, the paternal grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was a farmer by occupation, spending all of his active period at that calling. He never owned a farm, but accumulated his means on rented properties, and at the time of his death was considered a well-to-do man. He carried on farming for twenty-two years on one property, which was owned by Abraham Williams, and which was located on the Yellow Breeches Creek in the northern part of York county. Frederick Ditmer died in 1862, aged about eighty-five years, and had been a consistent member of the Reformed Church for many years. He and his wife became the parents of the following children: John, Frederick, Henry, Samuel, George, David, Elizabeth, Susan and Sarah.

Henry Ditmer, son of Frederick, was reared in Cumberland county. His education was obtained in the common schools of his day, and when a young man he learned the millers' trade. He did not follow it long, however, as it did not agree with his health, so he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, following this line during the summer months, and teaching school during the winter seasons, which was the custom in those days. He had accumulated a small property at the time of his death, which occurred in 1883, in his sixty-fourth year, while his wife died aged seventy-two. He was a devoted member of the United Brethren Church. In politics he was a Republican, but was no office seeker. Before the war Mr. Ditmer was a member of the State militia.

Frederick Ditmer, after receiving his education in the schools of Franklin township, turned his attention to farming, and has followed this all his life. He farmed on rented property until 1882, when he purchased his present farm of ninety acres, which was formerly owned by Milton Cookson, and which comprises several small tracts, which Mr. Ditmer has put in a fine state of cultivation.

In 1873 Mr. Ditmer married Susan Willey, daughter of Christian Willey and three children have been born to this union: Henry, a plumber who was killed at Baileys, Perry Co., Pa., Jan. 7, 1905, while in the employ of the Pennsylvania railroad, aged twenty-seven years, ten months and twenty days; Grace and Rebecca. Mrs. Ditmer is a member of the Lutheran Church, while Mr. Ditmer is liberal in his religious views. His political connection is with the Republican party. He is one of the good citizens of Warrington township, and is highly respected throughout the community.

WILLIAM M. ECKENRODE. Probably no business line has grown more rapidly in any section of the country than that of insurance, in the past twenty years. One of its successful promoters in York is William M. Eckenrode, the general agent of The Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Philadelphia, for York and Adams counties. Mr. Eckenrode's ancestors came from Germany, and he is a grandson of John Eckenrode, a farmer, who resided near New Oxford, Adams county, Pennsylvania.

Aloysius Eckenrode, father of William M. Eckenrode, was also a farmer of Adams county, who died Dec. 31, 1882, aged seventy-six years, while his wife, Nancy Myers, a member of a well known New Oxford, Adams county, family, died in July of the same year. They were the parents of ten children, eight sons and two daughters.

William M. Eckenrode was born near New Oxford, Adams county, Dec. 6, 1840, and was educated in the public schools of Adams com-
ty. He taught school for two consecutive terms in Mount Pleasant township, Adams county, after which he became an apprentice to and learned the art of printing in the office of the Gettysburg Compiler, where he remained three years, and was then employed on the Congressional Globe, Washington, D. C., two years. He next engaged in the life insurance business, first representing the Massachusetts Mutual, of Springfield, Mass. On May 10, 1876, Mr. Eckenrode was appointed agent for Schuylkill county, Pa., for the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Philadelphia, with office at Pottsville, and he has been connected with that company ever since. In 1882 he was transferred to the York agency, and later became general agent for York and Adams counties.

Mr. Eckenrode was married June 5, 1882, to Catherine Elizabeth Klunk, youngest daughter of ex-sheriff Jacob Klunk, of Adams county, and six children have been born to this union: David Martin, a graduate of the York High school, and now at the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia; Mary Genevieve, who graduated at St. Joseph's Academy at Emmitsburg, Md., in June, 1905; Pauline and Marguerite, now at school in same institution; William Hamilton, in the York high school, class of 1908; and Catherine Esther, also at school.

SAMUEL JOHN BARNETT was born in Peach Bottom township, York County, Pa., Jan. 5, 1846, son of John and Catharine A. (Hess) Barnett, who came from Lancaster county, Pa., in 1838. His mother was a woman of great vigor and business activity, of German descent, with an admixture of Irish blood. His paternal grandfather was John K. Barnett, who lived near Fairfield, Lancaster county; his great-grandfather was Mark Barnett, who moved from Upper Harford county, Md., to Belmont county, Ohio, about 1805, and who is said to have lived to the age of 110 years. The nationality of the Barnett ancestry is involved in some obscurity, though the original members in this country probably emigrated at an early period from England or the north of Ireland. The family name appears to be derived from the Roman title "baronetts," Norman French "baronette," English "baronet," from which comes the English-Irish name Barnett, Barnett, or Barnette.

Samuel J. Barnett was the fourth son of his parents. His elder brothers were Martin Sylvester, of Cuba, Mo., where he is president of the People's Bank; David Alva, who lost his life in defense of his country in the war of the Rebellion while color-sergeant of the 99th Pa. V. I.; and William James, a retired farmer and canner of Delta, Pa.

Samuel J. Barnett was born and reared on a farm and trained to agricultural pursuits. His father died when he was six years old, and his education was entrusted to his mother, who struggled hard to give her five children as good an education as the public and private schools of the community would afford. He was fond of reading, an apt student, and early developed a talent for mathematics, distancing most of his teachers in that line. Later, however, his tastes led him more into philosophical and metaphysical subjects. Early in the year 1866 he spent a few weeks at the Millersville State Normal School, where he almost immediately gained recognition as an original thinker and strong debater. His attendance at this school was broken by terms of teaching to raise funds. In 1866 he graduated in the elementary course, and after further teaching and study finished the scientific course in 1874. With the exception of a few intervals, he followed the vocation of teacher from 1864 to 1884, most of the time in the public and private schools of his native township. In 1869, after finishing the elementary course at Millersville, he became principal of the public schools at Shamokin, Pa., and organized the high school of that town. In 1874-75 he filled a similar position in Lehighton, Pa. As a teacher he was enthusiastic and thorough, and as a disciplinarian very successful. During the years of his teaching he usually gave a few months each year to farming. In 1865 he went to Cincinnati, where he was engaged for a time clerking for the National Publishing Company. In 1872 also he served as clerk to the Presbyterian Board of Education, Philadelphia. In 1880 he purchased the Delta Herald, after the paper had had a precarious existence of eighteen months. Under his care it has become not only a success as a business venture, but a power for good which is widely felt, the paper taking high rank with the oldest papers in the county. In 1884 he gave up teaching and devoted himself to the editorial and business management of his paper.

Mr. Barnett has been twice married: on Sept. 14, 1869, he wedded Martha McCurdy, of Peach Bottom, and on Sept. 27, 1883, Fannie K. Vogt, of York. In life, character and business, Samuel J. Barnett is upright and very conscientious. He has been a warm advocate of temperance, and an active worker in church and Sunday-school. In his youth he united with the Slateville Presbyterian Church, with which he is still connected, and has for nearly twenty years filled the position of Sunday-school superintendent. In 1906 he was elected and installed a ruling elder in the church. In politics he has been a Republican. Three times he ran as a candidate for county superintendent in York county, but though acknowledged to stand head and shoulders above any other candidate, the strong political sentiment which was brought to bear against him caused his defeat. Mr. Barnett now lives in Delta, where he continues to edit and publish the Herald and Times, having bought the Delta Times in 1893, and combined it with the Herald. He is past master of Esdraelon Lodge, A. F. & A. M., and past grand commander of the Knights of Malta, and a member of the Supreme body of that Order.

Mr. Barnett takes an active interest in all that pertains to the progress and business development of his town and community, and in the moral, educational and material welfare of the people. Among the enterprises he has assisted in establishing are the Delta Electric Light Co., 1890-1891, of which he is president, and the Delta Electric Power Co. in 1896. His son David Alva, is taking an electric course at the Pennsylvania State College, a member of the class of 1907.

MILES C. COOVER, of Warrington township, York county, was born in Cumberland county, Silver Spring township, Nov. 24, 1838, son of George V. and Mary (Backenstow) Coover.

Henry Coover, the paternal grandfather, was the first of the name to settle in Silver Spring township, and there he owned one of the finest farms in the region, to which he gave his entire attention throughout his life. He married a Miss Catharine Stave, and they had three children, Henry, Catharine and George V.

George V. Coover, the father of Miles C., was born in Trindlespring, Cumberland county, on the place known as the Mansion Farm. He, too, was a farmer all his life, and he became by purchase the owner of the family homestead, whither he brought his first wife, Miss Mary Backenstow, Jan. 16, 1838. By her he had two children, Miles C. and Elias, who died in childhood and is buried at Trindlespring. Mrs. Mary Coover passed away June 12, 1841, and on May 26, 1844, her husband was married to Miss Catherine Ginrich. The children born to them were: Edwin, who was run over by a heavy wagon and killed, July 4, 1859; Samuel, who died in Kansas City, Mo., and is buried in Chestnut Hill; and Lizzie who married John Seifert, a resident of Mechanicsburg, now of Chicago, and had one son, Ralph, now deceased. George V. Coover was called from this world, Feb. 27, 1868, and is buried at Trindlespring church, Cumberland county.

Miles C. Coover as a boy attended the township schools, and later took a commercial course at a school in Carlisle, but on reaching manhood he concluded to continue the family traditions and chose a farmer’s life. He married Miss Katie A. Mishler, daughter of Isaac and Mary Ann (Brandt) Mishler, and for five years the young couple lived on the Trindlespring farm. Then followed a period of six years during which Mr. Coover lived retired from an active life, in Mechanicsburg, but at the end of that time he moved to Warrington township, and in 1880 bought the Joseph Wright farm, and returned to his former occupation. The place consists of 104 acres, much of it in timber, which Mr. Coover is clearing away. He operates a saw-mill on his farm, as well as carrying on general farming, and is very successful along both lines. Since buying the property, he has built a fine house on the place for his residence.

The family of Mr. and Mrs. Coover included eight children, namely: Iva M., a graduate of the Shippensburg Normal School, now teaching at New Cumberland; Myrtle B., who has taught but is now at home; Clara, at Mechanicsburg; Ada, who has taught but is now at home; George V., and Ralph at home: Nellie and Ethel, attending school. Mr. Coover is well known in the township, and a man much respected. In politics he is a Republican.

REUBEN P. STROMINGER, descended on both sides from families long identified with York county, was born in Newberry township, Oct. 8, 1838, son of Michael and Catherine (Peterman) Strominger.

Michael Strominger was born in 1799 on his father's farm in Fairview township, and was one of a large family, the other members being as follows: John, who died in Fairview township; Henry and Jacob, who both died in Newberry township; Rebecca, who married Henry Drawbaugh; Sarah, Mrs. John Millard, who died in Fairview township; and Catherine, who lived and died in the same locality, the wife of G. M. Travers. Michael Strominger located in Newberry township, and in time bought the old Jones farm of about 200 acres, his death occurring in Goldsboro, Sept. 23, 1873, when he was aged seventy-four years, four months and eighteen days. On Jan. 5, 1826, he married Catherine (Peterman) Strominger, who died Dec. 14, 1887, aged seventy-nine years, nine months and twelve days. Both are buried in Paddletown cemetery, Newberry township. Mrs. Strominger belonged to one of the very oldest families in the county. The children born to this union were: Susanna, born in Goldsboro, York county, the wife of Israel Jessup; Andrew, who married (first) Miss Elizabeth Murray, and (second) a Miss Johnson, and who was killed in 1870 in descending a shaft in a gold mine at Virginia City, Nevada; Jacob, who married Miss Sarah Beard, and died in Fairview township; John and Barbara, who both died young, the latter in Goldsboro; Reuben P.; Mary Catherine, who married John W. Micklin, and died in Harrisburg; and Elmira J., who died young.

Reuben P. Strominger attended the township schools till he was twenty-one, meanwhile helping his father on the farm. He learned the carpenter's trade which he followed for two years and then took up cigar making, under John B. Wolf, but had not been engaged thus long when he enlisted for service in the Civil war, April 25, 1861, in Company F, 16th P. V. I., under Col. T. A. Zeigler and Capt. Myers, of Hanover. He served until July 27, when he was discharged. In 1863 he re-enlisted, this time in Company K, 143d P. V. I., and was in all the engagements with his regiment, besides doing much guard duty. He was mustered out on June 12, 1865. From that time till the spring of 1869 Mr. Strominger followed farming, but at that period he moved to Goldsboro, where he still resides. Up to 1900 he was engaged in bridge building, and as a linesman on the railroad, but in that year his health failed him so that he was obliged to give up work, and he has ever since been an invalid. Mr. Strominger has always been an ardent Republican, active in the service of his party, and has held a number of official positions. He was justice of the peace at Goldsboro for twenty-one years, at various times filled all the offices on the election board, was secretary of the board of health and one of the school directors of the borough. He also held the office of constable for ten years.

On Dec. 9, 1866, Mr. Strominger was married to Miss Elizabeth A. Millard, daughter of Robert and Anna Barbara (Hale) Millard. Mr. Millard was a successful farmer in Fairview township, whose death occurred in 1888, three years after that of his wife. Both are buried in St. John's cemetery at Lewisberry. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Strominger were two, a son and daughter, viz.: Franklin, who died in infancy; and Jennie E., wife of H. O. Holdentime, of Harrisburg.

CHARLES A. STRACK bears a name which has been identified with the annals of York county for more than three score years, while he has here passed his entire life. He is engaged in the furniture and undertaking business in York, being practically the successor of his honored father in this enterprise.

Mr. Strack was born in York, March 4, 1843, third in the order of birth in a family of five children, of whom two sons and two daughters are living.

Charles A. Strack, father of our subject, was born in the kingdom of Saxony, Germany, in 1810, and while he was a young man his parents emigrated, in 1838, to America, settling in Baltimore, Md., where they remained until the following year, when they came to York county, where Charles A., Sr., passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring in York City in 1855. The father of our subject accompanied his parents to the New World, and became one of the early furniture dealers in York, where he continued in business for many years, up to the time of his death. He was a man of lofty integrity of character, held the respect of all with whom he came in contact and was an influential citizen and business man of York. He was a Democrat in his political proclivities, and both he and his wife were consistent and devout members of the German Reformed church, now known as the Reformed Church in America, having been numbered among the representative early members of what is now Trinity Reformed. Caroline (Funk) Strack, mother of our subject, was born in Germany, in 1806, and she passed the closing years of her gracious and useful life in York, being summoned into eternal rest in 1892.

Charles A. Strack, the immediate subject of this sketch, was reared to manhood in York, where his educational advantages were those afforded in the public schools, which he attended at intervals until he had attained the age of twelve years. He entered upon an apprenticeship to the trade of cabinetmaking, under the direction of his older brother, and he devoted his attention to practical work in this line for a period of five years, after which he became general manager of the furniture and undertaking business established by his father. In 1878 he purchased his mother's interest in the business, and has since continued the enterprise individually, while he has added in no small degree to the prestige gained by his father in connection with this line of industry. His store is located at Nos. 158 and 160 South George street, and is modern in its equipment in all departments, while the trade controlled is of representative character.

Mr. Strack is a public-spirited and progressive citizen, and has ever shown a loyal interest in his home town and county. He has served as a member of the board of education of the borough, and is identified with numerous fraternal and social organizations. He is a stanch Democrat in his political allegiance, while both he and his wife are valued members of Trinity Reformed Church.

On May 1, 1865, Mr. Strack was united in marriage to Miss Mary M. Heckert, who, like himself, is a native of York, and they have six children. Caroline S., Emma J., Charles P., Rebecca B., Samuel H. and F. Margaret.

CORNELIUS SENFT is successfully conducting a lucrative business at Menges Mill, Jackson township, in the line of general blacksmithing. Mr. Senft was born Dec. 27, 1849, son of Joseph and Susan (Neff) Senft, and grandson of Peter and Elizabeth (Baker) Senft.

The Senft family is descended from German ancestry, and Peter Senft, the grandfather, was reared to agricultural pursuits on a small farm in Codorus township, where he spent his whole life. He and his wife were the parents of the following children: John, Peter, Jacob, Abraham, Jason, Henry, Conrad, Joseph, Catherine, Savannah, and Sallie. Religiously the family were members of the Lutheran Church. Mr. Senft was a Democrat in politics. His death occurred at the age of eighty-one years, and his wife passed her seventieth year.

Joseph Senft, the father of Cornelius, spent his whole life in Codorus township. At an early age he learned the tailor's trade, which he followed many years before finally taking up farming on the old Senft estate, where his last days were spent. He died in 1872, aged fifty years. Mrs. Senft died in 1854, at the age of twenty-seven years when our subject was but a child. This couple had three children, Cornelius; Catherine, who married Martin Reber, of Codorus township; and Sophia, who married John Brillhart, of Manheim township. In religious belief, the family were Lutherans. Joseph Senft was a Republican in politics, but never accepted office.

Cornelius Senft remained at home until he attained the age of sixteen years. On Dec. 27, 1864, he enlisted in Company F, 67th P. V. I., Second Brigade, Third Division, Sixth Army Corps, Army of the Potomac, Capt. Martin K. Flick commanding. At Burkeville Station, Va., near Petersburg, Mr. Senft was wounded, but later took part in many hotly contested battles and much skirmishing. At the close of the war he received his honorable discharge, and has a record on which he can look with pride. Seldom, indeed, has a youth of sixteen years shown more manly bravery in the face of danger, or has been more honorably mentioned for fidelity to duty.

After his return to Jackson township, Mr. Senft learned the trade of blacksmith from George Mummert, of Nashville, and has followed that trade since that time. Mr. Senft came to this locality in 1868, and since his coming has been very successful in his business. In 1868 he married Mary Lease, daughter of William Lease, and thirteen children have been born to this union: Jane, William, Charles, Joseph, Catherine, Ella, Albert, John, Annie, Margaret and Mary, and two who died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Senft both attend the Lutheran Church. Mr. Senft is a stanch Republican, and is influential in township matters, and has served on the election board.

ADAM D. MYERS, one of Shrewsbury's most esteemed citizens, a veteran of the Civil war, formerly a popular teacher and now engaged in a large manufacturing business, was born in Shrewsbury township, York Co., Pa., July 29, 1841, son of John and grandson of Samuel Myers.

Samuel Myers came of German ancestry. He was a skilled carpenter and followed his trade for many years, doing an immense amount of building and contracting through Hopewell, Springfield and Shrewsbury townships. He also owned a productive farm which he subsequently disposed of, and moved first to Indiana county, Pa., and then to Missouri. Later he went back to Indiana county, and died there aged ninety-three years. He married a Miss Williams and their children were: Samuel; John and Henry, twins; Lydia, who married Mr. Klinefelter, of Indiana county; Judith, who married John Hess, of Indiana county; and Elizabeth, who married Peter Fuile, and died in Hopewell township.

John Myers, father of our subject, was reared at home, and had but few educational chances. His whole attendance at the public schools was covered by a period of three months. With his father he learned the carpenter's trade, and they worked first together, and later on, in contracting and building. Many specimens of his skill can yet be seen in the substantial buildings all over York county, where he was well and favorably known. He continued to take and fill contracts until he was sixty years old, but after that time did only shop work, and continued to be active until his death, at the age of eighty-four years. He married Elizabeth Diehl, daughter of Adam and Catherine (Shaeffer) Diehl, who died aged seventy-four years. They are both buried in the cemetery at Shrewsbury. They were members of the Reformed Church, in which he was a deacon and an elder, and he also taught many years in the Sunday-school. In early life he was a strong Whig in his political convictions, and later became a member of the Republican party. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Myers were: Lydia, wife of Andrew Bashing, lives at Hametown; Catherine died unmarried, in November, 1905; Louisa is the wife of George F. Seitz, of Glen Rock; Adam D.; Henry D., a resident of this township, married Catherine Koller; and Samuel died aged two years.

Adam D. Myers attended the Diehl school near his home until he was fifteen years old, and then went to learn the millwright trade, with Aaron Klinefelter, in Shrewsbury township. He worked at this for two years, and then enlisted for service in the Civil war, entering Company K, 166th P. V. I. During the nine months of his term of enlistment he served mainly on guard duty, and was mustered out at Camp Curtin, July 28, 1863. On the day following he became the victim of an accident. One of his comrades accidentally discharged his rifle and the ball struck Mr. Myers near the knee of his left leg. This terrible accident sent him to a hospital for nine months and resulted in the loss of his leg from the knee. After passing through many perils and dangers and serving with cheerfulness and courage through hardships it seemed a sad fate to have to suffer when just ready to return to peaceful pursuits again. A weary year passed before he regained strength to engage in any pursuit.

As soon as sufficiently convalescent, Mr. Myers completed his education in the academies at Glen Rock and Loganville, and then began to teach school. He taught four terms at the Seitz school in Springfield township and the Diehl school in Shrewsbury township, and was then appointed, through his friends, by the United States Government, storekeeper in the distillery of Washington Ruby, where he remained for three years. After leaving Shrewsbury he went to Glen Rock and embarked in a boot, shoe and notion business, remaining there for eleven years, and during this period he became one of the leading men of the town, serving as chief burgess, councilman, justice of the peace and borough treasurer. In the spring of 1881 he bought his present home of eleven acres of land, on the old Peter File farm, which he added to the forty acres he bought from his father, making his property a tidy little farm of fifty-one acres. In addition to operating this farm, since 1896 Mr. Myers has been engaged in the manufacture of cart saddles, his annual output being some 500 dozen.

On Dec. 26, 1869, Mr. Myers was married in the city of York, by Rev. William M. Bahn, to Mary E. Weaver. She died March 19, 1876, at the age of thirty-eight years, and was interred at Glen Rock. The two children of this marriage were: Charles K., a resident of Shrewsbury township, who married Lizzie Grove; and Harry M., unmarried, who lives at home. The last named served nine months in the Spanish-American war, a member of Company I, 8th Pennsylvania Volunteers, and received his honorable discharge on March 7, 1899.

Mr. Myers was married (second) to Mary Folskommer, a daughter of Daniel Folskommer, a well-known farmer of Shrewsbury township, and these children have been born to them: Annie G., who is the wife of J. L. Fair, of Glen Rock; A. F., who is assistant in the manufacturing business; Alice E.; Ida M.; Emma J.; Lydia, wife of Daniel Bowman, of Hopewell township; Mary L.; Daniel F. and Clara A. All of Mr. Myers' unmarried children reside at home. They have been afforded excellent educational opportunities and have grown up creditable members of the community. In politics Mr. Myers is identified with the Republican party. From youth he has been a member of the Reformed Church, and one of its leading elders. He is a man of honorable motives, and one who stands very high in the estimation of his fellow citizens.

WILLIAM H. Wiest, manager of the household and furnishing goods department of the well known Bon Ton department store, of York, Pa., is a native of that city, born May 17, 1850, son of Michael and Sarah (Beckheimer) Wiest.

William H. Wiest received his preliminary education in the public schools of his native place, supplementing this with a course at the York County Academy. In 1865 he engaged in business with his uncle, Peter Wiest, on Market street, with whom he continued three years. In 1870 he engaged in the baking business, and continued in this for six years, at the end of which time he changed his business and engaged in the grocery and house-furnishing business, in which he continued for twenty-one years, at the end of which time he engaged with the Kay W. Kay department store continuing for five and one-half years, or until 1902. In that year he came to his present place, the well known Bon Ton store, where he has charge of the household goods and furniture.

In 1871 Mr. Wiest was united in marriage with Miss Mary A. Fisher, daughter of Jacob E. and Elizabeth (Zimmerman) Fisher, and to this union have been born the following children: Rev. Charles F., attended the York County Academy, later graduated from the Gettysburg College, and is now a Lutheran minister at Hay City, Kans.; Harry E. is a skilled mechanic living at home; Horace, also a skilled mechanic, married in December, 1905, Miss Mable Gotwalt, daughter of Charles and Deliah Gotwalt, and is residing at No. 220 West Jackson street; and Helen E. Mr. Wiest resides at No. 232 West Market street, his father making his home with him. Religiously he is a member of Zion Lutheran Church. In political matters he is a staunch Republican.

GEORGE T. SHAULL was born on his present farm in East Hopewell township, Oct. 23, 1860. He received his education in the McLain township school, from which he was graduated by Miss Nettie Wilson, at the age of nineteen years. He began work on the home farm, when very young, working for his father until after his marriage, March 11, 1891, to Miss Ida Richard, daughter of Isaac and Leah (Mitzel) Richard. After his marriage Mr. Shaull located on the place he had received partly by inheritance and partly by purchase, consisting of ninety acres. His home was erected fifty years ago, and he is now building an addition, 18x20, to the original house. Mr. Shaull and his family are members of the Hopewell Presbyterian Church which Mr. Shaull joined twenty years ago. In politics he is a Democrat. He has two children, Millard R. and Grace L.

George Shaull, the father of our subject, was born in Chanceford township, York county, and died at his home, in what is now East Hopewell township, in 1903, after a long and useful life of eighty-four years. He was a devout member of the Hopewell Presbyterian Church, and a useful and public-spirited citizen, and a prominent and progressive farmer. He was a lifelong Democrat, but was no office seeker. He married Miss Rebecca Wolf, and they had the following children: Mary W. Sechrist, deceased; Joseph; Agnes Shenberger; William H.; Catherine E.; and George T.

WILLIAM HENRY KEENEY, of Warrington township, York county, a prosperous farmer, was born in Franklin township, Oct. 15, 1849, a son of Abraham and Eliza N. (Slothour) Keeney. His father was of Scotch and his mother of German descent.

Jacob Keeney, his grandfather, died before William Henry Keeney was born, so not much is known of him except that he was a mason by trade, which calling it is presumed he followed all of his life. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics was a Democrat. He and his wife, who was Leah Sloughour, became the parents of these children: Jacob, John, Abram, and Annie. Mrs. Keeney died in 1864, aged eighty-five years.

Abraham Keeney, the father of William Henry, was born in York county, and after taking the prescribed course in the common schools learned the miller's trade, which calling he continued to follow all his life. He became an expert in his line, and at his death, in February, 1886, caused by pneumonia, from which his wife also died within two days of his death, he was considered a well-to-do man. They were both members of the U. B. Church. In politics he was a Republican. They had children as follows: Lucy; Lizzie; Annie; Sarah; John, deceased; Jacob and George, deceased; Jerry, and William Henry.

William Henry Keeney was educated in the district schools of Washington township, and after his school days were over worked at farming. In 1877 he purchased a farm of 124 acres in Warrington township, known as the Henry Speck farm. In 1902 Abraham C. Keeney (son of William Henry) purchased the farm which is now occupied by William Henry Keeney, and formerly known as the William Minear Farm, which consists of fifty-six acres, upon which he carries on general farming.

Mr. Keeney married Oct. 22, 1871, Eliza Kimmel, who was born in Washington township, daughter of David and Elizabeth Kimmel, and three children have been born to this union, of whom Mary Alice and Harvey are deceased. Abraham C. was married Sept. 4, 1900, to Elizabeth C. Seifert, who was born in Cumberland county, close to Carlisle, daughter of Peter and Sarah Seifert, and they live on the home farm. To this union two children have been born, Sallie Eliza, and Elsie Irene. Mr. Keeney and his wife are members of the United Evangelical Church.

In politics William Henry Keeney is a Republican, and although he always does his full duty as a citizen he has never accepted public office. He is a very successful agriculturist, and an honest and upright man.

LEITNER J. BECK, chief burgess of Lewisberry borough and president of the council, was born Sept. 14, 1839, son of Capt. Samuel Beck, and grandson of George Beck.

George Beck had these children: John, born Oct. 26, 1799, died Nov. 26, 1879, aged eighty years, one month; Henry, born Feb. 10, 1801, died Oct. 18, 1868, aged sixty-seven years, eight months and eight days; Capt. Samuel, born June 24, 1803, died Feb. 16, 1895, aged ninety-one years, seven months and twenty-two days; Charlotte, twin sister of Samuel, died May 1, 1833; Lydia, born June 1, 1805; Julian, born March 25, 1813; George, a half brother of the above, born Dec. 21, 1820, died July 31, 1881, aged sixty years, seven months and seven days; and Sarah, born June 16, 1818, died Sept. 4, 1862, aged forty-four years, two months and eighteen days.

The late Capt. Samuel Beck was born at Liverpool, now Manchester, York county, and came to Lewisberry in 1839, two years before it became a borough. Here he followed the shoe business all his life. His title came from his commanding a rifle corps at Lewisberry, the name of the organization being the Lafayette Rifle Corps. He married, July 4, 1830, Caroline Mahan, born Jan. 17, 1806, and died Feb. 23, 1884, aged seventy-eight years, one months and six days. Their children were: Charles Henry, born April 9, 1831, died Aug. 15, 1845, aged fourteen years, four months and six days; Theodore, born May 11, 1833, died Sept. 21, 1894, aged sixty-one years, four months and ten days; Margaret Ann, born July 14, 1836, married Franklin C. Smith, died Sept. 27, 1879, aged thirty-four years, two months and thirteen days; Leitner J., of this sketch; Elton L., born June 23, 1842, died Aug. 19, 1885, wife of John B. Laird; Charlotte D., born Aug. 6, 1844, widow of Dr. William P. Nebinger, of Lewisberry; and Mary Jane, born June 16, 1849, wife of Robert N. Wright, of York.

Except in the days of his old age the late Captain Beck was one of the most active citizens of this borough, working for its best interests and bringing credit and honor to the town by the capacity with which he filled numerous offices of responsibility. In his younger days he was a Democrat, then became a Whig and after the formation of the Republican party, was one of its stalwart members. Given more than the usual allotment of years, this venerable citizen passed away, within sight almost of another century, honored in life and revered in death.

Leitner J. Beck was afforded the best educational advantages to be secured in the borough of Lewisberry until he was twelve years old, when he was put to the shoemaker’s bench to learn the trade, one with which he has been more or less connected through his whole subsequent business life. In 1864 he entered the Union service, enlisting in Company K, 152nd Pa. Heavy Artillery, and remained out twenty-two months, during thirteen of these doing guard duty.

Upon his return to Lewisberry, Mr. Beck engaged in the shoe business with his brother, and they continued in partnership for a period of six years. Then our subject decided to try a change of occupation, and settled on a farm where he followed agricultural pursuits for the succeeding eighteen years. Upon his second return to Lewisberry he resumed the shoe business, and at the same time assumed the care of his aged father which he continued until the latter’s death.

In 1863 Mr. Beck was united in marriage with Elizabeth Laird, daughter of Reuben and Elizabeth Laird. She died July 20, 1890, and her burial was in St. John’s cemetery, at Lewisberry. The children of this marriage were as follows: Robert, a blacksmith, living in York, married Barbara Benedict; Samuel, a boilermaker, living in York, married Cathcrine Dellington; Reuben, also a blacksmith residing in York, married Annie Eikelberger; Annie is the wife of Albert Hollinger, living in Fairview township; John, who also follows the trade of blacksmith, in York, married Catherine Dushan; and Charles, a skilled blacksmith employed in the freight department of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., at Harrisburg, married a Miss Brubaker.

In politics Mr. Beck is identified with the Republican party and he has been frequently honored by his fellow citizens. On numerous occasions he has served as judge of elections, and at present is holding the responsible positions of chief burgess of the city and president of the council. During his residence in the country, he was supervisor of Newberry township. Mr. Beck is prominent in many social organizations, particularly in the Lewisberry Choral Society, of which he became a member in March, 1904. He has much musical talent, and a voice which is well worth training. Personally, Mr. Beck is a very pleasant man to meet, cordial, friendly and sincere, and he has a wide circle of friends in business, public and private life.

JAMES NELSON KILGORE. Among the prominent citizens and prosperous farmers of York county may be mentioned James Nelson Kilgore, who resides on his farm in Lower Chanceford township, where he was born Nov. 18, 1862.

The first of this branch of the family to come to America was Matthew Kilgore, who emigrated from one of the British Isles. He and his wife Mary had a daughter Rebecca, who married Samuel Holton, and went to the frontier in Ohio, where they lived in the first cabin in Chillicothe. Mrs. Holton later returned to her old home on a visit, and taking her mother with her—each riding a horse—brought her to the new home in the wilderness, where Mrs. Kilgore died at the age of eighty-four years. Matthew Kilgore went out with a party conducted by Mr. Holton, but returned home for the winter months, going back in the spring, and there he died. Mr. Kilgore’s children were: Rebecca, born Oct. 3, 1763, married Samuel Holton, and died in 1875; Thomas, born Aug. 25, 1765, settled and died in West Virginia, in 1851; George, born Aug. 23, 1767, removed to Indiana where he died.
in 1830; Matthew and James, twins, were born Aug. 22, 1779, the former dying in 1833 and the latter in 1835; William, born Dec. 31, 1774, went to Ohio, formed a company of militia, was stationed at Lake Erie, and died in 1814; John is mentioned below; and Samuel, born Jan. 2, 1780, died in 1824, near Chillicothe, Ohio.

John Kilgore, the great-grandfather of James Nelson Kilgore, was born March 25, 1777, at McCall’s Ferry, in Lower Chanceford township, York Co., Pa., and received his education, such as it was, in the schools of his day. He worked on the farm and in the old stone still house which stood on the farm, and hauled whiskey over the mountains to Baltimore. He married Margaret Nelson, Feb. 17, 1801. She was a daughter of Samuel Nelson, who later moved to Licking county, Ohio, where he died. John Kilgore resided on the old home farm for a while, and then sold it and moved to a small place in the township, where he died Dec. 30, 1858. Mr. Kilgore’s first wife died July 7, 1850, and he took for his second wife Maria Kerns, who, after the death of Mr. Kilgore, went West, where she lived with a son. Mr. Kilgore’s family were all devoted members of the Presbyterian Church, attending at Chanceford. In early life Mr. Kilgore was a Democrat, but later he turned to the Whig party and died a Republican. He was prominent in township affairs and held many local offices. He was a man of striking appearance, being over six feet tall, of powerful build, and the possessor of a fine constitution. To Mr. and Mrs. Kilgore the following children were born: Samuel N., born Dec. 5, 1801, married Mary Neel, of Lancaster county, and died in Lower Chanceford township, Sept. 3, 1876; Matthew, born March 11, 1804, married Mary Wiley, and settled in Fawn township, where he died Feb. 23, 1872; Rebecca, born Aug. 9, 1808, married Robert Densmore, and died in Peach Bottom township, Dec. 16, 1854; Robert, born Jan. 28, 1811, died July 10, 1877, at Brogueville; Mary Ann, born April 30, 1813, married John J. Wiley, and died June 19, 1860, in Fawn township; William H., born Oct. 30, 1815, was a graduate of medicine, studied under Dr. Holler, married Maria Holler, the Doctor’s daughter and settled at Delta, where he died Dec. 7, 1886; Margaret Jane, born April 21, 1818, married Alexander Manifold (uncle to the present sheriff), and died May 17, 1883, in Lower Chanceford township; and John B., born March 6, 1822, died in infancy.

Samuel N. Kilgore, the grandfather of James N. Kilgore, was born in the old stone house on the farm, upon which he grew to manhood. The advantages for an education were very meager in those days, and Mr. Kilgore would be nearly frozen when he reached the schoolhouse after a walk of three or four miles in the cold. However, he received a good education for that day, though he attended school only in the winter months, while during the summer he worked on the farm. In 1825 Mr. Kilgore rented a part of John Buchanan’s farm, which had been taken up by the latter. The farm extended along Muddy creek, next to Chanceford church. James Buchanan, son of John, married a Miss Nelson, an aunt of the grandfather of our subject. The Buchanans went West about 1823, having sold part of the original 500 acres. After his term of rental was up Mr. Kilgore went to Montgomery county, Md., and rented a hotel at what is now Neelville, which hotel belonged to Joseph Neel, of Lancaster county, a granduncle of our subject. Mr. Kilgore continued the hotel for two years, during which time he went to Ohio to find a good site for a home, having been very successful in the hotel business. He visited several locations in Ohio, but returning home located his family in Lower Chanceford township, in an old log house near Bridgeton, where he went to farming, on the same tract of 400 acres which he had rented some time before. Here he died Sept. 3, 1876, his wife surviving until 1887. They were interred in the Chanceford Church cemetery. Both were members of the Chanceford Church, and helped to build the brick church, the brick for which was burned by Mr. Kilgore. For a number of years Mr. Kilgore was a trustee in the church. In politics he was a stanch Republican, and served as school director. He was present at the official starting of work on the Ohio and Chesapeake canal, at which time President Jackson threw the first spadeful of dirt.

Mr. Kilgore married Mary Neel, and the following children were born to this worthy couple: John Neel, was the father of our subject; Rebecca Ann, born Oct. 1, 1827, married Robert Duncan, who is now deceased, and she is living in Emerson, Mills Co., Iowa; James R., born in Montgomery county, Md., married (first) a widow, Mrs. Wheeler, nee Holland, and (second) Sue Whitford, deceased, and he resides in Harford county, Md., where he follows tanning; Matthew William, born Aug. 27, 1832, married Grace Warner, deceased, and died in Philadelphia, Pa., in May, 1887; Margaret, born Nov. 20, 1834, married Joseph D. Rowan, and resides near Delta; Samuel Nelson, born Nov. 21, 1837, married Martha Simons, of Harrisburg, and resides in Philadelphia; Mary Ellen, born May 7, 1843, married George F. Chalfant, and resides in Philadelphia.

John Neel Kilgore, the father of James Nelson Kilgore, was born on the old home farm in Lower Chanceford township, June 24, 1825. He went to school in Maryland to an old Dr. Warfield, a rather irascible old gentleman, who was over fond of his grog, and of a fiery temper. Young Kilgore managed to get a good education, however, also attending public school in Chanceford until he was twenty-one years old. Mr. Kilgore's first work was driving a team, at the age of ten years. He hauled limestone from York Furnace, having a man with him to help load. He remained at home until Feb. 13, 1851, when he married Eliza Jane Wiley and located on ninety acres of the home farm. In 1851 Mr. Kilgore built the main part of the present brick house, in 1867 adding the 20x16 foot addition. He later bought seventy acres and added it to the first tract, having now 100 acres under cultivation. Mr. Kilgore's first wife died at the age of twenty-five years, Feb. 17, 1856, the mother of two children: Mary Agnes, born March 30, 1852, who died at the age of one year; and Eliza A., who was born June 13, 1854.

Mr. Kilgore's second marriage was to Miss Crizzella J. Sides, born Oct. 27, 1832, in Lancaster county, across from McCall's Ferry. Her parents were Jacob and Rebecca (Neel) Sides, both of Lancaster county. Six children were born to this union, as follows: Alvin E., born Dec. 11, 1858, died June 24, 1863; Mary Ann, born Sept. 18, 1860, died Feb. 2, 1863; James Nelson is mentioned below; Luella May, born Aug. 28, 1866, married Owen Wiley, and resides in Hopewell township; Rebecca Emily, born Sept. 25, 1868, is the wife of Harvey Sweeney, of Lower Chanceford township; and Lizzie May, born May 24, 1874, died June 13, 1874.

James Nelson Kilgore has resided on his farm, Locust Lane, and engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life. In his youth he attended school for five or six months of each year, going first to the home school in Chanceford, and after leaving the public schools he spent four months at a private school kept by Prof. James Parker, at Delta. After finishing school Mr. Kilgore farmed for his father until his marriage, Nov. 30, 1886, to Miss Mary Catherine Hamer, who was born in Martic township, Lancaster county, daughter of John S. and Lucy (Long) Hamer. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kilgore, namely: John Ralph, Grace Erma, and Charles Wilmer. Mr. Kilgore is one of the prominent men of his community, and aside from being one of the influential citizens of the community is acknowledged to be an authority on things agricultural. He farmed with his father on shares until two years ago, when he bought his present farm, on which he has since resided.

Mr. and Mrs. Kilgore are members of the Pine Grove Presbyterian Church, in which Mr. Kilgore is an elder and secretary of the Sunday-school. In politics he is a Republican, and he has taken much interest in the success of his party; he was recently elected school director of Lower Chanceford township.

REV. JAMES ROSS RAMSAY, a retired minister and missionary who served in the Indian Territory for thirty-three years, as missionary to the Creek and Seminole Indians, was born April 9, 1822, eldest son of the late Robert and Jane (Whiteford) Ramsay.

Robert Ramsay was the son of John Ramsay, who emigrated from Ireland, and his mother was Margaret (McVey) Cooper widow of William Cooper. They had a daughter, Elizabeth, who married Henry Amrine, who left three daughters, Margaret, Rachel, and Mary. Of these, Margaret married William Ramsay, and has five children, Henry, Ida, Mary, Sarah and Anna; Rachel married Edward Paden, and their children numbered eight among whom are two sons in the ministry. Rev. William M., D. D., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and Rev. T. Ross, pastor of a church in Allegheny City, Pa. The third daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Amrine, Mary, is unmarried.

early age and learned the trade of tanner, which he followed until his marriage. He served as a substitute soldier in the war of 1812. Mr. Ramsay married, March 8, 1821, Jane Whiteford, of Hartford Co., Md., and after marriage engaged in farming, at which he continued until the infirmities of age caused him to desist. His wife, Jane Whiteford, was the elder of the two daughters of Hugh and Elizabeth (Ross) Whiteford, the latter of whom was the daughter of Joseph and Jane (Graham) Ross. Eliza, the younger daughter of Hugh and Elizabeth Whiteford, was married to Hugh Whiteford, of Hartford Co., Md., son of William and Sarah (Slemons) Whiteford, and their children were: William Slemons, Hugh Ross, James Ross, Cunningham, Sarah Slemons and Elizabeth. On the marriage of her younger daughter, Elizabeth Whiteford, who was the possessors of two farms, one in Hartford county, Md., and the one that was her native home in what is now the borough of Delta, gave the former to her younger daughter and the latter, called the old Ross farm, to her elder daughter. In the year 1827, she and her husband, with their children, took possession of this farm, which was the birthplace of Elizabeth Ross and also of her two brothers, James and Hugh. The same house that in 1750 was built and occupied by James Graham, still stands and is now occupied by the sixth generation of his descendants. Hugh Ross died young, but his brother, James, lived to attain great distinction in the legal profession, and was promoted by his State to a seat in the United States Senate. He married and had two sons, George and James, who studied law, and he had one daughter, Jane, who married Edward Coleman.

Robert Ramsay had nine children: James Ross; John Cunningham; Hugh Whiteford; William; Robert Nelson; Joseph Graham; Sarah Elizabeth, who married John A. Dinsmore; Thomas Cooper; and Samuel Martin. Six of these children still survive, are married and have reared families. Of these Hugh W. has one daughter, Eliza, living, and he and his wife live with her and her husband, Morgan Whiteford, in the city of Baltimore. He had one son, Edgar, deceased. William Ramsay's family has been already mentioned. Robert Nelson has six sons: Elmer, a farmer of Hartford Co., Md.; Frederick, telephone superintendent of Hartford county, Md.; Albertus, United States mail carrier in Hartford county, Md.; John, a merchant and carrier in the same county; Hugh Clarence, a minister and missionary to China; and Charles F., cashier in the Stewartstown Bank of York Co., Penn. The family of Joseph Graham Ramsay, deceased, are as follows: Ebenezer Wilson is a railroad employe in Middletown, Pa., and Addie, who married Delmer Thompson, a farmer of York county, has five small children, Edith, Gertrude, Graham, Russel and Charles. Sarah Elizabeth Ramsay married John A. Dinsmore, and has four daughters; Rebecca; Jane, who married Edward Everett McConkey, and lives in Philadelphia; Carrie, married to James L. McCauley, of Minneapolis, Minn.; Annie; and Ross. Thomas Cooper Ramsay has three sons and three daughters: Robert Ross, a farmer of York county; Howard; Russel, teller in the First National Bank, of Delta, Pa.; Louella, who married Hugh Kilgore, a merchant; Jennie, who married William Malone, a farmer of York county; and Eveline, who married Porter Johnson, a brickmaker of Hartford Co., Maryland.

James Ross Ramsay assisted his father with farm work during the summer, and attended school in winter until his twentieth year. In the meanwhile he became a Christian and decided to prepare for the ministry. In August, 1842, he commenced studying Latin under the instruction of A. D. Mitchell, and in the following November entered the York County Academy, where, under the instruction of the Rev. Stephen Boyer and Daniel Kirkwood, Esq., he studied Latin, Greek, Algebra and Geometry, during one year, after which he taught school for six months in Delta. In May, 1844, he entered Jefferson College, from which he graduated with the degree of A. B., in the autumn of 1846. Returning home, he went at once to Princeton Theological Seminary, and pursuing the regular course of three years study, in May, 1849, prepared to engage in missionary work among the Creek Indians, to which he had been appointed by the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, having been previously licensed by the Presbytery to preach.

On leaving Princeton Mr. Ramsay went to Ohio, and there May 29, 1849, was united in marriage with Miss Jane Martha Livingston. On returning home Mr. Ramsay was ordained to the Gospel ministry by the Presbytery, June 20, 1849. Soon after this he started on his western journey to his field of labor in the Indian Territory. But few western railroads at that time were completed and he was compelled to travel mostly by river steamboats. Taking passage at Cincinnati, Ohio, he descended the Ohio to its junction with the Mississippi, followed that river to the mouth of the Arkansas, up which he sailed to the border of Indian Territory, at Fort Smith, whence after a detention of one week, he took a steam boat for Fort Gibson. After reaching this point he proceeded to Verdigris Landing on Verdigris River, six miles from Tallahassee, the nearest mission station in the Creek Nation, and was welcomed by the Rev. R. M. Loughbridge, in charge. There he first met the Indians, and preached, through an interpreter, for the first time to the natives. From there Doctor Ramsay proceeded to his appointed station, Kowetah, fifteen miles distant, and to continue Mr. Ramsay's interesting story in his own words: "There (Kowetah) we found our work of conducting a manual labor boarding school of forty Indian children, and of preaching at that station and at various out stations from house to house. In an Evangelistic excursion to the Seminole mission, 100 miles distant, and taking in the Creek General Council then in session, a good opportunity was embraced for seeing and becoming acquainted with many of the chiefs and principal men of the Nation, and of preaching to them at night in the council house. On reaching the Seminoles there was an object lesson afforded for seeing Indians in a more savage condition of idleness, drunkenness, heathen customs and wretchedness in the extreme. Our work at Kowetah was encouraging; many of the pupils in the school were converted, and a church formed and growing, but our work was cut short by failure of health on the part of the dear mother of the mission, and we were compelled to return to our Eastern home, where in less than a year she was translated to Heaven, just four years after her marriage. Soon after this, an invitation was given the survivor to take charge of the Chestnut Level Academy, which was accepted and conducted successfully for two years, at the end of which time he was re-appointed to his missionary work among the Indians. But now it was especially to the Seminole. The work among them had greatly prospered under the earnest workers, Mr. John Lilley and his wife, and an assistant was needed. Here was ample opportunity for field work among the various scattered towns of the Nation, and it was then our earnest effort was made to acquire a knowledge of their language. We studied not only what was written, but used it according to our ability in conversing with individuals, and from house to house visitation. Work could be carried on more easily and efficiently by talking directly with the people, instead of depending on an interpreter. In time we were enabled to write and preach in the native tongue. The work progressed, and among the converts was the principal chief of the Nation, who became a minister and spent his life in preaching the Gospel to his people and others.

"On assuming his second appointment to missionary work, the subject of this sketch was without a helper, but was enabled to find one in the person of Miss Eliza J. Lilley, who had just graduated in the Steubenville Female Seminary, and had returned home to assist her parents in their work among the Seminoles. We were united in marriage, July 24, 1856. Early in 1860 we started a new mission, called Prairie mission, fifty miles west of the old Seminole mission, called Oak Ridge mission, but in the following September came East on a contemplated three months' vacation. Before that time had elapsed, Lincoln had been elected President, the Southern States had seceded, the Civil War inaugurated and our return to the Indian Territory rendered impossible. During the years of Civil war which followed we spent the time in preaching and teaching. We moved in 1861 to Kansas, taught school and preached in various localities until the war ended, when, in 1866, we were again sent to resume missionary work among the Seminoles, who had settled in a new home, called Wewoka. In November of that year (1866), in company with Rev. W. S. Robertson and family, who had also been ante bellum missionaries to the Indians, we commenced the journey in wagons from Highland, in Northwestern Kansas, to Fort Gibson in Cherokee Nation, at first a caravan of four wagons, and afterward of five, mostly camping out at night, and consuming nearly three weeks in reaching our destination. From Fort Gibson we all went to the Tallahassee Mission, which had been alternately made the abode of the Union and Confederate troops, and presented such a spectacle of destruction and desolati as caused our hearts to ache.

"During the winter the writer made two trips to the Seminoles on horseback, and on the second reorganized the Seminole Presbyterian Church of sixty-six members. In March, 1867, we moved with our family to Wewoka, where most interesting work, among full-blood Indians by the hundreds, interested us for years. We taught the old and the young. A mission house for a boarding school for educating the Seminole children was built and carried on during several years, accommodating as many as sixty pupils at times. A church was also built, where every Sabbath, at the ringing of the bell on its cupola, the Indians of all ages and sexes could be seen coming from their homes in all directions to worship God. They loved to pray and listen to the preaching, but above all else they delighted in singing the beautiful hymns contained in the hymn book which the missionaries had prepared for them. Some of them have become preachers and are still conducting Evangelical work there, after their first teachers and preachers have passed away. Great changes have taken place in the sentiment of the Seminoles since the first attempts were made to introduce the Gospel and schools among them. At first they were so ignorant and prejudiced that they said they wanted no preaching or schools, and when the first school was opened at Oak Ridge mission, it was difficult to induce any parents to place their children in it, and the people seemed afraid to attend religious meetings. Now nearly all attend church, and every parent wishes to place his children in school. They have had mission schools, and day or neighborhood schools, and now they have erected at their own expense two palatial school buildings, one for boys and the other for girls, costing each $50,000, in which 250 children may be lodged and taught.

"As regards the writer's own family and children, it may be stated that his first wife left three children, two of whom, a boy and a girl, died in infancy, but a boy, named John Livingston Ramsay, lived to be twenty-one years old. He had pursued his education until he had become a competent teacher, when he sickened and died. My second wife, who, after seventeen happy useful years of married life was taken home to eternal rest, was the mother of eight children, four girls and four boys. The first, Mary, is married to John Lilley and lives in Kansas; Sarah died when three years old; Margaret married Rev. T. H. Candor, and with him is a missionary in Bogota, South America; Addie died in her twenty-seventh year of yellow fever in Barranquilla, Colombia, South America; Hugh died in infancy; Hamilton Irvin died when three years old; James Robinson is a miller and canner in Delta, Pa.; and Charles Hodge died in his twenty-fourth year.

"My children were left motherless when young, but God enabled me to give them educational advantages which they improved. Margaret Candor is an accomplished scholar and musician, and James Robertson has an education which qualifies him for any useful business and is energetic and successful in his position in the Delta Buying & Selling Agency."

The Rev. Mr. Ramsay was united in marriage with his present wife, Mary Lois Diamant, April 6, 1875.

JOHN F. BECK, ex-county commissioner of York county, who is now living a retired life at Paradise, Springfield township, was born in York, Aug. 16, 1829, son of John Beck, and grandson of George Beck, who was a post and fence maker in what is now Manchester borough, and there died.

John Beck, father of John F., was born in Newberry township in 1799, and learned the carpenter's trade and cabinetmaking, which he later followed in York. He remained there a number of years and then went to Loganville, later returning to York, where he lived retired for a time prior to his death, which occurred at the age of eighty years. He married Mary Fahs, daughter of Joseph and Barbara (Frederick) Fahs, the former of whom died while in the Revolutionary army; Mrs. Fahs later married a Lanius. Mrs. Mary (Fahs) Beck died at the age of sixty-eight years. Both John and Mary (Fahs) Beck are buried at Loganville. They had the following children: Sarah, the widow of Peter Goodling, living at Loganville with her son, E. B.; Mary, wife of John Tyson, of Indiana; Barbara, who died unmarried; Joseph, who died young; John F., our subject; Emmeline, who died in 1904, the wife of John Bahn; Rachel and George, who both died young; and Charles, also deceased.

John F. Beck attended the schools of York and Loganville until twelve years of age, and assisted his father at farming. In 1852 he married Matilda Leader, daughter of Joseph and Catherine (King) Leader, who resided near York. After marriage Mr. Beck located on the home farm in Loganville, where he remained two years, after which he went to Dunkard Valley, and bought a farm, remaining there four years. This farm he sold to purchase one of sixty-five acres along the Baltimore pike, where he remained nine years, when he again sold out and bought another farm, near Bupp's school, consisting of 130 acres, on which he remained twenty-three years. Mr. Beck came to his present home in 1889, his farm now consisting of 157 acres of fertile land. Here he is living retired.

Mr. Beck and his wife have the following children: Mary Catherine, who married Zacharias Reigart, of York; Charles F., a farmer of Springfield township, who married Olivia Howard; Milton G., of York, who married Sallie Innerst; Frank J., who married Rose Beck (no relative); Paul J., cashier of the First National Bank of Glen Rock, who married Catherine Hoover; Emma A., wife of Alexander Diehl, a wholesale candy dealer, of York; Harry C., of Washington, who married Ida Crispin; Martha J., who married Charles E. Fahs, of Paradise; and Dr. Harvey G. The last named is a graduate of the Baltimore Medical College, also spent a term at Vienna, and is now practicing his profession in Baltimore; he was employed by Dale & Co., druggists, at York. He married Catherine Clogett, of Blairsville.

In 1884 Mr. Beck was elected county commissioner, and he filled that office very efficiently. He has served the township of Springfield as auditor, school director, and in many minor positions, and was inspector of the first election held at Loganville borough. He was appointed postmaster at Jacobus, and held that position for six years. During the Civil war Mr. Beck was a member of the committee to induce volunteering in the army. He is a member of the Lutheran Church. He is a stockholder in the Glen Rock National Bank, and since 1885 has been almost continuously a member of the board of directors.

REV. H. HENRY WALKER, pastor of St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church, in York, is one of the prominent members of the clergy of his church in Pennsylvania, and in his work of consecration he has been blessed with much of success, in both a spiritual and temporal sense. He has retained his present pastoral incumbency for the past thirty-two years, and it is needless to say that he has a strong hold upon the esteem and affectionate regard of his people, while he has labored with all of zeal and Christian humility in the vineyard of the divine Master.

Mr. Walker is a native of the former kingdom of Hanover, Germany, having been born in the village of Brockhausen, principality of Osnabrueck, Sept. 28, 1842, son of Frederick and Gertrude (Schomburg) Walker, both deceased, the father having devoted the major portion of his active career to agricultural pursuits and having been a man of noble attributes of character. Both he and his wife were devoted members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church. In the family were nine children, of whom six are living, the subject of this sketch having been the sixth in order of birth.

H. Henry Walker passed the first decade of his life in Germany, in whose common schools he secured his rudimentary education, and in 1854 he accompanied his parents on their emigration to Ohio, the family settling in Cleveland, and there our subject attended the parochial school of the Lutheran Church until confirmation. In 1857 Mr. Walker was matriculated in Concordia College, at Fort Wayne, Ind., in which institution he completed the classical course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1862, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. His purpose had been all along to consecrate his life to the ministry of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, and in the same year which marked his graduation in Concordia College he entered the Theological Seminary of his church in St. Louis, Mo., where he completed his divinity course, and was graduated in 1865. After one year's sojourn in Germany he was duly ordained in November, 1866. His first pastoral charge was that of St. Paul's Lutheran Church at Paterson, N. J., a new mission just then started, where he remained incumbent until 1874, in the spring of which year he was called to his present charge, in which he has ever since con-continued to serve with earnestness, fidelity and loving zeal, while in the long period of more than thirty years he has not been denied the rewards of his efforts in the uplift which he has been able to give to his fellow men and in the winning of souls to the Master whom he serves. Six calls were extended to him from as many different churches of his synod; twice he was called to the presidency of his alma mater, the Concordia College at Fort Wayne, Ind. All these calls were declined. He has the distinction of being the oldest pastor in point of continuous service in York county, and he is well known to the people of this section of the State, where he has the warm friendship and regard of all. He is prominent in the work and councils of his church in general, and since 1890 has been president of the Eastern District of the Missouri Synod. This synod was organized in 1847, in Chicago, Ill., and now extends over nearly all the states of the Union, comprising over 2,000 ministers and more than 3,000 congregations. Mr. Walker is also a member of the board of trustees of Concordia College, a church institution, at Hawthorne, Westchester Co., New York.

On Aug. 27, 1868, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Walker to Miss Ellen M. Melcher, daughter of Frederick and Engel (Scherler) Melcher, of Cleveland, Ohio. To Mr. and Mrs. Walker have been born eight children, of whom four died in early childhood or infancy. The others were: Marie L., a graduate of the York Collegiate Institute, died in 1896, in her twenty-sixth year; Rev. Martin F. J., who was graduated at Concordia College, in Fort Wayne, Ind., and at the Theological Seminary at St. Louis, Mo., served three years in the ministry in the city of New York and is now a member of the faculty of Concordia College. Hawthorne, N. Y.; Julius G. M., a member of the class of 1905, York Collegiate Institute, and now a student at Concordia College, Fort Wayne, Ind., is likewise to enter the ministry of the church which his honored father has so dignified with his services; Lydia F. H. is a graduate of the York Collegiate Institute.

THOMAN FAMILY. The Thoman family of York and Adams counties is one of the oldest in that section of which a continuous trace has been kept. from Jan. 5, 1678, to the present time, covering a period of 228 years. The York county Thomans are the descendants of John Jacob Thoman, of Bubendorf, Canton Basel, Switzerland, and are widely disseminated in the United States, some being located in Chicago, prominent among them being Judge Leroy Thoman, one of the first Civil Service commissioners of the United States, appointed under President Cleveland’s first administration; others located in Philadelphia; and others scattered through Ohio, Indiana, Kansas and other points in the West. The greater number, however, are found in Pennsylvania, and, doubtless, in York and Adams counties, near Gettysburg, Abbottstown, Hanover, and Porter’s Sideling.

The earliest trace we have of the Thoman family is that of John Jacob Thoman, of Bubendorf, Switzerland. The following is a verbatim translation from a German manuscript, which was preserved for more than two centuries, and which was brought from Switzerland to America by the first emigrants to this country: “Henry Thoman, from here, was honorably born of honorable parents and was baptized in the holy church, June 21, 1685; parents were John Jacob Thoman from here, and Margaret Bergellman; sponsors were Bartel Thoman and Jacob Stohler.

“Anna Schozze; Henry’s bride has her baptismal certificate from Holstein. They were legitimately married here Aug. 1, 1719, and had begotten a son, Hans Jacob, who was baptized Oct. 21, 1723; sponsors were Joki Stohler, Marti Marti and Anna Bergellman, all from here.

“Given with the gracious permission of the venerable Herr Landwacht, and from the holy baptismal register.

“Bonifacius Burkhardt,

“‘T’ Vicarius,

“Bubendorff, May 15, 1738.”

The following data were found in Rupp’s Collection of 30,000 Foreigners, names of Immigrants in Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, 1886. List of Foreigners Imported, etc., Pennsylvania Archives, 2d Series, Vol. XVII, page 159, viz.: “At Philadelphia, Sept. 11, 1738, 100 Palatines imported from Rotterdam in the ship Robert and Oliver of Dublin. Walter Goodman, Commander, last from Dover, took the oath of allegiance. Among those who signed their names were Heinrich Thoman and Jacob Thoman. Henry signed his own name, but a clerk signed for Jacob, who was then a boy about sixteen years of age. Only male passengers over sixteen years took the oath, so that names of the women are not recorded. There were 320 passengers aboard this vessel, so that there were more women than men.”

The next data we find of the Thoman family after their landing at Philadelphia, are from the records kept by Rev. John Waldschmidt, of Cocalico (now Ephrata), Lancaster Co., Pa., and handed down to his descendants. According to his baptismal record-book, Rev. Waldschmidt, pastor of the Reformed Church of Cocalico, baptized the following Thoman children at Cocalico: “John Jacob Thoman and Susanna, to them was born a son the 6th day of March, 1754, and was baptized the 7th of April, 1754. Sponsors were John Jacob Bollinger, and his wife, Anna Marie. The son was christened John Jacob. To the same was born a daughter, June 20, 1755, and was baptized July 13, 1755; christened Anna Christina; sponsors were Philip Shaffer and his wife, Anna Christina."

Later data record a son born July 25, 1757, named Henry, a daughter, Nov. 20, 1759, named Margaret, a son Nov. 29, 1760, named Rudolph.

At this time the family removed from Cocalico to what is now known as Heidelberg township, York county (then Manheim township), between Porter’s Sideling and Smith’s Station. At this place a large tract of land was purchased from the heirs of William Penn, consisting of about 600 acres, which later was divided into three or more farms, through which, in later years, the Hanover and Hanover Junction Railroad was built (now the Western Maryland railroad. A remarkable feature is that still a part of this tract of land is in the Thoman name, the owner being Aaron S. Thoman.

After locating here the following children were born:—Anna Maria, born Jan. 24, 1762; Catherine, born Jan. 6, 1764; Susannah, born Nov. 9, 1765; Abraham, born Dec. 18, 1767; Magdalena, born Sept. 11, 1769; Elizabeth, born July 15, 1772; John, born Feb. 3, 1774. All of these children lived to the age of maturity. Both father and mother of this family died in the year 1804, the former being aged eighty-one years, ten months and thirteen days, while the latter was seventy-two years, five months and sixteen days old.

Abraham Thoman, a son of John Jacob Thoman, was united in matrimony with Salome Hinkle, and to them the following children were born: A son, born Feb. 26, 1806, name not given, who died in infancy; Anthony, born June 26, 1807; Jacob, born Nov. 8, 1808; Hannah, born Sept. 29, 1810; Lydia, born June 3, 1812; Magdalena, born May 12, 1814; Salome, born Dec. 18, 1815; David, born Feb. 19, 1818; Aaron, born Jan. 6, 1821; and Abraham, born July 11, 1822.

Of the above children, Anthony Thoman, who was born in Heidelberg township, York county, June 26, 1807, on the old Thoman homestead, to which reference has already been made, located between Smith’s Station and Porter’s Sideling; in early life he engaged in agricultural pursuits, and enjoyed the life of a farmer. He received his education in the old subscription schools, for a short time engaged in school-teaching, and later owned and managed a flouring mill near Seitzland, York county. On March 31, 1857, while a resident of Hanover, York county, he was married to Sarah Wildasin, daughter of Jacob Wildasin. From this union were born four children: Jeremiah, Alverta, Amos and Bertha, the two last named dying in infancy. In the spring of 1864 Mr. Thoman, with his family, removed from Hanover to Berwick township, Adams county, at which place he lived until the spring of 1883. In that year he removed to Abbottstown, and there spent the remainder of his life.

Anthony Thoman was a man of intellect, a great reader, and took great pleasure in mental exercise. He wrote a beautiful hand, both in English and German, and among his writings can be seen quite a number of manuscripts in both English and German, containing thoughts and reflections on religious subjects, quotations of scriptural passages, poems selected and composed by himself, some written as early as 1822, when he was but fifteen years of age, thus giving clear evidence of the strong moral tendency of his nature. When a young man he became a member of the German Reformed Church (now Emmanuel) of Hanover, Pa. He remained in communion with the Reformed Church during his life, and honored his profession by his devout and consecrated devotion to the principles and teachings of God’s word. He loved the church and enjoyed her services. His German Bible was the book he loved the best. The preaching of the Gospel afforded him great delight, hence his last days were happy and full of blessed comfort; the evening of his life calm and serene. Mildly he passed away at the ripe age of eighty-one years, eight months, twenty-nine days.

As a citizen Mr. Thoman was highly esteemed by all who knew him. The church and the community realized when he died that a good man had been called away, but his work was well done, and he now enjoys his reward. The funeral took place at his residence at Abbottstown, Wednesday morning, March 27, 1889, and his remains were interred in Mount Olive cemetery, at Abbottstown, after which the funeral services were held in the Reformed Church. Rev. Herbert, of New Oxford, officiated, taking for his text the 29th and 30th verses of the 2d chapter of Luke: “Lord, now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace, according to Thy word, for mine eyes have seen Thy salvation.” Mr. Thoman’s wife, Sarah, died Nov. 5, 1905, aged eighty years, eight months and nineteen days, and was also buried in the cemetery at Abbottstown.

Prof. J. W. Thomar, son of Anthony H. and Sarah (Wildasin) Thoman, is, perhaps, known more widely than most men among the teachers and educators of Pennsylvania. He is a native of Hanover, Pa., where he was born July 17, 1838. At the age of six years he was placed in the public schools of his native town, and one year thereafter his parents removed to Adams county, near Abbottstown. In the winter young Thoman attended a country school, and in the summer he enjoyed the advantages of a select school at Abbottstown. His time, when not in school, was employed in working on the farm. In 1875 he entered the East Berlin Normal School, and attended a second term there the following year.

In the fall of 1876 Mr. Thoman entered upon his first work as a teacher in the public schools of York county. He became acquainted with the prominent teachers of that county, which induced him, in the spring of 1877, to enter the old York County Academy. He again, after being there one term, engaged in teaching, and so continued until 1883, when he entered the Shippensburg State Normal School. After spending one year in that institution he again engaged in his profession, and rapidly advanced in his chosen calling.

In 1884 Prof. Thoman was elected principal of the Abbottstown schools, and continued at the head of those schools with growing popularity. His winter’s work was augmented by a term of summer instruction, with a view of preparing young men and women for the profession of teaching. The result of his enterprise was a popular Normal School for teachers, which he continued for a period of six years, and the large numbers of ladies and gentlemen who attended the school was a perceptible indication of its efficiency and real excellence.

During the time of Prof. Thoman’s incumbency at Abbottstown, other places extended calls to him, among these, Duncannon, Perry Co., Pa., where he was elected in the fall of 1888 to the principalship of the schools at a large increase of salary, above that which he was receiving at Abbottstown, but owing to the persistent appeals of directors, patrons and pupils of Abbottstown he was induced not to accept the position. He held his first provisional certificate in 1876, passed the examination for professional certificate in 1882, and in 1886 passed the examining board on Permanent certificates with an average of ninety-two per cent. He also holds two certificates under the Departmental Service of the Government of the United States.

In May, 1890, Prof. Thoman was elected county superintendent of schools of Adams county, was re-elected in 1893, elected for a third term in 1896, and continued to serve until June, 1899, a period of nine years in succession. He is a member of the Reformed Church, and, in connection with his public school work, held the superintendency of Emanuel Reformed Sunday-school of Abbottstown for eight years. Prof. Thoman held, from time to time, positions of trust and responsibility, and in December, 1903, was employed by the Record Publishing Company, of Hanover, Pa., to audit the accounts of the company. On May 1, 1904, when the Record Publishing Company and the Hanover Herald consolidated and became incorporated under the name of the Hanover Printing Company, Prof. Thoman was the man chosen for the responsible position of cashier and bookkeeper, the position which he holds at the present time.

On Dec. 30, 1880, Prof. Thoman was united in matrimony with Miss Phoebe Mum- mert, the daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (Wehler) Mumment, of Hamilton township, Adams county. This union has been blessed with three children, two daughters and one son, as follows: Carrie Mae, born Nov. 26, 1881; Gertrude Naomi, born Sept. 15, 1884; and Horace Clay, born Sept. 2, 1888. On April 1, 1904, he with his family removed from Abbottstown to Hanover, where he will, doubtless, spend the remaining years of his life.

A notable feature of Prof. Thoman's work is the full and earnest devotion to that which is before him. Whatever demands his efforts receives from him careful and painstaking at- tention. [The above sketch was given by one who has been in close touch with Prof. Thoman since boyhood.]

ROBERT FRANKLIN STRAYER, M. D. One of the resident physicians of York, whose success, especially along the line of electro therapeutics, has attracted most favor- able attention, is Dr. R. F. Strayer. The Doctor is a comparatively young man, but has had a successful experience extending over a period of some twenty-five years.

Strayer is a German name, the earlier spell- ing favoring "Strahr." The first of the name to settle in Americia from the Fatherland so spelled it, and this member of the family set- tled on a large tract of land in Dover township, York county, prior to the Revolutionary war. An old house of worship known as "Strayer's Church," and which was built on land given by the Doctor's great-grandfather, still stands to testify to the religious character of that gentleman. Peter Strayer, grandfather of our subject, owned and operated a farm which was part of the original emigrant's purchase.

Dr. Strayer was born in York, Feb. 12, 1861, son of Lewis S. and Leah (Beck) Strayer, the latter the daughter of a well-known farmer of Adams county, and both at present residents of York. They reared a family of four sons, one of whom, Harry J., died in 1896, at the age of twenty-four years. Of the others, Allen William Penn, superin- tendent of the United States Express Company at Kokomo, Ind., is the eldest; Robert Franklin is the second; and Lewis, a clerk at York, is the third.

Dr. Strayer laid the foundation of his educa- tional equipment in the public schools of York, to which he added courses at Lebanon Valley College and Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg. He then entered Hahnemann Medical College, at Philadelphia, where he took four special courses besides the general work for his degree, giving special attention to Diseases of Women and Practical Anatomy, and Surgery. He graduated in 1881, being one of the youngest members of his class.

His practice was begun at once at Macon, Ga., where he remained five years, meeting with much success, and leaving there only be- cause of climatic conditions developing in him both rheumatism and malaria. He returned to York so crippled that he was obliged to walk with crutches, but soon recovered his health, and in a few years went to Staunton, Va., where after eighteen months his Georgia experience was repeated, and again on crutches he sought York county, this time settling in Craeysville. He soon gathered a good prac- tice, but was unfortunately mixed up in a runaway accident and came out with a broken leg. With "physician, heal thyself" as a motto he gave up his practice and returned to York, a third time on crutches. It required some eleven months for Dr. Strayer to become sufficiently strong to admit of practice again. He selected a new location at Strinestown, York county, where for four years he continued with marked success, having an extensive practice and had accumulated considerable property. Again his evil genius (or Providence) got the upper hand, this time in the form of a tornado, which in 1890 completely annihilated his entire belongings. This ill luck drove him home to stay. He maintains a suite of offices at No. 201 West Market street, which he has equipped with everything known to Electro-therapeu- tics, and many other valuable instruments. His practice is select and extensive, his success in his chosen line of specialties causing him to be sought from far and near.

Dr. Strayer's home is presided over by his wife, who was prior to her marriage Miss Maggie Myers, daughter of John Myers, of York. They were married in 1890. An adopted daughter, Ella, is their only child, she now being the wife of E. F. Waltman, a real estate dealer of York. Socially prominent in the Heptasophs, the Independent Order of Workmen, the Patriotic Sons of America, the Star of Bethlehem, the Brotherhood of the Union, and Vigilant Steam Fire Engine Co., No. 1, Dr. Strayer enjoys his busy life and merits the uniform esteem in which he is held. He favors Democracy, and is numbered among the members of the German Baptist Church.

JOSEPH A. KUGLER, a prominent and enterprising citizen of New Freedom, and a survivor of the great Civil war, who for twenty years has been a justice of the peace, was born in September, 1845, in Chester county, Pa., son of David and Anna (Bloom) Kugler.

John Kluger, his great-grandfather, was a farmer and hotelkeeper of Chester county, who came from Germany in 1740, and took up large tracts of land. He was one of the early patriots, fighting in the Continental army, in which he did considerable scouting. His children were: John, Jr., and Valentine.

John Kugler, Jr., the grandfather, followed his father's occupations of farming and hotelkeeping, and like his father was a soldier, serving in the war of 1812. These children were born to him: David; Elizabeth, who married Robert Reed; Hannah, who married Andrew Arthur; and John.

David Kugler was a soldier in the regular army and for several years served in the cavalry, afterward engaging in farming, which he followed until his death, which occurred in 1854. He married Anna Bloom, whose father was a soldier in the Revolution. Mr. Bloom married a Miss Dison, and they had the following children. Elizabeth, Martha, Thomas, Charles, Mary, and Anna. The Blooms were of English origin, and came to the United States early in 1800, locating in Chester county. The children born to David and Anna (Bloom) Kugler were: Charles; John; Joseph A.; Sarah P., who married William Tarasillis; Hannah E., who married (first) Rogers Shunk, and (second) Joseph Bishop, a veteran of the Civil war; and Annie, who married Mr. Howard. Of these, Charles, John and Joseph A. were all soldiers in the Civil war.

Joseph A. Kugler attended the public schools of Chester county, and at the age of sixteen enlisted in Company C, 97th Pa. V. I., and served two years, being discharged for disability in 1863. His regiment saw some hard service. After the war Mr. Kugler engaged in farming and lime burning in Chester county, removing in 1867 to Perry county, where he engaged in the lumber business for about one year, after which he removed to Clinton county, and there followed lumbering until the Spring of 1872. He then located at York, where he was engaged in an agricultural implement shop until 1874, at that time engaging as a photographer, which business he followed five years. In 1876 he came to New Freedom where he ran a sawmill, came to New Freedom where he ran a sawmill, and was assistant railroad ticket agent until 1890. In that year he engaged in the lumber business in partnership with C. W. Koller, which partnership was dissolved in 1903, and Mr. Kugler has since conducted the business in partnership with his sons, Harry C. and Arthur R., under the firm name of J. A. Kugler & Sons, and they do an extensive wholesale and retail business in lumber, doors, sash, blinds, oils, paints, hardware, building material, etc.

Mr. Kugler was commissioned justice of the peace about twenty years ago and he has held that office ever since. He has also served as borough tax collector, assessor, Republican committeeman, and has several times served as a delegate to the county convention. Fraternally Mr. Kugler is connected with the I. O. O. F., and the G. A. R., serving the latter organization as Post Commander for several terms. Mr. Kugler is a liberal supporter of the United Evangelical Church, and has been class leader, exhorter, trustee and superintendent of the Sunday-school.

In 1871, Mr. Kugler married Miss Achsah Ehrman, daughter of Samuel Ehrman of York county, and three children have been born to this union: Ida B., who married A. N. Hetrick, and died at the age of twenty-two; Harry C., who married Lilie Klinefelter; and Arthur R. Mr. Kugler has earned honor and respect in public life as well as affection and veneration in private.

DR. JAMES ADELBERT ARM-STRONG, for over a quarter of a century a successful physician at Hellam, was born at New Lisbon, Ohio, Jan. 8, 1839. He was the son of James and Margaret (Knepley) Armstrong. On the paternal side he was descended from a Scotch-Irish family noted in the history of Pennsylvania. Early in life his grandfather, John Armstrong, migrated to the State of Ohio, where he filled the position of bank

Cashier. James Armstrong, his father, who died in 1841, was a lawyer by profession and a man of fine intellectual attainments. Margaret Knepley, the mother of Dr. Armstrong, was a daughter of John and Margaret (Marr) Knepley, of Washington, D. C.

James Armstrong died when his son was two years old. After the father's death, Mrs. Armstrong and her son were brought to the vicinity of New Oxford, Pa., by his uncle, Hon. Nicholas Heltzel, a member of the Legislature and a prominent citizen of Adams county. Dr. Armstrong grew to manhood on the farm of his uncle, and obtained his preliminary education in the public schools. For several years he was a student in the "New Oxford College and Medical Institute," founded in 1843 by Dr. M. D. G. Pfeiffer, an eminent German scholar and physician. Young Armstrong began the study of medicine with Dr. Pfeiffer at New Oxford and continued his studies in the office of Dr. Peffer, a physician at Abbottstown. He entered the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania in 1863, where he remained two years. After practicing medicine in Adams county a few years he returned to the University of Pennsylvania, where he was graduated with the class of 1870. The following year he settled at Hellam, where he practiced medicine for the remainder of his life. His skill as a physician and his many excellent qualities of mind and heart won for him a large circle of friends. Dr. Armstrong was known not only in the community in which he resided as a prominent physician, but his reputation and ability, both as physician and surgeon, extended throughout York county. He was always interested in everything that tended to promote the welfare of the people among whom he so long lived and prospered. He filled the office of school director for many years, and was active and influential in the affairs of the Lutheran Church, serving for many years as a deacon in the congregation which worships in the Kreutz Creek Church, founded about 1735. Dr. Armstrong was a man of fine personal appearance, affable in manners, and universally popular among a large circle of friends and associates. In politics he was a Democrat and was active in promoting the interests of his party. He was a member of the York County Medical Society and the State Medical Society of Pennsylvania.

On Oct. 19, 1865, Dr. Armstrong was married to Mary, daughter of Samuel and Gertrude (Wiest) Wolf, of Hamilton township, Adams county. Both these families were prominent in the affairs of York and Adams counties. Dr. and Mrs. Armstrong had six children: Virgil Eugene, Ernest Adelbert, Gertrude May, Samuel Wolf, Mary Edith and Margaret Lydia. Dr. Armstrong died at his home in Hellam, July 20, 1905, survived by his widow and two children, Ernest A. and Mary E. Armstrong.

Ernest A. Armstrong, after leaving the public schools of his native village, attended the York Collegiate Institute and York County Normal School. He then taught several years in the public schools of York and Lancaster counties, and was graduated from the State Normal School at Millersville. Desiring to continue his studies, he entered Pennsylvania College, at Gettysburg, and was graduated with the degree of A. B. with the class of 1897. For three years he was a member of the faculty of Millersville State Normal School. He then began the study of law in the office of Joseph R. Strawbridge, a prominent member of the legal profession, at York, and was admitted to the Bar in 1905. While attending Pennsylvania College he was an active member of the Philomathean Literary Society, and was one of its representatives on the editorial staff of the "Mercury," the literary journal of the college. He was also on the staff of the "Spectrum," the college annual. He was a member of the College Athletic Association and chairman of the Athletic Field Fund Committee, which had in charge the construction of the college athletic field, of which the college is justly proud, and manager of the college baseball team during his Junior and Senior years. Mr. Armstrong has taken an active part in the Democratic politics of York county. He is a member of Masonic Lodge No. 43, of Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

Mary E. Armstrong was married in 1903 to William H. Wolf, a rising young cigar manufacturer of Hellam. They have one son, John Armstrong Wolf, born Oct. 17, 1905.

Henry Holtzapple, born in West Manchester township, Jan. 9, 1830, was the youngest son of Jacob and Elizabeth Holtzapple, and is one of the prominent members of the family, all of whom are well known in York county.

Mr. Holtzapple attended school until he was nineteen years of age, going both to Lauck's and Neiman's. After finishing his education he spent three years with John Kain, acquiring a knowledge of the carpenter's trade, which was afterward his main occupation for twenty-five years. He located at Dover, near Enig's Mills, and combined farming with his other work to some extent. During the Civil war he was twice drafted for service, the first time paying $450 for his substitute, G. W. Reisinger, who later became lieutenant-colonel; the second time he paid $300 for a substitute.

In 1865 Mr. Holtzapple moved to York and engaged in contracting and building, with his headquarters in the Eleventh ward, continuing in this line for eighteen years. During the summer his whole attention was given to his contract work, but in the winter he began during the latter part of that time to engage in butchering. Finally, in 1900, he gave up contracting entirely, in order to follow the other business exclusively, and has been very successful in it; he makes a sausage which is shipped all over the United States. The shop which he now occupies was built by Mr. Holtzapple himself in 1893, and is admirably adapted to its purposes, being thoroughly up-to-date in every detail and equipped with the latest machinery.

Mr. Holtzapple was but twenty-two years of age when, in 1852, he was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Reikert. They lived together for forty-six years, Mrs. Holtzapple dying in 1898; her remains were interred in the Green Mount cemetery. She bore her husband three children, namely: Emma, wife of Emanuel Eyster, a butcher in York; Alice, who married William Zeigler, weighmaster at the Eyster & Weiser foundry; and Dr. M. H., a graduate of the Baltimore Medical College. The Doctor is located with his father at No. 424 West Philadelphia street, and is one of the prominent physicians of York.

During the years that Henry Holtzapple lived in West Manchester township he held the office of deacon in Wolf's Church, and since coming to York he has been a member of the Union Lutheran Church. In political matters he is a Democrat. He is a man of much strength of character and ability, and is much respected.

JOHN F. RUDISILL is descended from a family who came to America from Germany in 1642, and settled in Maryland. His grandfather, Abraham Rudisill, who was a tailor by occupation, was born in Hanover, York county, and George Rudisill, the father of our subject, was a merchant tailor of York. George Rudisill was a member of the common council for five successive terms from the Ninth ward, which was the largest ward in the city, and his majority grew larger with each election. He was also one of the city assessors for three years from 1903 to 1906. He enlisted in the three months' service, being a member of the first volunteer organization in active service and afterward in Company A, 200th P. V. I., during the War of the Rebellion, and was made orderly sergeant of his company. He was wounded at Fort Steadman, March 25, 1865, and was mustered out of service at the close of the war. He married Elizabeth Neater, daughter of John Frederick and Wilhelmina Neater, who were born in Germany. Six children were born of this union, two of whom died in infancy.

John F. Rudisill was born in York, Feb. 14, 1874, and received his education in the public schools of that city, graduating from the York High school in 1891. His first occupation was as bookkeeper for M. B. Spair & Sons, which position he filled for ten years. After resigning that position, and keeping books for The American Caramel Company for three and one-half years, Mr. Rudisill became bookkeeper for the Chase Felt & Paper Co., and the Susquehanna Roofing Manufacturing Co. Mr. Rudisill is secretary and treasurer of the B. M. Root Co., manufacturers of a general line of woodworking machines, their specialty being plow handle machinery, for which they find a market all over the United States. Mr. Rudisill was secretary of the York city school board from 1897 to 1902.

Mr. John F. Rudisill was married June 22, 1900, to Elizabeth T. Root, daughter of B. M. Root of the B. M. Root Co. Mrs. Rudisill is a graduate of the York High school, class of 1891, where she was awarded the honor of salutatorian, and she graduated from Dickinson College in 1895. Two children have been born to this union: Harriet R. and John F., Jr., the latter of whom died in infancy.

Mr. Rudisill is a member of the First United Brethren Church of York, where he has been organist for a number of years, and for two years has been president of the Young People’s Christian Union of the Pennsylvania Conference branch.

James Rudisill, brother of John F., was born in York, Sept. 3, 1872, and received his education in the public schools. He began to learn printing in the office of the York Tribune, and completed his apprenticeship in the office of the Chromatic Printing Co., John B. Welsh, proprietor. He was also employed for several years in the office of the York Dispatch. After traveling in the United States for two years, in 1893 he made a tour of Europe, and then went to Madras, India, remaining there for two years, as superintendent of the mechanical department of the Methodist Episcopal Publishing house. Returning to York, Mr. Rudisill took a course of instruction in linotyping, and installed the first linotype in that city. He was superintendent of the Gazette Printing & Publishing Company, of York, and is now secretary of the York Printing Company, he with Messrs. George J. Hildebrand and John C. Zimmerman being sole owners.

James Rudisill was married April 8, 1897, to Catherine R. Brunhause, daughter of Frederick W. Brunhause, a merchant and highway commissioner of York, and four children have been born to this union: George, Jr., James Jefferson, Mary L., and Frederick. Mr. Rudisill belongs to the Vigilant Fire Company. He is associated with the York Typographical Union. His religious connections are with St. John’s Episcopal Church. In politics he is a Republican.

Francis G. Wilson, a former successful teacher and now a prosperous farmer of East Hopewell township, comes of good Irish stock.

James Wilson, his paternal grandfather was born and reared in County Antrim, Ireland. He came to America prior to 1764, and took up three tracts of land, one called Derry tract, the second Calhamc, and the third not known. These three tracts were located mostly in what is now East Hopewell township. All three aggregated 194 acres. James Wilson made the first improvements upon these tracts in 1764, building a log cabin, which he made his home until circumstances permitted him to build a better residence. This was also built of logs and two additions were later added to it, and this home was burned fifteen or sixteen years ago. James Wilson settled down to work to clear his land, also engaging in weaving, having a loom in the cellar of his home, and making coverlets and homespun cloth from the flax raised on the farm, which others of the family, spun for him to weave. Mr. Wilson married Rachel Anderson, very likely born in Ireland, and she died in 1827, while her husband passed away in 1800, aged sixty-nine years. They were members of the Presbyterian Church. Their children were: James, who married Miss Helen Manifold, resided for a time near what is now Brogueville Station, and then removed to Mine Branch, Harford Co., Md., where the remainder of his life was spent; Jennie married William Smith, and emigrated to Cleveland, Ohio, where her husband became judge of the courts; Rachel married Robert Watson, went to Ohio at an early day, and settled near Cadiz, where both she and her husband died; David was drowned in Grove’s Mill race when a young man; William married Margaret Anderson and spent most of his life just south of Stewarts-town, the Maryland line running through his farm; John married Margaret Liggett, and spent his life in East Hopewell township; and Robert was the father of our subject.

Robert Wilson was born at the old homestead Dec. 29, 1794. and grew to manhood there. He attended the pay schools of his day, and after leaving school engaged in farming, in which occupation he continued all his life. He received the home tract of 104 acres, remaining there until his death Sept. 14, 1878. On Nov. 11, 1828, Robert Wilson married Margaret Grove, born in Fawn township, near Muddy Creek Forks, July 15, 1803, daughter of Francis and Jeannette (Williamson) Grove, and she died May 3, 1879. Robert and his wife were life-long members of the Round Hill Presbyterian Church, in which he was an elder for fifty years, an office which he held at the time of his death. They were interred in the family burying ground on the farm. Mr. Wilson was originally a Whig, but died a Republican. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson were: Mary Jane, born Dec. 12, 1830, died single; James, born July 1, 1832, married Martha Mary Wilson, and resides on the plank road in Hopewell township; Francis G. is mentioned below; John Thomas, born Jan. 18, 1837, married Feb. 5, 1863, Miss Adelaide Penny, of Lancaster county; Rachel E., born May 7, 1812, married John Campbell, of Lower Chanceford township, where they now reside; and Robert Cathcart, born Aug. 2, 1843, enlisted about Sept. 17, 1864, and fought until the close of the war as a member of the 30th P. V. C., under Capt. A. B. Frazer, and died April 27, 1867.

Francis G. Wilson was born May 26, 1834, at the old homestead, and there grew to manhood. When a young man he worked as a millwright for one year. He started to school at the age of six years, and continued his education until twenty-one, having been a student for a time at Stewartstown Academy. He began teaching in the public schools of Harford county, Md., in 1856, beginning with the spring term, and teaching nine months there, and then taught in Lower Chanceford township for one session, and then two sessions at the home school, continuing teaching for seventeen years. During the summer months he remained at home, farming. His father made provision in his will that the farm might be divided into three sections, one section to go to each son. James, the eldest, chose the homestead tract, our subject took the lower end, and John T., the youngest, took the western part. Mr. Wilson's tract consists of fifty acres, upon which he erected his home in 1879, and moved into it in January, 1880. In the spring of the same year he erected his barn, and he also put up other farm buildings, and since that time he has continued there, engaged in general farming.

Mr. Wilson was married Sept. 22, 1870, to Miss Mary J. Baird, born Sept. 28, 1844, daughter of Thomas Baird, deceased, a farmer of Hopewell township, and his wife Susan (Hartman) Baird. These children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson: (1) Margaret Elizabeth, born Aug. 16, 1871, was a teacher for seven years; she married E. W. Ramsay, and they reside in Pittsburg, Pa. (2) Susanna Florence, born March 10, 1873, was educated at Stewartstown Academy and Millersville Normal, and was a teacher in the public schools for six or seven years; she married James K. Grove, of Muddy Creek Forks. (3) John Milton, born Feb. 23, 1875, attended Stewartstown Academy, has been teaching for the past ten years, beginning teaching at the age of eighteen years, and is now principal of the public schools of Stewartstown, and has a private school during the summer. He was a candidate for prothonotary on the Republican ticket, and although in a strong Democratic county was defeated by but a small majority. He married Ella Waltermeyer. (4) Mary Roberta, born Oct. 30, 1876, was educated in the public schools and Stewartstown Academy, and taught school five years; she married Lawrence M. Brown and resides in Fawn township. (5) Francis Garfield, born March 24, 1880, is at home operating the farm. (6) Blanche Adelaide, born Oct. 12, 1884, has taught school two sessions, and is now at the Millersville Normal school. (7) Rachel Estella, born Oct. 26, 1886, is at home.

Mr. Wilson and his family are Presbyterians in their religious faith. He is a Republican in politics, has been a school director for six years, has already served six years as township auditor and has been elected for three years more.

OLIVER W. KELLER, cashier for the York Card & Paper Co., one of the successful industries of York, is a member of the well-known Keller family, one which has long been established in York county, the name ever standing for the highest type of loyal citizenship in each generation.

Peter Keller, grandfather of Oliver W., was a successful farmer near Yorkana, this county, and there continued to reside until his death.

George Keller, son of Peter, was born and reared on the old homestead and likewise became a prosperous farmer and influential citizen of Lower Windsor township, and is now living retired in Delroy, York county. As a young man he married Miss Charlotte Myers, who was likewise born and reared in York county, where her father, Jacob Myers, was a prominent farmer. The ten children of George and Charlotte Keller were: Elmina J. and Calvin W. remain at the parental home; Oliver W.; Elizabeth D. is the wife of Reuben Fitzkee, of Philadelphia; David A. is foreman of a large cigar factory of Delroy, this county; Reuben A. is a prosperous farmer of Lower Windsor township; Kate is with her parents; George H. resides in York, where he is engaged as a head machinist; Harry P. is a successful teacher in the public schools of Lower Windsor township; and Grace R. is likewise a popular teacher, and lives at the parental home.

Oliver W. Keller was born on the old homestead farm, near Yorkana, this county.
May 1, 1867, spending his boyhood days on his father’s farm. After completing the curriculum of the public schools he taught one term in the public school of Windsor township, after which he entered Bryant & Stratton’s Business College in the city of Philadelphia, where he completed a thorough commercial course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1888. He initiated his practical business career by taking the position of stenographer and bookkeeper for the A. A. Yerkes Manufacturing Co., in what is now known as the Codorus Paper Mill, in York. This plant passed into the control of the paper trusts, and Mr. Keller then became one of the promoters of the extensive concern known as the York Card & Paper Co., in which he was a chartered stockholder, while he has held the dual office of bookkeeper and cashier from the time of the organization of the company, in 1893, to the present, being recognized as a specially capable executive and administrative officer. In matters political we find our subject stanchly arrayed as a supporter of the Republican party and its principles. Both he and his wife are consistent members of Zion Lutheran Church, of York, while they enjoy marked popularity in the social circles of the community, having a pleasant home on Philadelphia street.

On May 10, 1892, Mr. Keller was united in marriage to Miss Annie K. Ziegler, who was born and reared in York, where her father, William Ziegler, was a prominent contractor and builder. Mr. and Mrs. Keller have two children, Clarence Ziegler and Viola May.

SAMUEL SMITH MANIFOLD, owner of “Sweet Spring Farm,” that fertile farm of 165 acres situated in East Hopewell township, close to High Rock, is one of the representative men of this section. This farm is a part of his grandfather Henry Manifold’s farm, who, however, never lived on this tract, his life being passed on the part now occupied by J. J. Manifold.

Benjamin and Ann Eliza (Smith) Manifold, parents of Samuel S., are both deceased. Benjamin Manifold was born and reared on his father’s farm, and followed agricultural pursuits all his life. He settled on this farm about the time of his marriage, and he erected the present buildings, and, during their construction, his wife frequently carried the workmen their dinners from the grandfather’s house. He became a prosperous man, was a stockholder in the old Peach Bottom Railroad and an influential citizen. He was a strong Whig and Republican, and it was said that he missed but two or three elections all his life, considering it a duty to cast his vote. He joined the Hopewell Presbyterian Church in boyhood, and, like other boys of his day, was more inclined to go bare foot even to public places, and his shoes were worn only during the time of service and then were carried home instead of being worn. Those were days when a new pair could not be bought just around the corner. Necessity taught people frugality, and they were all the better for it. He served as trustee of this church for some time, and always was a liberal supporter. He died of paralysis in 1898. The mother of our subject also was active in church relationships. She united with the Chanceford Presbyterian Church in girlhood, but united with the Hopewell Church after her marriage. She died in 1890, and both she and husband were interred in the cemetery of that church. Their children were: John H., of York; Harry C., a merchant at High Rock; Amanda Louise, Mrs. William Liggitt; Samuel Smith; Nettie, Mrs. J. J. Grove, of York; Lulu May, who died in 1885; Ella W., residing with her brother, Samuel S.; and Tabitha Mary, Mrs. W. W. Kurr, of this township.

Samuel Smith Manifold was born on this farm, as noted above, Dec. 26, 1858, and he was educated in the Collins township school. When he left school at the age of nineteen years, his teacher was Miss Maggie Neil, who is now the Widow Hyson. Mr. Manifold then enjoyed several months of study at Pleasant Grove Academy under Prof. James Yeats. Until the death of his father he worked on the home farm but shortly afterward became its owner and he has continued here ever since.

Mr. Manifold was married at the home of his bride in Fawn township, by Rev. R. G. Pinkerton, Oct. 3, 1901, to Miss Jennie Elizabeth Adams, eldest daughter of Samuel Adams, Esq., of Fawn township, a prominent citizen, and his wife, Sally (Payan) Adams, both of whom still survive. Mr. and Mrs. Manifold have two children: Jessie Eliza, born July 11, 1903; and Samuel Benjamin, born Dec. 31, 1904. Both Mr. Manifold and wife are members of the Hopewell Presbyterian Church. In politics he is a stanch Republican, and he has been called upon at various times to fill township offices.

JOHN FRY, the successful proprietor of the “Washington House”, just across from the Pennsylvania railroad station, in York, enjoys not only a first-class reputation as a landlord, but also has one of the most remarkable military records of any man in York.

Mr. Fry is a son of Conrad Fry, of Codorus township, York Co., Pa., who in his earlier manhood did freighting, by team, from York to Baltimore, and it was when engaged in this business, that, while stopping at one of the way houses, he met and married Annie Frey, the daughter of a farmer situated near the Maryland line. The parents of our subject had four children: Matthias, a farmer of York county; Catherine, the wife of John Kenedy, of York; Cornelius, who died at the age of fifty-eight years; and John, our subject.

John Fry was born on the old homestead in Codorus township, York county, Jan. 3, 1846, and, his mother having died when he was three years of age, he was taken to rear by an uncle in Abbottstown, Adams county, where he obtained his education in the public schools. Leaving school Mr. Fry worked as a tanner until he was eighteen years old, and then enlisted as a private for a term of five years in the 3rd U. S. Cavalry. This was Oct. 15, 1863, and at the expiration of the five years, Mr. Fry returned to Manchester Borough, and lived with his sister Catherine. In 1869, he clerked in the “Morris House” for a time, when he again enlisted for a five-year term of service. In brief Mr. Fry served three terms of five years each in the 3rd U. S. Cavalry, beginning as a private and being mustered out as sergeant. His first discharge was at Fort Craig, N. M., and bears the endorsement as to character “Excellent in every respect.” The second discharge was from Fort McPherson, Nebr., and the character endorsement is “Very good.” The third and last discharge was at Fort Sanders, Wyo., and, like the first reads “Excellent in every respect.” Mr. Fry has just reason to be proud of these discharge papers, as well as of the several warrants of promotion, from time to time, for meritorious conduct, and it is safe to say that no soldier anywhere has a finer record than Sergeant Fry.

Mr. Fry was proprietor of the “Northern Central Hotel,” on North George street, for four years, and in about 1891 became the proprietor of the “Washington House,” which he has conducted with great success to the present time. The “Washington” has forty large rooms, and its proximity to the railroad station makes it a most desirable place.

John Fry was married, Jan. 13, 1881, to Kate H. Smith, daughter of Jonas Smith, a miller of Manchester borough, and two children were born of this union: Perry, who died Aug. 30, 1900, aged eighteen years; and Robert S., who assists his father at the “Washington House.” Mr. Fry belongs to the Heptasophs, the I. O. R. M., the Union Fire Co., No. 3, and the Fireman’s Relief Association, and is as popular in these organizations as he is as a landlord.

GEORGE THRONE (deceased), one of the most highly valued citizens of Springettsbury township, York county, was born Nov. 11, 1853, on the farm which he later owned, situated two and a half miles east of the city of York, and there he died Oct. 7, 1885.

Mr. Throne was reared on this farm, and was educated in the Stony Brook schools, where he also taught school for four terms. He made up his mind in early manhood to devote his life to agricultural pursuits, and thoroughly prepared himself to be a first-class farmer, thus insuring success. Although not permitted a long life, he made his years useful, and he was very popular in his locality, being a man of upright character, and always willing to promote the welfare not only of his family, but of his whole locality.

The late George Throne was a son of Samuel and Harriet (Green) Throne, both of whom were born in York county, where their lives were passed. Samuel Throne purchased 191 acres of good land in Springettsbury township, which he improved with good buildings and a substantial brick residence. His death occurred from tetanus, caused by an accident to one his fingers. He left a family of nine children: Rebecca, Israel, Catherine, Joseph, Amos, Samuel, George W., Lydia and John. After his death, his widow erected a good frame house near the brick one, and this is now occupied by the widow of our subject.
On Oct. 24, 1872, George W. Throne was united in marriage with Annie E. Heistand, daughter of Abraham and Leah (Longenecker) Heistand. Seven children were born to this union, namely: Abraham H., a former teacher and now a mechanical engineer residing at Plainfield, N. J., graduated from Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg, and then took a four-years' course in mechanical engineering, graduating in 1900, with the degree of Bachelor of Science; Samuel E., a molder by trade, was educated in the home schools and York County Academy; Catherine, at home, was educated in the home schools and at York Seminary; Byrd H., who was educated in the public schools and York County Academy, and who taught school for a time, married Carrie Reeser, and farms the homestead besides running a threshing; Amos, educated in the home schools and York County Academy, married Martha White, and they have one son, George; Susan, a graduate of York College, is at home; and Georgiana, who attended the home schools and York Collegiate Institute, resides with her aunts, the Misses Heistand. In 1900 Mrs. Throne bought her residence from the family estate, and has a very beautiful home.

Abraham Heistand, father of Mrs. Throne, spent his whole life in this township. By trade he was a carpenter, which he learned in opposition to his father, who would have preferred him to have devoted his life exclusively, instead of only partially, to farming. He was a prominent member of the Democratic party, and served a number of years on the school board. His death occurred in 1887, when he was aged seventy-nine years. His widow lived until 1899, and died at the age of ninety-one years. Both parents were worthy members of the Mennonite Church, good people who enjoyed the respect and esteem of all who knew them. They had these children: John, of York; Catherine and Sarah, residing together; Christopher, a farmer of Springfield, Ohio; Abraham, of Springfield, Ohio; William, of Springettsbury township; Susan and Amanda, residing with their sisters; Jacob, of Stony Brook; Annie, widow of the late George W. Throne; the youngest member being Alice, wife of John Roreback, of Hanover.

Both the Throne and Heistand families are old and prominent ones of this locality, honorable in business, quiet in life and supporters of education and religion.

SAMUEL S. ALDINGER. The name Aldinger is one familiar in most parts of Germany, for the family archives go back almost to the beginning of the Christian era to 56 A. D., when one Theobauld Aldinger is known to have lived in Augsburg. While a complete genealogy is to be found in the library at Vienna, the American descendants have no record of others of the name till A. D. 500, in the time of King Rudolph, when Pelagius and Andrew Aldinger lived in Augsburg. The family spread to Bavaria and Swabia, and Switzerland, these lines all going back to Ulrich Aldinger, who was high bailiff of Augsburg about 1,100, and who left three sons Nicholas was manager or director of wholesale merchants at Leipsic, but afterward went back to Augsburg. His descendants through his four sons, scattered through Saxony, Silesia and northern Germany. Theodore, brother of Nicholas, moved to Cologne on the Rhine, and became the progenitor of the various branches in Alsace and Franconia. From him, too, the American branch traces its descent.

Christof, or Christopher Aldinger, the first to come to America, was the great-grandfather of Samuel S. He was a farmer and vine grower in Felbach, Wurttemberg. He married a Miss Rulf, and with his wife and family started for the New World in 1817, his pass given and sealed June 11th. They landed at Philadelphia, but soon went to York county, where they lived first in Windsor township, then in Dover township, where Mr. Aldinger taught school on the present site of Strayer's Church, and finally they located permanently in Heidelberg township. There Christopher Aldinger and his wife both died, and were buried at Bears Meeting House. Their children were: Margaret, who married Jacob Mengerthal, and died in Warrington township; Barbara, who married Matthias Rickley, died in Warrington township, and was buried in York; Christiana, Mrs. Michael Lentz, who died in York; Fredericks, Mrs. Christian Wagner, who died in Philadelphia; Elizabeth, who died in Windsor township, unmarried; Louise, who married Henry Welk, and died in York; and C. Frederick. Christopher Aldinger was a member of the Evangelical Church.
C. Frederick Aldinger was born Aug. 14, 1798. He first learned how to make shoes, but did not follow that trade long, preferring to work in Mr. Rife’s distillery in Adams county. After five years there he worked in Abraham Moyer’s distillery in York county, and while thus engaged married his employer’s daughter, Elizabeth, so named for her mother, Elizabeth (Erb) Moyer. Mrs. Aldinger was a native of Lancaster county. After his marriage Mr. Aldinger lived on a farm near Hanover for fourteen years, and then bought a farm in York township. There he remained four years before selling out, in order to go West and try farming in Iowa; but he decided that the East was a better field after all, and returning home in a year, he bought a farm adjoining his former home. In his latter years he retired from active life and made his home with a daughter in Springfield township, where he died and was buried, his demise occurring April 6, 1882, at the age of eighty-three years, seven months and twenty-three days. His wife, who was born May 4, 1809, passed away Jan. 3, 1899, aged eighty-nine years, seven months and twenty-nine days, and was laid to rest beside her husband. They had a family of ten children, as follows: (1) John M., the eldest son, born Oct. 5, 1828, is a shoemaker living in York township at Brillhart’s station on the Northern Central Railroad. He married Miss Julia Emig, and children were born to them as follows: Elizabeth, July 15, 1856, who died when a little over a year old; Mary M., Nov. 30, 1857; John F., Aug. 28, 1860; Charles L., March 12, 1863; George A., Feb. 13, 1866; Edwin L., March 17, 1868; Emma L., May 20, 1870; and Catherine R., May 4, 1873. (2) Emanuel, born Sept. 26, 1831, married Miss Leah Hummer, and lives near Davidsburg, Dover township. (3) Jacob, father of Samuel S., was born Feb. 22, 1833. (4) William, born April 7, 1836, married Miss Lydia Stiles, and lives in York township, at Brillhart’s Station on the Northern Central road. (5) Daniel, born Dec. 14, 1837, married Miss Louisa Koons, and lived in York. His death occurred Jan. 3, 1884. (6) Barbara, born Oct. 11, 1841, married George Cramer, of Springfield township. (7) Matthew, born Dec. 4, 1843, is unmarried, and lives with his sister, Barbara. (8) Joel died in infancy. (9) Elizabeth died in infancy. (10) Abraham born Dec. 21, 1847, married Miss Harriet Stiles and resides in York.

Jacob Aldinger first attended the township schools and then the Williams graded school in York township. On completing his education he taught for about eight years in Manchester and Codorus, and then went to farming, which occupied him for many years. He bought 217 acres of land in West Manchester township, and this land in time became part of the village of Etterton, now West York borough, and so increased in value that Mr. Aldinger sold all but seventy-five acres for building lots. His own farming land has two fine dwellings and two large bank barns upon it, and is splendidly improved. He sold thirty-one acres in North Codorus township, and five acres of building lots at Brillhart’s Station, York county. He also owns several fine dwelling houses in York, Pa. He married Elizabeth Sprentel.

Samuel S. Aldinger, son of Jacob, was born in York township Nov. 10, 1859, and in early boyhood attended the public schools. Later he went to the York County Academy and Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pa., and studied surveying, a general line of work which he has followed ever since he was twenty years old. He came to West Manchester township in 1878, and has since made his home there; at present he resides in a handsome house which he erected on a part of his father’s old farm. By profession he is a civil engineer, and is engaged all over the county, as he has built up a fine reputation for skill and reliability.

Mr. Aldinger chose for his wife, Miss Mary Gochenour, a daughter of Emanuel and Susan (Deardoff) Gochenour, of Washington township. Two sons have been born to them namely: Jacob G., who is a graduate of the York high school and is now employed as a draughtsman by the York Manufacturing Company; and William E., who is in school. Mr. Aldinger is a Democrat in his political beliefs, and in religious matters holds to the faith of the German Baptist Church, of which he is a member and a trustee. He stands high in the estimation of the community, and is a much respected citizen.

FRANK G. METZGER, secretary of the York Trust Company, is a member of one of the old and honored families of this favored section of the Keystone state.
His grandfather, Jacob Metzger, was a leading farmer of Newberry township, York county, and his father, William B. Metzger, was for many years prominently identified with mercantile interests in the county, having conducted a general store at Dillsburg. He was an honored veteran of the Civil war, having served during the greater portion of the period which marked the progress of the great conflict, and having re-enlisted at the expiration of his first term of enlistment. He died in 1884, at the age of fifty-six years, while to him was accorded the high regard of all who knew him. In early manhood William B. Metzger was united in marriage to Miss Emma Ginder, daughter of Daniel Ginder, who at one time held the office of sheriff of York county, and of this union were born four children, namely: Jacob, superintendent of a meat-packing company in the city of Walla Walla, Wash.; Harry, buyer for the large mercantile establishment of Dives, Pomeroys & Stewart, in Reading, Pa.; Clara, wife of Samuel A. Williams, a cigar manufacturer of New Cumberland, Pa.; and Frank G.

Frank G. Metzger was born in Yocumtown, York county, Nov. 26, 1852, and there his boyhood days were passed. He completed the course in the public schools, and then entered the Eastman Business College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where he was graduated in the year 1874. After his return home he secured the position of bookkeeper for the firm of Elcock, Metzger & Co., dealers in general merchandise, at Dillsburg; this county. He remained incumbent of this position for five years, at the expiration of which, in the autumn of 1879, he became clerk to the county commissioners of York county, in which capacity he served until January, 1882, while he had in that connection the distinction of being the first Republican ever elected to that office in the county. For the ensuing decade Mr. Metzger was general agent and secretary of the York & Peachbottom Railroad Co., and in 1892 he became bookkeeper for the York Trust Company, of which he was soon afterward chosen secretary. His executive talent has been a potent factor in conserving the interests of the company, which controls a large and substantial business. Both he and his wife are prominent members of St. Paul's Lutheran Church. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, the Knights of Malta and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On Dec. 25, 1876, Mr. Metzger was married to Miss Margaret Kister, who was born and reared in York county, a daughter of George W. Kister, a well-known merchant of Goldsboro. Of the two children of this union, Emma died at the age of five months; and Pearl Elizabeth graduated in the York high school as a member of the class of 1901, and is one of the popular young ladies of the city.

AMOS REBERT, a retired agriculturist, of York county, who is making his residence in Jefferson borough, Codorus township, was born in North Codorus township, Feb. 5, 1841, son of Samuel Rebert and grandson of Jonas Rebert.

Jonas Rebert was a farmer, and also carried on distilling in Codorus township, where he owned 475 acres of land. He later went to Adams county, where he died, owning a 175-acre farm. He is interred at Hanover, in the old Reformed Church graveyard. He married Christene Oyster, who is buried beside her husband. They had eleven children: John, who married Christene Leib; Daniel, who died young; Henry, who married Elizabeth Weist, and died at Jefferson; Samuel; Jacob; Andrew, who died in Ohio; Charles, who married Eliza Weist; William, who married Lucinda Shue; Edward, who married Catherine Hoke; Jonas M., who married Peggy Hoke; and another daughter, Mrs. Moses Senft.

Samuel Rebert, father of Amos, was a farmer in North Codorus township, where he was born. In 1853 he removed to Adams county, where he farmed until his death. He married Nancy Rife, and she died at the age of twenty-six years, being buried at Lischy's Church, North Codorus township. They had these children: John, who married Louisa Geiselman, and is a retired farmer of Adams county; two that died in infancy; Amos; and Jonas, a retired farmer of New Oxford, Adams Co. Samuel Rebert married (second) Lydia Senft, by whom he had children as follows: Elizabeth, wife of Abraham Keagey, living at Littlestown, Adams county; Lucinda, wife of Rufus Hartman, of Littlestown; Samuel, a resident of Littlestown; two that died in infancy; and Della, the wife of William Gitt.
Samuel Rebert died at the age of sixty-seven years, and was buried in Littlestown.

Amos Rebert went with his father to Adams county when eleven years old, and there received his education, attending school until seventeen years of age. He then learned the tanning trade with an uncle, Henry Rebert, which he followed for two years at Jefferson borough. He then turned his attention to farming, and until 1868 operated a fine farm of 130 acres. In this year he sold out and came to his present home in Jefferson borough, where he owns thirty-two acres, twenty-five of which are cleared, and the rest woodland.

Mr. Rebert married (first) Lucinda Brilliant, daughter of Samuel Brilliant (a sketch of whom will be found elsewhere), and she died Aug. 24, 1897, at Jefferson borough, where she is buried. In 1898, at Harrisburg, Mr. Rebert married (second) Mrs. Susan C. Smith, widow of Oliver B. Smith, and daughter of John and granddaughter of William Van Newkirk, who came from Amsterdam, Holland, and settled in Baltimore, where he died. John Van Newkirk was born in Baltimore, Md., and was a cooper by trade, following that occupation and day laboring until going to Perry county, Pa., where, after locating in Howe township, he died, aged forty-two years. He was very well known in that locality and highly respected. He married Charlotte Beatty, daughter of John Beatty, of Carlisle, Pa., of Scotch-Irish descent, and a member of a family of early settlers of Cumberland county. No children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Rebert. By her marriage with Mr. Smith, Mrs. Rebert had three children, Ed. B., Frank M., and one that died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Rebert are rearing Charlotte Smith, a tot of three years, who is a granddaughter of Mrs. Rebert, and daughter of her son, Frank M.

Amos Rebert is a Democrat, and served the borough as chief Burgess. He is now a councilman and school director, and is capably filling the duties of both of these offices. Religiously he is a consistent member of the Lutheran Church, in which he and his wife take a very active part. Mr. Rebert has a number of business interests, among which may be mentioned the Codorus Canning factory, in which he holds stock, as he does also in the Drovers' and Mechanics' Bank of York, the People's Bank of Hanover and the Hanover Market House. He has always been a man of industrious habits, and the result is shown in his present sound financial condition. He is most highly respected in Codorus township.

VALENTINE A. STEIN, one of the heaviest operators in the merchant tailor line in York, whose place of business is located at No. 143 West Market street, has been a resident of this city since 1880. He is a native of Lower Windsor township, where he was born April 7, 1864, son of Valentine and Sarah (Fauth) Stein, both of whom are now deceased.

Charles Stein, the grandfather of our subject, was a tailor and musician, who came to America from Germany and settled in Lower Windsor township, York Co., Pa., where he died in 1851, at the age of sixty-four years.

Valentine Stein, the father of Valentine A., was born in 1814, in a German Province along the Rhine, and came with his parents to this country when eighteen years of age. He spent his life in Lower Windsor township, where he was a tailor and farmer. His home was bought in 1842. He was a member of the Lutheran Church at Canadochley, in which he was organist for a number of years. His death occurred in 1878, while his wife survived until 1890. Mrs. Stein was born in Germany and when six years of age was brought to this country with her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Stein became the parents of ten children, seven of whom grew to maturity.

Valentine A. Stein, the youngest of the children born to his parents, was reared on the old homestead, and he received his education in the public schools. At the age of sixteen years he located in York and learned the trade of tailor. After three years as a journeyman, he embarked in business in Lebanon, where he only remained a short time, however, before locating in York. This was in September, 1886, and he has since conducted his business very successfully, for years being located at or near his present location, where he has a fine property, which he greatly improved in 1903.

Mr. Stein was married, June 2, 1886, to Miss Serena A. Shenberger, daughter of George Shenberger, and two children have been born to this union: Miriam O., and JOHN PFISTERER, of Goldsboro, York county, was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1843, son of Joseph and Josephine (Hirsh) Pfisterer.

The great-grandfather of John Pfisterer was born in France, but removed to Germany, where he followed butchering and farming, and where he died.

Joseph Pfisterer, the grandfather, was also born in Germany, and he, too, followed butchering and farming. At his death he left these children: Joseph, the father of John; Mary, deceased, who married William Bundshu; Elizabeth, deceased, married to a Mr. Wittman; and Caroline, deceased, married to a Mr. Kraus.

Joseph Pfisterer, the father of John, was born in 1806, in Wurtemberg, and received a good education. He was a farmer by occupation and learned butchering with his father. He married Josephine Hirsh, born in 1806, daughter of Michael Hirsh, of Weiler, Germany, and they lived and died on the homestead. They were consistent members of the Lutheran Church. The children born to this union were: Anthony, deceased, married Julia Strine, of Weiler, and they lived on the old homestead; Cressentzia, married Karl Barth, and they lived at Werterberg, Oberböbingen; Rosanna married a Mr. Barth, a brother of her sister's husband, and they reside at the same place; Mary Ann, a widow, lives at Hauchlingen, Germany, and John.

John Pfisterer attended the schools in Germany until fourteen years of age, and then learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed for about three years, coming to America at the age of seventeen. He made the trip on the English steam boat, "Belonia", and located at Philadelphia where he remained three years, following coach making and blacksmithing. He then came to York, and worked by the day for Cristian Miller and Jacob Frey of Spring Garden township for five years, on June 6, 1868, engaging with the Northern Central railroad as a laborer on Sub-division 11, south of York. He worked five years as a laborer and then was made assistant foreman, continuing as such until 1874, when he took charge of the floating crew, and so continued for eleven years. He then came to Goldsboro, where he was made track foreman on Division 15, and he has since held that position, having charge of fifteen men.

On Dec. 22, 1867 Mr. Pfisterer married Eliza Ann Peters, born Aug. 15, 1850, in Spring Garden township, daughter of John and Eliza (Freed) Peters, and the children born to this union were: Joseph, who married Gertrude Frank, is assistant foreman on the Northern Central railroad, and lives at Goldsboro; Charles C., who married Annie Cassell, is also employed by the railroad; John P. resides at home; Sarah married Robert Zigner, assistant postmaster at Cly; Annie married George Burger, and lives on Shelley's Island in the Susquehanna river; Nora married Ross Bair, a cigar maker at Goldsboro; and Urban a cigar maker, resides at home.

In politics Mr. Pfisterer is a Democrat and at the present time is serving as school director. In religious connection he is a member of the Lutheran Church. He is a man who commands the personal respect of his neighbors, and he has a wide circle of warm personal friends. In every sense of the word Mr. Pfisterer is a selfmade man, having fought his way, almost unaided, from the bottom of the ladder.

John Peters, deceased, Mrs. Pfisterer's father, was born in Spring Garden township, where he was a laborer. Mrs. Peters is living in Hopewell township at the age of seventy years, while her husband died in Spring Garden township. The children born to Mr. Peters and his first wife, Elizabeth Frey, were as follows: Henry (deceased), Elizabeth, Susanna, Catherine and John. To John and Eliza (Freed) Peters these children were born: Caroline; Eliza Ann, the wife of Mr. Pfisterer; Daniel, who lives in York township; Jacob; Rachel, deceased; Lucinda, deceased; Emma, who lives in York township; Joseph, who is residing at Dallastown, York county; Peter, living in York; Lydia, who lives in Dallastown; and William and Amanda, who died in infancy. Mr. Peters was a man who was very highly respected for his many sterling traits of character. He and his good wife reared a family, which not only are a credit to their parents, but who have become useful citizens in the several communities in which they reside.
JOHN HOLDER, a retired business man of York, was born in that city, Sept. 8, 1839, son of George and Mary (Wilt) Holder.

The paternal grandfather was a farmer in Lancaster county, and there died. His son, George, was born and reared there, receiving a public school education, and then removed to York, just as he was entering manhood. He was a shoemaker by trade, and followed that occupation during the winters, but in the summer time he worked at fencemaking, and became well known in that line all over the county. He died at the age of sixty-one, while his wife, who was a Miss Mary Wilt, of York, daughter of Valentine and Susan Wilt, lived to the ripe old age of eighty-seven. Both were buried in the Prospect Hill cemetery. Their children were as follows: Henry, a carpenter by trade, who married a Miss Frost, of Ohio, and died in 1864, in Memphis, Tenn.; Margaret, Mrs. William R. Stouch, residing on Jackson street, York; Charlotte, deceased wife of George A. Karg, of York; Mary, who is housekeeper for her brother John; and John. The family are all proud of their father's war record, he having served in the early days of the country as a soldier in the war of 1812, under Capt. Spangler, of York. Mr. Holder was a member of the Lutheran Church, of York, and in politics was a Whig.

John Holder was sent to school in York until he was twelve years old, and then was put into the office of his brother-in-law, George A. Karg, to learn the trade of a painter. He remained with him ten years, and then at the outbreak of the Civil war, enlisted Aug. 24, 1861, in Company K, 87th P. V. L, in which he served three years and one month. At the battle of Winchester he was taken prisoner and was confined in Libby prison, but at the end of only three weeks he escaped and rejoined his company, a part of the Army of the Potomac, at Baltimore. Mustered out Aug. 24, 1864, he returned to York, secured a position with the Northern Central railroad, and remained in that position twenty-two years. The first part of the time he was head painter from Dunferry to Baltimore, and afterward from Marysville to Baltimore. When he left the railroad, Mr. Holder went into business as a contracting painter, in York, and was so occupied until 1900, when he gave it up, after fifteen years experience, and retired from all active work. His present residence is at No. 560 West King street, where he built his home in 1881. A confirmed bachelor, his home is managed by his sister, Mary, who has long made her home with him. Mr. Holder is quiet in his tastes, and is a great reader, always preferring good literature. He is much respected by all who know him, and is one of York's best citizens. In politics he is a Republican.

JOSHUA HENRY LA MOTT BOYER, one of the leading merchants of York county, engaged in business in Codorus township, was born Nov. 22, 1857, in Carroll county, Md., son of John L. and Nancy (La Mott) Boyer.

Samuel S. Boyer, his grandfather, was a son of Samuel Boyer, the founder of the family, who came from Switzerland. The former married Sarah Le Fever, who belonged to a family of French Huguenots. Their children were: Samuel, Henry, Jacob, George, John L., Mary and Sarah.

John L. Boyer, son of Samuel S., was born Nov. 7, 1820, in Lancaster county, where he attended the public schools as they were conducted in his day, spending his first twenty-one years on his father's farm, and then accompanying his parents to Carroll county, Md. They resided there twenty years, and then moved to the city of Frederick, where they died. In Carroll county, John L. Boyer married Nancy La Mott, daughter of Joshua and Elizabeth (Hershey) La Mott, the former of whom was a general in the War of 1812, and was a descendant of Revolutionary stock. In 1870 Mr. Boyer located at New Freedom, Shrewsbury township, York county, where both he and his wife died, he aged seventy-two and she sixty-two. Both were buried in the New Freedom cemetery. He was a faithful member of the German Reformed Church, and she was equally consistent in following the precepts of the Mennonite faith. They had these children: Sarah Jane, deceased; Elizabeth W., wife of Ephraim Ernst, of New Freedom; Joshua Henry La Mott; and Jennie, deceased.

Joshua Henry La Mott Boyer was educated in the schools of Carroll county, Md., at New Freedom and later at the graded school at Glen Rock, York county, and made such good use of his opportunities that at the age of sixteen years he was able to secure a certificate entitling him to teach, being one of the youngest ever so favored. He continued to teach in Manheim and Springfield townships, later in Carroll county, Md., and prior to leaving the profession in 1888, taught a grammar school at New Freedom. He then purchased his present business location, rebuilding to suit his purposes. His commodious store room is 60x36 feet in dimensions, two and one-half stories in height, and his stock includes a well-selected array of dry goods and groceries well-calculated to suit his large and constantly increasing trade.

Mr. Boyer also bought a farm of sixty acres, but later sold that, and now owns some twenty-four acres adjoining his store property, all of it being well improved. He also secured the postoffice called Stiltz, which is located in his store. He is one of the most enterprising and progressive men of this section. He was one of the principal workers to locate the first telephone lines from Hoffmanville, Md., to New Freedom, via his store, for the benefit of the public.

Mr. Boyer married Priscilla E. Stanford, daughter of John C. Stanford, of Baltimore county, Md., and they have two children: John Roy, attending the Glenville Academy; and Blanche Marie, a student in the local school.

If Mr. Boyer were known for nothing else he would be familiar to the good people of New Freedom on account of his musical gifts. From the age of sixteen years he has given vocal lessons, and for fourteen years was the leader of the New Freedom band. No public occasion arises which calls for music in this locality without Mr. Boyer generously responding, and for a long period he has had charge of all such work. He is a fine performer on a number of instruments.

FRANK M. BORTNER. Prominent among the lawyers practicing before the Courts of York county, is Frank M. Bortner, who has been engaged in the practice of the law since his admission to the Bar on the 17th of November, 1896.

The family of which Mr. Bortner is a member is one of the oldest in the county, having settled here from Chester county some time prior to the Revolutionary War. The original emigrant was from Germany and settled in Chester county about 1740, where he was engaged in farming, as, indeed, have been the succeeding generations down to the father of our subject. Jacob Bortner was the first York county citizen, having settled on a farm in the vicinity of Glen Rock. Jesse G. Bortner, the grandfather of our subject, was born there in 1820, and passed his life in that community as a farmer, dying in 1895.

A. Bortner, the father of Frank M., resides in the city of York, and has been a successful business man for many years. He married Miss Anna M. Glatfelter, daughter of Isaac K. Glatfelter, a former prominent resident of Springfield township, now deceased.

Frank M. Bortner was born May 30, 1873. He received his early education in the public schools, later entering York County Academy. Finishing the course at the academy, he attended Pennsylvania College at Gettysburg, where he graduated in the class of 1893. After graduation, he entered the schoolroom as a teacher, where for some time he proved most successful in the management of school and school work, generally. His work as a teacher was only a stepping stone to something more congenial, and in furtherance of his previously conceived plans he registered as a law student in his native county, entering the law offices of Stewart, Niles & Neff, of which firm Judge Stewart was then the head. On Nov. 17, 1896, he was admitted to practice in the courts of his home county, and later to the Supreme and Superior Courts of Pennsylvania and the United States District courts.

Mr. Bortner was united in marriage with Miss Bertha V. Crider, daughter of Henry M. Crider, a former book merchant of York, whose death occurred in 1903. To this marriage was born, Robert F., July 23, 1903.

In politics Mr. Bortner is a stanch Democrat, always standing for Democratic principles for the love of them. His services to his party have always been gratuitously rendered when requested. He is a member of the Lutheran Church. He is a Mason and a member of the higher degrees, and appendant orders thereof. He is also a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Mr. Bortner is the solicitor of a number of corporations and firms, among them being the Guardian Trust Company, of which he is also a director and trust officer. His success as a business lawyer must be regarded as the just result of clear-headed judgment, combined with good executive ability. Mr. Bortner is an upright man, whose integrity is beyond question, and he has not only gained, but he holds, the respect and esteem of his clients, business associates and personal friends.

WILLIAM M. DODSON, whose beautiful home in Chanceford township, known as "Breeze Hill," is one of the show places of that vicinity, has become well known during his residence in York county as a versatile man of business. He owns over three hundred acres of fine farming land, which he has cultivated with profit, and has done business in York since 1891.

Mr. Dodson was born April 18, 1853, in Indiana county, Pa., on the historic old place known as the "Sheriff Ralston farm," one mile from the county seat. He was the eldest of the three children born to John and Margaret (Adams) Dodson, the others being Emma, widow of James Kirtland, and John M., a hotel man of Indiana, Pa. Mrs. Dodson's father, David Adams, was a native of Germany, and was a physician and German Lutheran minister. William M. Dodson passed his early childhood in the locality of his birthplace, where he had ordinary school advantages. He was eight years old when his parents removed to New Alexandria, Westmoreland Co., Pa., and at the age of twelve he went to work near Greensburg, in that county, remaining with the same employer until he was seventeen. He then had his first experience as a salesman, for Samuel Hoch, for whom he sold sewing machines. He continued at that for half a year, with encouraging success, but he was anxious to start business on his own account, and he went to Johnstown, Pa., where he was soon established as a nurseryman. After a period of nine years, during which he met with great success, he entered an allied line of business by associating himself with the North Western Fertilizing Company, of Chicago, with which he was connected for sixteen years. He commanded a salary of three thousand dollars a year, and was a valued employee of that company. Meantime, in the year 1889, before severing this relation, he and G. W. Mapldoram (general superintendent of the Cambria Wire Works) embarked in the hardware business in Johnstown, Pa., a venture which resulted very profitably. In 1891 Mr. Dodson disposed of his interest in the concern to his partner, the same year removing to York. Here he continued to work in the interest of the North Western Fertilizing Company until 1897, when he started in the same line of business for himself. Though alone in the enterprise he did business under the name of the Southern Fertilizing Company, making his headquarters at York, where he had his residence, having purchased a fine brick dwelling on West Market street upon his removal to the city.

Up-to-date agriculture has naturally come in for a good share of attention from Mr. Dodson, and in 1894 he purchased a tract of land comprising 140 acres in Lower Chanceford township. It is one of the most fertile places in York county, and certainly one of the most highly improved, Mr. Dodson having brought it to its present condition by a generous but judicious expenditure of his means, governed by characteristic discrimination and skill. The out buildings are models of tasteful architecture, and the creamery located upon the property is perfect in its appointments. In 1899 Mr. Dodson bought another farm, of 177 acres, upon which he immediately erected a barn 90 x 40 feet in dimensions, provided with every known convenience, said to be the finest equipped barn in southern Pennsylvania. The residence one mile from this place, now the home of the Dodson family, was purchased of John H. Small, and is a beautiful villa designed for comfort as well as appearance, being heated by steam and lighted by gas manufactured on the grounds. The site is a charming one, and the surroundings indicative of the taste and individuality of a man who knows how to employ his leisure as well as his business hours. A ten-pin alley and tennis courts for the enjoyment of the family and the numerous guests they entertain are features of the grounds, which are skilfully laid out and embellished in a style above criticism.

In 1905 Mr. Dodson purchased the fixtures and stock of the "Hotel National", installing therein his son-in-law, A. F. Rowe, as manager and proprietor, and under his management the hotel has taken first rank among the popular hotels of southern Pennsylvania.

Mr. Dodson has risen in the world by sheer pluck. He is one of those men who seem born to prosper, for though he has had his full
William M. Dodson, whose beautiful home in Chancefordship, known as "Breeze Hill," is one of the unique places of that vicinity, has been known during his residence in York, a versatile man of business. He has three hundred acres of fine farm land which he has cultivated with profit, and is a business in York since 1800.

Mr. John Dodson, in April 18, 1853, in the historic old place called "Dalston farm," one mile south of York City. He was the eldest of the children of John and Margaret Dodson, and the others being Emma, Margaret, John M., a hotel proprietor, Mrs. Dodson's father, native of Germany, and a Lutheran minister, brought his early childhood birthplace, where he had advantages. He was eight years removed to New York Co., Pa., and at the age of sixteen remaining with his parents. He then worked as a salesman, for which he sold sewing machines that for half a year, but he was anxious to own account, and he went to John H. Small, and is a beautiful villa design for comfort as well as appearance, being heated by steam and lighted by gas manufactured on the ground. The site is a charming and the surroundings indicative of the personal and individuality of a man who knows how to employ his leisure as well as his business. A ten-pin alley and tennis courts for the amusement of the family and the numerous guests who entertain are features of the house, which are skillfully laid out and embody a style above criticism.

In 1905 Mr. Dodson purchased the large and stock of the "Hotel National," therein his son-in-law, A. F. Rowe, the hotel, and under his management the establishment was taken first and the popular hotel of southern Pennsylvania.

Mr. Dodson has risen in the world by sheer pluck. He is one of those men born to prosper for though he has been involved with good executive ability, Mr. Dodson is well known, whose integrity is beyond question, and he has not only gained, but he holds, the respect and esteem of his clients, business associates and personal friends.
share of reverses he has the faculty of "keeping at it" which leads to success. He has gone into many a venture with nothing more substantial in the way of capital than his credit, which valuable asset, however, he has been careful never to impair by unfair or injudicious transactions. As this fact is as much for the benefit of his business associates as for himself it betokens the highest order of integrity, and Mr. Dodson has never failed to justify the confidence reposed in him. He was a resident of Johnstown at the time of the great flood and suffered serious financial loss.

Socially he holds membership in the order of Elks, I. O. O. F. and Royal Arcanum. He is a Republican, and so popular in his party that he was nominated in the convention of 1894 for county treasurer; at the election which followed he polled the largest vote ever given a Republican candidate for that office.

Mr. Dodson married Miss Sarah C. Gore, daughter of Henry and Nancy (Pedan) Gore, the former an old and substantial citizen of Johnstown, Pa. Nine children were born to this union, all of whom survive but John Henry, who died in early childhood. Louis M. moved Martha Kiner. Mary Ethel is the wife of Joseph H. Wallazz, a graduate of Girard College, now a resident of York, where he is the efficient representative of R. G. Dun & Co. Margaret is the wife of A. F. Rowe, previously mentioned as the proprietor of the "National Hotel" of York. Sarah Jane, asstant to her father, is the wife of Carl Witt-mer, receiving and paying teller for the York Trust Company. William M., Jr., married Florence Stair. Henry Ralston, George Willis and Emma Isabel are at home.

JOHN F. CHRONISTER has been a resident of the city of York, Pa., since March, 1898. He was born in Adams county, Pa.,
Feb. 7, 1866, son of Singleton C. and Rebecca (Cashman) Chronister.

(I) Jesse Chronister was a successful farmer of Adams county, Pa., where the family has been known for many years, and where there are prominent representatives of it at the present time.

(II) Singleton C. Chronister died when his son J. F. was only eighteen years of age.
He and his wife had six children, three of whom are now deceased: John Wilbur, Jane, and one that died in infancy. Those who survived are: Calvin, a York county farmer; Martha, wife of Frank Sachilla, of New Oxford, and John F. The mother of this family was the daughter of a prosperous farmer of Adams county.

(III) John F. Chronister was given the educational advantages of the public schools, and after finishing his course he worked upon the farm until twenty-two years of age.
At that time he turned his attention towards carriage building, and learned the trade in East Berlin. Finishing his time there, he went upon the road for three years as a traveling salesman for a large vehicle house. He next turned his energies toward farming, purchasing a good property at East Berlin, and until March, 1898, he conducted it successfully, but upon that date, he removed to York, to assume management of the Martin Carriage Repository. In January, 1906, he became floor walker and manager of the clerks in the well known K. W. K. store at No. 35 West Market street, York.

On Dec. 30, 1889, Mr. Chronister married Annie E. Nickey, daughter of Jacob Nickey, a substantial farmer of East Berlin. One child has been born to them, Melvin J., a bright young fellow, now attending school. Mr.
Chronister belongs to the Foresters of America, the Knights of the Golden Eagle, as well as other fraternal associations, and is deservedly popular in all of them. His religious affiliations are with the Bethany Reformed Church, toward whose support he contributes very liberally. Mr. Chronister has always been a stanch Republican, but aside from casting his vote for the candidates of his party, has not as yet taken an active part in public affairs. He is a reliable, steady, industrious man, who makes friends easily, and he stands high in the esteem of his acquaintances and business associates.

FREDERICK WILLIAM NEUHAUS,
a farmer and tobacco raiser, located in North Hopewell township, was born on his father's farm, Sept. 17, 1851.

Conrad Neuhaus, grandfather of Frederwick W., was born and reared in Wetzlau, Neubreisen, in the Rhine country, Germany, where he followed tailoring. He brought his family to the United States in 1817, sailing from Bremen on a sailing vessel
Frederick was born in Germany, Oct. 23, 1815, and was but two years old when brought to America by his parents. He went to the subscription and private schools at Stewartstown, and later taught the public schools of the township. He was educated in both German and English. Reared to farming pursuits, he also learned tailoring, which he followed for four years at Stormer’s mill. When his father removed to Shrewsbury he sold his farm to Jacob, and here the latter continued for several years. Fourteen years ago Jacob Neuhaus gave up active life, and four years later divided up his property among his children, our subject taking the home place. Mr. Neuhaus is of the Reformed faith. In politics he was a Whig, and on the organization of the Republican party became one of its stanch advocates.

Jacob Neuhaus was united in marriage with Miss Eliza Hildebrand, daughter of Adam and Elizabeth (Mitzel) Hildebrand, the latter of whom was a sister of Jacob Mitzel, of York. To this union were born: Frederick William; Henry, of North Hopewell township; Charles W., of the same township; and Orvilla, Mrs. Christian Eitzert, of Shrewsbury.

Frederick William Neuhaus was born on his father’s farm, and attended the schools of Shrewsbury township and North Hopewell township until the age of nineteen years. He worked on his father’s farm, and also learned the mason’s trade. He was employed on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, on stationary engine beds, and many points at Luzerne county and therabouts, for four years, and then engaged in tobacco farming, renting a farm. In 1835 he took the home farm, which he has profitably farmed, and he has been particularly successful in raising tobacco. On March 18, 1878, Mr. Neuhaus was united in marriage with Miss Martha Thompson, born in what is now East Hopewell township, Aug. 30, 1853. Mrs. Neuhaus was educated in the public schools and at Stewartstown Academy. She began teaching at the age of nineteen years, her first school being Collins school in East Hopewell. township. Here she was superintendent for one term, and the next three years were spent at the Hildebrand school in North Hopewell township. Mrs. Neuhaus' father, William Thompson, was a shoemaker by trade, an occupation he followed in East Hopewell township. Her mother was Mary Ann McCleary, a sister of John McCleary, of North Hopewell township.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Neuhaus are as follows: Viotti E., who taught school for six years, is now a bookkeeper in Glen Rock; Jacob F., for three years a school teacher and now a hardware dealer, of Glen Rock, married Miss Lillian Rehmyer; Melvin L., is a graduate of Patrick's Business College; Harry T., is attending Millersville Normal school; Gertrude V. E., is attending the same school; Allan T. and Charles Owen are at home. Mr. Neuhaus cast his first vote for President Grant, and has voted for every Republican candidate since that time. He has served his township as assessor for three years, and proved a capable, popular official. He takes a great interest in educational matters. Mr. Neuhaus and his estimable wife are members of Sadler's Reformed Church, in which he has been a deacon for many years, and in the Sunday-school of which they have both been teachers.

WILLIAM HENRY HIBNER has spent his life in York and is a highly esteemed resident of that city, of which he is a native, born on South Queen street Sept. 23, 1854, son of Frederick and Harriet (Hartman) Hibner.

Mr. Hibner's great-grandfather belonged to a prominent family of France and came to America with LaFayette as an aide. His son, Frederick, was born in York and was a locksmith by trade. He married a Miss Dunlop, and to this union were born children as follows: Daniel, a resident of York, is in his eightieth year; Frederick is mentioned below; George died in York; Jacob died in York; Sarah married John Borland and died in York.

Frederick Hibner (2), the father of William Henry, was born on the old Hibner homestead in York, where the Helb brewery now stands, about 1829. He was left an orphan at the age of ten years, and was reared by a Mr. Wilson, near York Furnace. He received a common-school education, and learned the carpenter's trade with Jacob Quickel, which he has followed in connection with stair building up to the present time. For many years he was engaged in contracting. In religion Mr. Hibner is a Presbyterian. In politics he is a Republican. He married Miss Harriet Hartman, who was born March 13, 1828, in York, daughter of Adam and Elizabeth (Goodling) Hartman, and to this union have been born: Frederick, of York; William Henry; and Milliard Fillmore, who died at the age of three years.

William Henry Hibner completed his common-school education at the age of sixteen years, and after one year spent in the high school learned the carpenter's trade with his father, serving a three years' apprenticeship, and remaining with him one year after. He then entered the employ of Jacob Sechrist, with whom he continued until the latter retired from business, since which time Mr. Hibner has been employed by Mr. Scehrist's sons, Jacob and Adam. Mr. Hibner has worked at all branches of his trade, working inside, outside and in a planing-mill. He has charge of the work of his employers and has proved a steady, efficient workman. He has worked on some of the largest buildings in York, including the City Market, M. B. Sphar's two fine dwellings, the York high school, the "Hotel Royal", etc.

Mr. Hibner is a member of Calvary Presbyterian Church, in which he is trustee and treasurer, also being librarian of the Sunday school. In politics he is a stanch Republican, and has served as registrar and assessor for one year, being the first Republican to be elected from his ward. Fraternally he affiliates with Humane Lodge, No. 342, I. O. O. F., in which he is a past grand, and secretary of the lodge; Mt. Vernon Encampment, No. 14, I. O. O. F.; Conewago Tribe, No. 37, Improved Order of Red Men, in which he has been chief of records for the past twenty-five years, is past sachem, and has been representative to the Grand Council for seven years; Chosen Knights Commandery, No. 174, Knights of Malta; and the York Conclave, No. 124, I. O. H. Mr. Hibner is a member of the Rescue Fire Company, having joined that organization in 1882, in which he was secretary for ten years and trustee for five years. He is also a member of the York Volunteer Firemen's Relief Association.

William Henry Hibner has been twice married. On June 15, 1876, in York, he was united in marriage by A. H. Rice, a United Brethren minister, to Alice J. Carson, of York, daughter of Colon and Mary Carson, and she died in 1880. In 1889 Mr. Hibner was married (second) by Rev. Mr. Livingstone, an Evangelical minister, to Miss Mary A. Lau, of York, daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth (Shaffer) Lau. Mrs. Hibner’s parents are still living, and reside in Codorus township. To Mr. and Mrs. William H. Hibner have been born the following named children: Evelyn May, Ida Ardell, Frédéric Henry and Mary E.

H. CLAYTON SHELLY, of Carroll township, comes of an old Pennsylvania family, whose ancestors were originally English, but had emigrated to Holland at a time now unknown.

Abraham Shelly came from Holland to Bucks county in 1734, took up considerable land and made it a permanent home. His children were Abraham, Jacob, Joseph, Christian, John and Michael.

Jacob Shelly was the father of Francis, Abraham, Jacob, Samuel, Daniel, John, Joseph and David.

Daniel Shelly, the great-grandfather of Hiram Clayton, settled on an island in the Susquehanna river, which was afterward called Shelly’s Island.

Daniel J. Shelly, son of Daniel, married Magdalene Bowers, daughter of Benjamin and Elizabeth Bowers, and granddaughter of Michael and Maria Bowers. The children born of this union were five in number: (1) Anna E., born in 1817, died at the age of twenty; she was the wife of John Gladfelter, who lived to be eighty years old. Their only child, Jerry, married Miss Mary Jones, of Lancaster county, and lives near Middlesex. (2) Susanna, born in 1818, married Joseph Stickel, and moved to the West where both died. They left one son. (3) Benjamin is mentioned below. (4) Ephraim, born in 1822, married Miss Harriet Spangler, of the well-known York county family. Their only child, John Wesley, married Miss Frances Rehman, and had four daughters, Annie, Hattie, Emily and Mary. (5) Daniel, born in 1825, married Miss Dinah Gratz. Of their children, Mary Magdalene, Elizabeth, Emily, Emma and William, are all deceased; Benjamin married Miss Cora Wolf, lives in Philadelphia, and has two sons, Maynard and Braynard.

Benjamin Shelly was born on Shelly’s Island in 1820. As he grew older he learned the carpenter’s trade, from his father-in-law, George Fauss (also spelled Faks), and followed it until he was thirty years old. The rest of his active life was passed in farming in Adams county, where he was also prominent in political affairs and served as county assessor for two terms, besides being on the board of school directors for so many years. Originally a Republican, he joined the ranks of the Prohibitionists six years before his death. A member of the United Brethren Church, he was also one of its well-known local preachers. His demise, an event deeply lamented, occurred March 25, 1889, when he was aged sixty-nine. On Nov. 17, 1840, he wedded Miss Catherine J. Fauss, daughter of George and Hannah (Lane) Fauss, and granddaughter on the maternal side, of Peter and Jane Lane. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Shelly: Hannah Alice, born Sept. 21, 1842, now deceased; married Abram Meals, also deceased, and had children, viz.: Alice Catherine (who married John H. Stock, and has Ruth, Esther, Evelyn, Mabel and Paul D.), Cora M. (who married William Bahn, and has one child, Mildred), Lottie V. (who married William Brough, and has no children), Hayes M. (who married William Jacobs, who has one son, Murray F. M.) and Georgia (who married Elmer Richwine): Daniel F., born May 20, 1846, married Miss Catherine Bream, and has one child, Nel lie C.; and Hiram Clayton. Mrs. Catherine J. (Fauss) Shelly has passed the eighty-fifth milestone in life’s journey, and now makes her home with her son, Hiram Clayton.

Hiram Clayton Shelly was born in Adams county, Nov. 22, 1852. He attended school there and in York Springs, and after completing his education, he spent three years in the milling business. Returning to the farm, he worked there until the death of his father in 1889, which left the entire charge of the place upon his shoulders. He remained until 1902, when he bought his present farm of thirty-six acres in Carroll township, which has been a part of the Peter Shaeffer estate. He has brought the place to a high state of cultivation, and with its pleasant dwelling it makes a model farm.
Mr. Shelly was married, Sept. 10, 1878, to Miss Rebecca Wierman Ditmer, and their only son, Benjamin Kieffer Shelly, was born June 26, 1887. In politics Mr. Shelly is a Republican, and has filled the office of township assessor.

The Ditmer Family, to which Mrs. Shelly belongs, is an old one and allied with many of the other well known lines in that part of the State. Her parents were Henry F. and Mary (Wierman) Ditmer, and she was one of eight children born to them. (1) Sarah A. is the wife of Jacob F. Lehmer; (2) Mary married John C. Garretson, and lives in Iowa. They had nine children of whom eight are living. (3) Catherine J. became the wife of Michael H. Baker, both now deceased. Their children were: John A., who married Miss Ida Coder; Obed, who married Miss Clara Wise; George G., deceased, whose wife was Miss Alda Bingham; Mary E., wife of Oscar E. Bruehl; and Norah, deceased, was the wife of Smith Smock, and left one child, Cecil. (4) Frederick W. married Miss Susan Wiley and had three children, Sarah Grace, Harry and Nellie Rebecca. (5) Susan H. married Christopher Hershey. (6) Lydia M. married Lewis Arnold, of York county, and their children were: James D.; Mary E., who married CLEASON C. Kimmel, and had three children, William G., Lewis and Alta; Henry D., who married Miss Doll Freeland, and had one son, Freeland; Clayton S.; Richard L.; and Naomi L. (7) Rebecca Wierman became Mrs. Hiram Clayton Shelly. (8) Emma died young. Mrs. Shelly’s paternal grandparents were Frederick and Sarah (Vogelsong) Ditmer, while on the maternal side she was descended from her great-grandfather Dr. William Wierman, through his son Elisha, who married Miss Sarah McCreary, daughter of Mary Underwood, and granddaughter of Squire Elihu Underwood.

GEORGE BUSH, foreman of the blacksmithing department of the York Manufacturing Company, at York, Pa., was born Nov. 19, 1842, in Germany, son of John Bush, who became a well-known citizen of York.

John Bush was born in Germany and learned the trade of potter there. In 1846 he came to America, landing at Baltimore, but not remaining long in that city. On coming to York county he settled at Freytown, which is now a part of the city of York, and here he engaged in work at his trade in association with George Pfaltzgraff. After a period of about eight years he bought out Mr. Pfaltzgraff, but sold out in 1854, and bought the property of Frederick Schatzberger, and continued to carry on a pottery business until 1878. For several years prior to his death, he lived retired, dying at the age of eighty-five years. His remains were laid to rest in the Prospect Hill cemetery.

John Bush married Martha Elizabeth Pfaltzgraff, who was also born in Germany and was reared by an aunt. She died in York aged sixty-eight years, and was buried by the side of her husband. Both were members of the Dunkard Church. They had these children: Conrad, John, George, Katherine, Emanuel and Charles.

George Bush accompanied his father and mother to America, being at that time about four years of age, and he attended the common schools in York until he was fourteen. Then he began to work for his father at the pottery business during the winter seasons, and for neighboring farmers during the summers, mainly in Spring Garden township, and during this time he became a snare drummer in the Spring Garden Band.

In 1861 Mr. Bush enlisted in a regimental band for a service of three years, but later, by Act of Congress, the band was made a brigade band, and they shortly afterward returned home. He then learned the blacksmith’s trade, which he has followed ever since, a period of forty years, for the past fifteen of which he has been with the York Manufacturing Company, and for eight years has been foreman of his department. This is one of the largest smithing shops in the city. In 1864, the war still continuing, Mr. Bush decided to again enlist and in March of that year he became a member of Gen. Hartranft’s Brigade Band, First Brigade, Third Division, Ninth Army Corps, and as such assisted in the capture of Gen. Lee’s forces on April 14, 1865. He was mustered out from his first enlistment at Cumberland, Md., and from the second, at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

In 1863 Mr. Bush was married to Amelia Jane Shearer, daughter of Amos Shearer, of York, who died Dec. 8, 1897, and was buried at Prospect Hill. They had these children: Annie Laurie, wife of Samuel Platts, of York; Charles A., who married Nora Witmer; Ellen Jane, who married William Glassie; Kate A., who married Frank Baker; George E., who married Sevilla Kissinger; John Franklin, who married Annie Wise, but is now deceased, having been run over by a heavy wagon, when but twenty-two years old; Minnie D., who died young; Martha, who married Ferdinand Witmer; Mary V., who married Clarence Woodling; Carrie I., who married Harry Groover; and Elmer, unmarried. Mr.Bush, was married (second) June 19, 1900, to Emily Carroll Moorhead, widow of J. N. Moorhead, who was a member of the 87th regiment during the Civil war, and he left three children, namely: Miriam, a teacher in York; Marcus C. and James E. There is no issue to the second marriage of Mr. Bush.

Mr. Bush has been a life-long Democrat and has been a very prominent and useful member of his party. He possesses the confidence of his fellow citizens, as has been shown on numerous occasions when he has been elected to responsible offices. He was treasurer of Spring Garden township, and when Freytown was admitted to the city of York, he was one of the first councilmen of the Twelfth ward. For a period of seventeen years he was a director of the Freytown Building Association, which was a very important business factor in the improvement of that part of the city. He has always taken a deep interest in the various civic organizations which are for the maintenance of good order and public safety, and he served for a great number of years as the efficient president of the Goodwill Fire Company. Mr. Bush has also supported educational measures and religious movements. For many years he has been a consistent member of St. Mark’s Lutheran Church, in which he has been an elder for the past ten years. Mr. Bush is acknowledged to be a man of intellectual as well as business ability, and is reckoned with the men of whom it is said his word is as good as his bond in any kind of a transaction.

ELI S. KELLER was born Dec. 20, 1864, in Cudorus township, son of John H. Keller and a grandson of Jacob Keller.

In Jacob Keller was found one of the substantial, reliable men of this section of York county. For many years he carried on farming in the vicinity of Bonair. He married Lydia Hoover, who died at the age of eighty-three years, while his death occurred at the age of seventy years. Both were buried at Fisehel’s Church in Shrewsbury township. Their children were: William, Jacob, Elizabeth, John H., Lydia, Rebecca, Lavina and Celia.

John H. Keller was born in Codorus township and attended the local schools. When his education was completed he learned the carpenter’s trade, which he followed for some years, and then entered into the employ of the Glen Rock planing-mill, where he had his home for thirty years. His farm he bought in Codorus township of his father-in-law, and it is a well cultivated tract of sixty-eight acres, improved by new and substantial buildings. His death took place in 1897, at the age of sixty years. He married Elizabeth Sheffer, daughter of Adam and Susan (Ruhl) Sheffer. The mother of our subject still resides on the home farm. The children of the above union were: Eli S., of this sketch; and Sourie M., wife of Harry Fritz, who lives in the Sixth district, Baltimore county, Maryland.

Eli S. Keller attended the township schools until he was seventeen years of age, when he took charge of his father’s farm which he is still operating, and he is looked upon as one of the most sensible and thorough farmers of this neighborhood.

Mr. Keller has been married twice, his first wife, Rosa Cullings having died in 1890. She was the mother of five children, namely: Estella L.; Carrie F., who is a student at Glenville Academy; Harry, deceased; and Meroe and Monrow, twins, both deceased. He married (second) Maggie Werner, who died in 1900, leaving one child, Alice.

In politics Mr. Keller is a Democrat. He has served the township very satisfactorily as school director, and was one of the leading men to advocate the erection of the Glenville high school. He is a member of the Reformed Church at Stiltz, in which he has been a deacon. For a considerable period he has been an active member of Camp No. 493. P. O. S. of A., at Bonair, and was its first vice-president.

ville, York Co., Pa., was first established in 1837 in York, under the style of McIntire & Wells, and in 1845 the business was re-established, with headquarters and factories at Wellsville, under the name of Wells, Riddle & Co. This firm existed until 1864, when the firm was re-organized under the name of A. & J. E. Wells, these partners being the founders of Wellsville. This company existed until 1871, when Abram Wells died, and the firm name was changed to J. E. Wells & Co., J. G. Wells being admitted as a partner. In the fall of 1878 J. E. Wells retired and the firm was then styled as J. G. Wells & Co., from which it was changed to the Wells Whip Company, after one year, and continued under this name until 1887. In this year the firm was incorporated, and these officers were elected: T. B. Hoover, president, and R. J. Belt, secretary and treasurer, and in 1890 J. Milligan was elected secretary.

The firm manufactures all kinds of whips, and employs on an average eighty to one hundred hands, also engaging thirty men as traveling salesmen. The output is about 300 dozen whips per day. In 1891 the plant was destroyed by fire, and was rebuilt in 1902 on its present site, only to be again totally destroyed. The former plants were of frame, but in 1902 after the last fire, they were rebuilt, and native field stone was used in the construction. The main factory is 262x40 feet, with two wings 60x40, and a center wing 50x30 feet. It is two stories in height, has a sixty-horse power boiler and a fifty-horse power engine. The firm owns its own electric light plant and water plant, and fully equipped pattern works. The company finds sale for its goods in all States of the Union, commanding the bulk of the trade through the East and Middle West. The business is increasing rapidly, and it can truly be called one of Pennsylvania’s great industries.

GEORGE W. ENGLE, engaged in farming and fruit growing in Monaghan township, was born Dec. 15, 1843, in this township, son of Henry and Nancy (Lauck) Engle.

The Engle family probably originated in France, but Henry Engle, the father of our subject, was born where his entire life was spent, in Pennsylvania. His business was that of carpentering and contracting, and he always bore the reputation of being the best mechanic of his locality. From Lancaster he came to York county, and many of the most substantial buildings in this township attest his skill. His death occurred at Pittsburg in 1857, from an attack of cholera. His children were: Lydia A., Catherine, George W., Leah, Hattie and twins who died young. Besides George W., the only survivor is Leah, who married George Leidy, now deceased, who was a soldier of the Civil war. Both Henry Engle and wife were members of the Reformed Church. In politics he was a Whig. His widow died March 9, 1864.

George W. Engle was a small boy when his father died. Circumstances caused his early life to be one of great hardship. He was only ten years old when he was bound out to Michael Mumper, now deceased, and he remained in that family until he was eighteen years of age. Then he started to learn the carpenter’s trade, but had been engaged only one year when the Civil war broke out. On May 15, 1861, he enlisted for the three months’ service, in Company C, 16th P. V. I., under Capt. Deisheimer, of Mechanicsburg, and after serving through the first term, just as readily enlisted again, this enlistment being in Company H, 9th P. V. C., and dating from Oct. 28, 1861, for three years. When discharged he re-enlisted again in the same regiment, in January, 1864, determined to be faithful as long as his country was in danger, and he continued in the army until the final close of the war. During all this time he had been in danger a thousand times, and once had his horse shot from under him from which he sustained injuries from which he has never recovered. He belonged to a gallant regiment which participated in 164 engagements, entering with the full quota of 1,400 men, coming out with but 300.

After the close of the war Mr. Engle returned to Cumberland county where he worked for a short time at farming, and then entered into the milling business, at which he continued for thirty years. As a miller probably few men in the township can excel Mr. Engle, his long experience making him familiar with both the old and the modern methods of milling. Finally he decided to settle down to small farming and fruit growing, and purchased his present fertile tract of thirty-five acres, to which he has given close attention ever since. He raises small grain and grows fruit, and is surrounded with all that makes life comfortable.

Mr. Engle has been twice married. On Nov. 4, 1869, he was united to Amanda C. Firestone, daughter of George Firestone, and the twelve children born to this union were: Agnes, Lucinda, Etta, Bertha, Samuel, Jacob, Lizzie M., Milton, Carrie, Ira, Albert W., and Iva. The mother of these children died March 26, 1894, aged forty-five years. Mr. Engle was married (second), Sept. 26, 1895, to Mrs. George Myers, widow of George Myers and formerly Miss Sarah Ellen Byers. Four children had been born to Mrs. Engle's first marriage, viz.: Bertha, Effie, Maud and Delilah, deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Engle have had these children: Calvin, Mary, Clara, Harry and Georgia Irene.

In politics Mr. Engle is a Republican. In religious belief he is a German Baptist. He is a man who has made his own way in the world, and has gained what he possesses, and secured the respect of his fellow citizens through his own industry and honest methods.

HARRISON CLAY WIEST SHELLEY, of York, Pa., has descended from some of the oldest and best families of York county, on both the paternal and maternal sides, extending back many generations in this country. He came through a line of fighters. His grandfather, Michael Shelley, born in 1793, served in the war of 1812, and died in 1865, at the age of seventy-one years. He married Catherine Bott, and their children were: Martin, Susan, William, Annie, Josiah and Amanda, all of whom are now deceased, except Josiah.

Josiah Shelley's children are: H. Clay Wiest; Annie Kate, wife of Edward Sweitzer; George Robert Albright; and Susan Amanda Isabelle, of New York City.

The great-great-grandfather of our subject, on his mother's side was Lt. Col. Philip Albright, of Revolutionary fame, who had a good record. He was the son of George and Barbara Albright, who arrived in Philadelphia, Oct. 16, 1732, on the "William and Mary." Constable Tymerton, Master, from Rotterdam, with their three sons: Antoni, Hans and Peter; Philip being born after their arrival in America. Lt. Col. Philip Albright married Anna Maria Ursula Dinkel, daughter of a nobleman, Johann Daniel Dinkel, and his wife, Maria Ursula (Von Ernest) Dinkel, of Strasburg, who arrived in Philadelphia with their children on the "Thistle," from Rotterdam, Aug. 29, 1730.

Jacob Wiest, grandfather of H. C. W. Shelley, served his country in the Civil war, as captain of Company H, 200th Regiment, during its existence and its time in service. He collected many relics from the battle field, some of which, with his sword which he used in service, are now in the possession of our subject. After the war, the survivors of Captain Wiest's company presented him a beautiful sword, for the honor in which they held him. He served as associate judge of the county courts of York, being appointed by Governor Geary to fill an unexpired term. He was a charter member and one of the founders of Heidelberg Reformed Church. He married Susan E., daughter of George Albright, and they had three children: Elizabeth Ann, who married Josiah Shelley; Susan A., wife of Jacob Hose, now chief of police of York; and Harrison Clay, all now deceased. The latter enlisted at Lincoln's first call for troops, going out with the company known as the York Rifles (first defenders). He afterward enlisted in Company A, 107th P. V. I., and was wounded in the battle of Antietam, Sept. 17, 1862, from the effects of which he died. By an act of the Assembly the State gave to each member of the York Rifles, or their descendants, a bronze medal, for patriotism, and one of these Mr. Shelley possesses.

Harrison Clay Wiest Shelley was born Oct. 30, 1803, at No. 216 West Market street, in the borough of York, Pa., eldest son of Josiah and Elizabeth Ann (Wiest) Shelley, was educated in the schools of York and the York County Academy, and in July, 1878, entered the printing office of the York Daily, to learn the trade of printing. After a few years at this trade he began to learn chain-making, in the Keystone Chain Works, of Mumper & Walker. He afterward became foreman of this plant with the firm of John C. Schmidt & Co. He later went to Philadelphia, and entered a grocery and delicatessen business, and on his return to his native town resumed printing, holding positions in the following offices: Delta Herald, Delta, Pa.; the York Daily Publishing Co., and the Hubley Printing Co. In October, 1900, he accepted a position with the Morning Republican, West Chester, Pa., and later with the Ketterlinus Lithograph Manufacturing Co., of Philadelphia. Returning again to York he entered the employ of the Maple Press Co., at which place he operated the first automatic feeding machine attached to a printing press, erected in York. He is now in the employ of the Gazette Co., and is in charge of the press-room of their large and up-to-date plant, of which branch of the trade he has been making a specialty for the past ten years.

Mr. Shelley was reared in the faith of the Reformed Church, and is a consistent member of Heidelberger Reformed congregation, of which for a number of years he served as deacon, and as superintendent of the Sunday-school. Mr. Shelley served a term as a member of the board of directors of the Y. M. C. A. He belongs to the York County Historical Society.

On Sept. 24, 1885, Mr. Shelley was united in marriage with Ruth Ella Trout, daughter of David and Hannah Hester (Rockhold) Trout, natives of York, and descendants of English and German ancestry. Mr. Shelley is a man in whom everyone places the utmost confidence and regards with esteem.

WADE W. McCLUNXE, secretary of the school district comprising the city of York, is a son of one of the oldest and most honored members of the Bar of York county.

Wade W. McClune was born in the city of York, July 2, 1879, and after completing the curriculum of the public schools he entered the York Collegiate Institute. When his school days were ended, he served an apprenticeship at the trade of carriage painting, becoming a skilled workman, and he continued to follow his trade as a vocation for a period of five years. During the ensuing five years he was a salesman for the Grand Union Tea Company, with headquarters at York, and at the expiration of the interval noted, in February, 1901, he was elected to his present position as secretary of the York City school district, in which he has proved in a significant way the wisdom which led to his being chosen for the office, whose affairs he handles with distinctive judgment and efficiency. Mr. McClune is a member of the Rescue Fire Company, and the Firemen’s Relief Association of York, while he is a zealous and valued member of Calvary Presbyterian Church, on whose board of trustees he has served some time. In politics he is a stalwart advocate of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, and on various occasions he has been called upon to serve as judge, inspector or clerk of elections in the Eighth ward, while he has been frequently a member of the ward committee of his party, and a delegate from his district to the county conventions. When only twenty-one years of age Mr. McClune was appointed judge of the election board by Judge Bittenger, and he is recognized as one of the most ardent and loyal young Democrats of his native city, while he enjoys marked popularity in both business and social circles.

On May 30, 1894, Mr. McClune married Miss Annie Campbell, daughter of David Campbell, a well-known citizen of York, and of this union have been born three children, Hugh Harold, Laura Elmira and Jennie Eleanor.

GEORGE M. LEADER. Most attractively located along the Baltimore pike road, in York township, is the fine farm and home of George M. Leader, a native son of York county. He was born on the parental homestead farm, in York township, Jan. 26, 1858, and is a representative of the fourth, possibly the fifth, generation of the family in York county.

Frederick Leader, his great-grandfather, was one of the prominent pioneer farmers of Lower Chanceford township, but the records extant do not indicate the place of his birth or whether his parents came to this county. It is conjectured, however, that he was born in this county, in which event it becomes evident that the family was among those very early established in this now opulent and favored section of the old Keystone State. From Lower Chanceford township Frederick Leader removed to York township, where he secured a tract of 250 acres of land, near the Dietz mill, and there he passed the remainder of his life, his remains having been laid to rest in the cemetery of the United Brethren Church at Spry.

George Leader, son of Frederick and grandfather of our subject, was born in Lower Chanceford township, and was a boy at the time of the family’s removal to York township, where he was reared to manhood, receiving good educational advantages for his day, as is evident from the fact that when a young man he was a successful teacher, in Springfield township, and also in what is now North Hopewell township. He finally purchased the old homestead farm, upon which he made many improvements, becoming one of the prominent and influential citizens of the township and there continuing to be identified with agricultural pursuits until his death. His remains rest in the cemetery of Salem church, at Paradise, Springfield township. His wife, whose maiden name was Eva Weiser, was likewise interred in this same "God's acre," both having been faithful and devoted members of the Salem Lutheran Church, at Paradise, while he was specially active in the work of the Sunday-school. His political allegiance was given to the Democratic party. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. George Leader were: Charles W., who died in Huntingdon county, Pa.; Miss Priscilla, who died in York; Sarah M., who became the wife of John Stouch, at one time county treasurer, and her death occurred in the city of York; George W., a resident of York; Henry, mentioned below; Jesse, formerly a miller by vocation, and now a representative farmer of Conewago township; Elizabeth, who married Jacob Stiles, and after his death became the wife of William Glatfelter, a local preacher of the Church of God, and they reside at Yoe, this county; Lydia, widow of David Willet, of Hanover, this county; Miss Eliza Ann, who resides in York; and Anna Maria, wife of William H. Hartman, of Paradise, this county.

Henry Leader was born in York township, Dec. 27, 1830, and passed his youth in York and Springfield townships, while he received a good common-school education. In 1854 he was united in marriage to Miss Leah E. Wambaugh, who was born in Springfield township, Sept. 12, 1830, a daughter of Michael and Mary (Landis) Wambaugh, the former of whom was a miller by trade. After his marriage Henry Leader continued to reside for some time in York township, engaged in agricultural pursuits, and he then removed to Springfield township, where he continued in the same vocation for a number of years. He afterward removed to Codorus township, where he purchased a well equipped sawmill, which he continued to operate for the ensuing fourteen years, in connection with a general lumbering business. Since the death of his wife he has lived practically retired, making his home with his son George, the subject of this review. He is a stanch Democrat in his political proclivities, and has ever taken deep interest in public affairs, particularly those of a local nature, while he has been an able and reliable business man, so ordering his life in all its relations that he to-day commands the confidence and high esteem of all who know him. His religious faith is that of the Lutheran Church, of which his devoted wife also was a consistent member. Mrs. Leah E. Leader died Aug. 22, 1868, and was buried in the Salem church cemetery, previously mentioned. She bore her husband the following children: Phebe Alice, who became the wife of Henry Dise, died in Springfield township, in 1881; George M. is next in order of birth; Priscilla is the wife of Joe L. Trout, and they now reside in the city of Pittsburg, Mr. Trout having previously been, for a period of sixteen years, bookkeeper for the Glen Manufacturing Co., at Glen Rock, York county; and Leah E. died at the age of thirteen years.

George M. Leader attended the public schools of York and Springfield townships in his youth, continuing his studies in this way with much regularity until he had attained the age of nineteen years. In the meanwhile he had assisted his father in his business enterprises, continuing in this association until two years after his marriage, which was solemnized in the year 1881. In 1885 he purchased thirty acres of land at Hametown, Shrewsbury township, and there continued to reside for three years, giving his attention to general farming. He then disposed of this little farm and removed to Glen Rock, where he became actively concerned in the work and management of the Glen Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of doors, sash, blinds, church pews, etc., being one of the stockholders of said company. After having been thus identified with this enterprise for a period of ten years Mr. Leader returned to Hametown, purchasing a residence and thirty-three acres of land, on the opposite side of the road from his former home, and there he continued to reside for two years. He was also a stockholder and director in the Glen Rock Wire Cloth factory. In 1890 he purchased of Josiah Day his present fine farm of sixty-four acres, in York township, taking up his residence on the place in the spring of 1900, having, in the meanwhile, disposed of his property at Hametown. His present farm, which is equipped with substantial improvements of modern order, including an attractive residence, is located on the Baltimore pike, about three miles south of the city of York, and it may be said without fear of contradiction that there are few farms in the county more attractive than this pleasant homestead, which gives evidence of progressive management and the highest order of thrift and prosperity. While ever manifesting a loyal interest in all that concerns the well being of the community and keeping in touch with the questions and issues of the hour, Mr. Leader has never been afflicted with the ambition for public office, while in his political attitude he is independent, giving his support to the men and measures which meet the approval of his judgment. During his residence at Glen Rock he was elected school director, and was appointed a member of the Board of Health, serving as its secretary until his removal from that town. He has also served as judge and inspector of elections at different times. Both he and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church at York.

On Nov. 20, 1881, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Leader to Miss Susan Myers, who was born and reared in Springfield township, being a daughter of Jacob Y. and Nancy (Shamberger) Myers, who are now living at York. Mr. and Mrs. Leader have one son, an exceptionally fine young man, endowed with marked strength of character and high intellectuality. This son, Guy Alvin, was born in Shrewsbury township, Oct. 21, 1887, and has received excellent educational advantages, while his intention is to secure a liberal education through proper collegiate work. He was at the time of this writing, engaged in teaching in the district school, in York township, though only seventeen years of age, making an excellent record in that connection.

B. FRANK STINE. The farm until the spring of 1906, owned by B. Frank Stine, and since then the property of his brother, has been in the possession of the family for over a century, and four generations have successively made it their home, until today there is scarcely a spot within its well-ordered limits which has not been endeared to its occupants by some association or memory.

Ludwig Stine, the original purchaser of the property came from Germany, and settled first west of York. The greater part of his life was spent on the old homestead in Windsor township, and there he died. He belonged to the Dunkards. His wife, Catherine Weigle, bore him seven children, viz.: John, who died in York township; Daniel, who died in Longstown; Henry; and four daughters.

Henry Stine was born in 1801, and died in August, 1870. His wife whose maiden name was Julia Ann Slenker, was born in 1800, and died in 1877. She was the daughter of Martin Slenker, who married a Miss Mellinger. Henry Stine spent his life on the farm, which became his own property on the death of his father. It consisted of 120 acres, and at first had two log houses on it, in one of which Ludwig Stine lived, and in the other Henry. The latter built the present house, a fine residence in 1849. Nine years before that he had built a good barn, but it was struck by lightning and burned in July, 1852, so that he was obliged to build another, the present structure in that same year. He had a family of six, namely: Henry, deceased, formerly of Yorkana; Charlotte, Mrs. Henry Paules, deceased; John; Joseph, who resided near York; Julia Ann, Mrs. Josiah Bailey; and Zachariah, of Lower Windsor township.

John Stine was born on the Stine homestead, March 17, 1833. Until he was eighteen he attended school, going to the Freysville school, which was first on a subscription basis, and later free. The term lasted only four months of each year, and the rest of the time was spent helping in the work of the farm. With his brother Henry, John Stine learned the carpenter's trade and worked at it for a couple of years, but then turned his attention to farming instead, and lived on the farm now owned by C. W. Shenberger. After the death of his father in 1870, he moved to the old farm, which has since been his home. In politics he is a Republican, while his religious connection is with the Freysville Lutheran Church. He was married, in 1854, to Miss Lucy Ann Schmuck, born in Windsor township in 1834, daughter of Peter and Magdalena (Smith) Schmuck. Five sons and two daughters have been born to this union, as follows: John W., of Windsor township; Reuben D., deceased; William Henry, who died at the age of seventeen; B. Frank; Moses, of Red Lion; and Julia Ann and Mary Jane, deceased in infancy.

B. Frank Stine was born in 1861 on the farm where his parents began their housekeeping. He was sent to the public schools, attending first in the old building that stood on the Stine farm, and his first teacher was David Stauffer, while the last one there was F. Z. Stauffer. At nineteen he had finished in the local schools, and then he entered the York Normal, where he spent one session under Profs. Seitz and Hays. With this preparation for teaching Mr. Stine secured the home school, and taught there the following winter, the last year that a session was held in that building. The following year he entered the Millersville Normal School and spent two years there, after which he taught the Fairview school in his own township for four years. the Cedar Hill school a similar period, and the Freysville school for two terms. At this point in his career Mr. Stine decided to give up teaching, and accordingly entered the mercantile business at Holtz, where for three years he carried on the store and post office, the former of which Moses C. Holtzinger has since bought. On leaving Holtz, he returned home, bought the farm from his father, and has ever since been carrying it on. For seven years he again taught school during the winters in the districts where he taught before, and his services as teacher have always been in demand. In 1891, Mr. Stine engaged in the fertilizing business, combining that and farming. In the spring of 1906 he sold the homestead farm to his brother, J. W. Stine, and he and his family moved to York.

Mr. Stine has been married for over twenty years, his union to Miss Ida B. Frey having occurred July 5, 1885. Miss Frey was born in Lower Windsor township, May 16, 1867, daughter of John and Mary (Hengst) Frey. Mr. and Mrs. Stine have had a family of six children: Carrie Belle, Cozie May, John N. Evin, Laura Flo, Mary Ann and Henry M. Stanley. Mr. Stine, as well as his wife, is a member of the Freysville Lutheran Church, in which he has been deacon for four years. In politics he was at first a Republican, and cast his first vote for Blaine, but in 1892 he changed to the ranks of the Democrats, and has supported that party since then. In the spring of 1902, he was elected school director for a term of three years, upon the expiration of which time he was re-elected for a similar period, a position which his education and experience abundantly qualify him to fill most capably. He was appointed deputy prothonotary of York county, Pa., and entered upon the duties of the office, under George W. Maish, prothonotary, Jan. 1, 1906. He is a member of Washington Camp, No. 176, P. O. S. of A., of Windsorville, and he formerly belonged to the Mystic Chain. He also belongs to York Eyrie, No. 183, F. O. E., and various other organizations in the city of York. He is prominent and influential in the community, and is a man universally esteemed and respected.

JOHN K. WALKER, an old and prominent farmer citizen of Lower Chanceford township, York county, was born Feb. 17, 1837, at Cross Keys Farm, Fulton township, Lancaster Co., Pennsylvania.

Timothy Walker, his grandfather, came to America from England with his wife and perhaps some of his children, and settled in Cecil county, Md., close to the Pennsylvania line. He was a soldier in the American Revolution and often told of having lain on the ground in camp when it was so cold his hair would freeze to the ground. Subsequently he moved to Lancaster county and died there. Of his children we have record only of Timothy, who located in Belmont county, Ohio; Sally, who died unmarried, and William, father of John K.

William Walker, father of John K., was a farmer all his life except during the years he kept the “Cross Keys Hotel,” between Lancaster and Port Deposit. He lived in Cecil county one year after his marriage and then took charge of the above named hotel, where he saved a little money, but not caring to sell whiskey, he went to farming in Lancaster county, where he lived for seven years, then removing to York county. He bought a farm of 100 acres two and one-half miles from the city of York, on which he lived until he sold it to our subject, buying another place of thirty-five acres on which he died in 1870, aged seventy-five years. He was a lifelong Democrat.

William Walker married Martha McCue, who was born in Cecil county, Md., a daughter of Dominick McCue, who came from Ireland with his wife before the birth of any of their children. Mrs. Walker died on the farm in 1890, aged seventy-five years. William Walker's children were as follows: Andrew, who died aged twelve years; John, who died young; Elias who died small; William, a soldier of the Civil war, deceased in August, 1904, who married in Lower Chanceford township (first) Jemima Arbuckle and (second) Mrs. Jane Murphy; John K., the subject of this sketch; Mary Ann, Mrs. Alexander Ire, who died in Lancaster; Martha, Mrs. James Kilgore, who died in Lower Chanceford township; Margaret, Mrs. John Donohue, who died in Lancaster; and Andrew, of Havre de Grace, Maryland.

John K. Walker was eight years old when he came to Lower Chanceford township with his parents, and completed his education here at the age of sixteen years. He was always more inclined toward work than books and was his father's best assistant on the farm, remaining at home and later buying the place as mentioned above. Later he moved to Pesuia Island, Md., and farmed a year there, afterward farming four years at Stony Point, Md., one year at Sandy Hill, Md., and two years at Purgatory, Md. He then came back to Lower Chanceford township and lived on the old home place until 1900, when he came to his present farm, formerly known as the John Shaub farm.

Mr. Walker was married Nov. 17, 1868, at York, to Sarah A. Wise, born Feb. 15, 1848, in Lower Chanceford township. Her father, Henry Wise, was a brother of John Wise, of near Red Lion, Windsor township, and spent his whole life on the homestead. He married Nancy Swaygart, who was born near Bethel Church, Chanceford township, and they both died on their home farm. They had children, as follows: John Andrew, deceased; Mary, Mrs. Andrew Douglas, of Chanceford township; Sarah A., wife of our subject; Henry, of near Delta, married to Katy Kenedy; Daniel, near Delta; and Becky, widow of Dr. Mordecai Posey, of Collinsville.

Children as follows were born to Mr. and Mrs. Walker: Laura, who was a successful teacher prior to her marriage to Samuel W. Taylor, of Lower Chanceford township; Bertha, Mrs. Jack Kenedy, of the same township; Mattie M., wife of Fillmore Grove, of Getchville, this county; Maggie, Mrs. Albert Reinecker, of North Point, Md.; Blanche, Mrs. John Barrett, who was a successful teacher for four years prior to marriage; Alice, Mrs. David Keeports, of Lower Chanceford township; Nan who resides at home; Thomas Neely, who married Hester Keeports and resides in Lower Chanceford township; William Howard, residing at home; John E., of Lower Chanceford township; Octavia, who died aged seven years; Arabella, who died aged three years; and two children who died in infancy. Mr. Walker has also an adopted son, John W. W. Herman. This large and interesting family is prominent in this section of the county.

Mr. Walker, like his father, has always been identified with the Democratic party, but he has never consented to hold office. Both he and his estimable wife are worthy members of the McKendree M. E. Church.

JAMES E. MANIFOLD, of East Hopewell township, York Co., Pa., is a descendant of Benjamin Manifold, the emigrant ancestor of the family in this country, who came from Ireland to the United States. Mr. Manifold is connected with many of the oldest families of his section, and was born in his present home, which was erected by his father a short time prior to his birth, Feb. 10, 1848.

Salem Rowe Manifold, the father, was born Dec. 6, 1799, close to Fawn Grove, in Fawn township, on a farm owned by one Marsteller, and there grew to manhood. He married Eliza Turner Manifold, who was born and reared on the farm now owned by J. J. Manifold, daughter of "Long" Henry Manifold and Elizabeth Turner, the former receiving his nickname to distinguish him from Henry Manifold, of Fawn township, whose pseudonym was "Short." After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Salem R. Manifold lived in Fawn township for a time, and then removed to the Charles Grove farm, near the Hopewell township line. He then purchased a farm of 225 acres from Samuel Grove, who had purchased it from John Helling. Mr. Manifold paid $600 for this farm, upon which there was not enough land cleared to make a garden. His home was an old log house of two rooms, in one of which Mrs. Manifold had her spinning-wheel and wove clothing for her children, also making coverlets and table cloths. Mr. Manifold built the present brick residence in 1847. The barn erected in 1842, by "Jim" Gemmill, contractor, was the largest in the township at that time. Mr. Manifold's early crops of wheat were only enough to feed his family, six bushels being the first year's yield. He was a member of Prospect M. E. Church, while his wife attended Round Hill Presbyterian Church. Politically Mr. Manifold was first a Whig, and later a Republican. His death occurred in 1883, and his wife passed away in 1895. They had the following named children: John A. married Emmeline Dillinger, of Indiana, and died in East Hopewell township; B. Franklin is a resident of Baltimore county, Md.; Elizabeth Turner died unmarried as did Mary; Joseph Edward died in a camp hospital at Antietam, while a soldier in the 187th P. V. I.; Belinda Jane married Cornelius Collins, and died on the Plank Road; Henry, a member of the 130th Cavalry, died in service (his regiment's horses were taken away and the men were ordered to proceed to a certain point on foot; he took to bleeding at the nose, and went into battle in that condition, dying from the strain); Margaret died when young; Henry (2) died in childhood; James E. is our subject.

James E. Manifold received his early education in the local schoolhouse, his first teacher being Archie Fullerton, and he left school under Thomas Wilson. He then attended one year at the Stewartstown Academy under Prof. James A. Murphy. When young he had a great desire to go into the cattle dealing business, and had many chances to go West to bring in cattle, but though his father was willing that he should go his mother objected to it, so he remained at home. When the Civil war broke out, he, being the only help on the farm, was compelled to remain at home, and his whole life has been spent in farming. When he was fourteen years old it is said that he was able to swing a cradle as well as any, being also able to tie wheat as rapidly and well as his elders. His father often said that he could "now to Baltimore without straightening up if someone wanted him to," as he never knew what backache was.

Mr. Manifold was married Jan. 17, 1878, to Miss Belle W. Irwin, who was born in Fawn township in 1855, daughter of Robert and Eliza (Wiley) Irwin, and after marriage settled on his 100-acre tract, upon which stands the residence. Most of his land was cleared, and he has raised some of the best crops in the section. He and his family are members of the Round Hill Presbyterian Church, which he joined in 1861. In politics he is a stanch Republican, and has served as school director and held other township offices. To Mr. and Mrs. Manifold have been born: Marian Gertrude, now Mrs. Springer Lanius of Fawn township; and Henry Rowe and Jennie Irwin at home.

ANDREW ELLIS, a prominent citizen of Red Lion, Chanceford township, York county, was born Nov. 20, 1828, in Chanceford township, and is of French and German descent.

George Ellis, his grandfather, located in Chanceford township, and died on the farm on which our subject was born, having been a farmer all of his life. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, serving seven years as a private, and his rifle is now in the possession of his grandson, Andrew.

David Ellis, the father of Andrew, was born on the same farm and received an ordinary common school education, and became a teacher, having a school in the house in which he lived, for the benefit of the neighbors' children during the winter for a number of years. He married Catherine Schall, a native of Maryland, whence her father moved to what is now Lower Chanceford township, where he bought 700 or 800 acres of land. Of this Mr. Ellis got 188 acres. Mrs. Ellis died on the home farm, aged ninety-seven years, and Mr. Ellis passed away in his sixty-second year. These good people were Presbyterians. In politics he was an old line Whig. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Ellis were: Michael, who died in Windsor township; Catherine, who married Adam Arnold, and died in Windsor township; John, who died in Chanceford township; Annie, who married Michael Bloure, and died in the same township; Henry, who died in either Maryland or Virginia; Philip, who died in Chanceford township George, who died in Chanceford township; Mary, who married George Bullock and died in Columbia; Fannie, who married Jacob Houghmutter, and died in Chanceford township; Benjamin, who died in Chanceford township, and Andrew.

Andrew Ellis was taught by subscription teachers first, and later went to the public schools, but the advantages for his education were slight, as his father died when he was but ten years old, and he was compelled to go to work for the neighbors. The first wages he received were twenty-five cents per day, and he was then paid six dollars per month, working at hay making and harvesting. For work with a hand scythe and rake he received sixty-five cents per day, and he kept at this work for a few years, and then engaged in team work for John Detweiler, hauling wood to the canal at fifty cents per day, handling sixteen loads per day. Mr. Ellis and his brother Henry cut wood for two years, winter and summer, for Robert Huston of Columbia, and then bought a team and hauled the wood to the canal for Mr. Huston. The land from which the wood was hauled was covered with brush, stumps and stones, and the brothers made an agreement to haul so many loads of wood for the farm. They hauled the required number of loads and received the land, upon which they built a stone house, thirty feet square and two stories high, and a temporary barn later building a barn 40x100 feet. The land consisted of 133 acres or more, and in a short time Mr. Ellis bought out his brother, and later sold off forty acres of the land, the rest of which he cleared and cultivated, selling it in the spring of 1905, and removing to Red Lion, where he has since lived.

Mr. Ellis married Margaret Leiphart, and the following children have been born to them: George: Ida, who married Frank Koons, of Lower Windsor; Olivia, who married Amos Koons, of Chanceford township; Ellen, who married Emanuel Smultzler, of Windsor township; Lilly, who married William E. Burkins, of Red Lion; and Cora, who married Jeremiah Arnold of Chanceford township. Mr. Ellis is very highly respected in the community in which he resides and is a very useful and progressive citizen. In politics he is a Democrat.

CHARLES LESEE, justice of the peace in North Codorus township, York Co., Pa., was born in that township, Aug. 14, 1832, son of Daniel and Mary (Emig) Leese.

Valentine Leese, the grandfather, came to America from Germany and settled in Manchester township, York county. He was a tailor and followed his trade all his life.

Daniel Leese, the father, learned the trade of shoemaker. He owned a small farm of thirty acres in North Codorus township, and this he cultivated when not engaged in public duties as he was a justice of the peace, a constable, and also did surveying. He married (first) Mary Emig, who died in June, 1860, and (second) Mary Klinedinst, who died in 1895. He died in 1875, at the age of seventy-four years and six months, and was buried in the Moravian cemetery at York. His children were: John W., a shoemaker and farmer; Susan, deceased; Benjamin, deceased, who served Jefferson borough as justice of the peace and surveyor; George L., deceased, a wheelwright by trade; Lydia, who died in Baltimore; Charles; and Daniel, a civil engineer, residing at New Albany, Indiana.

Charles Leese attended the township schools, the first one being at Stoverstown, and the next Seven Valley, and the last of his school days were passed at the Leeses school in North Codorus township, when he was seventeen years of age. He then learned the millwright trade in Jackson township which he followed for thirty-five years in different parts of York county, five years being spent at Emigsville, Manchester township. In 1860 he came to North Codorus township and bought a small property, which he sold at a later date and bought his present farm of fifty acres of John Myers. This he has converted into a first-class truck farm, and it is one of the finest in this part of the State. He also grows fruit extensively, and has fine bee hives. He has had the same stall in the Farmers' Market for the past thirty-three years, and there are many households which depend upon his choice commodities for the greater part of their purchases.

Charles Leese was married Feb. 19, 1857, to Margaret Schuler, daughter of George Schuler, a butcher in Manchester township, who died in 1860, and was buried at the Union Church at Manchester. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Leese settled at Emigsville and lived there for three years, and then came to North Codorus township. In 1883 he was elected justice of the peace, an office in which he has served ever since with satisfaction to all concerned. In all these years he has returned but two cases to court, his judgment making it possible for him to settle all the others. In addition to his other duties, he has been engaged in surveying for the last twenty years.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Leese were as follows: Ida who died aged two years; Listie A., who married (first) Joseph Hoke and (second) Milton Heman, and lives in York; Andrew G., who married Jennie Sagner; Ellen, wife of George M. Mummet, and living at Menges Hills; Charles, who died aged seven years; Daniel G., married to Fannie Kessler and living in Paradise township; Benjamin, who married Elsie Messersmith and lives in York; Edward, who married Millie Bollinger and has been a teacher and surveyor in North Codorus township for eight years; Harry, who died aged two days; and Carrie N., who married John Shutt, of Spring Grove.

Few men are better known in this section than Squire Leese. He served for twelve years on the school board and for eleven years was its secretary. He is one of the stockholders and a director of the Codorus Canning Company, of Jefferson, which he did much to organize.

FRANK J. SNEERINGER, manufacturer of cigar boxes at Hanover, sole proprietor of a thriving manufactory with which he has been connected almost since its inception, first as an employee, evinces by his career the potency of personality in the management of a business. Ambitious and energetic, he thoroughly acquired the details of the business, and then when the opportunity presented itself for the operation of the plant in his own name, he was well-equipped for the undertaking. And though still a young man he has shown the possession of superior business qualifications.

Mr. Sneeringer was born near Conewago Chapel, Adams Co., Pa., June 5, 1875, son of Frank G. and Sallie (Jenkins) Sneeringer, both now deceased. The father was a native of Adams county, and was for a number of years interested in business for himself. He had been prominent in politics and had served a term in the State Legislature.

Frank J. Sneeringer received his primary education in the public schools. He then entered Mt. St. Mary's College at Emmitsburg, Md., where he pursued his studies for several years. After leaving school Mr. Sneeringer, possessing a taste for mercantile life, started a general store at Edge Grove, Adams county, and while there he was appointed postmaster. In 1889 the Penn Cigar Box Company, Ltd., through J. A. Poist & Bro., established a manufactory at Hanover. F. G. Sneeringer succeeded to the ownership, and in 1894 Frank J. Sneeringer purchased the plant and became the manufacturer of cigar boxes. The present factory, a brick structure, 50x120 feet, was erected by Mr. Sneeringer in 1905. The main building is supplemented by sheds and warehouses for storing material, and also the finished product. A force of forty men and women are employed at the factory, which is equipped with late and improved machinery, the product finding a market in many States.

Mr. Sneeringer has been connected with the box factory a large part of the time since it was started. He is thoroughly acquainted with the work in every department, and as proprietor he has conducted the business with marked success. Mr. Sneeringer is also a member of the company known as the Centennial Cigar Co., at Centennial, Pa., where one hundred cigar makers are employed. He is also the owner of one of the best farms in Adams county—situated near the town of New Oxford.

Aside from his own business Mr. Sneeringer finds time to devote to the interests and welfare of Hanover. He is vice-president of the Hanover Mattress Company, a concern that is doing a thriving business. It was incorporated in 1905 with H. A. Bair, president; F. J. Sneeringer, vice-president; E. A. Michael, secretary; H. B. Schultz, treasurer; and Herman Leonard, manager.

Mr. Sneeringer married, in September, 1898, Miss Daisy V. Schaberg, of Hanover, daughter of Francis and Mary Schaberg.

MARTIN WHISLER, for the past twenty-five years a minister of the Mennonite persuasion, who has held pastorates in both Pennsylvania and Maryland, and now in charge of the church at Hanover, comes of a family long known in Cumberland county, where he was born on a farm near Newville, in February, 1846, son of Peter and Ester (Martin) Whisler.

Abraham Whisler, grandfather of Martin, a native of Lancaster county, was the first of his name to settle in Cumberland county, where he owned a farm. He was twice married. His son Peter was born in the later home, and continued to reside in that county until his death in 1858. His wife, Ester, who was born in Lancaster county in 1816, was the daughter of Jacob and Mary (Nicewarner) Martin, and removed with them to Cumberland county, when she was sixteen years old. Her father was a prosperous farmer. To Peter and Esther Whisler were born five children, one of whom died in early life; the others were: Susanna, deceased wife of Benjamin Lehman; Maria; Emanuel, a farmer in Manheim township; and Martin.

Martin Whisler grew up in Cumberland county, and until he was seventeen years old attended the Negley school in Mifflin township, while the next four years were spent in assisting his father. At the age of twenty-one he started out for himself on the Sollenberger farm, a tract of land of ninety-six acres, situated in Penn township. He now has charge of the "Iron Ore" farm which he has rented to his son-in-law, Henry Swemley. In addition to this farm, Mr. Whisler owns a good house and lot in Penn township, and also similar property in Menges Mills, for he was an industrious and able farmer and conducted his affairs with good success in a material way. His active career as a teacher began in 1877, when he entered upon four years of public service in Cumberland county. Later besides preaching several years in Zimmerman, Carroll county, Md., he had charge both of the Diller Church and the Hostetter Church, most of the time combining his ministerial duties and his farming. Mr. Whisler has been untiringly faithful in the discharge of his duties, and has been a power for good in his community. He was married at the age of twenty-one to Elizabeth Lay, daughter of John Lay, of Cumberland county, and ten children were born to this union, namely: Emma R., deceased; Anna; Mrs. John Jacobs, of York county; Hettie E., Mrs. Clayton Shooll, of Hanover; Edward A., of Hanover; Samuel, unmarried; Fannie, who married Henry Moult, a farmer; Effie M., Mrs. Henry Swemley; Martin P., Clayton E. and Mabel M., all at home. Mrs. Elizabeth Whisler died in November, 1891, and Mr. Whisler married for his second wife, Amanda, widow of the late John Lillick, and daughter of George and Elizabeth (Hershey) Forry.

JACOB S. KENDIG, superintendent of the Keystone Farm Machine Company, representing one of the most important industrial enterprises in the city of York, is a native son of York county and a scion of a family that came to the Keystone State in an early day.

William Kendig, grandfather of Jacob S., was born in York county, and came of stanch German lineage. He became one of the prosperous farmers of Hopewell township, and there both he and his wife died.

William Kendig, the honored father of Jacob S., was likewise born and reared in York county, and was numbered among the honored farmers of Hopewell township. At the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion, like so many other loyal and patriotic sons of the republic he left the work of the farm to take up arms in defense of the Union, enlisting as a member of Company A, 200th P. V. I., with which he served until he was physically incapacitated, while it was his to sacrifice his life on the altar of his country, since he died in the City Point hospital, Virginia, in 1865, at the age of thirty-five years. His wife, whose maiden name was Christiana Saylor, was likewise born in York county, being a daughter of Jacob Saylor, a well-to-do farmer of Spring Garden township, and she survived him many years, her death occurring Dec. 26, 1903, at which time she was seventy-two years of age. They were the parents of seven children, namely: George W. and William H., who are well-known citizens of York; Jennie, wife of John T. Hubley, who is engaged in the printing business in York; Amanda E., wife of John W. Watts, of York; Emma, wife of Charles T. Clopper, a machinist of this city; Clara wife of Andrew Ostertag, a furniture dealer of Philadelphia; and Jacob S.

Jacob S. Kendig was born on the old homestead farm, in Hopewell township, this county, Nov. 29, 1862, and he remained on the home farm, assisting in its work, during his boyhood days, while his educational training was secured in the local schools and those of the city of York. When eighteen years of age he began working in the shops of the A. B. Farquhar Company, in York, becoming a skilled machinist and continuing in the employ of the company mentioned for a period of seven years. He then, in September, 1890, entered the service of the Keystone Farm Machine Company, as foreman of the machine shop, and in 1900 a just recognition of his ability and fidelity came to him in the form of promotion to his present office of superintendent of the extensive plant of the company. In the works employment is given to about one hundred and ninety persons, and under the superintendency of Mr. Kendig the enterprise has been much extended in scope and importance, the products of the concern being shipped into all sections of the United States, while shipments are made each year to Germany, England, Cuba, South America and Africa. In politics Mr. Kendig is independent, and fraternally we find him identified with the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. Both he and his wife are consistent members of Trinity Reformed Church.

Mr. Kendig’s marriage was solemnized Nov. 27, 1889, when Miss Mary E. King became his wife. She was born in York, daughter of the late John T. King, who was a prominent contractor and builder of York. Mr. and Mrs. Kendig have one son, H. King, born May 15, 1893, who is attending the city schools.

MATHIAS BAKER, one of the highly esteemed residents of Manchester borough and one of York county’s substantial citizens, was born Dec. 11, 1841, in Newberry township, son of Mathias Baker, formerly a most worthy and respected farmer of this locality.

Of his grandparents Mr. Baker knows little as the old family records have not been preserved, but he knows that they lived and died in Newberry township. They had two sons and one daughter, the latter of whom married a man by the name of Boyer. One son was our subject’s father and the other, Daniel Baker, kept the toll gate for a long time.

Mathias Baker, father of our subject, was born Aug. 2, 1807, in Newberry township where he went to school, followed an agricultural life and died Feb. 24, 1854. He was twice married, first to Elizabeth Good, who was born in 1800, and died Dec. 15, 1830. He married (second) Sarah Kohr, who died Aug. 13, 1850, aged seventy-three years, six months and twenty-five days. His children were: Elizabeth, who married Peter Updegraff, lives in Lewisberry; Jacob, who died in Newberry township, was a blacksmith at Yocumtown and during the Civil war served in Company I, 200th P. V. I.; Mathias; Daniel, who married Elizabeth Markley, and resides in Manchester township, served also in the Civil war, a member of Company D, the above regiment; Benjamin, who married Sarah Fetrow, lives in Newberry township; Mary Ann died Feb. 2, 1860, aged fourteen years, one month and two days; John, born Dec. 29, 1832, died March 3, 1854; Sarah Ann, born Oct. 13, 1851, died Oct. 1, 1852; and Lydia, born Oct. 7, 1838, died aged one year and eleven months. The above named children are all buried in the Mennonite churchyard in East Manchester township, York county.

Mathias Baker, son of Mathias, was educated in the schools of Newberry township, but had few advantages as his father died when he was quite young, and he was obliged to go out among strangers. He was very industrious, and seldom wanted for employment. In 1862 he married Elizabeth Keller, born Feb. 7, 1844, who died Jan. 14, 1887, aged forty-two years, eleven months and seven days. She was buried at the Union cemetery at Manchester. She was a faithful member of the United Brethren Church.

After his marriage Mr. Baker settled at Roundtown in Manchester township, doing day’s work there for some two years, and then passed the early summer working on farms in Conewago township. In August, 1864, he enlisted for service in the Civil war, entering Company D, 200th P. V. I., under Capt. Dilling, and was mustered in at Harrisburg. His command was sent to Virginia and took part in the battle at Petersburg. After nine months service, he returned to Newberry township, fortunate in having escaped injury although on the above field of battle the men on his right and left sides were both killed.

After his return from the front, Mr. Baker continued to work by the day for the next two and a half years, and then came to East Manchester township, where he operated John Spahr’s farm on Conewago creek for nine years. From there he went to Samuel Gross’ farm for five years, and then after four years on another farm, he bought a first class farm of seventy-five acres in Manchester township. Mr. Baker took a great deal of interest in that farm, and erected fine buildings and made many improvements, residing on that property for six years. In 1892 he came to Manchester purchasing a fine home on High street, and here he is enjoying the ease and comfort of a retired life. He has always worked hard, and has made his own way in the world.
In 1891 Mr. Baker was married (second) to Amanda Grenewalt of Dover township, born Nov. 25, 1842, who died Oct. 12, 1894, aged forty-one years, ten months and seventeen days. He is the father of the following children, all born to his first union: Flora C., married Moses Wagner, and they live at Starview, East Manchester township; Alvin E., born Nov. 17, 1863, married Elizabeth Hoffman, and they live in East Manchester township; William Henry, born June 17, 1866, married Jane Bruan, and they live on the home farm; Franklin Calvin, born Aug. 31, 1868, died Oct. 2, 1888, aged twenty years, one month and two days, and was buried beside his mother; Almeda Susan, born Aug. 23, 1869,* married William Keller, and they live near Bradford, Ohio; Phoebe, born Nov. 3, 1874, married George Hoffman, and they live in Springsbury township; and Mathias H., born Oct. 24, 1876; is unmarried. Mr. Baker is affiliated with the Republican party, and he has served on the city council of Manchester. He is an honorable citizen who is very highly regarded.

BENJAMIN SENTZ, of North Hopewell township, is at present engaged in general farming and tobacco raising on his seventy-one-acre farm. He was born in that township, Oct. 14, 1850, son of Henry and Lydia (Tyson) Sentz.

Henry Sentz and his wife both died in North Hopewell township, in the faith of the Reformed Church. In politics he was a Republican. They had a family of nine children, and of these our subject was the youngest.

Benjamin Sentz attended the public schools of his township until eighteen years of age, and was reared to the life of a farmer. He worked with his father until his twenty-first year, when he started out for himself, working for two years with Jacob Diehl, and two years with Eli Hersh. After his marriage he lived in a tenant house for one year, and then bought his present place of seventy-one acres, where he is now engaged in general farming and tobacco raising. Mr. Sentz was married to Miss Henrietta Haney, daughter of Squire Levi and Sarah Ann (Phillips) Haney.

Mr. and Mrs. Sentz are members of the Reformed Church, in which he has been active since his affiliation with that body in 1870, having been elder for ten years, and helping to build the present church building. A staunch Republican in politics, he has served as supervisor of the township for two years. Mr. and Mrs. Sentz's children are as follows: Sarah Ida, Henry S. and Benjamin E.

BENEDICT MEADS MANIFOLD, a retired farmer of Hopewell township, York county, is a son of Hon. John and Miranda (Meads) Manifold, and was born in 1832, on the old family homestead in East Hopewell township, now the property of his brother, S. B. Manifold. The father was at one time a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature.

Benedict M. Manifold has spent his life in agricultural pursuits. He was brought up on his father's farm, assisting about the place even as a boy. He attended the township schools regularly until he was seventeen, one of his best known teachers being William Hammond, and after completing his studies he continued at home as a regular helper of his father until he was married. He then started on his own account, in April, 1870, on the farm where he still lives, now known as the Bridgeway farm. It is a place of 140 acres, and is both productive and well-managed. While the buildings were put up by a former owner, Thomas Shaw, the house being erected as early as 1842, they are still in good condition.

Mr. Manifold was married March 10, 1870, to Miss Ann B. Payne, daughter of Fulton and Franey Elizabeth (Lanius) Payne, both of whom died in Hopewell township. To this union have come children as follows: John Joseph, who married Miss Marion Anderson, and resides in Hopewell township; Benjamin Fulton Payne, a resident of East Hopewell township, who married Miss Bertha Hyson; Edward Lanius, at home; Benedict Meads, of South Dakota; Oscar E., who married Miss Abbie Althouse, and lives in Hopewell township; William Reynolds, at home; Franey Elizabeth, at home; Margaret Mary, Mrs. Joseph Ray Anderson, of Hopewell township; and Clay Walter, who was graduated in August, 1905, at Goldy Commercial College, Wilmington, Del., and is now a bookkeeper in the freight office for the Pennsylvania railroad in York. The family are all devout members of the Presbyterian Church.

In politics Mr. Manifold has been a lifelong Democrat, and one who has done his part in public service for his locality. His special sphere of activity has been in promoting the welfare of the community in an educational way, and he has been a member of the school board, acting as treasurer of that body. Mr. Manifold has won a secure place in the esteem of his fellow citizens, and his family are all highly respected by their friends and neighbors.

JOHN WILLIAM HELLER, one of the oldest members of the York County Bar, is a son of the Rev. Jeremiah Heller, deceased, of the Reformed Church, who was born and reared in Adams county.

Mr. Heller's great-grandfather came from Germany and settled in Adams county, where the family lived for many years. The mother of our subject was Eliza Fisher, a half-sister of H. L. Fisher, the distinguished lawyer, and there were four sons, three of whom are living: Henry T., in the insurance business in Illinois; George, a retired merchant of Oak Harbor, Ohio; and John William, of York.

John William Heller was born in Rockingham county, Va., Oct. 24, 1838, and was educated at Heidelberg College, Ohio. He read law with the Hon. Thomas E. Finefrock, of Fremont, Ohio, was admitted to practice there in 1863, and was admitted to the courts of York county, Feb. 13, 1865, subsequently being admitted to the Supreme Court where he argued many important cases, among others having been associated with Hon. W. U. Hensel, of Lancaster, in a trial of the collateral inheritance tax case, in the Small estate. Mr. Heller was elected district attorney of York county in 1867, filling that office with signal ability. During Sheriff Peeling's term of office, and that of Vincent R. Weaver, clerk of the courts, Mr. Heller was counsel for both officials.

Mr. Heller married Ella Engles, daughter of ex-Sheriff Engles, and seven children were born to this union, one of whom died in infancy. The survivors are: Thomas E., ex-deputy clerk of the courts of York county; George E., machinist; John W., Jr., ex-chief deputy sheriff; Henry T., a clerk in New York; and Sallie E. and Frances Louisa, at home. In politics Mr. Heller is a Democrat. In religious connection he is a member of the Reformed Church.

Mr. Heller's eldest son, Thomas Engle Heller, was born June 5, 1868, in York, and, after attending the public schools of York and college in Philadelphia, secured a position in the chemical works in York. In 1893 he was elected clerk to the commissioners, and re-elected in 1895. He served as deputy recorder from 1900 to 1903, and on the first Monday in January, 1903, became deputy clerk of the courts, under Vincent R. Weaver. He was married April 24, 1901, to Nellie Mowbrey Hitchcott. Like his venerable and gifted father, Mr. Heller is a Democrat. He belongs to the Elks, K. of P., Heptasophs, Knights of Malta, the York Club and the Young Men's Democratic Society. His religious connection is with Trinity Reformed Church.

JOHN W. Heller, Jr., was born in York, May 16, 1874, was educated in the public schools, graduating from the High school in 1892, and became a clerk in his father's law office. He was appointed delinquent tax collector in 1899, 1900 and 1901. In 1902, he was appointed chief deputy sheriff by Sheriff Peeling. Mr. Heller was married Dec. 24, 1901, to Regina November, daughter of Moses November, a wholesale cloak manufacturer of New York City, and one son has been born to this union, William Heller. Mr. Heller belongs to the Fraternal Order of Eagles and the Young Men's Democratic Society. He is a member of the Reformed Church.

EMANUEL HARTMAN. In the early pioneer epoch, when settlers were few in York county and when civilization was advancing with somewhat uncertain footsteps, the Hartman family was there founded, and it is pleasingly significant to advert to the fact that ever since that early period the name has been identified with the industrial and civic history of that section of the State. Emanuel Hartman is a representative of this well-known family and has passed the major portion of his life in his native county, being one of the prosperous farmers of York township.

Jonathan Hartman, his great-grandfather, was the first representative of the family in York county. No authentic data are at hand as to his place of birth, but it is supposed that he was born in Germany and that he there remained until he was a young man. At the time of his locating in York township there were but few settlers in that section of the county, and there he took up a large tract of land and set himself to the task of reclaiming it from the wilderness, eventually developing a good farm and becoming one of the leading men of the township. There he continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, and his remains rest in a consecrated spot on his old homestead, as do also those of his wife and other members of his immediate family. Of the children of this sterling pioneer, Jacob is to be accorded special attention since he figures as the grandfather of him to whom the sketch is dedicated. Jacob Hartman was born on the ancestral farmstead, in York township, in the year 1792, and there grew to manhood, becoming a useful member of society and retaining the high regard of all who knew him. He ever continued his allegiance to the great basic industry, agriculture, owning and operating a good farm in his native township, while he also gained such marked prestige as a manufacturer of baskets that his products were in wide and constant demand. The maiden name of his wife was Haas, and she likewise was born and reared in York township. After his marriage Jacob Hartman took up 270 acres of land in York township, a large portion of the tract being covered with the native timber, but he reclaimed the most of the land to cultivation, while for several years he operated a distillery on the farm which is now owned by H. L. Perry, near Dallastown. Later he located on the farm now owned and occupied by Emanuel Hartman, and finally, in 1864, removed to the vicinity of Grand Rapids, Wood county, Ohio, where he purchased a large tract of land upon which he engaged in farming until his death in 1869, his remains being there laid to rest. After his death his wife returned to York county and passed the closing years of her life in the home of her grandson, the subject of this review, her death occurring in 1881 and interment being made in the cemetery of the United Brethren church at Dallastown. Of the children of this honored couple is made the following brief record: Leah became the wife of John Kauffman and died in York township; Levi was the father of Emanuel, to whom this article chiefly relates; Melinda is the widow of David Bortner, and resides at Glen Rock, York county; Matilda, who resides in York township, is the widow of Charles Neff, who died in 1904; Rebecca became the wife of Simon Snyder and both died in York county; Emanuel, who married Leah Rheinhart, is a successful farmer of Wood county, Ohio, and is also a clergymen of the Mennonite Church.

Levi Hartman, father of Emanuel, was born on the homestead in York township, and was there reared to maturity, receiving a common-school education and assisting in the work of the farm, while he also learned the trade of basket-making under the direction of his father. He remained at the parental home until he had attained the age of twenty years, when he was united in marriage to Miss Leah Snyder, who likewise was born and reared in York township, a daughter of Jacob and Katie (Spotts) Snyder. After this important event he located on one of his father’s farms, and began an independent career of marked energy and correct direction, so that he was not denied the reward of definite and unequivocal success. He finally came to the farm now occupied by his son, having purchased the property, in turn, from his father. The tract comprised seventy-eight acres of as fine land as is to be found in this favored section of the Keystone State. He made many improvements on the place, having erected the present fine residence and other substantial buildings, and this, together with the punctilious care given to the cultivation of the land, eventuated in making the farm one of the best in the township. Levi Hartman was a man of sterling attributes of character, true and loyal in all the relations of life, and he not only made for himself a place of influence in local affairs, but ever retained the respect and confidence of his fellowmen. He continued to be actively identified with agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred Aug. 14, 1900, and he rests in the United Brethren cemetery at Dallastown. Though retaining his farm and continuing to take an active interest in its management, he lived practically retired during the last twenty years of his life, enjoying the pose and comfort to which he was so well entitled after so many years of earnest toil and endeavor. He was a Democrat in his political proclivities, and though never a seeker of office, was at one time an incumbent of the supervisorship of York township. His religious faith was that of the United Brethren Church, of which his wife also was a devoted member, her death occurring on the 28th of May, 1889. Briefly, the record of their children is as follows: Jeremiah S. is at present a resident of Colorado, has travelled extensively.
throughout the West and has resided for varying intervals in different States. At the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion he enlisted in a Pennsylvania regiment of volunteer infantry, remaining in the service four months, then returning to York county, and afterward living in Ohio and other States before locating in Colorado. At the age of thirty years he wedded Miss Susan Cook, and they have five children. Rebecca is the wife of George Snyder and they reside in the borough of Yoe, York county. Benjamin, Jane and Gideon died in infancy. John is married, resides in Nebraska, and is the father of four children. Emanuel is to be spoken of more in detail hereafter. Susan is the wife of Isaac Kohler, a prosperous cigar manufacturer of the borough of Yoe; they have five children. Catherine is the wife of William Hildebrand and they reside in the city of York, the parents of twelve children. Melinda was the wife of William Kohler, of Dallastown; Mrs. Kohler died in 1880, leaving one child. Annie is the wife of Carlvin Fuhrman, of York, and is the mother of six children.

In presenting a brief resume of the life of him whose name introduces this article, it is first to be noted that Emanuel Hartman was born on the homestead farm in York township, on the 25th of June, 1853. In addition to assisting in the work of the farm he learned the trade of basket-making in his youth, this vocation being one which has long been connected with the family name, as previous statements indicate. While thus engaged he continued to attend the Kohler school in his native township during a portion of each year, until he had attained the age of sixteen years. Thereafter he also continued to assist his father in the work and management of the farm until he had reached his legal majority, when he entered upon an apprenticeship at the stone and brickmason's trade. This vocation he followed for seven years, the greater portion of the period being passed in the State of Nebraska. He then returned to York county, and in his native township continued the work of his trade for two years, when, in 1880, he married and turned his attention to farming, locating on his present homestead, which he operated for his father "on shares" until 1886, when he purchased the property. He has maintained the place to the highest standard and has made not a few improvements of a permanent nature, including the erection of a large and substantial barn and tobacco shed, the raising of tobacco being one of the important branches of his agricultural enterprises. For about a decade Mr. Hartman operated a threshing outfit in the county, but he now gives his undivided attention to his attractive and model farm. He takes a lively interest in all that touches the welfare of the community and is essentially progressive and public-spirited in his attitude, while to him is accorded the fullest measure of popular confidence and regard. In politics he gives an unswerving allegiance to the Democratic party and he has been called upon to serve in the various township offices, including those of auditor and school director of his district, having held the latter office for nine years. Mr. Hartman was a delegate to the State Democratic convention, held in Allen town in 1896. He is now a candidate for county commissioner on the Democratic ticket. He was reared in the faith of the United Brethren Church, his wife being a member of the Reformed Church.

On the 5th of Dec., 1880, Mr. Hartman was united in marriage to Miss Julia Flinchbaugh, who was born and reared in York township, being a daughter of John and Julia (Flinchbaugh) Flinchbaugh, members of old and honored families of York county. Mr. and Mrs. Hartman have five children, all of whom remain beneath the home roof, namely: Idella, who is the widow of William E. Ness; Charles F., who is a cigarmaker by vocation; and Lillie, Elsie, and Jennings B.

DR. NATHAN C. WALLACE was born in Dover township Sept. 23, 1855, and is of Scotch and German descent. His paternal great-grandfather, Adam Wallace (Dec. 9, 1777-Nov. 11, 1858), and his wife, Barbara (Godfrey) Wallace (May 5, 1770-March 16, 1855), bought, May 18, 1811, for 57 pounds and 12 shillings, in gold and silver, a homestead of three acres and ninety-six perches, situated in Dover township about two miles east from Dover, and resided thereon for forty-four years. They were the parents of seven children: Elizabeth, married to John Sweitzer; Rebecca, married to Henry Heltzel; Catharine, married to Daniel Lehman; Nancy, married to Samuel Billet; Polly, married to Israel Hoffeins; Michael, married to Sarah Heltzel; and Daniel (Jan. 17, 1809-Jan. 22, 1879), who married Mary Bentzel (Jan. 13, 1807-July 14, 1868). The latter were the grandparents of the subject of this sketch, and they had eleven children: Adam, (Aug. 23, 1830-Aug. 6, 1876) married Mary Ann Billet; Catharine (Dec. 31, 1831) married Jacob Speidle; Barbara (March 17, 1833-Nov. 18, 1868) married Henry Mummert; Samuel B. (Dec. 7, 1836-Nov. 1, 1906) married Eliza Ann Keasey; Daniel (Sept. 4, 1838) married Matilda Rauhouser; Elias (March 18, 1840) married Mary Messerly; Mary (March 3, 1842) married Henry Shaffner; David (Dec. 2, 1843-May 2, 1865) was killed in the Civil war; Levi (May 20, 1847) married Anna Becker; Caroline (April 29, 1850) married Zacharias Seiple, and Henry (March 21, 1855-Nov. 24, 1881) married Salome Huber (May 22, 1833). Henry and Salome (Huber) Wallace are our subject's parents. They had six children: Nathan C., Alice J., Moses M., Lucy A., Howard H. and Emma S. The maternal grandparents of Dr. Wallace were Moses Huber (July 13, 1791-Oct. 9, 1860) and his wife Elizabeth (Gross) Huber (June 7, 1808-Feb. 3, 1834).

Dr. Nathan C. Wallace was married to Clara Ann Aughenbaugh, born May 30, 1863, who was a daughter of Samuel H. Aughenbaugh, who belonged to a well-known York county family. To this union have been born two children: Charles Chester (June 10, 1880), at present a student in Jefferson Medical College, in Philadelphia; and Mabel Florence (Aug. 9, 1882), a graduate of the State Normal School at Millersville, Pa., class of 1905, who is at present successfully engaged in teaching.

Dr. Wallace early in life manifested a great desire for knowledge. He attended the public schools of Dover and Conewago townships under the instruction of his father, who was a teacher. After attending a session at Union Seminary, New Berlin, Union Co., Pa., and another at a select school for boys at Mechanicsburg, Cumberland Co., Pa., he began to teach at a public school at fifteen years of age. For several years following his time was occupied alternately teaching during the winter and attending the State Normal School at Millersville during the summer, and he finally graduated from that institution of learning in the class of 1879. During the summers of 1880, 1881 and 1883, while studying medicine, he taught a select school in Dover for the preparation of teachers, and so successful was he that for a number of years nearly all the schools of Dover township were taught by "graduates of his college," some of whom are still in the profession after twenty-five years of continuous teaching. He entered Jefferson Medical College in the fall of 1881, and graduated from that institution in 1883. After taking a postgraduate course of one year in Philadelphia he located in the spring of 1884 in Dover, where he has been in continuous and successful practice to the present time among those who have known him from childhood.

The Doctor began life without any pecuniary advantages, but by dint of hard work and the practice of self-denial and economy worked his way through school and college, and won a competence in life. He is an active member and a past president of the York County Medical Society, and has served as a member of its board of censors. He was a member of the Dover town council and was borough treasurer for five years, and postmaster of Dover for eleven years. He is a member of the Board of Health and has served as delegate to County and State conventions a number of times. In politics he is a Republican, in religion a Lutheran, but conservative in both. He is a past president and a trustee of Washington Camp, No. 55, P. O. S. of A., located in Dover, and he is also a member of the Masonic fraternity.

HENRY A. BAIR, president of the People's Bank of Hanover, has been a prominent business man of that town for many years. From the prosecution of a trade he has arisen to his present honorable and responsible position in the commercial and financial world. He is a native of the borough of Hanover, where he was born Sept. 11, 1836, the son of John and Julia Ann (Snyder) Bair, and the grandson of Jacob and Jane (Zellers) Bair. The grandparents were natives of Maryland, from which State they migrated to Pennsylvania.

John Bair, the father of Henry A., was born in New Oxford, Adams county, Pa., in the year 1807; his wife, Julia Ann Snyder, was born in the borough of Hanover in 1814. In the earlier years of his adult life John Bair was by occupation a farmer, but later formed a co-partnership in the tanning business with George Nace, a prominent citizen of Hanover, who afterward disposed of his interest in the tannery to Geo. Thomas, with whom Mr. Bair continued business under the firm name of Bair & Thomas. They were large shippers of leather to Philadelphia, Baltimore and other Eastern markets, and continued a successful business until the death of Mr. Bair, the senior partner, which occurred in 1872, his wife surviving him ten years. In politics John Bair was a Whig and later a Republican. He was a consistent member of the Lutheran Church and for many years a representative on the school board from the borough of Hanover. To John and Julia Ann Bair were born four children, namely: Jacob, William, Henry A., and George.

Henry A. Bair was reared in his native borough and attended the public schools until the age of fifteen, when he learned the carpenter’s trade with Mr. Steffy at Hanover. His trade acquired, Mr. Bair traveled for a few years as a journeyman, working both at Baltimore and at Washington, D. C. Returning to Hanover he there engaged in the work of his trade. In 1860 he began the manufacture of cigar boxes and continued successfully until 1874, when he sold his manufactory to his son William Bair, and to his son-in-law, Charles Sourber. Mr. Bair became interested in the People’s Bank of Hanover soon after it was founded. In 1899 he was elected vice-president of the institution which active position he filled until January, 1904, when at the death of John C. Allewalt he was elected to the presidency of the bank. Mr. Bair is also president of the Hanover Building and Loan Association and is director of the Board of Mt. Olivet cemetery.

Henry A. Bair was married in 1858 at Hanover, to Margaret, daughter of Peter and Anna Balmerger, and to them were born two children—William A., now deceased; and Annie M., who married Charles Sourber, of Hanover. Mr. Sourber died in 1899, his widow and three children surviving. Mr. Bair is a prominent member of St. Mark’s Lutheran Church, of which he has served as elder since 1899. He is a leader also in the fraternal orders. He is a member of Patmos Lodge, No. 348, A. F. & A. M., of Hanover; Good Samaritan Chapter of Gettysburg, Pa.; Royal Arch Masons of Gettysburg; York Commandery, No. 21, Knights Templar, and the A. A. O. N. M. S. of Reading. His long and varied business experiences at Hanover, his clear judgment and firmness of purpose, his activity in various public enterprises making for the betterment of the community in which he lives, combine to constitute in him one of the most valuable citizens of Hanover and have won for him a place of high esteem in the hearts and minds of his many friends.

ELI FREE GROVE, the able and popular manager of Southern Pennsylvania for the Singer Sewing Machine Company, resides in a beautiful and hospitable home at No. 137 East Market street, York. Mr. Grove is a descendant in direct line from Hans Graff, a most notable pioneer of Pennsylvania, whose descendants, numbering many thousands, have been prime factors in the settlement and development of this Commonwealth. Especially, in a supreme degree, have the members of the family participated in the material, moral and religious uplifting of the County of York.

Peter Graff, an ancestor of Eli F. Grove, was in the days of the early pioneers a resident of Groff’s Run, Lancaster county, and the old mansion in which he lived still stands, in quite a remarkable state of preservation. Another progenitor was a patriot of the Revolution, furnishing large stores of ammunition to the Continental army, and thus entitling his descendants to membership in the Sons of the American Revolution.

Eli Free Grove was born on the old homestead, son of Henry Grove, a farmer of Hopewell township, York county. He was educated in the schools of the district. After spending a year in the West he returned to Pennsylvania, locating in the city of York, and becoming manager for the Singer Sewing Machine Company. For more than a quarter of a century in their employ, he has been steadily advancing, and since 1892 has been manager of the southern Pennsylvania district, which now has about thirty offices within its jurisdiction. For the effective discharge of its duties the position requires both tact and executive ability, and these qualities are possessed by Mr. Grove in an unusual degree.

Outside of his business and domestic relations Mr. Grove is interested in the work of the First Presbyterian Church, of which he is an earnest member. He is also connected with the Lafayette Outdoor and Country Clubs. In a word, he is a sociable, affable gentleman, conscientious and generous in his dealings with his fellows, an able, energetic business man and a model citizen.

Mr. Grove’s wife was formerly Miss Lucy Peeling, daughter of John Peeling, of York. Their only child, F. Marie, is a student in Miss Anable’s Finishing School, Broad and Pine streets, Philadelphia. Mrs. Grove also comes of American stock distinguished for its close connections with the historical events which mark the founding of the national life. Some of her ancestors held office under the Colonial government, thus entitling her to membership in the Society of Colonial Dames. Robert Peeling, her great-grandfather, in 1776 fought in the battle of Long Island as a member of the Pennsylvania Rifle Regiment, and was one of the signers of the petition addressed to the committee of safety of the Province of Pennsylvania, praying for an investigation of the grievances and hardships of his fellow soldiers. Such facts as these have entitled Mrs. Grove to place her name on the roll of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

SMITH. The Smiths of York county are of Scotch descent, but little is known of the family history prior to their emigration to Pennsylvania. Their name was, however, originally Macdonald, and the particular branch now represented in York county by James Herr and Calvin Grier Smith participated in that great exodus from Scotland to the North of Ireland in the time of James I. Near the close of the Seventeenth century, in the northeastern part of Ireland, dwelt the father of John Smith, the emigrant, who planted the family in Pennsylvania. Like many of the country folk of his day this ancestor, at that time known as Macdonald, was something of a blacksmith. Just before the battle of the Boyne, the horse of King William III, who personally led his troops in battle, cast a shoe. Macdonald, in the absence of a skilled farrier, offered to replace it. After his service for the king whose cause he espoused his neighbors called him “the Smith,” thus distinguishing him from the many others of the name Macdonald. Proud to have his name thus linked with that of his ruler, and in so great a battle as that of Boynewater, this sturdy son of the clan Macdonald accepted his new name, and handed it down to his posterity. The industry of the Scots in clearing homes in Ireland won them peace and prosperity, but their success invited the interference of the English government, which insisted on the payment of tithes to the Established Church and attempted to establish uniformity of ritual. As Presbyterians these attempts excited the Scots to rebel, and as the excations grew and the discriminations against them became more and more exciting, the sturdy colonists determined to seek new homes under the kindly Penn in the New World.

Among the first of these emigrants were John and Susanna Smith, who in 1720, after a long and stormy voyage, landed at Philadelphia, with their son, Robert, born at sea. In their party were some of the best Scotch settlers in Ireland, men of property and education, clergymen and scholars, whose learning and accomplishments did so much for the classical and theological schools of southeastern Pennsylvania, in which they became teachers. Pushing westward into Chester county, they took up lands in the hilly country of Uwchlan township, long known as the Brandywine settlement. With John and Susanna Smith came his sister Mary, who married Alexander Fulton, and moved to Little Britain, Lancaster county, and they became the parents of Robert Fulton, Sr., whose son was Robert Fulton, of imperishable fame. John Smith died in 1760, and his wife Susanna, in 1767. Their three older sons had sought homes elsewhere, so to their son Robert fell the homestead.

Robert Smith’s early life was doubtless like that of all other boys of his time and locality, and of it we have no record. In 1757 the public records show that Sergeant Robert Smith went to “Reading to be qualified.” This was during the war between the French and English, when the Indians all along the border were restless and aggressive. At the opening of the Revolution in August, 1775, he again comes into prominence by being placed in charge of the proposed defences to be sunk in the Delaware for the protection of Philadelphia. During the years he was in charge there he planned land fortifications, and in January, 1777, was one to advise with the Committee of Safety regarding the necessary defences. He was a member of the convention that, Sept. 28, 1776, adopted the first State constitution of Pennsylvania. On March 12, 1777, the Supreme executive council called him to the post of lieutenant of Chester county. This gave him the rank of colonel, and the onerous task of raising, arming and provisioning the military contingent of his district, the troops remaining under his command until they were called into active service. During the time he was county lieutenant he was elected, March 29, 1777, sheriff of Chester county, and March 31, 1777, justice of the peace holding the latter office a number of years. He was re-elected sheriff Nov. 21, 1778, but, owing to the conscientious discharge of his duties, incurred some unpopularity and was not again chosen to the office for five years. He was unimpeachable in the discharge of his duty, and his patriotism was so great that his own private fortune melted away in gifts to the soldiers, or their needy families. His work was well done, and there seemed, during the progress of the war, no thought otherwise. But after peace had been declared, those less patriotic than himself, who felt chagrined at the exactions made upon them, called his actions into question. He was summoned to appear before the Supreme executive council and removed from office March 6, 1786, but this action was reconsidered and he was reappointed on March 15, following. The enemies he had made were powerful, and they rallied again, succeeding in having his reappointment revoked March 21st. At the same time he retired from all his offices, except that of trustee of the State Loan Office, which he retained for a year. In 1785 he served in the State Assembly, and in 1787, at the age of sixty-seven, he retired to his farm. His death, in 1803, was caused by paralysis. A man of upright and firm character, though of genial manners, his long public career gave his word great weight, and he was often sought as an arbitrator in disputes, and as an adviser in times of trouble. He was a great reader, and was one of the foremost men of his day. In religion, a Presbyterian, he was an elder and pillar in the church of that stanch old patriot, Rev. John Carmichael. Daily reading of the Scriptures and prayer were a part of his routine, and a large portion of every Sunday was devoted to the study of the Bible and the Westminster Catechism. He owned two fine farms on the Conestoga.

On Dec. 20, 1738, Robert Smith married Margaret Vaughan, daughter of John Vaughan of Red Lion, Chester county; she died in Philadelphia in 1822, at the age of eighty-seven. Of their children, Jonathan was for many years connected with the First and Second United States Banks, and the Bank of Pennsylvania, as cashier; John, an ironmaster, was the owner of Joanna Furnace; Joseph was an iron and shipping merchant in Philadelphia; and Isaac was the sixth son. There are no records of the other children.

Isaac Smith, sixth son of Robert and Margaret (Vaughen) Smith, born July 20, 1773, grew to manhood in the stirring times of the early days of the republic. He inherited from his parents the sterling traits that characterized his race, and under the influences of a Christian home imbued the Presbyterianism of his ancestors, tempered with the broader charity that so marked his father's calm, even temper and genial manner. Like him, too, he was strict in the discharge of duty, and like him, died (Oct. 8, 1840) honored and respected of men. On April 19, 1804, he married Margaret Fleming; she was born Nov. 6, 1774, and died July 10, 1820. The following four children were born to them: Robert Washington is mentioned below; James Fleming, born Jan. 1, 1807, married Elizabeth, daughter of James and Elizabeth Schall, of York, Pa., and died Aug. 17, 1854; Jonathan Vaughan, born Feb. 22, 1808, died Sept. 28, 1828; and Samuel McKean, born May 21, 1812, married Eliza, daughter of John and Mary Kauffelt, at Wrightsville, Pa., and died Feb. 24, 1879.

Robert Washington Smith, eldest of the children of Isaac Smith, was born in Chester county, Jan. 10, 1805, and he died in Philadelphia, at the home of his son, J. Futhey, Oct. 21, 1884. He married Martha Herr, daughter of Rudolph and Martha Herr, of Hellam township, York county, and nine children were born to this union: (1) Henrietta Fleming, who married William Steel Boyd, had five children; Ida Martha, who died Aug. 31, 1887; William Smith, who married Lillian Pauline Zurlieh; Ella Mary; Anna Eliza; and Charles Robert. (2) James, died in infancy. (3) James Herr. (4) John Futhey, married Mary McFetrich. (5) Robert Wirt. (6) Calvin Grier. (7) Martha Herr, married Frank J. Magee, and has two children, Robert Smith and Martha Helen. (8) Margaret Fleming. (9) Charles Persifer, married Hannah Gertrude Kern, and has had four children: John Puthey, Charles Kern, Helen Gertrude (deceased), and Persifer.

The death of Robert Washington Smith, while on a visit to his son, was a sad loss to the community, and it caused profound sorrow. Although lacking less than three months of the four-score mark, his dignified bearing and well-groomed appearance, together with his unimpaired faculties, gave him the air of a much younger man. To most of the citizens of Wrightsville, where he had lived for half a century, he was known as ’Squire Smith, from his forty years’ service as justice of the peace, his commission being first signed by Governor Ritner, in 1835, and he resigned in 1875, because of advancing years. His boyhood was passed at Castle Fin, York county, and he was but a young man when he became identified with the best interests of Wrightsville. At the time the borough was incorporated in 1834, he was elected a member of the first town council, and was chosen its president.

In 1834, seeing the need of a newspaper, Mr. Smith founded the York County Star and continued its publication until in 1861, when all his employees enlisted in the service of their country, and he was obliged to suspend work. After the close of the war he sold the material to a stock company, and for a few years continued with the paper as editor. After the paper was purchased by Messrs. Magee & Smith, he still manifested a warm interest in its welfare, and was a frequent contributor to its columns.

On July 21, 1832, Mr. Smith professed faith, and united with the Presbyterian Church, and continued faithful and consistent in his membership. A constant and earnest student of the Scriptures, he was rigid in observing private devotions, as well as church attendance, and he was a great lover of sacred music. In his broad sympathy and deep comprehension, those laboring in the Master’s cause found in him an intelligent friend, who knew and felt the trials, the disappointments and the heartaches, as well as the holy joys, that attend the faithful devoted workers, striving to spread the beneficent story of the Gospel to all people. He filled various offices in the church, including that of ruling elder.

James Herr Smith, son of Robert Washington and Martha (Herr) Smith, was born in Wrightsville, Dec. 5, 1833. The village schools of his native town afforded him his only education, other than that he has acquired by self-study and in the great school of experience. He worked with his father on the Star, and at an early age entered the general store of his uncle, James Fleming Smith, then a prominent business man, for a mercantile training, after spending several years in a wholesale house in Philadelphia. After his marriage he worked at Wrightsville in the general store of Smith & Harris, until at the organization of the Wrightsville Iron Company, he became its cashier and bookkeeper. In 1863 he was appointed to a clerkship in the War Department, a position he resigned June 23d, after a brief service, to rejoin his family at Wrightsville, which place was captured by Gen. Gordon’s brigade of Confederates on Sunday, June 28. At that time Mr. Smith was clerk of the town council, and the burgess, James F. McGee, summoned the council to meet in the clerk’s office to consider what action, if any, should be taken, the enemy then being in advance upon York. While considering the question, Major Haller, of the United States army, with a small force, made up of State troops and invalid soldiers from the hospitals at York, gathered to guard the bridge across the Susquehanna, appeared before the council, and declared Wrightsville under martial law, at the same time appointing Capt. Samuel H. Mann provost marshal, and forbidding any action by the town council. All male citizens were summoned for duty in erecting barricades in the streets, and the women were asked to cook provisions for the troops. Mr. Smith was appointed assistant provost. At about three o’clock in the afternoon the enemy made an attack, shelling the town and forcing the Northern soldiers to retreat across the bridge, which they burned, together with considerable property on Front street. As they could not cross the river, the Confederates abandoned the town next day, and retreated to York, thence in a few days to Gettysburg, where they met defeat in the terrible battles there. During the shelling of Wrightsville, Mr. Smith, realizing that his home (a frame dwelling) would furnish little protection to his family, took his wife, children and sister to the brick dwelling of D. S. Cook opposite. These buildings were in the direct line of fire of a battery, and the shells fell within sixty feet. No one was injured by the artillery fire and but few soldiers were wounded in the skirmish at the rifle pits. Much alarm was felt while the enemy held the town and the flames from the burning bridge communicated to the neighboring buildings and lumber yards. The horses had all been taken across the river to prevent their confiscation.

Mr. Smith piled a wagon with a part of his furniture, clothing, etc., and pulled it to a safer place, where he was obliged to do lonely guard duty for some hours. He was questioned by the Confederates, but in no way molested, and later, when he had returned home, a number of them gathered on his porch for a social chat.

Ten years later, when Mr. Smith was living in Georgia, he found in his physician the colonel of one of the regiments in General Gordon's brigade, when Wrightsville was taken. During his earlier years in his native village, Mr. Smith was active in town affairs, serving, as above stated, as clerk of the council, and he was also secretary of the school board and district superintendent.

In the spring of 1871, as one of a firm representing a New York house, having large land and lumber interests in Georgia and Florida, Mr. Smith moved to the latter State, remaining a year at Panama, near Jacksonville, when he was transferred to Brunswick, Ga., to take charge of the office work there. He at once placed himself in touch with the life of his new home, especially in religious work, and in 1874 was ordained an elder in the Presbyterian Church there. In April, 1876, he brought his family back to Pennsylvania, he himself returning South in August. Yellow fever, that great plague of the Southland, broke out, and he was taken ill. He returned North to recuperate, and did not again go South until the following February (1877). Upon this occasion he remained at Brunswick until July, 1878. In 1884, the tide of business prosperity returned to the South, and at Brunswick was organized a national bank, of which Mr. Smith was made cashier. He accepted and the bank opened for business Feb. 1, 1884. It continued with considerable success until the panic of 1893, when it succumbed to the prevailing hard times. A reorganization was effected and, when it was reopened, Mr. Smith again became cashier, but severed his connection there-with Dec. 31, 1895, to become cashier for the Downing Company, dealers and shippers of naval stores and general supplies, with which firm he remained until the spring of 1899, when he resigned and rejoined his family in Wrightsville. Another bank in the South sought his services as cashier, but he declined.

On June 8, 1856, James Herr Smith was married to Caroline Dickenson Eberenz, who was born at Wellsboro, Tioga Co., Pa.: April 1, 1835, daughter of William and Mary Ann (Huber) Eberenz. The latter was a daughter of Samuel Huber, a native of Switzerland, who served as a surgeon under Napoleon, and who emigrated to the United States in 1819, settling in Tioga county, where he practiced until his death. His wife, Barbara, and two sons—Samuel (an inveterate hunter, who was eventually killed by wild animals) and Jacob (who died unmarried)—and two daughters—Mary Ann and Rosanna (Mrs. William Moyer)—accompanied him to America. To James Herr Smith and wife were born four children: (1) Marcia Eberenz married Rev. S. Henry Bell, D. D., of North Carolina, a chaplain in the United States army, who saw service in Cuba, and they have had three children: Marcia Parish, Merle, and Margaret Parish (who died Jan. 6, 1902). (2) Robert William married Mary O'Donnell, and has had eight children—Robert William, born Feb. 27, 1887; Roscoe Daniel, who died Aug. 18, 1889; Gwendolyn (Marie), born July 1, 1890; James Herr, born Oct. 31, 1891; Veronica, born Feb. 4, 1893; Estella, born Dec. 3, 1897; Aurea, born Aug. 20, 1899, and a daughter that died in infancy, in July, 1903. (3) Estella Mary, married (first) William D. Houston, of Savannah, Ga., and had two children—Neil and Carrie Smith; she married (second) Frank A. Deans, of Wellsboro, Pa. (4) Caroline Herr, died Jan. 9, 1893.

In his political faith Mr. Smith is a staunch Republican, and as a progressive, public-spirited man has always been keenly interested in the public affairs of whatever city has been his home. His love for his native Wrightsville has been strong, and he has been continually drawn back to York county.

LIEUT. ROBERT WIRT SMITH, son of Robert Washington and Martha (Herr) Smith, was born Nov. 27, 1839, and he died at Washington, D. C., Sept. 7, 1862, from a wound received in the second battle of Bull Run. He entered his country's service May 8, 1861, as a private in Company K. (Cookman Rangers), 5th Pa. Reserve Corps, commanded by the late Col. S. G. Simmons, "and was first in active service with his regiment and the noted Bucktails in Western Virginia, when the enemy threatened to annihilate the brave command of Col. (afterward General) Lew Wallace, where they were schooled in the hardships and sufferings of a soldier's life, and fitted prepared to do the duty the Reserves later so nobly performed, both on the Peninsula and in front of Washington. Shortly after the division was connected with the Army of the Potomac under General McClellan, the deceased was appointed by his colonel, drum major, and soon thereafter sergeant major of the regiment. In the latter position he passed through the seven-days' battles in front of Richmond; bearing himself so creditably that he was promoted for gallant conduct on the field of battle to a lieutenancy in Company G of the same regiment, in which position he was wounded while in the discharge of his duty at the second battle of Bull Run, Saturday, Aug. 30th, was left upon the field of battle, taken prisoner and paroled by the enemy and sent to Washington, where death closed his short though noble career."—Lancaster Express, Sept. 10, 1862.

Many acts of kindness and love are told of the late Lieut. Robert W. Smith, and among them are mentioned a few of the deeds that won to him the hearts of all about him. "Adjutant Mason, a warm friend, was wounded at the battle of White Oak Swamp and sent to the hospital after the battle was over. When the order came in the night for retreat and consequent abandonment of the hospitals with the sick and wounded, Sergeant Major Smith sought out the adjutant and prevailed upon him to make the attempt to retreat with our forces, promising to bring him off safely if he had to carry him. And he did carry him, through stream and over rough roads, and whenever the wounded man was too much exhausted to walk. And this devotion was rewarded, for the two came in among the stragglers far in the rear of their regiment, but safe. * * * He was a brave man, a thorough soldier, and one who knew and loved him will pronounce him the truest of friends."—Columbia Spy, Sept. 13, 1862.

Extract from correspondence to the Columbiana Spy, dated at camp near Waterford, Va., Oct. 21, 1862: "An incident this moment occurs to my mind, which exemplifies a trait in the character of the late lamented Lieut. Robert W. Smith, alike creditable to him whilst living and to his memory. At the battle of White Oak Swamp, when that unfortunate charge was made at the house, by the 5th, a number of prisoners were taken; among the number were two officers taken by Lieut. Smith. One of them afterward was shot, the other was taken and protected by Lieut. Smith at the risk of his life. This officer was so grateful to the Lieutenant that he gave him his sword, and offered and insisted upon him taking a very valuable gold watch, and a purse filled with money. All was rejected, Lieut. Smith believing that he had only done his duty toward a brave and chivalrous officer. Afterward, when again urged to accept some memento, he consented to receive a sword, which he forwarded to his father."

At Wrightsville, under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Department, Grand Army of the Republic, there was instituted Post No. 270, known as the Lieut. R. W. Smith Post, thus preserving to posterity the name of one of the bravest and truest of York county's soldiers.

'Twas on the field twice dyed with patriot blood,
A field that hath no music in its name.
Though aching bosom long will thrill with woe
When e'er 'tis heard—Bull Run—twas there fell one
How dear a son and brother none may know
Save those whose clustering hopes were round him twined.
How brave—was on the field of strife oft proved;
How faithful—knew the wounded friend he bore
Within his arms beyond the foe's reach:
How nobly generous—knew the conquered foe
By him protected from a rebel's doom,
Though at his peril—Magnanimity—
That conquered e'en the hating Southern heart,
Subduing it to honor for the true,
For Northern chivalry!

CALVIN GRIER SMITH, son of Robert Washington and Martha (Herr) Smith, was born Nov. 27, 1839, twin to Robert W. Until he was fourteen he attended the public schools, and then entered the general store of his uncle, James Fleming Smith, with whom he remained one year. The next year was passed at work in a foundry, and at the age of sixteen he entered the office of the York County Star, then owned by his father, to learn the trade of printer. Completing his apprenticeship, he followed his trade a few years, and in 1861, in company with W. S. Boyd, he engaged in mercantile pursuits for three years. During the Civil war he served one enlistment as musician in a Maryland cavalry regiment, and afterward was in the quartermaster’s department at Washington, D. C., connected with the 135th P. V. I. After the war closed he and Capt. Magee bought the York County Star, and changed its name to the Wrightsville Star. They brought it out up-to-date, and soon had a reliable, popular and newsy paper. About 1872 he sold to his partner, and engaged in the coal business, in which he continues. He was one of the incorporators of the Wrightsville & Chanceford Turnpike Company, of which he is secretary, and of the Wrightsville Cemetery Association, of which he is secretary and treasurer.

In December, 1860, Calvin Grier Smith was united in marriage with Sarah Anna Kauffelt, daughter of Henry Kauffelt. Four children blessed this union: Harry Kauffelt, secretary of the Susquehanna Casting Company, at Wrightsville; Robert Grier, who married Sarah J. Mackin, and has three children, Robert Mackin, Janet Frances and Anna Kauffelt; Amy Lanius; and Paul.

In 1874 Mr. Smith was appointed bank assessor by State Treasurer Mackey. President Harrison appointed him postmaster at Wrightsville when the office was in the fourth class. Increase of the volume of business placed it in the third class, and Mr. Smith received a second appointment for four years. He has always been a Republican, his first vote being cast for Abraham Lincoln. Fraternally he belonged to the Royal Arcanum. In his religious views he has not departed from the faith of his fathers, and is a stanch Presbyterian, as is also his wife.

VIRTUE C. GROVE, the oldest resident of Lewisberry borough, and a veteran of the Civil war, was born Jan. 12, 1827, in Lewisberry, son of Samuel and Hannah (Ruchart) Grove.

Samuel Grove, the grandfather of Virtue C., was born in Germany, near Holland, where he was a large land owner. He came to America, landing New York, and emigrated to Lancaster county, where he followed gunsmithing and manufactured edged tools in Fairview township, near Lewisberry borough. At the time he built his shop (1790) there, the Indians were still numerous. He died in Fairview township, and was buried at the Lutheran Church.

Samuel Grove, son of Samuel, was born Aug. 30, 1782, in Lancaster county. He came with his father to York county, and learned the trade of a gunsmith, becoming very skillful, and following that trade until his death. In 1821 he built the house in Lewisberry now owned by Dr. H. A. Harding, and resided in it until his death. It is still very substantial, and is considered one of the best in Lewisberry for its age. Mr. Grove was buried in Fairview township at the Lutheran Church. On Nov. 11, 1866, he married Hannah Ruchart, and she died in Lewisberry township, and is buried at the Emanuel cemetery in Newberry township. The children born to this worthy couple were: Catherine married Virtue Clark, and died in Indiana; George died at the age of seventy-one years; Abraham died at Lewisberry, at the age of twenty-two years; Susanna married Jacob Howerton, and resides at Pittsburg, Pa.; John died unmarried at Lewisberry; Yinger married Julia Bell, and died at Lewisberry; Samuel died aged ten years; Hannah died at the age of twelve; Samuel married Katie Ann Petrow, and died at Shepherdstown, Cumberland county; Virtue C.; Annie married Jacob Welsh, deceased, and lives in York; and Matilda married Wilson Zimmerman, of Chicago.

Virtue C. Grove received a very scant education in his youth, attending the school only three short terms, but he has educated himself, and is now one of the best posted men of the community. At the age of sixteen he engaged in lumbering at Cherry Tree, Ind., and followed rafting for about thirty-two years along the Susquehanna river. Mr. Grove can tell in a very interesting way many incidents and anecdotes of the early rafting days. Mr. Grove sold his lumber along the river at various points, and in this way accumulated the means wherewith to build a fine brick home. This was in the year 1860, the same year that he was married to Angeline Kruger, who was born in 1837, daughter of Henry and Anna Mary (Solders) Kruger, of York county.

In 1863 Virtue C. Grove enlisted in Company G, 166th P. V. L., as a drummer, and was in service nine months. In 1864 he re-enlisted in Company D, 20th P. V. I., again as a drummer, and this time was out for one year. As a result of exposure to all kinds and conditions of weather, Mr. Grove is deaf in one ear, and the other is slightly affected. Mr. Grove intended enlisting to go to the Mexican war, but listened to the entreaties of his aged mother, of whom he was the sole support, and changed his mind. Since 1866 Mr. Grove has lived a retired life in the home which he built in 1860. Mrs. Grove is highly educated and a very cultured lady, and is very fond of good literature.

The children born to Virtue C. Grove and his wife were as follows: Luther, born Nov. 13, 1860, died Aug. 19, 1889; Clara, deceased; born Aug. 16, 1862, married Logan Rife; and Anna Mary, born July 29, 1866, died Oct. 27, 1893. Mr. and Mrs. Grove adopted Miss Pearl Shadt when she was eight years old, and have watched her grow to womanhood under their tender care.

Mr. Grove is a staunch Republican, and votes his ticket straight. He has been called upon to fill numerous townships offices, among them being those of chief burgess, councilman, clerk of the board and inspector, all of which offices he has filled efficiently and honorably. Mr. Grove is also quite an athlete, and for a number of years was a champion skater, and even now many younger men would hesitate before they would engage him in a walking competition. Mr. Grove is one of the grand old men of Lewisberry borough, and his friends and admirers are countless.

ROSS FAMILY. Some time prior to the year 1723, and in advance of the great inflow of the Scotch-Irish from the North of Ireland to the American Colonies, in 1727, in company with a few pioneers as sturdy and venturesome as himself, there came to this country a young Scotch-Irishman by the name of Hugh Ross. Emigrating from Carrick-Fergus, County Antrim, Ireland, he settled at a point just a few miles west of the Susquehanna river, near Nelson's Ferry (now McCall's Ferry), in what was then Lancaster county, and now Lower Chanceford township, York county. He located his home on a part of the tract known as "Solitude," at a place known as "Ross Chance," under Letters Patent from Thomas and Richard Penn, signed and sealed by John Penn. This tract of land has remained in the possession of the family to this day, and is now the home of Hugh Ross, a great-great-grandson. From papers in the possession of the family the inference is that he was married before settling in York county. All that is known of his wife is that her christian name was Elizabeth, surname unknown.

Hugh Ross was the son of James Ross of Carrick-Fergus, Ireland, who died at that place at an unknown date. He had three brothers, who subsequently followed him to America: William, who located at Fagg's Manor, Chester county; James; and John Ross, who was a sea captain and settled in Connecticut. Hugh Ross died in February, 1780, and was probably buried in Guinea Church cemetery. The Letters Patent on parchment, from Thomas and Richard Penn, and his will, are still in the possession of the family.

Hugh Ross had two sons and three daughters, William, Joseph, Elizabeth, Janet and Mary. The second son, Joseph, married Jane Graham, and located near Delta, Peach Bottom township. They had three children, one of them, James, moved to Pittsburg, became a noted lawyer, and was a United States senator from Pennsylvania from 1797 to 1803. Elizabeth Ross married Alexander McCandless, of Peach Bottom township. Janet married Joseph Reed, of Chanceford township. Mary married John Purdon, whose son, John, was the author of Purdon's Digest.

William Ross, the first son of Hugh, was born in 1737, and was reared upon the home farm, where he passed his entire life and died on April 3, 1818, being buried in the Chanceford Presbyterian Church cemetery. He joined the 4th Battalion of York county in 1775 as a private, and was raised from the ranks successively to sergeant, lieutenant, captain, and major of same organization, and was elected colonel of the 6th Battalion of York county April 5, 1778. He saw active service around Amboy, N. J., New York City, and particularly at Fort Washington, where many of his troops were killed or captured, being taken prisoners and imprisoned in the prison ship "Jersey." In civic life he was always active, being a justice of the peace for twenty-seven years, and was also a representative in the Gen-general Assembly at Philadelphia in 1778. He was twice married. His first wife was Margaret Evans, of Cecil county, Md., who was born in 1757 and died Dec. 4, 1793. From this union there were born one son and two daughters. Hugh, Elizabeth and Sarah. Elizabeth married Col. Thomas Neil, of Fites Eddy, Lancaster county. Sarah married John Long, of Chestnut Level, Lancaster county. William Ross’ second wife was Mrs. Margarete Nelson, of Harford county, Md., who died Oct. 1, 1821. He had no issue by this marriage, but a son of Mrs. Nelson by her former marriage was the Rev. Alexander Nelson, who settled near Chambersburg, and became the ancestor of the Nelson family of that place.

Hugh Ross, the only son of William Ross, was born at the old homestead May 10, 1785.
His early life was spent on his father’s farm.
He intended making law his profession, but while attending school at Hugh Whiteford’s Latin School, in Harford county, he bit his tongue during a severe illness, which accident so affected his speech that, fearing he could never make a public speaker, he abandoned the study of law. He succeeded his father as justice of the peace, and, because of his knowledge of law, sound judgment and good common sense, he was known as one of the best counselors in the county. This office was held by him for forty years, and during that entire time his counsel was always on the side of a peaceful adjustment of difficulties, and he always urged a settlement without resorting to law. Like his father he served his county in times of war as well as in times of peace, being in the war of 1812. In the latter part of his life he moved from the old Ross homestead to an adjoining property owned by him and now known as the Keyser place, where he died on Aug. 31, 1873.

On June 25, 1829, Hugh Ross married Rebecca Glenn, of Harford county, Md., who was born Dec. 22, 1793, and survived him until March 18, 1877. They were both interred in Chanceford cemetery. To them were born three children, William Glenn, James Evans and Rebecca Isabel Heddington.

James Evans Ross, born Oct. 19, 1831, made Miriam E. Warren, of Delaware. He located in Mexico, Mo., where he became a prominent citizen, being president of the bank at that place, also an associate judge of Audrain county. He also had large landed interests in Texas. He died Jan. 4, 1900.
He had five children; Hugh, of Baird, Texas;
May, deceased; Etta, wife of W. W. Hubbard, of Chestertown, Md.; Julia, of Mexico, Mo., and Evans, wife of Bird Hix Mcgarvey, of Kansas City, Missouri.

The daughter, Rebecca Isabel Hedding-ton, born Oct. 22, 1835, married Harry Keyser, of Philadelphia, who located in Lower Chanceford township, near Airville. To this union were born four children; Harry, who died in infancy; Rebecca Glenn, wife of Rev.
C. B. Cross, of Mooredale, Pa.: E. Winchester, of Bridgeton, Pa., cashier of the First national Bank, of Delta, Pa.; and Katharine Wallace, wife of C. C. Smith, of Airville, Pennsylvania.

William Glenn Ross, the oldest son, was born at the homestead Sept. 29, 1830. He was educated in the public schools and at the Academy near Chanceford Church, after which he took a course at Chamberlain’s Commmercial College, in Baltimore. After completing his education he returned home and engaged in farming, being a close student of advanced methods, and was a successful farmer. He was also prominent in commmercial and financial life, being one of the promoters of the York & Peach Bottom railway, and remained a director in the corporation until his death. He was also a director of the First National Bank, of York, Pa., until his death, on Jan. 18, 1884. On May 28, 1863, he was married to Julia Ann Mc-Conkey, daughter of Major James McConkey, of Peach Bottom, Pa., the officiating clergyman being Rev. T. M. Crawford, of Stateville Presbyterian Church. She was born at Peach Bottom on Oct. 2, 1837, and died Dec. 30, 1868. Both she and her husband are buried in Chanceford Presbyterian Church cemetery, in which church they were earnest workers. To William Glenn and Julia Ann (McConkey) Ross there were born three children: Mary Rebecca, who died in infancy; Marian Woodside, and Hugh.

Marian Woodside, daughter of William Glenn Ross, was born Sept. 29, 1871, and on Oct. 17, 1900, married Joseph Roy Showalter, of Oxford, Pa. To them have been born two children, Julia McConkey, who died in infancy, and Evans McDonald. Mr. and Mrs.
Showalter now reside on a farm near Woodbine, Pennsylvania.

From the earliest history of the family, down to the present time, they have been Calvinistic in their religious belief, and have been earnest workers and conscientious supporters of their church. Hugh Ross, the second, was for many years and until his death a ruling elder in Chanceford Presbyterian Church. In political faith he was a staunch Republican and was an active supporter of his party, and his descendants to this day have been faithful followers of the principles of the Republican party.

PAUL WINEBRENNER, cashier of the Hanover (Pa.) Savings Fund Society, is distinctively a type of the successful business man. In his early boyhood days he breathed the atmosphere of an active mercantile life in the store of his father, a successful merchant, and before he had reached the age of nineteen years his experience in the business world was as wide as that of many men of twice his age. He had at that age already chosen his life work, and he has ever since devoted his business energies to the oldest bank in this part of the State. During his career of the past twenty years he has emerged from a modest clerkship by successive promotions to a responsible official position. As an efficient banker he has combined talent and industry in the acquisition of his present high standing in the community.

Mr. Winebrenner was born in the borough of Hanover, Feb. 7, 1866, son of Charles M., and Laura (Bange) Winebrenner. His mother was the daughter of William and Ellen (Bargelt) Bange, early settlers of York county. Of the eight children of Charles M. and Laura Winebrenner, five arrived at adult age, namely: Bertha M., widow of C. J. Smith; Nellie, wife of George Foney, a farmer; Harry, assistant postmaster; Addie, wife of Charles Myers; and Paul. Charles M., the father, who was born in 1837, was engaged in the hardware business at Hanover for a number of years, and is still living.

Paul Winebrenner received his education at Hanover, but he left school at the age of ten years. When a boy he assisted in his father's store during the summer months and at the age of eleven years he entered the store of J. L. Emlet of Hanover, with whom he remained for five years, thoroughly mastering the drug trade. Mr. Winebrenner was then for three years with the Adams Express Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company, as agent of the former, and operator for the latter (under D. W. Bangs). The next twelve months Mr. Winebrenner was employed as operator and station agent for the Baltimore & Harrisburg Railway Company under Superintendent H. D. Scott. In 1885 he accepted a position as clerk and bookkeeper in the bank of the Hanover Savings Fund Society, holding that place until 1891, when he was promoted to the assistant treasurership of the institution. In 1903 he was advanced to the position of cashier which he has since filled most acceptably.

In politics Mr. Winebrenner is a Republican and for two years he served as a member of the school board. He is prominent in the local fraternal orders, his affiliations including membership in Patmos Lodge, No. 348, F. & A. M.; Gettysburg Chapter, R. A. M.; Gettysburg Commandery, K. T.; and the Mystic Shrine at Reading. He is also a member of the P. O. S. of A.

Mr. Winebrenner was married Jan. 17, 1889, to Miss Katie Sumwalt of Baltimore, Md., daughter of Jacob D., and Katherine S. (Stanford) Sumwalt of that city. To Mr. and Mrs. Winebrenner have been born three children: L. Margaret, Charles Earle and Katherine. Himself and wife are active members of Emanuel Reformed Church of which he was for ten years deacon and secretary. The Winebrenner home is an attractive and well furnished residence at No. 440 Carlisle street, and the family is prominent in the social affairs of the community.

MORDECAI A. POSEY, M. D. In the death of Mordecai A. Posey, Chanceford township and York county lost one of its most energetic and honored citizens. He was born Jan. 24, 1854, on the Posey farm in Lower Chanceford township. During the first fifteen or sixteen years of his life he had the experiences common to most farmer boys, and when old enough to attend school, divided his time between work on the farm and study in the public school of the neighboring village. The days devoted to work each year were many more than those given to study, but he finished the course with credit. His thirst for knowledge was not satisfied by what he had learned when the limited curriculum of this school was finished, and he attended River Hill school, Lower Chanceford township, with the view of fitting himself for teaching. He taught school for five years—first in the Strinestown school, Conewago township, and next in Lower Chanceford township, and in the meantime having chosen the practice of medicine as his life work, he pursued the study of that science with Dr. B. F. Porter, and later, in 1882, graduated from Jefferson Medical College, at Philadelphia. He immediately began the practice of his profession, in which he was successful from the start. He built up a large practice at Collinsville, and stood well among the physicians of that part of the State. Dr. Posey's career affords a good illustration of the success that is certain to attend the man that selects a congenial business or profession, and keeps industriously at it.

Dr. Posey was greatly interested in matters educational, and at the time of his death, Oct. 27, 1904, was serving as school director in his second term. His was the largest funeral ever held in the section in which he had been a valued resident, it being over a mile in length, while 1,400 persons were at the house and Church services. Dr. Posey, while not an office-seeker, was quite active in the work of the Democratic party, of which he had been a life-long member. He was reared in the faith of the M. E. Church, and while not a member, was always a liberal contributor to the same.

Dr. Posey married in Chanceford township, in 1878, Miss Rebecca C. Wise, daughter of Henry Wise, a farmer of that township. Nine children were born to Dr. and Mrs. Posey, as follows: Daniel, in the employ of the American Telephone Company; David, who is attending a medical college at Baltimore; Mary, a teacher in the home schools; Maud M.; Clara M.; and B. Frank; and three, Henry H., Jacob R. and Edward H., deceased.

JOHN MYERS was born March 20, 1803, in Adams county, Pa., of German descent, and came to York in 1850. He was a farmer, and in York engaged in hotel-keeping until 1859, when he retired, renting his hotel to Mr. Frank Myers. He died Aug. 30, 1868. He was a captain in the State militia for twelve years. He was a Republican in politics, and served three years as county commissioner, and also in minor offices, being an efficient and faithful official. He and his wife and all their children were connected with the Lutheran Church. Mr. Myers was a devoted husband, a kind father and a respected and honored citizen.

Mr. Myers married Eleanor Hummer, who was born Feb. 5, 1810, in York county, of English descent and died Nov. 5, 1871. Both are buried in Prospect Hill cemetery, York. They had seven children, as follows: Solomon, who is mentioned below; Julia (Mrs. Smyser), born April 13, 1831; Harriet (Mrs. Mundorf), born June 23, 1834; Matilda (Mrs. Spangler and now the widow of Sanford B. Gleason), born Oct. 12, 1836; Leah H., born May 10, 1840, who died May 15, 1884; Sarah Ellner (Mrs. Brubaker), born Oct. 15, 1843; and Sarah Jane, born Nov. 5, 1848, who died Dec. 12, 1849.

CAPT. SOLOMON MYERS, in his lifetime one of the most highly esteemed residents of York, Pa., and one of the heroes of the Civil war, was born March 14, 1829, in Latimore township, Adams Co., Pa., son of John and Eleanor (Hummer) Myers.

Solomon Myers was reared to farming in Adams and York counties, following that calling until twenty-one years old. He received a good education, and for thirteen years was engaged in teaching in York county, nine years in the borough of York. He won his title during his service in the Civil war. He was not only one of the most gallant officers from York county, but was also one of those most honored and beloved by their comrades. His record reflects credit upon him both as a man and as a loyal, valiant soldier. In 1861, as a member of the Worth Infantry, of York, he was assigned to the 16th Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, as second lieutenant of Company A; was promoted to first lieutenant, and was mustered out after a service of three and a half months. Then he organized a company which became Company E, 87th Regiment, and of which he became captain. He served in all the engagements of his command except the battle of the Wilderness, when he was on detached duty, and was mustered out Oct. 14, 1864.

In 1861 Capt. Myers was elected a justice of the peace, but was then unable to serve on account of his military obligations. After the war, however, he took up the duties of that office, in which he continued to serve until his death, except for one term. He was also honored by his fellow-citizens by being elected to the office of alderman, from the Ninth ward, a position that he filled with efficiency and fidelity.

From 1882 until his decease he was engaged in dealing in pianos, organs and musical instruments generally, carrying a general stock from all the leading makers. Capt. Myers was a Republican in political sentiment, and his religious connection was with Zion Lutheran Church, of which he was an active member. His memory is cherished with that of other worthy citizens of York. He passed away Sept. 14, 1886, at the age of fifty-seven years, six months, and is buried at Prospect Hill cemetery.

Fraternally Capt. Myers was connected with the Free Masons, and served as treasurer of his lodge, and he also belonged to the I. O. O. F., in which he was likewise active, representing his own lodge in the Grand Lodge of the State.

On Dec. 8, 1872, Capt. Myers and Margaret A. Orwig, daughter of John and Nancy Fiddler (Waltmyer) Orwig, were united in marriage. Mrs. Myers' grandmother, Regina Fiddler, who came to America in girlhood from Sweden, was of noble birth. John Orwig was born June 6, 1823, and was a farmer of Shrewsbury township, also doing business as a commission merchant. His property continued in the possession of the family until after his death, which took place Jan. 31, 1882, when he was fifty-eight years old. He married Nancy Fiddler Waltmyer, who survived until Jan. 11, 1902, dying at the age of seventy-nine years; she was born March 29, 1823. They are buried at Shrewsbury. They were active in the U. B. Church, and he was a Republican in politics. Mr. and Mrs. Orwig were married Oct. 22, 1846, and the following children, were born to their union: Louisa Ann, born Aug. 8, 1847, who married Edward Gennville, a lumber dealer of Shrewsbury, York county; Margaret Amelia, born Jan. 12, 1849, the widow of Capt. Myers; Cyrus Otterbine, born April 24, 1851, a contracting carpenter of New Freedom, York county; and Annamias Valentine, born June 4, 1853, who has been trainmaster on the Pennsylvania railroad, Frederick division, for the past thirty years.

Mrs. Myers resides in a beautiful home in York, situated at No. 308 West Market street. Its erection was commenced by the father of the late Capt. Myers, the Captain purchasing and completing it, making it one of the elegant residences of this portion of the city. It is adorned with many rare articles of value and beauty, gathered by Mrs. Myers in her travels, including art treasures and curios from every quarter of the globe. To see and enjoy them in the countries from which they have been brought would require years of travel and the expenditure of thousands of dollars. After visiting almost every State in the Union Mrs. Myers in 1889 spent some time at Honolulu, in the Sandwich Islands. In 1891 she joined a party of friends with whom she traveled through nine countries of Europe, seeing the best they could offer to the leisurely tourist, and in 1900 she went over for the Paris Exposition, before returning making a tour of Scotland, Belgium, England and France. A woman of high intelligence, and possessing natural and cultivated faculties of observation, she has acquired much in her extensive journeys, and being endowed with fine conversational powers she is delightfully entertaining.

GEORGE W. KERR (deceased), a son of Mathew Kerr, Sr., was the eldest of the native born citizens of Wrightsville, where he first saw the light July 4, 1826. He was a successful contractor and builder, and, prior to his decease, had lived in retirement in Wrightsville for a number of years. Mr. Kerr attended the subscription and the public schools, and at seventeen years of age began to learn the carpenter's trade, serving a three years' apprenticeship with Solomon Zorbaugh. He was also a millwright, and nearly all his life had been occupied in the erection of buildings of various kinds, many of the fine structures in the township having been erected by him.

On Nov. 25, 1851, Mr. Kerr married, in Wrightsville, Jane Virginia Bahn, who was born in Hellam township, Sept. 8, 1820, and was educated in the village schools. Her parents, Jacob and Elizabeth (Libhart) Bahn, were both natives of Hellam township, and after their marriage removed to Marietta, Lancaster county. Later they came to Wrightsville, where Mr. Bahn was engaged in the lumber business and in farming. The last years of his life were spent in retirement, and he died Jan. 13, 1886. His wife survived him until June 4, 1894. Mr. Bahn was a Republican in political faith, and both he and his wife were members of the Reformed Church. They were the parents of the following children: Morgan L., of Bethlehem, Pa.; Jane Virginia, wife of George W. Kerr; Caroline M., widow of George K. Thomson, M. D.; Jacob, who married Julia Strawbridge, and died in York; and Susan, who married the late Andrew Watt, and is also deceased. The grandfather of Mrs. Jane Virginia (Bahn) Kerr, was Henry Bahn, a prominent citizen and prosperous farmer of Hellam township, where he lived and died. He married Catherine Morgan, whose father was killed in his own home by Hessian soldiers, enraged because he refused them whiskey.

Mr. Kerr had lived continuously in Wrightsville since his marriage, and several years ago retired from active business life. He cast his first vote for Polk, and had always been a staunch adherent of the Democratic party. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church. They had a family of six children, as follows: Ida L., who attended the Wrightsville public schools and York Academy, for some years was a teacher in Wrightsville and Spring Garden, and is now at home; Alice E., is Mrs. D. W. Wetzhofer, of York; Morgan B., of Columbia, Pa., married Adelaide Eck; George T., married Anna R. Miller, and agent for the Pennsylvania Railway Co., at Hanover; Glen W. is a telegraph operator of Chester county, Pa.; and Sally died in 1886, aged twenty-two years.

JACOB D. ZOUCK. Since January, 1890, Jacob D. Zouck has been president of the First National Bank of Hanover, Pa. The honor came to him at the age of forty-two—early in life, it may well be considered, for in the financial world the leaders are usually men of more ripened years. But Mr. Zouck had for eleven years previous been a director in the bank, and in addition had a wide experience in business affairs.

Mr. Zouck was born in Baltimore county, Md., May 19, 1857, the son of George C. and Ann Maria (Ditzler) Zouck, and in 1865 he removed with his parents to Hanover. His education was received in the public schools of that place, supplemented by an attendance at a private school. His business career began as a clerk in a dry goods store at Baltimore, Md. In 1876 he returned to Hanover and there embarked in business for a time. In March, 1898, Mr. Zouck was one of the incorporators of the J. W. Gitt Company, one of the largest dry goods concerns in this part of the State, of which Mr. Zouck is secretary and also a director. He is a member of the board of incorporators of Mt. Olivet Cemetery, and has served as its treasurer since 1883; and has been a director of the First National Bank since January, 1888.

The First National Bank was established Nov. 20, 1863, and chartered Jan. 5, 1864. The original capital was $50,000, which was increased to $100,000 March 14, 1864, and to $200,000 April 25, 1865. Jacob Forney was elected the first president Nov. 5, 1863. Dr. J. P. Smith became president in January, 1875; Henry M. Schmuck, Jan. 19, 1881; Vincent Obold, Jan. 18, 1888; and, as above stated, Jacob D. Zouck in January, 1890.

Mr. Zouck was married in 1884 to Minnie F. Hauer, of Hanover, daughter of Rev. D. J. Hauer, D. D., a prominent Lutheran minister. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Zouck, a daughter, who died in her eighth year; and a son, George Hauer, a student. Mr. and Mrs. Zouck are prominent members of St. Mark’s Lutheran Church, of which he is a trustee and treasurer. Mr. Zouck is also a director of the Theological Seminary at Gettysburg and a member of the Home Mission Board of the Lutheran Church of America. His residence is a substantial brick structure, with attractive surroundings, and is modern in all its appointments.

JOHN S. KEECH, one of the oldest justices of the peace in the country, and still ably filling the duties of an office he has held for half a century, is one of the strong men of his township. He was born March 25, 1824, in Lower Oxford township, Chester county, Pa., son of David H. and Magdalene (Patton) Keech, the latter a daughter of James Patton, who saw hard service in the War of the Revolution. David Keech was a son of Nathaniel, who died in 1841, aged seventy years.

When John S. Keech was seven years old his parents located in Lancaster county, and there he received a common school education. He was but nineteen when he came to York township, York county, and he has since resided there, except for the period he was steward of the county almshouse, being appointed to that position in 1869, and remaining there continuously until 1881, except for the years 1874-75. That he administered the affairs of that institution in a highly creditable manner is evidenced by his long incumbency. In 1854 he was elected county auditor, and, as stated above, has been justice of the peace for fifty years, his present term expiring in 1908. He is now more than four score years of age, but is still as active and alert as men many years his junior. He easily reads without the aid of glasses, and all his faculties are equally preserved. He is a familiar figure in the township, and his genial smile and pleasant manners have won him warm friends among all classes and all ages, little children in particular claiming his attention.

On April 4, 1847, Mr. Keech was united in marriage to Mary Ann Weitkamp, daughter of Charles and Louisa (Bierman) Weitkamp, both now deceased. Mrs. Keech died Aug. 28, 1900, and was buried in the Union cemetery at Spry. Their children were: Charles F., who married Annie Immel, and lives at York; William H., of York, who married Emma Ahrens; Albert J., who married Amanda Akins, and is a passenger conductor on the Pennsylvania railway, living in Philadelphia; John Edward, a mechanic at York, who wedded Clara Merkel; Jerome H., of York; James J., a carriage-maker of York, who married Carrie Lesh; David Hays, a Moravian minister located at Coopersburg, Pa., who married Lizzie Cruickshank; and Harry E., of Elizabethtown, Lancaster county. Mr. Keech is a member of the Moravian Church, and for some six years held the office of elder. He is well posted on current events, and is especially interested in public schools. In his youth he taught ten terms in York county and one term in Lancaster county.

DR. GEORGE W. METZGAR, for twenty-five years a physician in Thomasville, but now a resident of Eberton, was born in Manchester township, Feb. 8, 1853, son of Solomon and Rebecca (Bower) Metzgar.

John Metzgar, his paternal grandfather, was also a native of Manchester township, was educated there in the common schools, and passed his life on a farm in that locality. He is buried in the graveyard of the Quigley Church. His children were: Zacharias, who died at York, and is buried at Quigley Church; Ella, who married John Baker, and died in York; Maria, who married Mr. Rupferd, and lives in Illinois; Solomon; Harriet, Mrs. Shettle, of York; David, who married Miss Harriet Rupferd, and died in Newberrytown, York county; and John, who died in Manchester township.

Solomon Metzgar was born in Manchester township, and attended the public schools there. He remained at home until his marriage to Miss Rebecca Bower, daughter of George Bower and then settled on his own farm in the same township. He survived but a few years longer, however, and was but twenty-six years old when his death occurred. He, too, was buried at Quigley Church. In politics he was a Republican, though not active in party work, and religiously was a member of the Lutheran Church. His widow is still living in Manchester borough. She was left with three children, namely: John, unmarried, and living with his mother (by trade he is a carpenter); George W.; and Emma, at home.

Dr. George W. Metzgar attended the public schools of Manchester borough until he was fourteen years of age, and spent the next two years at the Millersville State Normal, and then returned home to learn cigar making. For nearly five years he was thus employed, while during the last year he attended night school also, doing preliminary work for the study of medicine, which he had determined to pursue. For two years he studied with Dr. John B. King, in Manchester borough, and then spent two years more in the Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia, from which he received his degree in 1876. Dr. Metzgar prepared to establish himself in Weigelstown, but after only a month there, decided, in view of the death of Dr. Christian Pickering, to locate at Thomasville instead. During his quarter century in that place, he built up a splendid practice all through Jackson township.
In April, 1902, however, he removed to Eberton, erected a beautiful home on Market and Adams streets, and has since been practicing there with continued success.

Dr. Metzgar was married, in 1877, to Miss Elizabeth Metzgar, daughter of Abraham and Yost Metzgar, of West Manchester township. Seven children have been born to this union, as follows: Almina K., a graduate of the Normal school at Shippensburg, who is teaching in York; John Lee, who died at the age of four, and is buried in Jackson township; Sallie Rebecca, who taught three years in York county, and then married E. H. Musser, of Eberton; Elizabeth, Mrs. Mervin Bupp, of West Manchester township; Emma; Mary; and George, who died at the age of seven months, and is buried in Jackson township. Dr. Metzgar is a Democrat in his political faith, and has served on the school board of Jackson township, and West York. He is a member of the Lutheran Church of York. A skilled physician, he has, during his long years of service, attained a position of eminence in his profession and is widely known.

JOSEPH STONER is a retired farmer and tobacco dealer of Hellam township, where he was born, and he has passed his life on the old family estate. Details of the family history are given elsewhere.

Joseph Stoner (1), father of Joseph (2), a son of Christian Stoner (mother's family name, Herr), was born in the old mansion house Sept. 5, 1802. His entire boyhood was passed on the family homestead, employed in farm work. As a young man he tried milling for a time, but concluded in favor of farm life, and for thirty-five years he was thus occupied. He was a man of unusual intellect, a fine mathematician, and, in his younger days, was very successful as a school teacher. After his marriage he lived a short time on mill property in Hellam township, and then for five years on a farm near York. On the death of his father he returned to the home farm, where he passed the remainder of his days. He built the house now occupied by his son, and passed many of the later years of his life in retirement.

Joseph Stoner (1) married Barbara Sprenkle, who was born in 1806, in West Manchester township, daughter of George and Nancy (Sherrick) Sprenkle. Her mother's father, a Mr. Sherrick, was proprietor of the Margaretta Furnace, and was also a large land-owner in West Manchester township. George Sprenkle died on the farm now owned by Harvey Sprenkle, a 200-acre tract containing good hickory timber and lime-stone quarries. Mr. Stoner was an old-time Whig, and later joined the Republican party. He never cared for office, and would not allow his name to be used as a candidate, but was once forced to accept township office. He and his wife were active members of the Mennonite Church. She died in 1876, he surviving her four years. Their children were as follows: (1) Christian married Rebecca Landis, and died in December, 1876, in Hellam township; he established the lime-burning and milling business, and warehouse at Stoner Station, now carried on by a relative, John Stoner. (2) Nancy is the widow of Henry Houser, and lives at Stony Brook, York county. (3) Joseph (2) is mentioned below. (4) Barbara married Michael Moore, for over forty years a miller near Ironville, Lancaster county, now living in Lancaster.

Joseph Stoner (2) was born on his father's farm in Hellam township, and attended the township public schools until he was twenty years old. From early boyhood he worked on the farm, and became familiar with all the details of agricultural work. His father was very deaf, and from the time he was fifteen years old Joseph took charge of all his business. In 1881 Mr. Stoner became a dealer in leaf tobacco, and ten years later built his present warehouse. In 1901 he retired from active mercantile life and now devotes his time to the superintendence of his extensive farming and timber interests.

On Sept. 12, 1872, in Lower Allen township, Cumberland county, Mr. Stoner married Elizabeth C. Best, daughter of Martin and Catherine (Eberly) Best. They have two children: Edward B., who married Flora Strickler, and lives in Hellam township; and Norman Joseph, unmarried. After his marriage Mr. Stoner built his present home on a portion of the mansion-house farm, which he owns. He is a Republican in politics, and has served several terms as township auditor, being also a director in the First National Bank of Wrightsville. In religious faith he adheres to the Mennonite teachings in which he was reared.
BENJAMIN F. LEBENIGHT, a prominent business man of Red Lion, Windsor township, York county, and senior member of the firm of Lebenight & Ferree, dealers in agricultural implements, was born Nov. 28, 1862, in Chanceford township, near Brogueville, son of John and Elizabeth (Howard) Lebenight.

Samuel Lebenight, grandfather of Benjamin F., was a farmer who died in Hellam township. His son, John, was born in Lower Windsor township, and after marriage removed to Chanceford township. John Lebenight died in Windsorville, in July, 1897, aged seventy-eight years, while his wife still lives, being now in her eighty-seventh year. John Lebenight was a consistent member of the United Evangelical Church, in whose faith he died. In politics he was a Republican.

Benjamin F. Lebenight was reared in the public schools, being taught first by Miss Bigler, deceased (who became the wife of Joseph N. Reed), and at the age of sixteen years he finished his education under Dr. Bacon. Mr. Lebenight was reared to an agricultural life, and this he followed until his eighteenth year, when he learned the painter’s trade, which he pursued for eight years in different parts of the county. He was then employed by Reuben Sprenkle of Red Lion as traveling salesman, remaining with him for two years, at the end of which time he bought his employer’s business. He then formed a partnership with A. W. Shenberger, and after the latter’s death, conducted the business alone for a period of about six years. Mr. Lebenight then formed his present connection with Mr. Ferree.

Mr. Lebenight was married in 1884, in Chanceford township, to Miss Mary Shenberger, whose father was Jacob Shenberger and whose mother, before marriage, was a Miss Smeltzer. One child, Walter A., has been born to this union. Mr. Lebenight is a stockholder in the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Red Lion. In his religious views he is connected with the Reformed Church. In his political sympathies he is a stanch Republican, and is now serving his third term as school director of the borough. Mr. Lebenight is connected fraternally with the Knights of Pythias, of which he is past chancellor commander.

DAVID E. WINEBRENNER, Sr. With the canning industry of Hanover the name of Winebrenner is most intimately associated. Thirty years ago David E. and his brother established there a canning business, which he has continued to the present time. It is an industry which under modern conditions has had a wonderful growth—a growth which was foreseen by Mr. Winebrenner, and which he encouraged and stimulated by arousing an interest among the farmers of the vicinity and inducing them to raise the vegetables sufficient to supply a large work of this nature.

The Winebrenner family has for many generations been engrained upon the soil of York county. Many years previous to the Revolutionary war, the Winebrenner ancestor of the county migrated from Germany. Peter Winebrenner, the grandfather of David E., was an early settler of Hanover and there for a number of years was engaged in the lumber business. He was a member of the German Reformed Church, and in politics was an old-line Whig. He married a Miss Mary Bargelt, and of their family of children, Henry, the father of David E., was born in 1807.

Henry Winebrenner acquired the saddlery and harness trade and later carried on an extensive tanning business. This manufacture he began in 1845 and continued it successfully until within a short time of his death in 1884. He married Sarah F. Forney, who was born in Hanover in 1805, the daughter of Adam and Rebecca (Shriver) Forney. To Henry and Sarah F. Winebrenner were born six children, namely: Peter F.; David E.; Mary J., wife of H. Wirt Shriver, Union Mills, Carroll county, Md.; Sarah R.; Martha C., at home; and Henry C., of Baltimore, Maryland.

David E. Winebrenner, the second son, was born at Hanover in August, 1839. He received a good common-school education in his native town, supplemented by instruction at a select school. His school days ended, the boy began his business career as an assistant to his father in the tanning business, remaining with him until 1874, when, as stated above, he saw in the canning industry the promise of a larger success and, with his brother, founded the establishment, which until 1883, under the firm name of Winebrenner Bros., remained an active factor in the industrial life of Hanover. In that year the business was closed out, and in 1896 the firm of D. E. Winebrenner Company was formed, D. E. Winebrenner, Jr., being admitted to the firm. The company put in new stock and machinery and engaged actively in the canning of fruits and vegetables. The old building was remodeled and new ones added, until the establishment was recognized as one of the best equipped in that section of the country. By interesting the farmers to grow and supply vegetables, the company is now in the enjoyment of a large and profitable business. During the busy season they employ a large number of hands to meet their heavy demands. Their products have a high standing in the trade and among the consuming public, and are shipped to the various States of the Union.

Mr. Winebrenner was married in 1864 to Eliza B. Shriver of Carroll county, Md., the daughter of Andrew K. and Catherine Wirt Shriver. To David E. and Eliza B. Winebrenner have been born three children, viz.: Helen S., M. Katharyn, and David Jr. Helen S. married C. J. Delone, a prominent attorney of Hanover. M. Katharyn is the widow of William Solliday, of Hanover, by whom she has one son, David Shriver Solliday. David E., Jr., is a member of the firm of D. E. Winebrenner Co. On April 14, 1808, he married Amelia D. Wirt, daughter of R. M. Wirt, president of the Hanover Savings Fund Society, and to them have been born three children: Robert E., Helen and Constance.

In politics David E. Winebrenner is a Republican. In 1891 he was elected chief burgess of Hanover, which office he acceptably filled for two terms. Himself and wife are members of the Emanuel Reformed Church. He has served the congregation as a deacon and for a number of years he was superintendent of the Sunday school. During the Civil war Mr. Winebrenner was one of the emergency men of Company I, 26th P. V. I., and he is now a member of Major Jenkins Post, No. 99, Grand Army of the Republic.

BENJAMIN KISSINGER was born Jan. 31, 1832, in Spring Garden township, son of William Kissinger and grandson of Conrad Kissinger. His death, on March 8, 1902, at his home at No. 443 East Prospect street, removed one of the progressive and public-spirited citizens of York, a man of great force of character, and well known for his traits of thrift, perseverance and energy.

Conrad Kissinger came from Germany and settled in Spring Garden township, York Co., Pa., where he spent his life employed in a brickyard. His son, William Kissinger, was for many years engaged in distilling with Jacob Brilinger. He married Rosanna Swartz, who died at the age of fifty-nine years, and he died in Columbia, Lancaster county, both he and his wife being buried in Prospect Hill cemetery. Their children were: Jacob, of Dayton, Ohio; William, who died at Mountville, Lancaster Co., Pa.; Maria, who married a Mr. Slusser and died in York; Matilda, of Columbia, Pa.; Elizabeth, widow of John Snodiker, living in York; Conrad, in the West; Benjamin; Annie, living in York; John, of Missouri; Rebecca, who lives in the West; and Philip, who married Emma Freed, and lives in York.

Benjamin Kissinger received a common school education, and learned the blacksmith's trade with David Kissinger. He then engaged in the manufacture of brick, in which he very successfully continued all his life, having decided to retire from active business at the time he was called away. He is buried in Prospect Hill cemetery. On April 10, 1852, Benjamin Kissinger was united in marriage with Caroline Adams, born April 24, 1834, daughter of Oliver and Catherine (Pierce) Adams, the former of whom was a carpenter by trade, which occupation he followed in York and at Diehl's Mills, York county. He died in East York at the age of forty-eight years, his widow dying at the age of seventy-four, and they are both interred in Prospect Hill cemetery. Oliver Adams and his wife were the parents of the following children: William, deceased; Catherine, deceased; Sarah, who married F. Idle, of the West; Annie, wife of Conrad Boyer, of East York; Hiram, deceased; Caroline, the widow of Mr. Kissinger; Agnes, wife of Adam Blosser, of East York; and Amanda, the widow of Marcellus Freed, living in East York.

To Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Kissinger the following children were born: Alfred, who died at the age of three years, six months, thirteen days; Mary Louisa, the widow of Frank Emig; Sarah Bell, the wife of George Young, of East York; William Benjamin, who died when eleven months old; Emma Jane, wife of E. Syler, of East York; John P.; C. Grant, who died at the age of one year, ten days; Annie Kate, who died when eight months old;
Howard Augustus and Sevilla, twins, the latter of whom is the wife of George Bush, of East York; Stewart Henry, who married Mary Heilman, and is employed with his brother in the brick manufacturing business, making his residence at East York; Charles H., who died when ten days old; and Caroline Estella, the wife of Elwood McSherry, of York.

Benjamin Kissinger was a lifelong Republican and a stanch supporter of the principles of that party. He was a faithful member of Christ Lutheran Church, in which he had been deacon for six years. Mrs. Kissinger resides at their home in York, at No. 443 East Prospect street.

N. ALLEN OVERMILLER, M. D., engaged in the practice of his profession at East Prospect, is a native of York county, having been born in Loganville, Nov. 9, 1866, son of Michael and Elizabeth (Kroh) Overmiller, both of German lineage.

Michael Overmiller was born in Hopewell township, York county, and was there reared and educated. Having learned the mason's trade in his youth he devoted his attention to that vocation for a term of years, after which he was a successful merchant in the town of York for the long period of thirty years. He is now living retired in that place, where he is held in high esteem by all who know him. In politics he is a Republican, and his religious faith is that of the United Evangelical Church. His parents were natives of Germany, whence they emigrated to America and took up their residence in Hopewell township, York county, Pa., where they passed the remainder of their lives. The mother of the Doctor was likewise of German genealogy and was born at Glen Rock, York county, while she died in 1885, at Glatfelter's Station, where the family were residing at that time. Of the children of Michael Overmiller and wife Miss Amanda remains with her father in York; Charles, deceased, married Amelia Herbst, of Glen Rock, who survives him, as do their two children, Charles and Ethel; Mary is the wife of Albert Glatfelter, of Hanover Junction; N. Allen is the East Prospect physician; Jennie is the wife of Harry Groft, of Seven Valley, York county; and James, who resides in York, married Mary Stine.

Dr. Overmiller secured his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools of his native county, and depended upon his own exertions to a large extent in securing his further academic and professional training. After leaving the public schools he was for one year a student in Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, and when seventeen years of age removed to New York City, where he completed a course in pharmacy, thereafter remaining in the metropolis for a period of nine years and being employed as an assistant to Dr. Charles Rice, then city chemist and one of the leading pharmaceutical scientists of the United States. In 1893 Dr. Overmiller matriculated in the Baltimore (Md.) Medical College, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated in the class of 1896, with the degree of M. D. He then served one and one-half years as intern in the Long Island City Hospital, where he gained valuable clinical experience. At the expiration of his internship the Doctor returned to his old home in York county and established himself in the practice of his profession at Yoe, where he remained until 1901, when he came to East Prospect, where he has gained distinctive prestige and popularity in his noble vocation, his practice being of a general order and ramifying over a wide area of territory. He is a member of the York County Medical Society, the Pennsylvania State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. Fraternally Dr. Overmiller is affiliated with the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, being identified with the local organization at East Prospect; with the lodge of the Mystic Chain at Yoe, of which he is past commander; and with the Knights of Malta at York. In politics he gives an unswerving allegiance to the Republican party, and both he and his wife are devoted members of the United Evangelical Church, in the various departments of whose work they take an active interest. The Doctor has never been ambitious for public office, but has rendered effective service in various positions of local trust, including that of school director.

At Yoe, York county, June 19, 1897, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Overmiller to Cordelia Upp, of Wrightsville. She was born and reared in that county and is a daughter of Jacob and Sarah J. (Flory) Upp. Dr. and Mrs. Overmiller have three children, namely: Stanley Quay, Roy A., and Elwood S.
WILLIAM DIETZ, Sr., was born on the farm which he now owns, in Hellam township, Aug. 9, 1829. As noted elsewhere, the American ancestor of the family was the great-grandfather of William, George Dietz. Through his son George, and his grandson, also George, William Dietz traces his lineage.

George Dietz, father of William, was born Jan. 29, 1791, on the farm on which his son now lives. He married Christina Blessing, who was born in Hellam township, Oct. 12, 1794, daughter of Jacob Blessing; and there died March 28, 1841. He continued to reside on the ancestral acres all his active life, and died at the home of his son Frederick, in September, 1863. His wife died March 28, 1841. Both were members of KretzCK Creek Reformed Church. Mr. Dietz was a Democrat in politics, and held several township offices. His five children were as follows: Mary Ann, born Dec. 19, 1816, who died young; Elizabeth, born March 30, 1819, who married Jacob Strickler, and died in Hellam township; Frederick, born Oct. 26, 1821, a farmer of Hellam township, who married Martha Strickler (deceased); George, born Jan. 10, 1826, who married Catherine Bowman (deceased) and lives in Hellam township with his son George; and William, born Aug. 9, 1829, who is mentioned below. Jacob, a brother of George Dietz, was a contractor, and built the old court house at York, which preceded the present one.

William Dietz commenced his education in the subscription school at Kretz Creek Church, and his first teacher was Jacob Landis; his father paid fifty cents a month toward the support of this school. Later he attended the free school, which is now known as Rudy's, graduating at eighteen under Mr. Haugh. As a boy he worked in the fields with his father, using the cradle and scythe. When he reached the age of twenty-one his father paid him regular wages of $10 a month. He remained at home after his marriage, and on the death of his father bought the farm, which now contains 102 acres, a portion of the original tract having been sold. Mr. Dietz retired from active life in the spring of 1904, after having been engaged in farming since 1857.

On Nov. 18, 1856, William Dietz married Caroline Bahn, who was born Jan. 29, 1834, on what is now the Benjamin Strickler farm in Hellam township. She was a daughter of David and Rachel (Whitman) Bahn. David Bahn was a half brother of Adam, father of Rachel Bahn, who wrote a history of the Bahn family. Mr. and Mrs. Dietz are the parents of the following six children: Emma Florence, widow of David Stoner, who lives in Hellam; Howard Bahn, who died on his farm in Windsor township in 1902, his widow, Sarah (Miller) Dietz, living in Hellam; Mary Jane, who is Mrs. Albert Emig, of Hellam township; Lizzie E. and Annie C. (twins), who are at home; and William H., who married Ella, daughter of Alfred Bixler, and lives on the home farm. The Dietz family are all members of the Kretz Creek Reformed Church, in which Mr. Dietz has served as elder and deacon. He joined the church when he was seventeen, and his wife became a member at about the same age. Mr. Dietz donated the land on which the new Trinity Reformed Church is built. He has been a Democrat all his life, casting his first vote in 1852 for Pierce, and has filled several minor township offices. Mr. Dietz is a fine-looking old gentleman, with a heavy head of white hair, and a clear, ruddy complexion.

W. M. GROVE, residing on his farm of 111 acres in Chanceford township, was born on the homestead farm in Windsor township, May 23, 1841, son of Matthew and Mary (Gemmell) Grove. His grandfather owned a great deal of land in the vicinity of Conrad's Cross Roads, and Matthew Grove, the father of W. M., worked this land.

After his marriage Matthew Grove bought a farm in Windsor township, where he resided until his death in 1880, in his eighty-seventh year. Mr. Grove was a member of the United Presbyterian Church, and an elder in the organization at Guinston for many years. In his early political sympathies he was a Whig, later becoming a Republican. His wife, who was Mary Gemmell, was born on her father's farm in Chanceford township, and there she died in 1878, in her seventy-fifth year. The children born to this good couple were: Mary Jane (deceased), who was the wife of John Grove; Jacob H., who enlisted first for three years, then re-enlisted, after which as a lieutenant he met his death in battle in the Shenandoah Valley in the fall of 1864, leaving a widow, Hannah Smith, who also died in 1864;
Agnes Eliza, who married Zacharias Lesh, of Ohio; John G., of Lower Chanceford township, who married Miss Elizabeth Grove; Margaret Ellen, deceased wife of P. Lefevre; Francis M., residing on the home farm, who married (first) Mary Jane Jacobs, and (second) Helen Grove; W. M., whose biography follows; Sarah Martha, who married Frederick Smith, of Red Lion; Susan Ann, who married John A. Moore, of Hanover; and one that died in infancy.

W. M. Grove attended the schools of his township until twenty years of age, and remained at home until twenty-three. In 1874 he married Miss Carrie Bigler, born in Cumberland county, near Shiremanstown, daughter of David Bigler, deceased, and after marriage Mr. Grove farmed the Bigler homestead for two years. In 1876 Mr. Grove purchased his present home from David Detwiler, the farm consisting of 111 acres of land. At the time of its purchase, the land was badly in need of attention, it being so thoroughly run down that it was next to an impossibility to raise crops from it, but through persistent and intelligent efforts, Mr. Grove has brought it to a high state of cultivation. The house in which Mr. Grove and his family reside was built many years ago by a Mr. Himes, and is one of the township's landmarks.

To Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Grove the following children have been born: Howard, who married Miss Clara Wambaugh, and resides near Brogueville; and Flora, who married Latimore Tosh, of Collinsville. Mrs. Grove is a member of the New Harmony Presbyterian Church of Brogueville, having united with that religious organization when a girl and been continuously very active in church work, being at the present time a Sunday school teacher. Mr. Grove is a member of the United Presbyterian Church. In politics he is a Republican. As stated, he has been very successful in his agricultural operations and ranks with the best farmers in the township. Finally, he is highly respected by his neighbors for his good citizenship, and for the efforts he has put forth in assisting to develop and improve the community.

JAMES H. FULTON, the proprietor of beautiful "Walnut Glen" farm, was born in Stewartstown, York Co., Pa., Dec. 20, 1847, son of John Fulton.

David Fulton, the grandfather of James H., was a well-known farmer and influential citizen of his day in Hopewell township. He purchased 500 acres of land in that section, of which Mr. Fulton now owns the central part, it now being divided into several farms. David Fulton married Margaret Patterson, and both she and her husband died at the home of their son—the father of James H.

John Fulton was born in Hopewell township, where he passed most of his life as a farmer, in 1881 retiring to Shrewsbury, where he died in 1901, aged seventy-three years. He served as revenue assessor for many years, and almost continuously as school director. He married Esther Anstine, who was born in Stewartstown, daughter of George Anstine, who served for several terms as a member of the Legislature. Children as follows were born to this union: James H.; George, Smith E., and Adam, all three deceased; Maggie, Mrs. Wilson, of Pocomoke City; Ida, Mrs. Ellsworth Peterman, of Shrewsbury; and Ruth, unmarried.

In the infancy of James H. Fulton his father located on the farm now occupied by him, and the boy attended the Zion (township) school until sixteen years of age, his first teacher being Miss Myers and his last Francis Wilson. On Thanksgiving Day, 1885, he married Miss Mary Ellen Edgar, daughter of James and Susan (Cross) Edgar. Mrs. Fulton died in 1901, in the faith of the Presbyterian Church, and is buried in Stewartstown cemetery. Mr. Fulton is a Democrat, and he is now serving his third term as school director in Hopewell township. He is serving his third year as a director of the People's National Bank of Stewartstown.

The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. James H. Fulton: Fay Lillian, student at the Millersville Normal School; Esther Wilson, Pearl and Amelia Jane, living at home; Paul, deceased; and John Grover, at home.

GEORGE T. KERR, passenger and freight agent of the Northern Central Railway Company. Hanover, Pa., was born at Wrightsville, York county, in June, 1865, son of George W. and Jane V. (Bahn) Kerr, both of whom were born and reared in Wrightsville. The father in early manhood learned and followed the carpenter's trade, and afterward became a leading contractor and builder in Wrightsville, his native place. Six children were born to George W. and Jane V. Kerr, as follows: Ida L.; Alice E., who married D. W. Weltzhofer; Morgan B.; George T.; Sarah J., deceased; and Glen W., at home.

George T. Kerr attended the public schools and finished his education in the select school at Wrightsville. Leaving school he was employed for a time as a clerk in a store, and later by William McConkey, a merchant of Wrightsville, with whom he remained for some time. In 1882 he entered the employ of the Pennsylvania Railway Company, at Wrightsville in the capacity of clerk, thence was transferred to the Frederick division, and for a time was stationed at York. In 1883 he came to Hanover in the capacity of clerk for the same road. In the spring of 1883 he was appointed agent at Taneytown, Md., and in 1893 was again transferred to Hanover, this time as passenger and freight agent, a position which he still holds. In 1889 Mr. Kerr married Ann R. Miller, of Keysville, Md., daughter of John and Elizabeth (Troxell) Miller. Three children were born to this union: Edgar Poole; Elizabeth J.; and Anna R. Mr. Kerr is a member of Patmos Lodge, No. 348, A. F. & A. M., of which he is past master and trustee; also a member of Gettysburg Chapter, No. 79, R. A. M., and Gettysburg Commandery, No. 79, K. T. He is a member of Hanover Lodge, No. 763, B. P. O. E., of which he is also trustee. Mr. Kerr has also served as a member of the school board of Hanover, representing the Second ward.

SAMUEL K. HOSHOuir, of Glen Rock, was born Jan. 12, 1839, at Glen Rock, a member of an old York county family, and a son of J. V. and Magdalena (Koller) Hoshour. The paternal grandfather followed the tanner’s business near Spring Grove, York county. There his life was passed, and there he reared his family, those who survived infancy being: S. K., who became a noted linguist and belonged to the faculty of an Indianapolis (Ind.) college; David; Sally, wife of Samuel Keesey; Lydia, wife of Charles Klinefelter; Betsy, who married William Sechrist; and Josiah V.

Josiah V. Hoshour was born and reared at Spring Grove, Pa. For some years after attaining manhood he taught school, and then took up surveying, a calling that was very lucrative in those days. Subsequently he became superintendent of construction for the Northern Central Railroad Company from New Freedom to Hanover Junction, and still later he became financially interested in a foundry and machine shop at Glen Rock. Josiah V. Hoshour was one of the earliest citizens of Glen Rock, having resided there before the railroad construction caused the “boom” which developed the place. Being a man of education, a graduate of Gettysburg College, he was naturally prominent in all the affairs of his section and to him Glen Rock is indebted for its euphonious name. He testified to his interest in educational matters by giving much time as a member of the school board; was, in fact, earnest and prominent in promoting everything that promised to be of substantial benefit to the place. It is difficult to mention anything connected with the early development of Glen Rock in which he did not prominently figure, he having done more, probably, than any other one man to ensure the town’s prosperity.

Mr. Hoshour was a very strong Lutheran and one of the building committee which erected the commodious Lutheran Church in 1862. For many years he continued a member of its official body and liberally contributed to its support. For a long period he belonged to the town council and, on account of his reliable character and progressive spirit, could have held any office in the gift of the people. He only survived the death of his wife four years, she passing away in 1894, aged seventy-two years, and he, in 1898, aged eighty-two years. Both parents of Mr. Hoshour were interred at Glen Rock. They had these children: Samuel K.; Isabella, who died young; Maria, who died at the age of nineteen years; Ella, who married N. C. Seitz, of Washington, D. C.; Magdalena, who married Prof. Aaron Grey; John H., of York, and two children who died in infancy.

Until he was twelve years of age Samuel K. Hoshour attended school at Glen Rock, after which, until he was twenty-three years old, he assisted his father on the farm. Then he embarked in the lumber business, in which he continued alone until 1872, when he entered into partnership with J. C. Fallon and Henry Gore for the operation of a general lumber and planing-mill business, later carried on under the style of Hoshour-Dise & Co. In 1887 the business was reorganized and incorporated under the name of the Glen Manufacturing Company, of which Samuel K. Hoshour is the senior member. He started the first lumber yard at Glen Rock and is justly regarded as the pioneer in that line. When Mr. Hoshour ventured into the field, forty years ago, it was with little business experience and in a small way, but his conduct of it has caused it to expand into one of the largest industries of Glen Rock. He has always been the head and front of the enterprise and has personal charge of the yard, being considered one of the most thorough lumber inspectors in this part of the State. His success is distinctly traceable to perseverance and energy, honest methods and fair business dealing.

Although successfully managing a constantly growing industry, Mr. Hoshour has never let personal matters outweigh his public responsibility and he has efficiently served in various offices to which his fellow-citizens have elected him. For six years he was chief burgess of Glen Rock, for many years was a member of the town council and for two years served as tax collector and two terms as assessor.

In 1842 Mr. Hoshour was married to Rebecca Hengst, daughter of Michael Hengst, and they have had children as follows: Rev. Edward E., pastor of Bethany Lutheran Church, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Samuel R.; Josiah W.; Lillie: Paul; Annie, who married George Moreland; Milton C.; and Eda and Edie, both of whom died in infancy. Mr. Hoshour belongs to the Red Men and to the Knights of Pythias, and assisted to organize lodges in both fraternities. He is also one of the leading members of the Lutheran Church, in which he has served on the official board. Since the age of sixteen years he has been a teacher in the Sunday-school. He is a man who, in every relation of life, is held in high esteem, and no history of this beautiful town, with its many great industries, would be complete without mention of the Hoshour family.

JOHN A. BARNETT was born in Drumore township, Lancaster county, near Penn Hill, April 23, 1831, a son of Andrew and Eliza (Troy) Barnett, the former of Lancaster county, Pa., and the latter of Cecil county, Md., and grandson of John Troy on the maternal side. Andrew Barnett was a native of Lancaster county, where he was a wagonmaker and pronounced one of the finest artisans in his line of work in that section. He was married to Eliza Troy, daughter of John Troy, a farmer of Cecil county, Md., and this union was blessed with three children, viz.: Mary Jane, wife of B. F. Cunningham of Cecil county; John A.; and William X., who married Sallie Grove and died in Ohio.

Mr. Barnett's education, which he completed at the age of eighteen years, was obtained in the public schools of Lancaster county. After leaving school he was a teacher for one term, but the work being distasteful to him he never resumed it, and instead learned the carpenter's trade, in which he was engaged for many years. Mr. Barnett was instrumental in the installation of machinery at a number of slate quarries at Delta. He was married at the age of twenty-three to Mrs. Katherine (Miller) Beatty, and two children were born to them, viz.: John Thomas, who died at the age of two years, and Hannah Eliza, the wife of John H. Pymer, a plasterer, and mother of one child—John B., at school. Mrs. Barnett died in January, 1868, and was buried at Slateville.

Mr. Barnett has been a lifelong Democrat, and has held a number of offices of honor and trust. For a number of years he has been burgess of Delta, being re-elected in a borough which is overwhelmingly Republican, by the largest vote ever cast for any candidate for that office. Mr. Barnett is a man of powerful physique, and has been noted for his activity and endurance. A personal record of the work done by him shows that, for a period of over eight years, he worked on an average thirty-one and one-fourth days each month, counting overtime.

MANASSES KREBS was born at New Holland, York county, Dec. 23, 1832, son of Henry Krebs. The father was born Jan. 13, 1782, in Lebanon county, and received a common-school education. He learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed in New Holland, Manchester township, until his death in 1847. Henry Krebs married Frances Miller, of Lancaster county, and the children born to them were: Susanna, born Aug. 4, 1822, died in York county; Silas, born Nov. 6, 1824, died young in York county; Catherine, born June 4, 1828, died in Lebanon; Sarah, born Nov. 30, 1830, died in York; Manasses was born Dec. 23, 1832; Ephraim, born Aug. 4, 1834, died at New Holland; Henry was born Dec. 15, 1837.

Manasses Krebs received a common-school education, and for twenty-six years engaged in lime burning on John H. Wogan's farm in East Manchester township. Afterward he worked a farm on an island in the Susquehanna river near New Holland, continuing thus until 1902, since which year he has lived retired in a fine farm home at New Holland.

Mr. Krebs has been married three times and has been the father of twenty-three children, some of whom died in infancy. His first marriage was to Henrietta Good, who died in New Holland, and the children born to this union were: Marcellus married Elizabeth Pierce, and died in Ohio; Henry married Clementine Flory and resides at New Holland; William married Fanny Denny and lives in Kansas; Fannie married Augustus Billett and lives in Cumberland county; George (deceased) married Sarah Little. Mr. Krebs' second marriage was to Hannah Fryinger, a daughter of Jacob Fryinger, and their children were: Edwin married Agnes Blessing, and follows cigarmaking in Hellam; Martha married Hiram Billett and lives in Dauphin county; Annie married Harry King, and resides in York; Jacob F., a graduate of the Kingston school, taught three years in York county, and at the present time is time-keeper at the large quarry in East Manchester township; Samuel, a blacksmith, married Mary Breneman, and lives at Round Town; and Elmer, a baker of Wrightsville, married Cora Abel. Mrs. Hannah Krebs died at New Holland, where she is buried, and Mr. Krebs married (third) Rebecca Fryinger, her sister. The following children were by this marriage: Elizabeth died at New Holland; Dora married Henry Kunkel and lives in York; Aaron resides at home; Amanda and Daisy were twins, the former dying in infancy, and the latter lives at home; Thomas is at home.

Mr. Krebs is a Republican, but never sought office. He is connected with the United Brethren Church.

WILLIAM N. McALISTER, postmaster of Laurel, Chanceford township, was born Oct. 3, 1843, on his grandfather's farm in Chanceford township, son of James and Isabella C. (Neel) McAlister.

James McAlister the first, great-grandfather of William N., came from Scotland, and settled in New York before the Revolutionary war. Thence he traveled to Pennsylvania, and settled in Hopewell township, York county, where he took up 500 acres of land, dying in the early part of 1800 and leaving a large family. John McAlister, one of the older children of James, married a Miss Proudfit, and received a third of the original tract of James McAlister's land, which had been divided between him and his brothers, Thomas and Andrew. He was a life-long farmer and died in 1847, aged seventy-three years, his wife surviving him until three years later, when she passed away in her seventy-fifth year. He was an elder in the Hopewell U. P. Church, which was then known as the Associated Reformed Church. The children born to John McAlister and his wife were: James, the father of William N.; Thomas, who married Agnes Torbet; Mrs. Samuel Moore, who died in Washington county, Pa.; Agnes, who married William Gemmill, and died in East Hopewell township; Eleanor, who married Sampson Smith and died at the cross-roads in East Hopewell township; John R., who graduated from the Xenia (O.) Seminary and the Washington-Jefferson Classical College, was a U. P. minister for thirty years, and who married Maggie McLean, and is now living in Pittsburg, A.; Martha Jane, who married Andrew Anderson, and died in Hopewell township; Elizabeth, who died unmarried; Euphemia C., and Samuel A., of East Hopewell township.

James McAlister was born on the homestead farm in Hopewell township, Feb. 3, 1810, and acquired his education in the common schools and the academy at York. He was reared on the farm, and for eight years he taught school. He married Isabella C. Neel, of Lower Chanceford township, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Marlien) Neel. William Neel came from Scotland and settled in America; his wife was of Irish parentage. Mr. Neel died on his farm in 1864. Mr. and Mrs. McAlister were members of the U. P. Church, in which he was a ruling elder. Politically he was an old-line Whig until the Republican party was organized, when Mr. McAlister joined the new party as one of the first Republicans in the section. For many years she served as school director. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. McAlister were as follows: David P., born in Hopewell township, attended the public school and Westminster College, was a school teacher for five years, enlisted in Company A, 21st Cav. (Capt. McCall, of York, commanding) and served eighteen months, dying in a hospital at Washington, D. C., from wounds received in battle: William N., whose sketch is found below, and Jane Mary, who died at the age of six years.

William N. McAlister was educated in the common schools of York county and the academy at Stewartstown, and after graduating from the latter taught three years in Hopewell township. On Aug. 27, 1864, he enlisted at Harrisburg, in Company L, 9th Pa. Vol. Cav., under Capt. George L. Smith, in Kilpatrick’s Western army, participating in the raid through Georgia and the fights at Waynesboro and Milledgeville. He was honorably discharged from service at Newbern, N. C., April 20, 1865, and returned home, where until 1877 he engaged in farming. In that year Mr. McAlister founded a mercantile business at Laurel, where he established a postoffice (naming the town), of which he has since been the incumbent, with the exception of four years during Cleveland’s administration. He erected the first building (a warehouse) in the village of Laurel, where he has been the agent for the Adams Express Company since the year 1878 and station agent for the Peach Bottom railroad since 1877. Mr. McAlister united with the Hopewell U. P. Church at the age of sixteen years, and has been prominent in its work ever since, having been choir leader for forty years and elder for the past five years. From early life he has also been actively connected with Sunday-school work. Mr. McAlister has been a life-long Republican and cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln.

On Dec. 23, 1863, in East Hopewell township, Mr. McAlister married Maggie Liggett, who was born in the township named and died in 1864. She was the daughter of William and Grace (Collins) Liggett, who were of Irish descent. To Mr. McAlister and his first wife one child was born—Maggie B., who became Mrs. J. Grant-Wallace, of High Rock. Mr. McAlister’s second marriage was to Amanda J. Wilson, born in Fawn township, daughter of David and Jane (Manifold) Wilson, the latter of whom is the aunt of Sheriff Manifold of York county.

Mr. and Mrs. McAlister the following children have been born: Jennie W., who married William J. Cockley, of Manchester township, York county; Miss Mary; Nellie L. and Blanche N., living at home; and Helen Proudfit.

Mr. McAlister has the standing in the community of an honest, upright and public-spirited citizen, as ready now to support good government as he was to preserve it in the dark days of the Civil war.

MORRIS MILLS HAYS, a representative of an old settled family of Pennsylvania, was born Sept. 13, 1841. The name was originally spelled Hayes, but the American branch of the family for several generations, have used the present orthography. The emigrant ancestor of the family came from Wales, and settled in Chester county, Pa. In 1770 Jesse Hays moved from Chester county into York county, and purchased land one mile north of Yocumtown, but this tract was afterward sold to furnish a substitute for service in the war of the Revolution, he himself being a member of the Society of Friends, and therefore a non-resistant. By occupation he was a tailor. In 1780 he married Margery Mills, daughter of James Mills, the builder of the stone house east of Yocumtown, later known as the Brubaker property. To this marriage came three children: Susan, Hannah and Mills.

Mills Hays was born in 1786. On Aug. 13, 1817, he was appointed one of the three justices of the peace for the Third district, composed of Newberry and Fairview townships under the constitution of 1790, and he served continuously in that position until 1839. In 1851 he was elected associate judge of York county, serving one full term of five years. Judge Hays married Eve Crull, and their children were: John; Sidney, who married William Eppley; Mary, who married
George W. Hall; Jesse, born July 24, 1818, who married Mary Miller, and Jane, who married Samuel P. Herman. Judge Mills died in Newberrytown, in June, 1858, aged seventy-two years.

John Hays was born Oct. 11, 1810, in Newberry township, where he spent his entire life. For many years he was a director in the Dover Fire Insurance Company, and filled many local positions of trust and responsibility. He married Jane Morris, daughter of Charles Morris, of Warrington township, of Scotch-Irish descent, the latter of whom was one of a company of soldiers who marched to the defense of Baltimore in 1814. John Hays died in 1885, in Newberry township, and is buried at Paddletown church. His wife passed away in 1901, at the age of ninety years, and was laid to rest beside her husband. Their children were: Sidney, who married David Ort; Adacinda, who married A. B. Kurtz; Morris Mills; Granville, who married Kate Reiff; Crull, a soldier in the 166th P. V. I. and also the 9th P. V. C. during the Civil war; Ellen; Lucetta; Servatus, who married Kate Feiser, and is a merchant at Newberrytown, and John Pierce, a graduate of the Shippensburg State Normal School, who married Maggie Flora, of Franklin county.

Morris Mills Hays passed his early days on the farm, and acquired his education in the public schools, in the Normal and Classical school at York, and the Millersville State Normal School. For three terms he engaged successfully in teaching. In November, 1882, he was elected a member of the State Legislature, being re-elected in 1900. In the committees on Labor and Industry, Insurance, Military and Geological Survey, he gave efficient service. His occupation is farming, and he is the owner of a valuable farm one mile east of Newberrytown. He is a practical surveyor, and has found time in the midst of his farm labors and official duties to utilize his talents in that direction. So capable a public official has he proved that he has been called upon to fill various local offices, and has always fulfilled their duties with fidelity of purpose, and marked executive ability. He is a wide reader, and is the owner of an extensive library of well selected works.

On Feb. 20, 1876, Mr. Hays was married to Sarah M. Krone. Six children have blessed their union, namely: Ira, at home; Kent, who married Dora Zorger, and lives in Newberrytown; Boyd, who married Bertha Stoner, and lives in Newberry township, and Dale, Ruth and Jo, all living at home. Mr. Hays is president of the Dover Fire Insurance Company and has been upon its board of directors since 1885; his father was also a director in the same company from 1859 until his death. In 1898 Morris M. Hays was elected justice of the peace, but resigned to take his seat in the Legislature, and in 1905 was again elected to the judicial office named.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN HANTZ, in his lifetime a well-known hardware dealer in York, Pa., belonged to an old and honored family that more than a century and a half ago emigrated from Germany and settled in Pennsylvania.

John Nicholas Hantz married Anna Barbara Burghart in the Province of Starkenburg, Sponheim, Germany. He died in the Fatherland, aged about sixty years, leaving four children, namely: John Andrew, Maria Catherine, Mary Margaretta and Catherine Elizabeth. On June 22, 1751, the widow of John Nicholas Hantz was married to John Peter Strayer. The entire family set sail for America, locating in Dover township, York Co., Pa. They were among the few settlers in that part of the country in 1758, and John Peter Strayer was one of the founders of the well-known Dover Church, and at times, during the absence of the minister, was empowered by the Lutheran Synod to officiate at certain religious services. He also taught the first parochial school in the Dover Church.

John Andrew Hantz, who accompanied the emigrant party to America in 1734, became the progenitor of the Hantz family in America. One of his sons, Andrew Hantz, was born in Dover township, York county, married Mary Sharp, and had the following children: John, Jacob, Philip, Daniel, Joseph, Catherine, Susan and Mary Ann.

Jacob Hantz, the second son, was born in 1797, and for a number of years kept the "Hantz Hotel," later known as the "Motter House," which business he discontinued when elected sheriff in 1842, being the first Whig ever elected to that office in York county. He later engaged in the hardware business, under the firm name of Hantz, Frick & Co., at the stand later occupied by his sons. B. Franklin and Charles F. Hantz, until they died. In 1821 he married Magdalena Hershey, and at his death, in 1868, left three sons, Henry A., Benjamin Franklin and Charles F. Of this family, Henry A. married Henrietta L. Beeler, and they have three daughters: Annie M., wife of Ivan Glossbrenner; Lucy H., wife of Edward Chapin; and Mary A., wife of Robert Stair.

Benjamin Franklin Hantz was sent first to the public schools, later completing his education in the York Academy. Upon leaving the latter institution he engaged in the hardware business, which line he followed throughout his life, and in which he was eminently successful. His death occurred March 10, 1886, and he was laid to rest in Prospect Hill cemetery. A man of true worth and sterling traits of character, Mr. Hantz was held in respect by all who knew him, and his friends were only limited by the number of his acquaintances.

Benjamin Franklin Hantz was united in marriage with Rebecca Graybill, who, with three children, survived him. The eldest, Charles Edward, married Miss Emma Householder, and now resides in York. Mary Alice, the only daughter, married Rev. William Anstadt, and they are located in Hollidaysburg, Pa. Grant married Miss Irene Bender, who occupies the homestead, where four generations have lived. Mrs. Rebecca Hantz, the widow of B. Franklin Hantz, died after a brief illness, Dec. 20, 1905, and was laid to rest in the family lot at Prospect Hill cemetery.

CHARLES G. HILDEBRAND, M. D., one of the leading medical practitioners of Springfield township, York county, has been practicing his profession since 1889, in Loganville, where he was born Dec. 31, 1859, son of Dietrich Hildebrand.

Dr. Hildebrand attended school at Loganville and the York County Academy, after which he spent three years at the York Collegiate Institute. He then read medicine with Dr. Yost, of Glen Rock, who was at that time located at Loganville, and attended a medical school at Baltimore, from which he was graduated in 1881. Dr. Hildebrand first located at Winterstown, where he remained eight years, in 1889 settling for practice in his native town, where he has since remained, in the full enjoyment of a large and lucrative patronage.

In 1880 Dr. Hildebrand married Catherine Feigley, daughter of Martin and Ellen (Reiker) Feigley, and the following children have been born to this union: Esther M. died in 1896, in her fifteenth year; Charles died in infancy; Leroy is a graduate of Patrick's Business College, of York; Nora is living at home.

In his political views Dr. Hildebrand is a Republican, and he has served his borough as school director and councilman. His profession connects him with the York County Medical Society, of which he was president in 1904, and also the State and National Medical associations.

HON. LEVI M. MYERS, of York county, Pa., formerly an honored member of the State Legislature, belongs to a very old Pennsylvania family which originated in Germany.

Frederick Myers, the great-grandfather of Levi M., was born in Germany, and was the first of the family to leave the Fatherland and to seek a home in America, settling in Dover township, York Co., Pa., where he lived an upright life, and at his death left many descendants. In those early days, as in the modern era, the transportation question was one of great moment. Mr. Myers owned a number of strong teams, and conducted a general hauling business, covering the distance between Pittsburg over the mountains to Baltimore. This was a most lucrative enterprise, and he was a very substantial man in his day, owning farms in Dover and in Monaghan townships valued at something like $7,000. But the panic of 1818, following the war of 1812, found him with more responsibilities than he could meet and before he could settle his affairs he had practically lost everything. This is not an uncommon misfortune, but it is not always met with the honesty and resoluteness which characterized this upright old German. Retaining nothing from his creditors, he passed his last years with his sons and was an honored and respected man to the last. His children were: Jacob, John, William and Catherine, and three other daughters whose married names were Bentzel, Gross and Grove.

Jacob Myers, grandfather of Levi M., was born in 1798, in Dover township, York county, and obtained his education in the German schools, being twenty years of age before he learned to speak in the English language. Later he became one of the influential men of his section of York county. He purchased the property now owned by his son, Peter A. Myers, and on it his life was spent, and there he died in 1876, preceded by his wife in 1862, at the age of sixty years. They had these children: Jacob and John (twins), Elizabeth, Susan, Henry, Mary, Frederick, Samuel, George, Martha, Peter, Catherine and William. Jacob Myers was a stanch Democrat all his life.

William A. Myers was educated in the common schools of Monaghan township and performed the usual duties on the home farm until the age of twenty years, when he went to Lycoming county and worked at the lumbering business for a short time. After his return to York county he taught school for a season, teaching during the winters and farming during the summers, also taking a great deal of interest in horticulture. In 1877 he bought a small property of twenty acres, which is now owned by his son, Harry C. Myers. In 1884 he purchased a farm of eighty-four acres which he continued to cultivate until his retirement in 1902, the tract now being owned by Hon. Levi M. Myers. William Myers now lives in a comfortable residence which he erected at Mt. Pleasant, where he is a highly respected resident. Mr. Myers was united in marriage, Oct. 11, 1870, to Mary Hamacher, born in Cumberland county, daughter of Daniel Hamacher. They had these children: Amos L., deceased; Levi M.; Elizabeth L., deceased; and Harry C. The family belongs to the Church of God, and Mr. Myers has been an elder of that sect at Mt. Pleasant, for eleven years. Politically he is a strong Democrat and has served for the past decade as a justice of the peace.

Levi M. Myers is one of the leading citizens who is well known in the agricultural, social and political circles of Monaghan township. He was born Jan. 22, 1873, son of William A. and Mary (Hamacher) Myers, and a grandson of Jacob and Mary (Getz) Myers. He was educated in the common schools of his native township and at the State Normal school at Millersville. After completing his education he taught school for twelve consecutive sessions (eleven terms in Monaghan township), and became well and favorably known throughout that section as a successful educator. Possessing unusual musical talent he decided to adopt music as a profession and with this end in view, placed himself under excellent instructors, one of his preceptors being the distinguished Prof. Knoch of Leipsic, Germany, who is now holding a high musical position at Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. Myers entered upon the teaching of music, but after completing one term concluded to return to his native place, where he became interested in agricultural pursuits and particularly in the growing of fine apples and peaches. His fine farm of 350 acres is all under cultivation, and he has been most successful in this venture. In politics Mr. Myers is a stanch Democrat. In the fall of 1902 he was his party's choice for the State Legislature and was elected to that body in November of that year. He served two years during which period he made himself felt in committee work, having been assigned to Counties and Townships and Banking. Mr. Myers worked hard in the interests of his constituents, and his record at Harrisburg is one which is eminently satisfactory.

The marriage of Levi M. Myers took place Feb. 22, 1894, to May Moore, daughter of Jacob A. Moore, a native of York county. She comes of a distinguished family, her grandfather being the well known Judge Moore of York county. The only child of this union, Helen, is now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Myers are consistent members of the Church of God, commonly denominated Bethel Church.

Mr. Myers' upright character and unimpeachable honesty have, upon many occasions, stood in the way of his political advancement, but his friends and associates know that through all the stress and turmoil of campaign work, he has always stood firm on the foundation stones of principle. His convictions of right have been more to him than the highest political honors in the land, and the high esteem in which his fellow citizens regard him is sufficient testimonial to his sterling character.

HARRY F. BOWMAN, a business man of Hanover, was born in Heidelberg township, Jan. 16, 1871, son of Harry W. and Mary (Bollinger) Bowman. The father was born on the old Bowman homestead in the township named, Oct. 16, 1840, and was one of the prosperous farmers of that locality. He was a prominent Democrat and an influential party worker, also serving York county in the capacity of registrar of wills for a term of three years. He died in November, 1904, but his wife still resides in Hanover. The children born to Harry W. and Mary (Bollinger) Bowman were: Virginia, who married Dr. L. H. Stone, of Porter's Sideling; Harry F., of this sketch; Ida, who married C. S. Shirk, a hardware merchant of Hanover; Mary, who resides with her mother, and Annie B., who married T. J. Major, a candy manufacturer of Hagerstown, Md. Harry W. Bowman was a great friend of education, and devoted much of his time in elevating its standard, serving many years as a school director both in his native township and in Hanover. He was the son of Henry K. and Katharyn (Snyder) Bowman, and the land which for generations was tilled by the Bowmans was originally purchased by the ancestors from William Penn.

Harry F. Bowman was reared a farmer's boy and received his primary education in the district school, completing his mental training as a student of York County Academy. Possessing an aptitude for commercial life, he began life for himself as a clerk in a hotel, and continued thus for twelve years. In 1899 he was nominated on the Democratic ticket as candidate for recorder and was elected by a good majority. He assumed the duties of his office for a term of three years and fulfilled them to the credit of himself and to the satisfaction of his constituents. At the expiration of his term of office he returned to Hanover, where he began to trade in horses and mules, a business in which he has since engaged extensively and successfully, buying Western horses and Kentucky mules very largely. Besides owning valuable city property Mr. Bowman is the possessor of two good farms, one of which is located in Washington township, York county, and the other in close proximity in Adams county. He is an enterprising and sagacious business man, and his keen judgment gives him an honorable place among the prominent citizens of this thriving city.

In 1805 Mr. Bowman married Leona Grenewald, daughter of Leonard H. and Anna (Hall) Grenewald, of Hanover; they have one child, Leona Frances. Mrs. Bowman's father is a prominent politician, and a former sheriff of York county. Mr. Bowman is a prominent member of Hanover Lodge, I. O. O. F., having passed all the chairs; is also a member of the Elks, and of the Mystic Chain.

HENRY FLINCHBAUGH, a retired farmer of Springfield township, York county, was born in Spring Garden township, Aug. 10, 1835, son of John and Dolly (Smith) Flinchbaugh, the former of whom, a laborer, died when Henry was two years old, while the latter died at Blimyer Church, York township, when he was also very young. His brother and sisters were: John, Eleanor, Matilda and Dolly.

Henry Flinchbaugh was raised with John Godfrey, until he was eighteen years old, working eight months of the year for $25, continuing this arrangement for three years. He then purchased the old Keeney farm, upon which he lived and farmed for twenty-nine years. He also owned a property of 210 acres, known as the Feigley farm, which he later sold, and he now resides on a small place of one and one-half acres, near Loganville, which he purchased in 1901. He was first married to Mary J. Kenney, who died at the age of fifty-seven years, and he was united (second) to Sarah Brillhart Greiman, daughter of Jacob and Sarah (Myer) Brillhart, and the widow of Jacob Greiman, who died April 10, 1892. Mrs. Greiman's children were: Charles S., a graduate of Patrick's Business School at York; Amanda, who joined the Dunkard Church in 1902, and resides at home, and Jacob H., who is also at home.

Mr. Flinchbaugh at one time possessed considerable property in Springfield township, but sold most of it, being now the owner of a three-acre tract of land along the Baltimore Pike. In political principle he is a Democrat. He joined the Dunkard Church at the age of thirty-five years, and is very prominent in all its affairs. He and his wife are people of sterling character and enjoy the esteem of all who know them.

ALEXANDER D. SMYSER, of Manchester township, York county, who is actively engaged in the stone and lime business near Emigsville, was born in 1848, in Jackson township, son of Daniel and Catherine (Wiest) Smyser, and a grandson of Mathias Smyser. Daniel Smyser was born March 20, 1807, in West Manchester township and followed farming, first in the place of his birth, later removing to Jackson township and finally to York city, where he lived in well earned retirement, for a number of years prior to his death, which occurred in 1862. Both he and his wife are buried at the Prospect Hill cemetery. To Daniel and Catherine Smyser the following children were born: John married Caroline Bott, and is living retired in York; Mary, deceased, married Andrew J. Myers, who is also deceased, and they were both buried at the Prospect Hill cemetery; Michael married Lena Menges and is living retired in Spring Grove; Alexander D.; and Louisa married J. M. Gross; M. D. of Dover.

Alexander Smyser received his education in the public schools of West Manchester township and remained with his father until his marriage, working upon the home farm. In 1869 he married Louisa Jane Yost, daughter of Peter Yost; she died in 1880 at the age of twenty-eight years leaving one child, Clayton A., who married Georgie Kissinger, and is a clerk for Lippincott & Co. of Columbia, Pa. In 1881 Mr. Smyser married Amanda Metzler, daughter of George Metzler, of Dover township, and they have had three children: Harry E., who died at the age of seventeen years, and is buried at the Prospect Hill cemetery; and Bertha and Alexander, who both reside at home.

After his first marriage Mr. Smyser located in Jackson township, but about eleven years later, after his wife's death, he removed to York, where he now resides, his home being located at No. 703 West Market street. His business interests are large and he is at present very extensively engaged in the stone and lime business, to the successful conduct of which his time and ability are fully devoted. He employs about fifteen hands, and finds ready sale for his finished products in York county. Mr. Smyser is up-to-date in every respect and has all the latest improvements in machinery. In politics he is a Republican, and in religion is a valued member of the Lutheran Church. He is a man of high standing in his locality, both personally and financially.

THOMAS J. O'NEILL, secretary and treasurer of the Hanover Silk Company and general manager of the large mill of that company at Hanover, York Co., Pa., is not only well known in that connection but as an all-around business man. In fact, he is a typical business man, seeing advantages for his own particular interests in the progress of other concerns, which, whenever possible, he encourages and supports with his means and influence. He has been identified with the silk manufacturing industry since 1882, and has held responsible positions with several important companies.

Mr. O'Neill is a native of England, born June 24, 1863, and was brought to America in 1868 by his parents, who settled in Allentown, Lehigh Co., Pa. There he was reared, receiving his education in the common schools of the county and in youth learning telegraphy. After devoting the required time to gaining a knowledge of this business he obtained employment with the Western Union Telegraph Company, and later with the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, with which he remained until 1882. In that year he took a position with the Phoenix Silk Manufacturing Company, of Allentown, as foreman of the soft silk department, having charge of 180 hands. This was at the time the mills were started, and he remained there five years, working in all of the departments and acquiring a thorough knowledge of the details of manufacture in the mammoth establishment. The position was one of the most responsible in the mill, requiring experience and familiarity with the workings of every department. His success there gained him the offer of the position of superintendent of the Bethlehem Silk mills, which he accepted, as it gave him the opportunity to add to his knowledge of business. Later he was with the Theodore Teitz Silk Company, near Hartford, Conn., and then became secretary and general manager of the Hanover Silk Company.

Mr. O'Neill is particularly well known to the trade as a man of energy and progressive ideas. His good judgment and executive ability would insure success to any enterprise, and the Hanover Silk Company owes much of its financial stability to his talent for effective management. But more than that, he possesses originality and inventive genius, and he is not only awake to the progress of the day but able to meet the latest demands in his line, so that his patrons are never disappointed either when looking for attractive novelties or when calling for standard goods of known reliability. He believes in using all modern facilities for the dispatch of the work, and in employing them to the utmost. Indeed, it is largely owing to his influence that the Hanover Silk mills are so thoroughly equipped, for he realizes that there is no economy in working with anything but the best. Successful competition would be next to impossible without it. Mr. O'Neill's reputation among business men is of the best, and he has used his best endeavors to have his company rank with the foremost in the United States. Its location in Hanover has not only been a happy one for the concern, but has aided the town and paved the way for the founding of other successful enterprises there.

Though his principal efforts are devoted to the Hanover Silk Company, Mr. O'Neill has been connected with numerous other important undertakings since his removal to Hanover. In 1893 he organized the Hanover Telephone Company; in 1901 he was actively engaged in organizing the United Telephone Company, and still later the Cumberland Valley Telephone Company of Pennsylvania, operating in Lancaster, Dauphin, Cumberland, Adams and York counties, and assisted in organizing the Cumberland Valley Telephone Company of Baltimore, which operates in nearly every county in Maryland, and which is now leased and operated by the United Telephone Company. He is a director of the Cumberland Valley Telephone Company of Pennsylvania, and the Cumberland Valley Telephone Company of Baltimore; secretary and director of the Winchester Telephone Company of Winchester, Va.; director of the Hanover and McSherrystown Electric Railroad Company, and of the Hanover Heat, Light and Power Company, and president of the Hanover Market and Town Hall Company, as well as director of the Hanover Agricultural Society. He is also the proprietor of the Littlestown electric light and power plant.

As may be judged from this brief resume of his various interests, Mr. O'Neill is a leader in local movements for the betterment of the community, for its steady advancement, and for the comfort and well-being of his fellow citizens generally. He is no less active socially, being president of the Hanover Outing Club, whose location is a beautiful spot on the banks of the Conewago, known as Waldheim (Forest Home); he is also a member of the Arcadian Club of Hanover, and a charter member of Hanover Lodge No. 763, B. P. O. E., of which he was the second exalted ruler. Politically Mr. O'Neill is a stanch Democrat and zealous in the interest of his party, but he has no aspirations for official position.

Mr. O'Neill was married Jan. 28, 1889, to Annie A., daughter of the late Josiah W. Gitt, an honorable business man of Hanover, and a sister of G. D. and H. N. Gitt, both prominent business men of that place. Four children have blessed this union: Reginald, T. Newman, Geraldine M. and Helen.

The Hanover Silk Company is a source of pride to the town whose name it bears, for more reasons than one. It has marked the beginning of an era of progress and prosperity, and has not only been of material benefit to Hanover directly, but has also been the means of drawing to that place many other desirable enterprises.

The company was organized April 4, 1892, and Oct. 1st of the same year the machinery was started in the large mill. The enterprise was novel, in that nothing of the same nature had ever before been attempted in that section, and the outcome was therefore a matter of some doubt. The continued success and steady growth of the concern have demonstrated beyond question that the region affords every facility for the prosecution of the industry of silk manufacturing, and demonstrated it to such purpose that allied industries, hitherto chary about venturing into untried fields, have been attracted to the locality, with results which are mutually beneficial.

The three-story brick factory, 50x126 feet in dimensions, with a boiler and engine house 30x30 feet, is equipped with every appliance known to the up-to-date silk manufacturer for the prompt and efficient production of silk ribbons in every variety and style, and the product is rapidly taking rank among the best turned out in the country. No pains or expense are spared to obtain the most exquisite harmonies in colors, tints and combinations, and the product is unexcelled for quality and beautiful finish. The highest art in silk manufacture is displayed in the output of this concern, and the fact is recognized by the patronage of some of the largest silk purchasing houses in the United States.

While the company have been prompt to use all the latest appliances in the way of engines, looms, warpers, winders, doublers, etc., they have also been considerate of the welfare, comfort and safety of their many employees. Fire extinguishing apparatus is liberally provided on each floor, the danger of destruction from this source being reduced to the minimum. A thorough system of electric lights was installed when the factory opened, and everything useful in the electrical line is found in the building—powerful dynamos and burners, call bells throughout the mill, telephone connections from floor to floor, all of the best make known to the trade. The salesrooms for distribution, in the care of H. L. Meyers & Welwood, experienced silk men, are located at Nos. 477-481 Broome street, in New York City; they have every facility for the storage and distribution of an immense stock.

The Hanover Silk Company employs much skilled labor, has proved a reliable and paying investment for a large amount of capital, and requires in its management the exercise of the highest order of executive ability. The present officers of the concern are G. D. Gitt, president; C. J. Delone, vice-president; Thomas J. O'Neil, secretary and treasurer; H. N. Gitt, John Krug, directors. The goods of the company find a market in all the large centers of trade, and they compete successfully with the leading concerns—the management originating, devising and introducing new designs, bringing out many novelties of their own, and encouraging home talent in the production of their goods as much as possible. They are not afraid to branch out in new lines and make experiments, and their goods have a distinction which reflects the independence and originality of the heads of the enterprise.

DAVID J. MARKEY is a representative of the fourth generation of his family in York county, and has never deserted his native county, being located on his finely improved farm in York township. He was born on the old homestead farm, in that township, Jan. 24, 1844, son of Daniel Markey, who likewise was born and reared in York county, the year of his nativity being recorded as 1804.

The original American ancestor was Jacob Markey, great-grandfather of David J. This worthy pioneer emigrated from Switzerland to America early in the eighteenth century, and settled in Berks county, Pa., whence later he removed to York county and located in Springfield township, where he passed the remainder of his life. It is not known what his vocation was prior to coming to America, but he became identified with farming in the early years of his residence here. Of his children Jacob was the grandfather of our subject.

Jacob Markey became a prosperous and honored farmer of Springfield township, and died at the age of sixty years, his remains being interred in York township, as are also those of his wife, whose maiden name was Magdalena Stump. Of their children, Caspar died in Washington township at the age of seventy-five years, eight months and twenty-nine days, having been a successful farmer of York township; Jacob, who likewise was a representative farmer of York township, died at the age of seventy-six years, five months and two days; Michael, also a farmer of York township, died at the age of seventy-three years and nine days; John, who died in Paradise township, was likewise a farmer by vocation; Daniel was the father of David J. Markey; Elizabeth died in Washington township, at the age of seventy-four years and eleven months, and Sarah Fahs died in Paradise township, aged fifty-seven years, three months and twenty days.

Daniel Markey received a common-school education and in his youth learned the hatter's trade, at York. He engaged in that vocation until 1850, having passed much of the intervening time in Reading, Pa., and in Virginia. He purchased a fine farm in York township, and there followed his trade in connection with the operation of his farm. Few men were better known or held in higher esteem in the county than he, and his name merits a place of honor upon the list of the representative citizens of this section of the Keystone State. He died in 1877, at the age of seventy-three years and eight days. In 1848 Daniel Markey was united in marriage to Sarah King, who was born in York county, in 1815, being a daughter of Peter and Susan (Miller) King, and her death occurred in 1891. Both she and her husband were laid to rest in the Stumps cemetery, York township. Daniel Markey was known throughout the State by reason of the superior quality of hats which he manufactured, and he was not able to meet the demands placed upon him in supplying his trade, so extensive did it become. Of the children of Daniel and Sarah Markey the follow-
JACOB N. SLAGLE (deceased), for many years treasurer of the Hanover Savings Fund Society, was born in Heidelberg (now Penn) township, York county, Oct. 20, 1843, son of Adam and Elizabeth (Felty) Slagle, and grandson of William and Mary (Eyster) Slagle. William Slagle was born in Adams county, near Oxford, about the year 1799. He acquired the trade of carpenter, which he followed for a number of years. Later he devoted his attention to farming and in 1852 purchased a farm in Heidelberg township, which he continued to operate in connection with his trade until his death, in 1873. His wife, Elizabeth Felty, was born in Penn township, York county, in 1809, daughter of Henry and Mary (Neiman) Felty, settlers of York county. Elizabeth (Felty) Slagle died in 1848.

Jacob N. Slagle in his youth attended district school in Penn township, acquiring a good knowledge of the common branches. Later he was a student at a private school. His education ended, however, in his fifteenth year, and for several years thereafter he was variously employed, in 1866 becoming a clerk in the Hanover Savings Fund Society. In 1879 he was made treasurer of the society, which position he filled until June, 1901. This banking institution is one of the oldest in York county, having been organized in 1835, and it is one of the substantial banking houses in that part of the State. It has the heaviest deposits in Hanover, and perhaps in York county. Mr. Slagle was one of the stockholders of the bank, and also the owner of valuable city property.

Mr. Slagle was married, in 1878, to Miss Alice O. Bair, of Hanover, daughter of Edwin and Delilah (Gitt) Bair. To Mr. and Mrs. Slagle one son was born, Jacob, who is a manufacturer of confectionery. Mr. Slagle was a member of Patmos Lodge, No. 348, A. F. & A. M., and of Major Jenkins Post, No. 99, G. A. R. He was a member of Emanuel Reformed Church, to which Mrs. Slagle also belongs. Mr. Slagle passed away in July, 1906.

MICHAEL GROSS, who lived retired in the borough of Manchester for over thirty years prior to his recent decease, was the oldest citizen of that place, and held a high position in the affectionate regard of its residents generally. He led a life of practical usefulness, having been interested as a worker in the various activities of the community from the time he took up his residence there.

The Gross family has been established in the neighborhood of Manchester for several generations, Samuel Gross, the grandfather of Michael, having emigrated thither in 1777. He was a native of Germany, and on coming to York county first located in Manchester township on the farm where Jacob Free resided near Emigsville. After a short residence there he bought the farm afterward owned and occupied by his grandson, Benjamin Gross, about one mile from the village of Manchester, the date of the purchase being Feb. 8, 1777; Frederick Zorger, of Newberry township, was the former owner. There Samuel Gross engaged in farming and distilling to the end of his days, and there he died; he is buried in Manchester township. His family consisted of seven children: George, Samuel, John, Daniel (who married Elizabeth Myers), Eve (wife of Michael Beltzhover, of Cumberland county), one daughter who became the wife of Rev. Mr. Schmucker, of York, and Mrs. John Strayer, of Dover township.

John Gross, father of Michael, was born in Manchester township, and there passed his entire life. Like his father he devoted himself to farming and distilling, and made quite a success of both industries, becoming a large landowner. He was a man of fine character, and died much respected at the age of sixty-six years. He is buried at Manchester borough. John Gross married Barbara Melhorn, daughter of Michael Melhorn, and she, too, lived to be sixty-six years of age, and is buried at Manchester. They were the parents of six children, namely: (1) Catherine died unmarried, and is buried at Manchester. (2) Samuel, born May 25, 1812, in Manchester township, first married Susan Wolf, by whom he had six children, Mary, Amanda, John, George, Emma and Susan (deceased). His second wife was Lena Gotwalt, daughter of John and Catherine (Wilt) Gotwalt, of Dover township, and they had one child, Alice S. Mr. Gross died at Manchester and is buried there. (3) Michael is mentioned below. (4) Eliza married Peter Diehl, and after his death became the wife of P. A. Spahr. She died at Mt. Wolf, and is buried at Manchester. (5) George was born Feb. 16, 1817, followed farming all his life, and died at Manchester, where he is buried. He married Eliza Rutter, and they had fourteen children—Ellen, Albert, Emma, George, Andrew, Adam (all deceased), Zacharia, William, Sarah, Kate, Edward, Charles, Eliza and Jennie. (6) Sarah, who became the wife of Charles Diehl, died at Mt. Wolf and is buried at Manchester.

Michael Gross was born Jan. 15, 1814, in Manchester township, and received his early instruction in the township school. Later he attended the York County Academy. He was reared on the farm, and when he commenced agricultural pursuits on his own account located on a tract which his father bought for him, near Manchester, being engaged in general farming there for thirty years. He remained there, in fact, until his retirement in 1874, after which he lived in the borough of Manchester, where he purchased a fine residence. Mr. Gross continued to own a greater part of the farm, which comprised 180 acres, in 1903 the York Traction Company buying thirty acres of the tract for a park. The place is known as Cold Springs Park because of the fine springs which are numerous on the land, and it is one of the finest spots in that section of the county.

Mr. Gross was content to exert his influence in a quiet way and was never a seeker after office, though he served efficiently as school director. He was a prominent member of the Lutheran Church, in which he held all the offices, and was one of its best workers for many years. He affiliated with the Republican party.

Mr. Gross was married to Leah Hake, daughter of Jacob and Lydia Ann (Miller) Hake, of Conewago township, York Co., Pa., and she passed away at the age of sixty-one years. She is buried at Manchester. Children as follows blessed this union: Eliza married Jacob King, and is living at Star View, in Manchester township; John W. married Annie Sprengle, and died at the age of forty-five years, his widow now living in Manchester township (he is buried at Manchester); Eli first married Clara Bear, and later Elmhira Bush, and they are living in the borough of Manchester, where he is engaged in the livery business; Miss Sarah A. is living at home; Lydia is the wife of Harry Wilt, of Steelton, Pa., where he is engaged in the undertaking and furniture business; Lewis, of Goldsboro, York county, married Elmhira Reeser, and after her death married Dora Spangler (he is engaged in the furniture and undertaking business); Leah married Peter Friser, and is living in York.

BARTHOLOMEW HACKENYOS (deceased) was a native of Germany, his birth occurring in Baden, that country, May 31, 1833. He was a son of John Hackenyos, a shoemaker who followed his trade in Baden, where he died.

Bartholomew Hackenyos learned the shoemaker's trade with his father, and left his native country at the age of nineteen years to come to America, where he first settled in New York City. There he remained three months, at the end of which time he removed to Washington, D. C., and after a number of years came to York, Pa. Here he engaged in shoemaking, and later in merchandising, also owning and operating a farm in connection with his mercantile business, and he was very successful. Mr. Hackenyos died in July, 1901. He was married (first) to Mary Byerly, who died July 10, 1881, and (second) to Wilhelmina Kindsvogel, daughter of John and Margaret (Getz) Kindsvogel, the former a contractor in Germany. Both the parents of Mrs. Hackenyos died at an early age, and she came to America at the age of nineteen years. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hackenyos, namely: John B., a safemaker by trade; Harry; Frederick; and Gustie Elizabeth, who died when three years old. Mrs. Hackenyos resides at her home, No. 122 North Pine street, York. Since her husband's death she has made one visit to her native land.

JOSEPH M. PROWELL, of Conewago township, York county, who is living retired in Strinestown, is a survivor of the Civil war, and for many years was a farmer of Newberry township. Mr. Prowell is a son of James N. Prowell, and was born July 2, 1839, in Newberry township.

James N. Prowell was born in 1816, in Fairview township, and received a common-school education. After his marriage he located in Newberry township, where he remained four years, and then removed to Fairview township, and later bought a farm at Smoketown, remaining at the latter place seven years. He next removed to Fishing Creek Valley, Fairview township, where he stayed four years before removing to Yocumtown, his home for eleven years. He finally located in Harrisburg, where occurred the death of his wife, Hannah Miller, born Aug. 20, 1820, daughter of Peter Miller. Mr. Prowell married (second) a Mrs. Neater, and she also died in Harrisburg, and after her death Mr. Prowell went to live with his children. He died in 1902, and is buried at Salem Church in Fairview township. His children were as follows: Joseph M.; Elizabeth, born in 1840, died at the age of sixty years; Peter N., born in 1842, married (first) a Miss Prowell and (second) Miss Annie Good, and resides at Yocumtown; David, born in 1844, died in 1877, and was buried at Salem Church; Nancy, born in 1847, died young; Jeremiah, born in 1849, married Amanda Hartman, and lives at Steelton, Dauphin county; Mary A., born in 1850, married George W. Parks and lives in Steelton; Webster, born in 1855, married Annie Reed; Sarah Ellen, born in 1858, died young; Edward, born in 1862, married Emma Lease, and lives in New Cumberland, Cumberland county; and Lucinda, born in 1856, married Herman Goodyear, and they are living in New Cumberland, Cumberland county.

Joseph M. Prowell attended school in Newberry and Fairview townships until the age of twenty years, and then started working in the lime-kilns and quarries. In 1862 Mr. Prowell removed to Dauphin county, and followed trucking for a number of years. In August, 1864, he enlisted in Co.D, 201st P. V. I., being mustered in at Harrisburg. Mr. Prowell did guard duty and served ten months, and, after receiving his discharge returned to Newberry township and went to farming. In 1877 Mr. Prowell located near Strinestown, Conewago township, and Nov. 18, 1902, bought a home in Strinestown, where he is now living retired.

In 1867 Mr. Prowell married Miss Elizabeth Ann Crider, daughter of Reuben and Mary (Hoffman) Crider, of York county, and the children born to them have been: Ross, who married Ida Westheffer, and lives in Strinestown; Rebecca, who married Andrew Fink, and lives in Conewago township; Martin, who married Anna Hoffman, and lives at Falls, York county; Grant, who married Amelia Sweitzer, and lives at Falls; Agnes, who married George Bear, and lives at Zion's View; Cora, who died at the age of nineteen, and is buried in Manchester township; Bertha, who married Isaac Bupp, of York; Emma, who married George Strine, of Strinestown; Mary Jane, who married George Sheaffer, of York; and George W., a baker at York.

In politics Mr. Prowell is a Republican, and for two years has been supervisor, and has also served as judge of election.

WILLIAM C. SEITZ, M. D., a representative of the school of Homeopathy in York county, is established in the practice of his profession at Glen Rock. He is a native son of York county, and a descendant of pioneer stock, the name being historically identified with that section of the Keystone State since very early in the eighteenth century. The first representative of the family in York county was John Seitz, great-grandfather of the Doctor, who was born and reared in Germany and who was a resident of Maryland for a time before coming hither. He located near what is now the thriving city of York and took up a tract of wild land, a considerable portion of which he reclaimed to cultivation, becoming one of the prominent pioneer farmers of this locality. He had three sons, Andrew, John and Lewis—the first two named continuing to be permanent residents of Pennsylvania, while Lewis removed to Ohio, where he was undoubtedly the first to represent the family.

Andrew Seitz, grandfather of William C., was born on the old homestead farm, in York township, and the major portion of his active career was devoted to agricultural pursuits. He removed to Maryland after his marriage and there continued to reside for a few years, after which he returned to York county, where both he and his wife (whose maiden name was Catharine Klinefeiler; born Aug. 23, 1784, died Aug. 21, 1859) passed the remainder of their lives. They became the parents of seven children, all of whom attained years of maturity.

William Seitz, father of the Doctor, was born in Harford county, Md., where his parents had taken up their residence a few years previously, and the year of his nativity was 1821. He was educated partly in Maryland and partly in York county, where he grew to manhood. He became a prominent and influential farmer of Shrewsbury township, was a man of exalted principles and ever commanded the highest respect. He died in 1871, being survived a score of years by his wife, whose death occurred in 1891. Her maiden name was Magdalena Zeigler, and she was born and reared in York county, being likewise a representative of one of its sterling pioneer families. Both she and her husband were members of the Lutheran church, in whose faith they reared their children, concerning whom is recorded the following: Eli married Mary Overmiller, and is engaged in milling at Glen Rock, York county; Emanuel, who married Mary Burkhardt, is employed by the Pennsylvania Steel Co.; Eliza J., deceased, was the wife of Samuel Mace, of Shrewsbury township; Cyrus is deceased; Jus-

Michael Zeigler, the maternal grandfather of Dr. Seitz, came of stanch German lineage, and was a member of a family early founded in Pennsylvania. He devoted the greater portion of his life to agricultural pursuits and was one of the worthy and substantial citizens of York county, where both he and his wife died. They had six children, namely: Michael, George, John, Mary (who became the wife of Michael Seitz), Magdalena (mother of William C.), and Andrew.

Dr. William C. Seitz passed his boyhood days on the old homestead farm, continuing to assist in its work according to the measure of his powers until he had attained the age of fourteen years, and having in the meanwhile duly availed himself of the advantages of the public schools of his native township of Shrewsbury, where he was born March 18, 1864. He then entered upon an apprenticeship at the printer's trade, in the office of the "Glen Rock Item," where he duly familiarized himself with the mysteries and intricacies of the "art preservative of all arts," and in which he continued to be actively engaged until he was about twenty-one years of age. He had in the meanwhile determined upon a professional career, and he forthwith began preparations for entering the medical profession by taking up a course of technical reading under the preceptorship of Dr. H. W. Fair, of Seitzland, with whom he remained as a student for three years. At the expiration of that period, in the autumn of 1885, he was matriculated at Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia, one of the leading Homeopathic medical schools of the Union, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated with his degree on the 6th of April, 1888, coming forth well equipped for the active work and responsibilities of the profession in which he has since attained such marked prestige and success. Soon after his graduation Dr. Seitz located at Steelton, Dauphin county, Pa., where he remained in practice until March of the following year, when he located at Glen Rock, where he has since been established in practice. He has secured a representative clientele, and is the only Homeopathic practitioner in that section be-between York and the city of Baltimore. He is a member of the American Institute of Homeopathy, and finds his identification with this national association of much practical value, while he keeps in close touch with the advances made in his profession, by the proper utilization of the best standard and periodical literature of a technical order. He is also a member of the State Homeopathic Society and the Tri-County Homeopathic (Goodno) Society.

In politics Dr. Seitz give allegiance to the Republican party, and he has ever manifested a loyal interest in public affairs of a local nature, while for the past three years he has been a valued and zealous member of the board of education of his home town. In a fraternal way he is affiliated with the Improved Order of Red Men, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, the Knights of Malta and the Heptasophs, while both he and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church. He has shown distinctive public spirit, and that he has lent his aid in the promotion of enterprises having a marked bearing upon the commercial and industrial status of the community is indicated in the fact that he was one of the organizers of the American Wire Cloth Co., of Glen Rock, that he is a stockholder in the Glen Rock Stamping Co., and was one of the organizers, stockholders and directors of the Glen Rock Wire Screen Works.

The Doctor has marked musical talent, both vocal and instrumental, and displays in that line a predilection that seems to be characteristic of the family, eleven of whose members have been enrolled upon the membership list of the Glen Rock Musical Association, of which he is the director, while he is also known as a skillful clarinetist.

On March 26, 1890, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Seitz to Sarah C. Heathcote, who was born and reared in York county, being a daughter of James and Christina Heathcote and a granddaughter of William Heathcote. Dr. and Mrs. Seitz have two children—James S. and Grace L.

AMBROSE SCHMIDT. Possessed of that temperament (dominant in so many of the German emigrants to America) which leads to success and to an honored place in a new land, Ambrose Schmidt, for more than half a century a resident of York county, attained a substantial business reputation and position, and by his useful and active life, rounded out for himself a career that is most creditable. He was eighteen years of age, when, in 1842, he settled at York, Pa., with his parents, Andrew and Catherine (Meissner) Schmidt, just after their arrival from the Fatherland, where Ambrose was born in 1824. In Germany he had acquired the trade of a stone-mason by a complete apprenticeship, and thus equipped he began life at York, following the trade industriously for a period of twenty-four years. During that time he was employed on many of the notable improvements that were made at the county seat. He aided in demolishing the old county jail, which stood at the northeast corner of George and King streets, and in 1855 he assisted in the construction of the large jail located in the northeast part of York. In 1866 Mr. Schmidt removed from York to Hanover, where he embarked in the brewing business, in 1878, adding thereto beer bottling and the manufacture of soda water. This business he conducted successfully for twenty-two years, or until 1888, when he disposed of the business to his son, Ambrose, and his son-in-law, Nicholas Wagner, and retired at the age of sixty-four years.

Mr. Schmidt was married Aug. 2, 1849, to Catherine Boll of York, and to them were born six children, as follows: Catherine, deceased; Margaret, who married Nicholas Wagner, now a merchant tailor of Hanover; Adam E., deceased; Mary, who married Henry Klunk, of Hanover; Ambrose, deceased; and John J., of Hanover. The father died in that city in 1898, at the age of seventy-four years, and ten years after his retirement from active life, his faithful wife surviving until 1902. They were devout members of St. Joseph's Catholic Church of Hanover, and when the present handsome edifice of the congregation on Baltimore street was erected in 1877, Mr. Schmidt was a member of the building committee. He was highly esteemed for his many good qualities and is remembered by a wide circle of friends.

JOHN J. SCHMIDT, son of Ambrose and Catherine (Boll) Schmidt, and an ex-chief burgess of Hanover, was born in York Aug. 14, 1859. When about seven years of age he removed with his parents from York to Hanover, and his education was received in the parochial schools at Hanover. When his school-days were ended, John J. acquired the tinner's trade, which he followed for a number of years, but in 1882 he became interested in the bottling works of his father at Hanover, and a little later purchased the "City Hotel," which he conducted about nine years, when he purchased the bottling business formerly conducted by his father. In 1894 he associated with himself as partner Julius C. Helb, which connection continued until 1900. In that year they sold the works to Victor K. and W. F. Jordan. Mr. Schmidt was the founder of the Hanover Bottling works, which he subsequently sold. For several years he has served as a director in the Hanover Savings Fund Society, the oldest banking institution in the town. He has prospered in all his business enterprises, and has acquired a considerable amount of real estate. He built for himself, in 1900, a fine residence on Middle street, and in addition owns several other residence properties in Hanover.

Mr. Schmidt has also taken an active part in politics, serving as a delegate to both county and State conventions. For six years he was a member of the Hanover borough council and for three years a competent and efficient chief burgess. During his term of office as chief burgess he was instrumental in the adoption of many measures for the improvement of the borough, resulting in superior sanitary conditions and the general welfare of the city. Among the fraternal orders, Mr. Schmidt holds membership in the Order of Heptasophis, the St. Joseph Knights of St. Paul and the B. P. O. E. He was married in 1882 to Mary, daughter of Henry and Anna Kampeter of York. Six children have been born to them, and of these five survive, namely: Annie, Gertrude, Hilda, Marie, and Florence. Henry, the only son, died at the age of ten years. Mr. and Mrs. Schmidt are members of St. Joseph's Catholic Church.

JOHN W. MINNICH. When it is stated that the name borne by John W. Minnich has been identified with the annals of York county for more than a century, further mention of the family prestige in connection with the development and civic and material progress of that favored section is scarcely demanded. As one generation has here followed another upon the stage of life's activities, there have been found in the Minnich family men of sturdy integrity, marked pragmatic ability and invincible spirit, while the women have been endowed with gracious attributes and have played well their part in home and social life. Industry and tenacity of purpose have been dominating characteristics of the Minnich family, whose members seem to have invariably held no obstacle as insuperable when interposed in the path of ambition and definite accomplishment in their respective fields of endeavor. They have also evinced a high sense of stewardship and an unequivocal loyalty to the duties of citizenship, so that it is needless to say that the family has ever maintained a high standing in York county. The prestige of the name has been well upheld by the subject under special consideration, who possesses in a significant degree the sterling characteristics noted above, as indicative of the family attributes, and who is one of the influential citizens and most prominent business men of the borough of Dallastown, where his capitalistic interests are of wide scope and variety. He has done much to further the industrial and commercial precedence of the community and is one of the most popular and highly esteemed business men of his native county.

John Wesley Minnich was born on a farm three miles east of Dallastown, in York township, this county, Jan. 21, 1861, a son of Granville and Mary (Spatz) Minnich, both of whom were likewise born and reared in York county, the latter having been a daughter of Jacob and Mary (Daugherty) Spatz, so that the lineage of Mr. Minnich has a strain of Irish blood mingled with that of the sturdy German extraction. The father of John W. Minnich was a farmer and died in the prime of life, passing away in 1863, at the age of twenty-five years, and leaving his widow in straitened circumstances with two young sons dependent upon her. The devoted mother survived her husband not many years, being summoned into eternal rest in 1873, at the age of thirty years. She was a zealous member of the United Brethren Church, was a woman of noble attributes, and held in affectionate regard by a wide circle of appreciative friends. Owing to the conditions noted in this connection, John W. and his brother early began to fight the battle of life and it is most gratifying to note the distinctive success which each has attained, the brother, William H., M. D., being one of the representative members of the medical profession at Dallastown, York county. He is a thoroughly schooled physician and surgeon, is a member of numerous medical societies, and prominent both professionally and socially. The two orphaned lads bravely faced the world, undaunted by the unpromising environments and circumstances of their childhood, and both have fought their way to the front, having never violated by one jot or tittle their legitimate claim to the confidence and respect of their fellowmen.

John W. Minnich secured his educational discipline in the public schools of his native township, completing his specific school work as a student in the high school at Dallastown, and having, in the meanwhile, bent his energies to incidental labors which rendered financial returns of greater or less amounts. In 1879, at the age of eighteen years, he entered upon an apprenticeship at the trade of cigar-making, in Dallastown. He soon became a skilled workman, and continued to be employed at his trade until 1882, when he gave incept to his independent business career by engaging in the same line of enterprise on his own responsibility, beginning operations on a modest scale and giving employment to three assistants. This little factory was the nucleus of his present extensive industry in the line, the business having been developed through well directed energy and correct methods and being now conducted under the title of J. W. Minnich & Son. In the finely equipped factory employment is afforded to an average force of 125 workmen, and the output of cigars is the largest of all the factories in York county, more than twelve million representing the average annual product of the concern. York county, as is well-known, maintains high prestige in the growing and manufacture of tobacco, through which is maintained one of the leading industrial activities of that section, and thus there is no little significance in the above statements as to the relative status of the enterprise built up and maintained by Mr. Minnich.

Aside from the enterprise just mentioned Mr. Minnich has prominently identified himself with local business and civic interests. In 1903 he effected the organization of the First National Bank of Dallastown, which he capitalized for $50,000 and which is today recognized as one of the stable and ably managed financial institutions of York county, Mr. Minnich being the principal stockholder and having been elected to the presidency of the bank at the time of its organization, while he has since continued to zealously safeguard its interests and direct its policy along safe and conservative lines. He was the founder of the Dallastown Water Co., of whose directorate he remains a valued member; is president and a director of the Dallastown, on Sept. 1, 1883, and who is one of the the Merchants' Cigar Box Co., of Dallastown, which manufactures more than 8,000 boxes daily. It may thus be seen that Mr. Minnich is conspicuously identified with the industrial and commercial activities of his home county and State, and is equally prominent in civic and social connections. In politics he gives a staunch allegiance to the Democratic party, and, while never ambitious for official preferment, his fellow citizens have called upon him to serve in various positions of local trust and responsibility. Thus he has given faithful service in the offices of councilman, chief burgess, school director and in other local capacities. In a fraternal way he is affiliated with Dallas Lodge, No. 1017, I. O. O. F., and with the local organization of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. He is a member of the United Brethren Church.

On April 9, 1882, Mr. Minnich was united in marriage to Miss Susie Geesey, who was born and reared in York county, being a daughter of Samuel and Sarah (Rechard) Geesey, of York township. Mr. and Mrs. Minnich have one son, Chauncey W., who was born in Dallastown, on Sept. 1, 1883, and who is one of the popular young men of the community. He is now associated with his father in business, having been admitted to partnership in his cigar-manufacturing enterprise on the 1st of Jan., 1904, since which time the business has been conducted under the firm name of J. W. Minnich & Son.

AARON FRANKLIN LOUCKS was born on the family homestead in Spring Garden township Nov. 14, 1857, son of Abraham and Mary (Peters) Loucks. Abraham Loucks was the son of George and Catherine (Shank) Loucks, and the other children of the family were: Isaac and Nathan, deceased; Jacob; and Amanda, the wife of P. H. Gatiel. Abraham married Mary Peters, daughter of Peter and Anna May (Hess) Peters, and they became the parents of a large family, viz.: Aaron F.; Joseph; George; Perry, deceased; Abraham; Isabella and Amanda, deceased; and Mary, wife of Jacob M. Gruber. The father died in 1876, while the mother survived him until 1891.

Aaron F. Loucks during his boyhood attended the old school on the property of the late Jeremiah Black, a structure which is still standing, and later he was a student at Hyde’s School in Spring Garden township. He chose farming for his life work and in 1884 started independently in North Codorus township, but five years later bought the old Loucks homestead, where he has since lived. The property has been in the family for over seventy years, is in a section noted for its rich soil and is one of the most productive farms even in that vicinity.

Mr. Loucks was married in 1884 to Emeline, daughter of Reuben and Elizabeth (Spangler) Minich. Mr. Minich, who died in 1903, had a large family, viz.: Leander M.; Edwin; Henry; Simon, deceased; Ezra; Emeline, Mrs. Loucks; Agnes, Mrs. Kaufmann; Priscilla, deceased; Flora, Mrs. Gladfelter; and Rosa. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Loucks three children have been born, as follows: Mary E., the wife of Samuel H. Ensminger; Reuben F., at home; and Florence V., attending school. Mr. Loucks is a Republican and is identified with Christ Lutheran Church at York.

CHARLES E. SMITH, florist at York, is a son of Charles H. Smith, who emigrated from Westphalia, Germany, in 1839, settling in York, where, after a successful business as a lime-burner for many years, he died in 1901, aged eighty-two years. Charles H. Smith married Charlotte Meyers, daughter of Harry Meyers (deceased), and the children born to this union were ten in number, five of whom are dead. The survivors are: Mary, the wife of John Einerbrink, connected with the Meyers & Adams establishment in York; Catherine, at home; Emma, the wife of C. H. Dempwolf, whose sketch will be found elsewhere; William F., in the coal and lime business in York; and Charles E.

Charles E. Smith was born in York, Jan. 19, 1862, and was educated in the public schools and in York County Academy. His first business was as a coal dealer, and after continuing in that line for eight years, he established himself as a florist. This was in 1889, and the fact that he has now twenty-six fine hot houses at the corner of Jefferson and Juniper streets, attests to his success. At one time Mr. Smith shipped largely of his products to other sections, successfully maintaining two stores in Baltimore for six years, but, discovering that he had home trade enough to keep him busy, he confined himself exclusively to the local business, making a specialty of fine cut flowers. His taste as a landscape gardener and decorator is such that for two or more seasons he has planted those two beautiful parks of York, Penn and Farquhar.

Charles E. Smith was married Oct. 9, 1885, to Emma Sieck, daughter of A. H. Sieck, a well-known baker of Baltimore, and eight children were born to this union, of whom Tillie died in infancy, and Paul, at the age of nine years. The survivors are Florence and Elizabeth, who have finished their education; Maria and Ruth, at school; and Elmer and Eugene. The only social organization to which Mr. Smith belongs is the Vigilant Fire Co., he having been a member since 1900. In religion he is a Lutheran, belonging to St. John’s Lutheran Church, in which he was a deacon at one time, and he helped to organize its English Sunday school in 1903. Mr. Smith is a Democrat, but takes no active part in politics, having declined several nominations that were offered to him. His business receives his personal attention, and a visit to his salesroom, first door east of the Security building, on East Market street, bears abundant evidence that Mr. Smith not only adheres closely to business, but that he thoroughly understands it.

JAMES W. GROVE is a member of one of the substantial and long established families of York county, which has been the home of many valuable citizens belonging to this family. He was born Nov. 19, 1846, on the homestead farm in Chanceford township, son of William and Jane (Cross) Grove, grandson of Thomas Grove and great-grandson of Jacob Grove.

Jacob Grove was born in York county, Pa., whither his father and a brother had emigrated in young manhood from Germany. He married a lady of English descent, and took up 300 acres of land, and built a log house. He was a devoted member of the U. P. Church, having belonged formerly to the Seeders. Jacob Grove died about 1828, in his eightieth year, the father of the following children: Francis died in Fawn township; James died in the West; William died in the West; John; Matthew became the father of William M. Grove, mentioned elsewhere; Martin died in the West; Peggy married John Stewart, and died in Chanceford township; Betsy married F. Grimes, and died in Fawn township; Thomas; and Jennie, who died in York county, married George Anderson.

Thomas Grove was born on the homestead in Chanceford township, in 1785, and grew up on the farm, helping his father to clear it up from the wilderness. He married Mary Williamson and they removed to Hopewell township, where he bought land and resided for several years. He then returned to Chanceford township, and took up his father's house farm, caring for his father in his declining years. After the latter's death Thomas Grove bought the farm, and resided upon it until his death in 1852. Religiously he was a member of the Guinston U. P. Church. In his political sympathies he was an old-line Whig. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Grove were as follows: Jacob; Peggy, who married Robert Brooks, died with Matthew; James, who married Ellen Allison, died in Hopewell township; William, father of James W., married Jane Cross, daughter of James Cross; Matthew; Eliza Jane, died young; Mary, married A. P. Thompson, of Dallastown; and Martin, who died on his grandfather's home farm, married Sarah Lutz, who still survives.

William Grove, son of Thomas and father of James W., was born in Hopewell township, and received a common school education. When a young man he turned his attention to farming, purchasing a part of his father's farm which had been owned by his grandfather, and on this farm he lived and died. He married Jane Cross, daughter of James Cross, one of York county's early settlers, whose father was an officer in Washington's army. The children born to William Grove and his wife were: James W.; and Sarah E., who married J. Henderson Stewart, of Rockey, Chanceford township.

James W. Grove, son of William, received his education in the public schools of his township, his first teacher being Jane McFadden, and the last in the public school William Smith. At the age of nineteen he finished at Murphy's Academy, where he studied under the careful teaching of Rev. Merrill, after which he worked at wagon-making during the summer with Daniel Conrad. His winters were spent teaching school, his first school being the Conrad school, which he taught for two terms, and then for three terms the Thompson school engaged him as teacher. Both these schools were in his home township. Mr. Grove followed wagon-making with Mr. Conrad for five years, and worked at it at home off and on in connection with farming. In 1873 he bought his present farm of twenty-nine acres which was part of the old Armstrong estate. Mr. Grove also has another farm of fifty acres, formerly belonging to his father, adjoining his present farm. In connection with his farming pursuits, he has been a manufacturer of cigars for the past fifteen years.

In 1874 Mr. Grove married Miss Sarah Ella Moody, born in Shrewsbury township, daughter of William, a farmer, who died many years ago, and Matilda (Young) Moody, who died in July, 1903. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Grove came children as follows: W. Curtis, of Lower Chanceford township; and Lottie Ethel, who married Birdie S. Curran.

In May, 1905, Mr. Grove completed twenty years service as justice of the peace; he is president of the Chanceford Mutual Insurance Company, and has served as school director six years. In religion he is a member of the New Harmony Presbyterian Church. In politics he is a stanch Democrat. Mr. Grove is highly respected in the township, and he holds an exalted position in the social and political circles in his community. Mrs. Grove died in July, 1903, aged fifty-two years.

ELI CUNNINGHAM, a retired farmer of Springetsbury township, was born near York in the year 1837.

John Cunningham, father of Eli and David, both prominent citizens of Springetsbury township, was born in Maryland, Jan. 22, 1800. He came from his native State to York county at the age of eighteen and settled near York in the present area of Springetsbury township. He first secured employment with George Loucks, a prominent miller and distiller, and also assisted in the construction of the railroad from York to Wrightsville. Being active and enterprising, he turned his attention to farming. He first purchased a small property. By diligence and attentiveness to duty he became the owner of a farm containing 104 acres, two and a half miles northeast of York. When John Cunningham purchased this land most of it was uncultivated. By the assistance of his sons, he cleared the land and made it rich and productive, erected new farm buildings, made many other improvements, and pursued farming as his occupation the remainder of his life. He assisted largely in the erection of Mount Zion Lutheran Church, and was in every way progressive and public-spirited. Being of kindly disposition and genial nature, he had a large circle of friends and many warm admirers. John Cunningham married Elizabeth, daughter of John and Christine (Shultz) Spangler. She was born Oct. 17, 1812. John Cunningham died in 1866, and his wife survived him until 1883. They became the parents of children, as follows: William, deceased; Susan, deceased wife of William Nye; George and John, twins, both deceased; Lucinda, who died unmarried; Eli, of Springetsbury township; David; and Elizabeth (Mrs. Henry Shultz), of the same township.

Eli Cunningham grew to manhood on his father’s farm. Meantime he attended the public schools during the winter, and the remainder of the year aided in the cultivation of the farm. This occupation interested him, and he later engaged in farming for himself and attended the York markets. He prospered in this business, and after a while became the owner of a part of the homestead farm. He also became deeply interested in fruit culture, and planted a large orchard, raising hundreds of bushels of apples and peaches annually for many years. In 1893, Mr. Cunningham retired from farming, and his farm has since been cultivated by his son.

In the spring of 1867 Mr. Cunningham was married to Caroline, daughter of Jacob and Leah (Rudy) Loucks, and the children born of this marriage are: John E., manager of his father’s farm, who married Miss Alice Christ, and has four children: Bruce, Mallie, Eli and an infant; Emma, who married Henry Leckrone, a Springetsbury farmer, and has seven children; George Elias, Morris William, Carrie May, Allen Howard, Anthony Jacob, Walter Dewey, and Paul Raymond; Walter, by trade a painter in Springetsbury, who married Miss Lillie Snyder, and has one child, Ray; and Dora, Mrs. George Worley, who resides at the home of her parents, and has two children: Grace and Stewart.

W. A. REIST, proprietor of the “Colonial Hotel,” in the city of York, is a native of Manheim, Lancaster Co., Pa., born in 1866, son of John H. and Mary Ann (Reiff) Reist. He received a good education, graduating from the Lancaster high school, and has ever since been connected with the hotel business, in various capacities. In 1894 he had his first experience as a proprietor in the hostelry he is at present conducting, of which he took possession and where he continued until 1898. George Campbell then succeeded him at the “Colonial.” Mr. Reist becoming proprietor of the “Sterling Hotel,” at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., which has the finest fire-proof hotel buildings to be found anywhere in the State. It was furnished throughout by Mr. Reist, at an expense of fifty-two thousand dollars, the equipment being a model of excellence and convenience, and a credit to his good judgment. After two years at the “Sterling” Mr. Reist returned to York, and took possession of the “Hotel National,” which he refitted and conducted successfully until the fall of 1905, when it was purchased by Mr. William M. Dodson. On disposing of his interest in the “National” Mr. Reist purchased a half interest in the “Iroquois Hotel” at Miami, Fla., which he carries on during the winter season, and in June, 1906, he again acquired an interest in a York hotel, succeeding George Campbell and re-establishing himself at the “Colonial.” This hotel is now undergoing extensive rebuilding, and a $300,000 addition is being erected; of steel and BIographical.

Alcvin Reist was born in Manheim, Lancaster Co., Pa., in 1870, son of John H. and Mary Ann (Reiff) Reist. He received a good education and throughout his business career he has been identified with the hotel business. For a number of years he was engaged as steward, in which capacity he was connected with such well known Pennsylvania hostleries as the "HotelPenn," at Reading; the "Colonial," at York; and the "Sterling," at Wilkes-Barre. Then he was manager of the "Hotel Royal," of York, for some time before he concluded to start business for himself, as proprietor of the "Hotel Victoria," in West York, at the corner of Company and West streets. This hotel has thirty-four sleeping-rooms, fitted up according to the most modern ideas both for taste and comfort, and is conducted with every regard for the needs and wishes of its patrons. Mr. Reist has won the high regard of all who have known him, whether as business associates or as guests at the various hostleries with which he has been connected, and he has entrenched himself strongly in the esteem of the best class of people wherever he has gone. His success as the proprietor of the "Hotel Victoria" is well merited, and a source of gratification to the hosts of friends he has made.

Mr. Reist is deservedly popular. He is known in fraternal circles as an active member of the Elks, and is zealous in religious work as a member of the Episcopal Church, of which he is a liberal supporter. On election day he supports the Republican party.

Mr. Reist was married, Oct. 19, 1904, to Miss Sophia Matilda Katz, daughter of Karl E. and Sophia Matilda (Elminger) Katz, the ceremony being performed by Rev. William Vincent Dawson, vicar of the Episcopal Chapel of the Incarnation, at York.

Alfred W. Prowell, now living retired after an active life devoted to agricultural pursuits, is descended from one of the pioneers of York county.

William Prowell settled in York county at an early date, and was the father of three sons: Joseph, Samuel, and James B.

James B. Prowell, son of William, was born May 18, 1786, and was a farmer of Fairview township, owning about 425 acres of land. He did a great deal of building on his farms, also following distilling to a great extent. He married Rebecca Spence, born Oct. 5, 1788, and they were the parents of these children: Margaret, born Aug. 30, 1811; John S., born Oct. 14, 1813; Mary, born June 5, 1816; William, born Sept. 7, 1818; Esther, born Dec. 22, 1819; Rebecca, born Oct. 6, 1824; James, born May 6, 1827; and Samuel, born Oct. 5, 1831. James B. Prowell's death occurred in his sixtieth year, while his wife lived to be seventy-eight years old, and they were both interred at Salem Church, in Fairview township.

John S. Prowell, son of James B., born Oct. 14, 1813, received a common school education, and at the age of fifteen years, was employed by his father as a teamster to Baltimore. He later followed farming in Fairview township, and became the owner of a great deal of land. For a few years prior to his death, which occurred Jan. 18, 1886, he lived a retired life. He married Catherine Wilt, daughter of John and Julia (Mosey) Wilt, and she died in September, 1897. Both she and her husband are buried at Salem Church in Fairview township. The children born to this worthy couple were: William, who died young; Joseph, who lives at Goldsboro; Alfred W.; John, who married Mary Wilt; and Robert and Mary, who died in their youth.

Alfred W. Prowell was born Jan. 20, 1840, in Fairview township, and attended the Cross Roads school until he was twenty years old. He then went to farming, assisting his father and his uncle Samuel on their farms. After his marriage he located on his father's farm, which he inherited at the latter's death. Mr. Prowell built many new buildings and made improvements, and his farm is now one of the finest in the section. In 1898 he retired from active life, considering that he should have a rest after his many years of hard labor.

On Dec. 26, 1867, Mr. Prowell married Miss Harriet E. Zinn, daughter of Adam and Elizabeth (Shell) Zinn, of York county. The children born of this union were: Joseph Z., who married Elizabeth Crane, lives at Mechanicsburg, Cumberland county; Maggie K., died Feb. 16, 1903, at the age of thirty-three years, and is interred at the Cross Roads Church in Fairview township; William H., a blacksmith, married Augusta Cadwalader, of Warrington township, and died at the age of thirty-two years; Mary E., the wife of George Parthmore, lives at Eichinger's Mill, Fairview township; James F. married Cordelia Miller; Samuel W. married Ida N. Souders, and is farming the old homestead in Fairview township; Arvilla J. married H. D. Rudy, of North Braddock; and Alfred E. married Amanda Warren, and lives at Lisburn, Cumberland county.

In political belief Mr. Prowell is a Republican and at a convention in York, Aug. 1, 1905, he received the nomination by acclamation for director of the poor. Mr. Prowell is a worthy representative of an old and honored family, who have been residents of York county for a great many years.

C. B. Krall was born Jan. 9, 1846, in Washington township, and was given excellent educational opportunities at Kralltown, also in Union county, and at the York Normal School. Thereafter until 1878 he engaged in teaching school during the winter seasons, having had charge of the following schools in Washington township: Gochenour, Asper, Kimmel, Kralltown and Barnes, teaching in all ten terms. He then settled down to farming on the old homestead, which he bought of his father. In 1902 he came to his present place, in Washington township, on which he has erected all the buildings, and made all the improvements that have converted it into a comfortable home in which to pass his life. Mr. Krall having practically retired from active labor. In addition to his other holdings he has a fine farm of one hundred acres in this same township.

Mr. Krall was married (first) to Rebecca Kinter, daughter of Peter and Catherine (Deter) Kinter, born Feb. 2, 1836, who died Dec. 4, 1878; she is buried at Red Mount Church. The one daughter of this union, Katharine J., resides at home. Mr. Krall was married (second) to Margaret Mummert, born Jan. 6, 1854, daughter of Josiah Mummert, and she died Jan. 9, 1899, and is buried in the cemetery at Red Mount. She is survived by three sons: John Allen and Charles Wilmer, who are attending the Westchester Normal School; and Frank L., at home.

Mr. Krall is identified with the Republican party, and he has filled a number of local offices, such as school director and assessor. He has always been one of the leading members of educational and religious bodies wherever he has lived. He is trustee of the United Evangelical Church at Red Mount, also one of the trustees of the graveyard, has been for many years superintendent of the Sunday-school, a position he still fills, and has always been a liberal contributor to its various avenues of usefulness and benevolence. No resident of the community is held in higher esteem.

Eli Shindel, one of the large farmers and substantial citizens of York county, was born June 21, 1851, on the Shindel homestead in Manchester township, son of Frederick and Sarah (Hake) Shindel, and has been engaged in farming there his whole life.

Frederick Shindel, the great-grandfather of Eli Shindel, was born in Germany, May 10, 1724, and came to America, settling in Manchester township, York Co., Pa., about 1775. He took up a tract of land about two miles northwest of Emigsville, where he remained until his death, which occurred Aug. 26, 1804, when he was aged eighty years, three months and sixteen days; he is buried at Quickel's Church, in Conewago township.

Frederick G. Shindel, son of Frederick, and the grandfather of Eli Shindel, was born Aug. 27, 1760, in Manchester township, where he bought the old home and worked the farm until his death, Nov. 19, 1815, at the age of fifty-five years, two months, twenty-three days. Mr. Shindel married Gertrude Windemeyer, born Jan. 15, 1769, who died March 30, 1845, aged seventy-six years, two months, fifteen days. Both are buried at Quickel's Church. The children of this worthy couple were as follows: Jacob, born June 11, 1791, died in Fairview township Oct. 16, 1875, aged eighty-four years, four months, five days; Philip, born Sept. 20, 1793, died April 20, 1876, aged eighty-two years, seven months, twenty-three days; George, born Aug. 1, 1795, died Aug. 6, 1882, aged eighty-seven years, five days, in Manchester township; Daniel, born Jan. 20, 1798, died in the same township Sept. 9, 1886, aged eighty-eight years seven months, nineteen days; John, born May 10, 1800, died in Manchester township May 24, 1885, aged eighty-five years, fourteen days, and is buried at Aughenbaugh's school house; Frederick, born Nov. 30, 1806, died May 24, 1887, aged eighty years, five months, twenty-four days; Leah, born Oct. 12, 1814, married George Richtenberger, and died in New Cumberland, Cumberland Co., Pa., Nov. 4, 1900, aged eighty-six years, twenty-two days. Jacob, Philip, George, and Frederick Shindel are buried at Quickel's Church, and Daniel and John Shindel are buried at Aughenbaugh's school house.

Frederick Shindel, the father of Eli, was born Nov. 30, 1806, in Manchester township, and was educated at the York County Academy. For thirteen years he taught school, becoming very well known as a man of superior education and an educator throughout York county. He was noted for his penmanship, and was often called upon to engross documents and other important papers. Mr. Shindel was the possessor of two fine farms in Manchester township, of 125 and thirty acres, respectively (upon the latter of which Eli Shindel now resides), and forty acres of woodland in Conewago township. Mr. Shindel cultivated his farms with industry and success, and under his capable management made them wonderfully productive. On April 9, 1848, he married Sarah Hake, the estimable daughter of Jacob and Marianna (Copenhaver) Hake, of Manchester township. Mrs. Shindel was born Feb. 9, 1812, and died March 8, 1889, aged seventy-seven years, twenty-nine days. Mr. Shindel died May 24, 1887, aged eighty years, five months, twenty-four days. Both were buried at Quickel's church, in Conewago township, where all of Mr. Shindel's American ancestors have been interred.

Eli Shindel was the only child of his parents. He attended the township schools until about twenty-one years of age, when he entered the York County Academy, but his eyes failing him he could not continue at his books. He remained at home with his father, assisting on the farm, and at his father's death fell heir to his entire estate. Mr. Shindel has made many improvements on the property, building fine structures and doing extensive repairing; and the farms are about the most orderly and well-kept in the township. Mr. Shindel does not labor on the farms himself, but very ably oversees the work, and under his watchful eye the farms have both become very productive. He resides on the snug little thirty-acre farm in Manchester township, and he is very well known and highly respected in the community.

On March 18, 1890, Mr. Shindel married, in Conewago township, at the home of Jacob B. Bear, Mary Jane Sipe, who was born in 1858, daughter of Francis H. and Elizabeth (Dellinger) Sipe. Two children have come to Mr. and Mrs. Shindel: Martha Jane, born Nov. 29, 1891, and Frederick Allen, born April 28, 1895, who is the fourth member of the family to bear this name; both children are at home.

Mr. Shindel votes the Republican ticket. He is a member of Quickel's Church.

JOHN H. GLASSICK, of Felton, York county, was born July 18, 1859, son of Genesis and May (Linebaugh) Glassick.

Joseph Glassick, the grandfather of John H., was a farmer of York county, and had these children: Jeremiah; Genesis; Sarah, who married Mr. Minon; Mary; Caroline, who married George Eckhart; Joseph, married Heta Smith; William, who married Cathrine Eckart; and Vastmario, who married Jacob Dittenheffer.

Genesis Glassick, the father of our subject, was a farmer of York county, and was very prominent in the work of the M. E. Church in this section, for many years being an exhorter and class leader and superintendent of the Sunday-school. He was one of the founders of the M. E. Church at Cross Roads, and one of its most liberal financial supporters. His death occurred July 30, 1898, at the age of seventy-four years, and five days; his wife passed away Feb. 25, 1894, at the age of eighty-four years, eight months and sixteen days, and they were both buried at the Cross Roads M. E. Church burying ground. Two children had been born to them, John H. and William D.

John H. Glassick was reared in his native place and attended the schools of Hopewell township, living upon the farm upon which he now resides, and which he now owns. This farm has been owned by the Glassick family for about fifty-eight years. John H. Glassick's whole life has been devoted to farming; the improvement, development and cultivation of his large property fully occupying his time.

In politics Mr. Glassick is a stanch Democrat, but has never accepted office. In 1870 he married Miss Agnes Snyder, daughter of Jesse Snyder, of York county, and four children have been born to them: Thomas W.; Minnie F., who married Charles S. Bair, a merchant of Laurel; Lottie E., who married Howard Hershinger; and Charles W. Fraternally, Mr. Glassick is affiliated with the Shrewsbury Lodge, A. F. & A. M. His efforts have met with much success, and he is placed with the solid, substantial men of his township.

REV. JOHN A. METZGER. The deep religious sentiment that imbued the early pioneers of York and other counties of Pennsylvania finds expression to this day in the devoted lives of many descendants of those God-fearing ancestors. Rev. John A. Metzger is of the fifth generation from William Metzger, who migrated early in the eighteenth century to America, and settled near Manchester, York county. Next in this line of descent was his son William Metzger, and of the third generation was John Metzger, grandfather of Rev. John A. Besides following the almost universal vocation of farming John Metzger was for many years a teacher in York county.

Zachariah Metzger, son of John, was born in York county March 1, 1821. He married Maria Feiser, who was born Nov. 1, 1825, near Mt. Wolf, York county, daughter of Jacob and Catherine (Bubb) Feiser. After marriage Zachariah Metzger settled on the old homestead near Manchester, where he engaged in farming, becoming one of the prosperous and influential citizens of the neighborhood. He was a devoted member of what was then known as the Quickels Lutheran Church, near Manchester. He died July 25, 1900, at the ripe old age of seventy-nine years, and was buried at Quickels church. To Zachariah and Maria Metzger were born three children: Mary E., wife of Abram Hartman, a prosperous farmer residing in Manchester township; Louis C., deceased; and John A.

John A. Metzger was born near Manchester, Pa., April 5, 1855. His primary education was received in the common schools of that vicinity. On leaving the public schools in 1876 he entered Pennsylvania College, at Gettysburg, from which he graduated in 1880. Entering the Lutheran Theological Seminary at the same place, Mr. Metzger graduated from the institution in 1883. He was ordained by the Synod soon after, and his first and only charge has been at Hanover, where for the past twenty-two years he has served four country congregations, aggregating one thousand communicants. Rev. Metzger preaches twice each Sunday, thus serving two congregations, while his colleague, Mr. Hartman, alternating with him, fills the pulpit at the other two, the charges all being located in the rich and fertile country of the neighboring regions.

Rev. Mr. Metzger was married Sept. 25, 1882, to Miss Mary C. Culp, of Gettysburg, daughter of William and Lydia (Weikert) Culp, who were early settlers of Adams county. Two children were born to this union: Paul A. (deceased) and Ruth E. Rev. and Mrs. Metzger have also adopted a little daughter, Katherine Bentz. Rev. Metzger is a member of Patmos Lodge, No. 348, A. F. & A. M., of which he is a past master. He is also a member of the K. of P. His residence, which is the parsonage, is located at No. 112 Pleasant street, Hanover.
LYMAN B. MOODY, chief engineer of the Glen Manufacturing Co., of Glen Rock, York county, Pa., was born July 23, 1847, in Shrewsbury borough, son of William P. and Matilda (Young) Moody. The paternal grandfather, John Moody, married Mary Eaton, of Maryland, and they were the parents of the following children: William P.; Dr. James; Susan; Elizabeth, and John, who died in infancy. John Moody was a stone-mason and followed his trade in York county until his death. The maternal grandfather was Henry Young, who for many years was an Evangelical minister in York county. He was father of the following children: Matilda, Zacharias, Henry and Leah. William P. Moody was for many years superintendent of the Harrisburg and Baltimore pike. He was a member of the M. E. Church, and died in 1865, the father of these children: Lyman B.; Mary died young; Ella married J. S. Grove; John M.; Addie B. married John E. Bentz; Octavia married F. L. Bair; Edward; Amanda married John Kittenhouse; and three died in infancy.

Lyman B. Moody attended the Shrewsbury public schools and Lightner's school house, at North York, later studying two terms at York County Academy under Professor Rubey, shaping his course at the latter with the view of becoming a machinist and engineer. How well he succeeded can be seen by the fact that for four years he was chief engineer at the Cornell Iron Works, coming in 1876 to Glen Rock and entering the employ of Hoshour, Dise & Co., as engineer. He remained with that firm until the Glen Manufacturing Co. was incorporated, of which, as noted, he is chief engineer. Mr. Moody has many other interests, being one of the organizers and stockholders of the Enterprise Furniture Company of Glen Rock and also a stockholder in the Glen Manufacturing Company.

Mr. Moody is very active in public affairs, and it was during his three terms as burgess of Glen Rock that many improvements to the town have been made, not the least of which was the installation of the electric light system. Fraternally he has connected himself with the Knights of Pythias, and the Red Men. Since 1873 he has been a member of the M. E. Church and he is now a trustee and Sunday-school superintendent. In 1872 Mr. Moody married Mary E. Dise, daughter of John Dise of Shrewsbury township, and these children have been born to this union: William H. died in 1880; Alice, deceased, married Prof. C. A. Deveney; Carrie L.; Edward E.; Ira M.; Harold; Curtis and Ida. Mr. Moody is justly regarded as one of the leading and representative citizens of Glen Rock, and he enjoys the esteem and respect of the community which has known him so long. He is a thorough mechanic, and is upright in all his dealings.

CHARLES A. GROTE, justice of the peace of Manheim township, and a highly esteemed resident of that locality, was born in Shrewsbury township, York Co., Pa., July 23, 1855, son of Charles Grote.

Charles Grote came to the United States when twenty-five years of age, landing at Baltimore, whence he migrated to Shrewsbury township. He first followed distilling, and later went to farming, in which latter occupation he continued until his death Nov. 27, 1902, when he was aged seventy-five years. He is buried at Stiltz Church. His widow, Mrs. Joanna (Zeigler) Grote, resides on the old home farm in Codorus township. They had the following children: Louisa, wife of John Leibeger, lives in Baltimore Co., Md.; Charles A.; Joanna, wife of Samuel H. Hoke, lives in Shrewsbury township; Alberdena, wife of Emanuel Sheaffer, lives in Codorus township; George W., a contractor and builder of St. Joseph, Mo., married Flotilla I. Parvis, of Boone Co., Indiana; Henry died in Illinois, leaving two daughters and his widow, the latter now also deceased; Ethel; Bethel; and Amelia and Leah are deceased. Mr. Grote was a Democrat, and served his township as school director and tax collector.

Charles A. Grote attended the schools of Codorus and Shrewsbury townships until fourteen years old, and then learned shoemaking with John Sterling at Glen Rock. He is still engaged in that business, in connection with farming. Mr. Grote married Seranda J. Sterner, daughter of Henry and Mary (Herbst) Sterner, and after marriage, the young couple located in Codorus township, and there remained for ten years, after which he purchased his present fifty-acre farm. He was appointed justice of the peace in 1890, and still holds that office. As was his father, Mr. Grote is a Democrat, and he has also served as assessor for three years in Codorus township. He is a member of St. James Lutheran Church of Codorus township, and for twenty-two years has been a member of the choir, also serving twenty-one years as secretary of the Sunday-school.

To Mr. and Mrs. Grote were born: Mary, wife of Monroe H. Rohrbaugh, of Codorus township; Henry M., who married Lizzie Boehler, and lives in Manheim township; Cora A., wife of Samuel M. Rohrbaugh, and living in Manheim township; George R., who assists his father; and Harvey C., Lizzie A., Florence V. and Albert E., at home. Charles died when two years old, and Ira when one and one-half years.

Mr. Grote's postoffice is Brodbeck's, Pa. He is one of the township's leading men, is very popular and highly esteemed, and is a true Christian gentleman.

J. FLETCHER LUTZ, M. D., merits representation in this compilation by reason of the prestige which is his as one of the thoroughly schooled and distinctly successful members of the medical profession in York county, his residence being in the attractive borough of Glen Rock, while he controls a large and representative practice in that section of the county, being held in high regard as a physician and as a citizen.

Dr. Lutz is a native of the city of Baltimore, Md., where he made his debut on the stage of life Nov. 25, 1872, being a son of Charles Wesley and Mary Ann (Richmond) Lutz. The Doctor's great-great-grandparents in the agnostic line were born at Zeiselheim, near Worms, Germany, and are supposed to be buried at that place. Their son, Valentine Lutz, was for many years a prominent contractor and builder in Baltimore, where he was engaged in business until the close of his life. He passed away in 1860, at the age of ninety-three years.

John G. Lutz, the Doctor's grandfather, was born March 16, 1810, and died Feb. 7, 1884. He married Mary Jackson, who was born Oct. 1, 1820, in Smithfield, W. Va., and died July 22, 1883. She was a daughter of William Jackson, born in 1781, died in 1826, who married Mary Jane Walker, born in 1789, died in 1855; her father, Jonathan Walker, was born in 1732, and was killed while serving in the Revolutionary war in 1777.

Charles Wesley Lutz, father of J. Fletcher, was born and reared in the beautiful old "Monument City" and metropolis of the State of Maryland. He was a carpenter by trade, and became a successful contractor and builder in his native city, where he was busily engaged until his death in 1881, while his cherished and devoted wife, Mary Ann Richmond, died Feb. 12, 1903. Of their two children, the Doctor is the elder; and his brother, William Richmond, married Miss Charlotte Eigner, of Baltimore, and they make their home in that city.

The maternal great-great-grandfather of Dr. Lutz was John Wilkes Howland, whose loyalty to the king caused him to refuse to take up arms in behalf of the Colonies, and he was never again heard from, it being supposed that he went to England. His only child, Nancy, born Aug. 7, 1771, in Howard county, Md., married Jeremiah Cullum, born June 18, 1762. The Howlands were descended from John Howland, who came to this land on the first voyage of the "Mayflower" in 1620, and who married Elizabeth, daughter of John Tilley, also passengers on the "Mayflower." John Howland died Feb. 23, 1672-3, aged above eighty years. According to the Plymouth Records "He was a godly man and an ancient professor in the ways of Christ. He was one of the first comers into this land and was the last man that was left of those that came over in the Ship called the Mayflower that lived in Plymouth." He left numerous descendants. The Howlands were numbered among the law-makers of England, and representatives of the name became members of the House of Lords, and attained much of distinction in public life.

Authentic data establish the fact that the original emigrant of the Cullum family came to the American Colonies with the second Lord Baltimore's expedition, or about that time. The Cullums were residents of Harford county, Md., for many years, and in later generations representatives of the family located in New York, and one member established a home at a place designated as Cullum's Rifles, near the city of Cincinnati, Ohio. Originally the Cullums were from Haistead House, Suffolk, England, where the name was identified with the great basic art of agriculture for many generations, raising malt grains in the district of a ready market, while the lineage traces back to good patrician stock.

Jeremiah Cullum, who married Nancy Howland, was an architect by vocation. He and his wife had nine children, of whom Mary, born April 12, 1788, married James Fletcher; John Wilkes Howland, born May 28, 1790, married Sarah Marvin; Margaret, born May 20, 1793, married James Edwards; Harriet, born Aug. 20, 1795, became the wife of Elijah Therlkl. William Pitt, born Nov. 28, 1797, married Mary Boone; Richard Howland, born Oct. 9, 1800, married Naomi Parsons; Ann, born Nov. 9, 1804, married William Clark; Jeremiah Wesley, born February 18, 1808, married Margaret Blair; and Emanuel Howard, born Jan. 13, 1813, died at the age of thirteen months, on the thirteenth day of the month. James Fletcher, the maternal great-grandfather of Dr. Lutz, served with distinction in the war of 1812, as did also John Wilkes Cullum, and their homes were thrown open for the reception and care of sick and wounded soldiers. Henry Richmond, father of Mary Ann (Richmond) Lutz and grandfather of Dr. Lutz, was of English lineage on his father's side, and of French-Canadian on his mother's. He was a man of admirable attributes of character, strong in his individuality, and he gained and retained the respect and high regard of all with whom he came in contact. His wife was a woman of remarkable will power, and it is said of her that the "soft, soothing touch of her hand would charm away the worst pain."

Dr. J. Fletcher Lutz secured his early educational discipline in the public schools of his native city, and the Baltimore Polytechnical School, where he completed a course of study, which was supplemented by further study in Sadler's Business College, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1889. In the meanwhile he had formulated definite plans touching his future career, and in harmony therewith he took up the study of medicine, matriculated in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore, where he made most appreciative use of the superior advantages offered, completing the prescribed course, and being there graduated as a member of the class of 1894. Soon after receiving his well-earned degree of Doctor of Medicine, he became resident physician of Bay View Hospital, in Baltimore, thus fortifying himself for his chosen profession through the clinical experience to be gained in the hospital, in which he remained as intern for two years, within which period he also took up a special course in the Presbyterian Eye & Ear Hospital, in the same city. After leaving Bay View Dr. Lutz entered the New York Polyclinic where he took a postgraduate course in 1895. In January, 1896, he located in Glen Rock, York Co., Pa., where he has since remained in active practice, having secured a representative clientele and gained prestige as a physician and surgeon of high attainments and great practical skill and judgment. His office is one of the best in equipment to be found in the county, having the most modern and approved electrical appliances and other accessories demanded in the best medical and surgical treatments. His practice is constantly expanding in scope and importance, and he is gradually finding it expedient to devote the major portion of his time to office practice, finding but little opportunity to respond to the many demands upon him from the country districts. He is regarded as an expert in the treatment of diseases of the Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat, having given special attention to the study of this type of disorders and their proper treatment, but he does not confine his labors to any special branch, his practice being general. In 1903 Dr. Lutz took a special course in Microscopy under Dr. Charles Simon, of Baltimore, and also a special course in bacteriology.

Dr. Lutz is a loyal and public-spirited citizen, and has fully identified himself with local affairs of a civic and social nature. He is a member of the directorate of the Freedom Wire Cloth Company, and is president of the board of education of Glen Rock. He is identified in a fraternal way with Shrewsbury Lodge, No. 423, A. F. & A. M.; Howell Chapter, No. 190, R. A. M.; and York Commandery, No. 75, K. T., in York. He is also affiliated with Zembo Temple (Harrisburg, Pa.) of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. Professionally he belongs to the York county and Pennsylvania State Medical societies.

On Sept. 12, 1895, Dr. Lutz was married to Miss Lottie Elva Heathcote, daughter of Lewin K. and Sarah J. Heathcote, of Glen Rock, and of this union have been born two children, Lewin Richmond and William Fletcher.

JAMES G. PATTERSON, proprietor of the Stewartstown nursery and the owner of a fine farm in Hopewell township, York county, was born near Stewartstown, on the old Major Patterson farm, Feb. 18, 1835, a son of Edie and Catherine (Meads) Patterson.

Major James Patterson, his paternal grandfather, came from near Belfast, Ireland. When he landed in New York City he was accompanied by his father, Alexander Patterson, a man well along in years. The latter grew homesick and started back to his own green isle, but he never reached it, being taken sick while aboard ship and dying on the coast of Scotland. Sarah (Ferris), the wife of Alexander Patterson, was a native also of Ireland, and died in Hopewell township, York county; she was buried in old Round Hill cemetery. Alexander Patterson and his wife had five sons, namely: Robert, who was an officer in the Continental army, and died in Lancaster county, Pa.; John, who also died in Lancaster county; William, who died in Baltimore, Md.; James, the grandfather of James G. Patterson; and Samuel, who died in Little Britain township, Lancaster county.

James Patterson, of this family, settled near Stewartstown, York county. He became an officer in the Revolutionary war, and served as aide to Gen. Washington.

Edie Patterson, son of Major James, was born and reared on his father’s farm, which he subsequently bought. He married Catherine Meads, who was born in Harford county, Md., but was reared in Hopewell township, daughter of Benedict and Mary (Miles) Meads. They had children as follows: James G. is mentioned below; Benedict, who married Sarah Krout, was surgeon of his regiment in the Civil war and was wounded at the battle of Antietam, dying in 1862 in the hospital at Georgetown; William, who was accidentally killed at the “Colonial Hotel,” in York, left a widow, daughter of Dr. Lightner, of York; Archibald was a well-known attorney in York county, married Virginia Keene, and died in York; Hannah C. married Edie Hammer, of Stewartstown; Sarah Ann became Mrs. Andrew Hedrick, of Stewartstown; Adam E. married Sarah A. Smith, and died in Philadelphia; Ellen became Mrs. William Bahn, of Baltimore.

James G. Patterson attended the public schools and later White Hall Academy, in Cumberland county, and for a part of two years taught a school in the vicinity of York, later teaching the Possumtown school, under County Superintendent Blair. His main business, however, has always been farming, in addition to which he has engaged in the feeding of cattle and hogs. He settled on what is now John Rehmeyer’s farm for a short time, and then bought his present farm, which consists of 100 acres. Some twelve years ago he entered extensively into the nursery business, a line in which he has taken a deep interest ever since boyhood. He has made all the improvements on his place with the exception of the old springhouse, which has stood here for generations. His property is recognized as one of the good farms of the township and a nursery where only dependable stock is sold.

In 1870 Mr. Patterson was married to Adeline Fulton, daughter of Thomas Fulton, of Cecil county, Md., where Mrs. Patterson was born. She spent some of her childhood days in York county and at the time of her marriage was living in the State of New York. Her death, which occurred Oct. 30, 1903, left many to mourn the loss of a most estimable woman and a sincere Christian. For years she was very active in the work of the Presbyterian Church. She is survived by a son, James, who resides at home, and married Ella Runkle. A daughter, Carrie, died in childhood.

Mr. Patterson was reared in the Round Hill Presbyterian Church, but later united for a time with the Baptist denomination, after his marriage resuming his Presbyterian Church relationship. He is now a leading member of this church at Stewartstown. In politics he has been a lifelong Democrat, and for years has been a dominant factor in the party in his locality. He served for eighteen years as auditor of the township, his term of service expiring in the spring of 1905. On numerous occasions he has been a delegate to both county and State conventions, and he is closely connected with those who are recognized party leaders. A man of quick intelligence and fine conversational powers, he is also a hospitable and engaging host. He stands well in his township.
as a man of high personal character and as a most worthy and useful citizen.

JOHN A. FISHEL was born March 2, 1865, in Monongah township, son of George and Elizabeth (Hoffman) Fishel, and is of German extraction.

George Fishel, Sr., his grandfather, was born in Codorus township. By his first wife he had two children, Michael and Jacob, from whom there has been a large progeny. By his second marriage the following children were born: Edward, Isaac, George, Sarah and Rebecca. In religion the family were Lutherans, and Mr. Fishel was a stanch Democrat.

George Fishel, the father of John A., was born in 1828, in Codorus township, and received his education in the common schools. He learned the carpenter's trade and followed that line practically all his life. Mr. Fishel was a soldier in the Civil war, enlisting in Company I, 200th P. V. I., and he received a gun shot wound at Fort Steadman, in March, 1865, from which he never fully recovered. His death occurred in 1898, while his wife survived until 1902, when she passed away aged seventy years. The children born to this worthy couple were: Henry W., a physician in Harrisburg; Edward H., a carpenter; Gerald, a farmer residing in Iowa; Daniel, a farmer of South Dakota; William A., a merchant of Princeton, Ill.; George B., deceased; John A.; Peter A., an instructor in the York high school; Dave O., a carpenter; and Frank E., who died in infancy.

John A. Fishel received his preliminary education in the common schools in the neighborhood, and when still a small boy started working on a farm, engaging in this occupation until the age of ten years, when he attended the school at the Soldiers' Orphans' Home at Camp Hill, and supplemented this with a course at the State Normal School at Shippensburg, from which he was graduated in 1889. At the age of eighteen years he commenced teaching, and has followed that occupation up to the present time, having taught in York, Cumberland and Lancaster counties.

In 1900 Mr. Fishel was elected justice of the peace, receiving his commission from Governor Stone, and being re-elected again in 1905, has continued to officiate in that capacity to the entire satisfaction of all concerned. In politics he is identified with the Democratic party. He and his family are members of the Bethel Church of God at Mt. Pleasant.

Mr. Fishel married in 1893, Miss Jennie Kohler, daughter of Peter Kohler, of Siddensburg, and to this union these children have been born: Zedena I., Earl K., Wayne D., Lottie A. and Boyd O. (who died in infancy). Mr. Fishel is the owner of a small property in Monongah township which he devotes to fruit culture, raising peaches, apples, berries, etc. Mr. Fishel is very popular as a man, and as an official, and he counts his friends by the score.

H. B. SHUTT, of Porter's Siding, York Co., Pa., conducts a dairy, poultry and truck farm. He is a native of Heidelberg township, born March 2, 1869. His father, Joseph K. Shutt, was also born in Heidelberg township, as was his mother, who was the daughter of Henry K. Bowman, a lifelong resident of that township.

H. B. Shutt was reared on his father's farm, working for his father during the summer months, and attending the public schools during winters, thus continuing his early education until the spring sessions of 1886 and 1887, when he attended the York County Normal school. During his school-days at Millersville he began to play base-ball, covering first base for four years, and he was elected manager during his senior year (1893). He has played and is acquainted throughout the State. Mr. Shutt began teaching in the schools of Manheim township in 1887, at the age of eighteen years, continuing in the same community until twenty-one years old. He then spent two years in Heidelberg township, and at the same time began a course at Millersville, in the spring of 1888, and by spring sessions completed the junior work in 1892, then taking the senior year, being graduated from the institution in 1893. After graduation he was elected to the principalship of the Seven Valley borough schools, which position he held for five years, until elected to the Legislature, by the Democratic party, in 1898, when twenty-nine years old. He received the highest vote cast for any candidate on the ticket that year. In 1900 he was renominated for the Legislature on the first ballot, and again led his ticket in votes cast. Between the two terms of Legislature he served one year as principal of the Jefferson borough public schools.

After his Legislative work was over, Mr.
Shutt went to farming, at the same time acting as assistant principal of the Codorus township High school. He later took up teaching in his native township, and conducts a dairy, poultry and truck farm in connection. Mr. Shutt is also contributing to several farm journals.

ABRAHAM BARE SPRENKLE is a wealthy miller and farmer of Hellam township. He is a native of York county, where for generations his forefathers have been prosperous millers and farmers.

The emigrant ancestor of the Sprenkle family was Peter Sprenkle (great-grandfather of Abraham B.), who came from Switzerland and settled at Graybill’s Station, now in West Manchester township, York county. He acquired a tract of 600 acres or more of land, which descended to his heirs. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary army. His son, Peter (2), inherited a portion of his estate, and was all his life engaged in the family calling of milling and farming. George, a brother of Peter (2), settled in West Manchester township, and his grandson, Albert, is the present owner of the original farm on which the emigrant Peter settled. Daniel, another brother of Peter (2), also located in West Manchester township between Bare’s creek and Graybill’s station.

Peter Sprenkle (2) married, and his children were: George, father of Abraham Bare; and Peter, a farmer. Peter Sprenkle (2) was a Whig in politics, and held the office of school director and other township positions. He and his wife were members of the Mennonite Church.

George Sprenkle, father of Abraham Bare, was born on the old homestead in 1803. He received a good education in the neighborhood subscription schools, and learned the miller’s trade with his father. He followed the family calling of milling and farming, and was so engaged to the time of his death, in 1857. His wife, Elizabeth Bare, born Oct. 24, 1808, near Bare’s Meeting House, was a daughter of John and Polly (Erb) Bare. Her grandfather Erb was a soldier in the Revolutionary army. After his marriage George Sprenkle made his home on the mill property at the homestead which he inherited from his father. He was a strong, powerfully built man, and led a very active life. In politics he was a Whig. He and his wife were members and active workers in the Mennonite Church. They are buried in the cemetery at Bare’s Meeting House. They had five children, as follows: Lydia, who died in 1902, unmarried; David, who lives at Menges Station, unmarried; Peter, who lives in Philadelphia, married (first) to Rebecca Fishel, and (second) to Mrs. Plymoyer, of York; Emanuel, who married a Miss Hoke, of Jackson township, and is a farmer at Menges Station; and Abraham Bare, who is mentioned below.

On Oct. 2, 1846, Abraham Bare Sprenkle was born in North Codorus township, York county, on the old family place. His education was obtained in the district schools of the township, where his first teacher was Jacob Aldinger, and he finished his studies under Peter K. Myers, at the age of eighteen. In his boyhood he worked on his father’s farm, and in the mill, and learned the milling business in the home mill. He was only nine years old when his father died, but the mother kept her family about her in the home, until they were all grown. At the age of twenty-two Mr. Sprenkle left home and became miller for Joseph Strickler, whose daughter, Matilda, he married, Sept. 23, 1873. On the death of his father-in-law he took entire charge of the mill property, which his wife inherited, and has remained on the place ever since. He has made many improvements, including the erection of a sawmill, cider press, and tobacco shed. He has also put in a forty-barrel roller-process mill. His farm consists of ninety-six acres of fine land.

Mrs. Matilda (Strickler) Sprenkle was born May 4, 1848, in the same house in which she now lives, and where her whole life has been spent. Her father, Joseph, was also born on the old place, Jan. 8, 1813, and became a farmer and miller. He inherited the farm and mill property from his father, John Strickler. Joseph Strickler married Rebecca Green, and their only child was Matilda, who became Mrs. Sprenkle. Mrs. Strickler died in 1852, and her husband lived until 1891. They were Dunkards in religious faith.

Mr. and Mrs. Sprenkle have three children: (1) Edward O., who lives at home, and carries on the flour mill for his father, married Alice Kohr, and has two children, Jeannette and Daniel Eldred. (2) Irma Lucretia, and
(3) Laura L., are at home. Mr. Sprenkle is a Republican in politics. He is not a church member, but attends the Dunkard services.

HENRY REESER, retired farmer and business man, residing at York Haven, was born in Manchester borough, then called Liverpool, in February, 1829, son of William and Elizabeth (Shelly) Reeser, whose children were: John, Mary, William, Elizabeth, Sarah, Susan, Alexander, Henry and George. His grandfather came from Germany and first settled in Berks county sometime before the Revolution, crossed the Susquehanna and purchased a tract of land in the present area of Conewago township.

William Reeser, father of the subject of this biography, was born in Conewago township. In December, 1814, he purchased a tract of land, laid it out into lots and founded the town of Liverpool, which, when incorporated, was named Manchester borough. At the age of twenty-two William Reeser married Elizabeth Shelley, whose ancestors were prominent and influential in the affairs of York and Dauphin counties, among the rich agricultural land below Goldsboro and the islands in the river near that town. When William Reeser purchased this tract of land there were only three houses in the vicinity. He erected a large brick house at the cost of $5,000, and his town soon began to grow and prosper. It was in this village that Henry Reeser attended the public schools and grew to manhood. Early in life he married Eliza, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Fortenbaugh) Burger. They had six children: William, Joseph, Susan, John, David and Henry. After his marriage, Mr. Reeser engaged in farming in Newberry township and prospered in that occupation. His first wife died in middle age, and he was married (second) to Mary, daughter of Daniel and Mary (Nicholas) Hoopes, and widow of Jacob Test. The children of this marriage are: Hiram, Morris and Bertha.

Mr. Reeser continued the business of farming for a period of thirty years or more and then took up his residence as a retired citizen in his native town of Manchester. When York Haven began to prosper, he removed to that borough, where he has since lived as one of the most highly respected and honored citizens.

During the Civil war Mr. Reeser enlisted as a soldier in the 200th P. V. I., and served in that command until the end of the war. He has always taken an active interest in the affairs of the United Brethren Church, of which he has been a member since his early manhood. He is a man of excellent habits and exemplary conduct, widely known and popular among his friends and associates.

FETROW FAMILY. Among the many prosperous families who make up the agricultural class in York county none is better known than the Fetrow family, members of which are to be found in Fairview and Newberry townships, where the name has been known for four generations. The family is of German origin, and the first to come to America was Samuel, great-grandfather of Samuel, Jacob and John Fetrow. On arriving in the New World Samuel Fetrow settled in Fairview township and devoted himself to farming. His son John was born there and on reaching manhood married a Miss Yinger. He also was a farmer. John Fetrow died June 6, 1860, aged seventy-seven years, seven months, fifteen days, and both he and his wife are buried in the Fetrow cemetery, near Yocumtown.

John Fetrow (2), born in 1808 in Fairview township, was an only child. He attended the public schools of Fairview township, and after his marriage located in that section permanently. He married Lydia Brubaker, daughter of Conrad and Elizabeth (Ziegler) Brubaker. She was born in 1816 and died Jan. 20, 1889, aged seventy-two years, nine months, six days. Mr. Fetrow was a large landowner, having about 700 acres of fine land. His death occurred July 25, 1888, at the age of eighty years, three months, twenty-nine days, and he is buried in the family graveyard. The children born to this worthy couple were as follows: Samuel; Nancy. Mrs. Mathias Eicholtz, of Kansas; Jacob; Amburg, born Nov. 14, 1837, deceased June 6, 1877; Elizabeth, widow of Ephraim Miller; John; Henry, of Yocumtown, who married Sarah Ann Prowell, and William, deceased at the age of fifteen years.

SAMUEL FETROW was born March 5, 1832, in Fairview township. He attended the public schools until eighteen years of age and remained at home until his marriage to Caroline Wentz, daughter of George and Catherine (Gross) Wentz, of York county. At that time he came to Newberry township and engaged in farming, in conjunction with which he engaged in milling for fifteen years at his father’s old place of business. In 1890 he removed to Yocumtown, where he has since lived in retirement. Mr. Fetrow is highly respected in the community for his many sterling traits of character. He has been very successful, has acquired a handsome competency, and has now retired to enjoy the fruits of his early labor. Mrs. Fetrow died in 1900 and is buried at the well known Fetrow cemetery in Newberry township. Mr. and Mrs. Fetrow had children as follows: Lydia, who married Jacob Kilmore (both are deceased); Nancy, deceased, who married Wilfred Hoffstadt; Abram, who died at the age of twelve years, and John, of York Haven, married to Maggie Good. In politics Mr. Fetrow is a Republican, but has never accepted office.

Jacob Fetrow was born in Fairview township, Nov. 14, 1835. He received his education in the schools of Fairview township, attending school until about seventeen years of age, and assisting his father on the farm until his marriage. In 1869 he married Evaline Eppley, born Jan. 8, 1815, daughter of William and Sidney (Hays) Eppley, and after marriage located in Fairview township for two years. He then settled in Newberry township on one of the paternal farms, to which he fell heir at the time of his father’s death. Mr. Fetrow lives on a small tract of about twenty acres, but owns a fine farm of 125 acres in the township. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Fetrow were: Lucetta, died at the age of eighteen years; William Grant, married Semertha Shettle, and lives in Yocumtown, and Robert J., resides at home. Mr. Fetrow is a Republican in political sympathy, but has never aspired to office. He is a man of integrity and is very highly respected in the community.

John Fetrow was born July 28, 1843, in Fairview township, on the old homestead where he now resides and of which his grandfather was the original owner. He attended the public schools until about eighteen years of age and assisted his father on the farm. In 1866 he married Sarah Prowell, daughter of James B. and Susan (Wilt) Prowell. Mr. Prowell died Oct. 8, 1896, while his wife passed away Sept. 8, 1856, and both are buried at the Salem church, in Fairview township. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Prowell: Catherine, George, Mary, Julia, John, Eliza Jane, Sarah, Harry, Lydia and Charles. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Fetrow located on the old homestead upon which Mr. Fetrow was born, and there he engaged in farming and made many improvements. He is now considered one of the substantial men of the township and is the owner of several fine farms. Two children were born to him and his worthy wife: William G., married Alda Wood; they follow farming at the old home, and have children—Sallie Matilda, John S., and Mary Elizabeth. Cecelia G., who married William B. Fisher, resides on Mr. Fetrow’s farm in Fairview township, and has these children—Grace Viola, Ruth Sarah and Helen Catherine.

Mr. Fetrow is a Republican, and he has served on the election board. Mrs. Fetrow is a member of the U. B. Church. In financial circles Mr. Fetrow is a prominent figure, being treasurer and a director of the Fairview Mutual Fire Insurance Company, both of which offices he has held for ten years. The barn that stands upon Mr. Fetrow’s farm in Fairview township was erected in 1818 by his grandfather, who also built a distillery, the latter building also remaining standing at this date.

Rev. Joseph D. Smith was born May 30, 1828, in County Londonderry, Ireland, and accompanied his parents to America in 1847, landing at Philadelphia, where the family resided for thirty years. The father, David Smith, died in 1866, at the age of sixty-five years. In 1872 his wife came to reside with her son, Joseph D., where she died in June, 1882, at the ripe old age of ninety years. To this emigrant couple four children were born: Joseph D., who is the eldest; William, who died in Des Moines, Iowa; David, residing at Edge-water Park, N. J.; and Martha J., who resides with Joseph D.

Joseph D. Smith was partly educated in Ireland, and after coming to America, attended the preparatory department of the Freshman class at Danville, Ky. In 1853 he entered Jefferson College, at Canonsburg, Pa., and after graduating there took a theological course at Princeton. He was licensed to preach in 1859 by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, and a year later located in York county and assumed the pastorate of Slate Ridge Presbyterian Church, resigning in 1890, after having ably filled the position for thirty years. He had previously purchased a tract of land adjoining the old church property and after his retirement erected a residence on a knoll, overlooking the borough of Delta, where he has since resided. He still preaches in various Presbyterian churches of York county, when called upon by the people to whom he has endeared himself both by his eloquence and earnestness in the pulpit, and his zealous advocacy of everything tending to the benefit of the community and the elevation of morality. In addition to his ministerial duties he has prepared students for college. Mr. Smith is unmarried and resides with his sister.

JACOB HOLTZAPPLE, a retired farmer living in West Manchester township, comes from one of the old and respected families of York county, where for several generations his people have been agriculturists.

Barnhart Holtzapple, paternal grandfather of Jacob, was born in Germany, but came to America and settled in York county, Pa., where he owned a tract in West Manchester township which comprised 250 acres of good farming land. There the rest of his life was spent, and, dying, he was buried in York. He was a member of the First Lutheran Church of York, which he had assisted in building.
He was the father of three children, George,
Philip and Jacob.

Jacob Holtzapple, son of Barnhart, was born on the York county farm Sept. 10, 1785, and was a farmer like his father, owning a place of 102 acres. He married Miss Elizabeth Eisenhart, born April 3, 1791, and their wedded life was ended by her death, Feb. 8, 1846. He survived until Aug. 13, 1849, and both are buried at Louck's schoolhouse, in West Manchester township. They were the parents of twelve children, born as follows: Peter, July 18, 1814, died at the age of nine; Sarah, Nov.
2, 1815, married Philip Quigle, and died in West Manchester township; Adam, Nov. 10, 1816, lives on West Market street, York;
George, Nov. 30, 1817, married Miss Sarah Klinedinst, and died in 1846; Anna Maria, Sept. 29, 1819, married Samuel Lephart, and her demise occurred in Dover township; Margaret, July 13, 1821, died in Dover township, the wife of Philip Gross; Leah, Oct. 25, 1822.
Mrs. Nathaniel Hoffheins, died in Adams county, Pa.; Jacob is mentioned below;
Michael, July 13, 1826, of West Manchester township, married Miss Susan Lau; Emanuel, March 25, 1828, died in 1846, unmarried;
Henry, Jan. 9, 1830, married Miss Katie
Reikert, and resides on Philadelphia street, York; Catherine, Feb. 13, 1832, is the wife of Reuben Kain, of Kansas.

Jacob Holtzapple (2) was born on the homestead April 24, 1824. Until he was four-ten years old he attended school, receiving instruction in the public schools of West Manchester township, and of Weigelstown, Dover township. In the latter locality he also learned shoemaking, which he followed for five years, after which he returned to the old home and engaged in farming. For twenty-five years he remained there, but at the end of that time he took Daniel Heckert's place, in the same township, farmed it for seven years, and then moved to Jackson township, where he stayed five years. His next move was to West Manchester township again, where he lived on J.
Z. Hildebrand's farm two years, and he then bought his present home, where he has put up all the buildings now in use there. Since 1887 he has lived retired from active work on the farm.

Mr. Holtzapple has been twice married.
His first wife, Miss Maria Kain, died in 1857, and was buried in West Manchester township.
She bore her husband six children, as follows:
Amanda, who became Mrs. Daniel Sowers, of Adams county; Elizabeth and Emanuel, both decceased; Manassus, of Dover township, who married Miss Melinda Deisinger; William and Ann Maria, both deceased. The second wife, to whom Mr. Holtzapple was united on Sept.
24, 1857, was Miss Leah Fackler, born July 13, 1831. She was the daughter of Daniel and Mary (Leckrone) Fackler, both of whom belonged to old county families. They died some years ago in York county. Leah (Fack-ler) Holtzapple was the mother of twelve children, namely: Sarah, who is at home; George, of West Manchester township, married to Miss Sallie Leppo; Ella, wife of Edward Witman, of Thomasville, Pa.; Jacob, Jr., a machinist in York, who married Miss Ellen Stouch; Mary, wife of Henry Eberly, of West Manchester township; Alice, Mrs. John Julins, of the same section; Robert, who married Miss Annie Fink, and lives in Conewago township; Margaet, wife of Peter Bentzel, of West Manchester township; Lizzie, who married Edward Nei-
Edward H. Snyder was born near Abbeottstown, Adams Co., Pa., Nov. 8, 1834. He received his education in the public and private schools of York county. He learned the iron moulder’s trade, which he followed until 1884, at intervals being also engaged in the manufacture of brick, after which he returned to Hanover. In 1879 Mr. Snyder established a brickyard in the southeastern part of that place and there engaged actively in the manufacture of building brick, the product of his yard being of a superior quality for which there has been a large local demand, the trade even overflowing to a number of neighboring towns and cities. During the busy season of the year he employs between twenty and twenty-five men and he conducts the industry for about eight months in the year. In 1903 he added considerable machinery to the plant, the output of the yard consisting of building and paving brick.

Under the first call of President Lincoln for 75,000 men for three-months’ service, in April, 1861, Mr. Snyder enlisted in Company G, 16th P. V. I. Returning to Hanover at the expiration of his service, he married Anna Mary Smaling, who was born near Mt. Joy, Lancaster county, Pa., Feb. 17, 1838, daughter of George and Catherine (Kohlcr) Smaling. To Edward H. and Anna Mary Snyder have come four children, namely: Mary E., deceased; A. Bertha, wife of Lawson Emmert, of Pittsburg; William, of Pittsburg; and Edward H., Jr., at home, the partner of his father in the manufacture of brick. Edward H., Jr., married Edith Fridinger, and to them have been born five children, as follows: Cecelia, Edward, Annie, William, and Isabel. Mr. and Mrs. Snyder have ten grandchildren. Mr. Snyder is a member of Major Jenkins Post, No. 59, G. A. R. He is one of the substantial and enterprising men of Hanover whose life-work has contributed largely to the upbuilding of the city.

ADEN BUSER is a representative of one of York county’s old and well-known families. He is engaged in the manufacture of cigar boxes at Longstown, York township, and is one of the popular and public-spirited citizens of that section of the county.

Mr. Buser was born on the homestead farm in York township, Dec. 21, 1854, and was there reared to the age of twenty-one years. He is a son of Jacob and Deborah (Fitz) Buser, both of whom were born and reared in York county. The latter died when Aden was but twelve years of age and his father later married Miss Louisa Landis, whose death occurred in 1904. Jacob Buser was a carpenter by trade, and for a number of years was actively engaged in contracting and building, while later he turned his attention to the manufacture of cigar boxes, building up a profitable enterprise and also owning and operating the farm on which Mr. Buser was born. He was a stalwart Democrat in politics, was a man of alert mentality and broad information and wielded no little influence in local affairs, while his inflexible integrity and straightforward business policy gained for him the unqualified respect of all with whom he was associated. He died, in Springettsbury township, in 1902, at the age of seventy-six years. His first wife was a member of the Dunkard Church, and he and his second wife were connected with the Lutheran Church.

Aden Buser was reared on the home farm and early began to assist in its cultivation, while he continued to attend the local schools from two to four months each year until he had reached his legal majority, so that he gained a good practical education and was duly fortified for the practical duties and responsibilities of life. Under the direction of his father he served a thorough apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade, becoming a skilled artisan in that line and continuing to follow his trade until he was twenty-five years of age, when he located in Longstown and engaged in the manufacturing of cigar boxes. He had there purchased an acre of ground, upon which was a small dwelling, and there he inaugurated his enterprise, beginning operations by establishing a shop in the basement of his house and for some time working alone. He finally secured John S. Flory as an assistant, and it is pleasing to note that this gentleman is still enrolled as his employee. In 1884 Mr. Buser disposed of the property mentioned and removed to what was known as the Freeze place, in York township, where he continued to carry on his manufacturing for the ensuing two years, when he purchased his present property from Joseph Kauffman, the improvements consisting of a commodious building utilized as a store and box factory. On the 18th of Aug., 1901, the property was destroyed by fire, and shortly afterward Mr. Buser completed the erection of his present store and factory building on the same site, the building being 28 x 28 feet in dimensions and two stories in height. He purchased his present residence property—an acre of land and a good house—from George Howe. In the box factory he gives employment to an average force of ten skilled hands. He has met with marked success, being known as one of the reliable and public-spirited citizens and business men of York township, where his friends are coextensive with his acquaintances. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Democratic party.

On Oct. 15, 1876, Mr. Buser was united in marriage to Miss Priscilla Ann Lefever, who was born and reared in this county, being a daughter of William and Susan (Irwin) Lefever, and of the children of this union are recorded these facts: Ida May is the wife of Frank Gale, of Windsor township; Emma Jane, Cora Deborah, Mary Ann and Grover Cleveland remain at home; Susan is deceased; and Beulah and Emory Quintin are the younger members of the family circle.

ELMER E. BRUNNER, postmaster at York Haven and president of the York Haven Canning Company, was born in 1869, in Newberry township, son of Peter M. and Leah (Fink) Brunner.

Peter Brunner, his grandfather, was a native of Lancaster county, where he engaged in farming. He came to York county and settled in Conewago township, where he took up a tract of land, later removing to East Manchester township, and finally to Newberry township, where he followed farming until his death, in his sixty-fifth year.

Peter M. Brunner, the father of Elmer E., was born in 1842 in Conewago township, where he received a common school education, and followed agricultural pursuits. In 1868 he married Leah Fink, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Lynn) Fink, of York county, and afterward was for a time a farmer in Fairview township. He then removed to Newberry township, later going to Hill Island, Dauphin county, where he remained for twelve years, but finally returned to Newberry township, where his death occurred in 1902, and which is his burial place. Mrs. Brunner is living in Newberry township, aged sixty-one. The children born to this worthy couple were: Elmer E.; Jennie: Amelia, died at the age of eight years; Arthur and Herbert S.

Elmer E. Brunner attended the public schools until he was seventeen years of age, and then was a student at a summer school at Goldsboro. For a time he was a teacher, and then, in 1891-93, attended school at Millersville, completing the junior year at that institution. Mr. Brunner has taught school in Lancaster county, but most of his time has been spent in York county, where he has a high reputation as an educator, his entire experience covering fourteen terms. For three years of this period he was principal of the York Haven High School.

Politically Mr. Brunner is a Republican and in 1902 was appointed postmaster at York Haven, which position has been filled very efficiently. He has been called upon to fill various offices, and in every case has given the highest satisfaction. He has held the office of chief burgess, has been councilman, president of the council for four years, and has occupied minor offices. Mr. Brunner is president of the York Haven Canning Company, one of the largest industries in the county; also secretary of the Consumers' Box Board & Paper Co. of Lititz, Pa.; director in the York & Windsor Electric Light Company, the Western Development Company, the People's Electric Light Company of Lebanon, and the Womelsdorf & Myerstown Electric Light Company.

In 1897 Mr. Brunner married Susie E. Fisher, daughter of John and Martha (Miller) Fisher, of York county, and one child has been born to this union, John F. Both as a public official and honest and upright, public-spirited citizen, he enjoys a wide acquaintance and is held in much esteem in the community.

CAPT. JACOB LEITHSER, who is the owner of one of the fine farms of York county, has passed practically his entire life here and is a scion of one of the honored pioneer families of this section of the state. He is one of the representative citizens of Lower Windsor township and is specially well entitled to consideration in a publication of the province assigned to the one at hand.

Capt. Leithiser was born on the farm which he now owns and occupies, in Lower Windsor township, and known as the Henry Ruby farm, the date of his nativity being Jan. 28, 1848. He received his early education in what was known as the Kline school, and among his early instructors there was Henry Kellar. Later he continued his studies in the Benson school, under the regime of William Miller, and here he finished his technical school work when but fifteen years of age. When he was twelve years of age his parents resided at Longlevel, and his father hired him out to a Mr. Crum, who operated a canal-boat, the duties of our subject being to drive the somewhat dejected mules which furnished motive power for the boat. For five years he was thus engaged in following the towpath between Havre de Grace and Lock Haven, and he then assumed the dignified position of first mate, in which capacity he served on various canal-boats. Later he became a captain and finally the owner of boats, continuing to operate on the Pennsylvania canal for a period of twelve years, and having in the connection run his boats to New York city, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and to different points up the Hudson river.

In 1864, while employed on the canal, Jacob Leithiser ran away from his captain and made his way, barefooted, to Harrisburg, where, on the 22d of July, he enlisted, becoming a private in Company K, 19th P. V. I., in the one hundred days' service; William D. Ritzel, of Lancaster county, was captain of his company, while the regiment was commanded by Col. Fisher, of Columbia. He participated in the spirited engagement at Monocacy Junction, and at the expiration of his term of enlistment received his honorable discharge, at Harrisburg. At Monocacy Junction, however, Jacob Leithiser had re-enlisted for one year, but he received his final discharge in November, 1864.

After the close of his military career our subject again resumed work on the canal, continuing to be actively identified with this line of enterprise until 1887, when he disposed of his boat and retired permanently from the business with which he had been so intimately associated from his boyhood days. Thereafter he was for eight years employed in a clerical capacity at the lumber yards of Olewiler & Gilbert, at Longlevel, being thus engaged until his election to the office of county commissioner, of which he was incumbent during the years 1894.
1895 and 1896. In 1896 he purchased the old farm on which he was born, the same comprising fifty acres, while the place is most attractively located on the Susquehanna river. In 1873 the Captain erected his present beautiful residence, on the banks of the river, and this fine home is a center of gracious and generous hospitality. After retiring from the office of county commissioner the Captain served one and one-half years as president and manager of the Fairview Milling Company, in Columbia, the property being sold to the syndicate about 1898. He then returned to his home in Lower Windsor and was soon afterward elected manager of the Wrightsville & Chanceford Turnpike Company, in which capacity he is still rendering most efficient service. In 1892 he was elected a member of the directorate of the Lower Windsor Fire Insurance Company. He served six years as a member of the board of education, and within this period was honored with preferment as president and secretary of the board, at different times. In politics he accords a stalwart allegiance to the Republican party, and he has ever been recognized as a loyal and public-spirited citizen.

In 1876 the Captain became a member of the United Evangelical Church at Longlevel, in which he has served in various official positions, having been an elder for many years and also superintendent of the Sunday-school. He is affiliated with Lieut. R. W. Smith Post, No. 279, G. A. R., at Wrightsville, and with Aurora Lodge, Jr. O. U. A. M., at East Prospect. He is well known throughout this section and is held in unequivocal confidence and esteem in the county of his birth.

In Lower Windsor township, on Feb. 19, 1867, Capt. Leithiser was united in marriage to Miss Wilhelmina Silar, a daughter of George W. and Martha (Gilbert) Silar, both of whom are now deceased. Capt. and Mrs. Leithiser have no children of their own. Their adopted daughter, Anna Lyman, is now the wife of Irving Kline, of York.

In conclusion we will touch briefly upon the genealogical record of our honored subject. His father, Hartman Leithiser, was born in Columbia, Lancaster Co., Pa., in 1824, and for many years followed the work of the canal and river, having been renowned locally as a successful fisherman. He made his home at Longlevel for many years, but is now residing at Havre de Grace, Md. His wife, whose maiden name was Salome Ruby, was born and reared on the farm now owned and occupied by our subject, whose maternal grandfather, Henry Ruby, was a prominent and influential farmer of this section. The mother of the Captain died Nov. 28, 1866, at Longlevel. Of her children we offer the following brief record: George W., who married Miss Mary Kise, is captain of the ferryboat "Mary," at Wrightsville; Jacob is the immediate subject of this sketch; Henry, who married Miss Mary Stern, resides in Columbia, Lancaster county; Isaac married Miss Kate Bayard and resides at Havre de Grace, Md.; Nathaniel is an engineer on the Pennsylvania railroad and resides in Columbia (the maiden name of his wife was Elizabeth Houseseal); seven children died in childhood.

Isaac Leithiser, grandfather of the Captain, died in Baltimore, Md., about 1862, having been for many years engaged in the hotel business in that city, while he also followed maritime enterprises to a considerable extent. The original progenitors in America came from Germany in the colonial era and it is supposed that representatives were numbered among the early settlers near the present city of Columbia, Lancaster Co., this State.

CAPT. DAVID ALBERT MILLER, agent for land-clearing machinery, wire fencing, etc., proprietor of "Grape Lawn Farm," and a survivor of the great Civil war, is now living retired at his beautiful home, "Mt. Pleasant Arbor" in East Hopewell township. He was born at the home farm at Mt. Pleasant, March 19, 1847.

John Miller, the grandfather of the Captain, was born and reared in Hopewell township, where he married Elizabeth Trout; an aunt of Valentine Trout, of Chanceford township. Both Mr. Miller and his wife died in what is now old Hopewell township, leaving these children: Polly, Mrs. James Anderson, died in East Hopewell township; Abraham was the father of David A.; Elizabeth, Mrs. Robert Maffett, died in Illinois; Anne, Mrs. Ambrose McGuigan, died in East Hopewell township; Samuel, who died in Monkton, Baltimore Co., Md., married Mary Howard; John, who died in Baltimore county, Md., married Mary Hyson; Valentine Trout, a farmer of East Hopewell township, married Louisa Grim; Henry died in this township; David, a farmer of East Hopewell township, married Sarah Winemiller; and Margaret is Mrs. John Hyson, of East Hopewell township.

Abraham Miller was born in Hopewell township, and grew to manhood there, receiving a common school education. He learned the blacksmith’s trade, making this occupation his life-work. He settled on a 230-acre farm at Mt. Pleasant, where he died in 1882, aged eighty-two years, and was buried at Mt. Pleasant cemetery, and had been a member of the Cross Roads M. E. Church. In politics he was first a Know-Nothing, then a Whig, later an Abolitionist, and finally a Republican. He served in the capacity of school director and also in other offices. Mr. Miller married Priscilla Howard, born in Baltimore county, Md., daughter of Henry Howard, whose parents came from England. His wife died on the home farm in 1872. She had these children: Henry Howard is deceased: John W., who served with credit in the 209th P. V. I., as a private of Company B, married Mary M. Hershinger; Mary E. is Mrs. John S. Rechard of York; Isaiah H., when only seventeen years old, was killed in the battle of Antietam, Sept. 17, 1862, being a private of Company C, 130th P. V. I.; David Albert; and Abraham C., of York, married Rachel Ann Williams.

David Albert Miller attended the common school, irregularly, until his fifteenth year and worked on the home farm until a year later. He then enlisted as a musician in Company C, 130th P. V. I., Capt. J. S. Jenkins, Col. Henry I. Zinn, of Mechanicsburg, Pa. He held a commission as captain under Governor Curtin, but thinking that his youth would be against him, refused the commission. His enlistment occurred Aug. 6, 1862, for nine months, and he served his term, being honorably discharged at Harrisburg, Pa., May 21, 1863. He took part in the battles of South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, was in Burnside’s March, and was wounded nine times by pieces of shell and shot, persistently remaining with his regiment and refusing to go to the hospital. He re-enlisted Aug. 30, 1864, in Company B, 200th Reg. P. V. I., Captain H. W. Spangler, Col. T. B. Kauffman, for the term of one year, or during the war. Being very proficient with the fife he again enlisted as a musician, and was with the Second Brigade, Third Division, Army of the Potomac. He was engaged in Pickett’s great charge at Bermuda Hundred, Sept. 6, 1864; Preble’s farm, Va., Sept. 30, 1864; Hatcher’s Run, Oct. 27, 1864; on a three-days’ raid, Dec. 9 to Dec. 12, in North Carolina; and then Fort Steadman, March 25, 1865. He was at the fall of Petersburg, from the 1st to the 3rd of April, and at Lee’s surrender, Appomattox, April 9, 1865. He was honorably discharged May 31, 1865, at Alexandria, Va., by reason of orders issued from the War Department.

After the close of the war Captain Miller returned to his father’s home, and at the age of twenty-one years commenced the teaching of vocal and instrumental music, intending to make of it a life work, but his health had been so impaired by exposure and wounds received during the war that he hesitated to assume a career involving such labor. In his nineteenth year, Nov. 16, 1865, he married Miss Sarah Jane Fishel, of East Hopewell township, daughter of David and Agnes (McDowell) Fishel. Afterward he remained at home, after the death of his father, purchasing the homestead, upon which he resided until March 1, 1905, when he removed to his new home, erecting a beautiful residence.

Captain Miller is a fascinating talker, being greatly interested in all the topics of the day. He keeps well abreast of the times, twenty periodicals coming to his home weekly. He is a member of General Sherman Post No. 602, G. A. R., of Felton, has passed through all of the chairs, and is also past commander of the Knights of the Mystic Chain, of Winterstown. He is a member of the United Evangelical Church, and has filled all the offices in the church and Sunday-school. Captain Miller’s first wife died March 13, 1885, and is buried at Mt. Pleasant cemetery. The children born to them were as follows: Isaiah Howard, born Oct. 5, 1866, now an R. F. D. carried, residing at Parke, York county, married Elizabeth Alt-house; Annie Dora, born Dec. 19, 1868, married E. P. Thompson, and resides in Rinely, York county; Elma Agnes, born June 6, 1872, is Mrs. Johnson J. Shroeder, of York; Mary Levia, born Jan. 23, 1875, married Henry Alt-house, and resides near Stewartstown; Charles David Wilbur, born March 3, 1877, married
Robert L. Jones. The following biography is taken verbatim (with a few minor changes to bring the sketch to date) from the "Historic Cyclopedia of the 19th Congressional District of Pennsylvania:" "That America possesses many advantages for men of energy and comprehensive ability is well illustrated by the very successful career of Robert L. Jones, of Delta, Pa., who was born at Penmachno, Caernarvonshire, Wales, 1841, and emigrated to the United States in 1860. His parents were natives of Wales and never left that country; of the six children, however, five came to America, the eldest of whom is John W., who arrived here in 1857 and engaged in the slate business in West Bangor, where he now lives. Three years later, the third oldest member of the family and subject of our sketch, came over from Wales, and in 1888 their sister, Mrs. Richard Roberts, and her husband, crossed the ocean and have made Delta their home. The second child, Mrs. Richard Jones, came over in 1890, and now resides in South Delta, and the next younger member, William Penn, who is now superintendent of the slate quarries, owned by our subject, Robert L., emigrated in 1886. "Robert L. Jones was educated in the public schools of Wales, where he also learned the slate business when he became old enough to work in the quarries where his father was employed as a quarryman. Like his elder brother, he at first located at West Bangor, where he worked at his trade as a laborer in the slate works until 1862, when our country was threatened with dismemberment and plunged into the horrors of war. True to the impulses of the land of liberty which had become his adopted country, he enlisted in August, 1862, in Company A, 3d Penn. Heavy Artillery, at Philadelphia, determined to lay down his life, if necessary, to defend the sacred rights of man. He was soon promoted from the rank of private to that of sergeant and was detached to gunboat 'Schrannell,' artillery duty, doing picket and scouting service in Virginia and North Carolina, during the years 1864-65. In June of the latter year he was honorably discharged at Fortress Monroe, Va., having done his duty bravely in the time of danger. "When Mr. Jones returned from the war he again resumed his work in the slate quarries at West Bangor, and continued in the capacity of employee until 1872, when he, in company with four others, began to operate a quarry on his own account. At first their works were not extensive, but from small beginnings the interests of the business have grown, little by little, until now Mr. Jones is one of the largest quarry operators in the whole district. After working this first quarry for seven years Mr. Jones sold his interest to the other four and leased the old big quarry at Peach Bottom, and has since controlled its output. Fifty men are now employed there, and it has been drained by a tunnel extending 850 feet through a surrounding chain of hills, which was constructed in 1895 at a cost of $5,000, and has greatly facilitated the work. "In company with F. R. Williams, in 1891, Mr. Jones purchased the lease of the Eureka and Susquehanna Slate Companies and formed a joint stock association, the Excelsior Slate Company, of which Mr. Jones was elected president and general manager, which trust he still holds. This company employs at present forty hands. Besides his interest in the two large slate quarries, he was the senior member of the firm of Jones & McConkey, large dealers in general merchandise [until 1903, when he transferred his interest to his two sons]. He has also been a director of the First National Bank since 1890, when with his assistance it was successfully organized. [In 1901 he was elected vice-president of that solid financial institution.] In local politics, though never having accepted a public office other than township auditor, he exercises a wide influence. He is a Republican. In religious and fraternal circles he is an active member and has been choir leader for twenty-five years in the Welsh Calvinistic Church, and is also a member of Estraleon Lodge, No. 176, A. F. & A. M.

On August 15, 1870, Mr. Jones was united

Emma McLane, and resides near Glen Rock; Bessie Jane, born Dec. 23, 1879, is a dressmaker and traveling saleslady; Minerva Alice, born Sept. 10, 1882, married William Wilson, and lives on Capt. Miller's home farm, as does J. Percy, born March 3, 1885.

Captain Miller was married (second) on Dec. 30, 1885, to Elizabeth Margaret Hess, daughter of Robert J. and Rebecca (Brown) Hess, natives of Fulton township, Lancaster county, who came to York county after marriage and there died. Mrs. Miller was educated in the public schools, and, until her marriage, was engaged in dress-making at Rinely.
in marriage with Isabella Roberts, daughter of John and Isabella Roberts, of Wales. His family consists of five children, whose names, given in order of birth, are: Emma, John, Hayden, Arthur, Isabella and Idris, who are at present all residing with their parents, where they easily and gracefully sustain the high position in local society which their father's successful and honorable career in business and other circles has won for himself and his family.

THEODORE W. GROSS, now living retired on his farm in Conewago township, was born March 18, 1854, in that township, son of Samuel M. and Catherine (Wentz) Gross.

Mr. Gross is of German descent, and his grandfather, Samuel Gross, was a weaver who followed his trade in Dover and Conewago townships. He bought a farm in the latter, place of about sixty-five acres, and at the time he purchased it there were four log barns standing upon it. Mr. Gross built a new barn in 1850, and in 1854 erected a fine residence. He was both a farmer and weaver, in which joint occupation he employed about seven hands. He made all kinds of cloths and linens, and one of the most highly prized possessions of Theodore W. Gross is a quilt which his grandfather wove. Samuel Gross was a member of the State militia, enlisted in the War of 1812, and served for nearly a year, taking part in the battle of Baltimore. He married Catherine Miller, who died in 1862, her husband surviving until 1867, and they are both buried at Quiclckel's Church. Mr. Gross was a Lutheran and was very active in religious work, while his wife was a member of the Reformed Church. To this good couple the following children were born: Mary Ann, married (first) a Mr. Zorger, and (second) a Mr. Brenneman, and died in Conewago township; Jonas married Elizabeth Wentz and died in Yoconut-town; Levi married Rosanna Creep, and died in Manchester township; Lucy died single at York Haven; Samuel M. was the father of Theodore W.; Eliza married Jacob S. Cassel, and they live at York Haven. Besides the foregoing were six children, who died young.

Samuel M. Gross was born in Dover township and received a common-school education. He learned the miller's trade at Strinestown mill, which is now owned by James F. Cline, and was engaged at that vocation for about twenty-eight years. For six years he was foreman for P. A. & S. Small at Goldsboro, and was also employed at the old York Haven grist mill for nine months. From 1872 to 1897 he was a farmer, and lived with his son, our subject, until his death, which occurred April 27, 1898. He was a consistent member of Quickt's Lutheran Church, and was very much interested in its work. In political sympathy he was a Democrat. He married Catherine Wentz, daughter of George and Catherine (Gross) Wentz, and her death occurred in 1901. Mr. Wentz's early days were spent in hunting through the Conewago hills, where game was plentiful at that time. His father was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and is buried at Paddleton, Newberry township. The children born to Samuel M. and Catherine Gross were as follows: Theodore W.; Tempest H., born Nov. 25, 1857, married Mary Fig, and for the last nine years of his life was foreman for the Champion Machine Co., at Fremont, Ohio, his death occurring in November, 1901; and Samuel B., born Feb. 2, 1862, a miller by trade, who is at present employed by the Harrisburg & Mechanicsburg trolley line as a motorman, married Rebecca Eshelman, of Cumberland county.

Theodore W. Gross attended Sipes' school at Manchester, Fertenauga's school in Newberry township and the Goldsboro school. Later he was a student at Millersville State Normal school, which he entered in 1873, and from which, after a course of two and one-half years, he was graduated with honors. He then taught about twenty terms, as follows: At Bowers' school, Conewago township, nine terms; one term at Fink's school in the same township; two terms at Strinestown; two terms at Strayer's school, Manchester township; four terms at Smith's school in Conewago township, and, finally, one term at Bower's school, where he had commenced his career as a pedagogue.

In 1891 Mr. Gross was elected assessor of Conewago township, and served three years in that capacity. In the year of his election he bought from Andrew Stough, the fine home which he now occupies, and it is one of the oldest and most substantial in the township. He owns a fine tract of 132 acres in Conewago township, which is known as the old Bower farm. Mr. Gross is a member of the Lutheran Church, in which he is at present elder. He is a Democrat in politics, and takes a lively interest in the success of his party.

In 1884 Mr. Gross married Amanda Grimm, daughter of John and Emmeline (Ball) Grimm, and these children have been born to their union: Lawrence A., born June 30, 1886; Samuel A., born Nov. 29, 1888; and Emma Kate, born June 9, 1894, all of whom are attending school.

JOHN DEITRICH MEYER was born in the city of Oldenburg, Germany, and died on his farm in Windsor township, York county, Sept. 13, 1865. He lost his parents when very young, but provision was made for his education and he was a scholarly man. His penmanship was so fine that he was entrusted with the transcribing of many important papers. In 1850 he married Catherine Denker, and they set sail for the United States from Bremen, arriving at Baltimore, Md., in November, 1851, after a voyage of seven weeks. Mr. Meyer had made a previous trip to this country, and had selected the field in which he intended to commence business, this being in the city of Baltimore, where he engaged in storekeeping, at what was called the "Three-mile House," a few miles from York. A year later he moved to a new location within a few miles of what is now Red Lion, where he kept a store for two years and then bought, at a sheriff's sale, a tract of sixty-five acres of land on which now stands the borough of Red Lion. Only a few scattered houses stood there then, and Mr. Meyer purchased and renovated an old frame residence. He also improved his land and engaged in mercantile pursuits. When the Peach Bottom railroad was built through that section, its tracks were laid through Mr. Meyer's farm, but he never lived to see this great change. Mrs. Meyer, however, was not slow to take advantage of this circumstance, platting the farm and showing much business enterprise.

Mr. Meyer's death was a distinct loss to this section. He was not only an admirable business man, but in every way a most exemplary citizen. A Democrat through life, he was personally opposed to holding any office, although he was so highly esteemed that he might have been elected to any position he desired. He was a leading member of the Lutheran Church.

Mrs. Meyer was born Dec. 2, 1828, also at Oldenburg, being a schoolmate of her husband and of the same religious faith. Her parents were Bernard and Ann (Long) Denker, both of whom died in their native land. Mrs. Meyer, like her husband, enjoyed superior educational advantages, and, by the capable manner in which she managed the important business affairs left by him, has shown unusual business ability. She added thirty-two acres to the original farm and when the railroad was built through it, she kept the station for several years. The first home was destroyed by fire, but in 1866 she built the present handsome brick residence. The five children of Mr. and Mrs. Meyer were: Ada B., wife of E. T. Moul, died in 1881; Charles D. died in 1886, aged twenty-eight years; Harry B. lives at York; Bertha Henrietta is Mrs. J. A. Miller, of Red Lion; and Antoinette Catherine is Mrs. Charles W. Moody, of Red Lion. She is a member of the Lutheran Church of Red Lion in which she formerly was very active.

HON. VALENTINE TROUT, formerly associate judge in York county, is one of the prominent citizens of Chanceford township. Mr. Trout was born Feb. 9, 1822, on his father's farm in Hopewell township, York county, Pennsylvania.

Wentel Trout, the grandfather of Valentine, came from Germany to America with his two brothers, George and Henry. They were all prosperous and brought much silver money with them, purchasing farms in the vicinity of Strasburg, Lancaster county. Mr. Trout removed from Lancaster county to York county, settling in the lower end of Hopewell township, where he purchased a large tract of land. In religious matters he was a member of the Lutheran Church. Mr. Trout died on his farm at the age of about eighty years, and his son, the father of Valentine, settled the estate. The children born to Wentel Trout and his wife were as follows: Joseph, a farmer, died in Shrewsbury township; William married Lydia Wyant, and died on his farm in Hopewell township; Wentel George and David both died on the home farm; Adam died on his farm in Hopewell township; Bessie married John Miller, and died in Hopewell township; Polly married Garretson Prall, and died in Hopewell township; a daughter (name unknown) married David Hartman and located in the West: Lydia married Jacob Grove, and died in Hopewell township.

Wentel Trout, son of Wentel, was born on the homestead in Hopewell township in 1785, and received his education in the subscription schools of that period. Mr. Trout was a very successful man and followed the occupation of farming all of his life. After marrying Barbara Miller he bought a farm in the upper end of Hopewell township, where he resided during the war of 1812-15, being drafted into service during the war and serving his term in Baltimore. After the war Mr. Trout returned home and sold his farm, purchasing another in the center of Hopewell township, which latter has later become known as the William Baughman farm, and upon which Mr. Trout resided until his death in 1870. For many years he was an elder in the Lutheran Church, having been a member of that religious organization since boyhood. He collected the first school tax in Hopewell township after the free-school system had been established and encountered much difficulty in making his collections, as many people at that time were strongly opposed to the tax. Mr. Trout had been a member of the Whig party for many years, and died a Republican. He was a well known sale-crier, and was highly esteemed throughout the township for his many sterling traits of character. He was generally respected as a man of strict integrity and possessed the confidence of his fellow citizens to an extent that he was often called upon to settle up estates. Mr. Trout's death occurred in his eighty-fifth year. Mr. Trout's wife was the daughter of Abraham and Barbara Miller, who owned a home in Hopewell township. The children born to the worthy couple are as follows: Barbara married Solomon Blouse, and died in Shrewsbury township; Adam married Katie Fitchbaugh, and they both died near Loganville, York county; Abraham married Violet Morrissey, and died in Hopewell township; Samuel married Mrs. Catherine Douglas, and both died in Hopewell township; David married a Miss Wright, of Maryland, enlisted in an Illinois regiment, and served in the Civil war, dying in Salisbury prison; Jacob married a Miss Wattmeyer, and was killed by a falling tree in Hopewell township; Valentine; James married Maria Arms, and died in Maryland; and John was married twice, (first) to Mary Falkner, and died in Shrewsbury township.

Valentine Trout's first teacher was Templeton Hollingshed, a subscription teacher who held school in different homes, and lived temporarily in each family. When the free schools were established, Mr. Trout attended them, and received a good education. Although as fond of play as any boy, Mr. Trout learned when to play and when to study, and never tried to do both at one time. In fact, during his entire boyhood he was called upon to do his part of the work, both within and without. At the age of nineteen, Mr. Trout and his brother, Samuel, made a trip to Chanceford township, hauling timber from the woods to Manor Furnace. He continued in this occupation for one season, when he married and located on his present farm. Mr. Trout did all of his farming with the old implements, the modern machinery not coming into use until after he had ceased his agricultural labors. Mr. Trout's farm first consisted of 170 acres, most of which he had himself cleared and improved, in 1861 building a fine barn 70 x 61 feet. The old home was built of logs, which Mr. Trout covered with weather-boards, and it is still used as a dwelling.

In the fall of 1873 Mr. Trout was elected associate judge, under the old constitution, and served as such until its abolition five years ago. Previous to holding this office Mr. Trout had been school director for fifteen years, later serving three years in the same capacity, making a total of eighteen years; he then declined the position, considering that he had done his full official duty. He had served as president, secretary and treasurer of the board, had been assistant assessor and judge of elections, and was appointed a number of times by the court to serve as road-viewer and bridge-inspector of York county.

At the age of twenty-two Mr. Trout joined Staley's Lutheran Church in his township, but in 1849 became connected with the New Harmony Presbyterian Church at the Brogue, and in 1851 was appointed elder, having served continuously in that capacity, and missed but one communion during the entire period. He has been a delegate to the conventions, and is an ardent, active church worker and a devout Christian man, making family worship one of his rules of life. In politics Mr. Trout was reared a Whig, but joined the Democratic party just prior to the Civil war, when he became a Douglas Democrat.

Mr. Trout has been twice married. On Sept. 9, 1842, he married Maria Blouse, born in 1822 in Chanceford township, daughter of John Blouse. Mrs. Trout's mother died when Marja was a small child. Mr. Trout's first wife died April 13, 1873, and was interred at the Brogueville Presbyterian cemetery, leaving these children: George B., a farmer of Chanceford township, married (first) Mary Workinger, daughter of the late Jesse and Mary Workinger, and after her death he married (second) Mary A. Wise; Margaret Rebecca married Jacob Warner of Chanceford township; M. Jane married Henry Curran, who, for many years, was a merchant of Brogueville, where he died in 1898, leaving four children; Jacob William married Susie Miller, and they reside in Chanceford township; Elizabeth Amanda is now Mrs. Samuel Warner, of Chanceford township; Valentine V., of Hopewell township, married Mattie Martin; and Clarkson, of Chanceford township, married Miss Frances Keller.

Valentine Trout's second marriage was to Mrs. James Fulton, whose maiden name was Mary Ann Webb. She was born in New Market, Md., March 23, 1833. Mr. Trout is the father of seven children, the grandfather of forty-one children (twenty-four of whom are living), and twenty-six great-grandchildren. Over six feet tall, of a fine physique, Judge Trout is a conspicuous figure in any assembly, which his dignified bearing and courtly manner make still more noticeable. Mr. Trout has in his possession an old hand-made pocketbook, of pig skin, which was brought to this country from Germany by his emigrant ancestor. It is a curious family heirloom and naturally highly prized.

WILLIAM HENRY MILLER, a prominent farmer of York county, was born in Spring Garden township Sept. 29, 1848, son of Christian and Elizabeth (Louckes) Miller. He had one sister, Margaret L., who makes her home with him.

Mr. Miller attended the public schools first and later studied at the State Normal, at Millersville. After leaving school he decided to make farming his occupation and has been steadily engaged in agriculture ever since. He has been very successful in his operations and is well-known not only among the other farmers of that section, but among the business men of York. He was one of the active managers of the York County Agricultural Society, is president of the Farmers' Fire Insurance Company, and for the past twenty-six years has been one of the board of directors of the Western National Bank of York.

On Dec. 25, 1873, Mr. Miller was united in marriage with Miss Alice J., daughter of Frederick and Lydia (Gibson) Schetzauch, of Hellam township, and to their union has come one son, Harry S. Mr. Miller is a man of considerable influence locally, and the family are held in high esteem.

HARRY GEORGE SCHRIVER. The Schrivers are old German settlers in Adams county, and now have a number of prominent representatives in York county, one of whom is Harry G. Schriver, an extensive dealer in horses and mules at Hanover, where he was born June 28, 1847, son of Jacob H. and Elmira (Gitt) Schriver. The father, who is now engaged in the livery business at Hanover, was born in York county on a farm north of Hanover, Nov. 14, 1842, the son of Henry C. and Maria M. (Felty) Schriver, natives of Adams county. Henry C. Schriver lived to the advanced age of eighty years and was one of the prosperous farmers of his time in York county. His wife, Maria M., who died in 1862, in her eightieth year, was the daughter of Henry and Polly (Newman) Felty, early settlers of York county. The father of Henry C. Schriver was John Schriver, a native of Adams county, who married a Coover. The Schrivers emigrated from Germany to America many years prior to the Revolution.

Jacob H. Schriver, the father of Harry G., was in his teens a clerk in the store of Cremer & Allewelt, with whom he remained until 1861, when he enlisted in Company G, 16th P. V. I., Col. Zeigler commanding, in the three months' service under the first call of President Lincoln for 75,000 men. The regiment was sent to Bunker Hill, Va., and at the expiration of his term of enlistment Mr. Schriver returned to Hanover, and resumed his vocation as clerk in the store of Cremer & Allewelt. He remained with them until 1865, when he engaged in the livery business for himself, at the same time dealing in horses and mules. This business he continued actively for twenty-five years, and few men in that time handled more horses and mules than Mr. Schriver. In 1890 he turned the business over to his son Harry G. The livery barn burned in 1900, resulting in the loss of a number of horses and carriages. Mr. Schriver sustained a heavy financial loss, but he immediately rebuilt the stables and re-established himself in the business, which he has since conducted on a scale of some magnitude, keeping a large stock of horses and carriages.

Jacob H. Schriver was married Jan. 18, 1866, to Miss Elmira Gitt, daughter of J. W. and Maria (Newman) Gitt. She was reared in York county. To Mr. and Mrs. Schriver were born three children, Harry George, Elsie (deceased), and M. Grace (at home). In politics Mr. Schriver is a Republican, and for three years he served as a member of the city council. For a year he was a member of the Mt.
Olivet Cemetery Board. He and his wife are members of Emanuel Reformed Church, in which he has been very active, having served as elder, deacon and trustee.

Harry George Schriver was educated in the public schools of Hanover. At the conclusion of school days he became the assistant of his father in the livery business, continuing the same until 1900, when he commenced business on his own account. He has built up an extensive trade, and few men of his age are better judges of horses than he. He deals extensively in horses and mules, for the proper care of which his present barn was erected in 1893. Mr. Schriver buys horses in various parts of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Iowa and Kentucky. He is a member of the Elks, Lodge No. 763, and in 1904 he was elected a member of the city council from the First ward. He was married in 1893 to Miss Mabel Trone, daughter of Samuel E. and Louisa (Thomas) Trone, of Hanover.

CHARLES P. SHREINER, city clerk of York, is a member of an old and honored family of the State, and one which has left its impress for good on society as succeeding generations have passed.

The earlier members of the family were connected with the history and life of Lancaster county, Pa., for the most part, the great-grandfather of Charles P. Shreiner having been a celebrated clockmaker of Lancaster for a long lifetime. The products of his skill are still in existence. The prevailing style in that day was the large "grandfather's clock," made with such care as to last for centuries. A number of these clocks are still owned in the county.
Mr. Shreiner built the first clock placed in the old Lancaster court house, famous for almost a century as a timekeeper.

Martin Shreiner, grandfather of Charles P., was a man of considerable property in his generation, residing at Lancaster, where he was prominent in the business circles of the city.
He at one time owned the land on which now stands the Lancaster Trust Company's handsome building, this particular spot having been in the family for three successive generations, and in looking up the title the lawyers in making the transfer discovered the remarkable fact that there had never been a dollar of debt against the property during the three generations that it was in the possession of the Shreiner family.

Philip Shreiner, father of Charles P., resided in Lancaster during the earlier part of his life, and thence he removed to New Cumberland, Pa., and then to Columbia, and engaged in the jewelry business. There he died in 1877, aged sixty-nine years. By marriage he connected the Shreiners with another of the historic families of the State, his wife having been Rebecca Trissler, daughter of Michael Trissler. She bore him six children, passing to rest in 1879, aged seventy-five years. Two of the sons and one daughter are now deceased, Samuel, Edward and Rebecca; Mary, the el-est daughter, is the wife of the late Hon. Hiram Young, editor of the York Dispatch; Clara, unmarried, resides with her sister; Charles P. is the city clerk of York.

Charles P. Shreiner has been the efficient city clerk of York for the past four years, and is now serving his fifth term. He was born in New Cumberland, Cumberland Co., Pa., Oct.
15, 1843, and was but two years old when the family removed to Columbia. He was reared in that town, receiving a good common-school education, and as a boy entered the employ of his father as a clerk in the jewelry store. For the intervening years between 1861 and 1875
Mr. Shreiner was thus engaged. Then he decided to try his hand at journalism. He purchased the plant of the Norristown (Pa.) Independent, and for two years was engaged in its publication. After the death of his father Mr. Shreiner disposed of his newspaper, and coming to York in 1880 became associate editor of the York Dispatch, with which paper he was connected until his election to his present office, in 1902. His conduct of the office has been so satisfactory that he has been honored with re-election to a fifth term. Mr. Shreiner is an experienced writer, and as a delegate representing the city of York at the meeting of the League of Third Class Cities, held at Wilkes-Barre, Sept. 6, 7, 8, 1904, read a paper on the “Taxation and Assessment of Property” which attracted marked attention, and was published in the Wilkes-Barre newspapers, accompanied by a likeness of Mr. Shreiner.

On May 11, 1865, Mr. Shreiner married Sallie K. Kinzer, of Kinzer’s Station, this being a historic point named after that family in Lancaster county. Three children came to this union, Edward dying Dec. 28, 1897, in his thirty-second year. The survivors are: Harry K., who is employed at the Baldwin Locomotive works, at Philadelphia, and Rebecca Trissler, who now presides over the home, her mother having died Aug. 9, 1900.

Mr. Shreiner affiliates with the Heptasophs and is an elder in St. Matthew’s Lutheran Church. He is a man of the strictest probity of character, administering his office with that painstaking care more frequently observed in the old days than at present. In political affiliation he is a staunch Republican, and is a valued worker in the local ranks of the organization. In the social life of the city both he and his wife have been prominent and helpful factors. He is found allied with the forces of law and order and good government in every movement which comes up for consideration in the community, and is a tower of strength in shaping the moral tone of the city. The esteem in which he is held is universal.

WILLIAM D. GLESSIC, M. D., one of the successful physicians of New Freedom, Pa., was born Dec. 29, 1835, at Cross Roads, York county; son of Genesis and Mary (Linebaugh) Glessic.

Joseph Glessic, the grandfather, was a farmer who had these children: Jerry; Genesis; Joseph; William; Caroline, married George Eckert; Mary; Sanora, married George Dittenhaefer; Lydia, married Thomas Montgomery; and Sarah married John Minnon, of York. The maternal grandfather Linebaugh followed agricultural pursuits all his life. At the time of his death he had the following children: Abraham, Daniel and Mary (twins). John, Jesse, William and Harry.

Genesis Glessic was a farmer and was prominent all his life. His death occurred July 30, 1898. His wife, Mary Linebaugh, was married twice, her first marriage being to Daniel Machlin, by whom she had these children: Daivalt; Salina, who married Edward Linebaugh; Mary, who married John M. Fishel; Sarah, who married Solomon Wire; and Susan, who married Henry Kochenour. To Genesis and Mary Glessic two children were born, John Henry and William D.

William D. Glessic, after attending the public schools, entered the Stewartstown Collegiate Institute under Prof. Maxwell in 1874-5, after which he taught school for one year, and then attended two terms at the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, Md. He was graduated from the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City, in 1880, and commenced practice in Lancaster county, where he remained for one year, removing to York county, where he has continued ever since.

On May 29, 1895, Dr. Glessic married Miss Nettie E. Wilson, one of the twelve children of William S. Wilson, of York county. She was a successful teacher for a number of years, and greatly beloved by her pupils. Dr. Glessic has been very successful professionally, and he has gained a position of importance in his line. While never seeking office he has always taken a public-spirited interest in the welfare of the town, and has generously supported every movement which his judgment has led him to regard as beneficial. He is universally esteemed, and occupies a high social position. He is a member of the York County Medical Society.

WILLIAM K. BURNS, who died Dec. 26, 1905, was a leading citizen of Monaghan township. York county, conducting a first class, comfortable hostelry at Siddonsburg. He was born in Monaghan township, Feb. 18, 1831, son of George and Mary (Kerr) Burns.

Thomas Burns, his grandfather, came from Michael Hoke, the father of our subject, was born in Jackson township, York county, in 1818. He was a man of versatile abilities, and while pursuing the vocation of farming for many years was also actively engaged in various enterprises, which the resources of his time opened to vigilant and far-sighted young men. Acquiring the trade of wheelwright and blacksmith, he later served an apprenticeship as a machinist at Nashville, Pa., and was a merchant for some time at the same town. He married Anna Martin, who was born in York county, near the State Line, and he died in 1863, comparatively young in years.

Michael Hoke, our subject, was born in North Codorus township, York county, Nov. 17, 1840. His early boyhood days were spent on the farm, from which he attended the public schools at Spring Grove, and later at the old Mud schoolhouse. In 1860 he began an apprenticeship at the machinist's trade with Samuel Fitz, and after completing his trade he remained with his employer for ten years. In 1870 he formed a partnership with Isaac Shaffer in the grain business under the firm name of Hoke & Shaffer. In 1880 feed was added to their line, and by adding coal the business was further extended and continued until 1890, when Mr. Hoke purchased the interest of Mr. Shaffer, admitted his son to partnership, and changed the name of the firm to M. Hoke & Son. Soon after they engaged in the burning and shipping of lime. A series of modern kilns were erected along the line of the Pennsylvania railroad, the stone coming from the celebrated Rock quarry of Adams county. The lime thus produced possessing a superior quality, the firm have succeeded in building up an extensive business, which extends to the States of Virginia, New Jersey, Delaware, New York and Maryland. They now deal in cement, plaster, feed, coal and hair.
Mr. Hoke is also owner of a good farm in York county.

In November, 1865, Mr. Hoke married Harriet Reed, of Adams county, daughter of John and Mary Magdalena (Dubbs) Reed. To Mr. and Mrs. Hoke have been born six children, as follows: Paul A., who is engaged in business with his father; Mary Elsie, the wife of H. A. Smith; Anna, who married William Ray, and resides in Philadelphia; Mazie M., at home; and John R. and Edward M., at home. In politics Mr. Hoke is a Democrat, and for two years he served as a member of the city council. Among the fraternal orders he is a member of the I. O. O. F. Lodge, No. 327, and also of the Royal Arcanum. He and his wife are active members of the Reformed Church, in which he has served for several years as deacon and elder. While serving his apprenticeship he was drafted for army service in 1862, and served nine months. He is one of the substantial and successful business men of Hanover, of that type which brings growth and prosperity to the community in which their careers are centered.

JOHN GREENAWAY, who now holds the position of vice-president and superintendent of the Hanover Cordage Company, of Hanover, Pa., was born July 5, 1860, in the County of Armagh, Ireland, near Belfast, the center of the linen industry of that country. He there acquired a good common-school education after which he entered the employ of the leading linen yarn manufacturers of Belfast, learning the trade of preparing and spinning master. Possessing a natural aptitude for mechanics Mr. Greenaway, on the completion of his trade thus acquired, decided to seek a larger field of activity, and in 1883 came to America. On his arrival in this country he at once entered the employ of the Ludlow Manufacturing Associates of Ludlow, Mass., was later with the A. H. Hart Company, New York City, their place being known as the Elm Flax Mills, and also at other leading manufacturing establishments in this country. The opportunities thus presenting themselves, he with his natural aptitude for mechanics gained a thorough knowledge of the business in which he was engaged.

Mr. Greenaway on Jan. 29, 1900, assisted Mr. Frederick W. Weber and Mr. George H. Bonte in forming the Bonte Cordage Company, Limited, locating in Hanover, Pa., and because of his wide experience and skill in the manufacturing of twines and cordage was elected to the position of vice-president and superintendent of the company. When in April, 1903, Mr. George H. Bonte sold his interest to Mr. H. N. Gitt and Mr. C. J. De-lone, and the entire interests were sold to the newly incorporated company known then and now as the Hanover Cordage Company, he was again elected to the position of vice-president and superintendent, in which official capacity he has since continued.

In September, 1886, Mr. Greenaway married Marcella Cartwright, of Dundee, Scotland, where are located some of the largest jute manufacturing establishments in the world. Incidentally it may be mentioned that Mrs. Greenaway comes from a family who are thoroughly versed in that industry. To Mr. and Mrs. Greenaway have been born seven children, as follows: Jennie, John Nicholas, Christiana, William Thomas, Ellen Elina, Laura, and David, all of whom are now living with the exception of Christiana. Mr. Greenaway in politics is a stanch Republican and both Mr. and Mrs. Greenaway hold membership in the Emanuel Reformed Church of Hanover, Pennsylvania.

SILAS M. BIRNSTOCK has passed many years of his life in Wrightsville, where he is engaged in business.

The Birnstock family is of German origin, Henry Birnstock, father of Silas M., having been born in Germany, Nov. 4, 1837. His father, Frederick Birnstock, was also a native of Germany, where he lived and died. He was a mason by trade and married Johanna Funk, by whom he had the following children: Henrietta, who married in Germany, and with her husband, Mr. Schuerer, came to America and settled in Lawrence, Mass., where she now lives; Henry, father of Silas M., who was a soldier in the German army during the Franco-Prussian war, a locksmith by trade, living in Germany; and Ferdinand, deceased. Until he was fifteen years old Henry Birnstock attended school in his native town. At that time one of his mother's sisters was coming to America, and asked that Henry might accompany her. His parents gave their permission, and the boy and his aunt sailed from Bremen on a sailing vessel bound for Baltimore, Md. After a six weeks' voyage they landed, and went at once to York, Pa., where four other sisters of Mrs. Birnstock were already settled. Henry immediately entered the shop of D. D. Doudel to learn the tinsmith's trade. He served an apprenticeship of five years and three months, after which he worked for Mr. Doudel until the outbreak of the Civil war. In April, 1861, at the first call for volunteers, he enlisted in Company A, 16th P. V. I., for three months' service. The regiment was recruited in York county, and sent to Harper's Ferry. Thence the regiment returned home and was discharged. Mr. Birnstock again enlisted, Aug. 20, 1861, in Company I, 76th P. V. I., for three years under Capt. McIntyre, Col. Powers commanding. The first engagement in which he took part was at Pocataligo, S. C., under Colonel, afterward Major-General, Terry, then commanding the brigade. In this battle he was wounded in the left cheek by a minie ball. He also participated in the engagements at Hilton Head, S. C., Fort Pulaski, James Island, Secessionville, Morris Island, Fort Wagner (both assaults), destruction of Richmond and Petersburg railroad, Chesterfield Heights, Swifts Creek, Drury's Bluff, Green Plains, Cold Harbor, Wier Bottom Church, Bermuda Hundred, siege of Petersburg (mine explosion), Chaplin's Farm, assault on Fort Gilmer and Fair Oaks. On the organization of the company Mr. Birnstock was appointed sergeant, and he left the army as first sergeant of his regiment. He received his discharge and was mustered out of the service Nov. 28, 1864, at Harrisburg, Pa., having served three months beyond the time for which he enlisted.

On returning from the war Mr. Birnstock returned to his old employment in the tinsmith shop of Mr. Doudel, in York, where he remained until 1869. In that year he located at Wrightsville and bought the tinsmith business from the estate of Henry Huber. The store was then in the basement of the dwelling house and the workshop in the stable at the rear. In 1872 Mr. Birnstock purchased the adjoining brick building to which he moved his store, and erected a workshop and warehouse on the rear of the lot. There he continued the business until 1898, when he sold it to his sons, who continue it under the firm name of Birnstock Bros. Since 1880 Mr. Birnstock has had an interest in the Wrightsville Hardware Company, of which he is one of the original directors. The company was incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania, and in 1898, on the death of its first president, Col. Frank Magee, Mr. Birnstock was elected to that position, which he has ever since occupied.

Mr. Birnstock is a member of the G. A. R., and past commander of Lieut. R. W. Smith Post, No. 270. He is also a member of the I. O. O. F., F. & A. M., and of the Royal Arcanum. In politics he is a Democrat; he has served as chief burgess and in the town council, and as a member of the school board. He adheres to the faith of the Lutheran Church in which he was reared.

On Feb. 2, 1865, in York, Mr. Birnstock married Barbara Weisman, of that place, daughter of Adam Weisman, deceased. The children of this marriage are as follows: Silas M.; Harry D., of Wrightsville, who married Minnie Kinard; Charles F., of Wrightsville, who married Edith McElroy; William W., of York, who married Jennie Yesler; and three children, who died in infancy.

Silas M. Birnstock was born in York, Feb. 23, 1867, and when he was two years old his parents moved to Wrightsville. There he attended the public schools, his first teacher being Miss Annie Moore. He graduated at the age of sixteen under Prof. Gardner. His father had intended that he should go to college, but he was not very fond of study, and did not care to avail himself of this opportunity. As a boy he enjoyed working in his father's tinsmith shop, where he was allowed to do odd jobs, and earned as much as fifty cents a day. On leaving school he began to learn the plumber's trade, and finished his apprenticeship at the age of nineteen. He now decided to try his future in the West, going first to Ashton, Ill., and, after working at his trade there for a time, traveling to Tacoma and Spokane, Wash. In Tacoma he was thus employed for nearly a year, then for seven months was with a surveying party of the Northern Pacific railroad, between South Bend and Chehalis, Wash. Returning to Tacoma he worked at his trade a few months, after which he returned to the East. He soon married and settled in Wrightsville, doing a thriving business in hardware, plumbing and timming. In 1898, Mr. Birnstock, and his brother, Charles E., bought their father's well-established business, which they conducted under the firm name of Birnstock Brothers. They have greatly enlarged its scope, increased the stock, and have a flourishing trade. Mr. Birnstock has been superintendent of the Wrightsville Water Supply Co. since its organization. On July 8, 1901, he bought out the Columbia Steam Ferry & Tow Boat Company, which is now incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania, Mr. Birnstock being treasurer, his brother, Charles F., secretary, and his father, president. His steamboat "The Mary" is the finest boat that ever plied between Wrightsville and Columbia, being 92 x 16 feet in dimensions, with a capacity of 190 passengers, and a draft of twelve inches, light. The boat makes connections with all trains from Lancaster and York.

Mr. Birnstock's marriage to Edith L. Ogden, daughter of George Ogden, of York, took place in that city Nov. 25, 1891. They have one child, Henry Ogden, born Nov. 12, 1892. Mr. and Mrs. Birnstock have a very pleasant home, an hospitable center for their many friends, and the latter is an active worker in the Presbyterian Church. Like his father Mr. Birnstock votes the Democratic ticket, his first presidential vote being cast for Cleveland. He is not an office seeker, but was once a candidate for sheriff of York county. Fraternally he is connected with Riverside Lodge, F. & A. M., of which he is past master; is a member of Chihuahua Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Wrightsville; and a charter member of Lodge No. 213, B. P. O. E., of York. He is essentially a self-made man, and owes his success to his own energy, perseverance and ability.

EPHRAIM K. COBLE, late a prominent citizen and land owner of Goldsboro, York county, was born in 1831, in Newberry township, this county, son of George and Henrietta (Kauffman) Coble.

Casper Coble, grandfather of Ephraim, was born in Newberry township, where he followed farming. He died at Ball Hill at an advanced age. The children born to himself and wife were as follows: George, Abraham, Peter and John, all of whom are deceased.

George Coble, father of our subject, was born in Newberry township, and received a common school education. He followed farming in York, Dauphin and Lancaster counties, and finally settled in Cly, Newberry township, where he lived retired up to the time of his death, which occurred in his eighty-second year. He was buried in Pine Grove cemetery in Newberry township. Mr. Coble married Henrietta Kauffman, who lived to an advanced age. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Coble were as follows: Solomon died in active service during the Civil war; Ephraim is our subject; Jessie died at Pittsburg; Lucy died in Dauphin county; Catherine died in Lewisberry; Moses died from injuries received on the battlefield, having been removed to a hospital in West Virginia; Andrew died in Newberry township; Washington lives at York Haven; Reuben died young; Mary married John Fink, deceased, and she resides in Columbia, Lancaster county; and Mary died in Goldsboro.

Ephraim K. Coble received but a scanty education, at the age of seven years being sent out to fight his own way in life. He was first engaged with a Peter Bair, on his farm in Newberry township. In 1858 he married Sarah Jane Palmer, daughter of George and Catherine (Hoffman) Palmer, of York county. During the Civil war Mr. Coble enlisted in Company K, 143d P. V. I., Capt. J. S. Little, commanding, and took part in a number of engagements, and in the battle of the Wilderness was severely wounded, being shot in the hip, the thigh and the shoulder, and losing a finger from his left hand. These injuries did not, however, incapacitate Mr. Coble and he served three years, or to the close of the war, when he returned to Newberry township. He was then employed by Abraham Shelley, of Cly, as a man of all work, remaining with him thirteen years, and accumulating enough money by the end of that time to purchase a small tract of land in Newberry township, where he remained about seven years. In 1875 Mr. Coble returned to Cly, and bought a tract of about twenty-five acres, put up four fine buildings, and followed farming. At the time of his death, March 5, 1905, he was living retired, feeling that his many years of labor earned him a rest.

To Mr. and Mrs. Coble three children were born: Angeline married William Brunaw and lives at Cly; Sadie died in infancy; and Carrie (deceased) married Robert Auckler of York.

Politically Mr. Coble was a stanch Republican, but he took no active interest in politics. He was a valued member of the United Brethren Church, of which he was a liberal supporter. Mr. Coble started in life on his own resources, and climbed the ladder of success, rung by rung, practically unaided. He was a truly self-made man. He had an excellent war record, and was highly esteemed and respected by all with whom he came in contact.

GEORGE W. THOMAS. It illustrates the character of this well known citizen of Hanover that when he returned home from the Civil war he appreciated the value of additional education and did not scruple to again place himself under the direction of the public schoolmaster, just as he had unfalteringly followed the commands of cavalry officers during the closing years of that memorable conflict, which forever cemented the national union.

George Thomas, the paternal grandfather of George W., was a native of Scotland, and when a young man migrated to America. He married Mary Glessner, and settled in Hanover.

Emanuel Thomas, son of George and father of George W., was born in Hanover in 1818. He acquired the trade of a coachmaker, which he followed through his active years. He married Sarah A. Smyser, who was born July 21, 1826, daughter of Jacob and Annie M. (Eisenhart) Smyser. Eight children were born to Elmer and Sarah A. Thomas, namely: George W.: J. A., a dentist at Hanover; Edward C., deceased; Mary Antoinette, wife of William Strayer, of St. Paul, Minn.; Howard S., living in Maryland, near Stone Cottage; Cora E., deceased; Emma Grace, who married Emory Swartz; and Carrie, who married William Melhorn, of Hanover. The father, Emanuel Thomas, died in October, 1880, aged sixty-two years.

George W. Thomas, the eldest of the family, was born at Hanover June 11, 1847. His education was received in the public schools of the little city and he was still a boy when he enlisted in the military service of his country in Company E, 9th Pennsylvania Cavalry, Col. Russell commanding. The courageous and patriotic lad saw active and arduous service with the regiment; and for a time performed scout duty. At the expiration of the term of service in June, 1865, he was honorably discharged. Being still of school age, he re-entered the public schools of Hanover and continued his studies to the end of the year. He then learned the trade of carpenter with Edward Steffy, with whom he remained for a year or two. In 1867 Mr. Thomas started in undertaking in Hanover and in this vocation he has since continued uninterruptedly. In duration of time he is now the oldest undertaker in Hanover. As funeral director his place of business is located at No. 21 East Middle street.

In 1872 Mr. Thomas married Mary E. Weaver, a native of the town of Manchester, Maryland, daughter of L. H. P. and Helen M. (Eck) Weaver. To George W. and Mary E. Thomas have been born the following children: Dr. C. L., a practicing physician in Philadelphia, Pa., who married Miss Erbin, of that city; Hattie, who married Robert E. Hull, of Haddonfield, N. J.; Oliver C., in Hanover, who married Miss Trout; Lottie May, who married Curran A. Allwelt, formerly of the Hanover Shoe Factory, and now at home: Austin F., and George E. In politics Mr. Thomas is a Republican and for three terms he has served as city tax collector. He is a member of Major Jenkins Post, No. 99, G. A. R., of Hanover; also of the K. of P., the Mystic Chain, the Red Men, the Elks, the Brotherhood of Funeral Directors and Friendly Circle, Brotherhood of the Union. Both he and his wife are active members of Emanuel Reformed Church, of which he has served as deacon for five years, and as elder five years.

HON. JACOB C. DEVENEY, justice of the peace and ex-representative in the Legislature of Pennsylvania, belongs to an old and honored family of York county. He was born Nov. 17, 1848, in Springfield township, son of Levi, and grandson of Dennis Deveney. His great-grandfather came to America, with his family, from Ireland. They located first in Cumberland county, and about 1820 settled in York county. Springfield township, where the head of the family followed his trade of a stone and brick mason. Dennis Deveney, the grandfather, was also a brick mason by trade, following that, in connection with school teaching, in Springfield township. He died aged fifty-seven years, and was buried in the Shuster's cemetery, as was also his wife Elizabeth Shirey. Their children were: Levi, Emanuel, Maria, Jeremiah, Leah, Elizabeth, Caroline and Sarah Ann.

Levi Deveney, the father of Jacob C., was born in Springfield township in 1826, and was also a stone mason by trade. He was thus engaged for about twenty years in his native township, being also one of the first in York county to teach in a free school. Levi Deveney died in 1884 and was interred in Shuster's cemetery. He married Magdaline Caslow, daughter of Jacob Caslow, and they had these children: Henry Albert, who died in 1890; Jacob C.; Nelson, who died in 1882; Andrew, an attorney of York, who died in 1884; Isabella, who died young; Emma Jane; Priscilla and Ellen. In political affiliation Mr. Deveney belonged to the Democratic party, and served on the school board, also holding other township offices. He was a member of the Lutheran Church, in which he took an active part, being secretary of the church council, to which position his son, Jacob C., succeeded him on the former's death.

Jacob C. Deveney attended the township schools and a normal school in Seven Valley. He was a teacher for fourteen years, becoming widely and favorably known as an educator throughout Springfield township. In 1871 he married Louise A. Myers, daughter of Jesse and Lucinda (Hamm) Myers. Mr. Deveney now resides on his snug little farm of thirty-four acres near Seven Valley, upon which he has erected a very fine set of buildings. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Deveney have been as follows: Harvey, a graduate of the Pennsylvania College at Gettysburg, Pa., class of 1899, is at present bookkeeper with the Prudential Life Insurance Company, of Newark, N. J., having 100 agents under him; Curdie Allen, a graduate of the Shippensburg State Normal School, class of 1900, was principal of the Stewartstown school for three terms, and is now principal of the school at Jamesburg, N. J.; Jennie married John Rowe, of York; Jesse is of Seven Valley; Lottie is the wife of Albert Leathery, of York; Mazie and Carrie are at home; Rosie is a school teacher; Minnie is a stenographer and bookkeeper; Leroy is attending the York County Academy, at Seven Valley; and Violet and Earl are at home.

Mr. Deveney is a stanch Democrat, and served in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives from 1880 to 1884. He was elected justice of the peace in 1876, and still holds that position. Judge Deveney has also served as school director of his township, and as assessor. He is a faithful member of the Lutheran Church, and takes an active part in its work.

GEORGE E. LOUCKS, station agent at Hellam, on the Frederick division of the Northern Central railroad (Pennsylvania system), was born Dec. 10, 1850, in Spring Garden township, York county, a son of Zachariah K. and Sarah A. (Ebert) Loucks.

John George Loucks, his great-grandfather, came to the United States from Germany, and settled in Berks county, Pa., at what is known as Tulpehocken, purchasing a tract of land there about 1780. Thence he moved to York county, where on May 13, 1805, he purchased from Rev. Mr. Wagghner, the mill and farm where his great-grandson, Edwin W. Loucks, and his grandson, Henry J. Loucks, now reside. This farm was once the property of a Tory, John Rankin, who on account of his sympathy for the British was compelled to flee from the section. His property was confiscated and later sold to Rev. Mr. Wagghner, who, as already stated, sold it to John George Loucks in 1805. Mr. Loucks was a man of substance and prominent in the early history of York county.

George Loucks, son of John George, was born Aug. 18, 1787, and died Oct. 29, 1849. He combined the occupations of farming and milling and was able to purchase a great deal of real estate, at the time of his death being the owner of the mill property. Like his father before him he was very prominent in the affairs of the county, and he was a member of the German Reformed Church. George Loucks married Susanna Weltzehoffer, of Hellam township, and they became the parents of six children, namely: Zachariah K.; George W., who died in the West; Cassandra, who married William H. Kepner, first mayor of Harrisburg; Henrietta, who married George C. Barnitz, of Harrisburg; Susan, who married William Hoke, of York; and Henry J., who settled on the old homestead.

Zachariah K. Loucks, father of George E.,
was born March 14, 1822, and was educated in the York County Academy under Rev. Stephen Boyer, attending there for a number of years. He was a classmate of Prof. Kirkwood, who became a famous astronomer and mathematician. He commenced his business life in York as a clerk with the firm of Schriver & Loucks & Co., and later entered the employ of Loucks & Becker, at the old Manor Furnace, in Chanceford township, where he remained a year. He then entered the store of Henry Becker, of York, where he was engaged until 1839, in which year he returned to his home in Spring Garden township, attending to the duties of the mill and farm until his father's death, after which he and his brother Henry succeeded to the business at the old homestead. But besides milling and farming Mr. Loucks had many other interests, and was one of the most prominent men of his day.

In 1863, upon the organization of the First National Bank of York, he was elected a director, later became vice-president, and in 1877 president of the institution. When the York and Peach Bottom railroad was built he was a director and financier, doing much to make the project a success. He was a life member of the York County Agricultural Association and for many years a member of its board of directors. He was one of the projectors of the Chanceford Turnpike Company and served as president thereof; served as a director of the York City Market until its completion, when he resigned; and was vice-president of the Penn Mutual Horse Insurance Company of York. His honorable connection with so many important concerns is sufficient evidence of his standing and the confidence reposed in him by his associates.

On Jan. 5, 1843, Mr. Loucks married Sarah Ann Ebert, who was born March 18, 1822, daughter of Col. Michael Ebert, of Spring Garden township, and children as follows were born to this union: Alexander W., of Manchester township, York county; George E.; Edwin W., who is on the old homestead; Zachariah K., Jr., an attorney at law of Philadelphia; Susan and Annie, who died in infancy; and Isabella, who married John W. Koller and died at the age of twenty-seven, having had three sons, Zachariah (who died in infancy), William I. (secretary and treasurer of the Rockdale Powder Company, York, Pa.), and Edwin L. (who died at the age of twenty-four years). The mother of this family died in February, 1891, the father in April, 1895. Mrs. Loucks was a Lutheran in religious belief, but Mr. Loucks clung to the church of his family, the German Reformed. His political sentiments were at first those of the Whig party, and he afterward joined the Republicans.

George E. Loucks was educated in the York County Academy and the college at Gettysburg, Pa. He commenced work with his father, assisting about the farm and mill, until long after he had reached his majority. On April 12, 1878, Mr. Loucks came to Hellam, and on Nov. 18th of the same year he was appointed agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, when his father built a neat, cozy station building, including warehouse and telegraph office. He sold the first ticket Nov. 18, 1878. He has been in the employ of the Pennsylvania Company and Northern Central Railway ever since as agent there, and is also the agent of the Adams Express Company at that point, performing the duties of both positions with the faithfulness and courtesy which account for his long retention at Hellam.

Mr. Loucks was married, March 7, 1878, to Mary J. S. Myers, daughter of Samuel Myers, of Spring Garden township. They have no children of their own, but have reared two, Addie M. Shelley (a cousin by marriage) came to the Loucks household at the age of nine, and remained for eighteen years, or until her marriage, in June, 1898, to Edward A. Kister, by whom she has one child, Mildred; they reside at New Cumberland, Pa. The other child reared by Mr. and Mrs. Loucks, Wilber H. Myers, was a nephew by marriage, and has lived with them from the age of four years, a period of twenty-one years. The family are members of the Lutheran Church. Mr. Loucks holds membership with York Lodge, No. 213, B. P. O. E., and the York County Historical Society. He is identified with the Republican party, though he often votes independently. Mr. Loucks is of a literary turn of mind, somewhat of a book worm, loving his home and books beyond everything else. He is very much in love with scientific literature and the discoveries in the scientific world, and he possesses one of the finest private libraries in York county.
Josiah W. Gitt, deceased, is prominently remembered as one of the sterling business men of Hanover, who resided there for more than a half century, and during most of the period was actively and successfully engaged in commercial pursuits. He is further remembered as the representative of one of the old and prominent pioneer families of York county, his ancestors having borne well their part in the wresting of the chosen land from its primitive wildness. They left a heritage of honorable service to a posterity which is still prominent in the affairs of Hanover.

James Gitt, great-grandfather of Josiah W., was a native of Ireland, who migrated to this vicinity while the red man still lingered in the primeval forests and when the vast solitudes of nature reigned there supreme. In this new land he married a young German woman of remarkable character, well fitted to share with him the duties of a pioneer, for she possessed a rare courage, great strength of mind and body and sympathy for the sick and suffering. At times she was called to administer to those who were ill, and, on occasions like these, was accustomed to mount a horse and ride at great speed to the homes of the afflicted. It is related that in all her life she was not ill a day, and she lived to the remarkable age of 103 years. James Gitt was also the representative of a long-lived family, his mother, who was born in 1720, dying at the age of 102 years. James Gitt was a man of superior force of character, even among the sturdy pioneer race. He filled the office of constable under his Britannic Majesty and was also justice of the peace under the Colonial government. He left five sons, and his descendants, at the time of his death, numbered seventy.

William Gitt; the grandfather of Josiah W., also had a family of five children and died at the age of ninety-nine years. One of his sons, George Gitt, was the father of Josiah W. The family of George Gitt consisted of Deliah, who married Edward Bair; Mary A., Mrs. H. W. Emmert; Josiah W.; and George D.

Josiah W. Gitt was born June 10, 1821, in Conewago township, on what was originally the Gitt homestead, but in later years was known as the Kellar place and the O'Bold farm. When a lad he removed with his parents to Hanover, and, after acquiring an education such as the village then afforded, devoted himself to commercial pursuits, for which he possessed marked aptitude. He learned the jeweler's trade and at the age of twenty-one years began business for himself in what is now the Gitt building, the site of which was granted by State rights to his grandfather, William Gitt. He continued successfully in that line for a number of years, but on April 10, 1847, he entered into partnership with H. W. Emmert in the dry-goods and notions business, under the firm name of Gitt & Emmert. This partnership continued uninterruptedly until June 5, 1863, when Mr. Emmert retired. As an individual Mr. Gitt then continued the business until 1889, when, after a career of forty-five years as merchant, he retired in favor of his two sons, George D., and Harry N.; they prosperously conducted the establishment until 1898, when the J. W. Gitt Company was incorporated, and this firm has continued the record of success up to the present. To the management of his business Josiah W. Gitt applied a memory of remarkable retentiveness and a remarkably sound judgment. His honest and upright methods won for his house an enviable reputation, not only in York but throughout the neighboring counties of Adams and Carroll.

In early manhood Josiah W. Gitt married Maria Newman, daughter of the late Jacob and Elizabeth Newman, who at that time resided on Carlisle street, Hanover, where John S. Young now lives. Shortly after marriage the young couple began housekeeping in the building, at the corner of Fountain Square and Baltimore street, in which the husband died. To Josiah and Maria (Newman) Gitt were born thirteen children, of whom the following eight survive: George D., of Frederick street; Harry N. and Mrs. A. J. Snively, of Fountain Square; Mrs. Jacob H. Schriver; Mrs. T. J. O'Neil, of Baltimore street; Mrs. Eugene F. Schmuck, of Franklin street; Mrs. Charles Geiselman, of Spring avenue, and Mrs. Charles Aiken, of Pine Grove Mills, Center county. Surviving his worthy helpmate for a number of years, Josiah W. Gitt passed away, Feb. 10, 1898, aged seventy-seven years. He was a consistent and lifelong member of the M. E. Church and was buried at Mt. Olivet cemetery.
ELI HOOVER COCKLIN, a representative farmer and extensive fruit grower of Monaghan township, York county, was born in Monaghan township, March 8, 1835, son of Jacob and Catherine (Hoover) Cocklin.

The Cocklin family are of French origin, the founder of this branch of the family in the United States spelling the name Caqueline. They were Huguenots and first settled in New London, Conn., spreading into different states. The ancestors of Eli H. first settled in Lancaster county, and later the great-grandfather came to Cumberland county, where the family has been a prominent one for many years. Jacob Cocklin, the great-grandfather, was born Oct. 15, 1733, in Lancaster county, and was educated in the subscription schools of his day. He owned and occupied a farm in Cumberland county, and died Nov. 9, 1799, aged sixty-six years, six months and twenty-five days.

Jacob Cocklin (2), son of Jacob and grandfather of Eli H., was born Dec. 14, 1770, and was a farmer. He died in Cumberland county May 4, 1840, while his wife, Mary Nepler, was born Nov. 6, 1768, died April 22, 1845, in her seventy-fourth year. The children born to this worthy couple were as follows: Michael, March 27, 1795; Jacob, the father of Eli H., Jan. 30, 1797; Mary, May 6, 1798; David and Susanah, March 25, 1802; Catherine, May 3, 1806; Margaret, April 9, 1810; and Christina, May 26, 1812.

Jacob Cocklin (3), the father, was a farmer and printer, and also extensively engaged in fruit growing from 1821 until the time of his death. He was a pioneer horticulturist in Cumberland and York counties, and the site of his first orchard in the former county was called Castle Ray. Mr. Conklin also carried on distilling to a certain extent, manufacturing peach brandy and apple jack. He also engaged at one time in the nursery business and many varieties still to be found in York county are of his introduction. He passed away Dec. 18, 1890, aged ninety-three years, ten months and eighteen days. He and his wife had the following children: Elizabeth, born Dec. 25, 1828; Sarah, Aug. 14, 1831; Eli H.; Benjamin F., May 4, 1838, and Michael H. and Jacob H. (twins), born July 29, 1841. Mrs. Cocklin died March 13, 1872, aged seventy-one years, one month and nine days. Politically Mr. Cocklin was a Democrat, but never sought public office outside of his township, where he served as school director.

Eli Hoover Cocklin received his education in the common schools of York county and with the exception of two years spent in Black Hawk county, Ia., he has been on the old homestead all of his life, where he devotes his entire time to fruit culture, although in previous years he operated a nursery. Mr. Cocklin makes a specialty of peaches, and the Cocklin orchards are the most extensive in York county, in 1904 producing 9,000 bushels. Mr. Cocklin's farm consists of about 700 acres of valuable land, all of which is in a high state of cultivation.

On Aug. 9, 1859, in Black Hawk Co., Iowa, Mr. Cocklin married Sarah E. Caley, daughter of Chambers and Docey (Dunn) Caley, and the children born to this union are: Ida M., April 9, 1861; Charles C., June 29, 1862; Russell T., Oct. 1, 1864; Benjamin F., July 9, 1867; Alice D., Jan. 31, 1871; John A., April 26, 1873 and Arthur B., Jan. 8, 1888. In religion the family are members of the German Reformed Church, where Mr. Cocklin has served as elder, having been connected with that body since 1869. In political matters he is a Republican, but has never consented to hold any office except that of school director. Mr. Cocklin is an upright and enterprising citizen, and is very well known and highly esteemed throughout York county.

CLY SHELLEY, one of the most prominent men of York county, Pa., and one of the leading citizens and business men of Cly, Pa., was born in that little village in 1866, a son of Abraham and Anna Mary (Hess) Shelley.

Abraham Shelley, great-grandfather of our subject, at one time owned what is known as Shelleys Island, containing 350 acres of land. There Abraham Shelley, the grandfather, was born, and there both he and his wife lived and died. They had three children: Christian, deceased; Lydia, who resides at Harrisburg, Pa., at the age of ninety-four; and Abraham, the father of Cly, our subject. Abraham Shelley was born in 1809 on Shellesys Island. In young manhood he came to Newberry township and purchased 300 acres of land near the hamlet of Cly, Pa., engaging in farming, being associated with the well known lumber firm of Frazer at Goldsboro. Abraham Shelley was twice married, and had twelve children born to both unions. He married first Henrietta Croll, daughter of John Croll, of York county. She died in 1858, and is buried at Smoketown. The children who survive her are:
Henry, a merchant at Steelton, Pa.; Bartram, a prosperous farmer at Cly; Walter, a cigar maker at Goldsboro; and Abraham, Jr., a merchant in Harrisburg. Mr. Shelley married, second, Anna Mary Hess, daughter of Frederick Hess, who now resides in the village of Cly, Pa. Her surviving children are:
Mrs. John O. Kraft; Louis, a paper-maker of Cly, Pa.; William S., also a papermaker; Ella, wife of Daniel Cassell, of York Haven, Pa.; Herr M. and Mina, at home; and Cly, our subject. Abraham Shelley, father of our subject, died in the village of Cly, Pa., in 1895, at the age of eighty-five years.

Cly Shelley attended the common schools in Newberry township until the age of thirteen years, and then went to John O. Kraft of Strinestown, Pa., and served an apprenticeship of six months at cigarmaking. Then he accepted a position as a cigarmaker with the well known firm of Dugan & Funk, cigar manufacturers of Goldsboro, Pa., for whom he worked thirteen successive years, resigning his position and going into the mercantile business in Cly, Pa., which has been successfully continued the past eleven years. Later he went into the cigar business as a member of the firm of Shelley & Gray, and subsequently bought Mr. Gray’s interest, continuing the business himself. Mainly through his efforts the hamlet grew into a village. In 1894 Mr. Shelley applied to the Northern Central Railroad Company for the establishment of a station at the little hamlet that he had founded, and this request was immediately granted by the corporation. In 1898 he applied to the government for the establishment of a post office, which was immediately granted also, Mr. Shelley being appointed postmaster, in which incumbency he has now been serving the people for eight years. In honor of its founder the United States government named the post-oxce Cly. In 1891 Mr. Shelley applied to the Adams Express Company for the establishment of an express office, which was imedi-ately granted, and he was appointed agent, with the same name and honor, as the post office.

Turn where you will in this hustling little village you will find that Mr. Shelley has been prominent in all its enterprises. He was active in securing a public school building here. He has built quite a number of houses and owns other real estate. He is a stockholder in the York Telephone Company, York, Pa.; York Haven Canning Company, York Haven, Pa.; the Chase Felt & Paper Company, and the Susquehanna Roofing Manufacturing Company, of Cly, Pa., and the West End Roofing Company, Harrisburg, Pa. Mr. Shelley is a director in the four last named companies, and is secretary of the Chase Felt & Paper Company.

Mr. Shelley, in the fall of 1905, made application to the fourth assistant postmaster general at Washington, D. C., for the establishment of a rural free delivery route from Cly, and in April, 1906, received authority to estabish same, which he did at once. R. B. Zigner was appointed carrier, and 120 families, or about six hundred people, are served, who appreciate the service very much.

Politically Mr. Shelley is a Republican, has served his party on township and county committees, served three years as township treasurer, and was also a state delegate.

In 1889 Mr. Shelley married Miss Clara E.
Free, daughter of Eli H. and Catherine (Cas-sell) Free. They have four children: Catherine L., Otto C., now students at York County Academy; Guy E. and Clara F., at home.

ANDREW S. HUTTON was for a number of years, actively engaged in general farming on his 154-acre farm in Lewisberry. He was born July 15, 1842, in Monaghan township, York county, son of Jacob and Jane (Strominger) Hutton.

John Hutton, the grandfather of Andrew S., was born in York county, of English descent. He followed farming in Fishing Creek Valley, Newberry township, for a time, then located in Monaghan township, and later removed to Fairview township, where he engaged in general farming until his death, which occurred in his seventy-fifth year; he was interred at Andersontown. John Hutton married a Miss Keister, who was a mem-er of one of York county’s old and respected families. Mrs. Hutton died at the age of forty-two years, and was buried at Smoke-town, Newberry township. The children born to this worthy couple were: Elijah, a farmer of Wooster, Ohio, where he died; Jacob, father of Andrew S.; Eliza, who married Daniel Kann, and died in Fairview township; John, who died in Monaghan township.

Jacob Hutton was born in 1812, in Newberry township, and received his education in the common schools of the township. He learned the carpenter's trade when a youth following this occupation for about seven years. Mr. Hutton was a skilled mechanic and erected many buildings, besides doing some cabinet work. He commenced farming in Newberry township, where he bought a tract of land consisting of 145 acres, upon which he built several fine structures. He also owned three other farms in Newberry township and a very large farm in Cumberland county. Mr. Hutton followed agricultural pursuits up to the time of his death, Jan. 17, 1894, and his knowledge of agriculture was conceded to be thorough and scientific. Mr. Hutton was buried in Fairview township. He married Jane Strominger, daughter of Jacob Strominger, and she now resides with her son, Paris, in Upper Allen township, Cumberland county, having attained the ripe old age of eighty-five years. Jacob Hutton was a Republican in politics and was greatly interested in the success of his party. He served as school director of Newberry township. The children born to Jacob and Jane Hutton were as follows: Rachel married Andrew Miller, and resides in Lower Allen township, Cumberland county; Jacob met death at the age of thirteen years, six months, by being struck by lightning; Daniel married Mary Jane Starr, and resides at Lewisberry; Lucinda lives with her sister Rachel; Andrew S.; John is a farmer in Upper Allen township, Cumberland county; Alice died at the age of three years; and Paris is residing in Cumberland county.

Andrew S. Hutton attended the public schools until eighteen years of age, and then remained home, assisting his father on the farm until his twenty-fourth year, when he married Jane Miller, daughter of Henry F. and Mary Ann (Groom) Miller of Lewisberry. After their marriage Mr. Hutton and his wife located in Newberry township, on one of his father's farms, where they remained four years, then removing to Fairview township and living there for five years. They then removed to Lower Allen township, Cumberland county, but one year later returned to Fairview. There they remained two years, and then came to the old home in Newberry township, where Mr. Hutton farmed for sixteen years. In 1891 Mr. Hutton located in Lewisberry borough and bought eight acres of land, upon which he built a fine residence. The farm in the township consists of 154 acres of fine land, which Mr. Hutton cultivated to a high state, but, having accumulated a large competency, he retired from active life.

The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hutton: Seward married a Miss Zinn, and follows farming in Fairview township; Cora married Israel Zinn, and lives on the old homestead in Newberry township; Celia married Ira Gilmore and lives in Fairview township; Sylvan M. formerly taught school in Newberry township, attended Princeton University from which he graduated in 1902, taught a graded school at Edgewood, N. J., and one term at Chestnut Level, Lancaster county, read law for a time, and Jan. 6, 1904, accepted a position in San Francisco, Cal., in the Government weather bureau; and Elsie married S. Ensinger, a butcher at Lewisberry. Mr. Hutton is a staunch Republican. Both he and his wife are connected with the M. E. Church, in which he is trustee. Mr. Hutton is a man of honesty and integrity, and is honored and respected by all who know him.

ANDREW A. AND WILLIAM W. MAFFET. So far as is known the Maffet family in America is descended from Scotch-Irish stock. James Maffet, Sr., the great-grandfather of the gentlemen whose names open this sketch, was born in the North of Ireland, and his wife's name was Margaret. He emigrated to the United States, then the Colonies, settling at Hopewell Center, York Co., Pa., where he carried on farming until his death, which occurred in 1825.

William Maffet, son of James, Sr., also followed farming during his active years. On Jan. 13, 1801, he married Jane Thompson, of Hopewell township, who had been previously married. To this union children were born as follows: William, born March 10, 1802; Agnes, March 13, 1804; Margaret, Sept. 29, 1806; James P., March 17, 1809; Jane T., Jan. 28, 1812; Eliza, July 22, 1814; Andrew, June 6, 1817; Mary E., Oct. 30, 1819; and Aseniah May 3, 1822. Mr. and Mrs. Maffet were members of the Presbyterian Church. Politically he was an old-line Whig. William Maffet died Aug. 12, 1831, while his widow survived until February, 1841.

James P. Maffet, father of Andrew A. and William W., was born in Fawn township, York county. His education, as far as schooling went, was somewhat limited, as he only attended school for a few months. He was, however, one of those who grasp advantages and opportunities as they arise, and he became a good business man, and one well informed on local affairs. In early life he devoted much of his time to freighting overland, between Muddy Creek Forks and the city of Baltimore, Md., a distance of forty miles. He hauled the farmers' produce to Baltimore, where he exchanged it for goods suitable to his trade, having, in 1841, moved to Muddy Creek Forks, and in a rented building on the Hopewell side of the creek started a general store, where he did a good business for about three years. In 1844 he purchased 160 acres of land lying in the three townships that join at Muddy-Creek Forks, which purchase included the land on the Chanceford side of the creek, now the railroad station, where there were then a dwelling, a grist mill and a barn. Here Mr. Maffet continued the general merchandising business, and also engaged in milling and farming. The mill here became noted for making a good quality of buckwheat meal. Before the farms in the lower end of the county had reached their present state of fertility a large acreage of buckwheat was farmed and the mill was kept busy each fall and winter for over thirty years in manufacturing buckwheat meal, most of which was hauled to Baltimore by the farmers' teams. Mr. Maffet conducted his various interests successfully until the spring of 1885, when he retired from business. He was postmaster at Muddy Creek Forks from 1875 to 1888, when he moved with his sons and daughter, Maggie E., to Peach Bottom township. By thrift and industry he accumulated a handsome competency, and at the time of his death, in 1893, was considered one of the substantial men of the locality.

Mr. Maffet was married Feb. 3, 1842, to Margaret Anderson, daughter of Andrew and Mary (Wallace) Anderson, of Hopewell township, and the following named children were born to this worthy couple: Andrew A., born June 8, 1843; Mary J., born Dec. 18, 1844; William W., born April 10, 1847; and Annie E. and Maggie E., both deceased. Mr. Maffet was a member of the Presbyterian Church. In politics he was a Republican, but he never took much interest in party affairs, and never sought political office.

Andrew A. Maffet was educated in the common schools of Lower Chanceford township, and also took an academic course at Pleasant Grove, and spent a short time at Brogueville. For seven years he taught school very successfully, becoming well and favorably known as an educator, and then turned his attention to the various business interests of his father. In the spring of 1885 Andrew A. and William W. Maffet succeeded their father, James P. Maffet, in the mercantile business at Muddy Creek Forks, and conducted same successfully for three years, under the firm name of Maffet Bros. They have since continued their farming and other business under the same firm name. They continued at Muddy Creek Forks until 1888, when they located in Peach Bottom township, where they purchased 105 acres of good farm land, to the operation of which they have since devoted their time. They hold an interest in two steam threshing outfits and in a steam sawmill, and are among the substantial men of their community.

William W. Maffet assisted in his father's business from an early age until his marriage to Sallie J. Stewart, in 1876, when he and his wife moved to Charlotte county, Va., on a farm owned by his father, and engaged in farming for one year. They then returned to Muddy Creek Forks, Mr. Maffet farming two years for his father. He then moved into Windsor township, where he did a general merchandise business for five years, returning to Muddy Creek Forks in the spring of 1885. His business operations since that time have been already mentioned. He is a director in the First National Bank of Delta.

In 1876, as stated, William W. Maffet married Sallie J. Stewart, daughter of William and Mary P. Stewart, and a cousin of Judge W. F. Bay Stewart, of York, Pa., and two children were born to this union: A daughter who died in infancy in Virginia, and James W., who assists his uncle and father on the farm. Mrs. Maffet died Oct. 17, 1887. In 1889 Mr. Maffet married (second) Anna E. Fulton, daughter of Robert and Mary E. Fulton, and to this union one son has been born, Robert P., who is attending school.

The Maffet brothers are both Republicans. Andrew is holding the office of justice of the peace, to which position he was first elected in 1866, his present term expiring in May, 1906; he was reelected Feb. 20, 1906, for his third term of five years. William has held the office of school director for two terms of three years each. The family are members of the Presbyterian Church. Andrew Maffet served as elder in the Harmony Church at Brogueville until his removal to Peach Bottom township, since which time he has been elder in the Slate Ridge Presbyterian Church, in which his brother, William W., is superintendent of the Sunday-school. The brothers are men of sterling worth and are highly esteemed by all with whom they have come in contact.

Mary J. Maffet, sister of the Maffet brothers, married Grier T. Barnett, of Lower Chanceford township. She received an academic education, and taught school in this community very successfully for ten terms.

JOHN RANKIN FETROW is engaged in general farming on his tract of 154 acres in Fairview township, York county. He was born Feb. 17, 1866, in Fairview township, son of Franklin S. and Elizabeth (Sheally) Fetrow.

Philip Fetrow, the great-great-grandfather of John R., was born in Germany, May 1, 1719, and, coming to America, settled on a large tract of land in Conewago township, York county, where he died March 7, 1791, aged seventy years, one month and seven days. His wife Anna Mary died at the age of seventy-three years, and both were buried in York City. The children born to this union were: Philip, the great-grandfather of John R. Fetrow; Joseph; Andrew; John; Michael, and Catherine, who married a Mr. Jacobs.

Philip Fetrow was born in October, 1776, in Conewago township, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits. At the age of twenty-four years he went to Newberry township, where he continued in the farming, milling and distilling industries. In 1839 he built a house near the Ball hills, where he died in 1868. He married (first) Elizabeth Boyer, by whom he had the following children: Samuel; David, grandfather of John Rankin; Mary; Ann; Sarah; Susan, and Elizabeth. Mr. Fetrow's second marriage was to Ruby Thorbling, by whom these children were born: Lydia; Leah; Rachel; and Jane, who is the family historian, living in Newberry township on the old home. She married Samuel Delliger.

David Fetrow was born in Newberry township, where he engaged in farming, also pursuing this occupation in Fairview township. He married a Miss Shutter, who died in Newberry township at the age of eighty-four years. Mr. Fetrow died in Kansas. These good people were the parents of William, living in Kansas; Franklin S., the father of John R.; Henry, who was killed at the battle of Antietam, in the Civil war; Miller, who lives in Kansas; Sarah Jane, who was married to George Fetrow, living in Kansas; and one child who died young.

Franklin S. Fetrow was born in 1835 in Newberry township, where he received a common-school education. He remained at home, assisting his father on the farm, until his marriage to Elizabeth Sheally, daughter of Frederick and Barbara (Eichelberger) Sheally, when he took the homestead of 154 acres and upon it spent all of his life, dying there in 1892. He was very well known in the community in which he lived so many years, and was popular and highly esteemed in the township. His estimable wife passed away in 1896 and she, as well as her husband, are interred at Mt. Zion cemetery, Fairview township. In politics Mr. Fetrow was a Republican, and took great interest in the success of his party. He served as school director of the township. In all religious belief he was a devoted member of the Lutheran Church. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Franklin S. Fetrow were as follows: Samuel, who married Susan Snavely, lives in Cumberland county; John Rankin; Jacob S., married Ida Snyder, and is living at Lewisberry; Grant, who married Jennie Smith, is living in Cumberland county; Clara, who married John R. Snyder, lives in Fairview township; and Jennie, who married George Miller, lives in Newberry township.

tion in the Cross Roads school which he attended until he was twenty-one years of age, working on the farm for his father in the meantime. In 1894 he was married to Annie Bowen, a daughter of Levi and Martha (Wistler) Bowen, and after their union the young couple settled on the old homestead, which came into Mr. Fetrow’s possession at the death of his father. Mr. Fetrow has cultivated the land up to the highest standard, has made many improvements on the farm in general, and is a very prosperous and enterprising young man. He attends the Harrisburg markets.

The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. John R. Fetrow: Celia, Hazel and Franklin, very bright little members of the Fetrow household. In his political views Mr. Fetrow believes in the principles of the Republican party. Religiously he is a member of the Church of God, in which he is treasurer and trustee. Mr. Fetrow stands in a high position among the capable and enterprising business men of his county.

THOMAS GREEN, superintendent of the York Haven Water & Power Co., who was born June 11, 1847, in Cecil county, Md., has already behind him a long array of important works, splendidly done, and has established his name as an able and reliable contractor over a wide area.

Francis Green, father of Thomas, was a native of the North of Ireland and spent his younger days there. Migrating later to England he engaged in the tile business, roofing and flooring, until 1840, when he came to America and landed in New York. Continuing his journey as far as Cecil county, Md., he there established himself in the contracting business. While the greater part of his business was in building dams and developing water power, he was very well known for his ability along general construction lines, and made a broad reputation for himself. He did much work for Dupont, the powder manufacturer in Wilmington, Del., and also built and owned nine miles of plank road between Elkton, Md., and Lewisville, Pa. Mr. Green was a member of the Catholic Church, and in his political views was a Republican, although in his earlier years he was a Democrat. He married Sarah Connelly, daughter of Neil Connelly; she was born in Scotland, in the birthplace of Robert Burns. Mrs. Green died at the age of sixty-eight years, and her husband when seventy-six years old. Both are buried in Elkton, Md. The children born to them were as follows: Francis, a blacksmith in Ridgely, Caroline Co., Md.; Thomas; Philip, a resident of Conewago township, York county; Sarah, who married the late Charles Eggman, of Philadelphia, and Mary, Mrs. Thomas Kelly, of New York City.

Thomas Green attended school in Cecil county, Md., until he was fifteen years of age, and then enlisted in Company H, known as Purnall’s Legion of Baltimore, but being soon transferred to the 1st Maryland, served for three years in the Army of the Potomac, participating in the battles of Antietam, Cold Harbor, Petersburg and others. He was mustered out March 14, 1864. Mr. Green then learned the construction business under his father, and in 1870 took his first independent position with the Jessup & Moore Paper Company, of Wilmington, Del. From this he resigned to form a co-partnership with his father, which continued until 1876, he returning to the Jessup & Moore Paper Company in order to construct a reservoir. This he completed in 1877, and then entered the shops of Pusey & Jones, to learn the machinist’s trade, remaining there until 1884. In November of that year he came to York Haven to build the plant for the York Haven Paper Company, at the time of its construction the largest mill of the kind in the State, and now one of York county’s flourishing industries. He superintended the plant for one and one-half years after its completion, when he resigned to accept a position with the Maryland Steel Company, at Sparrow’s Point, Md., remaining in that company’s employ in charge of their construction work for three and one-half years, and resigning to accept a position with the City of Wilmington as inspector of streets and sewers. At the end of three and one-half years he resigned to accept a position as superintendent of construction of the Hammer Mill at Erie, Pa., a plant that was installed by a German syndicate at a cost of $1,000,000, and at that time one of the most up-to-date plants of the kind in the world. After completing the plant named he returned to York Haven to superintend the construction of the York Haven Water & Power Company’s plant and is still efficiently serving in that position. Numerous works of similar importance, constructed by Mr. Green, could be described, but the significance of his achievements can be seen from these.

Mr. Green was married, in 1875, to Miss Adelia McGready, daughter of Cornelius and Annie (Elkin) McGready, of Maryland. To them have been born six children, namely: Harry C., a machinist and assistant superintendent for his father, also a member of the school board, married to Nora Mills, of Clayton, Del.; Thomas, Jr., a clerk in the office of the Water & Power Company, who married Myrtle Bashey, of Dillsburg, Pa.; Francis, unmarried, who is also employed in the Water & Power Company; Joseph, John Russell and James Powers, all attending school. The family home was bought by Mr. Green in 1902, and the view of the Susquehanna which it commands is one of the finest in the country. Mr. Green is a member of the Catholic Church. Politically he has always been a Republican, and has done good service for his party. He has served as a member of the council for York Haven, and is in every way a good citizen. His first vote was cast for Abraham Lincoln while serving in the army, and he was the only one of his company to vote for him; he was also one of the judges of election at that time. Mr. Green commands the entire respect of his associates not only for his ability and success in the business world, but for his personal worth as a man.

CHRISTIAN T. GROVE, registrar of wills and chief burgess of Felton borough, is actively engaged in the carriage and farm implement business, and was born Aug. 19, 1864, in Fawn township, York Co., Pa., son of Charles and Elizabeth (Leib) Grove.

John Grove, grandfather of Christian T., married a Miss Shaffer, and was a farmer until the time of his death in Fawn township.

Charles Grove, son of John, was born in Fawn township, and was a miller from his youth. In later years he was a farmer, and he died on his homestead in Fawn township in 1897. In politics he was a Republican. He married Miss Elizabeth Leib, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Anstine) Leib. Mrs. Grove died in Fawn township in 1889, and both she and her husband are interred there at Zion Church cemetery.

Christian T. Grove attended the public schools until he was eighteen years of age and then spent one term at the Millersville State Normal School. He remained at home until the age of twenty-two years, when he engaged in a mercantile business, on the corner of Broad and Walnut streets, in York City, and then removed to Airville, where he was a merchant for one year. In 1893 he went into partnership with J. R. Anderson, locating at Mr. Grove’s present place of business, under the firm name of Anderson & Grove, it continuing as such for five years, when Mr. Grove bought his partner’s interest and has since been conducting the business himself.
