Foreword

This very brief and rather incomplete data on the family of Marshalls and Duers has been compiled with the thought in the writer's mind that in this country of ours with its rapidly changing conditions, socially and otherwise, the rather painful way families become quickly scattered, with sisters and brothers living thousands of miles apart* and losing touch with each other, some of them or their descendants may want to know who their ancestors were, and where they came from. Usually this interest in one's relatives or ancestors comes at a time in one's life when it is very difficult to pick up all the threads, if at all, if the facts are not recorded from time to time.

Our family has had so many fine characters in both past and present generations, it would seem strange not to feel a pardonable pride in them, and therefore an urge to at least record a partial list of their names for those who may be interested.

*The writer at present (1941) has sisters, brothers, nephews, nieces, and first cousins in: Annapolis, and Baltimore, Maryland; Markham, Virginia; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; New York; Chicago; Toronto, Canada; Hollywood, California; the islands of Guam and Hawaii, to mention a few of the places.
THESE INFORMAL NOTES ARE DEDICATED TO THE MEMORY OF ONE WHOSE WONDERFUL CHARACTER, UNUSUAL TALENTS AND CHARM, MADE HER A DELIGHT TO ALL WHO KNEW HER—MY MOTHER.

T.M.D.
John Duer (1773-1860)
The Duer Family

The Duer family in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, as far as known, were all Quakers, and came to this country from Devonshire in England, with William Penn in 1682. They established themselves on the Delaware River, approximately where Penn first landed, and some of their farms are still recorded there.

JOHN DUER

Born in Bucks County, Pa., July 1, 1773. In the early 1790's Joseph Duer and his wife, Mary, moved from Bucks County, Pa., to Anne Arundel County, Maryland. They had quite a large family, of whom John was one. A letter well preserved is in the hands of this writer, penned by Mary to her son, John, and addressed to him at Elk Ridge Landing, Anne Arundel County, Md., dated December 25th, 1794. From family and business records it is evident that John moved into the city, Baltimore, almost as soon as his parents were settled in the county, and made a fine reputation for himself there.

A man of fine character, he went into the business of banking, and long before he died had won such a reputation for honesty that he was called Honest John Duer, a label that would fit very well on his own son, John, and his great-grandson of the same name. It is told of him when the more excitable women heard there was an imminent “invasion” of the city by Yankee troops in 1860, he was swamped with requests to take care of their silverware and valuables, as he was thought to be the man whose standing in the community would protect their property best!

He owned a great deal of real estate which he bought and sold quite often—the writer has a number of records showing his transactions. He was cashier of the Farmers’ and Merchants’ Bank for many years and up to the time of his death; the cashier, in those days, about “owned the bank.”

On Thursday, September 17, 1811, he married Susan Norris, a
THE DUER FAMILY

Protestant, for which he was "read out of meeting." He lived to be 87 and died while living with his son John, on Christmas Day, 1860. The writer has his portrait painted when about 75 years old.

JOHN DUER

Born in Baltimore March 3, 1816. As the writer remembers him he was a man of medium height and quite rotund, in his seventies; always immaculately dressed from his high silk hat to his patent leather shoes; always carried an ivory-handled cane and in spite of his weight was as light on his feet as a dancing master. Devoted to his lovely and most unusual wife, his four living children, and to all of his twelve grandchildren, many of whom lived in his house from time to time, he was loved by all of us.

He married on September 9, 1845 Henrietta Dorsey Adgate of this city. She was a lovely woman, very fine features, a strong chin and a will to match. She was generous in all ways, very business-like, and ran her house with clock-like regularity. She kept open house for her many "Weyanoke" nieces and nephews, as well as for a host of devoted friends.

He apparently had no liking for his father's business—banking—and when only twenty-three years of age in 1839 established a wholesale hardware business. At that time there were practically no railroads, so he used horses to take him down through Virginia, Tennessee, and so on down to New Orleans, Louisiana. Back approximately the same route, a round trip of six months, it often took six horses. On the second six months trip he collected his accounts for the former trip.

He must have been a man whom men liked, as he built up a fine business which spread to all the southern states in the years that followed soon after his start, and later still to all the middle west and north, and on up to New England.

After a long, active and useful life he died in 1901.
In the death of John Duer, Esq., which occurred on Tuesday, October 29th, Grace Church was bereaved of the last of its Founders, and of a member who for over half a century was deeply devoted to its welfare. He was the last of that splendid body of men who brought Grace Church into existence and gave it its prominence. Mr. Duer was born in Baltimore on March 16, 1816. Although his parents were Quakers he became attached to old St. Peter’s Church in his early manhood, and found a warm friend in its Rector, the Rev. Dr. Atkinson. When the latter proposed the formation of a new congregation in 1850, Mr. Duer entered heartily into the project and attended the initial meeting held at the residence of Mr. John S. Gittings, on the 15th of February, 1850. Mr. Duer was living at this time on Liberty St., having been married a few years previously. At this meeting to organize a new congregation, to be called Grace Church, Mr. Duer was elected to serve as Senior Warden and accepted the post. He was also appointed to serve as a solicitor to secure subscriptions for the erection of the church edifice and entered immediately upon this arduous task. So successful was he and others, that the new church was begun the same year it was organized, and finished two years later.

Mr. Duer served as the first Senior Warden, from 1850 to 1862. He was Confirmed in Grace Church, by Bishop Whittingham, on May 27, 1855. In 1862 he was elected a member of the Vestry and served for one year. On January 11, 1870, he was re-elected and served until April 1, 1872. He was again elected a member of the Vestry in 1878 but declined to serve. While a member of the Vestry he evinced deep interest in the financial affairs of the church, and insisted that they should be conducted on strict business principles. At this time there was a serious deficit every year, and Mr. Duer induced the Vestry to appoint a committee to consider the advisability of raising the Pew Rentals to a sum sufficient to meet the needs of the church. He was made the chairman of this special committee, and his report was adopted. So wise was his action in this respect that the same scale he then suggested has remained in force unto this day. The Vestry showed its confidence in Mr. Duer's judgment in 1884 by appointing him a member of a small special committee to represent the congregation in the proposed sale of Grace Church's interest in the present Rectory to Samuel G. Wyman, Esq., who then occupied it and who was anxious to buy this interest, so that the house should be absolutely his own. Mr. Duer again did good service. Mr. Wyman's sudden death on the very night the legal papers were placed in his hands prevented the completion of this purchase, so that the house passed into the possession of the church and has since been used as the Rectory.

Grace Church has had many faithful, devoted members during its long history of half a century; but none more so than Mr. Duer, who loved its privileges and cherished its interests. He was never absent from his pew, which he purchased at the original sale in 1852, save when sickness or absence from the city kept him from the services. He was always a devoted friend of the Rectors and delighted in their companionship.

It is a singular fact that Mr. Duer, in the comparatively short period of fifty years, saw the residential part of Baltimore transfer itself from one side to the other of his residence. When he took up his residence in Washington Place in 1853, there was but one house beyond his to the north. When he died there were but few residences to the south. This fact furnishes some idea of the marvellous change which has passed over that section of the city where Grace Church originally had its great strength, and where today it has comparatively little strength.

The funeral of Mr. Duer was held at the church on All Saints Day. The service was conducted by the Rector and the Bishop of Maryland. At the grave the Rector was assisted by the Vicar of the Chapel of the Advent.

It was men like Mr. Duer who have made Grace Church what it is—men who were "not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." Their work has been well done: in the home, in the church, and in the state. May they have many worthy successors. May Grace Church never lack such sons and such supporters.

ANDREW ADGATE DUER

"Ad" to all of his friends—born in Baltimore December 3, 1846. Father was a man of rather frail build, medium height, black hair and black eyes, beautiful teeth, with lots of charm. He had several illnesses while still quite a young man, but was full of energy and life; loved good stories and told them when he was so ill he had to pause repeatedly to get enough breath to laugh. He had a marvelous wife, in Mother, who raised nine children and took care of him through all the ups and downs of their life together.

He was in business with his father, John Duer, from 1866 up to his last illness of 1889. He loved all of his family and everyone who knew him loved him. I think if he played any favorites among his children it was the writer, who was the ugly duckling in the brood, but he kept any such favoritism mighty well disguised. He died November 12, 1891, at the early age of forty-five.
MARGARET LEWIS MARSHALL DUER

Her death, November 27, 1937, left a gap in the lives of all her children and grandchildren that can never be filled. I wish so much for the pen of a ready writer who could paint a picture of words to adequately describe her. For those of us who have known her so closely all our lives and who hold her so tenderly in our hearts, we need nothing to remind us of her, but for the younger members of the family, I want to give a brief picture of this remarkable ancestor as best I can.

She was born in Winchester, Virginia, December 25, 1850, though her parents were living most of the time at "Oakhill," the family house, which had come down to them from Chief Justice Marshall. All her childhood—until she was 11 years old—was spent at "Oakhill," and as there were no nearby schools, her father taught her and the other children until the outbreak of the Civil War. Her mother and the five small children then moved into "Springdale" on the outskirts of Winchester, the home of their maternal grandmother Barton, where they were lovingly cared for during the long four years of the war. Mother was so well grounded in her studies by her father, that she was quite familiar with Latin, and had read a lot of Dickens by the time she was twelve years old. After the war she was sent to Miss Cary’s Southern Home School in Baltimore. She always remembered with some pride being pointed out to General Robert E. Lee on a visit he made to the school, who talked with her, and then kissed her good-bye.

On October 31, 1872, at the age of 22, she married my father, who was associated with his father in business in Baltimore. For a few years they lived in the city, then moved to the Green Spring Valley, then to old "Annandale" near Pikesville (where the writer was born). In 1880 they built "Weyanoke," the lovely big home located on one of the hills near Pikesville, in a handsome grove of big oaks, where the family lived, or some of them, until 1916. As the children married and moved away, the house was too large for Mother, and it was sold and she moved into a cottage at Sudbrook Park with my oldest sister, Netta.

All through our Mother’s life, she had great losses of her dearest ones, and great trials to face in caring for her large brood of children. Her mother died in 1861—her father killed in battle a few miles from Winchester in 1864; her husband died in 1891. Our family was greatly blessed with wonderful uncles and aunts and grandparents, who all took turns helping Mother for years, taking various members of her family to live with them from time to time, until they could fend for themselves.

But from the time of Father's death, Mother opened a little private school of her own at "Weyanoke," where she taught many of the neighborhood children, and all of whom adored her then, and after they were grown. For many years she sang in the volunteer choir at St. Marks-on-the-Hill, along with cousin Lou Harrison, Uncle Rannie Barton, etc. She had a lovely, deep voice and played the piano delightfully. There was always open house at "Weyanoke" and I can see her now on Sunday evenings at the piano playing hymns, while the family and many young friends sat around her and sang. I can also see her struggle between intense amusement and horror at Aubrey Holt, who was very musical and full of life and fun, sitting at the piano and taking up some fine old hymn, and in modern parlance, jazzing it up, playing it to waltz or two-step time!

In addition to her musical talent, Mother was an artist with her brush—one very fine thing she did was a whole set of dinner plates, done as a wedding present for my Aunt Genevieve Duer (Mrs. Douglas H. Duer) which the latter still has and prizes highly;—a charming set of tiles facing the fireplace in the hall at "Weyanoke" was another delightful evidence of her ability. Her courage and bravery in the face of all difficulties, her determination to do for her family and herself, her unfailing cheerfulness at all times, come what may, and the inspiring youthfulness of her spirit, made her a joy and delight to everyone who knew her, especially to her own children.

She was a true Virginian in her keen interest in politics, up to the day of her death, and she was keen, too, in her fine judgment of politicians and all their ways. A delightful conversationalist on all topics, splendidly well read. Good biographies or particularly good novels she devoured constantly, and put most of us to shame with the amount and quality of her reading. Full of fun and fond of good stories, she was in every way the center of life in the family. One of her greatest charms was the warmth of her presence when you came into her room. Her love and tenderness for any of those around her, her generosity to those in any kind of trouble was of the kind you hear preached about and seldom practiced. I happen to know of so many cases where she gave of her extremely limited means, “until it hurt,” though she never felt that way about it. She gave unsparingly of herself, her time and her means to any and all whom she loved, and their name was legion.

Speaking of her reading, the one Book she loved, and read day in and day out, was the Bible. She believed all the teachings of her Saviour and lived them. She lived and died one of the gentlest, grandest souls on earth.

ISABEL DUE R

During most of her life she was a very robust woman, dark hair, fine dark eyes and regular features. She had a splendid mind and a very keen wit. She was devoted to society in its best sense, and had a perfectly huge circle of friends, in and out of Baltimore, all of whom were devoted to her. I can recall all through my early life constantly meeting visitors staying at 609 N. Charles Street, her home, from many of our neighboring states, and up to the end of her very long life they kept coming back to see “Miss Belle” whenever they were passing through the city.

To many of her nieces and nephews she was often unsparingly outspoken, but at the same time she was thoughtful and generous to them. Those who knew her never forgot her.

DOUGLAS HENRY DUE R
1850-1912

A man of fine principles and a tremendously hard worker in his business life, he carried successfully and happily a very big responsibility for some years, having his own, his father’s and his brother’s families to look after—due to his older brother’s untimely death in 1891—until his two nephews came along to assume their part in the family business. His house was another home for his “Weyanoke” nephews and nieces for a long time. Aunt Genevieve, his wife, was a lovely woman, animated and attractive in every way, and with a heart “as big as a house.” She was full of fun and energy, delightfully original in what she said and did, and was altogether charming. They were the soul of hospitality and kept open house all the year ’round.

EDITH DUER

One of God’s finest, a woman of great charm, strong and energetic, she spent a large part of a busy life doing real good. A grand Christian in every best sense of the word. She was broad-minded and had a keen sense of humor. Devoted to every member of the family down to the last grandnephew and niece. Generous, lovable and a delightful companion to young and old. We all loved her.

MAJOR RANDOLPH BARTON

Uncle “Rannie” was about six feet tall, straight as an arrow, and for a long time with snow white hair and ruddy complexion, he was a striking figure in any company. One of five brothers—two of whom were killed—he fought through the four years of the Civil War, starting at the early age of seventeen with the Stonewall Brigade. He was wounded a number of times in different actions but returned to his command each time and finally was with General Lee at the surrender at Appomattox. His home, “Vaucluse” in Baltimore County, was on a neighboring hill to “Weyanoke,” the writer’s home, and to most of us it was sometimes hard to figure which place was our home. He and Aunt Agnes with a big family of their own (nine children in each family) always had visitors staying with them, and a dining room table of twelve to fifteen people was quite common. He loved company, especially young people, and was never happier than when his house was filled with them. He had a delightful sense of humor and a fund of good stories. A wonderful churchman, and for a long time the real backbone of St. Marks-on-the-Hill in Baltimore County. He was greatly admired and looked up to as one of the leading members of the Baltimore bar, and his influence was always the finest. He came very close to being a father to our Weyanoke family after our own father died. Needless to say we were all devoted to him and to Aunt Agnes.

T. Marshall Holt - Born Dec. 7, 1892 (not 1899)

Fielding Lewis Marshall Sr studied law at Columbia Univ. and was a practicing attorney in NY City for many years before moving to Chicago. All of his children were born in Hazelwood, NY (not Chicago).
Paxton, in his history of the Marshall family, says:

“Tradition is the chief claim of the Marshalls for claiming descent from William le Mareschal (who came over to England in 1066 with William the Conqueror). From him was descended John Marshall, nephew of the Great Earl of Pembroke, who after the death of King John in 1215, was Mareschal of England, and after the crowning of the infant King Henry III, was made Protector of the Kingdom.”

Strongbow sent his nephew, John Marshall, to Ireland and made him Mareschal of Ireland. This John Marshall is mentioned by historians as the leader of Irish Nobility. Pembroke's estates were later confiscated and records of the Marshalls lost until the time of Queen Mary. In 1553 during the reign of Queen Mary, Captain John Marshall distinguished himself in battle and was wounded at the fall of Calais. He claimed descent from a nephew of the great Earl of Pembroke.

Born in Washington Parish, Westmoreland Co., Va., April 2, 1730. Schoolmate of George Washington and his lifelong friend, worked with Washington when the latter was surveying lands of Lord Fairfax. Lieutenant of Volunteers in war with the French. After moving to Fauquier Co., Va., was appointed to superintend immense estates of Lord Fairfax. At the outbreak of trouble with England, he helped form the earliest organization of patriots, known as the Culpeper Minute Men. When they became part of a regiment under Col. Woodford, Capt. Marshall became Major. He was frequently elected to the Va. House of Burgesses and was a member of the convention that declared the colony independent. He was at Valley Forge with his two sons, John and Thomas. At the battle of Germantown when Gen. Mercer was killed, he succeeded to the command. It was said that at Brandywine Col. Marshall saved the patriot army from destruction. For his distinguished services the House of Burgesses, through their speaker, Edmund Randolph, presented him a sword, now in the possession of the Maysville, Ky., Historical Society. He died in Washington, Mason Co., Ky., June 22, 1802.

His wife, Mary Isham Randolph Keith, born in Fauquier Co., Va., April 28, 1737, was descended from Robert Keith, Mareschal of the Scottish Army under Bruce. The Keiths had long been Mareschals of Scotland and possessed large estates there. She died in Mason Co., Ky., September 19, 1809.

They had fifteen children all of whom grew to maturity.
Chief Justice
John Marshall
1755-1835

Mary Willis Ambler
(Mrs. John Marshall)
1766-1831
1755-1835

Born September 24, 1755 at “Oakhill,” Fauquier Co., Va. He took an active part in recruiting and training men for the Continental Army at the first sign of war. In July, 1776, was appointed 1st Lieutenant and in May, 1777, was made Captain; fought at battle of Brandywine and at Germantown, in fall of 1777, and at Monmouth, June 1778. Went through all the hardships of the winter at Valley Forge, where his high spirits and courage were a great help to all his men during those awful months. After the surrender at Yorktown he took up the study of law at William and Mary College, and soon moved to Richmond to practice his profession. At Yorktown he met Mary Willis Ambler—daughter of Jacquelin Ambler—whom he married January 3, 1783.

In 1782 was sent to the Legislature from Fauquier County and appointed to the Council of State. In 1787 he was again in the Legislature—1788 member of the Va. Convention that ratified the U. S. Constitution. Offered Attorney Generalship by Washington, and afterwards the Ministry to France, but he declined both positions. In 1797 appointed Envoy to France by President Adams. In 1799, at the request of Washington, ran for Congress and was elected. 1800 was Secretary of State under John Adams and on January 31, 1801 was commissioned Chief Justice of the United States. He wrote his life of Washington in five volumes during 1804 to 1807. In 1835 in his 80th year he went to Philadelphia for medical treatment, where he died.

THE MARSHALL FAMILY

THOMAS MARSHALL

Born in Richmond, Va., July 21, 1784. Educated at Princeton where he graduated with the degree of A. M. at the age of 19. After studying law he practiced in Richmond. In 1809 he married Margaret Warner Lewis of "Weyanoke." Later he gave up his law practice and retired to "Oakhill" where he spent the rest of his life. He was a zealous member of the Episcopal Church as were all of his family. All of his seven children were born at Oakhill. He was a man of literary taste and culture, a connoisseur in art, fond of music and painting. While he had no desire to hold political office, he was a member of the Virginia Constitutional Convention in 1829, over which his father presided. In 1835 he was in Baltimore on his way to Philadelphia where his father, Chief Justice Marshall, was dying, took shelter briefly under some scaffolding at the Court House during a severe storm. While there lightning struck nearby, knocking a brick off which hit his head and fractured his skull. He died a week later, June 29, 1835.

His wife, Margaret Warner Lewis, born 1792 at "Weyanoke," Charles City County, Va. She was educated at Williamsburg and was described as beautiful in person and lovely in disposition.

Part of her ancestry is as follows:

MARGARET WARNER LEWIS MARSHALL.
(MRS. THOMAS MARSHALL - 1792-1829)
Daughter of Fielding Lewis of Weyanoke,
Charles City County, Va.

THOMAS MARSHALL
1784-1833

He went to the University of Virginia in 1845 and finished the full course; he studied law in Winchester under David W. Barton and married his daughter, Anna Maria Barton, August 24, 1848. (She was born April 20, 1830—died February 11, 1861 at "Oakhill".)

He bought "Oakhill" in 1852 from his brother, John, and lived there with his family until the outbreak of the war and the death of his wife. The children were then moved to "Springdale," near Winchester, the home of their maternal grandmother.

At the outbreak of war he went to Harpers Ferry and became the volunteer aid of Colonel "Stonewall" Jackson, with the rank of Captain. At the battle of first Manassas his horse was killed under him. Soon afterward he raised a cavalry company in Frederick County and was assigned to Colonel Ashby's command. He was then made Major of the 7th Cavalry. Badly wounded at Orange Court House in August, 1862, he was taken prisoner and sent to Washington; and exchanged in September. He was soon Lieutenant Colonel of the 7th Cavalry, and in a number of campaigns through to the battle of Gettysburg, when he had another horse killed under him. In the fall and winter of 1863-64, he was with his regiment in the Valley of Virginia. At Trevillians he lost another horse—the fifth since the beginning of the war. When Grant advanced, the 7th Regiment, under Colonel Marshall, was sent south of the James River and placed in front of Petersburg. In August, 1864, he was severely wounded and sent home to Winchester. After only a month there he rejoined his regiment. On the 12th of November, 1864, in an engagement near Winchester, he became separated from his troops along with several other young officers. The enemy came on them and as they dashed off on their horses he was shot; as he started to sink in his saddle, his companions who were supporting him, put him down at his request and he said to them, "Put me down, boys, I'm dying. Save yourselves." These were his last words. He is buried in Winchester beside the Ashbys.

He was a devout churchman and it was told that his strong faith and humble deportment gave him a powerful influence among his men.

At the time he was killed, a young Yankee officer asked one of his men to bring him the sword of the Confederate officer who had just fallen, and, fortunately, he took care of it until the end of the war. This man was a Pennsylvanian whose name I never learned, but after the war he determined to find out who the officer was to whom the sword belonged. Upon careful inquiry in Winchester through his friends, he learned it belonged to a Colonel Thomas Marshall. He knew one of the Marshall family in Norfolk, Va., a cousin of Colonel Marshall, and sent him the sword.

Many years later when my aunt, Mrs. Charles J. Holt, my mother's very handsome and perfectly delightful younger sister, was living at Markham, Va., she kept in touch with many of our kinfolk scattered over the state, and while visiting in Norfolk she got wind of the fact that the family she was staying with had had her father's sword. She and my mother pursued the matter from that time on until the sword was finally found in their garret, boxed up and forwarded to me.* I took it out at once to my mother, who had seen it last 62 years before, as her father left his little family at "Springdale" to join his regiment—and only a few days later he was killed.

*There was some entertaining by-play in connection with this result. At the time efforts were being made to locate the sword and little progress was being made, a member of the Norfolk family had moved to Texas with his family and was practicing law there. He had heard that my mother had a portrait of a mutual ancestor, and wrote her asking for a photograph of the portrait. Whereupon, mother wrote him that she would be only too glad to do this for him, provided his Norfolk family returned her father's sword to her! This gave the needed spur to their efforts and the sword soon arrived. A good photo was made of the portrait and forwarded to Texas. The thought of my gentle and shy mother driving a bargain this way was very delightful to all of us.

I have the sword now—79 years after the owner's death. What a tale it could tell of those four years of constant fighting all over Virginia, Maryland and up to Gettysburg, Pa., and back—if it could talk!
Other members of the family, David Barton Marshall, Fielding Lewis Marshall, and Frances Barton Marshall, mother's only sister, were all interesting, attractive figures.

DAVID BARTON MARSHALL

My mother's oldest brother and closest to her in many ways—a man of medium height and frail build, dark hair and brown eyes, aquiline features, and wore a beard. In appearance strikingly like the pictures of Col. Thomas Marshall, his father. He was in a wholesale saddlery hardware business for some years in Baltimore, and later when his firm went out of business, he took up real estate work. He lived close to "Weyanoke," Baltimore County, most of his life, and dined with us constantly. Though continually in sore straits financially, and in poor health too, he was invariably cheerful and showed the world how to smile or laugh in the face of the severest handicaps—a brave and most lovable man in all ways.

FIELDING LEWIS MARSHALL

A man of medium height and very stocky build, I remember as having dark hair and a graying Van Dyke beard, aquiline features, with Spanish black eyes, a very handsome man. He was rather abrupt in manner, but always had a humorous touch in what he said that softened any seeming harshness. He was very clannish and devoted to all his relatives. While we saw him only occasionally, we always enjoyed him. He was occupied in New York City for a great many years, managing the affairs of the Lees family, and later moved to Chicago where he married, and there most of his children were born.
FRANCES BARTON MARSHALL

Aunt Fan I always think of as having dark hair, regular features, and the same Spanish black eyes, a very serious face in repose, but so bubbling over with fun and animation, one never thought of her except as saying something serious and then her face lighting up with great amusement at some turn in the conversation. She was devoted to Mother and all our family, stayed with us constantly at “Weyanoke,” as did all three of her delightful daughters. She loved people and kept in wonderfully close touch with her many relatives in various parts of Virginia, as well as in Baltimore, and elsewhere. She and Uncle Fielding, as very young orphaned children, were adopted and raised by Mr. and Mrs. Lees, a wealthy Tennessee couple, who moved to New York City, where they lived a great many years. She married the Rev. Charles J. Holt of Virginia, but lived most of her life in the Bronx, New York, where Mr. Holt was Rector of St. James Church. Some time after his death, she went to live with her daughter, Madge—Mrs. Giles Bolen, in Markham, Va. A lovely and most lovable person. The sketch of her on the opposite page made from life by H. A. Duer.

THOMAS MARSHALL

Like Uncle Barton in appearance, though taller, he was also of frail physique, and at an early period in his life moved to Deming, New Mexico, for his health. He managed a large ranch there for a great many years, and most successfully. His visits to the East were at long intervals, and we never knew him well. He died at Deming.
