FOREWORD

Today the precise reason for the marriage bond of 19th Century America is vague. It seems to have been the ancestor of present day's marriage license although it did not include the date of marriage nor either affirm or deny performance of proposed nuptials. The majority of ministers did not report marriages to the county court; in fact, over a score of years in Page County, not a single report was recorded.

The groom, it seems, gave necessary information and paid a fee. He was endorsed by a bondsman/woman [or bondsmen/women] much as one may today be backed on a note payable at the local bank. The bond then became a record of the county court.

Records of marriage bonds in Page County, Virginia, exist from May 23, 1831 through December 29, 1851. John Rhodes Chapter of D. A. R. deems them of great genealogical value and, as such, worthy of preservation and ready availability to all who are interested. To such an aim, then, does the Chapter dedicate this book.

In undertaking publication of these records, members volunteered to copy 928 bonds. Each bond lists both bride and groom plus the names of 937 bondsmen, 379 names of parents and 44 names of those who were either county clerks or merely friends of the enamoured couples.

This book lists 3,216 names, some of which are duplications. All names were copied from handwritten material of uncertain style which, when coupled with the fading of ink beneath time's onslaught, presented no small obstacle to accuracy.

Variations in holographic spelling were copied as faithfully as possible. No changes were made to determine the exact spelling. All names are combined in the index. Examples of such spelling deviations are: Beazley-Beasley; Broils-Broiles-Broyles; Beech-Beach; Blackmore-Blakemore, etc.

To the serious seeker of family records, these differences are but the salt and pepper of a genealogical menu. We would not deprive him/her of them.
