Special thanks to Blythe Arrick, who originally initiated and researched the Arrick Family Tree.

The further development was continued by his daughter, Martha Arrick-Dyer, and by those contributing and providing update information on their immediate family.

Appreciation and thanks to all, but especially Teresa, Lenora, Mary, Rheba, and Wanda who have been so diligent this past year in providing some of the missing information about our family.

Mr. David I. Day
R. R. #1
Dale, Indiana

Dear Mr. Day:

In reply to yours of March 2, I have gotten together a few facts concerning the life of my grandfather, Richard Harrison (Had) Arrick.

For a man who was as well known a generation ago and had as many friends and acquaintances as he seemed to have I thought the task would be easy, but since those old friends have long ago passed and his children are all dead except the youngest son, Clyde, who lives in Northern Wisconsin, the facts have been a little difficult to get together.

Grandfather was born in Virginia August 12, 1834. At an early age he moved with his parents to Highland County, Ohio. Here he was married to Elizabeth McHannas on March 18, 1858. Three of his children were born in Ohio—Cordelia, Charles and William.

In 1865 he moved to Miami County, Indiana on a farm northwest of Xenia, which is now Converse. Here four other children were born—Ida, Emma, James, and Clyde.

At that time the farm was mostly swamp land covered with virgin timber and his chief occupation was the management of his saw mill.

Some of my earliest recollections as a boy, was playing around the old saw mill which was housed in a long frame building a short distance from the other buildings. Another one of his occupations, and one he must have been rather proficient, was his blacksmithing. Long after his saw mill had fallen into disuse, the blacksmith shop was kept going. Here is where he manufactured what is supposed to have been the first mechanical horse-drawn corn planter which was ever put into practical use.

Gradually the land was cleared and drained and farming became the chief occupation.

He had a reputation of being the rugged robust individual and must have been well known and well liked. For where ever you happen to be some one would mention the name of Arrick and right away they would usually ask if you were a relative of Had Arrick and then there would come stories of his ready wit and love for fun.

In 1893 he lost his hand in a corn shredder accident, after which his blacksmith shop went into decay, and the farm operation was turned over to his son James. He still made his home on the farm, however until about the turn of the century, when he moved to the town of Somerset, where he passed away, May 25, 1910.

Besides the one son whom is still living there are 25 living grandchildren.

Taking A Look Around
At Indiana Rural Life
By David I. Day,

Not long since, in passing down Ind. 37 we stopped at a Marion restaurant for lunch. Two businessmen were chatting of old times and finally the talk centered on "Had" Arrick.

It developed that Mr. Arrick (as I had hitherto heard) was quite a notable figure in that lovely part of our state between Marion and Peru in the days of 40 to 90 years ago. An early sawmill man, blacksmith and inventor of tools and machines for the farms, he had dwelt on a farm northwest of Xenia, said to have been called originally Xenia.

We were particularly pleased to eavesdrop on the talk at the next table when the chat reached Mr. Arrick's invention of what is believed to be the first of a long sequence of mechanical horse-drawn corn planters. At this point we got into the act and gathered from these men some facts we have sought for four or five years.

From these fellows to Mrs. William West of the Miami County Historical Society in Peru and from her we went for information to A. B. Arrick, out on R.R. 1 from that city. He is a grandson of "Had" Arrick.

Back in 1948 at a dinner Mrs. Emma Wills, Chicago, told me that more honor was due this early Miami County man who "could take almost nothing and from it make almost anything." She told me her father called the Arrick planter a "trigger planter." This was because a small wire connected the tripping device in the seed box with a lever or trigger on the planter handle and this could be worked by the fingers of the right hand.

Near Madison several years ago Frank Adye mentioned the old Arrick planter he had used in his youth. In Indianapolis, chatting in the old English hotel lobby some years ago with the late Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Horton of near Lafayette, the Arrick planter was mentioned in connection with their early days on their own farm. Mr. Horton even made for me a rough drawing illustrating the principle of the machine.

Only within the last two weeks, however, have we felt we had a sufficiently clear mental picture of the inventor to write about him. From A. B. Arrick we have obtained biographical data of interest, we believe, to many of our readers.

"Had" Arrick's baptismal name was Richard Harrison Arrick and he was born in Virginia on August 12, 1834. He came in childhood with his parents to Highland County, Ohio, east of Cincinnati. There he grew to manhood and married Miss Elizabeth McMannus in 1838. Three children were born to the couple in the Buckeye State.

In 1855 the family settled in Indiana on a swampy but heavily wooded tract of land in Miami County. There the four remaining children of the family were born, the last being Clyde, the only one living, now a resident of Northern Wisconsin.

"My grandfather first operated a sawmill on his place," recalled A. B. Arrick a few days ago, "and among my earliest memories are those of playing around that mill. It was housed in a long frame structure some distance from the other buildings. He was a very proficient blacksmith, too, and after the sawmill had fallen into disuse, his blacksmith shop was active. In this shop he made the corn planters and the other farm equipment he invented. Besides the planter I recall his bean huller and an attachment for the old-fashioned dash churn and both worked perfectly."

After the swamps were drained and the forests cleared, the blacksmith shop was more or less neglected as the pioneer devoted more and more time and thought to farming. In 1883 he lost a hand in a corn shredder and the operation of the farm was turned over to his son, James. After a few more years living quietly on his land he moved to Somerset where he passed away on May 23, 1910. In addition to A. B. Arrick he has 24 living grandchildren.

"Had" Arrick, we are pleased to report, was more than a mere mechanical genius. He left behind a reputation as a robust fellow who liked fun and enjoyed matching wits in conversation. He was a good man and a good citizen who has in 40 years become something of a pleasant legend, a fine character around whose memory cluster many happy anecdotes.

The Missing Link

Away back in the early days
When the monkey and baboon held full sway,
When the giraffe ate the top from the trees,
And the woods was full of honey bees.

There lived a tribe in jungle land,
Fiercest of all the monkey band.
Scarred they were from jungle fights,
Nobody dared dispute their rights.

Erich is the name of this tribe, I'm told,
So named because their warriors bold.
Had fought and conquered on left and right,
Until all creatures kept out of sight.

One of the tribe though young as yet
Vain and proud as a monkey can get.
Wanted to be the best apeman,
And tried to be leader of the clan.

He wanted to be the first in a fight.
He wanted to climb to the greatest height.
He'd wrap his tail round the highest bough,
And tease the monkeys to start a row.

One day as he swung by that wonderful tail,
The wind came forth with a mighty gale.
It splintered the trunk of that stately birch,
And sent it to earth with a terrible lurch.

It hit the ground with an awful shock,
Caught the monkey’s tail up on a rock.
It severed it close to the back of him,
And left his tail wrapped round the limb.

Consternation broke loose in Monkey town,
They tried to stick the tail back on.
Everything they did was of no avail,
He was just a monkey without a tail.

They got together, the chiefs and kings,
And finally decided that one of the things.
The tribe would not stand for had come to pass,
And they drove him away, alas! alas!

Before he left their great domain,
They said he’d have to change his name.
They took his tail the change to make,
And curved it around like a crawling snake.

They fastened it on to the ‘H’ at the last
Made an ‘K’ out of the letter ‘H’ and stuck it fast.
And warned him where ever his homing came,
He must keep the tail at the end of his name.

Sore at the tribe as he could be,
He made an ‘A’ of the letter ‘E’.
His tribe grew powerful and very quick,
They were known as the tribe of Arrick.

And to this day they roam the earth,
As they’ve, roamed it since the date of birth.
And many people have come to think,
Of the Arrick tribe as the missing link.
